House Is Expected to Pass Luftwaffe Raids Lease-Lend Bill This Week; British Ships in Knox Fears Aid May Be Late Mediterranean

Repeats Warning of U. S. Attack Peril If Britain Falls

BACKGROUND-

Administration British aid bill would permit the President to acquire and lease or lend war materials to belligerent nations whose defense he considered essential to defense of the United States. At present, statutes require British to buy material on cash-and-carry basis and they are reported running short of dollar exchange for cash purchases.

By J. A. O'LEARY.
The bill to strengthen American defense by aiding Britain is expected to clear its first major hurdle by passing the House this week, while the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hears further testimony. Secretary of the Navy Knox ended his testimony in support of the bill before the Senate commithe is "tremendously worried" over ing of dangers that would confront the United States if England falls. Three days of general debate will start in the House tomorrow, with Chairman Bloom of the Foreign Affairs Committee defending the measure in its present form, and Representative Fish of New York, ranking minority members of the committee, leading a fight for

A checkup yesterday indicated a safe majority to report the bill favorably from the Senate committee, probably within 10 days. The line-up in the Senate committee yesterday was reported to be 13 for the bill, 8 opposed and 2 doubtful. After three days of general debate, the House will begin Thursday reading the measure for amendments, with a final vote expected late Fri-

BERLIN, Feb. 2 (Sunday). Authorized sources said early today that six ships totaling 36,000 tons had been "successfully attacked" in the Mediterranean by German bombers on January 31. Another announcement said

German bomber had blown up a ship "in a Mediterranean harbor." (British reports said two invading planes were shot down Saturday in a raid on the British mid-Mediterranean island base of Malta. Whether the planes were German or Italian was not established. They said bombs were dropped in a raid Friday night but that none fell in the Saturday attack.)

German sources did not disclose where the bombings occurred or whether all were in one operation. They stressed, however, that all were done in one day and said that the total atacked, 26,000 tons of shipping could be reckoned as tons, in the harbor.

Two others of about 5,000 tons each were reported "heavily damaged or set afire," another of 6,000 Impeding Defense tons was said to have shown a bad list and a 10,000-ton merchantman was reported hit squarely.

Diving German planes also were said to have raided the British military airport at Mildenhall, northeast of Cambridge, Saturday, destroying three Blenheim bombers and sweeping seven other planes with machine-gun fire.

Three other British bombers were reported destroyed on the ground at "Honington Airdrome" (there are three Honingtons in England). Other flyers were said to have visited Great Yarmouth. German authorities also added more thousands of tons of British Atlantic shipping to the toll claimed or the new Nazi long-distance referred foreign correspondents to Adolf Hitler's own words on the use of poison gas in replying to questions concerning the chances of its use in any attempt to invade Britain.

The matter of gas came up at vesterday's foreign press conference because of the statement of United States Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that he had received information the Germans "are contemplating" use of this weapon in the expected invasion

Authorized German sources, replying to questions, called attention to Hitler's pronouncement before the Reichstag on September 1, 1939, the day Poland was invaded, to this

"From now on bomb will be answered with bomb: he who applies poison gas will be fought with poison gas; he who himself departs from the rules of humane warfare cannot expect from us that we will not take the same step." That, the German spokesmen

Yesterday's high command bulletin reported that the new "allweather" German bombers had sunk two merchant vessels, of 10,-100 tons, west of Ireland yesterday Just before this was issued, informed sources claimed the sinking of six ships totaling 21,600 tons all around the British Isles. At the press conference, a spokesman compared President Roosevelt to a schoolboy playing truant for not listening to the Fuehrer's Sportspalast speech of January 30, in which Hitler said all ships carrying supplies to England would be torpedoed. "If it is true, as reported, that

By JOHN CUDAHY. NEW YORK, Feb. 1 (N.A.N.A.). -The other day an anything-shortof-war enthusiast complained bitterly about Ireland. He said the Irish, by refusing to permit the British to use the Irish ports against German submarines, were conducting themselves in a mean and contemptible way.

I asked him, assuming a conflict between the German and British fleets, 100 miles or so from our shores, could the British properly petition for naval bases in New York, Boston and Newport News? Nazi Trade Controls To Exploit Europe Bared in U. S. Report

Denmark Used to Show How Economic Raid Technique Works

By OLIVER McKEE. Germany was exploiting the greater part of Europe through trade and economic controls at the end of Page A-3 1940, the Commerce Department said in a report yesterday.

Page A-3 Prepared by Henry Chalmers, chief of the division of foreign tariffs, Page A-3 the report deals primarily with Page A-5 after the fall of France, pointed out Drastic measures urged in Britain to that "practically all countries of Page A-9 Europe not already living under a controlled economy appear to have Page B-6 adopted, for the time, a pattern of trade control closely resembling that of a controlled economy."

> To illustrate the Nazi exploitation technique in occupied areas, Mr. countries. At the end of four months, this small German credit into a huge debt of 800 million crowns, owed to Denmark, the greater part of which was represented by heavily - increased shipments of goods from Denmark to Germany. The amount which Germany borrowed from Denmark, during the eight months of occupation was approximately equal to the total value of all Danish exports of merchandise in 1938.

Procedure Explained.

"Such scope for autonomous trade control and independent action in Page A-12 negotiations as appears to have been Page B-9 retained by the occupied areas has been distinctly limited by the prior and overriding action of Germany in taking over domestic products or imported stocks accumulated in the occupied areas, presumably to be covered by German goods in such quantity and variety as that country could spare, beyond the amount charged to the costs of the German forces of occupation," Mr. Chaimers Page C-8 said. Page C-10

"No published records of movements of goods between Germany and the occupied areas are available. However, the reports of sharp increases in the living costs in the occupied areas, and of rationing to the civil populations of long lists of products and materials, including commodities of which the countries normally have a surplus above domestic requirements, seem significant. Currency Exchange Altered. "An important element in trade arrangements between Germany and the occupied areas has been the change in the terms of trade, to the disadvantage of those areas, resulting from the new exchange ratios established between the re- more than a polishing job. spective national currencies. As a result of the extension of the British blockade, the domination of most of the continent by Germany, few European countries had any important lines of communication with overseas areas open to them when the year closed.

Neutrals Seek Alternatives. Through trade and other agreehave sought to develop alternative sources for needed products which cannot now be obtained from overseas. Not all neutral countries of Europe were in a position which obliged them to accept unfavorable terms in their commercial dealings with Germany, Mr. Chalmers said. Greece and Turkey were notable among those countries that have resisted Nazi economic domination.

Ford Seeks to End Four Bottlenecks On Plane Engines

Plant's Goal Is Mass Production Without 'Fantastic Expansion'

Mr. Edgerton, aviation editor of The Star, is making a tour of airplane engine manufacturing plants. This is the thirteenth in a series of articles. (Thirteenth of a Series.)

By JOSEPH S. EDGERTON,

Star Staff Correspondent DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 1.-Trying to forget that Henry Ford ever said anything about 1,000 airplanes a day, engineers of the Ford Motor Co. today are facing the problems of producing 4,000 aircraft engines -enough for only four days of the airplane program-but are undertaking at the same time, through fundamental research, to break the engines. These bottlenecks broken, there might be some hope of attaining eventually some such goal as that outlined by Mr. Ford. But that, it is admitted, is a matter so far in the future as still to be visionary The bottlenecks are: 1, personnel; machinery and tools; 3, raw materials, and 4, time.

four bottlenecks which today choke

mass production of aircraft and

Would Avoid "Fantastic Expansion." Only by breaking all four simulof aircraft be attained. It is the aim of the research program which has been instituted by Ford Production Manager Charles E. Sorensen, who has succeeded Defense Commissioner Knudsen in that capacity, to make possible mass production of airplanes and engines without "fantastic expansion" of personnel or plant. It is felt that there are better and less costly ways of doing the the Ford people are trying to discover these methods.

As an example, Ford engineers day as "tantamount to treason." have taken the airplane engine European trade control measures cylinder. In present practice, the in $25,000 bail for a further hearcylinder starts as a 75-pound chunk ing February 10 on charges of exof forged steel, arrived at by cutting tortion and violation of a section the ends off an even larger, heavier of the Selective Service Act which ingot. This 75-pound mass is cut prohibits interference with duties of down eventually to about 16 pounds draft boards by turning, milling, boring and grinding operations.

Ford engineers have developed, for automobile construction, a cen- $50 from Max D. They are Germany a small amount on the studying a method of casting airclearing account between the two plane engine cylinders which gives them, as the starting point, a rough the Reich succeeded in converting casting which now weighs about 35 pounds and which soon will be reduced to 30 pounds. Instead of machining away about 59 pounds of tough, hard metal, they have to cut away 19 pounds or less. The Arguing for high bail, Assistant is even greater than the figures Kallick declared: would indicate. Ford engineers say. simultaneously breaking all four bottlenecks.

"Spinning Mold" Method Used. The "spinning mold" method has been used for some time at the Ford plant for such operations as casting gear blanks, which require toughness and strength not ordinarily associated in the lay mind with castings. It is claimed that the bursting strength of a cylinder produced by the forging method is from 5,500 At Law Group Dinner to 6.000 pounds but that centrifugal castings have been made which have a bursting strength of 9,000 to 9,500 pounds. The forging method required, for a single stage of its operation, one press which cost $105,000 and took five months to build. Dies for the centrifugal casting cost $5,000 and can be made in the Ford plant.

The crankshaft forging for an airplane engine, in one specific case, starts as a chunk of steel weighing more than 1,000 pounds and ends as a beautifully machined article weighing a little more than a tenth the starting weight. In the process of machining it must frequently be removed from the machines and subjected to heat treating to remove strains in the metal set up by the cutting. Ford engineers are studying a casting method which starts with a blank very close to final dimensions and entails little The Ford specialists also are looka method of welding instead of riveting of duralumin for construction of airplanes wings and fuselages. Critics of the 1,000 airplanes a day program computed that, on the basis of present practice, with the number of rivets per airplane a known quantity and the number of rivets a man could handle in an hour also a fixed factor, it would require 50,000 men to do the riveting alone on 1,000 airplanes a day. Fifty thousand riveters alone would has done "a great job," but hope require a good-sized community to that by pooling aviation and autohouse them and a factory which, mobile experience, both can do a as even Ford experts admit, would better job.

Bengasi Plane Center And Base at El Gubba Are Targets in Attack

By the Associated Press.

CAIRO, Egypt, Feb. 1.—A violent step-up in the tempo of British air attacks in Libya was announced today in the prelude to another grand assault-aimed this time at Bengasi. The area to Bengasi from fallen Derna and far beyond—700 miles within Libya to Tripoli-was the theater of this new aerial offensive, intended to clear the way for British mechanized troops striking westward in their cars of steel and to disorganize the Italians far behind their lines.

The Royal Air Force announced that "several" tons of bombs had been loosed upon Tripoli, the capital of Western Libya and a vital communications center, and that "hun dreds" of bombs had fallen upon Bengasi's air center, the long-punished airdrome at Barce.

Roosevelt Holds Up Other Bills, Awaiting Lease-Lend Action

St. Lawrence Power Plan May Be Offered in New Legislative Move

By JOHN C. HENRY. Marking time until Congress disposes of the lease-lend bill for aid to Britain, President Roosevelt is withholding several major legislative proposals for submission later

One of these, joint Canadian-American development of the St. Lawrence waterway and power propect was discussed by the President in a White House conference yesterday with Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Berle and Jay Pierrepont Moffat, Minister to Canada.

Although relatively little is being said here about this controversial project, those who have been most interested in its fate have been aware for several months that the administration contemplated an effort this winter to gain congressional approval of the development.

Senate Rejected It in 1934.

Rejected in treaty form by the Senate in 1934, the project was re-vived last fall when the President allocated $1,000,000 of discretionary defense funds to cover the cost of engineering tests preliminary to construction of a great hydro- lative battle such as may develop administration's chief strategist, the full year of 1940. plans have been laid to obtain confor the entire project.

Strategy Is Changed.

Attention is being directed principally toward action through joint congressional resolution rather than by treaty, a procedural change which would require a simple majority of both branches rather than a twothirds majority of the Senate alone. Precedent for this Government's participation in an international project through resolution rather than by treaty is believed to exist and at least one caucus of House members interested in this venture has been held. 'Much to Be Done,' Fleet Is Told as Command Changes

'Path Ahead Is Not Easy,' Admiral Richardson Says As Kimmel Takes Over

v the Associated Press.

HONOLULU, Feb. 1.-A quiet reminder that "there is much to be done" replaced the customary roar of saluting guns as Admiral Husband Edward Kimmel became commander in chief today of the United States' three-ocean Navy.

The assertion came from Admiral James O. Richardson who relinquished command of the world's mightiest fleet to his 58-year-old friend in the midst of a crucial period in American history.

"All of you," Admiral Richardson told the officers and men of the fleet, "can take pride in the work accomplished under trying conditions. The path ahead is not easy. There is much to be done." Admiral Kimmel echoed the same solemn note with confidence that the Navy would be ready for any

Mayors Urge Board Be Set Up to Plan Air Raid Defense

Canadian Cities' Efforts Cited in Conference's Letter to President

The United States Conference of Mayors yesterday urged President Roosevelt to set up a Federal Civil Defense Board with instructions to develop at once a master plan for the defense of the American cities from airplane attacks.

"The need for establishing a program for civil defense in the United States has already been recognized by many cities and by various branches of the Federal Government." Mayor La Guardia of New York, president of the conference, wrote Mr. Roosevelt.

"It is now apparent that the time for creation of an integrated and co-ordinated civil defense administration has arrived if waste and duplication of effort are to be avoided and efficient organization is to be achieved.

"In an emergency it would simply be impossible for local authorities to deal with a score of separate and independent Federal agencies." Cites Canadians' Efforts.

Mr. La Guardia said the suggestions were not made "for the purpose of spreading alarm regarding our own situation as related to the present international situation." He commented, however, that Canadian cities were organizing air raid precautions services, and added:

"If Montreal, just a few minutes by air from the border of New York State, has deemed it advisable to scheme, it is at least well that we give some thought to developing a co-ordinated and workable civil defense program for American citiesparticularly for those cities in areas which are, in the opinion of military experts, vulnerable to attack."

The detailed report of problems American cities should prepare to face, in event of war, was drafted by Paul V. Betters, executive director of the conference. He listed them under these headings: "The restriction of lighting.

"The provision of protection, including shelters, and the safeguarding of important points. Evacuation of Personnel.

"The evacuation of personnel from threatened areas to districts less liable to attack.

The maintenance of vital services, including food supplies, transport services, electrical supplies, gas supplies, water supplies, and postal, telegraph and telephone services. "The treatment of casualties and the organization required to set up and maintain first-aid posts, hospitals and ambulance services.

"It is essential that a plan of regional administration be adopted, since, as is well known, aircraft does not recognize State political boundaries any more than microbes do, and neither do bombs, for that matter."

The mayors thought that certain preliminary "passive defense" steps could be taken now.

"It is recommended," they said, "that the Chemical Warfare Service and Ordnance Department of the War Department give training courses to municipal fire officers in the techniques and skills of fighting fires caused by incendiary and explosive bombs

"Similarly, training of police officers in certain specialized fields might well be given consideration the emergency control system or- duced by George L. Kessner, first at the present time."

Stettinius Appoints Executives to Deal With Priorities

Setup of Machinery Does Not Mean Controls Will Be Used, He Says

By the Associated Press. E. R. Stettinius, jr., director of priorities for the Office of Production Management, announced yesterday the appointment of administrative groups to deal with chemicals, tools and equipment and general products in the defense pro-

Mr. Stettinius said establishment of machinery for handling priorities, or preference ratings for filling orders, does not mean that a system of priorities is to be established on the products involved. The administrative group is set up, he said, to "meet problems before they become acute.

Dr. Harrison E. Howe of Washington, editor of Industrial and Chemical Engineering, was named priority executive for chemistry.

Dexter S Kimball, Ithaca, N. Y. retired dean of engineering of Cornell University, was named priority executive for tools and equipment. President of Case.

William E. Wickenden, Cleveland, was appointed general products priority executive. Mr. Wickenden has been president of the Case School of Applied Science at Cleveland since 1929.

In addition to the executives, Mr. Stettinius appointed advisory com-mittees for a number of priority groups. They are:

Aluminum and magnesium: Eugene J. Barney, Frigidaire Division, General Motors Sales Corp., representing industrial consumers; Col. A. J. Lyon, representing the Army: Lt. Comdr. D. N. Logan, representing the Navy.

Non-ferrous metals and minerals: Irving Cornell, vice president St. Joseph Lead Co., representing producers; H. L. Erlicher, General Electric Corp., representing industrial consumers; Col. W. R. Slaughter, representing the Army; and Comdr. W. H. Von Dreels, representing the Navy. Chemicals Division. Chemicals: Warren Watson, executive secretary of the Manufacturing Chemists Association, representing producers; Everet T. Trigg, president John Lucas and Co., representing industrial consumers: Mai C. B. Morgan, Army; Lieut, N. S. Prime, Navy. Machine tools: Frederick V. Geier, president, Cincinnati Milling and Machine Co., representing producers; Col. T. J. Hayes, Army; Capt. E. C. Almy, Navy. Mr. Stettinius also announced the appointment of Dr. W. S. A. Pott. president of Elmira College, Elmira N. Y., as secretary to the priorities division, and Dr. S. S. part in this undertaking." Gen. Weygand spoke over a Vichycontrolled station and the broad- is being conducted here under the cast was picked up in the United States by C. B. S.

Vichy Regime Attacked. The Paris challenge was accompanied by a belligerent attack on Minister Pierre Etienne Flandin, Interior Minister Marcel Peyrouton and the Vichy government in general. It was voiced by Jean Fontenoy, French newspaper man, speaking over the Paris Emphasizing that time was pressing, M. Fontenoy issued a call for support by all Frenchmen. He praised former Vice Premier Pierre Laval and said that Marshal Petain's committee of 51 was formed as a result of "the events of December 13" when M. Laval resigned and was placed under technical arrest. M. Fontenoy said his committee was formed of newspaper editors, industrialists, workers and others in the occupied zone to prepare a program from all France.

He made no direct attack on Marshal Petain, but emphasized that the Paris committee was in direct opposition to the Vichy committee formed January 19 under direction of Marshal Petain's office with the aim of developing a national organization and philosophy calculated to bring popular support back to Marshal Petain's national

M. Fontenoy repeatedly urged the need for quick action. It was reported that Marshal Petain would address the Nation by radio today. This was not con-

From Paris it was reported that Fernand de Brinon, the Vichy government's representative, had tele-phoned Marshal Petain a summary of conversations he has had with Otto Abetz, Adolf Hitler's Ambassador to Paris. In these, it was said, the Germans contended no French-German collaboration was possible under present conditions. According to the reports, the Germans complained of "duplicity" by the French government in its relations with Germany and took the stand it would hold strictly to terms of the armistice instead of negotiating for elleviation of some of its more stringent clauses. The chief German objection to the present political climate in Vichy is Marshal Petain's failure to take M. Laval back into the fold after meeting him and announcing that their misunderstandings had been dissipated.

"Keep window partly open in order that you may hear sirens on emergency vehicles or entirely open for the use of hand signal when necessary."

Safety

(Continued From First Page.) it would be a "drastic remedy" for curtailing the city's mounting traffic accident and fatality list, but expressed belief it would bring results. "It's a serious thing to throw a man in jail for driving too fast,' Mr. Schulte said, "but so is death serious. I believe if a few of the fast drivers here are put in jail for a few days this wild and reckless driving will stop and the streets will be safer." A reduction in the speed limit from 25 to 22 miles an hour, Mr. Schulte also believes, will serve to halt fast driving in the congested areas. He said the Commissioners now have authority under the District Traffic Act to cut the speed

Sees Move Cutting Speed. Both Police Supt. Ernest W. Brown and Judge McMahon have told Mr. Schulte that when the speed limit was 22 miles an hour the average driver went 25 miles an hour. Since the limit was raised to 25 miles an hour, they pointed out, the average driver travels about 30 miles an hour. In view of this situation, it is Mr. Schulte's theory that if the limit is returned to 22 miles an hour, the average driver will keep his speed down to 25 miles an hour instead of 30. Assistant Traffic Director M. O. Eldridge, in a recent talk before representatives of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers, urged a reduction from 25 to 20 miles an hour at night.

He pointed out that the great majority of traffic fatalities in the District during the last two months occurred after dark.

Early Meeting Planned. Mr. Schulte plans to hold another neeting of his subcommittee one night this week to delve further into the city's traffic problems. At this session he plans to hear the recommendations of traffic authorities and other judges of the Police Court for topping what he describes as

'slaughter" on the streets. Meanwhile, Senator Burton, Reublican, of Ohio, recently appointed chairman of the Streets and Traffic Subcommittee, of the Senate District Committee, hopes to have the personnel of his group completed so it can co-operate with Mr. Schulte's subcommittee. He said he would ask Chairman Reynolds tomorrow to name the members who will serve with him on the subcommittee. Senator Burton was an "observer" at the first meeting of the House Streets and Traffic Subcommittee of the House when Maj. Brown and Judge McMahon made suggestions for increased traffic safety. He said however, it is still "too early" for him to state his own views as to what steps should be taken here.

Taxpayers Group Questions Length of Court Vacations

Possibility that the District may find it unnecessary to build a new court building "at this time" was expressed yesterday by the Washington Taxpayers' Association.

In this connection, the association raised a question as to length of vacations of the District judges. The association statement said, in part:

"Before we build another court a thorough study should be made of the buildings we now have. Perhaps it may be possible so to rearrange courtrooms that it will not be necessary to put up another building at this time.

"And perhaps much of the prob-lem would solve itself if the judges took a reasonable vacation-not three months as they do now-and if the courts were in session a little longer each day."

Drastic Measures Urged in Britain To Bar Inflation

Gap Between Expenditures And Resources Causing Discussion in London

By WILLIAM H. STONEMAN, Chicago Daily News Foreign Correspondent LONDON, Feb. 1. - Strenuous measures to prevent Britain's gigantic war-spending program from resulting in rank inflation is being urged on the government as it prepares its budget for the coming year. Today's Economist estimates that the deficit for the current financial year, ending in April, will be about

2,500,000,000 pounds sterling and that this will mount to approximately 3,400,000,000 during the 1941-2 fiscal year. During the latter year the Economist estimates that expenditure will be about 5,130,000,000 pounds and revenue, on the basis of existing taxes, about 1,700,000,000. If the estimate is correct, the gap between revenue and expenditure will thus amount to about 300,000 -

000 pounds per month. This is the measure of the sum which will have to be secured by savings or additional taxation in order to prevent The Economist estimates that the yield of genuinely voluntary savings cannot be expected to exceed about 100,000,000 pounds monthly and that other resources may bring the total "non-inflationary resources" to

"When all these non-inflationary resources are added together, it is very difficult to put their combined prospective total at more than 150,-000,000 pounds monthly, or half the gross gap," it says. "There thus remains a 'net gap' of a further 150,-000,000 pounds a month. This is the sum that has to be met by increased taxation, by induced or compulsory saving-or by inflation. It is the figure that should set the tone for financial discussions during coming months." (Copyright, 1941, by Chicago Daily News.)

Alcohol Mash 'Bug' May Yield Vitamin Supply for Flour

Riboflavin May Be Needed If Bread Cost Will Not Be Forced Higher

(No. 5 of a series.)
By THOMAS R. HENRY. A microscopic "bug" which oper-ates in the corn mash from which butyl alcohol is made may make possible the addition to American flour in the near future of infinitesimal amounts of a substance which is probably essential to life and which might add greatly to the morale of the American people.

The Food and Drug Administration is debating a requirement that riboflavin—the yellowish-green coloring substance best known in skim milk-be added to the new fortified flour which it is proposed to introduce in the next few months.

It can be synthesized, but only by a complex and expensive process. The present minimum price is about $55 an ounce. It is proposed to put about a 25-thousandth of an ounce in a loaf of bread. The cost would add a material fraction to a loaf of bread, which it is desired

Cost Can Be Reduced. Very recently, say Food and Drug Administration officials, they have learned of a patented process which cuts the price at least in half. When all the volatile solvents are removed from mash there is left the remainder of a liquor very rich in riboflavin which has been synthesized in the bodies of minute bacilli.

They are anxious to add the vitamin to the flour formula if the price can be kept within reason because. while the human requirement is still unknown, it has become increasingly evident in the last two years that men cannot live without it. It is present in every call of the human It presumably is essential for the same processes of burning sugar and starches which also require thiamin chloride and nicotinic acid which it already has been decided to put in bread

Only one specific human disease is known to be due to lack of the vitamin. Some cases of supposed pellagra have not cleared up as expected after administration of nicotinic acid. There have been left a complex of symptoms, including cracks in the skin, which disappeared very quickly when riboflavin was given in small doses.

May Explain Baldness. There have, however, been extensive experiments with animals Kept on a riboflavin deficient diet. their growth is stunted, their hair falls out, they develop eye cataracts, and there is a general failure in physical well-being. It seems likely that the same is true for human beings. Some cases of baldness may be due to lack of the vitamin.

It is widely distributed in nature, but not in foods which are widely eaten. The chief sources, as determined through surveys by the Bureau of Home Economics, are in liver, kidneys, lean muscle meats. peanuts and wheat germ. The poorer elements of the population get very little of any of these. All, however, eat bread and will continue if it can be kept at a reasonable price.

Strenuous efforts are being made to have flour carry another vital element, but at present the Food and Drug Administration is frowning upon the proposal. This ele-ment is calcium. It is, for one thing, the element out of which bones are made. It is essential for the teeth. Experiments conducted at Columbia University have shown that with rats-and it is highly probable that the same holds true for humans-supplies far above those actually required by the body lengthen average life by as much as a fourth and also lengthen the life of future generations. Use of Calcium Would Be Cheap.

While some of the results are in dispute, Foods and Drug Administration officials do not question the vital importance of the element. It would be easy and cheap to impregnate flour with calcium. A little chalk mixed with it probably would turn the trick and nobody would notice that a substitution had been made.

Calcium is common in nature One of the best sources is milk and there is some fear that families would be encouraged to cut down on their milk supply if they felt they were getting the same food ingredients out of bread. Milk contains so many other vital ingredients that cannot be incorporated in flour that this would be tragic.

The new American bread which, it is expected, will form approximately a quarter of the total food supply of the American people, must not be made into a nostrum or a medicine, say the Food and Drug Administration heads. Furthermore, it must not cost much more than a tenth of a cent a loaf more than the bread now eaten.

Stand Open Extra Day. From January 14 when the Mile o' Dimes stand was opened by Mrs. Roosevelt to last Friday evening when it closed, dimes poured onto the track. The stand was open 24 hours a day but so heavy was the flow of contributions that it remained open a day past the President's birthday so every one could contribute. Just how many people here put dimes on the track could not be estimated but the major Government departments contributed along with business firms, large and small, civic groups, school children, unions and fraternal organizations. Proceeds of many benefit sports events and parties were added. The last of these was the All States Social Club dance at Almas Temple last night. Services Set Tomorrow For Will E. Crane

Burial services for Will E. Crane, 83, retired civil engineer, who died Friday night, will be held tomorrow in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mr. Crane was a native of Wisconsin, but had lived in Washington time president of the Rockefeller since 1915. He had been ill about six months.

A graduate of the University of Iowa, Mr. Crane held a professorship there for a time. He was engineer on a number of bridge projects and was one of the first men to be stricken with the "bends," occupational ailment of men who work under high air pressure, while supervising a caisson operation in 1888. Mr. Crane traveled extensively in geological study and collection of specimens. He circled the globe several times. He leaves his wife, with whom he lived at 208 Thirteenth street N.E., and a son, Willed S. Crane.

by the PKKSIIK of

President Roosevelt, recognizing, as he has many times in the past, the vital necessity for a stimulation of religious ardor, has extended an enthusiastic welcome to a great gathering of the leaders of Christianity in this city. For a week, starting this evening, there will be an intense concentration of thought and energy on a program looking toward the preservation of Christianity and Democracy which strive, side by side, for progress along a common path toward a common goal. President Roosevelt sounds the fervent prayer of those behind this movement when he says, "God grant that the mission will hasten the revival of Christianity."

Newfoundland Now Hornet's Nest of Air and Sea Power

Defense Strengthened Already, Although New Bases Are Year Away

By the Associated Press.

Although the United States has barely begun to develop her new bases in Newfoundland, any foe who might try to pass that gateway from the New World to the Old would find it already a hornet's nest of aerial and sea power

The great island off the east coast of Canada is the northern anchor of the chain of eight naval and air bases assured for America when 50 old destroyers were traded to Britain last fall.

American troops are now aug-menting its British defenses, living in the former German liner Amerika at the capital city of St. Johns until barracks can be completed. Engineers and architects are busy on new shore facilities for ships and planes-facilities that will take more than a year to build-and additional fortifications are in the Harbors for Tenders.

More important, from the standpoint of immediate defense against any possible attack across the North Atlantic, is the fact that harbors already have become available for sea-going filling stations called tenders. From these, patrol bombers and submarines may fan far out across the approaches to this continent. The Navy is silent on such subjects, but it is reported that patrol squadrons have been operating regularly in this manner since the middle of last November.

Furthermore, one of the largest airports in the world is already in existence deep in the interior of the island, sheltered from the fogs which sometimes hinder aerial operations along its southern shores. Few persons doubt that this vast British flying field would be made available to fighting planes of the United States Army's general headquarters air force if any enemy attempted to establish bomber bases of its own in this part of the world.

Newfoundland has been the key to North America ever since its discovery by John Cabot in 1497, five years after Columbus sailed into the West Indies. It is the easternmost large area of land commanding the shipping lanes between Europe and the United States and Canada. With many harbors which could contain almost the entire United States fleet, and many lakes where flying boats could operate, it is a natural base for forces charged with detecting and intercepting any hostile thrust from the northeast against the industrial heart of country can patrol effectively with its existing ships and planes has been extended roughly 1,000 miles by acquisition of the base sites in Newfoundland. Instead of using most of their fuel to go to and from the scene of patrol operations, as they would have to do if based on the United States, patrol craft can spend more time in the zones where they are needed. Surface ships also may find anchorage, fuel and food supplies in Newfoundland immediately; and, after the new bases are built, facilities will be available for minor repairs.

Possession of bases in this area not only extends the range of American patrol operations. It goes a long way toward denying any European enemy the bases from which Boston, New York and industrial cities as far West as Detroit might be harassed by bombers.

Even if an enemy fleet got past St. Johns, its plane carriers could not proceed with impunity while a nest of American fighters and bombers remained in existence on Newfoundland. Landing troops from ships or aerial transports to establish an enemy base on the Island itself would likewise be hazardous as long as the American bases remained in existence and were able to send forces against such operations.

Fulfills Two Requirements.

In other words, this country's bases would have to be put out of commission before the enemy could operate efficiently from the island or the waters nearby.

Newfoundland already fulfills two of the three requirements laid down by Admiral Mahan, master of American naval strategy, for a good naval base: Position and resources. The third, strength, is being met as swiftly as the Army and Navy and the industrial power of this country can do so.

The triangular island is larger than Ireland, measuring about 300 miles from one tip to the other. Its northernmost point is only a few miles from Labrador, on the North American mainland, while the port of St. Johns juts out in the Atlantic far past such American ports as Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston and New York.

From St. Johns to Boston is 885 miles, to New York 1,081, to the shipbuilding center at Newport News, Va., 1,276; to Quebec about 800, to Detroit about 1,400-all within the extreme operating radius of long-range bombers.

Newfoundland is not the frigid and barren land that many Americans imagine. In the north the cold is intense, but the climate along the southern shore is moderated to some extent by the nearness of the warm Gulf Stream swinging out toward Europe. Still, to many of the American soldiers stationed at St. Johns, this winter will be more severe than those to which they are accustomed. An indication of this is the fact that the Army is sending two of its new tanks to the island for cold-weather tests.

Famous Fishing Grounds.

Next summer, if the troops can wangle a few days' leave, they may some of the finest game fishing in the world. Both the sea off Newfoundland and the island's lakes and streams are famous fishing grounds. Much of the island is timbered and this fact has led to establishment of a great industry for the manufacture of newsprint paper. Near Botwood, the northern port from which newsprint made at Grand Falls is distributed to the newspapers of Great Britain, a porlanding place for American clippers and flying boats of the British airways during their experimental

Two Liquor Law Changes Urged By Federation

10 Others Will Be Studied at Meeting Next Saturday

After nearly three hours of confusion of proposals, counter-proposals, amendments and parliamentary procedures, the Federation of Citizens Associations last night approved two proposed changes in liquor control here and recessed until next Saturday at 8 p.m. to take up 10 others.

A large group turned out for the session on notification that the liquor proposals would be considered. but by 10:30 p.m. many of the 77 delegates had gone home or into the District Building corridors.

President Harry N. Stull drew applause from others as he banged his gavel and asked indignantly: "Can't this federation transact any business? Don't you know there are some people who accuse us of over-talking issues?"

Differences Ironed Out. Under his rebuke the delegates froned out their differences and approved committee recommendations

1. Prohibit establishment of new liquor licenses within 600 feet of churches, schools, playgrounds, etc., exempting only such businesses which were operating prior to January 24, 1934, the date of passage of the Alcoholic Beverages Control Act, and which do not now handle alcoholic beverages in their stock. 2. Prevent liquor sales by off-sale licensees after 10 p.m. weekdays. midnight on Saturdays and days preceding holidays, provided no sales were permitted on all legal holidays. At this point the delegates prepared to consider a recommendation to extend the present Saturday midnight limit to 2 a.m. Sunday in lieu ance of driver's permits—including of the present ability to buy between laws to require photographs on permidnight Sunday and 2 a.m. Mon-Heavy arguments appeared about to begin, and even Mr. Stull is renewed. had relinquished the chair to speak against the recommendation, when to the ears of the men who deal get some such system as having the the delegates looked at the clock out the little blue cards to Wash- photograph of a driver on his and decided to hold the special ses- ington's motorists. Are you going to fall into the hands of the liquor industry?" his statement demanded The business of the evening began with the reading of the 8-page report of the Committee on Law and Legislation, and was immediately followed by minority reports from George Corbin, of Manor Park and the Flickinger statement. One delefusing the problem more than it was already. Mr. Corbin retorted he did not feel it was "criminal" to introduce amendments.

H. O. Craver of Petworth, recalled the Usual fee being $8 per permit—but the police got on his trail. Deal Will Soon Add 5,600 Acres to Meade

The War Department has about completed purchase of a 5,600-acre addition to Fort George G. Meade, Md., which, it was said last night, will be used largely for the erection of ranges, both for small arms and small-bore artillery practice. Negotiations have been carried out for a period of about two months, and a large part of the acreage has been purchased, although it was said that there are two or three tracts on which condemnation proceedings will have to be filed

The land is in the southwest section of the post and construction forces already are said to be at work erecting the target butts and putting up other apparatus required in giving target practice to the troops to be trained there.

Make February Safer

Every blot is a traffic death Keep the February calendar clear. In January, 1941, 13 people lost their lives in District traffic accidents, as compared to only 5 in January, 1940.

February, 1941

Feb. 11 Feb. 16 Feb. 19 Feb. 27

In February Beware Of: 1. Crossing streets carelessly in rainy weather, particularly at night. The four pedestrians killed in February, 1940, were struck in wet weather, three after dark. 2. Crossing a street at a point other than a crosswalk or crossing against a red light. The former cost two lives in February, 1940; the latter, one. The fourth pedestrian was struck by a hit-run motorist at an uncontrolled intersection. 60 years of age or older. The fifth February victim was a truck driver killed in a collision with an automobile.

Nearby Guard Answers Call Tomorrow

Four Units Lose State Designations For Federal Service

(Another nearby Guard story, Page C-9.)

Answering the mobilization call of the 29th Division, National Guard units in nearby Maryland and Virginia will report at their armories tomorrow morning to be mustered into Federal service for a year of active duty at Fort Meade.

At midnight tonight, the companies in Hyattsvile, Silver Spring and Kensington automatically will lose their identity as units of the Maryland National Guard and the Alexandria Light Infantry with the Virginia National Guard, and take their places on the muster rolls of the 29th Division, United States

Commanders of the Service Company of Silver Spring, Company F of Hyattsville, and the Anti-Tank Company, formerly the Howitzer Company, of Kensington, have announced that a few vacancies remain to be filled in their organizations and that enlistments will be accepted until midnight tonight, when they become part of the national Army.

Registrants Are Eligible.

Registrants under the Selective Service Act are eligible for the units as long as they remain under their National Guard status and selectees can be accepted unless they have already received notice to report for induction at this month's call, it was announced.

Members of the various units are expecting to remain at their armory headquarters for a week or 10 days while various official processes are undergone before leaving for Fort Meade, where the Maryland units will be redesignated as the 115th Infantry and the Virginia companies as the 176th Infantry, 29th

A "going away" party was held last night for members of Company F at the Hyattsville Armory under the auspices of Snyder-Farmer Post No. 3, American Legion. Included in the honor guest list were Brig. Gen. D. John Markey, commanding general of the 1st Infantry, M. N. G., and Lt. Cols. Elmer Munshower and Thompson A. Lyon, a former commander of Company F. Arrangements for the party in Methodist Church were in charge of John T. Neitzey, post commander, and Charles V. Joyce.

A farewell party also is being arranged for the Service Company by a Silver Spring citizens' committee headed by Frank L. Hewitt, former commander of the company. All residents of the community are invited to participate and contributions of $1 are being solicited by John J. Dolan, committee treasurer, and Fred L. Lutes, secretary. County and State officials will attend the function which will be in the Silver Spring Armory Wednesday night.

Records To Be Made Up.

The first day or two of the mobilization period will be spent in making up records for the War Department and issuing equipment in preparation for their year's active duty service, while physical exam- By the Associated Press. inations will be started Wednesday, according to present plans. Members of the Alexandria Light Infantry, which will become Company I, 176th Infantry, and the Silver Spring company will undergo their physical examinations Wednesday at the District Armory in Wash-Trucks of the Silver Spring Service Company will be used to transport the Alexandrians.

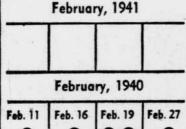

New equipment already has been received at some of the company headquarters ready to be unpacked and issued tomorrow, while a new fleet of trucks for the Service Company will be ready for service.

With the mobilization into Federal service, the personnel of several of the units is expected to undergo many changes due to promotions of on holiday for a week. which will become effective Monday morning. Some of the companies have notable records dating the Navy Knox presenting diplomas back to colonial days and the Alexandria company to 1693. All saw service during the World War and many World War veterans are still serving in companies to which they belonged more than 20 years ago.

Total Year's Saving Of About $338,000 Is Provided

Members of the Public Utilities Commission are expected to issue an order tomorrow or Tuesday placing into effect reduced power rate schedules for meter readings dated back to yesterday, calling for a total year's saving of about $338,000. This will mean a reduction of about 5 cents a month on the average bill of the domestic, residential power user, but, under a revision of new rates for these consumers in compliance with the commission's instructions, 2,000 or more additional customers will be brought into the reduced rate list, and some additional reductions will be given to many more.

The company revised its proposed rate reduction order yesterday after the company and the commission late Friday had agreed on a new formula for accounting for revenues and receipts for January, the "lag" month before the annual rate change-over. The agreement eliminated an issue over accounting which had threatened to carry the case to the courts. $42,000 Item Remains.

Commission experts said the agreed new formula still would mean that the public would get the benefit of a $42,000 item which had been in dispute.

The new version of residential scheduled 'A" is said to award $89,-585 of the total rate cut to this class of consumer. As proposed by the company, the new schedule would be: For the first 36 kilowatt hours, 3.9 cents per kilowatt hour; for the next 100 kilowatt hours, a rate of 1.8 cents, and for the excess over 136 kilowatt hours, 1.5 cents; the minimum charge remaining at 75 cents a month.

Red Cross Ship Sails Without 42 Tons of Food for France

Lack of Navicert From British Halts Consignment to Leahy

By the Associated Press. BALTIMORE, Feb. 1.-The Red Cross supply ship Cold Harbor sailed this afternoon with a $1,000,000 relief cargo for France and Spain-but without a 42-ton consignment of food for Ambassador William Leahy at Vichy, France.

The supplies for Ambassador awarded a cut of $3,906, the energy Leahy—canned beef, fruit, vegetables and cigars and cigaretteskilowatt hours, a rate of .95 cents delayed the sailing when it was per kilowatt hours; for the next found no navicert for them had been issued by the British government. Ernest J. Swift. Red Cross vice chairman in charge of foreign operations, explained the State Department had asked the Red Cross to take the supplies, but the request there would be a rate cut totaling for a navicert came too late. Highway Zoning Bills To Be Considered by State Senate Group

Study of Measures To Begin This Week At Annapolis

By the Associated Press. ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 1.-The Senate Committee on Roads and Highways next week will consider three Legislative Council bills to zone State highways.

One of the measures would set up far-reaching zoning regulations, second would permit the State Roads Commission to term any new highway a parkway and grant it broad powers to regulate means of access to it and the third would permit the commission to obtain roadside lands through "gift, purchase, condemnation, or otherwise.'

Protective Strips. The zoning bill declared "reasonable regulation" of developments, structures, uses and means of access along main highways "is essential to protect the safety health and convenience of highway users and others, to prevent unnecessary congestion, to preserve the traffic capacity of the highways and to preerve the investment of the State." The measure, applying to main highways-those on which daily traffic averages 2,500-vehicleswould establish "protective strips" on either side of the road. building or reconstruction would be permitted in them except with commission permission. Appeals to the court from commission decisions would be provided.

The commission could set up residential and commercial zones, with the power to regulate such factors as minimum sizes of lots in sub- State Trooper Cleared divisions to the fronting of structures on other roads instead of the main highway. Curb on Billboards.

Colorful 'June Week' Gone As Annapolis Speeds Up Graduation

Friday Will Be Only Holiday When 400 Receive Diplomas

By the Associated Press.

ANNAPOLIS. Feb. 1 .- Chill February winds off the Severn River are blowing a little cloud of gloom over Naval Academy midshipmenthey face a "kissless June week."

"June week"-graduation in February instead of June to provide officers quickly for the growing Navy -started today. But it's a week "without---" Without a color girl, without dress parade, without a garden party, without a ring dance, without epaulets pinned on white uniforms with kisses, without a plebes' rush to "Lover's Lane." Partly, it's winter weather cancelling the traditional ceremonies, partly because all but the graduating class will be studying, instead of on holiday for a week. Priday, graduation day, will be the only holiday, with Secretary of the Navy Knox presenting diplomas to nearly 400 midshipmen in indoor ceremonies.

Seniors End Exams. Senior classmen did stage their

"no more rivers" celebration today, marking the end of examinations. Seniors will have as many "hops" and social functions as usual. Instead of a garden party, Rear Admiral Russell Willson, who took over command today as superintendent, will hold a reception and dance Tuesday.

The "speed up" in graduation was accomplished by concentrated study, by shortening the cruise trip, and cutting Christmas leave to Christmas Day only.

There will be no graduation in There will be no graduation in June and the present "juniors" probably will be graduated in February,

Of 400 in this year's class, 384 will receive ensigns' commissions in the line. Twenty-three failed eye tests and will be retested in a few months, meanwhile helping to teach the 700 Naval Reserves coming here February 14 to start their studies. Three will be given honorable dis-

False Teeth Fly Out As Teacher Shows How to Sneeze Softly

SAW MILLS, N. C., Feb. 1 .-The professor reprimanded the loud sneezing pupil and asserted a person could sneeze in such a manner as to escape detection.

A voice piped up with "Let's see you do it." And the professor threw back his head and gave forth a loud and noisy demonstration sneeze -which sent his false teeth hurtling across the room. Quick as a flash he picked up his teeth, clapped them into his mouth and dismissed the class.

D. C. Again Leads Acacia's Sixty Branches

The active confidence of our many patrons in and around Washington, as expressed in their purchases of Acacia Life Insurance during 1940, again has made the District of Columbia Branch the largest of 60 Acacia offices in principal cities throughout the country-and has contributed materially to Acacia's progress as revealed in the adjoining

Your purchases enabled our local office, in 1940, to reach an all-time high of more than $36,188,033 of Acacia insurance in force in Washington and vicinity.

With a deep sense of gratitude and responsibility, we, the undersigned managers and representatives of the District of Columbia Branch, pledge to you that during 1941 and the years ahead we shall do all in our power to continue to merit your confidence and support.

Crash Saves Woman Dozing in Car After Taking Sleep Pills

An automobile accident prob-ably saved the life of a 23-yearold Alexandria, Va., woman, police believed last night. Late yesterday police received a call reporting a crash of two automobiles in the 800 block of Franklin street, Alexandria. On their arrival, police found the woman sitting in one car in a dazed condition. She was taken to Alexandria to take the supplies, but the request for a navicert came too late. The Leahy consignment was unloaded and probably will be sent by a later hospital where examination

ACACIA MUTUAL MARCHES ON!

Residents of the District and vicinity and policyholders of this mutual life insurance company, with its home office in Washington, and branch offices in 60 principal cities of America, will be interested in the fine record of progress and security revealed by the 1940 record.

Insurance in force (highest in Acacia history) . $422,897,589

This is the amount of insurance on the lives of its policyholders—the protection provided for the men, women and children insured by the Company.

The actual money value of the mortgages, stocks and bonds, and other assets held by the Company for the mutual protection of its policyholders, who own the Company.

New Paid-for Insurance (bought in 1940) . . $36,562,040

Old and new policyholders bought insurance policies during the year totaling this

Lapse-rate (lowest in Acacia history) only 4.84%

Very few policyholders ever let Acacia insurance go. Less than 5% of Acacia insurance was lapsed or abandoned in 1940—an eloquent testimony to the confidence of the policyholders and the intelligent service of Acacia agents.

Why This Record of Growth, Security and Service?

We believe it is because Acacia management and operation are safe, efficient, progressive and dedicated solely to service to the policyholder. This is made doubly sure by a loyal and enthusiastic staff in the home office and the 60 branches. "No business can permanently grow or prosper without the enthusiastic loyalty and efficiency of its employees," said President William Montgomery on December 24th, 1940, in announcing the new

Acacia Employees Protection and Retirement Plan

DIRECTLY, this Plan benefits Acacia employees. It enables every Acacia employee to make certain of financial security when it is time to retire, plus life insurance and substantial protection against total disability during working years.

INDIRECTLY, it benefits Acacia policyholders—by inspiring Acacia employees to serve faithfully and well; by making it to their life-long interest to continue the record of growth and protection for policyholders which has made 1940 the most successful year in Acacia's history.

Greek Premier Grateful For Hull Sympathy Cable

Alexandre Koryzis, new Greek Prime Minister, described an expression of sympathy by Secretary of State Hull on the death of Gen. John Metaxas as "a new proof" of American interest and aid for Greece, for which "the Greek people are infinitely grateful."

Secretary Hull cabled Premier Koryzis Thursday that he had learned of the death of Gen Metaxas, whom Mr. Koryzis succeeded as Prime Minister, with profound sorrow, expressing "sympathy in this great loss to Greece in the hour of her struggle for freedom."

The State Department said yesterday the new Greek Prime Minister had sent the following reply:

comes in contact. In the World War, mustard and fect similar heavy (persistent) gases were very largely used by means of argas shell. By this method, it was and all the elaborate preparations an effort to prompt offers of rooms possible to produce a heavy concentration of the gas in a defined area, selected with due consideration for the terrain and the prevailing wind and weather conditions. The density of the concentration in the selected area could be gauged with mathematical accuracy so many shells, so much gas. The gas was placed within the selected area with a weapon of precision—the gun or mortar firing at known ranges from a sta-

Aim Is Greater Effect. Some students of warfare question whether the airplane and its bomb-releasing devices can ever be a weapon of precision in this sense; in other words, whether even successive waves of gas-carrying planes can produce concentrations of gas of known density within defined and selected areas. The more horrifying calculations, based on so many tons of gas producing such an effect within a given square mile, are based on conditions which almost never prevail-no wind at all plus absolutely level ground. The moment wind and terrain variants are introduced these calculations tend to break down. On the other hand, the trend of all research in the use of poison gas as a weapon has been, since the World War, not so much toward the discovery of new gases as toward the production of greater effects with lower concentrations. While there is little public knowledge of what has been accomplished, it is quite possible that greater effect may now be expected from a given weight of gas than in the World War.

The use of spraying devices (for mustard and similar heavy vesicants) instead of gas-loaded bombs, is possible only at night by planes flying at 300 feet or so. This tends, therefore, to be a weapon of opporand since special devices of considerable weight are required, it does not seem likely that preparations for such attacks can be economically made on any large scale Such attacks might be a part of general operations which included initial attacks with high explosive followed by incendiaries and accompanied as a surprise, in selected places, with mustard-spray attack.

A determining factor in the use of gas will doubtless be the known degree of preparation by the opponent for defense against it. At the beginning of the war, there can be no doubt that the British civilian population was far better protected against gas attack than was the German. If there was any one point which the British A. R. P. organization had given thought and attention to, it was gas defense. There was probably a mask available for every man, woman and child in the island of Great Britain; all shelters had made provision against gas attack; special types of masks were available for troops, airmen and the various types of A. R. P. personnel; special gas warnings were provided, as well as decontamina-tion squads for "cleaning" gassed areas after the raid was over.

Nazi Gas Defense Smaller. Preparation for gas defense in Germany was on a far less elaborate scale; it was estimated that not more than 25 per cent of the German civilian population possessed masks. But the Germans could confidently count on Britain not initiating gas attacks of civilians; and it is possible that the Germans have held back their own use of gas hoping perhaps to avoid the need of using it at all, anxious to obtain the full effect of surprise if they did decide to use it.

Such a decision would be based on several factors. First, the degree to which, since the opening of the war, they have improved their own defense against gas. Second, the degree to which they judge the British are capable of executing reprisals. The production of military gases in the quantities demanded by the somewhat wasteful methods of air warfare is no small task; British industry has been busy with other matters. If the Germans are prepared for air-chemical warfare on a large scale, while the British are not able to retaliate strongly in kind for some time, the Germans may judge that a favorable opportunity has arrived for the introduction by them of such methods. They have a rather short time limit for the achievement of victory in any case. Indeed, from one point of view, the use of gas by the Germans might be considered an indication that they have decided to strike for an "all-out" victory regardless

The effectiveness of the means of defense available on either side would always be a factor for grave consideration. Just as the new developments in airplane design present a repitition of the former naval contest between gun and armor, so in the field of chemical warfare there is a silent struggle going on between the chemists, one striving to produce a gas against which the mask of his enemy will be little protection, the other striving to devise a mask which shall protect against all known toxic, lachrymatory and sternutant gases. Note that the attacker has only to devise a single chemical combination which will penetrate the other side's known equipment; if he does it may be too late to make the corresponding improvement in the mask.

Bombs More Effective. must posses a mask which will be proof against all gases-except, of course, vesicants, which require gas-proof clothing for defense rather than masks.

Chairman Howe Confident Goal Will Be Reached

The National Symphony Orchestra's 11th annual sustaining fund campaign starts tomorrow and during the succeeding 10 days Washington will be asked to subscribe $107,600 toward the orchestra's sup-

This is the amount needed, over and above the receipts from ticket sales, to keep the orchestra going. Campaign Chairman Walter Bruce Howe has expressed confidence the goal will be reached.

During the decade of its existence, the orchestra has entrenched itself as a Washington institution. Mr. Howe pointed out this is the first year the orchestra has approached the sustaining fund campaign with no worries other than money Union Contract Signed.

A contract with the Musicians' Union has been signed, stipulating a minimum of 20 weeks' performance and wage scales. This, Mr. Howe said, precludes a repetition of last year's disagreement between the musicians and management, which for a time threatened the orchestra's existence.

The number of contributors has increased steadily, from about 100 in 1931-32 to more than 900 last year. Volunteer campaign workers have increased in number. Slogan for the drive this year will be "Defend Your Symphony." Tuesday night the National Symphony will make its New York debut in Carnegie Hall. Despite the fact that during the last four years the orchestra has played more outof-town engagements than any other orchestra of similar size, never before has it played in New Four Luncheons Arranged.

On the eve of the drive, it was announced that four luncheons have been arranged at intervals during the drive. At each a report will be made on the amount raised. The luncheons are set for Tuesday and Friday of the coming week, and Monday and Thursday of the drive headquarters. Each luncheon will be dedicated to a specific section of the Washington population which contributes each year to the sustaining fund.

following week at the Carlton Hotel,

Monday's luncheon will be known as "workers' day," and will be dedicated to the 800 volunteer workers in the drive. A representative of each of the 11 subcommittees will speak briefly about personal campaign experiences.
"Business Day" Planned.

The second luncheon will be "business and profession day," the guests of honor and speakers to be outstanding representatives of the commercial and professional fields.

"Musical resources" will be the theme of the third luncheon, with phasis on the need for conserving musical resources and, particularly, the importance to Washington of maintaining a resident symphony orchestra.

The last luncheon, on the final day of the drive, will be dedicated to ments. Its theme will be the need for music in a defense program. take charge of the luncheons and includes Mrs. R. H. Dunlap, chairman; Mrs. Clarence A. Aspinwall, Mrs. Bruce Baird and Mrs. Milton

Additional Psychology Class Also Scheduled In Graduate Curricula

With the opening of the second semester next Friday, George Washington University will offer additional courses in the new graduate curricula in public personnel administration, it has been announced by Dr. Mitchell Dreese, professor of educational psychology and chairman of the university Committee on the Training of Personnel Work-

The new personnel courses are "Occupational Analysis Methods," which will be taught by Dr. Carroll Leonard Shartle, and "Public Relations Problems," to be taught by Dr. Henry F. Hubbard.

Both are seminar courses. Occupational analysis methods will cover the methods and principles of analyzing jobs and workers in determining the occupational significance of techniques and data for occupaplacement, with particular emphasis on personnel problems related to the defense program.

Big Changes Looming Cultural Values of Voice. Individual diagnosis. Training of tone diction and physical unity Most necessary to all social intercourse. As Result of War

By HELEN KIRKPATRICK.

LONDON, Feb. 1. -- The big changes in the English school system, which have long been predicted as the inevitable outcome of this war, appear to be taking shape and may assume definite form at the conference of public school headmasters to be held in March.

Another step toward eliminating hard and fast differences between classes in Britain may be the outcome of the decision to open "public schools" to more boys and at the same time to accept a state subsidy for the upkeep of these schools.

Parallel with this action will be a government measure to raise the school-leaving age at the end of the war to 15, then after three or four years to 16. The present schoolleaving age is 14, for all practical purposes, although, technically, parents are supposed to prove that the child's income is essential in order for him to leave before 15. Under the present system it will be difficult for the public schools to become an integral part of the state educational system without certain changes. A change from primary to secondary schoolsroughly corresponding to the American grammar and high schools-is made here at the age of 11. The privately educated child leaves preparatory school for public school at the age of 13. Thus the public schools are considering reducing the age of entry to 11 in order to take more boys from the State primary schools. This is bound to arouse opposition from the preparatory However, most of the public schools in England have been in a decidedly precarious financial state for some years, and they have been badly hit by the war, which has also affected to a certain extent the big public schools like Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Winchester and Marlborough. These latter are better able to weather the bad times

but their enrollments have been much smaller this year than ever A comprehensive survey of the school system is being undertaken and many changes will be introduced gradually. More technical schools will be established providing courses in manual training, agriculture and home economics. Largescale evacuations and war conditions have revealed an astonishing number of women, of all classes from the big cities, who are unable to cook and sew. It has been particularly striking to find that the women of the lowest incomes are often the least able to cook, having relied to a great extent on prepared and canned foods. The increase in technical education will help to divert more boys from city clerical jobs to agricultural work and small industries. The raising of the school-leaving age may reduce somewhat the unemployment problem, which bound to arise at the end of the war, with the demobilization of the armed forces and the elimination of war industries.

Second Term Classes Lady Halifax Avoids Spotlight, But Has Seen History Unfold

New Mistress of British Embassy Has Quiet Charm

By RUTH COWAN,

Lady Halifax, a slim woman whose large, expressive eyes have watched notable chapters in life's pageantry unfold, is the new mistress of the massive red-brick British Embassy. Wife of the new British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, she is getting settled in her new home, which, with its rose gardens and lawns, should remind her of the great houses in her native land.

Lord Halifax and his very attractive wife-there is about her a quiet charm-arrived on their first visit to the United States just eight days ago aboard the very latest thing in British battleships.

Huge guns and armour plate made a strange background for this gentle-appearing woman, but it was not strange that, if her husband of 32 -and in the background. Has Avoided Spotlight.

Is Widely Read. She reads widely and likes thoughtful talk. Any one watching her and the Ambassador together is aware of the companionable understanding between Lady Halifax and the man who has held one high office after another-lord privy seal, leader of the House of Lords, lord president of the council. There is about Lady Halifax an

Orange Blossom Trail In Central Florida Is Fragrant and Bright

Tours From Orlando Bring a Variety of Beautiful Gardens

ORLANDO, Feb. 1.- A warm midwinter sun is flowering blossoms of a thousand hues fragrant of buds and springtime in the greater Orlando's recreation area in Central Florida.

Over the highways to rolling hills of dark forest tracts, past hundreds of lakes and streams, are the spectacles of the deep South, cypress gardens, highland hammocks, live oaks in beautiful festoons of Spanish moss, the lovely lavendar of jacaranda trees, southward to Avon Park, where botanists exhibit collections of Florida flowers and plants.

Highway of Blooms.

Hundreds of sightly gardens of roadside beauty may be viewed from the Orange Blossom Trail, where miles of highways are hedged by the bloom of oleanders, gardenias and bright azaleas, vving everywhere with the gay colored flowering shrubs planted by the Women's Federation of Florida's Garden Clubs. Highlighted among the Orange Blossom Trail's north tour program will be the Bird Island sanctuary, seen from a waterway cruise of 10 miles circling floating island colonies, inhabited by millions of birds of song and beautiful plumage Ocala National Forest of tropical scenery, Leesburg's Venetian gardens and the Lakes of Mount Dora, where a colorful vista of blossoms frame the shining mirrors of hilltop raterways, complete a pleasant

Deland's Beautiful Oak Trees Inspired By Tax Rebates

DELAND. Fla., Feb. 1.-Many visitors annually pause to wonder why and how Deland came into possession of so many beautiful oak trees.

The City Council. on July 1 1887, adopted an ordinance allowing a rebate on taxes of 50 cents for every tree 2 inches or more in diameter planted by a land owner, provided the tree was one year old and in a healthy state. So great was the response that the city's revenue was seriously curtailed and it was necessary to repeal the ordinance. However, the trees thrived and now their mosshung boughs shade every street in the city.

C. U. Boxers Beat Coast Guard: Columbus U. Gets Draw With The Citadel

Win, Lose or Draw Cards Gain Lead

By GRANTLAND RICE. (In the Temporary Absence of Francis E. Stan.)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1 (N.A.N.A.).—The Cardinals of St. Louis will be Pepper Martin, Pilot, Intriguing Figure a queer-looking ball club without Pepper Martin on hand, but Sacramento gets the lucky break. For the famous Pepper is all set for his new job of managing that Pacific Coast League club, and his debut as a team leader will be one of the most interesting turns of 1941.

It has been a long time since the Pepper hitch-hiked to the Cardinals' camp at Bradenton and later on ran Connie Mack's Athletics ragged in one of the greatest World Series exhibitions ever known.

I'd say that Pepper Martin has as much spirit, as much flame and fire in his soul as any ballplayer who ever lived.

He still likes to tell you of the time he first reported when they threw him out of the Bradenton Hotel as a tramp because he was practically a streak at the expense of the Coast mass of coal dust and cinders. He had to get a pass from Frank Frisch to Guard Academy last night at Brook-

Pepper Not Among Greatest, but Deserves Star Rating The Wild Horse of the Osage may not go down in history as one of the greatest of baseball players. But I disagree with those who have said he "never was a star." What about the 1931 World Series against the Philadelphia Athletics when he topped all hitters with the magnificent average of .500? That cer- ished slate. tainly won star honors for Pepper. What about the year 1935, when he was picked on the National League all-star team at third base? You plane, the Guardsmen were dealt a don't win all-star honors just by twiddling your thumbs. What about the severe blow in the 165-pound class 1934 World Series with Detroit, when Pepper clouted 11 hits and batted .355? The Cardinals won both these championships, and no small factor in the triumphs was the consistent hitting of Pepper Martin. Yes, there were many days when Martin was a star.

Pepper has had an unusual career. He started as a pitcher with Ardmore, C la., in 1923, became an outfielder the following year in Texas Clernon examined the lemon-like and also played second base. Part of his time with the Cards, who lump under Schmitz's eye and orsigned him in 1926, was spent at third base, and of late years he has been | dered the bout stopped. Since both playing in the outfield. Even though he lacks the speed which once made him the best base stealer in the National League, Martin still can hit. He had an average of .316 for 86 games with the Cards last season and hit .306 the year before that in 88 games.

Martin Throwback to Days of Rough-and-Ready Play

Known far and wide as the Wild Horse of the Osage, in his prime Pepper was a throwback to the era when baseball was a rough-and-tumble battle, waged with no quarter given and none asked. He made up in Cards to a lead, employing his aggressiveness whatever he lacked in sheer ability. He'd try anything and did things the modern-day baseball player never would try. And because they were unexpected stunts Pepper Martin generally got away with them. With his never-flagging enthusiasm he built himself into one of the most colorful players of his time.

He was the chief organizer of the famous Mudcat Band of the New London boy's effective but less Cardinals, which featured the two Dean boys, Dizzy and Paul. As one frequent rights to the midsection. of the leaders of the celebrated Gas House Gang he always was up to some devilment calculated to upset the opposition. In the 1931 series, for instance, he stole five bases on the great Mickey Cochrane. There was no stopping the Pepper once he made up his mind to try something.

Just what Martin will try as manager of the Sacramento club remains to be seen. This is one of the many teams in the Cards' chain-

After alternating Millrose A. A. games at Madison in first place for six laps with Don Square Garden before a crowd of Lash, Rice held onto it from there 15,000 in 4 minutes, 13.€ seconds.

It was Mehl's second straight with Luigi Beccali, 1932 Olympic triumph of the young season, but for champion for Italy, third and far a time it appeared that no one wanted to win this race or even run it any faster than a leisurely trot. Coming off the first turn, Mehl and Les MacMitchell of New York U. Mehl hit the tape three yards ahead of the on-charging MacMitchell, while no more than a yard separated the N. Y. U. sophomore. Fenske and Munski. Paul Moore, mported from California for his first indoor race, never figured and barely finished.

Campbell Kane of Indiana ran his string of indoor victories to three straight by capturing the half-mile in the slow time of 1.58.

Kane hit the tape four yards to the good on Charley Beetham, veteran national champion who hauled himself up from last place to shade Jim Kehoe of Washington A. A. for the runner-up spot.

Explorers' Late

By LEWIS F. ATCHISON. Columbus ring team walked the last mile at Turner's Arena last night, seemingly going down to defeat in its 1941 inaugural, then walked back again to capture the last three decisions and gain a 4-4 tie with The Citadel.

Obviously not in condition and up against a team of rangy, longarmed cadets, the Explorers had all the argument they could handle and only the grace of a peculiar ruling in the final bout gained a draw.

Ray Weir, Columbus heavyweight was given a technical knockout over Alex Rolison in this match when Referee Ray Bowen stepped between the two after 1:40 of the second round. The claret streamed from a bad gash over The Citadel representative's left eye. It was cut in the first round when Weir powered Rolison with a hard, overhand right.

Collegiate ring fans were of the opinion the bout should have been stopped in the first round, but The Citadel's coach, Matty Mathews. did not protest and Bowen permitted the pair to continue. When Ray halted it in the second, however, Mathews jumped up on the ring apron and volubly objected.

In the dressing room after the match he said the referee had no captain, and George Pyles, rugged authority to stop the bout unless the ringside physician decided the alier leader floored Pyles in the wound was sufficiently serious to second round with a hard right, warrant such action. Draft Held Unlikely To Hit Griffmen This Season

Four Single Men Well Down on List Where Many Are Enlisting

Baseball executives are groping in the dark, trying to figure how hard the Selective Service Act will hit the national pastime. A United Press survey reveals that major league baseball probably will lose more prominent players the coming season than anybody expected last

It seems fairly certain that Hank Greenberg, Morrie Arnovich, Zeke Bonura, Emerson Dickman and Harry Lavagetto will be wearing khaki before the all-star game rolls around in July. But this list isn't complete.

Here's the situation of each major league club:

American League. Nationals-Sid Hudson, Buddy Lewis, Jimmy Bloodworth and Cecil Travis, all single. Hudson has received his questionnaire. However, all are from Southern States, where enlistments are running high and draft quotas are small.

Browns-None of the regulars in line for call this season. Athletics-Connie Mack says, "So far as I know, we will not lose any.'

Tigers-Greenberg slated to go in Indians-Confident none will be called. (Bobby Feller has No. 2,857 Yankees-Phil Rizzuto has a low

Howard Quint Bows To Lincoln in First Of Three Games

Lincoln University of Philadelphia got the jump on its traditional rival, Howard University last night by winning the first of three games scheduled with the Bisons, 35-28.

The visiting cagers slipped into a slim lead at the start and at the half held a 16-12 margin. After intermission, Lincoln stepped up the pace with Bud Wareham and James Hunter doing most of the shooting. Wareham took scoring honors with nine points. Louis Fletcher, Howard forward, kept his team in the race most of the way and tied with Lincoln's Hunter for runner-up laurels with seven points.

Cards' Track Meet, Slated at Uline's, To Go Bigtime

Dorsey Griffith Lines Up Nation's Stars for Games on March 10

Catholic University's eighth annual track and field indoor meet will be housed in the carpeted, plushlined Uline Arena, it has been decided. The date also has been changed to Monday night, March 10. "Dutch" Bergman and Dorsey Griffith, director of athletics and track coach at C. U., respectively, emerged from a huddle with Mike Uline vesterday and announced that plans for the meet definitely had been settled. Under terms of the agreement Uline will construct a 10lap spruce track and arrange for all other accessories and Griffith will promote the affair.

Meet Goes Bigtime.

The games' new site finally removes the event from the onecylinder class and elevates it up among leading indoor track events in the East. Griffith has conducted unusually fine meets at Brookland despite the cramped quarters of the ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 1.-Navy's Cardinals' gym. This track had 16

Even under this handicap, however. Griffith induced outstanding stars to compete here. Thus with a larger, more commodius site he hopes to make the event more attractive

The Uline track will be 10 laps to the mile, one lap longer than Madison Square Garden's racing strip. It will be banked easily and the width will be 16 feet-6 feet wider than usual. Only Dartmouth's scientifically constructed track figures to be faster and the difference

Griffith Lines Up Stars. Griffith has been hard at work on plans for the meet two months now. He has been in communication with Walter Mehl, Chuck Fenske and John Munski and hopes to bring them here for a special mile. Munski told him last year he would run if it were at all possible and Mehl is believed willing to enter. Efforts also are being made to bring in Les MacMitchell, New York University's brilliant youngster who is just beginning to reach stardom.

Griffith, of course, is not ready to Mount vernon Methodist turned he'll import the best talent availin the highest score of the season able to make a good start at the new States duckpin classic, biggest TRIPLE CHAMPS—Tibor and Magda Gal Hazi, undoubtedly the outstanding pair of entrants in the Eastern table tennis tournament which started at Heurich gym yesterday. In addition to being national mixed doubles champions, Mr. and Mrs. Hazi hold or share three of the four titles which are at stake in the tournament ending tonight. Mrs. Hazi, the seeded No. 1 woman contestant, won the sectional singles crown last year and captured the mixed doubles title with her husband while he paired with Hamilton Canning to win the men's doubles. All three of those titles, along with the men's singles, will be decided tonight, starting at 8 o'clock, quarter-final matches being scheduled -Star Staff Photo. this afternoon.

U. S. Anti-Aggression Attitude Might Bring Long-Range Plan

Evidence of Established Program Would Fortify President's Announced 'Settled Policy,' According to Observers

By Felix Morley.

The eighteenth month of the war is beginning. If parallels with the last world conflict were in order, the situation for the United States would now be similar to that of January 1, 1916, when even the need for military preparedness our entrance into hostilities was still 15 months in the future.

Few Americans believe the country is today that far distant from actual belligerency. True, the minority which is actually hoping and working for our entry is small. But the minority working against that outcome is even smaller. and is further handicapped by having little influence over the instrumentalities which mold public opinion. While these are not disposed to urge outright American participation, they none the less continuously indicate that this outcome is almost inevitable. And in so doing, one must conclude, they correctly mirror the fatalistic attitude which now seems prevalent among the American

In the field of physical, as well as psychological, preparedness the United States is now much more "conditioned" for belligerency than was the case as 1916 dawned on a nation still, by and large, endeavoring to maintain a neutral status.

Military conscription is now past the experimental stage and is working smoothly. If the defense program has met serious difficulties in some respects, it is also well ahead of expectation in others. The issue is no longer whether this country has the desire and the ability to defend itself, but whether it can in the time available be equally purposeful and efficient in meeting the emerzency which faces Great Britain.

Objectives Are Less Clear.

That is the issue which is crystallized by the struggle over the lease-lend bill, where opposition to active alignment against the axis is making what is probably its last effective stand.

But if the compat policy of the United States is much more advanced than was the case at the chronologically comparable stage of the last European conflict, our war objectives are, by the same token, far less clearly formulated and planned. Long before April 6, 1917, a definite post-war order, involving permanent American participation, had already evolved in the minds of President Wilson, former President Taft and many other leadings Americans. Comparable blueprints are not available now.

As early as the end of August, 1914, President Wilson had privately gone on record as favoring the post-war inclusion of the United States in "an association of the nations, all bound together for the protection of the integrity of each, so that any one nation breaking from this bond will bring upon herself war; that is to say, punishment, automatically." Here, of course, was the genesis of the League of Nations idea, including sanctions, even though President Wilson did not, in the early months of the war, give public advocacy to his plan. Indeed it was not until May 27, 1916, and then largely at the instigation of Col. House, that Mr. Wilson first publicly stated, in general terms, the intent of his administration to make the United States an integral part of an international political organization. Thereafter, beginning with the 1916 presidential campaign, he continuously advocated that policy.

The speech of May 27, 1916, was made in Washington before a meeting of the League to Enforce Peace. That interesting and influential organization had been born toward the end of 1914, largely through the untiring efforts of Hamilton Holt, then publisher of the Independent, and Theodore Marburg, who had been the United States Minister to Belgium.

These men and others equally distinguished organized the league, chose its simple but expressive name and readily prevailed on William Howard Taft to assume its chairmanship. The definite program was adopted at a mass meeting in Philadelphia on June 17, 1915, at which Mr. Taft explained the purposes of the proposed "Peace League of the Great

"The primary and fundamental principle," this former President then said, "shall be that no war can take place between any two members of the league until they have resorted to the machinery that the league proposes to furnish to was not generally admitted and when settle the controversy likely to lead to

> "If any member of the league refuses to use this machinery, and attacks another member in breach of his league obligation, all members of the league agree to defend the member attacked by force.'

Thus, nearly two years before the entry of the United States into the last war, a concrete plan of post-war organization. visualizing a major role for the United States therein, had been evolved. The Democratic President of the United States, his Republican predecessor in the White House and a host of lesser but important luminaries were working for something closely akin to that League of Nations which eventually evolved. Long before war became an actuality for this country, the program of war aims had been prepared, and carefully prepared.

Concrete Program Lacking. The present case is otherwise. Although we seem today much closer to war than was the case in January, 1916, there is, with one exception, no concrete program such as the League to Enforce Peace was then promoting with the sympathy of the administration.

It is true that President Roosevelt, as in his last message to Congress, has talked inspirationally of "a world founded upon four essential freedoms." But on the type of organization which the United States would sponsor to guarantee those freedoms he has been completely silent. The same applies to Secretary Hull. And it applies also to former President Hoover, to Mr. Landon, to Mr. Willkie and to Nor-

Omitting the Communists, whose clear-cut program for world order is scarcely likely to receive popular backing, there seems to be only one outstanding group with definite ideas going beyond the elimination of neutrality and more or less unlimited military support. for Great Britain. That group is the one know as "Union Now." headed by Clarence Streit, whose plan for a definite been modified by force of circumstance into advocacy of immediate union between the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations.

This is a plan with tremendous appeal and one which can no longer be dismissed as visionary or even impractical. But it has yet to gain anything like the same impressive indorsement which, by January, 1916, had been accorded Mr. Taft's League to Enforce Peace.

Repudiated Own Brain Child. To those who understand that entry into the war cannot be regarded as an end in itself, to those who think that Hitler's "new order" must be opposed by something more positive than an indictment of Nazi Schrecklichkeit, this absence of long-range American policy is disturbing. It is the more disturbing because the only alternatives as yet officially advocated are an isolationism which does not work and an interventionism directed primarily to the making

In 1917 the United States went to war with a definite program. A League of Nations-with teeth in it-was an advertised American war aim, outlined in essentials long before this country be-

Two years later, with a shortsighted fickleness unparalleled in history, we repudiated our own brain child. In spite of the gallant effort at Geneva, the inevitable happened. The League of Nations, designed on the assumption of American membership, collapsed. And now the United States prepares for the renewed war for which those who sabotaged the League must share responsibility with Adolf Hitler.

In 1917 we abandoned neutrality and isolation in favor of an international cooperation planned to end aggression. In 1919 we completely abandoned this cooperation in favor of isolation. In 1935,

WHEN Phil Murray uses certain words -especially words with "r"-the soft, Scottish burr is plain in his speech. It is the trademark of his origin, the rich, rolling speech that he brought with him when, as a youth, he came over from Blantyre in Scotland to the New World to work in the coal fields of Pennsylvania.

Besides his burr, Mr. Murray brought out of his early environment other things Scottish. A quiet, calm determination which has sometimes caused his opponents to label him stubborn is one of them. Courage and a decent modesty are other attributes that go back to

While he was born and lived in the village of Lanarkshire, in Scotland, until the age of 16, Mr. Murray's parents were both Irish by descent. But it was the iron discipline of the Scots that seemed to have set the pattern of this man's temperament. No matter what was the relative contribution of heredity and environment, in the job in which he now finds himself, Phil Murray has need of the virtues of both peoples. For as the new head of the Congress of Industrial Organizations he has one of the toughest assignments ever given to any leader. It is hard to see how circumstances could have contrived to make the task more difficult even if Mr. Murray's worst enemy had arranged the whole thing.

Internal and External Pressures.

In the midst of the defense crisis, organized labor is faced with a strong demand to surrender hard-won games. Reactionary forces would like to use the crisis to break the strength of labor. This situation is aggravated by the prolonged feud between the A. F. L. and the C. I. O. Within the C. I. O. itself there are strong currents of dissension.

Add to this Mr. Murray's own relationship with John L. Lewis-the conflict of ancient loyalties with the need to re-orient the C. I. O. and start in a somewhat different direction. Two more unlike men than Mr. Lewis and Mr. Murray it would be difficult to find.

To see them lunching together at Mr. Lewis' favorite table in the dining room of the Carlton Hotel is an object lesson in character study. In mood and appearance Mr. Lewis is leonine, commanding in gesture and manner to the point of theatricality and sometimes it is bad theater. Mr. Murray is self-contained, a little withdrawn, inclined to be intro-

They have been friends for many years, the bravura Welshman and the meditative Scotsman, having come up together in the United Mine Workers. They know each other intimately and well, so well that Mr. Murray is one of the very few who can kid the solemn Mr. Lewis and make him like it.

It is hardly a secret that Mr. Murray has disapproved of certain of the moves that Mr. Lewis has made. He has been dubious of Mr. Lewis' moves in the direction of Mexico and Latin America. And while he will say nothing about it. he has been suspicious of Communist influence within the C. I. O., particularly as it has been related to Soviet foreign policy.

Mr. Murray might well want to make changes within the C. I. O. organization now that he is in charge. But such action would certainly be interpreted as a rebuke to his old friend and chief. So he moves cautiously. He removed Lee Pressman, C. I. O. general counsel, from his important post as secretary of the Legislative Committee, but at the same time he made Mr. Lewis' man, John T. Jones, C. I. O.'s legislative representative on Capitol Hill.

No Suspicion Shown.

Whether Mr. Lewis has really surrendered leadership of the movement he started is debatable. Many of his former associates believe that the old lion is nursing his wounds in solitude, preparing for a comeback when the time seems opportune. He may regard Mr. Murray as no more than a stopgap until he himself can ride back into power, and even greater political power than he ever wielded in the past.

But if any mutual suspicion exists between these old friends, they have not shown it. At the last C. I. O. convention. Mr. Lewis with tears in his eyes importuned Mr. Murray to take the post that he was giving up. It was a dramatic moment in the lives of both men, a climax to their differences in the campaign when Mr. Lewis was vociferously for Wendell Willkie and Mr. Murray unobtrusively for President Roosevelt.

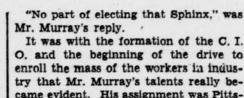

As a boy of 6, Phil Murray went with his father to a strike meeting of the coal miners' local in Lanarkshire. It was a solemn meeting, particularly solemn for the boy because his father was president of the union. They took a vote at the meeting and a majority voted to end the strike. The miners' pay was increased 12 cents a day to $1.65. This episode made an indelible impression on him. At the age of 10 he went down in the mines as his father's helper at wages of about 80 cents a day.

That was just before the turn of the century. In 1902 when Philip was 16, the Murray family, father, mother and nine other brothers and sisters, emigrated to the United States. Their boat reached New York harbor on Christmas morning and waited for midnight to come so that the steerage passengers could be cleared through customs. Late the following night the Murray clan arrived at Irwin, Pa., a coal mining town. They walked 6 miles through a bitter storm to the home of relatives.

His First "Union" Fight.

Life in Pennsylvania was outwardly not very much different from life in Lanarkshire. Phil and his father went down in the mines by day, and by night they studied together at home. This was the land of opportunity. Mr. Murray recalls that he spent $60 on a correspondence course in mathematics and completed it in six months instead of the nulated 18.

Murray stopped at the weighman's office | ports, and the right to transport troops | feel that no matter what the future may to complain about the money he was across Central America in case of emer- hold, this quiet Scotsman will stand up losing through having his coal short- gency.

He went about it with the quiet thoroughness that has characterized his career, recruiting an excellent staff of experienced men to whom he delegated broad powers. Mr. Murray's position in Pittsburgh had something to do with the way in which the public in general accepted the big push of his Steel Workers' Organizing Committee. Pittsburgh was his town and he had worked to make it a better town. For years he has served on the school board. He married and

unionization in the capital of big steel until Mr. Murray started his drive.

Successful Steel Drive.

started a family there.

The success of the steel drive in the Pittsburgh area is now a part of labor history. The United States Steel Corp., under the shrewd direction of Myron C. Taylor and Edward R. Stettinius, jr., signed its first union contract with S. W. O. C. Other companies followed suit. Mr. Murray showed his skill not only as an organizer but as a negotiator. Years of dealing with the coal operators had equipped him to sit around a table with the masters of steel and bargain for thousands enrolled for the first time in

The thorny problem of "little steel" remained. Ernest Weir, Tom Girdler and the heads of smaller companies competing with United States Steel held out stubbornly against collective bargaining with the S. W. O. C. Case after case was carried to the National Labor Relations Board and to the courts, with the customary result-a victory for the steel workers.

Mr. Murray has been fighting it out on the union line with dogged persistence. A considerable section of the steel industry remains non-union, conspicuously the huge Bethlehem corporation, with more than a billion dollars in defense orders. And the same grim persistence marks Mr. Murray's in his new job.

Organizers are working night and day at the Bethlehem plants, Mr. Murray says, and when the local unions have sufficient strength demands will be made on the company. It is Mr. Murray's attitude that organized labor cannot afford to surrender any hard-won gains, such as_the right to strike, if democracy is to be preserved at home as well as abroad. He points out that in Great Britain, a nation at war, almost as many manhours were lost through strikes during the first 10 months of 1940 as in this country. And if beleaguered Britain can preserve labor's democratic rights, he adds, then surely we in America can follow the example.

Deeply Distrusts A. F. of L. Leaders.

Mr. Murray cherishes no futile optimism. He is aware of the hazards ahead. On the issue of peace between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., for example, he does not hesitate to say how far in the future he believes this desirable objective to be. A peace pact now, in Mr. Murray's belief, would mean yielding on the vital question of industrial unionism which is the basic tenet of the C. I. O. It would mean the sacrifice of labor's mass gains. Mr. Murray has a deep distrust of the men who control the A. F. of L., men whom he knows from the past.

Mr. Murray remains skeptical of the new defense setup which, through the Office of Production Management, gives to Sidney Hillman, C. I. O. executive, a co-ordinate power with William S. Knudsen over the far-flung rearmament program. Control in the interest of protecting labor's rights cannot come from the top, Mr Murray says. He has brought forward a plan of his own for industry councils on which there would be representatives of labor and management with extensive powers.

The industry council plan is not a new one for Mr. Murray. He developed it at length in a book, "Organized Labor and Production," which he wrote in collaboration with Morris L. Cooke, industrial engineer who now has an important defense job. Mr. Cooke and Mr. Murray, finding a considerable field of agreement. although their approach was different, developed the concept of the industrial council as an extension of industrial democracy. It is Mr. Murray's firm conviction that labor has not a little to contribute to the efficiency and well-being of industry.

Loopholes in Citizenship Laws Eliminated by Nationality Act

Legislation Backed by American Bar Prevents Abuse of Privileges and Repeals Outmoded Regulations

By William A. Millen.

A Magna Charta of naturalization and American citizenship—long the ambition of the American Bar Association-has just become the law of the land.

Known officially as the Nationality Act of 1940, it defines the rights of women and children, sets up rigid requirements for the privilege of American citizenship and repeals a host of laws that stood in the way of this sweeping reform.

Under this new statute, the nationality laws of the Nation are revised and codified. Approved by the President October 14, the new enactment, by its terms, officially became effective 90 days from that date. This achievement represents a wealth of committee work, in and out of Congress. It is described as the first piece of legislation that the American Bar Association has been able to get through Congress in a decade.

Persons living abroad, yet claiming to be American citizens, will have to maintain more concrete ties with the United States if they wish to retain their citizenship in this Nation. Hitherto, numerous citizens have earned their fortunes here and then gone abroad to spend their declining days, where the rate of exchange favored a more reasonable scale of living, yet they maintained a flimsy connection with the U. S. A. The new statute is designed to put an end to that situation.

Favored by Army and Navy.

The Army and Navy were keen for this legislation, considering it an important aid to the national defense. The code places in orderly arrangement the nationality laws, which heretofore were scattered among more than 40 statutes, and it clarifies the language in many of the sections and repeals contradictory sections.

The code is designed to block loopholes in existing statutes, which virtually subjected the United States Government to liability of fraud by persons living abroad and claiming citizenship.

According to informed officials, the new legislation "stopped the gap which permitted thousands of persons who never lived for any length of time in the United States and never intended to remain, to claim citizenship when it suited

Deemed expatriated under the new legislation are native or naturalized citizens who become naturalized in a foreign state; those who formally renounce their citizenship in the United States of America; deserters from the military or naval forces, when they are convicted by court-martial; those who serve in a foreign army, unless authorized to do so by the laws of the United States; those who serve as officials in a foreign country, where only nationals of the country are eligible, and those voting in political are provided for those who break the elections abroad.

Government officials claim as an advantage of the new law the fact that it will facilitate the administration of the statute, by its arrangement and clarifications. Further, they assert, it will be particularly helpful to officials of Government, at home and abroad.

Those charged with the duty of fingerprinting aliens will be aided, in the opinion of informed authorities, because there is an easily-available rulebook to determine if one is a citizen or an alien.

Roosevelt Asked Legislation.

Urging adoption of the code were President Roosevelt, who deemed the recodification an emergency measure; the State Department, which voiced its indorsement through Counselor R. Walton Moore; the War Department and the Navy Department. In addition, the American Bar Association and a number of civilian groups advocated early enactment of the bill by the Congress. In a special message to Congress, President Roosevelt on June 13, 1938, urged this legislation and transmitted with it a special report of a committee that the Chief Executive had named some five years earlier. The House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, under chairmanship of Representative Samuel Dickstein, Democrat, of New York, then began consideration of the complex problem.

Under this all-important legislation, persons are barred from naturalization as citizens of the United States if they advise, advocate, teach or are members of or affiliated with any organizations that advise, advocate or teach opposition to all organized government. Further, the gates of American citizenship will be closed to those who believe in, advise, advocate or teach the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or all forms of law.

Naturalization will be denied those who urge the duty, necessity or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers of the Government of the United States or any other organized government, because of their official character.

Nationals Defined.

The new law sets up a distinction between citizens of the United States and those who are nationals. Children born abroad, whose American parent is at the time of the child's birth residing abroad solely or principally in the employment of the United States Government or & bona fide American educational, scientific, philanthropic, religious, commercial or financial organization, having its principal office or place of business in the United States-or an international agency of an official character in which the United States participates-get special consideration under the act.

Under the new code native-born Filipinos having honorable service in the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, may become naturalized. Those seeking naturalization, unless disqualified physically, must be able to speak the English language.

The new code goes into much of detail concerning the procedure to be followed by officials of the United States and others involved in the program. The law sets forth that "the right of a person to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of sex or because such person is married." Registry of aliens and the furnishing of photographs are required under the new legislation. Those who are naturalized and within five years thereafter return to the country of nativity-or any other foreign land—and take up permanent residence there, are to be regarded. under the law, as exhibiting prima facie evidence of a lack of intention to become permanent citizens of this land.

Statistics to Be Kept.

The commissioner of immigration and naturalization, under the Attorney General, is empowered to publish and distribute a citizenship textbook. Statistics of naturalization are to be kept, under the statute, and heavy penalties

Washingtonians played a pre-eminent part in the securing of this legislation. which is deemed particularly effective at this time, with the world in tumult. The prime object of the new act was to secure a more workable statute and strengthen the places where experience found the law to be weak and unenforceable. Representative Rees of Kansas took an outstanding part in whipping the legislation into final form.

F. Regis Noel, former president of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, was chairman of the American Bar Association's committee that aided in securing enactment of the new legislation. Serving with him were Attorney John R. Benney of the Department of Justice, Henry F. Butler, Washington lawyer; Richard W. Flournoy, attached to the office of the Secretary of State: Solicitor Gerald D. Reilly of the Department of Labor and Mrs. Grace Kanode Llewellyn, who served as secretary and was until recently the secretary to Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat of District Court.

Out of the discussion of the years, the tedious committee hearings, the writings and the speeches and the studies of serious-minded men has been born a code which its sponsors believe will be one of the bulwarks in keeping America

The Answer

The sponsors of the National Christian Mission, which now has come to Washington, believe that the Gospel of Christ is the answer to all the powers of hatred and greed that threaten the human race. Nowhere else than in the Scriptures, they insist, can there be found a cure for the evils of war and revolution. When European dictators launched a campaign for the conquest of civilization, the department of evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches, with headquarters in New York, organized a drive to reaffirm the philosophy of freedom and fellowship for which the Prince of Peace gave up His life upon the Cross. Meetings were planned for twenty-two major American cities, the Nation's Capital included. Great preachers were enlisted. Hundreds of thousands already have heard their message, and still other multitudes will listen to it in Washington this week. The objective is "the revival of Christianity on a scale and at an intensity quite beyond anything our day is visualizing."

But the leaders of the mission have made it plain that they seek a practical as well as an ideal end. They are in solemn earnest when they argue that the Christian doctrine is "the living force the world so tragically needs. It invites men and women to discover God's transforming grace in their own lives and then relate their noblest inspirations to the social hurts and the social needs of their age" How realistic is the cause for which they plead may be judged from their citation of the truth that in other eras society was transformed by "the dynamics of a God-centered faith." History supports their contention in the characters of Peter the Hermit and Joan of Arc. As these saints long since were crusaders for the Kingdom in this earth, the adherents of a modern movement to a similar purpose may be remembered in the distant future by the heirs of their vision.

Certainly, it may be objected that such a spiritual renaissance would require unity of enterprise and solidarity of effort. The National Christion Mission from its beginning has been vitalized by the conviction of clergy and laity alike that it will create new ways and means of cooperation among religious groups. Logic also suggests that there is a relation between the movement for a rebirth of the soul of the Nation and the program of national defense which currently is being carried into effect by the Federal Government. It is the liberty and the democracy that America has learned from the Bible that are to be preserved against the danger of tyranny and paganism from abroad. The alternative is a surrender which no citizen of the United States worthy of the name would be willing to consider

For the strengthening of all that makes existence tolerable the mission is designed. It will prosper, under God, in the degree of the zeal with which it is supported by the people whose welfare it strives to

Best Laid Plans

In spite of the lessons learned in the years following the World War, and notwithstanding the policy of the Park and Planning Commission in locating emergency buildings of a functional nature in undeveloped or industrial areas, the National Capital is about to be given another "temporary" edifice which can well be expected to remain indefinitely. This is the addition planned for the Navy Department Building. It will extend from Seventeenth street and Constitution avenue, at the rear of the present structure, as far as the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool.

Twenty-two years ago numerous temporary buildings filled the open spaces in the center of the city. Navy and Munitions were superior only in that they were of concrete and painted white, but even some of the old wood and stucco structures remain in the Mall opposite the magnificent National Gallery of Art. It had been hoped that during this emergency, "temporary" construction could be located in less ostentatious surroundings In addition to esthetic factors, serious traffic problems should be considered. If Fine Arts Commission advice is followed. Virginia avenue soon will be closed at its intersection with Constitution avenue to make will result from housing thousands of additional workers in the central office area. Also, the new structure will eliminate 750 off-street parking spaces, with no possibility of relocation. Demands of the emergency, of course, have first consideration, and the Navy Department certainly needs additional space. But before similar conditions arise in other agencies, steps should be taken to prevent, as far as possible, unnecessary "temporary" construction.

Ignoring the Past

The minority report of the House Foreign Affairs Committee strongly suggests that the significant lesson of past failures to abate the menace of totalitarianism has been lost on the subscribing members. Armies of the aggressor states stand astride virtually all of Europe today because the relatively free nations which opposed them failed and refused to unify and co-ordinate their powers of resistance. Even after the reduction in detail of the outposts of the nations marked for destruction, the menaced survivors. deluded by false fears and false hopes, would not present a common front. Belgium and Holland, for example, refused to discuss joint defense plans with the French and the British, preferring the illusive shelter of a neutrality which they knew would be violated whenever the Nazis decided to strike westward.

This fundamental of Nazi strategy—the detailed conquest of its victims before they can unite effectively in defense-applies as well to a program of world domination as to the conquest of Europe alone, and if we permit the defeat of Britain without making every effort to co-ordinate our defense facilities with those of the British, we will be guilty of the same mistake which the other defeated nations have made.

Yet it is precisely this mistake which the minority members of the committee are asking the United States to make. By their own statement, they favor "all aid to Britain short of war and short of sacrificing our own defense and our own freedom," but in their enumeration of the specific ways in which they would aid the British they lay down a program of half measures which, for practical purposes, would be tantamount to refusing any assistance. In effect, they recognize the importance to us of a British victory by advocating aid to Britain, but they are not willing to sanction that degree of assistance which, in the judgment of our own military experts, is essential to prevent a Nazi

For essential purposes, the minority members take their stand against the lease-lend bill on the proposition that under the bill "we surrender our democratic way of life now for fear of a future threat to our democratic way of life. The oldest and last constitutional democracy surrenders its freedom under the pretext of avoiding war, with the probable result that the newest dictatorship will soon go to war."

This position is fundamentally unsound because it assumes that the threat to our security is a "future threat." Those who subscribe to it ignore all of the evidence which shows that the threat is immediate and real, and therefore they fall into the grievous error of believing that it is both wise and relatively safe for us to permit a potential ally to be defeated for lack of effective assistance, hoping that we will not be the next victim of aggression. The vanquished democracies of Europe, imbued with the same false hope, similarly refused to stand together in time to beat off attack, and that is the reason why the minority report is correct in describing the United States as the "last" constitutional

Progress on the Plate

The regional economic conference being held at Montevideo between Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay is obviously getting down to brass tacks and promises to achieve worthwhile results. Regional handling of common problems is logically indicated by the basic geographical fact that all five countries lie within the vast Plate River system, comparable to our Mississippi Valley. Nationalistic rivalries and jealousies have hitherto prevented broad-gauge handling of matters vital to their joint prosperity. The second World War, with its inevitable dislocations of international trade, has quickened the urge for common action among these nations of southern South America. The scope and complexity of the issue can be seen by the fact that more than forty distinct projects have been brought up before the conference for consideration.

Especially revealing is the agreement reached in committee that ferryboats plying the waters of the Plate estuary and the confluent rivers are henceforth to be considered extensions of the roads they connect and therefore to be freed from troublesome delays due to port formalities when the ends of their short runs are in different nations. It is easy to picture the handicaps to local trade and communications where such conditions prevail. Of much wider import is the conference's approval of a draft convention suspending operations of the most-favored-nation clause in dealings between the five participating countries. This convention provides that concessions agreed upon shall remain in force only so long as they are not extended to way for an addition to the Pan- other countries by the usual most- from his Moslem followers a gift of tual limitless supply of weapons for the Minnesota cities. involves the relations of the signatories with nations throughout the world.

Theoretically, this might seem to contradict the liberal principles in international trade for which our own Government has stood so strongly. But the idea of regional tariff concessions where local trade could thereby be fostered was indorsed by the Pan-American Conference of 1933, and seems clearly justified by the economic necessities of the Plate area.

On the other hand, it is doubtful whether the present conference will broaden the limited concessions now being considered into the much more ambitious regional customs union proposed in different forms by Argentina and Brazil. Both countries approach the project from diverse angles, and the smaller nations shy at the proposal, lest they might thereby become "economic dominions" of their larger and more powerful neighbors. The touchy nationalism which animates all Latin American countries is likely to slow down the trend toward economic unification. But the trend is obviously there, and it is favored by the pressing necessities of these difficult times.

Italian Woes

Military operations in Africa and Albania continue to comprise a cumulative tale of woe for Italian arms. The British have captured Derna, the Libyan port on the Mediterranean "hump," and have promptly set themselves, as their next objective, Apollonia, forty miles to the west. Meantime, General Wavell's advance patrols and reconnoitering air forces are stretching out feelers far to the west, in the direction of Bengasi, a city of fifty thousand, important both as a naval base and the capital of Eastern Libya.

British headquarters at Cairo expect that the Italians, who have been rolled back across 250 miles of desert terrain during the course of something more than fifty days, will make a determined stand to save Bengasi. The Fascists gave some evidence of revived fighting spirit at Derna, which fell after four days of the stiffest resistance the North African campaign has thus far witnessed. Marshal Graziani must hold the British at Bengasi, or face the alternative of a disastrous retreat along the Gulf of Sirte reaching all the way to Tripolitania. He undertakes his task with an army which is a mere skeleton of its original pro-

Whatever betides for the British in the Libyan operations that still lie ahead, their North African campaign has definitely achieved its basic nurpose of smashing, almost beyond redemption, the Italian menace to Egypt and the Suez Canal, which was Mussolini's glittering objective. The Imperial Army of the Nile, too, has made a brilliant start in the direction of "tearing the Italian empire into shreds and tatters," as predicted by Mr. Churchill a month ago. New and substantial progress along that line has just been achieved in East Africa, where British forces are steadily advancing into Eritrea, Ethiopia and Italian Somaliland.

Coincident with these tidings of Italian reverses in both African theaters of war comes news of fresh Greek successes in Albania. Yugoslavian reports are to the effect that Fascist troops have withdrawn from Tepeleni, on the central battlefront a key point in the Greek drive toward Valona, southernmost Albanian port on the Adriatic. With Klisura already in their possession, adjacent to Tepeleni on the northeast, the Hellenes should shortly be in position for an irresistible advance against Valona. The Italians have launched counterattacks, but these appear to have been repulsed, with considerable numbers of prisoners remaining in Greek hands. Despite Hitler's attempts, in his Berlin address on Thursday, to minimize the importance of Italian defeats and to ridicule the possibility of the axis partner's "falling away," there is incessant evidence that domestic morale and war spirit in Italy are far from being all that Mussolini must desire. The droves in which Graziani's soldiers surrendered in North Africa, the comparatively insignificant losses they have inflicted upon the British, the successive failures the Italian Army has suffered in contact with the Greeks-all these things add up to the inescapable conclusion that without far more substantial aid by land or air than Il Duce to date has received from the Germans, he must continue to reckon with the possibility that Italy may be knocked out of the war before the axis contrives to impose that longheralded fate upon the intrepid archfoe in the British Isles.

President Aims at World Power

By Owen L. Scott.

President Roosevelt is definitely fixing the course of the United States toward attempted world leadership. With equal definiteness, he is determined that a strong national urge toward isolation from the rest of the world shall not be permitted to prevail.

Congress will fail to deflect Mr. Roosevelt from this course. The reason that Congress will fail is that the American people, while apparently wanting isolation, still appear afraid to live in a world that would be dominated by Adolf Hitler and by his ideas of economic slavery for all except those individuals who are acceptable to his "master race."

President Roosevelt is trying to guide the American people back toward the path to world leadership along which they started in 1917. The President, and those about him, are convinced the people of this country must tread that path. using their untried power to rebuild the system of liberal world capitalism, or else this country must accept a wholly different political and economic organization fitted to isolation and a secondrate position in the world.

The lend-lease bill provides the machinery through which the United States can make its influence felt in the world without actually sending an American Army and an American Navy to do the fighting. The plan is that this country shall provide the weapons for others to use in preventing Germany, Italy and Japan from breaking through the barriers that now keep them from this hemisphere and its riches. In fulfilling that plan there inevitably would grow up something of a merger of British and American interests—a merger that would have continuing influence if Great Britain should survive and it might make a Hitler victory rather empty if Britain should not survive.

Two points, however, worry Congress and are delaying action on the President's plan. Both grow from an unwillingness on the part of a minority in Congress to trust Mr. Roosevelt in the use of broad new power.

First, is the expressed fear that the President might weaken the defenses of this country by giving away weapons needed by the Army and Navy at home for training or for resistance to actual

Second, is the expressed fear that the President might use his new power to get this country into an actual shooting war by affronting the Germans or Japanese through too generous aid to the

The answer to these fears given by some of those who should know what is planned, is that the President by transferring some weapons is better able to prevent the need for a shooting war. They point out that every President from George Washington to Franklin Roosevelt has been charged with conducting the foreign relations of this country and that every President has been commander in chief of the Army and Navy These are powers that enable any President to precipitate military action if he so desires. Many Presidents have done so. War declaration by Congress has at times been a formality, or has simply not been resorted to as American forces were directed by a President to act without consultation with Congress. President Roosevelt has refrained, more than any modern President, from the use of the armed forces of this country to force compliance with American Gov-

However, without the lend-lease bill Mr. Roosevelt today could direct the American Navy to convoy merchant ships to England and to shoot at any German submarines that might interfere. He possesses power to direct the Army and Navy to occupy the Azores or Cape Verde Islands or Greenland He could direct the American Navy, if Britain agreed, to operate out of Singapore in the face of a Japanese warning that this would mean war.

In other words, President Roosevelt, like every President, is possessed of warmaking-as contrasted with war-declaring-powers, if he wants to use those newers. There is nothing Congress can do to alter that situation

Mr. Roosevelt is described as convinced that the best chance to avoid actual use of the American Army and Navy lies in the assurance to the British that their forces around the world will be adequately supplied with weapons needed to the German-Italian-Japanese combination bottled up. If Germany can be held at bay by airplanes transferred from American Army supplies with those airplanes operated by British pilots, it might be better than to have those airplanes operated by American pilots. In either case the number of planes in the United States would be diminished. But under the President's would be avoided.

method, a shooting war for this country The alternative to some action to help the British while they resist and to provide machinery for merging British and American world interests if Britain herself falls, is acceptance by the United States of isolation within this continent. Most military and naval authorities are convinced that this country could become impregnable to military invasion if content to confine its actions to North America. But the American people, through most of their history, have insisted upon having a voice in the destiny of South and Central America as well. The problem of maintaining this Nation's influence in South America would become extremely difficult in the event of a British defeat owing, first to the distances involved which are as great for the United States as for Germany and second to South America's stronger racial ties with Europe than with this

Furthermore, the United States today is responsible for protection of the Philippine Islands, 7,000 miles away, and this responsibility cannot be shirked so long as this country wants to remain a first-rate power able to shape its own destiny. Viewed against that background, the lend-lease plan is seen by the President and his advisers as the most practical means of making the influence of the United States felt in the world without actual declaration of war or use of American man power to overcome the nations now in formal alliance against us. That plan opens the way to an even-

'WE KNEEL ONLY TO THEE'

By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

A poster has been produced in England representing a British soldier kneeling before the figure of Christ. It has received widespread favor and its title has become one of the slogans of the British Empire. The greatest sovereignty the empire recognizes is the sovereignty of Jesus Christ.

The generous response to this poster is indicative of the deepened religious feeling, made more dominant in the life of the British people by reason of the tragedies through which the empire is passing. Here is morale in its finest expression. It is more sustained by a living faith in a living Christ. To paraphrase the words of another, the "British people have seen God in the tragedies of their life." As illustrative of this read the words spoken from the ruins of Coventry Cathedral:

"What we want to tell the world is this: That with Christ born again in our hearts we are trying, hard as it may be to banish all thoughts of revenge; we are bracing ourselves to finish this tremendous job of saving the world from tyranny and cruelty; we are going to try to make a kinder, simpler, a more Christ-Childlike world in the days beyond this strife."

This demonstration of Christian faith must find a response here in America. To admire it is one thing; to emulate it another. Despite all evidences to the contrary, we believe that there is a deep undercurrent of religious feeling coursing through the life of America. Our people, broadly representative of the races of the world, are not as closely knit as are those of England, and the vast spaces of this country do not afford an opportunity comparable to that of England for developing in a brief space a revival of religious life.

Notwithstanding this, a great movement has been set on foot by the leading Protestant churches of America to bring to the consciousness of our people the need of a renewal of their faith and loyalty to Jesus Christ. A National Christian Mission, led by the most outstanding preachers in the country and from abroad, has been gathering momentum as it has proceeded from city to city over the land. In many places the largest auditoriums have proved inadequate to meet the demands of the throngs that came to hear again the ever-old and ever-new story of the Gospel. Distinguished laymen have joined with those in orders to proclaim again the mighty truths given to mankind by the Master. The mission has not sought so much to stir the emotions as to stimulate in the minds of men everywhere the urgency of the Gospel message. The time is ripe for a new reformation movement. Nothing is more evident in the life of the world today than the impotence of its self-confidence and man-made institutions.

The old and searching question is on the lips of multitudes: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou alone hast the words of eternal life." Men are beginning to realize that the mighty teachings of Christ have relevance to world conditions and that if Christian civilization is to be preserved it must be made more Christian. The Sermon on the Mount transcends all other messages ever given to mankind. Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights and the Constitution have had their inspiration and authority from Him who declared: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free. The world had lost its hold upon Him who is the embodiment of truth. It had reverenced Him, sometimes worshiped Him, but it had neglected if not abandoned His way of life. It is learning at frightful cost what this means-shattered cities, disrupted and impoverished national life, confusion and increasing fear, countless thousands of youth slain, all issuing in bitter rivalries and hatreds.

Where, apart from a return to the ways of Christ will the world recover its security and peace? Upon the Christian Church a great responsibility rests Upon every Christian a duty is imposed to be loyal to the Christ's way of life. The churches' National Christian Mission, to be held in this city in churches and halls, beginning today and continuing through Sunday, February 9, affords an opportunity for a new demonstration of an awakened and aroused church, a fresh evidence of its indispensable place in our national life.

The Star for January Making Play 28, 1891, reported: 'After the performance of Sardou's 'Thermidor' in Paris on Monday night there was a riot in the streets near the theater, caused by the disorderly conduct of the extreme partisans of revolution, who were ejected from the theater. They hissed the audience as they left . and shouted 'Down with Sardou, 'Long live the republic.' The cause of their dissatisfaction was Sardou's denunciation of the excesses of the revolution. In the streets a free fight followed between the extremists and the police, and it was with difficulty that the latter managed to keep a passage through the enraged crowd for the audience. During the disturbance 15 arrests were made among the most violent of the rioters but only two extremely wild agitators were held in custody after the crowds had been dispersed. M. Pichon will ask the Chamber of Deputies to suppress 'Thermidor' on the ground that it is liable to lead to rioting. M. Reinach will oppose the motion on the ground that the suppression of the play would be an attack upon the liberty of the drama, as well as an attack upon art. M. Sardou said in regard to the disturbance: 'It was not my intention to produce a reactionary play, but a piece in harmony with honest republican principles, which do not approve of the horrors

"The Liberals scored another point with the working men yesterday in the motion of Mr. Robertson of Dundee to amend the law relating to criminal conspiracy. The government secured the defeat of the motion by only a majority of 36, and the defeat is almost as good for Liberal purposes as a victory. The motive for amending the law is the decision by the recorder of Plymouth that a strike for the purpose of compelling employers not to employ other persons is illegal and renders all persons engaged in it liable to prosecution as criminal conspirators and subject to fine or imprisonment. The complaint was brought by a coal merchant who employed non-union men and whose union hands were called out on that account. The union secretaries were presecuted and the recorder fined them each 20 pounds. The recorder's decision is far-reaching and, until the law Pa.-the neighborhood firehouse where is amended, makes all who strike or who promote a strike on account of non-union hands being employed guilty of crime The working men are determined that the law shall be amended. and Mr. Robertson, who represents a working men's constituency, has made the first move in that direction and got of the firehouse, which ended: "We are Lord Salisbury's government again comjust trying to say to you, Jimmie, that we mitted as opposed to the working class.'

One such shadow may be found in a report to the effect that: "Count von Munster-Ledenburg, the German Ambassador, presided Tuesday night at a banquet given at the German Embassy in Paris in honor of the birthday of Emperor William. The Figaro, referring to this entertainment. says that Count von Munster, in toasting the German Emperor, said: 'We must face now the present and the fuvaliant monarch, desirous, for his peo- this mission."

At least 350,000 American familiesmore than a million men, women and children-are wandering from State to State in a desperate effort to earn a living as migrant farm laborers. These families probably have the lowest living standards of any group in the United States. Their incomes range between $200 and $450 a year. They follow the crops in rickety automobiles, packed with their only possessions-a tent a blanket or two, a few pots and pans. Many of them travel as far as 3,000 miles a year. Their children have little chance for education, adequate medical care or normal community life. Malnutrition and disease are common among both adults and children. These migrant workers are essential to some of the Nation's most important farm areas. In California, for example, a big vegetable or cotton farm may use only a few dozen workers during most of the year, but in the harvest season, it will need as many as 500 laborers for a week or two. The same is true in other areas where the old-fashioned family-sized farm has almost disappeared and agriculture has become a big industry. In these regions a single farm may cover thousands of acres, and often is owned by a corporation which operates it like a factory with modern machinery and crews This type of farming is most common in the specialty crop regions of California. It also is widespread, however, in the lettuce, cotton and vegetable fields of Arizona; the fruit, berry and hop regions of the Pacific Northwest: the beet and potato country of Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Colorado; the cotton and citrus areas of Texas, and parts of Florida and New Jersey.

Labor Problem

In Texas alone there are nearly 500,000 migrant laborers, who find most of their work in the cotton harvest. Most of the cotton land now is planted and cultivated by machinery, so that hand labor is needed in abundance only in the picking season. The cotton harvest lasts nearly six months in the State as a whole, but in any single area it lasts for only 6 to 10 weeks.

Consequently, the cotton pickers start work in early July on the lower Rio Grande Valley. They drift north into the Corpus Christi area, then into Blacklands during August and September: into the South Plains and Western cotton area, and finally back into the extreme southwestern part of the State in

For years most of the migrant farm workers in all sections of the country were foreigners. Today, however, these races have been largely replaced by native, white American families, which now make up about 85 per cent of the migrant labor supply.

Most of these families were once small States. Many of them were driven out of the so-called Dust Bowl by the great droughts of 1934 and 1936. Others were foreclosed and lost their farms in the early days of the depression, and still others came from land worn out by decades of soil erosion and had land use.

Many thousands of additional families. mostly tenants, were pushed off the land by the increasing mechanization of agriculture. All through the Southern Great Plains and the Mississippi Delta, small tracts once operated by tenants and mule power are being combined into large farms, run with tractors and seasonal

The presence of this horde of migrants has created grave health, housing and economic problems, especially in the Pacific Coast States. Through the Farm Security Administration, in 1936 the Federal Government, at the request of States, set out to help them meet some of the most urgent health and housing problems which had been created by this great wave of migration. The Government has constructed a number of stationary camps where migrant families can live as they follow the crops. Since the migrants are continually flowing in and out of these camps, as the demand for labor changes in each area, as many as 12,000 or 15,000 families may use the camps in a year.

In addition to the stationary camps, during the past year a kind of traveling camp was worked out-a camp on wheels This camp gives more service to more people on a more economical basis to the Federal Government, the States and to the campers themselves. There are 16 of these special camps, which is about half the number of stationary camps.

When the mobile camp arrives, a vacant lot is transformed into an orderly village. Rows of tents are set up in army. style, traffic regulations established and sanitary facilities provided. In addition there is a community tent where church services and entertainments are held.

Most of the camps have a children's, clinic, a nurse and visiting physicians; an isolation ward for persons who have contagious diseases; a small shop where the residents can repair their automobiles and a cottage for the camp man-

This council represents the camp population. in its relations with the manager, and handles problems of discipline and order within the camp. All camps are, of course, subject to the police and health authorities of the counties in which they are located.

Since most migrant families have a difficult time earning enough money for food and clothing, they are not charged anything for living in one of the public camps. Each family, however, is asked to contribute about 10 cents a day to a camp welfare fund, which is used for minor improvements around the camp, and sometimes to help out families that are particularly hard-pressed to provide lunches and clothing for their children. The whole migratory problem, long a perplexing one to communities and States, seems to be headed toward a solution-and at taxpayers' expense.

Review of Seventy-Fourth Week of War

By John C. Henry.

There was something of a lull in the world's present habit of mass killing last week, but there were developments of importance, nevertheless. In North Africa, Britain's hard-hitting Army captured Derna, then rolled on swiftly toward Bengasi, last important Italian coastal stronghold short of Tripoli. In Europe, strong man of victorious Greece, Metaxas, died; Hitler made speech threatening American aid to British; Hopkins saw King George; Willkie saw nearly everybody, visited English pub, played

Fighting Fronts

Under momentum of their winning drive of recent weeks from Egyptian-Libyan frontier, British forces started early in week to put pressure of siege and blockade tactics on Derna; on Thursday, occupation of port was announced by empire command. Approximately 10,000 Italians composed defending garrison, being credited by attackers with stubborn resistance for four days.

Overall strategy of British in Africa evidently is to crack Mussolini's colonial empire, preclude it from furnishing aid to Italians in form of supplies or raw materials and to remove it as threat to empire domination or supply sources on that continent. Although operations in this theater of conflict are secondary in immediate military importance either to battle of Britain or battle of Balkans, it is conceivable that fortunes of belligerents in Africa may eventually be turning point for whole war and be of first magnitude in tracing pattern of world which is to come.

Throughout its history, the "Dark Continent" has been exploited by European nations with British Empire probably maintaining most advantageous position. Germany, stripped of its colonies after previous World War, has been desirous of regaining foothold there, already exercising dominance in what was once Belgian Congo. French rule, once widespread, has been split by breach between Vichy government and Free French faction led by Gen. De Gaulle in the final and most dramatic clash between Great Britain and Germany.

Official Washington has been informed by daily cables from the British government, and by the reports of American observers, that Britain urgently needs guns and mountains of shells for the defense of the islands. They are short also of aviators and airplanes.

Lord Halifax has been clear and frank about the situation. There is no question, he is reported to have told President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull, of receiving assistance in war materials in the distant future-say within the next six months. But Britain, like France in April and May, 1940, needs whatever she can obtain in this country at once. The need for naval units also has become urgent.

The Germans are pounding heavily at the British Mediterranean fleet in the hope that the losses they inflict on British men-of-war fighting in that region will draw part of the British home fleet to the southern waters. So far they have been successful in sinking or damaging more or less seriously nearly a dozen British warships. Some have been hit only slightly by the German Stukas. But, regardless of how little these ships were damaged, the lack of adequate repair facilities makes it difficult for them to continue in service.

Police Duty for Italian Troops.

In the meantime, reports from Berlin indicate that one of the results of the Mussolini-Hitler conversations was a decision to unify the Italian-German command. Translated into plain English, this unification under Field Marshal von Keitel means that all the Italian forces soon will be subjected to the German leadership.

While the future plans of the axis are uncertain, for the time being, the general impression, according to American observers abroad, is that the Italian Army will be used almost exclusively to police occupied Central and Southeastern European countries. The defeats suffered by the Italian armies in Greece and in Africa have had a serious repercussion among the hunger-suffering Italian population. There is some hope of mending the situation in Greece as soon as the snows begin to melt, but the sitto these reports, the Germans will not from the debacle will be used as a kind leave the former French capital to report troops gathered on the coasts of the oc- now consolidate.

> Mussolini is said to have agreed with the Fuehrer that the African campaign is of secondary importance—that the future of the world will be decided shortly by Germany's attempt to invade England, and not on the battlefields of Libya and Eritrea. Of course, it is admitted, if the Italians, had been successful in driving the British out of Egypt and had occupied the Suez Canal region, the task of the German armies battling for the conquest of Britain would have been much facilitated. But since this operation flopped, there is no reason to divert German forces to secondary theaters of operation.

Rumanian House Cleaning. While the Germans are preparing feverishly for the gigantic battle for Britain, they are cleaning house in the occupied regions. The Iron Guard rebellion in Rumania has made things much easier for the German government in that Danubian country. Gen. Antonescu is now much more the obedient tool in the hands of the so-called German Minister than ever before.

In Hungary Admiral Nicolas Horthy still is nominally the regent of the kingdom. But he spends all his time in the mountains far away from political turmoil. The German Minister and the German general "supervising the transportation of German troops through Hungary" are actual rulers of the coun-

A similar supervision-milder and less overt-is being exercised in Italy, where German troops are the unobtrusive guards of all important railway centers and strategic points. Petain vs. Hitler.

The relations between Herr Hitler and Marshal Petain are strained. For the time being Hitler is waging a war of nerves against the aged head of the French government. Petain wrote a dignified letter to Hitler explaining his uation in Africa is hopeless. According reasons for various cabinet shifts. This letter was written before Christmas, but ington that the zero hour is approaching | have occupied territories far away from | Col. de la Roque, former chief of the French Fascist organization-the Croix de Feu-who had been summoned to Vichy to join Petain's staff, was another indication of Hitler's war of nerves against unoccupied France.

In order to clear up the situation, the chief of state has ordered his chief adviser and principal British baiter, Admilar Darlan, to go to Paris and find out what Hitler's terms are for an honest and sincere co-operation with France. The price is well known to the marshal. It is the naval bases at Bizerta and Oran. whence Italian submarines under German supervision could operate successfully against the British navy and merchant fleet. Failing that concession—not provided for in the terms of the French-German armistice-relations will go from bad to worse. The Germans are endeavoring to convince the French leaders-Darlan is reported to be already convinced-that British defeat is a certainty. If Germany could dispose of the French-African bases, the victory would be quicker and the results advantageous for "all the friends of the Reich." France would be in that category.

Petain Doubts British Victory.

If the victory were slow, because of French reluctance to "co-operate," or even in the event of a stalemate whichin the opinion of Petain himself—is the best the British can hope for, France might form one of the bargaining points between the principal actors in the present European tragedy.

By these methods Herr Hitler and his advisers expect to compel the old defender of Verdun to revise his decision not to allow the French naval bases and the French fleet to participate in the present conflict. Germany would like to have the French join them in the struggle against Britain-which they realize will be ferocious and risky-on their own volition. But, according to the best available indications, if Petain should remain adamant the occupation of the rest of France will be inevitable.

All this diplomatic pressure brought to bear upon the European countries forms only a secondary phase of the present German activities. Their principal effort now is bent on the invasion of Britain. The German armies in Norway, Holland, Belgium and France are well protected against espionage.

as war clouds gathered again, we attempted to reinforce isolation with a rigid neutrality which positively encouraged aggression by stating in advance that we would draw no distinctions between an aggressor and the victim of aggression. But Hitler Underestimates England, Says Ex-War Minister of October 28 Gen. Metaxas received the ultimatum of Mussolini requiring free passage for Italian troops to certain strategic points in Greece, his immediate decisive rejection of the demands transformed the prospects of Britain in the Mediterranean area.

Convenient and advantageous harbors were placed at the disposal of the Royal Navy. Airdromes nearer the mainland of the enemy could now be used. The Hellenic forces drove back the aggressor. The zeal with which they achieved victories spread to Africa and opened the way for a series of triumphs which will culminate in the downfall of the Italian

At the time of his passing we should remember the high-spirited defiance of Gen. Metaxas Among the heroes of this war he will have his luminous place. The words he used when confronted with the supreme challenge to his country are a fitting answer to the latest pretensions of the Fuehrer. "I accept." he said.

Hitler's Claims Analyzed.

"The year 1941," says Hitler, "will become the historic year of the new order in Europe * * * our belief and confidence is that we shall achieve victory." Let us examine the position and prospects as he defines them. In the first place, it is important to realize that he considers his own position secure. He states that "Germans will never starve, rather will the English people starve."

Looking over the next 12 months, there is a foundation, it must be admitted, for his confidence in his capacity to maintain his population. Even before the war Germany was virtually self-sufficient except in fats. For these she can now largely rely on Denmark the Scandinavian and Baltic countries and Poland. Moreover, it is believed a process has been discovered which will make cultivation of the soybean in Germany an economic proposition, and that considerable areas are being reserved for this purpose in Austria and the eastern

Hitler Has Raw Materials. It must further be stated that the corn crop in Germany exceeded expectations, that the potato crop was also good, and that 1940 was a record year for the sugar beet. When it is taken into account that Germany has large armies quartered in occupied territories and able to derive part of their nourishment from local sources, it would be imprudent indeed to assume that Ger-

The general food situation of the continent as a whole was, before the war, not dissimilar from that of Germany, but conditions, particularly in the occupied territories, have deteriorated owing to the complete dislocation of economic life and to the rapaciousness of the ag-

His situation, like our own, must be computed not only in the resources disposed of, but by the extent to which he is called upon to use them. In the absence of active military operations, stocks of many weapons will increase rather than diminish. Before the great conquests of last spring, the main prospective shortages with which Hitler was faced were iron, ore and oil. He has now a surfeit of the former owing to his uninterrupted access to the mines in

Although our resources of this fuel are illimitable. the problem of distribution has yet to be solved. The Ministry of Transport has now decided to hire lorries for government business from road haulers, and this may be found to be a preliminary step toward fitting all forms of transport in a general scheme designed to move goods in the speediest and most economic manner for efficient conduct of Such co-ordination already has been achieved in the Reich. The controller of German transport has announced that imports of fuel from Southeastern Europe-that is to say, principally from Rumania-have been trebled. Another achievement is the completion of the river and canal route from Kherson on the Black Sea up the Bug and Dnieper by way of Kieff to Brest-Litovsk. The first fleets of new tankers bearing mineral oil have left Kieff for Germany and other boats are carrying grain and naphtha

Goods From Soviet.

Further, by the junction of the Adolf Hitler Canal with the Vistula near Cracow, direct communication will be established between the Danube lands and the Upper Oder and the Russian hinterland. By these means, implementation of the recent Russo-German economic agreement will be facilitated in the circumstances, provided good-will be maintained. It would be foolish to underestimate the assistance which Stalin can give to Hitler.

Careful attention should be paid both in the United States and Britain to the statement of the Minister of Economic Warfare that he has ample evidence that the Soviets were exporting Russian goods to Germany and replacing them by imports from the United States. He made particular mention of cotton. copper, brass, wheat, petroleum.

Weighing impartially, therefore, the ascertainable facts, the conclusion must be reached that Hitler has good ground for claiming that Germany will neither Again it should be noted, and Britain starve nor run short of war materials during the current year. It is when he

Just what significance, if any, can be attached to the selection of St. Patrick's Day for the dedication of the National Gallery of Art is a question the writer, at this time, is unable to answer, but it certainly fits in well with the ancestral background of the donor of this magnificent art gallery, the late Andrew W. Planned From First.

Provision for the students' concerts was contained in the first plans for the National Symphony Orchestra. For the first four seasons, the children's programs were presented in the Central High School Auditorium. But by the fifth season, hundreds of youngsters had to be turned away. Enlarged provisions had to be made for the audiences which had averaged only 375 children per concert the first year.

During the fifth season, nine concerts were played in three different high schools, and the final concert, which 4.000 youngsters attended, was played in Constitution Hall.

A shortage in the funds collected from dog tags is under investigation by the District auditor. Some months ago there was a shortage in the motor vehicle tag collections.

On Friday evening a meeting was held in Barker Hall, Y. W. C. A., for the purpose of organizing what is called a "Municipal Assembly." Opinion is divided among civic groups as to whether this proposed new organization will be a help or a hindrance. Some fear is expressed of a duplication of the work which some existing organizations are doing well. Others feel that it will only increase the number of organizations in an already highly-organized community. A number of groups are marking time until they know what

How Can the Traffic Slaughter Be Stopped?

The Street and Traffic Subcommittee of the House District Committee has entered energetically upon the task of finding and applying an adequate cure for the District's deadly traffic situation. At the beginning of this inquiry there is an endeavor to learn the cause of existing traffic difficulties which have during the month of January exacted so heavy a toll of death.

District officials, transportation and trucking companies, motor vehicle people and others have been called in to assist in discovering the cause and finding a remedy. The suggestion as to cause and remedy from these and many other citizens embrace many subjects.

Among the long list of recommendations are to be found the following: Reduce speed limits, provide a full-time traffic judge, impose heavier penalties for reckless driving, require jail sentences, have more traffic lights, have fewer traffic lights and have a different system of timing traffic lights, but practically all agree that more traffic policemen are needed.

One writer suggests that the traffic director be fired and one employed who knows nothing about Washington. To this one leader replies that there would be nothing new in such an appointment, because such qualifications have usually been possessed by other officials imported to fill District jobs.

To meet the need for additional policemen for traffic duty it is necessary to find available funds. As the work to be done by the 50 new policemen would be the handling of traffic, it is suggested that the money be found in the highway funds. The chief of police estimates that an increase of 50 men would require about $200,000. It was also brought out in the subcommittee that at present the highway fund is bearing 10.94 per cent of the total police charges and that 12 per cent of the force is devoting full time to

The Commissioners fear that the highway funds could not carry any such additional burden at this time unless there is an increase in the gas tax. It is estimated that an increase of 1 cent per gallon would yield more than $1,000,000.

Most of the civic and business organizations of the District are on record as opposed to an increased gas tax, though some members of the National Legislature from nearby States would be delighted to impose such a tax increase. On the other hand the District has some champions in Congress who would oppose vigorously any attempt to plaster the District with such increase.

Representative Stefan questions the necessity of increasing the gas tax and in this connection called attention to thousands of dollars of District funds now being used to educate free in the District schools the children of non-residents.

The Senate Subcommittee under the chairmanship of Senator Burton of Ohio is expected to get actively into the picture just as soon as the other members of his committee are named. The well known reputation of this former Mayor of Cleveland as an authority on city traffic matters is expected to be of special value in the search for a remedy and its application. Committees of Congress have had the traffic problem before them a number of times recently and heard many witnesses, but few tangible results

Amendment to D. C. Income Tax Long Overdue

The recent announcement of the District assessor that District income tax blanks will be mailed out about February 10 is a reminder that no progress has been made on the promise to urge Congress to amend the law so as to make it a fair and equitable tax upon those who enjoy the benefit of the municipal service and protection. Returns are required to be filed and at least one-half of the tax paid by April 15.

Citizens are much concerned over the delay in getting this legislation under way in order that it may apply to the calendar year 1940. They can see no reasons for the unfair exemption from the payment of income tax by people who, to all intents and purposes, are just as much residents of the District as those who are required to pay the tax.

The complaint is that our "city council and board of aldermen" are rather slow in getting down to the job of considering needed legislation for this voteless and unrepresented community.

The Public Utilities Commission Has a Full Slate

The Public Utilities Commission, with a full slate, has a depleted membership and the people are still without the services of the people's counsel as provided by the Utilities Act. Electric rates are to be fixed under the sliding scale agreement. Several bus line cases are to be heard beginning with the crosstown route on February 11. Other new cases will come up on the petition of the Capital Transit Co. for changes in the express service to Takoma, Petworth and Chillum. Then there is the proposal to require the gas company to supply the consumers with 100 per cent natural gas.

The vacancy on the commission of one civilian member imposes an extra burden on the Engineer Commissioner, who is thereby required to attend all hearings. There is considerable sentiment in the civic groups to amend the law by the substitution of a civilian for the Engineer Commissioner, who is already overloaded with other duties. Such change would provide a three-man, full-time commission.

It is expected that there will be strong opposition from Petworth, Chillum and Takoma to the proposed changes in the express lines. The modification of stops may not meet with serious objection but the increase of the fare to a straight 10 cents without transfer privilege will be the bone of contention. There even may be aquiesence in the fare increase, but the loss of transfer privilege will work a great hardship on many who have found this service, including the transfers, very satisfactory for reaching their places of business

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Regulations

The Federation of Citizens' Associations has spent considerable time passing on the proposed changes in the alcoholic beverage control regulations now before the District Commissioners. The Commissioners have courteously deferred action until the federation completes its action on the proposals.

As always is the case when matters connected with the sale of alcoholic liquors is under consideration there has been a heated controversy over the issues. A great divergence of opinion exists as to some of the proposed amendments.

One of the most controversial is that to permit the sale of alcoholic beverages after 12 o'clock midnight on Saurday, which is clearly Sunday morning. This change is proposed as a sort of swap for the existing privilege of selling between midnight Sunday and 2 a.m. Monday.

Considerable agreement is evident in the citizen associations with the action taken by the present meeting of the Interfederation Conference favoring a uniform closing time. On the initiative of a delegate from the Montgomery County Civic Federation, the conference urged an endeavor to have established throughout the Washington Metropolitan Area a uniform maximum closing hour for all places selling alcoholic beverages and that this hour be not later than 12 o'clock midnight on any day when such beverages are permitted to be sold.

On reliable authority it is learned that the Commissioners do not intend to be stampeded into any hasty action. They express a desire to make what changes in the regulation that a majority of the people want. They also show no desire to the the beverage business for the benefit of either the public or the in-

Suitable Trees, Well Spaced, Planned at Scott Circle

Half of Those Felled to Make Way For Underpass Will Be Replaced at 60-Foot Intervals, Whitehurst Says

By RUDOLPH KAUFFMANN II.

Construction of the Scott Circle Underpass will result in replacement of about half the number of street trees which have been removed for widening and relocation of streets entering the circle, enlargement of the circle itself into an ellipse and drastic simplification and slight reductions in size of the other park areas at the traffic center.

By actual count, 134 street trees have been cut down. Highway and street tree officials pointed out yesterday, however, that the new trees will be of far more desirable species, young and planted and spaced far more scientifically.

However, in view of the fact that the Navy Department called for 12 men from the two divisions a little more than a week ago leaves doubt in the minds of some of the local citizen sailors as to whether they will get duty similar to their shipmates who an-

Instruction being given the two divisions at this time deals largely with the duties which they will be expected to perform when they go to sea, and also for any problems in new sea warfare which might develop. Army Will Spend $4,000,000 for 7,000 Horses for Service

Artillery and Cavalry Mounts Are Necessary In War Machine

By PAT JONES.

While scientists work to find new machines with which to carry on modern warfare, the United States, through its Quartermaster Corps, is preparing to spend millions of dollars for horses to make its military power greater than ever in history. Fallacious, say Army experts, is the idea that there is no place in military ranks for the man who can straddle a bucking broncho and ride until his mount becomes as gentle as a lamb. Wrong, also, they add, is the belief that the horse is a thing of the past, that no potential Jeb Stuart or Phil Sheridan today could rise to immortality on his horseman-

Through the realization that there still will be a place for a good artillery horse or cavalry rider, no matter how mechanized becomes the warfare of the present age, the United States Quartermaster Corps will buy between April 1 and July 1 around 7,000 horses and will pay more than $4,000,000 for them.

This item, of course, will be only minor part of the $1.886,000,000 budget Maj. Gen. Edmund B. Gregory, quartermaster general, must supervise for the present fiscal year. but there will be no other purchase, whether an ultramodern tank or a fine new line of officers' boots. that will be made with greater

Best Mounts In History. The men whose task it is to buy horses say the United States cavalry is better mounted today than ever before. They lay this to a better grade of horses from which to choose and they, in turn, explain that the Federal Government itself deserves credit for this condition. When the World War ended, America began peacetime preparations to have a more plentiful supply of mounts than was available in 1917. Seven hundred stallions were scattered over the country in keep of farmers, ranchers and other persons interested in the development of better horses. No charge was promise was given that the Govern- the middle of this week. ment would buy the colts they

Each horse is given a period of prescribed for the greenest rookie. They are trained by the thousands. Before 1941 is over the strength of the cavalry will have been more than tripled. In their search for an ideal cavalry horse experts keep their eyes open for deep-bodied animals on strong legs with short cannon. They must be from 15 hands and 1 inch to 15 hands and 2 inches high. They must be sound, have refinement and breeding and must show plenty of substance. The United States Cavalry wants no weedy, fine-boned horses

A majority of the animals used in the Army come from west of the Mississippi. The reason for this is that farmers and ranchers in the East cannot raise them to the age level required and make a profit out of them on the price the Federal Government will pay ,which averages $165 for horses and $180 for The Army as a rule will permit about 5 per cent of its horses to be 3-year-olds. In the present emergency, however, it prefers animals 5 years of age or older because they are more easily trained and because they fit in better with the emergency arming program.

There is still another characteristic the Army experts look for in their quest of cavalry riders. No peculiarly marked horse will be accepted, mainly because they are too easily spotted in battle. The choice markings are chestnut, black, brown or bay. Germans Using Horses,

Recent events have proved that the time has not yet come when horses can be discarded, when machines can make their way into difficult places to which only horses now can go. The Quartermaster Corps says that the German Army at the present time is using more horses than it did in the first World War. That is one thing that spurs on the present horse-buying campaign. And there are certain other details which serve as an accelera-

Students of military tactics adjusted their glasses during the Spanish Civil War and asked themselves if they hadn't been too hasty in marking off horses as a fading item of modern warfare. The fighting in that conflict proceeded over rough, mountainous country, instead of settling down in trenches. Mechanized forces were slow in their movement, but mounte dtroops came up on time. Then occurred the campaign of Poland in 1939, followed by those of Flanders and France, and the table seemed to have swung sharply back the other way. Aviation and mechanized ground forces played the dominant role, and the cavalry again seemed to teeter. But when the smoke cleared away, it was found that Germany had employed 791,-000 horses in the last two drives The first troops to enter Paris were in the saddle.

Attention more recently has been centered upon the fate of the Italians, who expected to paralyze Greece with its mechanized units.

What pose to relegate the Japanese merchant class to the same lowly status it held before the Meiji restoration. In those feudal days the soldier stood first, the farmer second and the merchant a humble third. A reflection of this view can be detected in a recent statement by Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, Rightist leader, who proclaimed to Japanese that they must return to the virtues of old Japan. He compared Japan to a precious jewel, whose brilliance has been dimmed by the accumulated dust of liberalism and individualism. It is the aim of the present reform movement, he declared, to brush off this dusty coating and restore the luster of the gem beneath.

Warning Against Haste.

Just as Japan's totalitarian political structure is still half baked and far from completion, so also is the drive toward planned economy still in its beginnings-although the upheaval already has been of considerable proportions. Repeatedly businessmen and industrialists have warned the government that haste may have disastrous consequences. But the army presses recklessly on, attempting to repeat Hitler's accomplishments in a fraction of the time. An ominous view representative of that held by many Japanese businessmen was expressed by Ginjiro Fujihara, former Minister of Commerce and Industry, shortly before he gave way to a reformist successor. He said:

"A complete turn toward planned economy is manifestly impossible. But if it were attempted, then indescribable chaos would, I fear, result. As it is, with only partial control, a state of confusion exists. What must be the result if complete control should suddenly be imposed on a liberalistic system?" This is the voice of big business, fearing the worst but hoping for compromise. (Copyright, 1941, Chicago Daily News, Inc.)

"Love again," began Peggy, now from the depths, of a comfortable chair. "I've met dozens of men I could love, maybe I'll meet a few more—so there's no harm in picking out the one with the most mazuma."

"It's all in the way you look at it." replied Verity. "I still believe in one man and as for his fortune, I prefer a man who can make it rather than one who has it already made for him."

Peggy shook her head. "It's a point of view but there's no ambition in it. You figure if you can get a state of the properties of the p

Bishops' Committee Collects $394,340 For War Relief

Nation as Whole Gives $20,491,086 Through Various Organizations

The Bishops' Committee for Polish Relief, an organization with headquarters in Washington to co-ordinate Catholic relief activities for Europe, had collected a total of $394,340.50 through December, a State Department report disclosed

A total of $266,324.31 had been spent by the committee for relief in Poland, England, France, Switzerland, Hungary, Rumania, Italy and Portugal, with an administration expense of $62.73 and a December 31 balance on hand of $127,-953.46, the report showed.

In the country as a whole organizations registered with the State Department for solicitation of funds for relief in countries involved in the war reported collections of $20,-491,086.09, expenditures of $13.899, 650.54 for actual relief, $1,942,731.69 for administration costs and an aggregate balance of $4,685,141.61 on hand December 31. The reports covered activities since September 6, 1939, exclusive of the Red Cross, which reports separately through the Secretary of War.

Jewish Center Expects Enrollment of 2,000

Workers in the Jewish Community Center's membership campaign will have 2.000 members enrolled in the Sixteenth street institution by next Tuesday night, it was forecast last night by Burnett Siman and Dr. Maurice Goldberg, drive chairmen. Events at the center this week include an institute on foreign affairs Wednesday night, a Town Hall meeting Thursday night and a program of square dancing Saturday night. This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock members of the girls' clubs will hear a talk on "Charm, Poise and Etiquette" by Kay Caldwell and Alden Harrison of The Evening Star. All girls between the ages of 14 and 20 are invited to attend. Next Sunday Dr. Ivy A. Pelzman will address the boys' clubs on "Social Hygiene."

The speaker at the Wednesday night institute will be Achilles Catsonis, regional director of the Greek war relief drive, who will discuss the situation in the Near East. Talks on labor and national defense will be given in the next series of in-

Plans for providing recreation at the center for service men were discussed last night. Joseph Bowers of the Jewish Welfare Board told of arrangements being made to develop social and recreational activities for men on leave from nearby camps and naval stations.

Man Is Given 360 Days On Larceny Charges

Dock C. Britt, 32, who displayed a leaning toward electric drills as well as bad checks, yesterday received 360 days in jail sentences and $600 in fines or an additional 360 days in jail, after he had pleaded guilty to larceny, larceny after trust and false pretenses, before Judge John P. McMahon in Police Court.

The sentences included four of 90 days each and one of a $100 fine or 60 days, in connection with theft of drills; a $100 fine or 60 days on a charge of larceny after trust, in which a small sum of money was involved, and four sentences of $100 or 60 days on each of four false pre-

Several of the electric drills were "borrowed" but not returned by Britt, it was said, after he had represented himself as a power company employe to persons at a hospital, a brewery and at a hotel, according to testimony. Britt obtained merchandise at local stores with the bad checks, it was testified. Police reported a total of seven stolen drills had been recovered.

Will Lecture on Haiti

Dr. Rayford W. Logan, professor at Howard University, will give a lecture on "Haiti and Pan-Americanism" Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. at the university. The talk is under the auspices of the Faculty Wives.

Mrs. Townsend Plans Luncheon After Musicale

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend will have a number of guests from out of town at her luncheon tomorrow following her morning musicale at the Mayflower. Among them will be Mrs. Rudolf Serkin, wife of the Czech pianist, who, with Emanuel Feuermann, Austrian 'cellist, will give the programe preceding the luncheon. Mrs. Serkin is the daughter of the famous violinist, Adolf Busch, who, with Mr. Serkin, planned a festival of Bach and Brahms sonatas for Mrs. John Matthew Whittall's Foundation in the Library of Congress earlier in the season. The festival was postponed because of the illness of Mr. Busch and will be given at a later date.

Mrs. Feuermann, wife of the 'cellist, and her mother will be among Mrs. Townsend's guests tomorrow and also at her luncheon will be Mrs. Andrew Wheeler and her daughter, Mrs. Robert Wood of Philadelphia. The program, which will begin sharply at 11:15 o'clock, will be the fourth in Mrs. Townsend's series of five morning musicales for this season and reservations may be made with Mr. Townsend today and this evening or at the Mayflower tomorrow morning.

Music Lovers to Launch $107,600 Symphony Drive

Society and Civic Leaders Will Have Four Report Luncheon Meetings, The First Being Tuesday

Music lovers in the National Capital will begin their annual drive to raise the necessary funds to keep "our symphony" through 1941-42. The amount to be raised this year is $107,600, a small enough sum for added morale which good music gives in national defense.

To raise this fund men and women prominent in society and civic circles will bend every energy, beginning tomorrow, and during the drive four luncheons for the reports of committees will be held at the Carlton Hotel, where headquarters have been established. Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, always among the leaders in civic affairs especially where music is involved, is general chairman. Mr. Howe, whose wife, Mary Howe, is among the leading pianists and composers of Washington, has held important posts in the National Symphony organization since its establishment. Mr. A. F. E. Horn is vice chairman of the committee with Mr.

"British Goods on Safari," who arrived in Washington Friday. The three members of the crew are Miss Frances M. Martin of Philadelphia, who is a student at Bryn Mawr; Miss Marjorie Forbes Ferguson, and Miss Katherine Lea Marshall, students at Vassar.

The "caravan" is a large limousine which draws a 25-foot trailer where British goods are displayed. These three attractive young women wil show them to all interested and tell in what shop they are on sale. Or three attractive young women will take orders for the goods to be filled by the nearest shop.

The primary object of the caravan is to dispell the impression that Great Britain is unable to ship goods to sell in this country. They have samples in the trailer of all British goods now being imported in this country and a list of the merchants here who sell them.

Best's "MOCCASIN" is a new favorite

This new moccasin-type step-in is a smash hit with growing girls. It's just like big brother's - and so comfortable! Mothers will like its trim, neat look. Daughters will like a shoe they can "step into" and adore its casual style. It's a perfect shoe for walking or "every day wear" and a change from the traditional saddle oxford. It's made of sturdy tan elk-tanned calf with leather soles and heels. Sizes 3 to 9.

These are some of the questions that are troubling the consumer, in the opinion of the Voteless District League of Women Voters and the Washington League of Women Shoppers.

To provide the correct answers, the two organizations, with the collaboration of other interested groups, have arranged to go on the air each week, beginning Saturday at 9:15 over Station WJSV.

That is, opening opportunities within their organizations, training promising material, pushing it forward as fast as capabilities develop, feeding in raw personnel at the bottom."

Competition for Technicians The article states that engineering firms which dispense management are also feeling the pinch. They vie with primary companies in bidding for technical-school graduates, and both compete with the Army, the Navy, and other Government agencies for such talent.

The problem of management shortage is especially acute in the chemical field where, it is estimated, the explosives and ammunition plants alone will employ 65,000 to 70,000 workers. This will require 4,000 chemically trained men for supervision. In addition 2.000 chemically trained inspectors will be needed by the Army. Industry Likely To Take Level Path for Time

Many Plants Already Near Capacity for Present Equipment

By FRANK MacMILLEN,

Associated Press Business Writer. NEW YORK, Feb. 1.- The indusrial drive to arm America and Britain now may be entering a 'plateau" period characterized by greater stability of production and prices after the first few months of hurried preparation, many business observers here believe.

This probably will be temporary but production men and financial quarters are said to be taking it into account in their plans for the next few months.

One reason cited for expecting & more nearly level period immediately ahead, executives point out, is that many key industries are already at about peak production with existing plant capacity. Much new plant space is under construction in defense lines but the wheels will not begin to turn in most of these factories until later this year, or in 1942. As one industry after another reaches the stage where a major portion of its peak output is being called for in the defense effort, it does not necessarily follow that additional plant capacity will be constructed to accommodate an endless upward spiral of production

Priorities Established.

Already governmental or semiofficial systems of priorities for defense needs have been set up in some industries. The steel business has such machinery, although it has not been called into action. Zinc mining and processing, a possible "tight" spot in the defense effort, was added to the priorities list this week, though no immediate steps are contemplated. However, the growing establishment of priority controls, analysts say, will have the effect of stabilizing production because it will be used to defer or curtail non-essential consumption of materials.

In a wholly unofficial way, this factor is at work in the key automobile industry. January figures on production show them at a historic' peak for the month. The industry is building cars and stocking dealers at an unprecedented rate to have plants and labor free for defense work in greater quantity later. Dealers, who feel that de-NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Cotton fu- liveries of pleasure vehicles may be past three weeks. Commodity prices, too, have begun to show signs of a leveling movement. A few key materials have advanced modestly in price in the last month, the bulk have stood still. Here too, a combination of voluntary restraint by buyers and sellers and of official pressure has operated to hold down the modest uptrend which got under way last

Two examples of how this control has worked have appeared this week. Railroads, the largest originators of the scrap metal used by the steel industry, reported an above a figure the defense author-Again, copper producers saw the Government import a second large

Bank clearings at $119,-324,000 were 28 per cent above the comparable 1940 week.

DETROIT-Unfavorable weather and the lack of special promotions were two factors leading to a drop of 3 to 5 per cent in retail volume during the week; sales totals remained, however, as high as 20 per cent above last January. Wholesalers reported current business relatively quiet, with spring orders in larger volume than a year ago. Automobile production dipped to 121,948 units from 124,025 a week ago.

KANSAS CITY-Demand for heavy apparel lines was rather slow this week, but retail volume as a whole was approximately 10 per cent ahead of last year. Wholesale volume declined in the week to a level somewhat below the same week a year ago. Bank loans and deposits showed increases over last week, reflecting requirements of both agriculture and the defense program.

LOUISVILLE-Retail trade during the week was reported 10 to 15 per cent ahead of the corresponding period of 1940. Wholesale dry goods and electrical appliance houses had an increase of nearly 15 per cent over last year: collections in this division were improved. Employment in defense industries has shown a marked increase. A shortage of housing facilities

PITTSBURGH-Poor shopping weather hampered retail trade during part of the week, but volume for the entire month averaged 10 to 12 per cent higher than a year ago. Mill agents for textiles and dry goods specialties reported orders fairly brisk, with volume about 20 per cent above 1940. Steel output rose another point to the record-breaking level of 99 per cent of capacity.

ST. LOUIS-Department store sales dropped 3 to 5 per cent below the previous week's level; in comparison with a year ago the decrease was approximately 4 per cent. Wholesalers of women's ready-to-wear reported a fairly active demand for spring items. Production and sales of heavy goods generally continued at a good pace, particularly in machine tool and electrical equipment lines.

YOUNGSTOWN-Little week-to-week change occurred in retail volume, and sales totals remained well ahead of the corresponding week last year. Wholesale markets were fairly busy; the volume of orders was somewhat ahead of the same week a year ago. The necessity of making furnace repairs lowered the steel rate one point to 95 per cent of capacity.

Young guineas weighing over 2 pounds brought 23a24 and capons, 7 pounds and up, sold 24a26. Young hen turkeys were higher at 25a26, most of them selling at 25. Toms increased to 20a21, with most of them bringing 21.

Some Eggs Decline.

After going through most of the week without change, some eggs declined slightly toward the close. The decrease affected only nearby ungraded current receipt whites which are 1 cent per dozen lower than last week. Mixed colors remained about steady. Whites are now quoted at 20a22 dozen, with a few a little higher and mixed colors, 20a21.

Most native and nearby garden truck quotations continued about steady with last week and the market was inclined to be dull. The exception, however, was sweet potatoes which increased slightly. Goldens and Jerseys are selling 1.25a1.50 bushel, with a few bringing a little above this price. Maryland round white potatoes continued steady. best selling 85a90 per 100 pounds, a few a little higher, and ungraded stock, 75a80. You see it works this way, Joe. After I sell 'em I call them up and say . . . "Mr. Zilch, how's your car running now?"
(He didn't think I'd call after I got his money.) And then I say . . . "Any of your friends been talking car lately?"

First thing you know I've sold another car. Maybe its a dirty trick, but it sells cars and that's the way

Must confess I knew his car was running alright in the first place. We fix 'em all up in the shop before we

Even in All That Glamour Young Stage Actress Puts Her Mark on Local Scene

Dorothy McGuire, Fourth and Greatest Of Younger Generation Whose Acting Has Lifted Blight on the 1941 Theater

By Jay Carmody.

What with Washington fairly seething with Hollywood glamour last week, it was no time for a girl from Omaha, Nebr., to come around leaving her mark on the place. At least not a snub-nosed, minx 22 years old-and, of all things, one of those stage actresses! What right had she to do a thing like that when the town was fairly drenched in people like Deanna Durbin, Maureen O'Hara, Lana Turner; Constance Moore, etc., etc.?

Right or no right, that is what Dorothy McGuire of the Omaha McGuires, did. As the feyish sort of young bride in "Claudia," she left the impression in many minds, and fractions thereof no doubt, that she is the most promising young female on the stage today. Never since it became the thing to say (with a dreamy, hopeless look), did the National lobby resound with so many variations of the phrase "another Helen Hayes." The implication of the estimate, of course, was not that Miss Haves would immediately be driven into retirement or a place in the memory of today's theatergoers. It was rather that Miss McGuire has qualities similar to those of Miss Hayes which might develop to the same high and enchanting degree.

Part Far More Exacting Than Mere Screwball Role.

TEN PAGES.

The part of Claudia was one peculiarly designed to reveal the reach and genuineness of Miss McGuire's marked precosity. Rose Franken's heroine with all kinds of surface resemblances to just another young matron of the screwball school actually was much more. For all her nitwitticisms and the essential gayety of her fumbling for the right answers to living, there was an inescapable gravity about her. Too much accent on either would have been wrong and a proper blend of the two was a difficult thing to achieve. Miss McGuire avoided the former, achieved the latter, thereby leaving her audiences with the warm feeling that they had looked upon some one on her way to being pretty wonderful.

Her performance was a neatly designed thing, indeed, to create the impression that for all its other shortcomings, the season has been good to the faithful in its display that there are several young actresses with talent. Others who have been seen by National audiences were Betty Field, Thelma Schnee and Perry Wilson.

Came Back From the Movies With Joy in Her Heart.

Miss Field was the girl who came back from the movies with joy in her heart to play the young wife in "Flight to the West." She managed the character of the confused, bewildered, war-shocked child bride which evoke all the compassion which Elmer Rice wrote into it. And Mr. Rice, as every one knows, is an eloquent man when he gets into the field of compassion

Miss Schnee, who by no fantastic sweep of the imagination could be envisaged as a movie success until she changes that name, left her impress on the public in "The Corn Is Green." Unlike those of the Misses McGuire and Field, hers was no sympathetic portrait. True she had the unsureness and mystification of one who could not even spell biology, or physiology, but she was so patently on her way to trollophood that one little wench on her way to making a wreck of the play's fine young man, of being in competition with one of the finest things Miss Ethel Barry- unconcern with facts.

Miss Wilson's contribution to the cavalcade of young female talent of 1941 was less conspicuous than that of the other three. Any one who missed her excellence in the gloom of "The Cream in the Well" need not blame himself too harshly. But that is where she was as the young wife of that earthly tenant farmer, a child drowning in a despicable, dishonest relationship before she decided to drown herself finally in the lake

The playwrights, truly, seem to be doing right well by the girl brides least two, probably six. This is a scribed as a gruding admiration for (and Miss Schnee) of 1941.

And vice versa. Ever so vice versa!

It's Rumored Very Quietly That Thurber's Writing Play.

In connection with the huge and hilarious success of "The Male Animal," which Washington finally will see tomorrow night at the National, James Thurber's representatives say covertly that Thurber is et it again. They mean, of course, that Thurber is writing another cemedy with his collaborator, Elliot Nugent. The reason they are covert about it is that Thurber enthusiasts might start a lot of questions to which there are no answers.

It just is not the kind of question to ask of a Thurber work. No one knows the answer, least of all Thurber.

It's the Early Telephoner Who Gets Her Male Escort To a Hollywood Function

Many of the Glamorous Films Stars Report the Cinema's Home Town A City of Lonely Women

By Sheilah Graham.

HOLLYWOOD. Three weeks before any big premiere and party in Hollywood, the elephone company notes an enormous increase in calls. The lonely ladies of Hollywood are dialing frantically to get an escort for the occasion. And it's the early telephoner who gets the man. This, my friends, is the city of lonely women. Don't ask me why or how. It just is. I Myrna Loy, who is one of the most attractive women in Hollywood, is a lonely person since her separation from Arthur Hornblow. Myrna belongs to the school of "one-man-women." Before she met Hornblow, her name was rarely linked in romance with any other man. She has since dined with Burgess Meredith. But the producer was and is her only love. And I hope for her sake she gets over it soon. Can you imagine in any other city than Hollywood, a girl like Miss Loy having to go to the movies alone and to be without an escort on New Year Eve?

It may sound paradoxical to describe Olivia De Havilland as "lonely" because you read in this and that column of her being with Franchot Tone this evening, Jimmy Stewart the evening before and with Gene Markey tomorrow. With Burgess Meredith thrown in for good measure But she is the most desperately lonely girl in Hollywood. Olivia wants to marry a man of position and money.

Work Is Most Important In Ginger Rogers' Life

Miss De Havilland lives with a maid in Los Angeles in a small hour in which once resided her mother and sister Joan. It is since the latter's happy marriage pointed up Olivia's state of single sadness, that she have tried to change from a simple, sweet girl into a disillusioned-with-life sophisticate. The switch has not brought happiness. Neither has the avalanche of dates with which she kills her evenings. When things get too depressing Olivia gets in her car and drives 390 miles to see her mother in Saratoga, Northern California. I ought to add that Olivia is only 24.

Any other girl leading the life of Ginger Rogers would be right in calling herself lonely. Ginger has three close women friends-her hairdresser. a girl from the R. K. O. makeup department, and a girl from the wardrobe ditto. About twice a month she talks to ex-husband Lew Ayres-on the telephone. They don't meet. A long time ago she used to go out with Jimmy Stewart, who doesn't call her any more because "she's changed." Once in a great while Howard Hughes takes her to dine. Recently she has had a date with Edward Norris, but one date only. Her mother stays with her when she is in Hollywood. But mostly now, Mrs. Lela Rogers is out According to Mr. Ayres, work with a capital W is the most important thing in Miss Rogers' life. That's all right, too, but all work and no man in-her-life can be dull and lonesome. Eh, girls?

Nowadays when she has to work her sweet designs on a man was president of the Junior Class, attend a premiere or party, she calls the Sam Goldwyns or Producer David Lewis, who took Bette Davis around during the six months following her divorce from Harmon Nelson. Norma leaves Hollywood for New York and Sun Valley between picture chores. "I am happy here only when I work," she recently told a friend. And this has been said too many times by women at the top of the film profession.

> Rosalind Russell is another "lonely" Hollywood star who leaves town as often as she can get away. Rosalind says, "When I came to Hollywood, I knew what I was in for, I was brought up by my father to think things out." Miss Russell wants a husband. So far, he has not showed up. "You before that man had been unable to need an escort more in Hollywood than nywhere else," she says. "It's awkward to go places here alone. But few people call you up. The distances are so great. The show's goodies run the gamut from Gertrude Lawrence to the score by Kurt Weill, the lyrics by Ira Gershwin, the acting, singing by everybody present, but mostly by Miss Lawrence and a lad named Danny Kaye, the directing by Mr. Hart, the costumes by Irene Sharaff, the gowns by Hattie Carnegie, the production and lighting by Hassard Short, the settings by Harry Horner, and the perfume wafted through the air of the theater, no doubt to counteract the harsh frangrace of sable, the musky aroma of ermine, and the lippy odor of fresh orchids.

The Ladies Laugh. Incidentally, Miss Layrence's underwear in one scene drew from the ladies present on opening night the most complicated kind of laughter I have ever heard. A Problem of Character

So Says Spencer Tracy of Dual Role In 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde'

AMUSEMENTS.

HOLLYWOOD. Propped up in a hospital bed recuperating from a severe attack of flu, Spencer Tracy let it be known he has no intention at this stage in his career of going into the bogey man business. He only gets mad on the second Sunday in October of the even-numbered years which are divisible by four. At these times he will defy the lightning You would never believe then that he could assume that death-maskof-Thomas Jefferson look, which he wears in the play, or speak in that underwater tone of faded perplexity. His rage raises a lot of hell but abates rapidly, like a skyrocket shot up the center of the street on a market day. Horrible people crawl back into the woodwork, bullies and bravos slink away, tiger women turn pale, collaborators pipe quietly to sleep, lying without moving on his right side till morning. Occasionally he says something in his sleep. I once came upon him, that little smile on his lips, his eyes closed, saying pleasantly to him-self: "Well, well," I won-

Coming Attractions

NATIONAL-"The Male Animal," the hilarious comedy by James Thurber and Elliott Nugent about the home life of a young university professor, opens a week's engagement tomorrow night Mr. Nugent and Julie Stevens, Elizabeth Love and Leon Ames are importantly cast Screen.

PALACE-"The Philadelphia Story," motion picture version of the Katharine Hepburn stage vehicle, in which Miss Hepburn definitely refutes those who called her "box office poison," opens Thursday. Cary Grant, James Stewart, Ruth Hussey and John Howard are others involved in the mad and merry doings, EARLE-"This Thing Called Love," new comedy romance co-starring Rosalind Russell and Melvyn Douglas in a madcap tale of a young couple who plot a platonic marriage until sure they love each other, starts Friday. "No times for Gloom" is the title of the accompanying stage revue.

KEITH'S-"Back Street." a new film version of the considerably popular story, with Margaret Sullavan and Charles Boyer in the leading roles, is scheduled to follow the current "Buck Privates." CAPITOL-"Road Show." comedy about the adventures of a troupe of traveling entertainers, opens Thursday. Adolphe Menjou Carole Landis, Patsy Kelly, Charles Butterworth and John Hubbard are the entertainers. Vivien Fay and Joe Howard will headline the stage show.

LITTLE-"Queen of Destiny," technicolor film with Anna Neagle as Queen Victoria and Anton Walbrook as the royal consort. Prince Albert, starts its regular run Wednesday after a special premiere Tuesday night.

METROPOLITAN-"Victory," motion picture version of the Joseph Conrad novel, with Betty Field, Fredric March and Jerome Cowan in important roles, starts Friday

If There Have Been Changes, They're Only Superficial

Good Theater Remains Just That, Says Ethel Barrymore, After Her Four Decades of Stardom

By Herman Allen,

NEW YORK.

"We used to say 'do not'; now we say 'don't." Ethel Barrymore says the changes in the theater have been as simple as that in the 40 years (come February 4) since she became a star. 'There have been changes in the theater, but they're all superficial. The speeches follow the styles in speech, the pacing may be a little faster, but that's all. The theater-good theater-never changes. They say there are only three or four basic.

Eight-year-old Roger Jackson of Atlanta, Ga., had a loose tooth that was about ready to come out. He tied a string to it, but no one would pull it. His puppy, Rags spied the string, leaped and grabbed it and out came the tooth.

This week's illustration of the Irish wolfhound shows a breed whose origin is shrouded in antiquity. As its name implies, it came from Ireland. The present strain of wolfhound dates back to around 1870, at which time the original Irish wolfhounds were crossed in England with various Scottish deerhounds who themselves were ancient offshoots of the Irish hound.

In past ages, Irish warriors used these dogs as personal guards and in hunting stag, boar and wolves. These hounds could kill a wolf unaided.

Today, the wolfhound is still a sporting dog. In Scotland, one still finds him pulling down the wary deer and stag. In Canada, he is used against coyotes and timber wolves. And, of course he makes a grand companion and pet in our cities and towns.

The Irish wolfhound is the tallest of dogs but not the heaviest. He is best suited for the country, as he requires at least 2 miles of exercising daily.

By Paul J. Miller,

Harold M. Phillips, president of the Manhattan Chess Club, has announced that a committee is arranging to publish a book on the career of Dr. Emanuel Lasker, erstwhile world champion, who died a fortnight ago.

Some local fans may have clippings or notes that pertain to the chess and scholastic activity of Dr. Lasker. If so, his widow, Mrs. Martha Lasker, would be grateful for either & the loan or contribution of such data. Material may be mailed to her at 610 West One Hundred and Thirty-ninth street, New York.

A glowing tribute to Dr. Lasker's genius was spoken by Rabbi David de Sola Pool at the Riverside Memoher at 610 West One Hundred and Thirty-ninth street, New York. rial Chapel, New York: "Emanuel Lasker drew from 9 P-95 mathematics principles of thinking and living that made him a great moral figure. Unflinching in his absolute honesty of mind, his was an integrity that brooked no compronise. He lived on a plane elevated from the conflicting standards of a confused world. Whether he applied himself to problems of chess, of philosophy, or of history, it was from the domain of pure and lofty thinking alone that he drew the rules by which he sought to solve On that plane of pure thought, logic and morality became one. The inescapable relations of cause and effect, clear vision and unswerving rectitude created the man that he was, his moral stature and his intellectual eminence."

A Game to Play. Set up your chessmen as illustrated by the following diagram and you have the position of a game played between Capt. G. H. Mackenzie and I. Gunsberg at the 44th move. Now continue the game.

46 BxR 46 P-Kt4 Black's move is best, for White, commencing with RxP ch., threatens mate in two moves.

White has good line of play. No mate in two moves, but forces checkmate in five moves. Black's game is definitely lost.

48 Q-R3 ch. 48 Resigns. After White plays 48 Q-R3, Black replies with K-Kt3. Then White plays 49 P-B5 ch., and Black plays PxP. White essays 50 BxP ch., and Black retaliates with K-B2. Now White plays Q-K7 ch., Black makes any move, and White checkmates. Today's game appeared in 1887 in Steinitz's International Chess Magazine (Vol. III, No. 10). In the above diagram, White has a pawn on QB2 square.

Society of Washington Artists Opens 50th Annual Exhibition at Corcoran

Gallery Allots Double Space To Big Event

Out-of-Town Jury Gives Value to Selections

By Leila Mechlin.

The Society of Washington Artists today opens to the public its 50th annual exhibition in the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Because this exhibition marks the society's semi-centennial, special importance attaches to it, in recognition of which double the usual space has been made available and twice the usual number of works are included therein. Furthermore, this year, for the first time, an out-of-town jury not only made the awards but selected the exhibits and hung them.

This was bound to make a difference in the character of the exlibition, an outside viewpoint replacing that of the organization as The jury of selection comprised John Carlson, Reginald Marsh and William Gropper, the first notably conservative in tendency, the others exponents of the new school sometimes called "radical" or "pro-About 700 works of art, paintings and sculpture, were submitted to this jury, and 158 accepted. Whether or not in this matter of selection the jury was limited by the material available or selection governed by majority rule, none may ever know, but the result is certainly a revelation of change from the accepted tradition of the past.

Speak Enthusiastically.

Eoth Mr. Gropper and Mr. Marsh, a dinner given at the Arts Club ing work being done here by lists whose names were quite unsame experience, for, although parcipation was limited to artists of and Virginia, many of those listed in the catalogue are comparatively, if not totally, strange. While it is nice thus to welcome newcomers, it But enough of is regrettable to miss from the showing so many old friends-members rande notable contributions.

pressionism, cubism, post-impresabstract and non-objective art; but the art of today is none of these, save as the shadow is a repetition hended. The anchor of tradition shows a rather remarkable handling sent a painting of a group of work- Mr. Gates, for his water colors, is change—and of perhaps a more the artist has embarked is tossed the author writes to be read, the musician composes or plays to be heard, and none of these would be content were it otherwise. Therefore, while admitting that the public has infinitely the smaller share in this partnership, it is fair to demand for this minority a certain amount of consideration.

Clings to Old Belief.

For many years, art was a synonym of beauty. No longer is this trueeven the very word, in certain art circles, is now anathema. But the public still clings to the old belief and craves the joy and consolation which beauty in art afforded and still affords in the works of the masters. Drama is often found in tragedy, but it takes a master so to interpret it that its nobler qualities become patent to all. Sheer ugliness and vulgarity can do nothing but depress and lower the level of living -hence civilization. Nature-the works of the great Creator-sets a standard which, up to now, artists have followed; but it is cast aside today, that the works of man in a mechanical world may be emphasized. The superficial and transitory has taken precedence over what may be termed the eternal verities. Landscape painting as such has almost passed out of existence, save as background for gas tanks, factories, and the like; railway tracks take the place of roadways on the artists' canvases; slums and rundown neighborhoods that of shaded streets and dwellings occupied by those of refinement and taste. The same is true of men and women who are pictured. It is the vulgar and degraded who, in most instances, are taken as models and set before us, not for the best that is in them, but for the worst. This is interpreted as being "socially minded," but surely the term "social" does not refer merely to those of the lower classes. The great artists of the past have interpreted the spirit of men and women of all classes to men of succeeding generations and so have immortalized them. Meunier and Millet undoubtedly did more to give honor and self-respect to the laborer than does the sculptor or painter of today, who represents him as

Decorative Maps Exhibited In Main Smithsonian Hall

Washingtonians long familiar with the cavernous gloom of the Smithsonian Institution's main hall are due for a surprise when next they visit the building. Power of Imagination Is Demonstrated by Powys In Story of Glendower

Faults of Expression Seen In Impressive Record of Historic Welsh Rebellion

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Owen Glendower

In two volumes. By John Cowper Powys. New York: Simon

In the main, historical novels fall into two categories-those which put their emphasis on historical accuracy and those which aim first at fictional entertainment. But the present work, though it is certainly described by its author as "an historical novel," belongs in neither group There can be no doubt that the period of which it treats has profoundly engaged Mr. Powys' imagination. Likewise, it is evident that the story of Owen Glendower has for this author a most potent attraction, a symbolic significance beyond its mere events and consequences. Nonetheless, the novel is primarily neither history nor story.

It would seem to be, instead, a kind of reverie which the author, bemused by the tragic felicity of an historic period, has dreamed a story of his own devising into that period's setting, subjecting both the period and the story to ironic alterations to bring them into a fit conjunction. For those who are acquainted with Mr. Powys' past novels will recognize in this one familiar characters with familiar qualities; nor will any one be able to read this work without feeling that he is entering into a 15th century which lies more in the Powysian mentality than in the painstaking records of the mere historians, though that is not to say that Mr. Powys has taken any considerable liberties with time and events. What he seems to have done is to steep himself thoroughly in 15th century lore and then, being acclimatized to the period, as it were, to move his own plot back into the earlier time and let plot and time react upon each other

The background of the novel is the revolt of the Welsh people which Glendower, the reputed Welsh magician, led against Henry IV of England, the Bolingbroke deposer of Richard II. The book begins with the raising of the Welsh standard by Glendower in 1400 and ends with his death 16 years later. The great part of the story lies within the five years of the actual rebellion-1400 to 1405. It is only the final chapter, indeed, which jumps the 11 years to 1416 and gives us, in a final survey, the fates of the surviving characters.

Day-by-Day Realities In World of Imagination.

The great characteristic of the work, its literary personality as it were, the manner in which it conveys to the reader a sense of immensity, of a mystic fate working with human destinies in vast, sad, beautiful scenes, of day-by-day realities set in a world of the imagination and, by the light of that world, thrown into their due eternal significance. This effect is the loftiest which the writer of fiction can attain and the reviewer acknowledges it here with realization of that fact. She, therefore, feels it obligatory to add that the achievement derives almost entirely from the author's tremendous imaginative power and not from his skill or finish as a writer, for the truth is that, in the craftsmanly sense, he often does very badly. There are passages in the book, indeed, which read as if they had come from the hand of an indifferent schoolchild; like Theodore Dreiser, John Cowper Powys has the paradoxical ability to write great books badly, and in none of his works is that paradox more vividly exemplified than in this one. But the great sucking power of his imagination is irresistible; it draws the reader fatefully into the world of his novel and triumphs over the most astounding faults of expression.

The course of the story is simply the course of Glendower's rebellion told through the emotions of Rhisiart ab Owen, Glendower's secretary These emotions, as it happens, will be sufficiently familiar to all readers of Mr. Powys' past work. Rhisiart, actually, was a historical character; he did live. But here he has been made into the figure of the typical Powysian hero and endowed with the same mental traits as appeared earlier in Wolf Solent and Rook Ashover. He is the divided mind, that is to say-the mind capable at once of the most excessive emotionalism and the most profound detachment. For the sake of the present story, this s been given a racial basis; Rhisiart is part Welsh and part Norman; his Welsh blood accounts for his emotionalism and drives him to join the rebels in a tervor of patriotism which approaches religious ecstasy; his Norman heritage, on the other hand, inclines him at the same time to view the characters and chances of the revolt with skepticism and, opportunistically, to plan a statesmanly career for himself. The novel moves from one crucial scene of the revolt to another with Rhisiart looking on or taking part, coldly analyzing events in his "narrow Norman eranium" or rushing into activity with ill-judged Welsh emotionalism. That is the technical method by which the story is made to go forward. But it is necessary, in fairness to the author, to say that the statement gives no true notion at all of the book's breadth and temper.

Veritable Wilderness Of Lesser Plots Shown.

For the work is a veritable wilderness of lesser plots made to take works, as there is in the present one, place among the persons of Glendower's enormous household. Monks, which is subtitled "The Diplomacy sorceresses, soldiers, ambassadors, lords, prophets, bards, poets, peasants, Lollard dissenters, lights of love in a motley host throng the pages of the no reader can escape feeling that book, each playing his part in Glendower's rebellion and each possessed of a vivid personality and a tangle of personal concerns, which, though minute, still bear on the eventual fortunes of the war. As the book proceeds, Glendower moves from one stronghold to another and, in each swayed considerably by his prejuvast medieval establishment, we meet the same throng of characters with dices. their problems advanced a little further and their combined tensions on the central problem—the revolt—drawn a little tighter. The figure of Glendower dominates the whole; he is at once the vindicator and the vic- policies and an admiration for Rustim of his followers and the foil against which Rhisiart finally exhausts

Glendower, as Mr. Powys portrays him, may be taken for the apotheosis, the genius, of the Welsh people. He is shown always as more than a man. He is the personification of a racial soul, the soul of the "ancient people," the mysterious race which antedated both Saxon and Norman and which survived only as it learned the secret of "withdrawal" from the physical world of its enemies and cultivated infinite self-containment. sian demands on Finland. While Defeated in the field. Glendower himself uses this power of his race to many of his facts are valuable, and escape. Though attended only by two followers, he keeps the state of while there are few people of good prince in an underground fastness until, at the call of ancestral voices, will today who would defend Brithe finally leaves the world in spirit—but to return again. This, at least, ain's pre-war politics, the intensely is his faith and the faith of his friends. Mr. Powys shows it to us through the divided vision of Rhisiart, who both believes and disbelieves.

Sense of Racial Fate

A sense of racial fate, of the mystic destiny of a people, is made to brood over the whole work by this device of enlarging Glendower's experience. Under that tragic pall, however, there are scenes and personalities of the utmost realism and vividness. As a sort of ironic subtheme to the great one of the revolt, there is an implied likeness between the 15th century and the 20th. We have Rhisiart, for example, deploring the fact that romance his gone out of war due to the invention tions. England, with an overwhelmof that "scientific modern" weapon, the crossbow; it had rendered the ing pacifist sentiment inherited armed knight of chivalry impotent. We have, too, a champion of the workers, an internationalist who seeks to bring about a union of the proletarians of all nations against their common enemy, the exploiting gentry. Likewise, the older bards are shown regretting the corruption of poetry by new-fangled forms, while the ladies of the story interest themselves in furnishing their chambers in the new "modern" styles, substituting "fin tury taste. And so on. It is to Mr. Powys' credit that he makes these too, was in no state to undertake contrasts with great naturalness, and without any heavy-handed obvious-military measures. The temporizing in which both governments engaged The book is, as said, a triumph of imaginative writing. The reviewer was, to some extent at least, unhas seldom touched a work of fiction where the force and thrust of the avoidable. But Prof. Schuman would author's creative power was more perceptible or more persuasive.

Random Harvest

By James Hilton. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.

This is a tepid, mechanically-planned little novel designed to show has done himself an injury by this we how the England of the post-war years wasted its heritage and how, now, it is regaining its loss. The device by which this theme is set down is that of a soldier shell-shocked into a loss of memory. He is the son of a wealthy family, but his identity tags have been lost and he finds himself on Armistice Day, walking out of a hospital with no knowledge of himself whatsoever. He is befriended by an actress, a warm-hearted girl who loves him at first sight and, by her affection, brings him to a state of selfconfidence again. The pair marries and the young man, still unable to secall his past, begins to win success as a writer. Then he meets with a street accident, and as a result, recovers his memory, previously lost, up to the date when he left the hospital, but—alas—forgets all that has happened since then, including his marriage. This may seem to the reader a bit arbitrary, but Mr. Hilton assures us, through the lips of a psychoanalyst introduced especially for the purpose, that it is entirely possible.

The hero, naturally, goes back to his wealthy family and, in time, the burden of the family fortune falls upon him. He gives himself up to money-making entirely; he is successful, but the money which he makes is spent by his relatives on frivolous pursuits. He is, therefore, unproductive and he is sad about it, but he can see nothing else to do. In the meantime, being unaware that he is already married, he marries again, this time choosing his secretary because he feels somehow comfortable in her presence. Then fate gives him another jolt, and lo-his whole memory is restored. He recalls his days as a poor writer and his happiness with rose," a story of life (?) in a great the little actress. Neither Liberty Nor Bread

Edited by Frances Keene. New York: Harper & Bros.

Forty-two Italian liberals, all "voluntary exiles." unite in this book in an endeavor to explain what is wrong with their native land. In their writings, many of which have appeared in other publications, they cover the history of Italian Fascism from its relatively bloodless inception in 1922 to its present inglorious state.

One of the contributors, Max Ascoli, now a professor at the New School for Social Research, New York, puts into very concise words the underlying theme of the other 41 treatises as he says:

"Sixteen years after the march on Rome not a single theorist of Fascism has emerged worth having his books translated and his name known abroad. Yet the efforts by the government and by the party to find some adequate theoretical expression have been and still are tireless, and the rewards offered are generous. But Fascism seems now to be as 20 years ago, something extraneous to an old refined culture which dates its origin back to Dante's 13th century; something which has no romance of Virginia in the days relation to the great issues of Italian civilization, like clericalism, to anti- just after the Civil War. Chandler, Noted Leader, Described as Actor in Struggles of Parties

New Hampshire Republican Declared to Have Ignored Consequences in Battles

By C. Belmont Faries.

William E. Chandler, Republican

By Leon Burr Richardson. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. William E. Chandler of New Hampshire is best remembered as the man who saved-or "stole"—the disputed election of 1876 for Rutherford

In his long career as a Republican leader. Chandler was, although not always a regular, first and foremost a party man. Active from the Fremont campaign of 1856 to the defeat of Hughes in 1916, he was proud to be known as a politician. Yet his services to his country equaled those of many a better remembered statesman.

Manager of Grant's two successful campaigns Grandler had stepped aside in the Hayes-Tilden contest. On the morning after election, with the Republican candidate apparently beaten, he appeared suddenly at national headquarters, took matters into his own hands, and held in line three doubtful States that in the end gave Hayes the presidency.

Bitter Quarrels With

Chandler was often in disagreement with party policies. Many of his bitterest quarrels were with fellow Republicans. In full sympathy with the radicals of the reconstruction era, he believed in and fought-long after party leaders had given up the battle-for the right of the Negro

If he "waved the bloody shirt," it was not entirely for partisan advantage, for he stuck to his guns long after the party of Lincoln had become, in his eyes, the political agent of the propertied classes.

He, boasted, late in life, that he was the first Progressive, and it is true that in his courageous fight against railroad domination in New Hampshire, a struggle which finally cost him his Senate seat, and in his opposition to control of his party by the big corporations, he anticipated Bob LaFollette and Theodore Roosevelt.

If, in his early years, he served his party well, he also served his country. As Secretary of the Navy under President Arthur, he initiated the "new Navy." While Congress wrangled ne cut through red tape to make possible the rescue of the survivors of the Greely Arctic expedition

As a member of the Senate between 1887 and 1901, he was a colorful

In this first full-length portrait of Chandler (there are 734 pages in the fat volume), Prof. Richardson has contributed a worthy addition to the "American Political Leaders" series. Few men have left such voluminous papers as Chandler, and little has escaped Prof. Richardson's careful

The Letters of John Fiske

Edited by his daughter, Ethel F. Fisk. New York: Macmillan Co. John Fiske was big. He had a great round torso and a great round head, and from his face hung a great spray of whiskers. His first child weighed 912 pounds at birth and his second 1114. He was a prodigy of frame, and he was a prodigy of mind. He consumed information by the bale. He read libraries in English, German, French, Latin and Greek, and when he was 40 he began to study Russian. When he was yet an infant, his great joy was learning. A letter he wrote from Harvard in December, 1861, suggests how insatiable and catholic was his hunger for knowledge at 19:

"I have read Klaproth's 'Tableaux Historiques de l'Asie,' which is very good. I am reading the Old Testament in Hebrew. * * * This week I found a Chaldee word in the Elohim document. * * * What in the devil was that Chaldee word doing in a document written by the festive Moses?"

"The philosophic hippotamus," Dr. Vernon Parrington called Fiske. This book of his letters is a fascinating work (which would be many times as valuable with an index and appendix) tracing the decline and fall of what might have been a great forceful intellect serving mankind. Fiske used his great knowledge to poor ends. His intellectual develop-MARCH ON. His life became one round of dashing from city to city to spout to audiences on the discovery of America, the mystery of evil, Alexander Hamilton,

THE ART OF PRACTICAL THINK- remarks on the devil and a hundred other subjects. Fiske's first celebrity was based on the role he assumed as the apostle preaching evolutionary philosophy according to Herbert Spencer. He worshiped the British Spencer, whom he explained so well that he gained the thanks of Charles Darwin. The author of "The Origin of Species" confessed to Fiske that he himself had been unable to plow his way through Spencer and gain any light. From evolution, Fiske moved on to history, and in the later years of the 19th century he was accounted by his contemporaries a giant among historians. The family of the truly great Francis Parkman, the historian of our Northwest frontiers, derived real satisfaction from Fiske's agreeing to write an introduction for the complete edition of Parkman's works.

Fiske the historian and Fiske the evolutionist, as well, are both dim, forceless memories now. This book is not calculated to set him upon a pedestal, but it does make an entertaining narrative of a man's progress. BLAIR BOLLES.

Terror in Our Time: The Secret Service of Surprise Attack

By Richard Wilmer Rowan. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Mr. Rowan has a political economist's interest in the modern "terror" the spying and the secret police work, with disappearances of important persons, sudden death and destroyed morale, which is an integral part of the international campaign waged from Berlin, Rome and

"The exorbitant cost of warfare, 1914-1918, provoked an immediate search for some cheaper substitute." Mr. Rowan writes. "Governments sought to maintain a double-decked attitude of peaceable negotiation and disarmament, but allowed their secret agents to take up a challenge and fight. Rival secret services thus quietly set about doing all the damage they could, to each other and to the opposing governments, while saving the government treasuries the price of highly expendable battle-planes and tanks, cruisers, destroyers and submarines. * * * This sort of undercover campaign has for its sole objective the offsetting of great differences in financial power, geographical advantage, material strength and resources of morale.'

In the light of this explanation, it is easy to see why the poorest nations are the nations most given to terroristic police work. Russia's Cheka (degenerated later into the G. P. U.), Italy's O. V. R. A. and Germany's Gestapo are the most feared and sinister of the national police systems, and Russia, Germany and Italy are the poorest among the great nations. These systems are positive adjuncts of the totalitarian theory of government. Heinrich Himmler, the dread chief of the Gestapo, "now controls about 675,000 police, or one for every 130 people in the * * * Third Reich." What is Himmler's police function? Says Mr. Rowan:

"In other times or in obsolete democracies, the director of police was famed for detecting the guilty. But in the mentally mechanized police state the master of spies is more likely to be respected for the number of guiltless men he has brought to ruin. Or he may be feared on account of the large number of untried and unconvicted individuals he has been permitted to punish for offenses he suspects somebody is committing.'

The nuances of Mr. Rowan's book will make us all thank Heaven that we live where justice is always invoked, if not always produced, in the relations between the police and the public. This author can do little but hint at the great part which secret police work has played in the progress of Debussy's second wife, Mr. Dumes- of Nazi Germany. He is helpful, however, in explaining the greatly exnil's account of the great French panded role which poor governments found for espionage after the Treaty of Versailles. He closes with a chapter which might worry us here, the story in outline of terroristic spying in the Western Hemisphere. throughout with a personal shade. throughout the book appear such characters as the unhappy dual man, Less concerned with the artistic Poleschuk-Konar, whose fate proved that it's a rare spy who can resign B.B.

The whole process of becoming acquainted with music is being simplified by thought and research and being presented to the public at little expense to it. The recording companies have realized the possibilities offered by their particular branches and are putting them to good use. They have tried to make complete libraries of all the best music in various fields, recorded by the best artists, with the recording accompanied by complete explanations, giving something of the history of the composer, the background of the particular work, and any interesting point connected with its composition

The Columbia Recording Corp. Issues this month, for the first time, a new series called the Student Music Library Series. It has been brought to this idea by the success of a former venture in which records of chamber music were put out with one part missing so that any one wishing to practice a particular part could do so with the co-operation of the other necessary players by means of the discs. This series has become very popular and has led to the releasing of another series of educational records.

The new recordings are of recital numbers and junior classics of the violin, piano and cello played by outstanding artists. Concerts at Library End On Saturday

Pro Arte Quartet And Others to Give Program

The current series of concerts under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will come to an end on Saturday afternoon. These concerts, devoted to the chamber music of Johannes Brahms and given in the Coolidge Auditorium of the Library, are being presented by the Pro Arte String Quartet of the University of Wisconsin (formerly of Brussels) and assisting artists. The Pro Arte String Quartet consists of Antonio Brosa, first violin; Laurent Halleux, second violin: Germain Prevost, viola, and C. Warwick Evans, violoncello. The group of assisting artists to be heard this week includes Harold Klatz, viola; Wendell Hoss, horn; Lysbeth Le Fevre, violoncello, and Gunnar Johansen, piano. Three programs will be heard during the coming week. Tomorrow (at 8:45 p.m.) the following works will be performed: "Quintet in F Major for Two Violins, Two Violas and Violoncello, Op. 88"; "Quartet in A Major for Violin, Viola, Violoncello and Piano, Op. 26"; "Sextet in G Major for Two Violins, Two Violas and Two Violoncellos, Op. 36." The program for Wednesday at 8:45 p.m. includes: "Trio in C Minor for Violin, Violoncello and Piano, Op. 101"; "Sonata in D Minor Violin and Piano, Op. 108"; "Quintet in F Minor for String Quartet and Piano, Op. 34."

The concluding program on Saturday at 3 p.m. offers the following compositions: "Trio in E Flat Major for Violin, Horn and Piano, Op. 40"; "Sonata in F Major for Violoncello and Piano, Op. 99"; Bruno Walter, Mahler's intimate "Quartet in G Minor for Violin, friend and associate for many years at the Vienna Opera House, gives it a magnificent reading at the 25."

The junior highs at Little Rock differ from our schools. Each one has its football team which plays with nearby towns. They also have sororities and fraternities.

Moving has not interfered with Harvey's studies, because he is a good scholar. One teacher remarked that he should know his geography. He took part in the school Christmas play and he plays on the football team with his section. He enjoys trains and has a model railroad. Harvery's favorite subject is science, and he has high ambitions.

Patricia Head, 11, of 1814 G street .W., and Townsend Pagter, 10, of 3719 Fulton street N.W., will never forget the recent inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt as the first third-term President of the United States. It will remain fresh in their memories always-not merely as an unprecedented event in American history that occured in their time, but as a thrilling personal experience. For they were given the unforgettable privilege of helping to describe the inaugural over 115 stations of the National Broadcasting

A week or so before the inauguration, Thomas E. Knode of the N. B. C. News Service, asked The Junior Star for the names and addresses of any of its boy and girl reporters who also published newspapers of their own. Patricia, a Gordon Junior High School student and Townsend, a pupil at Benjamin Stoddert School, were recommended

"Mr. Knode came to my apartment and asked me if I wanted to go on the radio," Patricia said in a recent report to the J. S. "Of course, I said yes. Mother and Daddy were as surprised as I was." A similar re-action was reported by Townsend, who wrote: "Was I thrilled when my telephone rang and Mr. Knode asked me if I would like to help broadcast the inaugural ceremonies. I could hardly talk; in fact, I could not answer for a minute. Then I asked if it would make me absent from school, and he said no. You bet I was glad to have the chance!"

Patricia and Townsend broadcast three times-once on Friday, January 17, again on Sunday, the 19th, and finally on Monday, the 20th, during the inaugural ceremonies. They met numerous radio celebrities, including Graham McNamee. H. V. Kaltenborn, H. R. Baukhage and all the members of N. B. C.'s international group. For example, the command, "Pipe all hands on deck" brings to mind the pipe used by the boatswain (pronounced "bo'sn"). As far back as the time of the Crusades, English ships used a pipe or flute to relay orders to the crew. The boatswain, according to an old record, "blew his pipe "three several time" before announcing the captain's orders.

In later years the pipe also came to be used as a badge of office. The admiral of the fleet carried a gold pipe on a gold chain about his neck. When Sir Edward Howard was defeated by a French fleet off the coast of France, he threw his gold pipe into the sea before his ship was cap-

Function Being Broadened.

The military establishment on Puerto Rico, which has the length of New York's more familiar Long Island but twice the width, started out as one for the defense of the colony itself. Gradually its function is being broadened to include participation in the air defense of the whole southeastern part of the United States and the Panama Canal.

In essence, the military problem of the United States, somewhat simplified by the acquisition of bases from Great Britain, is the defense of Puerto Rico.

To military men it is inconceivable that so long as Puerto Rico stands, any of the other islands in the Antilles could be occupied by

If Puerto Rico should fall, the Panama Canal, about 1,200 miles away, might be subjected to devastating air attacks. In the absence of a two-ocean Navy, that would render defense of the North American Continent-not to mention that of South America-criti-

Radius of 1.000 Miles. Heavy bombardment planes based here by the Army, and patrol bombers by the Navy, will have a radius of action of at least 1.000 miles. A circle with that radius drawn from here would reach almost to Florida, the Canal, the British possession of Trinidad and 1.000 miles into the open ocean to the east.

It is easy for the visitor to overestimate the amount of work already shed here, just as easy to underestimate the magnitude of the job. Including W. P. A. funds, the United States has spent some $200,-000,000 in Puerto Rico in the last

sive establishment An air base originally developed by Pan American Airways, in extending its network of airlines throughout Latin America, has been taken over by the Navy. Here facilities will be provided for the fueling and maintenance of both patrol bombers and the 150-odd planes normally based on carriers, Airdromes Developed. The Army is developing the Bour-Inquen and Ponce Airdromes and a half dozen auxiliary fields. A Bourinquen an eventual force of 500 officers and 6,000 men will be stationed. They will man a heavy and a medium bombardment group, two reconnaissance squadrons and various auxiliary units.

The Ponce field will have a complement of almost 200 officers and 2,000 men, manning a pursuit group, an observation squadron and an air base group.

The development of air fields is predicated on the military formula of convenience and dispersion. Dispersion is being practiced in the European war, where both German and British air forces are divided up among a large number of fields to present less of a target to the enemy.

Six of the auxiliary fields being prepared for convenience and dispersion are in Puerto Rico proper, one on the island of St. Croix, 40 miles southeast, in the Virgin Islands group.

Greater Mobility.

In addition to giving the warplanes assigned here a measure of safety the air field system will serve the further purpose of providing the entire Air Corps contingent in the Caribbean area with greater

Airplanes must have fuel, bombs, bullets and shells and maintenance facilities. Puerto Rico will be one of the major depots in the Caribbean air defense scheme. Planes from other bases can be concentrated here in event of a threat to Puerto Rico's safety

A major concern of both the Army and Navy is the possibility of an enemy's attempting a coup by air power. Ground troops and bombers are intended to prevent such an attempt.

Currently only obsolescent types of Air Corps planes, and those in small numbers, are based in Puerto Rico They will be replaced when the stepped-up production of American aircraft factories will permit.

Selectee Becomes First To Win Commission

The first selective service man to gain commissioned rank in the Regular Army, the War Department reveals, is Pyt. Ogden Delmer Pinkerton, serving at Schofield Barracks, Honolulu.

His appointment as a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps Reserve and his immediate assignment to active duty with the Regular Army for one year was announced He is a graduate of the University of Indiana in science and in medi-

Back Talk

N. Y. Zoological Society

COLLECTION. THIS WEEK Magazine collects stories about talking birds. Here are two which were contributed to our collection by Dr. W. Reid Blair, of New York's Zoological Park:

PERFORMER. The late Hermann W. Merkel, an official of the New York Zoo, was once presented with a large green Amazon parrot which had been in the home of a friend for many years. The bird was an excellent talker and something of a show-off, too. Whenever a visitor came to the house — even if it was the plumber, postman or grocery boy — he would be greeted enthusiastically by the parrot with "Please sit down." Then he would immediately begin to recite the alphabet in a singsong manner: "A B C D — E F G — H I J K — L M N O P . . . " and so on, as long as the visitor remained.

Mr. Merkel's friends thought all this a very amusing performance, but after he had heard the parrot recite the alphabet a hundred times or more, it got on Mr. Merkel's nerves. Once when the parrot was reciting the alphabet and had reached the letter L, Mr. Merkel in exasperation exclaimed, "Hell, that's enough!" After that the parrot would often pause at the letter L and exclaim, "Hell, that's 'nough," but would continue on with the alphabet. Once when Mr. Merkel was to be out of the city for several weeks, Mrs. Merkel sent the parrot to the Zoo's Bird House. Mr. Merkel returned but the parrot was never called for.

BOUNCER. The Zoological Park once had a sulphur-crested cockatoo that learned to repeat the words "All out! All out!" which were used by the keepers at the time of closing the building for the night. This bird was placed on a stand on the floor of the Parrot Hall of the Bird House. His harsh "All out!" was very effective in directing visitors to the exits. The cockatoo, however, did not confine his demand "All out!" strictly to the closing hour. If a sudden thunderstorm should dim the light in the building the cockatoo would often demand "All out! All out!" This was often embarrassing, especially when the building was crowded with visitors waiting for the storm to pass.

P.S. Do you own a talking bird? Has it ever talked back to you? If so, send the story to the Editor of This Week Magazine, in care of this newspaper. We will pay ten dollars for each one selected for publication. Stories must be brief, amusing, authentic and — as yet — unpublished.

BETTER

NOT THEY - BUT WE

by Garret Smith

THE other morning I attended a conference representing three different nations. We met on the wind-swept deck of a ferryboat. Beside me in a sheltered corner stood a swarthy fellow passenger; a big blond deckhand pottered about in the drizzle near by. Ahead of us the New York sky line loomed vaguely through the rain.

"Bad morning," said the swarthy man.
"Yes," I agreed, "but we're lucky it's rain, not bombs."

"You said it!" he flared. "Plenty times my people in the old country must have wished it was rain."

"What country?" I asked him.

"Greece," he said. "That's where they started democracy."

He had drawn himself up straight. Now he grinned and winked at me. "But I had to come here to find it — just like my father said. The old man used to bang the table and shout that Greeks never were really free, except the boss classes. He'd say that America took the Greek idea and made it work, and that a lot of good Greeks were helping her do it."

"He was right, by golly!" the big deckhand broke in. "And they's a lot of good Swedes helpin' too. Over there people all the time fightin' each other or gettin' ready to. The people don't want to fight. It's the bosses. Same people come here and live peaceable together."

"You said it!" the Greek approved.

"That's because nobody in America looks down at anybody, or up either. They look each other right in the eye, even the President, like my father said.

"I found out one reason for that on my first day in New York. I was sitting in Battery Park, eating a sandwich from a bag. Absent-minded-like I threw the bag on the sidewalk. Then I saw a man in uniform standing over me. I was scared. I grew up being afraid of men in uniforms. But this cop just grinned and told me I must be new in America, like he was ten years ago. 'We made a law against throwing things on the sidewalk,' he said. That word we got me. Over there when we talked about the people who made the laws, we said they."

"But you still love Greece?" I asked.

"Sure. It's like a man loving his mother. That's Greece. But he marries another woman and goes away to make a home of his own with her. That's America. If he ain't the kind who can keep on loving his mother just the same, then he ain't got it in him to love his wife either. When some guy who's just come here hates the country he was born in, I figure he ain't fit to be a regular American."

The Swede was peering into the mist ahead. Across our bows a big freighter was passing. The Swede began waving his cap and shouting in his native tongue.
"What ship's that?" the Greek called to him.

AMERICA =

The big fellow turned to us, a grin spread across his broad face.

"My ship!" he boomed. "Swedish!"

"What did I tell you?" the Greek said

"What did I tell you?" the Greek said to me. "And I'll bet he's a regular American, too." He gave me a wink. "Wait a minute, I'll show you."

"Hey, Swede," he called gruffly. "If you feel that way, why don't you go back where you belong?"

THE Swede shook an oversized fist under the Greek's nose.

"Here's where I belong!" he roared.

"If some country over there fights Sweden, maybe I go over there and fight in Swedish Army. But if Sweden comes here to fight America, I join American army and fight Sweden, even if I shoot my own brother, by golly!"

"Sure you would," the Greek told him.
"Same here. I was just kidding. I wanted to show this man you're a real American."

"Maybe you think I ain't," the deckhand accused me. "You're born here, maybe, and forget your folks came from over there too."

"My folks came from five different countries," I assured him. "And I married a girl whose folks came from two others. That makes seven old countries for my family."

The Swede studied me with reservation.

"Some fellows born here get so used to thinkin' they're regular Americans that they don't do anything about it, just kick at things," he said. "You fellows born here are Americans because you had to be. We fellows are Americans because we missed something over there that we wanted so bad we worked hard to come here and get it. We're goin' to go on workin' hard to keep it.

"Only job I lost since I come to America was with a born-American boss. I was chauffeur, gardener, general handyman. I just got my citizenship papers and I was waiting for my first vote in America. Night before election, the boss tells me: 'I'm goin' huntin' tomorrow. We'll start four A.M. so we get a nice long day.'

"'Do we get back in time to vote?'
I asks him.

"'Not a chance,' he says. 'What of it? Nothin' important up tomorrow.'

"'Boss,' I says. 'You can take my job and go to hell. I'm goin' to vote.'"

"You said it!" exclaimed the Greek.

The boat slid into the slip and we parted. As I went ashore, I wondered if it wouldn't be a good idea for all of us who were born here to talk about America with the newcomers once in a while. Maybe they can tell us more than we can tell them.

ABOUT THE COVER. The coming week is an important one for the young midshipman on the cover. It is Graduation Week at the United States Naval Academy. Normally graduation comes in June, but the class of 1941, nearly 400 strong, is being rushed into active service nearly four months ahead of schedule. On Thursday the midshipmen will have their last undergraduate fling at the traditional "Farewell Ball." Their job in the years ahead is an important one. This Week Magazine joins with all America in wishing the class of 1941 a lifetime of honor and success.

EXAMPLE. Colonel William J. Donovan, whose article "Who Says We're Soft?" appears in this issue, is an expert on toughness. During the World War, as commanding officer of the famous "Fighting 69th," he taught courage to his men by hard example. He was wounded on three different occasions.

In one battle near Landres et St. Georges his leg was shattered. His hands were burned. He was tagged to be sent back to the hospital. He tore off the tag, had himself strapped up and stayed with his regiment for thirty hours, until they won their objective. For this he received the Congressional Medal.

ZENITH. In spite of his reputation for temperamental genius, Sinclair Lewis is a most painstaking craftsman. Before writing "Babbitt," for instance, he made a large-scale map of Zenith, the fictional town which was to represent all American towns. On it he carefully marked the name of every important street and building, the homes of all his characters. Then, after doing a 60,000-word synopsis, he commenced to write - sixteen hours a day. Incidentally, the town of Zenith is mentioned again in "Fellow Trouper," latest of Sinclair Lewis's stories dealing with that hilarious vaudeville pair, Matt and Millie Carnival. You will find the story on Page 5 of this issue.

TIME. While some scientists have been splitting atoms others have been splitting seconds. Research workers in the Westinghouse laboratories have now developed a new type of X-ray tube which takes a picture in one-millionth of a second. If that figure made you blink, consider that it is approximately two hundred thousand times as fast as the time it just took you to wink your eye.

ISS PRICE, who'd been at the stocking counter since the days when real ladies wore lisle, hated young Mrs. Guy Farr. It made no difference to her that Guy's father owned the store. "What'd she ever do to you?" one of the girls at the glove counter once asked. "She couldn't do anything to me," Miss Price answered tightly. Her old face set in hard, bitter lines, "I'm not of her class. I'm just a clerk."

From the stockings you could see through the great revolving doors to the street where sometimes the Farr town car would be waiting. If young Mrs. Farr came along, especially if Guy was with her, everyone craned to see. Not Miss Price. It seemed she simply couldn't bear to look at either of them.

It wasn't as if young Mrs. Farr was highhat. Of course her beautiful, right clothes came from the exclusive houses, but when she bought anything in the store she was always so friendly. When she'd been first married, she bought all her stockings from Miss Price. Grimly the older woman would hunt out sizes and shades. They could all see Mrs. Farr being as nice as anything, but back of Miss Price's frigid politeness there might have been a sign: "You keep your place and I'll keep mine.'

"Class!" the glove clerk had hooted. "There isn't any such animal any more!"

Before he'd married and settled down, young Guy had ranged far and wide. The clerks and even the floorwalkers used to pass around the gossip columns. "Did you see this?" they'd ask. "Which playboy," someone wrote once, "raids his pappy's emporium and comes out with a fresh model every night?" "Model" was technically correct too. in those days - the wide-eyed lovelies who paraded poised bodies in negligees, bathing suits and wholesale décollete up on the fourth floor had no reason to complain about Guy Farr's class consciousness, or that he was a hard boss either. Even now some of them tried a come-hither, unable to believe that one so rich and young and also a man couldn't be deflected from what they called with a grin, "a big true love." But unfortunately for them now, Guy's concentration was merely on the fabrics that partly surrounded them.

"When it comes to marrying," Miss Price had said two years ago, "it won't be any model." Along with the gossip columns, young Farr made the society ones, so everyone knew that when he wasn't "modeling" at the Stork Club, he was vachting at Bar Harbor with the Farnsworth girl. "Sure, she can be broadminded," the redheaded model had remarked sourly, "knowing she'll get him for keeps in the end. They say their papas have had this all planned for years."

Oddly enough, Miss Price never said, as she might have, "I told you so" when, naturally. Guy Farr didn't marry a model. No one particularly noticed, but Miss Price had not spoken his name since his marriage. Just saying the name, "Guy Farr," made Miss Price see little Molly Cade. Even after two years she could still see Molly Cade as she had cried that day. "I did my best for her," Miss Price would sometimes remind herself, "I gave her the best advice I knew."

Girls were foolish; it seemed you couldn't spare them anything no matter how you tried. Miss Price had had to send Molly home early that day, because there she was trying to keep her back to the customers as she stacked boxes of out-sizes with the tears running down her thin, white face, "If it wasn't for me." Miss Price had told Molly, "everyone in the store would know."

But no matter how much her feet were hurting, Miss Price had gone out to Molly Cade's rooming house that night after closing. Molly was whiter than ever. Her tiny room was breathless in the August heat. The brick wall opposite the sole window threw back a hot wave like an open oven door; Miss Price saw that about all Molly had done, since she'd been back from the store, was to take a bath. "Haven't you eaten?" Miss Price asked.

by Virginia Da Illustrated by Mortimer Wilson

Molly Cade shook her head; she couldn't admit she hadn't gone out for something because Guy Farr might telephone.

Miss Price, in her neat store black, began or rather, went on where she had left off: "Molly, you're a very foolish girl. I don't know why I bother, only — "Her voice hung. "Maybe if I'd ever married I might of had a daughter like you. I guess that's why I -I feel so bad about you not realizing -

Molly said thinly, "I know you mean well, Miss Price. Only you don't understand."

"I understand you're running around with Guy Farr and throwing away all your chances of a happy life. What can a rich fellow like Guy Farr ever be to you? He plays around with you; he thinks you're maybe good enough for that. That's all. Why can't you see before it's too late? Before you lose that nice young man of yours, Harry What'shis-name? Why can't you see?"

"Guy and I — we just ride around nights in his car, maybe we stop at some beautiful cool place for dinner - " Molly stopped. Listening, praying for the phone to ring.

OH, MOLLY! Can you honestly tell me your Harry doesn't object?"

"He's not 'my Harry', Miss Price."

"He could be. He should be. You had good times with him before Guy Farr saw you there in the store, didn't you?"

"Yes, only - " "Molly, listen to me; Harry's your kind a good, decent boy with a nice little job. He means well by you; a boy with his own way His arm was strong and protecting; his hand was cupping her shoulder to make like Harry has marriage in mind when he pays attention to a girl. Maybe it's because the poor haven't time for carelessness. Anyway, a rich man's son, like Guy, is

"Please, Miss Price, please." (He hadn't telephoned for almost a week. Molly listened: the phone didn't ring.)

Miss Price's tired eyes looked pitifully at little Molly Cade. "Guy Farr doesn't mean anything good by you. It stands to reason. His kind don't, not to your kind. It may be a hard truth but there it is. It's a thing everyone knows."

The heat in the room seemed to rise stiflingly as Miss Price's words fell. She tried not to look at Molly; the girl's dark eyes were filled with tears again. "You're making yourself as cheap as those models he runs around with," Miss Price said. "You come down to it, he don't even let himself be seen with you like he does with them. You're not dashing enough, I guess. Well, don't that tell you something? He picks you up at his father's store and he's just willing to ride you around secret like. Don't that show you?" She added, "You know - everyone knows - about that Bar Harbor girl."

"Miss Price, we - it's enough for me just to be with him. Even for a little while. It's enough - '

WHO SAYS WE'RE SOFT?

The World War commander of the Fighting 69th tells why Americans — men and women, boys and girls — are tougher, mentally and physically, than German propagandists want us to believe

by Col. William J. ("Wild Bill") Donovan

Tell a man often enough and skillfully enough that he's looking sick and the chances are very good that he will actually begin to feel sick. He may wobble at the knees or lose his appetite or even run a fever. But his real ailment is suggestibility. If he's caught in time and told the facts, the symptoms usually disappear rapidly.

Suggestibility in nations runs a parallel course. It is greatest during a period of crisis when fear puts a hair-trigger release on the emotions. Our own nurried preparations to meet suddenly-realized danger have brought with them an opportunity that the Nazis have not overlooked.

Countless suggestions and innuendoes are being used to persuade us that democracy has made us "soft" — not fit material to challenge the "tougher products of Nazi discipline." It is the same form of psychological sabotage that Germany practiced so effectively in Europe tc "soften" one after another of the democracies, before plucking them off by force. And the worst of it is that nervous Americans, many sincere in their patriotism, are the unwitting instruments in this attempt to undermine democratic morale.

Just how soft are we, anyway? And what has democracy to do with it?

Before the outbreak of the war, there was much Nazi-inspired talk in England about the "softness" of the democracies, including England. Last July, I made a flying visit to England to observe her preparations for the long fight ahead. An invasion attempt was expected at any moment. The people were still stunned by the fall of France. They knew that they stood alone on their little island against the most powerful combination of forces the world had ever known. In the miracle of Dunkerque they had brought home most of their army. But in Flanders they had lost their best equipment — guns and tanks and large quantities of essential supplies.

I traveled all over England. I visited units of the navy, the army and the Royal Air Force. I talked with the man on the street. What impressed me in every Briton I met was his calm resolution to fight it out to the last ounce of his strength. Democracy had not "softened" the British people after all. Germany knew it. The world knew it. And now the British people know it, too.

Returning from England in August, I traveled all over our own country. I was with our fleet at sea. I saw our camps and training centers. I talked with our officers and men. In those visits, I saw nothing of democratic softness. But I did see plenty of democracy—democracy speeding ahead to provide this country with an armed strength to match any in the world. The dead line set for this gigantic effort was less than two years away. To arm Germany, Hitler, using the methods of dictatorship, required seven years and the enslavement of the German people.

New Kind of Soldier

Today our armed forces are being trained for a new kind of war. New machines and new weapons have quickened the pace. And the perfect co-ordination required of many highly specialized skills has made necessary the decentralization of command. New responsibility has been thrown on the junior and noncommissioned officers and on the man in the tank or plane or mechanized unit. Given his objective, the modern soldier is on his own. Success depends on his individual skill and judgment. Thus, in military training today, two prime qualities of democracy have come to the fore — individual initiative and self-reliance.

But modern war is not a struggle between armies alone; it is a struggle between the entire populations of opposing nations. Has a comparatively high standard of living, democratically achieved, impaired our civilian stamina? Have we smothered our fighting spirit in material comforts and lost sight of the nation's security in a frantic search for our own well-being? Our patriotic detractors seem to think so. But the record doesn't bear them out.

The national health has improved with every advance in housing, diet, medical care and working conditions. And health is one of the two prime requisites for a strong national defense. The other is morale. Let's consider first our balance sheet of health.

In the America of today, the deadliest diseases take only twenty to thirty per cent of their toll a generation ago. Ten years have been added to the life expectancy of the average American since the last war. Back in 1936 our American Olympics team competed in Berlin with the pick of the world's young athletes — and walked off with the lion's share of the honors. Today, four years later, we see new evidences of national vigor in the young men enlisting in the nation's armed services. Youths who volunteered for armed service in 1940 averaged two inches taller and fifteen pounds brawnier than their fathers who enlisted in 1917.

It's true that life is easier for us today than it was a generation or two ago. Laborsaving devices on the one hand and social and labor legislation on the other have vastly reduced the hazards and hardships of making a living. But Americans still have to work for their bread, and the statistics show that two-thirds of the male workers in the United States are engaged in jobs requiring physical strength and endurance. Take a look down the list of manual occupations — construction work, farming, forestry, fishing, manufacturing, mining, smelting. . . Men who make their living digging coal, forging steel, building roads, cutting timber, stoking locomotives and driving trucks are not inclined to grow soft at their jobs. And as for fighting spirit, just try calling one of them a "softie" to his face.

The other thirty per cent of our male breadwinners are engaged in more or less sedentary occupations. They are the great white-collar class, the clerks, the salesmen, accountants, doctors, lawyers and merchants. Great physical brawn is not important in their jobs. But since when have they become a group of weaklings? During the last war, some of the finest physical specimens in my regiment were men who had worked in banks, accounting offices and department stores.

Making Leisure Count

THE increased leisure time now available to all of us is another change in American life that brings cries of alarm from the democracy-baiters. Apparently they have never bothered to investigate how Americans have chosen to spend that leisure. A glance at recent surveys on recreation should reassure them. Participation in active sports has paralleled the rise in leisure time available to the common man, until today the young man or woman who does not engage in some active sport regularly is the exception. Bowling alone engages 5,000,000; skiing, 1,500,000; golf, 3,500,000; fishing, 12,000,000; and hunting more than 3,000,000. Altogether, the sports army of the United States has grown to 30,000,000 — and these are active participants, not passive spectators. Expenditures for active participation in golf alone totals more every year than the paid admissions to all staged sporting events.

No, we're not so soft. Democracy has given us advantages in health and vigor that are the prime assets in our present efforts to prepare. The doctrine of the greatest good to the greatest number hasn't failed us in this hour of greatest need. The call is not for a curtailment of democracy, but for an exten-

FELLOW TROUPER

A rollicking story of show business...in which Matt and Millie, those lovable hams, try to do a good deed in a dizzily naughty world

by Sinclair Lewis

Illustrated by C. C. Beall

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HE Capering Carnivals," Matt and Millie, stars of the floor show at the Silver-Plaza Grill, did a polite imitation of President and Mrs. Roosevelt. You might not have seen any resemblance to the First Lady in the small, plump, pink Millie, but Matt was really convincing, for he wore eyeglasses and said "My friends," and what more could you expect?

They closed their number with an old-time dance olio, a buck-and-wing and a cakewalk—slim little Matt and fat little Millie, both of them spry at sixty, leaning backward almost to their heels and solemnly kicking, arm in arm, Matt gesturing with a starspangled gilt hat as though this were a solemn wedding procession in an insane asylum.

Herman Beagle, manager of the Grill, noted that there was fairly good applause, and that the Carnivals knew their earnest and highly technical business of being joyful idiots. They were a picturesque pair, Matt in dinner clothes with a canary-yellow waistcoat and Millie in a purple creation with green beads, as they retired to their dressing room—which, at the Grill, was also the storage room for empty bottles, extra tables, and nasty little gilt chairs.

With astounding speed they changed to garments more suitable to their secret social status as Wisconsin chicken farmers: Matt to sneakers, with duck trousers and a sweat shirt that may once have been gray; Millie to an orange sweater and slacks in which her nimble legs were certainly no slimmer. They talked happily the good talk of dressing rooms:

"I see where Jack Grimpus has been engaged for the gangster part in Behind the Eight Ball. I always did like Jack's gangsters better than his doctors or even his bishops."

"Do you remember when he was doing the country doctor in Eroded Fields in 1923 — "
"No, in '24 it was."

"No it wasn't! They rehearsed in the Vanderbilt Theater in January '23 — don't you remember — his old lady and him had the pink room with the rubber plant at Ma Sampler's, on Forty-Eighth Street — don't you remember?"

"That's so. 1923 it was: Gracious, how time does fly."

Not many married couples could talk as engagingly and learnedly as the Carnivals.

THE Silver-Plaza is on the East Coast of Florida, at Splendid Springs, a healthful and thriving little city which contains the world's most dazzling collection of Moorish villas, dog races, sazerac cocktails, real English dukes, mortgages, girls practically in bathing suits, cabanas like tiny Mount Vernons and minuscule Warwick Castles, quiet gentlemen who were once hijackers but have reformed and gone into policy numbers, schools for young New York gentlemen whose minds are not vigorous enough for northern winters, villas so modernistic that they look like sawed-off glass bottles, Olde English bars, Cuban bars, Mexican bars, Alt Heidelberg bars, and bars.

But the Carnivals did not reside in this residential world's fair, between shows. They lived in a beach shack on an island ten miles out of town. Sweetly singing that newest favorite of the far-flung radio millions, "Raspberry pie, jazzberry pie, nebody loves his sweetie like I," they sped down palm-hid roads and across a causeway to their island estate.

It was now near to dawn, which for them was the beginning of evening and of restful loafing. They rode in the Tenbrink Six station wagon in which they had driven to Florida from their Wisconsin farm. It was a very nice station wagon, and not over eight years old. They came roaring up at twenty-five miles an hour, and Matt said happily, "Golly, it's good to be home. I like to give out to my public, but I always was a great hand for domesticity."

"Since when?" said Millie, with the greatest derision and fondness.

Their castle among the dunes was a tworoom abode with a magnificent porch. There were only a few lazy cocoanut palms and the wide cream-colored beach between it and the gentle breakers. They tore off their sneakers and sat on the edge of the porch, trailing their toes in the cold sand.

"Golly, this is the good life," said Matt contentedly. "And if you can just look out through the inlet there, and look far enough, you can see the coast of Africa, and all them jungles in the sun."

Matt lay back on the porch, happily falling asleep. He woke to the sound of the Splendid Springs Daily Bubble banging on the porch, the young carrier's shout of "Mornin', Ma—how's Greta Garbo today?" Millie's rustling opening of the sheet, and then her shout, "Matt! He's coming here! And he's going to stay at the Silver-Plaza!"

"Who is?"

"Maybe he'll like our act and put us in a revue, if he ever writes another one — and he's got to, even if he does say he's quit the stage for keeps — the theater needs him. Doesn't it?"

"Needs who? Whoyuh talking about? Donald Duck or Charley McCarthy?"

"No! Evan Wycoff! He's coming here!"
"No!"

Young Evan Wycoff — twenty-five years he had been on the stage and he was still but forty - was actor, playwright, composer, dancer, director; his careless gracefulness had lured two hemispheres away from worries. He was the best ambassador that England had ever sent to an America somewhat bored by lecturing British authors who publicly informed the aboriginal Americans that the only thing they could see that was wrong with the blasted country was that they didn't like it. Apparently Evan did like it, and he knew it so intimately that in any Broadway play he could tell right off which of the characters represented Heywood Broun and which Alexander Woollcott. But he had shocked the Profession recently by abruptly closing his Fantastic Toe, and announcing that he was done with miming forever.

Now actors like Matt and Millie Carnival may be humanly jealous of players who steal their scenes, yet as a group, as a devoted sect, they love the creators of great drama. They had never seen Evan Wycoff; yet they thought of him as a son of whom they were tearfully proud. They always spoke of him as "Evan," and exulted to each other: "Hey, listen, see how Evan's packing 'em in at the Music Box? Swell!"

They saw Evan Wycoff — but not at the Grill.

When he arrived at Splendid Springs, Evan leased the celebrated Brosseaux mansion, which resembled an atoll in being a mass of palms and coral walls surrounding a navigable swimming pool. Strolling past it with pretentious carelessness, Matt and Millie saw him in white flannels, espadrilles, and a beret, poking about his domain. They recognized his graceful awkwardness, his cherubically impertinent face.

He didn't seem to be having much fun in his role of lord of the manor. He was swinging a polo mallet and, while they watched, he

HERE COME THE SHUFFLERS

N A January day in 1913 Mrs. Robert Ball, proprietress of the Lynhurst Hotel in Daytona, Florida, sat on the hotel's porch with some guests. Other guests were gathered about the tennis court on the lawn. Those rocking in the chairs on the porch were all middle-aged or elderly, and Mrs. Ball noticed that they gazed a little wistfully in the direction of the tennis court.

Their bodies had slowed down a bit too much for such strenuous sports as tennis, but Mrs. Ball was sure that they still possessed a lively spirit of play and a yearning for some sort of physical competition. So she racked her brain for a sport that she could offer them.

Among the things that occurred to her was shuffleboard. She had never heard of its being played anywhere except on shipboard, but she didn't see why it couldn't be a land sport, too. The next day she had two scoring diagrams marked out on the cement walk of the hotel and ordered a cabinetmaker to fashion some cues and disks.

Some of the old folks had played and enjoyed shuffleboard on shipboard, but they eyed Mrs. Ball's offering for some time without doing anything about it. In those days old folks were expected to sit in rocking chairs; they weren't supposed to be out jumping about at some sport. That would have been faintly scandalous.

Finally two of the more venturesome rockers persuaded two others to try shuffleboard on land. They played one game, then another. Their friends on the porch at first simply looked on in silence. Then, as the play progressed, they left their rocking chairs and trickled down for a better look. The four original players so evidently enjoyed it that when they were finished others tried it. More followed suit. Within a few days the entire hotel was at it, with playing time at a premium.

From Daytona the game spread to other Florida cities and winter tourists took it

by Theodore Pratt

The older folks boomed it - now young people are taking it up too back home with them to all sections of the country. Middle-aged and elderly people adopted shuffleboard so enthusiastically that for years now it has been well established all over the nation, and it is still growing and spreading — a mild but satisfying sport for America's senior citizens.

All-Year-Round Sport

TODAY thousands of winter tourists and natives are playing the game throughout Florida and along the Gulf Coast, in California and the Southwest. But it is far from being only a winter sport. Visitors at countless summer resorts from coast to coast play it every day through the vacation season.

Just how many people play it is difficult to estimate. The National Shuffleboard Association numbers 35,000 members in its affiliated clubs. This represents only a small part of those who play the game regularly, and is only a tiny fraction of those who play it from time to time.

As a matter of fact there is more shuffleboard playing in New York City than in any other single place in the country. The Park Department experimented with its first court in 1932 and since then 478 have been installed in the city's recreational facilities. Last year there were nearly a million and a half adult participants. Here, as elsewhere, the game is played not only by older people, but by thousands of younger folk. Every September a city-wide tournament is held.

National tournaments are also held, two of them each year. The National Winter Shuffleboard Championship matches are played in mid-January in St. Petersburg, Florida, and the hotly-contested games last for a week. This year marked the eleventh annual championships. The summer tournament is held in Traverse City, Michigan.

In St. Petersburg, where an eight-page newspaper, "The Shuffleboard Club News," is published twice a week there are 162 lighted public courts. Four lubs organized to play on these have over 7,000 regular members besides the thousands of transients who play. It is a sorry Florida community that hasn't at least a few shuffleboard courts.

The game has been widely installed in Y.M.C.A.'s, churches, state institutions, schools, amusement parks, trailer camps, tourist courts and a number of state and national parks. Many people have private courts of their own. Though largely played outdoors, some people mark courts on their basement floors. Sporting-goods companies even make an indoor table version.

Draws Big Audiences

A GOOD-SIZED municipal shuffleboard club in action, such as seen in St. Petersburg during the national matches, is an amazing sight. This is especially so at night under the lights, for play progresses throughout the day and evening. The galleries are large and enthusiastic. Excellent shots draw as much applause as home runs in a baseball game.

Shuffleboard on land is by no means the simple sport it is understood to be by those who have played it on shipboard. The high-seas version is a far cry from the land variety that has been developed by the oldsters. In the process of spreading from Daytona the older folk found the shipboard version too tame. They wanted something more difficult. They could use their mental faculties to the utmost even if they had to take it easy physically.

No one knows exactly where the present arrowhead diagram for play evolved. The shipboard, or British, version, with its eleven scoring areas, mostly squares enclosed in an oval, is a simple affair compared with the much more intricate six areas in the arrowhead diagram now in use.

Unlike the seafaring game, the land variety offers no concessions to women by giving them a shorter distance to send their disks. The technique is also different; on board ship

PROM the famed Pasadena Playhouse in Pasadena to the motion-picture studios around Hollywood is a distance of about eighteen miles, as the crow flies.

If the crow doesn't fly, it's longer and harder, and there was no crow flying that morning in April, 1939, when the hero of this story, Victor Mature, folded his tent in Pasadena and hit the road.

The big boy was starting out to answer the call of Hollywood, which call had come via the telephone company the evening before. He was dressed in a gray double-breasted suit, a dark-green tie, a white Oxford-cloth shirt with button-down collar. He wore no hat, but his black wavy hair was neatly combed; his teeth were brushed; he had spent fifteen careful minutes on his shaving.

He swung along with a graceful stride, reckless of energy, for he had no intention of walking very far. Once past the business section of Pasadena, our young man took his stance at the roadside and started thumbing a ride.

A car came along. Mr. Mature showed his freshly brushed teeth and put into his request for a ride the essence of his five years of rigorous dramatic training at the Pasadena Playhouse.

No soap. He straightened out the wrinkle in his coat made by the gesture, and waited for the next car. . .

The average time required by Mr. Mature to hitchhike to Hollywood was less than two hours, with a low of forty minutes. But this time he had a wretched day — one of his worst. The sun came out and steamed Mr. Mature, and he landed at the studio just five hours later, having covered at least half the total distance under his own power.

Fortunately he did not have to wait for an audience. He was expected, the girl said. Go right in, Mr. Mature. Thank you, madam. . . . How do you do, sir?

The executive looked at him, and said, "Hm!"

Sad Transformation

THE object before him certainly was no bargain. The hair, so carefully combed that morning, pointed out in five directions and one lock decorated the forehead. The face, so nicely scrubbed, now looked oiled and sanded; the incipient beard, so meticulously shaved at dawn, now lent a dark, sinister undertone to the dust that clung to it. The collar of the white shirt had gained considerably in — well, in color. The suit — perish the thought of the suit! And at this point, gentle reader, let us turn our eyes aside for a moment before we break into tears. . .

You may recall that I said Mature had folded his tent that morning. I suppose you thought I was trying to write fancy. Not a bit of it. He was living at the time in a tent pitched in a friend's back yard. The arrangement was shrewd, and was brought about by the fact that Mature is more realistic than most actors and can subtract as well as add. In the rooming house where he had been living, he and another actor had reduced the essentials of existence to a matter of some thirty dollars a month each by judicious purchasing at the neighborhood market on a sort of communistic basis.

Two things now happened at practically the same moment. Mature's income — if you want to call it that — was suddenly curtailed, and the actor with whom he had been living got a job in Hollywood. This actor's name, by the way, was Robert Preston.

Three paths now were open to Mature. He could: 1) get a commercial job and quit acting; 2) get a part-time job; 3) reduce living expenses still further and do nothing, live nothing, think nothing, but acting. He walked around the block a few times and came up with his decision. It was No. 3. Next morning he made a modest down payment on a second-hand tent, and moved into his friend's back yard.

Now let us return to the scene in the movie executive's office.

"'Hm!" the executive said again.

He took a deep breath, and continued: "Well, you don't look like a leading man to me. Look at you. Dirty, dusty, wrinkled, soiled — your clothes, your shoes — great heavens, man, look at your shoes! — your hair, face — everything. Impossible!"

Mature was about to explain certain facts of life to the other, but the executive now took two steps forward — gingerly — for a closer look, and dealt the coup de grâce.

THIRD CHOICE FIRST

Victor Mature was broke. He stood at the fork of three paths — all dark. The reason you are reading about him is that he chose the third

by Donald Hough

"We might remedy such things as clothing," he said, "but — your bearing! Why, you look like you were tired out! Dull, weary-looking, lifeless! Your shoulders sag; you — droop. I don't know what our talent scout was thinking of. You don't look like a leading man to me."

Mature didn't even bother to improve his bearing. He stood there, no longer an actor; and when he spoke, there was none of the practiced timbre in his voice.

"Well," he said, "you don't look like a motion-picture executive to me, either. But if I were to invite you to my house I wouldn't greet you by telling you so."

When Mature walked out — which was instantly — he walked like a leading man.

(Before proceeding, it gives me a certain pleasure to report that of the two who took part in that scene in the executive's office, Mr. Mature is the only one still connected with the movies.)

Mature went to the nearest bus line, regardless of expense, and tossed thirty cents to the driver with an air that indicated he had another thirty cents at home. Dirty shirt, suit, shoes, hair, face and all, he rode back to his tent in comfort.

As the final scene opens we see Producer Hal Roach sitting at his desk stroking his chin. He is thinking: he has a hard nut to crack in the proper casting of Lefty, the gangster, in The Housekeeper's Daughter, which he is about to start. He gets up and walks around the room, still thinking. He glances down at a wastebasket. On top of the accumulation is a discarded playbill of the Pasadena Playhouse. He picks it up.

On the cover, in color, is a picture of a superb specimen of manly architecture, clothed in swashbuckling raiment and brandishing a sword. The text below it announces that this is Victor Mature in the Ben Hecht play To Quito and Back.

He hands the playbill to his stenographer. "Send for that fellow," he says.

Traveled in Style

Thus it happened that our friend of the hitchhike came once more to Hollywood—this time by bus, you can bet on that—and he turned in a sound, professional performance in the part of Lefty, his first movie role.

"Thanks," he told Mr. Roach when the job was done; and he started back to Pasadena.

"Wait a minute," Mr. Roach said. (While The Housekeeper's Daughter was being shot, another problem had come up. This one was about the male lead for One Million B.C., a fantastic, imaginative picture featuring cave men and prehistoric monsters.) "I want you," Mr. Roach went on, "to take a test."

Mature took the test, and forthwith was cast in the lead of the new picture. Although One Million B.C. made Mature technically a leading man, he threw it out as such because it was a pantomime role. He was in danger of being typed, in his prehistoric clothing, as one of the finest torsos ever screened, a good pantomime performer and an unbelievably handsome fellow. So he went to Mr. Roach and asked for a chance to play a legitimate leading role.

And he hit Mr. Roach when that producer was in another of his quandaries. This time it was about the part of Daniel Marvin, leading role in Captain Caution. This was a part that half the younger leading men in Hollywood were angling for.

Mature got it, and his work in the picture brought him a long-term contract from Roach.

But Captain Caution was a costume piece, and it had not brought Victor Mature into the ranks he was shooting for. You're not really a leading man in the movies until you've played a "straight" lead. That is, until you are just yourself, in a common suit of clothes.

This chance came in the recently released No, No, Nanette, in which Mature teams up with the British star, Anna Neagle.

Nanette was made by RKO studios, which borrowed Mature for the part. Upon its completion the studio made a deal with Roach to share the young actor's time. And when the studios start dickering for your services, you've arrived, in Hollywood.

In closing this history, let's go back to One Million B.C. It had its premiere in Louisville, Kentucky, Mature's home town. He made a personal appearance there, and the home folk turned out in numbers sufficient to break the house record. He was made mayor of the town for a day — without question the most inefficient and handsomest mayor Louisville ever had seen.

Being made mayor of the home town for a day cannot be considered as symbolic of reaching the pinnacle of the theatrical profession, but it's a thrill, just the same. One of those thrills that you like to see come to a hard-working, regular sort of guy.

He knew perfectly too that the standard entertainment offered by Indian princes to their guests was the thrill of the hunt in nearby jungles. But there are many difficulties that have to be tactfully avoided. The tracking down of a good kill means days of ceaseless stalking. Guests cannot be subjected to such a hardship. To avoid this waste of time, the animals are captured alive and then released when the occasion warrants it. Comes a fatal morning and the chosen one is released in the jungle. By a happy coincidence, the hunters are in the exact neighborhood.

Walking round, he speculated on the eminence of the new guest at the big house. He had his own infallible way of gauging their importance. Burrah Sahibs, "Big Gentlemen," were given the finest animals in the compound. On the other hand, Chota Sahibs, "Little Gentlemen," were given lesser animals in accordance with their positions in the social hierarchy. Once a minor jockey triumphantly slew a leopard in the last stages of rheumatic senility.

So the panther was to be released! Slowly Sundra Lal made a rare decision

He would know for sure when the veterinarian arrived. That was always his first clue. The evening before the hunt the veterinarian would be on hand to dope the beast selected for the morrow's sport. This was necessary because the animals were prone to take to the jungle when they were set at large, and because they exhibited an unholy tendency to maul the hunters when they were overtaken.

It became doubly necessary in the case of burrah sahibs. Burrah sahibs had the doubtful pleasure of coming face to face with the largest and fiercest members of Sundra Lal's animal kingdom. Supposing the burrah sahib's gun misfired? Supposing the burrah sahib got hurt? Where then would be Oriental hospitality?

Along one wall of the Hindu's hut was a row of halters, Sundra Lal's relics of former favorites. The place for Barlow's collar was already there and waiting. The largest of these reminders had belonged to Rana, a tigress from the Punjab. There was a beast, the biggest captive Sundra Lal had ever held. She had been shot by a most distinguished guest, and Sundra Lal had watched the flame spout from the hunter's rifle. The hunter's face had been aglow with pride and pleasure, and Sundra Lal felt his flesh tingle as he thought of Rana coming to life in some sudden magic way; of her implacable lunge toward the burrah sahib; of the florid triumph draining away from the burrah sahib's face forever.

But things don't happen that way.

When the veterinarian came, he made straight for Barlow's cage. He was a Bengali, hailing from the larger world of dashing poloponies and caparisoned elephants. Sundra Lal's warm brown eyes moistened as he watched the veterinarian wrap a capsule, as large as a pea-hen's egg, in a piece of meat. He threw it in at Barlow and Barlow ate it eagerly.

The tears leaked down Sundra Lal's cheeks as he watched the slow decomposition of the alert and glossy body. Barlow crumpled forward on his knees; a glaze filmed over the hot red eyes; the murderous claws splayed out in helpless surrender.

But the veterinarian was taking no chances. He prodded the heaving flanks for ten minutes before he ventured into the cage. Even then he stepped cautiously before plunging a needle far in under the left foreleg.

It seemed to Sundra Lal that the ride in the bullock cart was the ultimate degradation that could be imposed on his favorite. In the gray dawn he slid Barlow from the cart in a clearing in the jungle. In half an hour Barlow's head would begin to clear, but for many more hours he would be held by a profound and unconquerable lethargy. Before that mist lifted, he would be dead.

SUNDRA LAL sped away to where the hunt was forming on the palace lawns. He wanted a glimpse at this most honored of burrah sahibs. With a start Sundra Lal recognized the burrah sahib. He had seen him before. Barlow indeed was honored. Here was the hunter who had shot Rana.

The hunt was already in motion, moving majestically toward the jungle. First the two state elephants bearing His Highness the Prince and the burrah sahib. Then a small host of attendants and admirers. Sundra Lal hastened to the extreme rear.

Soon they could hear the beaters. The beaters had gone ahead hours ago. Their purpose was to make a lot of noise and drive everything on to the approaching guns.

They came on Barlow abruptly, warned of his presence by the sudden trumpeting of the elephants. Barlow came out slowly, screaming defiance, looking as if he were about to spring.

The burrah sahib whipped his fine rifle to his shoulder. Courteously, the prince held his fire. The burrah sahib shot neatly and expertly, in order not to mar the beautiful skin.

Sundra Lal slipped round in front of the attendants. He threw a baleful glance at the burrah sahib before his eyes settled ruefully on Barlow. He looked back once, before he ducked away into the trees, his face aflame with an odd, curious satisfaction.

The two men climbed down from the howdahs. The burrah sahib was a fat, red-faced man in a white suit. Both walked slowly forward, their guns at the ready. The attendants and the admirers gathered in a tightening ring. Several cameras clicked for the triumphant record.

The chattering tapered off into an enormous silence. Everyone was staring at Barlow. The prince's face was hot and angry. The burrah sahib's hot, angry and slightly foolish. The outsiders crowded in.

Maybe the panther wasn't dead after all?

Barlow was dead all right. But Sundra Lal had seen to it that Barlow should avenge himself, and Rana, and all the others that had gone before — for Barlow still had his collar on.

sion of it to wipe out the greatest fifth columnists of them all — poverty, unemployment and disease. Here is an "axis" triumvirate which makes silent, unceasing war on our people, inflicting losses in disability and premature deaths estimated at ten billion dollars a year.

The democracy-baiters like to argue that an excessive standard of material well-being has softened our morale. Yet about half of the physical defects that disqualify young men for armed service trace back, as one physician put it, to "defects in the family income." Government and private surveys show that a large proportion of our population, perhaps a third, receives incomes that are not sufficient to maintain a minimum standard of healthy living. Among families with incomes of under $1,000, disease takes a far greater toll in death and disability than among the rest of the population. Instead of bemoaning an imaginary excess of material well-being, our democratic responsibility is to spread the minimum essentials of healthy living to all Americans.

These are times to try men's bodies as well as their souls. Physical stamina is required of our civilian population as well as of the men we are now training in arms. Industry is working under high pressure and the movement of large bodies of men from one part of the country to another demands a healthy capacity for physical readjustment. The rapidity and efficiency of our whole preparedness effort depends ultimately on the health of our general population.

Democracy's Purpose

That is why the purpose of any effective long-range preparedness plan for the United States must coincide with the purpose of democracy itself: a fuller, richer life for all Americans, regardless of class, race or creed. Democracy hasn't made us soft. Far from it, it's given us the spiritual and material strength we need to build a strong defense. We have our handicaps, but they are those of youth rather than of decadence. And with all our faults, the reassuring fact remains that we can call on more intelligence, more skill and more sheer physical brawn than any other government in the world

Statistics are lacking on the comparative health and morale of American man power as against the degree in which these qualities are found in the man power of other great nations. There are no statistics whatsoever on patriotism, no Gallup polls on esprit de corps. But in making comparisons, we don't have to depend on polls and surveys. We have the evidence of everyday common sense upon which to base our conclusions.

Fascism's Inferiority Complex

MEN in the mass behave pretty much like individual men, and they can be judged by the same standards. When you meet a blustering, pretentious, overaggressive person in business or in society, you try to find out the flaw or weakness he's trying to cover up. You say he's got an "inferiority complex." Fascism is the same thing on a national scale. Germany and Italy came out worst in the last war and they have never recovered from the drain on their men, money and morale. Behind their tanks and guns and planes lies an "inner weakness" that they would have us suspect in ourselves.

Doubting Americans talk much of the "tougher products of the fascist education." But the toughness of the average German or Italian as against the average Englishman has yet to be proved. On the basis of the war, the odds are all in favor of the Englishman. But I would bet on democratic peoples anyhow - on the basis of plain common sense. For I have yet to learn of a strong and enlightened people submitting for long to dictatorship. Nor has democracy ever flourished among the weak and disorganized. It takes a lot of the best qualities of humanity to make democracy possible at all. We have every reason to look upon our own trust in democracy as a barometer of our fitness to defend this country.

I saw how average young Americans stood up under the hardships of the last war. There was no question of "democratic softness" then. Lack of preparedness for the war meant that many of them had to go into battle without adequate training. But what they lacked in experience, they made up for in courage. They could take it.

Average Americans today can still take it... better than ever, if the need arises, because they have finally taken to heart the lesson of the last war—the need 'for preparedness. At this moment, under the Selective Service Act, they are getting the training their fathers lacked. A great democratic army is in the process of building. By March 5, approximately 1,000,000 soldiers will be under arms. The young men being drafted for this army are as fine, potentially, as any American fighters have ever been.

players usually shoot merely to score, while on land the play is made more complicated by its emphasis on shooting to get your opponent's disks into the minus section, called the "kitchen." Many involved shots are called for in playing one disk off another or several others, requiring a nice calculation of angles. Anyone who thinks it an easy matter to become proficient at this has only to try it to be disillusioned.

The game is a lively one, with players giving sharp cries of glee at good shots, warnings about the positions of the disks, and plentiful advice as to what to do next. Strictly, such advice is against the rules, and is not tolerated in tournament play; but during casual contests "kibitzing" is so much fun that the letter of the law seldom holds sway.

Umpires officiating at the National Championships are in just as hot a spot as they are in most other sports. Surrounded by packed and critical stands, they have to know their stuff. Officials go through a period of training for their jobs which, though not remunerative, gives them the distinction of having certificates of proficiency issued to them to establish their

The singles version of shuffleboard is called the "Walking Game" because the contestants walk back and forth from one end of the court to the other. Recently a proposal was made to allow singles players to remain at one end and shoot the whole game from there, the disks being shoved back to them as required. This was defeated by the old folks as being too much of a lazy man's proposition.

To make the sport still harder, some of the more expert shufflers play the "Combination Game," in which it is necessary, in order to score, to play all shots with a combination, or carom, shot off another disk. Pure high jinks is the "Sitting-down Game," in which shuffleboard is played while sitting in chairs. The oldsters don't do this to take it easy, but for the sake of laughing at each other and at the awkward plays made from this position. But invalids confined to wheel chairs play this game seriously.

With the various prizes for local, state and national competitions in shuffleboard, the young people aren't the only ones these days who can capture a silver cup to put up on the mantel. Mama and Papa, together with Granny and Gramps, triumphantly bring home cups of their own if they can reach the difficult status of being first-rate shufflers.

Even if they can't, they don't care so much. They have a game which, with its mild physical action, is suited to them. The soft hiss of shuffleboard disks sliding down the courts, the sharp click of plaque hitting plaque, is happy music to the ears of our older folk all over the country today.

glared at the mallet, hurled it into the half acre of expensive flowers, and kicked a camellia. They saw him later on the terrace of the Esplanade Club, drinking the more expensive combinations of rum and lime juice, and laughing with - or at - the golden sons and daughters of bathtub factories and real estate. They saw him drive past them in a converted mountain locomotive. He was driving too fast, and his face was tense. "He's getting about as much fun out of retiring as Walter Winchell would," sighed Matt.

Then Millie accidentally met him on the beach. Matt has always been certain that she managed the accident.

During their Florida stay, Millie had taken to collecting sea shells, which are so distinguished a feature of Florida that all the better-conducted hotels send out a respectable colored man at dawn every morning to dump a bushel of new ones on the beach. She was a chronic collector, anyway. In her day she had collected razor blades autographed (in acid) by Hollywood male stars, book matches, trolley-car transfers, prohibition gin labels, false mustaches worn by Orson Welles, and soda-pop labels. But no category of junk had ever delighted her so much as the sea shells. Her collection was spread over the windowsills, the top of the ice box, and the tops of their trunks, and once Matt found one in his can of cold cream in their dressing room.

HIMSELF, Matt did not hold with collecting. He sat all this afternoon on the porch, reading Variety and glancing far down the beach where, in a bathing suit which she had worn in a seashore number in the chorus in 1906, Millie prowled and dug and pounced. Presently she had wandered out of sight.

When she came back she confessed, "I met him on the beach. Evan!"

"Huh! Did he know about it?" "Well, not much, I guess. He was pretty distant. It was more than five minutes before we were calling each other 'Millie' and 'Evan'. But he said maybe some night he'd drop in at our dressing room. And I gave him the sweetest shell, and he smiled real sweet and said he'd send it to his sister."

"Well now, that certainly shows he was interested."

"Maybe, but I don't know. He hasn't got any sister."

In the next fortnight Evan did not keep the promise to see them, on stage or off, and during that time the major season at Splendid Springs was opened by the arrival of the Ten-

Mr. Joseph Tenbrink, manufacturer of the Tenbrink car, was that uncommon thing, a successful Inca of industry who was also of ancient lineage. He knew what his grandfathers' first names were, and his family had been socially accepted in the city of Zenith ever since 1890. His daughter, the lissome and high-diving and lovely Miss Lelia Tenbrink, was as proud as the daughter of a Russian grand

When the Tenbrinks opened their forty-room bungalow, Pecan Towers, all the cafes in Splendid Springs got out the caviar and the absinthe, the Esplanade Club began a series of Ragamuffin Balls and Ancient Assyrian Balls, Elsa Maxwell arrived, and aged old men who till now had pitched horseshoes and worn visible suspenders, put on palm-beach suits and played contract.

Pecan Towers was next to Evan's mansion. Perhaps Evan and Lelia met among the camellias; perhaps, brushing through Dun & Bradstreet, he discovered her there. Anyway, looking down from the low stage, on which they were capering, Matt and Millie suddenly discovered the two of them, with Lelia's mother, at a table in the Silver-Plaza Grill.

Evan was paying no attention to Millie's monologue. He was quietly holding Lelia's hand and looking into the eyes of Mrs. Tenbrink. All evening he ignored every one save the Tenbrinks, and in a methodical way drank too many gin fizzes.

Driving home to their shack, Matt fumed: "Yuh, that would happen. Evan, the one man the country needs on the stage, will marry that strip of cellophane and go live in Zenith and model for radiator mascots!"

"Maybe we can coax him back to the show business, dearie!"

"Perhaps, if we could just lure him into the dressing room, maybe he'd get the disease again," brooded Matt.

Not for a week did Evan and Lelia return to the Silver-Plaza Grill, and in that time Matt and Millie read of them as driving speedboats, fishing for tarpon, dancing all night at the Esplanade. When they appeared again, it seemed to Matt that a sick indolence had spread through the young man like a fungus. He was softly whispering to Lelia and stroking her lily wrist all through Millie's swing versions of the Declaration of Independence and the Seaboard Airline timetable.

DURING his rendition of Old Time Melodies Streamlined, Matt skipped down from the stage and ambled among the tables. He stopped beside Evan and said timidly, "Mr. Wycoff, the wife and I would be flattered if you would drop into our dressing room some night."

Lelia looked at him like a dead silver fish. Evan looked startled, but he said courteously enough, "Oh oh - thanks. Be ver' happy to. Splendid act, Mr. Uh - '

For three nights he did not come back, and Matt and Millie mourned their lost child. Then, just as they were going, he was there.

"Just came back for a moment, Millie," said Evan, in a clipped Berkeley Square voice faintly tinged with Jack Benny. "I did want to tell you how extraordinarily I think you're doing your act, with this audience that never stops talking." (Of whom Mr. Evan Wycoff and Miss Lelia Tenbrink had been among the worst.) "And I must say you have a very nice dressing room." He looked hungrily at lining pencils and spirit gum and Millie's rabbit's-foot powder puff.

She stared at him. Suddenly, while Matt shook his head, she gushed: "Look, Evan, ain't you a little sick of all these flossy millionaires, where there isn't one single person remembers when it was that the Singing McSorleys played the Poli Circuit? Why don't you get Miss Tenbrink and the two of you come out for a picnic Sunday noon, at our shack on the island?"

Evan hesitated. "Right. We'll do it. Twelve next Sunday? Which island is it?"

"Mudfish Island."

"Oh, yes, of course. The historical name was L'Ile des Onze Hommes (Continued on page 12)

Is Your Loveliness Hidden By "MOUSEY" HAIR?

Tests Against Finest Soaps Prove Drene Reveals Up To 33% MORE LUSTRE IN YOUR HAIR'

YOUR hair should highlight and emphasize your personality and charm. Don't let it appear drab and uninteresting. That dull "mousey" look may be due to the shampoo you're using. Soap, or liquid soap shampoos, often give hair that "mousey" look. Soap, you see, combines with minerals in water to form "bathtub ring"—a film that hides the loveliness and lustre of your hair. If this film is veiling your personality, by all means try Drene the next time you shampoo your hair.

this did after eight hours on aching feet; she had done it too long herself not to know. Boxes of crackers stowed away in a certain bureau drawer, milk and fruit on the windowsill in cool weather, stockings and brassieres and handkerchiefs to be washed out, hung to dry on a chair at night; pressing to be done on a thin bath towel spread on the table. Things might become even worse for Molly Cade with the store taking on more and more college girls, so that one like Molly had not only less chance of "working up" but of hanging on at all. She thought dully, "I myself have been there too long to be fired - I hope I have!"

"No," she repeated, "it isn't enough. Someday young Farr'll just stop passing our counter. I've seen it happen. He'll just stop telephoning." She saw Molly catch back a sob. "It'll be because you'll say 'No' to what's on his mind. I trust you'll say 'No'." Miss Price looked sharply at little Molly Cade. "Or if you don't, it'll be over in a week, a month; he'll go back to his kind when he's through playing. You'll have lost your Harry for good. A room like this for the rest of your life if you're lucky, or -" wistfulness swept over the older woman - "or a good, decent boy like Harry to give you a little home of your own, taking care of you -"

Molly whispered, "I love Guy."
"Did he ever say he loved you? Did he ever promise anything?"

"Oh, no, no! But — '

"You're dazzled. Dazzled by his big car and because he's the owner's son."

"I'd love him if he didn't have anything in the world!"

Miss Price got up. She smoothed her cuffs that would have to be washed and ironed tonight. She didn't want to look now at Molly. "I'm sorry for you," she said at last. "You just have to make the best of things in this life. And when you learn how right I am, I'll be sorrier still."

When she had gone, little Molly Cade tried to stop crying. She lay there on the tumbled bed, frightened and miserable, trying not to believe all Miss Price had said, listening for the telephone to ring down the murky hall, and the landlady calling, "For you, Molly!" Twice she heard the bell. Twice she was a tight crisp of hope. Twice the call was for someone else. He hadn't called since Monday. Was it over, then?

Molly knew how, all these months, she had put expectation from her. When she and Guy had driven down dark or moonstruck roads, that was all that counted; the miracle of more, of permanency, didn't enter in. She didn't believe in miracles.

But there on the bed she kept feeling Guy's shoulder against hers. Oh, she knew the Farrs didn't marry the Mollys. If she'd gone to Miss Somebody's school, like the Farnsworth girl, if she'd had a debut, it might have been different. She didn't blame Guy; maybe the world had to be like this. She kept thinking of his gay laugh, and the way he'd say, "We only live once."

Only, she kept telling herself, she hadn't thought it would all be over so soon.

Long after nine o'clock, Molly Cade got up from the rumpled bed. She stood there by the window, open but over her. It seemed hours before the landlady called, "For you, Molly!" She still held the stocking clutched to her young breast as she ran down the stairs. She had to lean against the wall when she said, "Hello."

"Hello, Molly; this is Harry."

"What's the matter? Are you there?"

"I - yes, I'm here."

"Something wrong with the line, I guess. I can hardly hear you."

"Well, say — look, Molly; doing anything?"

"No, I — that is —"

"Just took a chance on calling you, Molly. I mean, well lately, seems as if you're never there." There was a little silence, then: "How's about having a soda or something if I come around? Cool you off."

She just stood there at the telephone.

"Molly? Are you there?"

"Yes."
"Did you hear me? If

"Did you hear me? If I came around we could maybe have a bus ride."

She said, "All right." Well, why not? "A good, decent boy," Miss Price had said, "who means right by you and who'll give you a nice little home—"

It seemed as if she could never get up to her room. She did, though. She powdered, dragged a comb through her curly hair, and crept into the three ninety-eight cotton that Guy had said made her look ten years old. After a while she was sitting at a drugstore counter with its sweetish scent of melted cream and its hot, tired clerks.

In the mirror, between signs suggesting drinks of ambrosial coolness, she could see herself and Harry. He wore no tie; his shirt was open at the collar, showing his strong young neck; he'd put his coat on the stool next to him.

"Through?" Harry asked. "Look, you left half in your glass."

"I don't want any more."

Over on Fifth Avenue, bus after bus passed them, upper decks crowded. "Gosh." Harry shifted his coat from one arm to another. "Guess everyone had our same idea of getting cooled off. Let's walk up to Central Park."

Up there bench after bench was filled. Young people, in twos mostly, looked up fleetingly as they came along or, concerned with each other, didn't look at all. Here and there an old man tried to read a newspaper under a wavering street lamp. Women like Miss Price sat alone, with weary knees apart, sleazy skirts making little hammocks of their laps, hating to think of airless rooms.

"Here!" Harry darted ahead as a pair got up. "What a break, eh, Molly?" He sighed as she dropped down beside him. The bench was a bit off the path, almost surrounded by bushes. It was like being in a dark, green room, Molly thought, with a high blue ceiling. Where was Guy this minute? What was he doing? Were there trees at Bar Harbor, or only

LEARN THESE FACTS ABOUT CORNS

Felt pad(C)helps relieve pain by removing pressure. Blue-Jay medication (D) acts on corn.

In a few days corn is gently loosened by the medication so it may be lifted right out.

CLINICAL tests show that corns are caused by pressure and friction, become imbedded in your toe, press against sensitive nerves.

Old-fashioned home paring only affects the surface, so when corns hurt, try Blue-Jay Corn Plasters—an easy-to-use, sensible treatment that assures quick relief. They first help relieve pain by lifting off pressure, then gently loosen the corn so in a few days it may be lifted out. (Stubborn cases may require more than one application.)

Blue-Jay costs very little—only a few cents to treat each corn—at all leading drug counters.

Chacun Avec Une Barbe Bleu Qui Etaient Tués Mais Tous par L'Illustre Jean Lafitte, wasn't it?" said Evan.

"Yuh, sure, that's the correct name. Not many know it," said Matt. "We'll be there."

Millie explained it all to Matt on their way home: "No, I'm right, dearie. Once Evan gets a chance to sit around in his undershirt and spit on the sand and smell of garlic, he'll be sick of his castle. But that fluff Lelia will think we're all three of us vulgar, and boy will unmeet girl, and Evan will get back to the stage, where he belongs."

"You do-gooder! When do you take up the cause of the share croppers?" protested Matt. "That's how it always goes when an actor gets stuck with a well-meaning wife. If I hadn't married you — I mean, if you hadn't married me, when I wasn't looking — I might be playing Ibsen with Eva LeGallienne now."

"Do you think Evan would like his potatoes French-fried?" said Millie. In dance routines, learning parts, and timing, Matt was clearly her superior, but when the terrible Millie set out to entertain, he was awed and retiring. She collected from the neighbors in beach shacks and parked trailers some sixteen china plates, three silver platters, a cut-glass punch bowl, a bouquet of artificial tiger lilies, seven assorted thermos bottles, and a phonograph. On Saturday afternoon she practically filled the back of the station wagon with mysteries from the grocery and fish shops and butcher shops and liquor stores. Yet on Sunday morning she was mystifyingly cooking nothing at all. "You'll see what you'll get when you get it," she snapped at Matt.

She had put on her most stained slacks and sweater, and she would not let him wear his new linen suit. "Make up like Charles Laughton as a beach-comber," she commanded. It worried him, who was the most hospitable of little men, and he felt shy and shabby as Lelia Tenbrink, in an open Versailles Convertible (she was much too rich to drive a Tenbrink), drove up with Evan on Sunday.

Evan was right for a Florida picnic, in a jersey, wide blue sailor trousers, and sandals, but Miss Lelia was apparently attending a 1900 garden party.

She had on a flower-basket hat, a muslin frock with sprigs of lilac and carried a long-handled parasol. She looked at the Carnivals' porch—somewhat littered with bicycle tires, posters of the Capering Carnivals, bones for the dog, muddy bath towels, Millie's collection of shells—with suspicion and silence.

Evan rejoiced: "This is excellent! It's like the Pierrots on the Sussex beach — I was a Pierrot all one summer, in black-face, and I sang a lush song of my own composition about my Ole Black Mammy from Minneapolis, which I thought was a Southern village. And all this beach without a single bellboy or autograph hunter polluting it!"

"Take your sandals off and twiddle your toes in the sand, Evan. It's a new cure for whatever ails you," said Matt. "And how about you, Miss Tenbrink?"

"Thanks, no. I'd hate to be cured of any of the vices that I've acquired with so much effort. And Evan is so consistently gentlemanly that he'd be shocked by seeing bare toes."

"OH, QUITE!" said Evan, and the soft hearts of Matt and Millie were cheered by the look of irritation between the two sprigs.

Millie commanded, "Keep your sandals on, Evan. I want you to help me in the kitchen. I know you did alot of touring in the provinces when you were a kid, and you must know how to make a swell salad, and cook for hungry actors like nobody's business. It'll bring back the good old days."

Then the catastrophe.

Evan's voice was gentle, but a rose hedge can shut you out as well as a barbed-wire fence. "Charming of you to think so, but I can't cook, and I detest salad, and the good old days were atrocious, and I hate the stage—except for old darlings like you."

Lelia turned human as she cried, "Mrs. Carnival! Won't you let me do it? I'm the best cook in Zenith. I took honors at M'sieu Taragon-Ecrivisse's cooking school, and the only one of our houses that I can stand is a shack my brother and I own in Ontario."

MILLIE looked with distrust at Lelia's frail floweriness. "Lend me an extra pair of slacks, will you, and a sweater, or one of Mr. Carnival's shirts or something, and I'll show you how to mix a salad dressing. Chives and marjoram, that's the trick!"

"I haven't got any," sniffed Millie.
"I have! In the car! Also a magnum of champagne!"

"Champagne!" said Matt. Then he tried to be stern again, and disapproving. Evan must be lured from Lelia's scented languor. But Millie was treacherously won over. She looked Plaza. Everybody would think I was forcing myself in there, unless it were known that I was recommended by troupers like you."

"Swell."

"Now show me how you do that dance step — you know, where you cross the left foot over the right shoulder."

"Like this," cried Matt, the happy professor. He did a beautiful dance step which resembled a serious but drunken man stumbling over a doorsill and trying to catch himself.

Evan Wycoff re-entered to find the oysters cold and the champagne warm, as Lelia and Matt reversed in a tricky dance. They stopped and looked guilty.

Evan smiled and said, "You make me hungry to dance again. But Lelia, I'd do the steps like this."

He seized the squealing Millie, and on that porch on Mudfish Island was seen such an exhibition of twisting, eccentric grace as would have lifted any audience on Broadway out of their seats. Lelia fried some more oysters, and they sat down to a picnic dinner like three happy maniacs and a misanthrope. The latter was Mr. Evan Wycoff.

"Mr. and Mrs. Carnival want you to go back to the stage, Evan," bubbled Lelia. "I agree! Write a play for you and me to appear in. You see now I can do stage dancing."

Evan suggested with deadly amiability, "There are many moments on the stage, pet, when dancing isn't quite enough. I don't remember that Portia has ever been played as a jitterbug. I'm so old-fashioned, though. Perhaps nowadays they're playing a swing version of Othello under the title of Hop Up the Homicide."

"Evan!"

"Yes, pet."

"You write a play and I'll back it."

Evan rose and murmured as sweetly as a suckling dove, "That would be the final curtain! An amateur lady backer to give the company orders, and an amateur leading lady to carry them out. No, my Lelia, you remain among the sweet-scented azaleas, a maiden frail as they, in fact considerably frailer, and stay to hell off the stage — as I now certainly shall. Thank you, Matt and Millie. We must — uh — have lunch together some day."

Afterward Matt fretted, "Do you think we helped any in getting him interested in working again?"

"Well, he did seem real interested in that old photograph of me and my sister in the snow storm in The Two Orphans! My, that was good snow! They don't have snow on the stage like that today. But I do know we've got to help Lelia with her career. She's a real sweet girl."

"LELIA," pontificated Matt, "is a flouch."

"What's a flouch?"
"I don't know. I just thought it up.

But whatever it is, Lelia is a flouch."
"She is not a flouch, and you get your good pants on, Matt Carnival.
We're going in town and talk about her to Herman Beagle."

Like monks and gipsies, good actors keep themselves unspotted by a world of racketeering and pompous politics and box offices. They are innocent as robins. Matt and Millie believed that Mr. Herman Beagle, manager of the Silver-Plaza and of its Grill, would never forgive Lelia Tenbrink for the shame, however little the dear girl's fault it was, of owning the Silver-Plaza, and they were surprised that he listened so sympathetically to their praise of Lelia as a coming night-club star.

"I always like to give the kids a chance. I'll try to find time and make an appointment with Lelia," said Mr. Beagle, with a benevolence which they had never noticed in him before.

Two weeks later, with the most opulent audience the Grill had ever seen, Miss Lelia Tenbrink made her debut in the floor show. In announcing her, Mr. Beagle made it clear that she was

Fred Allen gives us a doughnut script complete with recipes

by Grace Turner

RED ALLEN'S millions of admirers would like to see him do more movies like his successful "Thanks a Million," "Sally, Irene and Mary," and "Love Thy Neighbor." But this laugh-wizard with the dead-pan face is too busy making Americans laugh in front of their radios. He works about fourteen hours a day to perfect each week's program. True, even at that, it is not just a one-man job. Scouts search the countryside, interviewing odd people with still odder ways of earning a living - an air-traffic policeman, a smokewatcher whose job keeps him standing on the roof of a tallest building to scan the horizon and detect any other building that puffs out into the city air more than its allotted ratio of smoke, or a sausage-stuffer who's been stuffing away for more than thirty years.

Life-histories, clever comments, amusing incidents, new jokes, bright ideas - all these, also, are assembled from many sources partly by Fred's assistants. But it. is he alone who selects and rejects, whittles down this, builds up that, whips the many ingredients into a whole, writes the humanly-interesting, genuinely humorous script, and rehearses and rehearses and rehearses.

Born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, orphaned at an early age, brought up by an aunt, sent out to work for a living at fourteen, Fred Allen found his way to the stage via the Boston Public Library. It was there he came across a book on juggling, studied it, practiced what it taught, and proclaimed himself a juggler who could also provide gags to accompany the juggling, and thereafter bluffed and fought his way into vaudeville.

Rich and successful today, and married to the lovely Portland Hoffa whose mere name he pronounces with affection, Fred remembers kindly the hard days and the little vaudeville people he met as he trouped over Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, Honolulu, and from coast to coast and Canadian border to Mexican Gulf in the United States.

Those were the days when Fred acquired a permanent affection for doughnuts. "They were a necessity at first," he says, "there wasn't much I could afford and doughnuts were not to the right places, a hungry juggler with almost empty pockets could fill up, for a nickel, on a couple of doughnuts and a cup of coffee. Then somewhat later, when the slightly more prosperous trouper stepped off a train at six A.M. in some back-woods town, the only thing he'd feel safe in eating was a doughnut - or so Fred says. "Thus doughnuts and prunes were the great morning dish; there's not much you can do to corrupt a prune, either,"

"I know many actors whose stomachs shrank to a doughnut," Fred continues. "In later life they did well and had only doughnut-sized digestive tracts."

Once started, Fred runs circles around a doughnut, recalling the full doughnut crocks that were a standby in Boston in even a poor boy's household, and the legend about Captain Gregory Hansen who invented the hole in the doughnut. "That was a remarkable stride. Why, that man must have been crazy about ventilation and he foresaw air-conditioning; but it's good he knew when to stop or he might have done away with the entire doughnut," says the wisecracking Fred, who has actually, moreover, thought out a couple of recipes using doughnuts. We give them later.

"But I am not experienced at the skillet," Fred adds. "It is Portland who does clever things with food in our house. It's a hobby of hers. Not long ago she went to Picard's - a place where they give lessons to professional cooks. Unfortunately, there are only two of us and so she doesn't get a chance to spread herself as she might with her cooking. But she has some swell recipes for things she makes for me sometimes - there's her white clam sauce for spaghetti, for instance. She will give you that recipe, if you like."

Definitely, yes - we should like that recipe for our readers. In addition we give them recipes for Fred's two doughnut dishes: a doughnut creole fluff, and a doughnut brown Betty. We also add our own recipe for mulled cider which, when served with doughnuts in their natural form, makes excellent refreshments for a winter party.

White Clam Sauce

2 tablespoons olive oil

1/2 garlic clove, peeled and minced 10 cherrystone clams (minced) and

(or 1/3 cup canned minced clams) 1/2 teaspoon minced parsley Salt and pepper

Heat olive oil. Sauté garlic until golden brown. Add remaining ingredients and simmer 5 minutes. Serve with cooked spaghetti. Approximate vield: 1 portion.

Mulled Cider

34 cup firmly packed brown sugar

1/4 teaspoon salt 1 teaspoon cloves

1 teaspoon allspice 3 sticks cinnamon

Few grains nutmeg

2 quarts sweet cider

Thoroughly mix brown sugar, salt and spices; add to sweet cider and simmer for 10 minutes; strain through cheesecloth and reheat. Then serve it steaming hot in earthen mugs, using long cinnamon sticks for "muddlers." Approximate yield: eight por-

Doughnut Creole Fluff

1.cup heavy cream 1/4 cup dark molasses Few grains salt 1/4 teaspoon powdered cloves

1/6 teaspoon cinnamon 8 canned spiced apricots

1/2 cup chopped walnuts

Whip cream. Combine molasses, salt and spices and fold into whipped cream. Place a spiced apricot in the center of each doughnut. Top generously with the whipped cream mixture. Sprinkle with chopped walnuts. Yield: 8 por-

ADULTS CALL IT PLAY

But to children, play is serious business — an experiment in life and a great educator

by Jessie Stanton

Director of the Cooperative School for Student Teachers, New York City

NE morning, four-year-old Mary struggled across our roof playground with a load of boards, finally calling out: "If somebody doesn't help me, I might not do something." The nursery school teacher called to two little boys and asked if they'd like to help Mary. Soon the three children had placed the boards across the open side of a packing case and the house was ready for furniture.

They carried wooden blocks and made chairs, they used a small barrel for a stove, they filled a pail with pebbles and began cooking dinner. Conversation was brisk. "We're working hard, aren't we?" "Now I must sweep." "Always the mama washes the dishes."

Play is the child's way of learning. These children were reliving experiences of family life. These are the two elements in the educational process - having experiences and learning from them.

How difficult it is to give children these opportunities nowadays, in the midst of our complex modern civilization with its radiators, elevators, automobiles, telephones, victrolas, radios, etc. Children need space and leisure and quiet, plenty of play materials, and an understanding adult to help them when necessary. They need a place where they can experiment - where they can play out their experiences and begin to understand them better. But modern houses and apartments have less and less space, play materials are expensive - adults are often tired and hurried.

The nursery school provides ideal conditions for children's play - the out-of-doors, big hollow blocks, boxes,

There are long periods for play, so back of her. "Molly." "What, Harry?"

"You're sweet, you know that?" She felt his arm, strong and protecting, and then his hand was cupping her shoulder. Was Harry feeling about her as she was about Guy? "I guess people like us belong together," Molly told herself. "When people are right with you, you ought to be grateful and nice too." Suddenly she wanted Harry's arms to hold her safely.

"Molly." "Yes, Harry?"

"You - well, listen: you sort of like me, don't you?"

"I — yes." "Well, I do too. Like you, I mean. Well gosh, Molly, it's more than that. guess you maybe know, the way I been dating you and all. I'm crazy about you, Molly." She sat perfectly still. His arm tightened. Harry didn't play squash at clubs, but he went to the Y.M.C.A. twice a week.

'MOLLY, we get along good, don't we? And I, like I said, I'm plain crazy about you. I - I — what d'you say? We, I mean, well, why not?"

Well, why not? "I'll forget," she told herself fiercely. "I'll make myself forget Guy; that was something that happened and is done." Aloud she said, "Yes, Harry. I — I'll try so hard to be a good wife."

"Molly - "

"In a little place of our own, it'd be safe, oh, wonderful and safe! Wouldn't it, Harry? I could learn to cook and — why, till we got started "Well, listen, Molly."

"Well, you see it's this way. I wasn't exactly talking wedding bells." "Not - then what? What?"

He said tentatively, "Be sweet to me, baby. We only live once."

When she understood him, she wanted to die. She heard his mumbled persistences: "I haven't enough dough to really marry." Then she struggled from him and was running down the path, leaving him sprawled on the bench. One man hadn't enough to marry and the other had too much! "So what becomes of me?" little

"I just want an Ajax soap wrapper — I'm entering a contest!"

Molly Cade sobbed heartbrokenly.

Out on the avenue she walked dizzilý on. "The poor but honest working boy," she thought, and began to laugh and laugh. Something down inside just broke; there was hardly any difference between her laughter and her tears.

WHEN she got in front of her place she stood there, wondering if she could make those three flights of stairs. There were the eight stone steps up from the sidewalk to the front door besides. She stood there, hanging onto the rusty iron rail and then she realized that someone had risen from the top step and was coming down to her. It seemed she couldn't breathe.

"Guy!"

"I've been waiting for you, Molly." She couldn't say a thing. She just looked up at him.

"I've been - fixing things. I was at Bar Harbor," Guy Farr said. "You -I - oh, Molly, I want you so!" She drew back.

"Molly, won't you please marry me?"

So when the girl at the glove counter asked Miss Price what Molly Farr had ever done to her, she couldn't say, "She put me in the wrong. She made everything I believe and had told her seem ridiculous." She could only answer, "I'm not of her class." Because you take someone like Miss Price who has nothing but her convictions and she'll hate anyone who proves she's wrong. She'll do it every time. When Miss Price was made section manager, it could never have occurred to her that Molly Farr had anything to do with it; she still couldn't believe that a girl like Molly could influence a Guy Farr.

WALLY'S WAGON

Women Have a System

AKE BULLIS, my helper, got to talkin' with me the other evenin' about New York becomin' the style center of the world - or the center of whatever part of the world is interested in styles at the moment.

I didn't know Jake was conscious of style an' fashion, except in tattooin', of which he has a number of fine examples on him.

Seems Jake's got a sister who runs a dress shop an' he gets the low-down from her. Jake says that it wouldn't be democratic to make every woman wear the same color an' kind of dress all the time. I tell him I wouldn't know a Republican from a Democrat dress but it would sure be monotonous to have all women dressed the same.

"What I can't understand though, Jake," I tell him, "is why we gotta have a style center when we want all the gals to look different. Why not just let 'em dress in whatever somebody in Des Moines or Scranton or Walla Walla thinks up?"

"Wally," Jake answers me, "you don't know women. They all want to look exactly alike only different. Now, to do that they gotta have some one place where they can design dress styles, but make a lot of nice little variations between 'em.

"An' that's really important. Take your Missus. You don't want her to look queer and odd, like maybe a pioneer woman or somebody who just got here from, say, Russia.

"No. You want her to look just as good as Missus Harrison Williams! But you want her to manage it on that ten-spot she had to sulk to get."

"That's right," I agree. "Come to think of it, she ought to have a new hat right now.'

"Sure," says Jake, "an' a new dress, too. It would make her feel better, treat you nicer, an' all. So New York thinks up a swell new wrinkle an' twist -- an' sells one for $98.50. Then in a couple of weeks you can get a million copies at $4.98 per copy. So everybody is in style an' everybody is happy!"

"Jake," I says, "did my wife put you up to this fashion talk?"

"Well, Wally," he says, "she kind of suggested that it wouldn't hurt if I gave you a little workout!"

"Do you want her to look funny?" says Jake not introduced as one of America's richest girls, but as one of the most beautiful nimble-toed maidens in all our fortunate land. With what Matt and Millie considered a fine reticence, Mr. Beagle said nothing at all about her owning the hotel.

As a matter of fact, Lelia was pretty good. She could have gone into the chorus of any of the less important floor shows in New York or Chicago if she had had a little more training and a little better wardrobe. Peeping out, Matt and Millie saw Evan and Mrs. Tenbrink look surprised, look pleased, and applaud Lelia as though she were a real worker. Millie sighed. "Now, whether Evan quits being naughty is just up to Lelia, I guess.'

Miss Lelia Tenbrink was popular in private life. So popular that Matt and Millie could not tell whether it was her private popularity or her public artistry that made her the most applauded entertainer ever to appear at

She was so encored that within a week she was adorning the floor for an hour instead of fifteen minutes. And before her vogue had become anemic, Mr. Beagle started new publicity by generously raising Lelia's take from a hundred to a thousand dollars a week. He made rhetorical history by the phrase: "Her genius has changed Lely from a poor little rich girl to a rich big rich girl." A dozen Florida papers carried a photostat of Lelia's new contract.

She was a changed girl. She no longer came to Matt and Millie for dance instruction; indeed, she was no longer able to remember their names offhand. And she found it impossible to put up with the dressing room next to the Carnivals'. Mr. Beagle came to them whining, "Would you folks mind moving down to the basement for a while? Miss Tenbrink needs your room for her alligator."

Matt started to speak, but Millie kicked him. If they could hold on here for one more month, they would have enough laid by for a summer on their Wisconsin chicken farm, now occupied by a doubtful hobo caretaker.

With her success, Lelia grew swiftly and superbly hammier. It wasn't that she now did all the stock imitations -Mae West, and a drunken finishingschool girl, and an Italian immigrant woman who did everything with a shawl except fish for tarpon with it but that she began to imitate herself. And the Grillians loved it.

What Evan Wycoff thought of this monkey business, Matt and Millie, their soft little hearts jumping, had no idea. He was there every night, watching Lelia with surprising intentness, talking softly to her between acts, but he avoided the Carnivals, and what they now thought of Lelia could be printed only in a novel by a young communist.

"Evan is going to be her husband spending the evening at the club and then coming to her dressing room to decide which Johnny she'll go out with tonight," snarled Matt.

A week later, after the show, Mr. Beagle came in: "Well, I'm real sorry, folks, but the fact is, Lelia's such a draw that I don't see how I can use your act any more after Saturday."

"Does Lelia know about this?" said the appalled Matt.

"Know! She suggested it! She says your old-fashioned stuff spoils her streamlined show."

"Her show!"

"Now, folks, I'm willing to give you the regulation two-weeks' notice, even if there ain't any what you might call legal contract."

"Give us a month's salary or - " "Or what?" snickered Mr. Beagle.

Matt turned to Millie for help, but she had treacherously gone. He tried to think of all the things he might do to Mr. Beagle, but he got no ideas beyond a much too obvious desire to vank off Mr. Beagle's shirt-front in the presence of millions and millions of spectators and demonstrate that under it he wore pink silk underwear. He was still thinking when Millie returned with an elegant and tenderly smiling Evan Wycoff.

"Friend Beagle, it's simply too divine that you're going to give our friends Matt and Millie two months' salary," caroled Evan, in a voice packed with nightingales and New Orleans pralines, and orange-blossom honey, and choir boys at vespers.

"It may be divine, but I ain't going to do it, and Lelia backs me up. She may be a pretty little - '

"Flouch," said Millie.

"-a pretty little flouch-no, no, I don't mean that, I mean a pretty little tramp, but she's got just as clear a head as I have."

"THEN I shall be able to give the newspapers such a charming story," said Evan, "about her owning the place and forcing her way into the show. The columnists will love it."

"Two months' salary?" said Mr. Beagle. "I'll go write out a check."

"No. Money. Tin. Dough." Evan looked happy, for the first time in weeks. Mr. Beagle looked much less happy, but he trotted off for the money, and to Matt and Millie Evan spoke portentously:

"You win, you two. I was sick of the show shop. Of all the critics that say you are finished, and all the women who yearn over you at parties and say you're a god. And dressing rooms with too little air and press agents with too much. But I've been devoting myself these days to a study of amateurs in the lovely person of Miss Tenbrink. I realize that the only way to save the stage from their superb self-confidence is for professionals like me to hog the show. I'm returning to New York day after tomorrow, to write another play, and since in some underhanded way you two are responsible for waking my black somnolent soul - would you like me to work you into the cast?"

Matt and Millie looked at each other. But this wasn't their poor sulky friend, young Evan. This was the great Wycoff, who walked with princes.

"I'm afraid," said Matt, while Millie nodded assent, "that playing with you would be out of our class. And we want to get back to the farm and see how the chicken is getting along. You'd be crazy about that chicken. She understands everything we say, and she hangs around the silo and gets drunk and dances."

"Like Lelia," said Evan.

EVERYTHING YOU NEED TO KNOW

You can be certain of making your next garden successful in every way by getting The New Garden Encyclopedia now—and consulting it at every step. It will save you work and worry; do away with mistakes and disappointments. It will save you hours of searching through incomplete books. With its aid you will know how to avoid plant diseases; prevent and destroy pests; raise bigger and better flowers, fruits and vegetables. Like an ever-present expert adviser, its pages will tell you when and where to plant and transplant; how to store roots, bulbs, etc., during the winter; how to prune, disbud, etc., how to cultivate indoor and outdoor window boxes; how to condition soil and fertilize; how to grow every flower, vegetable, shrub; how to select the best kinds; how to plan your garden for economy, seasonal changes, and year round beauty.

Hailed by Gardening Authorities

The Philadelphia Inquirer's garden editor called this "the Garden Book complete, all that most gardeners will ever need for what they have or dream of!"

The magazine Horticulture said: "This new encyclopedia is amazingly comprehensive and presents its material in such convenient form that almost any gardening question may be settled in a few moments. The illustrations are numerous and excellent, and amateurs will be happy to find that pronunciation of all difficult botanical words is given. Apparently the greatest care has been taken to give the book complete accuracy, as well as to cover every point which is necessary in the description of flowers, plants and vegetables. The book is fully up to date. Garden makers will find in it the latest information about fertilizers, insecticides and the like. There are useful tables and many other features which combine to produce a reference work and guide which will be found extremely useful."

Now they're wearing 'em as they take the bumps of their highly specialized line of service in the 501st Parachute Battalion at Fort Benning, Ga. The helmets really are made of a plastic material and are being worn experimentally as Uncle Sam experiments in many other ways in building up the nucleus of what probably will become a great arm of the Nation's modernized defense force.

How to master a wind-filled 'chute on the ground is the next thing to learn. These men will soon know how to spill the air out of a 'chute that wants to drag them into the next county.

His first jump—and how would you feel! But his instructor is taking no chance that he'll forget to pull the rip cord. The pack cover of the 'chute is pulled off by a cord attached to the plane to make sure it opens at the right time. In the circle is another view of the novice jumper, looking down from the plane from which he has just jumped.

Down to earth and the business of fighting begins. Machine guns, automatics, pistols and hand grenades are included in the 'chute troops' arsenal. Some they bring down with them, some of it lands in packs from accompanying planes.

For this Nazi pilot the war is over. Rather sullen is his reaction to being searched by a Canadian soldier on his arrival in Canada from England with many fellow prisoners to spend the "duration" in a Canadian prison camp.

Giant ribs which support the deck of the bridge are seen arching from east to west, as steel rods rise above them to reinforce further superstructure. Beneath the ribs the spaces will be filled with pre-cast slabs of concrete.

Here is the wooden formwork built to form the reinforced concrete structure of the bridge. Workmen are cutting off wires used to hold the wood in place. The forms will be taken off and the bridge faced with stone.

Their begging days are ended. A nurse from the Auxilio Social finds three homeless youngsters on the streets of Madrid. They'll end up in the warmth and comfort of one of the organization homes.

VAGRANT children of the streets of Madrid and other Spanish cities and towns have been one of the most serious and one of the most heart-touching aftermaths of Spain's long and devastating civil war. How in the midst of poverty and critical food shortage, intensified by the wall of war and blockade about Spain, her charities have reached out to rescue these homeless children who have begged their food is shown in these pictures just received in America. The effort has been centered in the "Auxilio Social," organized to round up the children, give them shelter, food, education—to save them for future Spain.

Spanish hospitals are doing all they can to help the ill and undernourished children, homeless or of poverty-stricken parents. Here's a typical scene as one is brought in.

MAYBE it's because Mercury is so big and powerful that some folks think it must cost a lot to own. Actually, the price of a luxurious new 1941 Mercury is not high even when compared to that of lowest priced cars. And we'd like you to judge for yourself, whether the extra pride, comfort and real enjoyment you get are not well worth the small difference in cost. With all its fine car advantages, Mercury is mighty economical.

Owners report up to 20 miles per gallon. That's because Mercury engineers, applying lessons learned from aviation, have created an automobile with more power per pound than most other cars. With no superfluous weight and plenty of live horsepower, its flashing performance is thriftier than many cars of fewer cylinders. Why not take a ride and see why more than 175,000 buyers have chosen Mercury in a little over two years?

We think Mercury is pretty as a picture, inside and out. A bit restrained, of course - not too much chrome and dazzle, but clean, flowing lines and a perky "let's go" look that is typically Mercury. There's not a single "super" something. It's just a modern, well-conceived, honestlybuilt car that we think will give you your money's worth.

More room. The Mercury is a sur-
