No Indication of Trend.

Dispatches reaching Sofia, Bulgaria, now occupied by the Germans, said the fast-moving columns were engaged in a fierce struggle-one of the first of its kind in this war, with completely armored forces maneuvering on a flat plain. No indication was given of the trend of the fighting.

The battle came as Great Britain's Balkan army tested its strength by patrol activities and other maneuvers.

Tunney Attends Hearing On Eastern Shore Estate

J. Owen Knotts heard testimony today on the validity of Gene Tunney's purchase of a "gentlemen's estate" on the Eastern Shore of Maryland and continued the case until April 25.

The former heavyweight boxing champion appeared in Talbot County Circuit Court at a hearing on exceptions to the sale of the Bruce Naylor estate near Bellevue, which Mr. Naylor sought to have invalidated, claiming the price paid was "grossly inadequate."

Mr. Tunney bought the property at an assignee's sale for $23,000 through his agent, John McKinney, who also had purchased for him the nearby Repajo farms at a reported price of $64,000.

Mr. Tunney testified that he had authorized Mr. McKinney to make a net offer of $36,000 last fall, but after that he made no further offers. He said he, his wife and children

Miss Perkins Denies Strikes 'Paralyze' Defense Program

Chicago Industrialist Gets 1,500-Word Reply To Query on Attitude

A Chicago industrialist who inquired of Secretary of Labor Perkins about her attitude toward the labor situation received a 1,500,word reply yesterday in which Miss Perkins asserted that strikes were decreasing and had not "paralyzed" the defense program.

L. F. Wilson, president of the Wilson Engineering Corp., had advised her that many of his friends thought the Labor Secretary did not have a "complete understanding of the labor situation as it affects the general welfare of the Nation." He also referred to newspapers which had accused her of "fostering this sort of labor dissatisfaction. In reply, the cabinet officer wrote that she had sponsored legislation during the past eight years designed to eliminate worker dissatisfaction and the causes of disputes. In that connection she dwelt at some length on the work of the conciliation service in settling disputes. "While there have been a number of strikes in the defense industries," she said, "it has not been so large a number as is commonly thought. Nor have many of them been long or involving a very large number of people.

Stone Laid in 1791 As First D. C. Marker To Be Rededicated

Original Ceremonies Will Be Re-Enacted in Alexandria Tuesday

A stone laid with the prayer that from it a superstructure may rise 'whose glory, whose magnificence, whose stability, unequalled hitherto, shall astonish the world" will be dedicated anew in Alexandria, Va., Tuesday afternoon.

It was a block of stone placed on April 15, 1791, as the first boundary marker of the Federal District. The rededication exercises will be held at 3 p.m. at the site at Jones Point. Sponsored by the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia and the Masonic Order, with the Washington Board of Trade co-operating, the ceremony will be attended by District and Federal officials. President Roosevelt is among those invited.

Unity Was Plea Then.

The exercises 150 years ago are described in detail in the records of the Alexandria Washington Masonic Lodge No. 22. The Rev. James Muir, making the dedication speech, prayed for a land of prosperity where Americans dwell together in unity.

"May this stone long commemorate the goodness of God in those uncommon events which have given America a name among nations.' he said. "Under this stone may jealousy and selfishness be forever buried. From this stone may a superstucture arise, whose glory, whose magnificence, whose stability, unequaled hitherto, shall astonish the world and invite even the savage of the wilderness to take shelter under its roof."

This speech will be given at the exercises Tuesday by James Sherier, Washington lawyer, who is past master of the Alexandria Washington Lodge. Erdnann P. Stulz, present lodge master, will play the part of Dr. Cullen Dick, personal physician to George Washington, who officiated at the original ceremony. Members of the lodge will be dressed in Colonial costumes.

Commissioners Invited.

The three District Commissioners, Melvin C. Hazen, J. Russell Young and Col. David McCoach, jr., have been invited to fill the roles of their predecessors, "the Hon. Daniel Carroll and Hon. David Steuart," who went to the site in 1791 "to superintend" the fixing of the first boundary stone Ara M. Daniels, grand master of Masons, will head the Washington delegation of Masons who will participate in the exercises.

Included in those invited to attend are Chairman Reynolds of the Senate District Committee; Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee, Representative Smith of Virginia, Gov. Price of Virginia, Mayor William T. Wilkins of Alexandria and members Alexandria Paul L. Delaney, Earnest L. Mankin, George K. Bender, James Armstrong, Charles L. Burgess, Charles M. Wallace Stresses Vital Urgency of Arms Production

Speed May Determine Whether U. S. Must Fight, He Asserts

By GOULD LINCOLN. Vice President Wallace, speaking at Winston-Salem, N. C., last night, called on the Nation to increase its productive effort for defense and for aid to nations resisting aggression. "In 1940 we produced 4,250 defense airplanes and in 1941 we will Best Way to Remain at Peace. The Vice President began his address by saying the "most important way of making sure the United States will remain at peace and that peace will come rapidly to the world on a basis which will mean freedom and not slavery to democratic nations, is to demonstrate in the shortest time possible the tremen-dous capacity of the United States to produce.

He concluded with the prayer: "May the feelings of an outraged nation descend upon the heads of those who delay peace by interfering with production.

There was a growing feeling in Washington last night, however, among leading members of Congress. that the American people must come to a realization that they are face to face with conditions that may mean war at any moment. He added that once the country became cognizant of the situation production of all kinds of war supplies would jump tremendously.

"No Turning Back Possible." He went far beyond the question of production, however, asserting that "the American people would never be content to do so futile a thing as to produce enormously and not see that the supplies were put into the hands of the British where they could use them.

Two Conflicting Desires The commissioners showed they were torn between two desires: One to do anything that would aid or speed national defense; and the other to make the earliest use of new District housing to meet demands of the municipal agencies for needed working space.

The Commissioners limited their comments to the declaration: "The District Government will co-operate with the United States in any measure necessary to aid in national defense."

Roosevelt Confers 40 Minutes With Gen. Camacho

Brother of Mexico's President Sees 'Bright' Relations With U.S.

By the Associated Press. Gen. Maximino Avila Camacho, brother of the President of Mexico. yesterday proclaimed himself and the President of Mexico as "brothers" in extending a "most friendly greeting" to the authorities and people of the United States. Gen. Avila Camacho arrived here late Friday and had a 40-minute interview with President Roosevelt yesterday, Leaving the White House, he told reporters he was assured of a "bright conception" of future relations between Mexico and the United States.

At a formal press conference held at the Mexican Embassy later in the afternoon the general extended "best wishes for the continued progress and happiness of this admirable Nation which gave birth to Washington and Lincoln," and proffered auguries for "continued friendship" between the "two great republics of North America" (Mexico and the United States).

He also said his government would try to prevent "any possible menace" to the legitimate rights of the working classes. He said his government felt the "quiet atmosphere" of conciliation boards between capital and labor would serve as the best instrument to adjust Mexican industrial problems. The general said his brother's government has "the firm intention of following the rigorous pattern of juridical norms so that the judical branch may always occupy its high place, in accordance with our constitutional and democratic regime. Silent on Important Issues.

Gen. Camacho would not be drawn out on questions concerning outstanding problems between the United States and concerns in this Nation and Mexico. He said such questions as the oil expropriations problems and other matters pending must be "properly" left to interviews with the Mexican Ambassador here. The precipitation of some sort of crisis in Danish-American relations, along with an increase in the tensity of German-American relations, had been expected here all day yesterday. German occupation was completed early in the morning of April 9, 1940, when they were all asleep. It would be a bold move for the United States to recognize Mr. De Kauffmann as the government, but Germany has taken a bold step herself in directing Copenhagen to order the Minister home, especially in a cablegram signed simply: "Foreign Office.

It was viewed as unlikely here that Berlin would forge instructions, inasmuch as it was generally believed that Copenhagen would respond to any German demands.

The opinion here is that the German government is proceeding slowly about deciding what step it should take concerning the Greenland agreement, because a crisis in American-Danish relations or a new strain on American-German relations might follow a Nazi order to the Copenhagen government to protest the agreement.

If the United States could be sure of its ground in international law in recognizing Mr. De Kauffmann as the Danish government, it probably would have done so long ago in order to make possible the transfer by sale to the United States of the Danish cargo ships. But it was feared that under such a sale, the ships would be considered as outlaws in the harbors of some countries and be kept out of service by injunction.

Roosevelt Suez Move Assailed by Wheeler As 'Asinine Policy'

Action Might Force U. S. To Fight in All Parts Of World, Senator Says

By the Associated Press.

Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana yesterday called President Roosevelt's action in opening the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden to American shipping "an asinine policy" that might force the United States to fight single-handedly "in all parts of the world."

"The warmongers in France have destroyed the French Republic and the warmongers in England have all but destroyed the British Empire,' he said in a statement. "The same type of warmongers will destroy the United States if we keep on letting our sentiments rather than our judgment control our policies."

British Leader Lauds Action. Meanwhile, Sir Arthur Salter, chief of the British Shipping Mission in this country, paid his first call on Secretary of State Hull. He told newspapermen the President's action in opening the sea lane for American ships to Suez would give very valuable aid to Great Britain. For every ship placed on the North African run, he said, it would be possible for Great Britain to transfer a ship to the North Atlantic, where U-boat conditions have been increasingly serious. He said his conference with Mr. Hull was chiefly a "courtesy call."

The question of convoys also figured in comment by legislators on the President's newest moves in foreign affairs.

Representative Fish of New York, ranking minority member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, expressed doubt that the President approved Committee Chairman Bloom's advocacy of American convovs for war shipments.

Fish Says Bloom Favors War. Representative Bloom's approval of convoys. Mr. Fish declared, demonstrated that he "is now open-

While saying that Congress would disapprove convoys at present, Mr. Fish added that he strongly favored the establishment of an air base in Greenland-a step made possible when this Government took Greenland into its system of hemispherical defense earlier last week.

Senator Clark, Democrat, of Missouri, like Senator Wheeler, an opponent of the Roosevelt foreign policy, told reporters that "if we move fast enough we may be able to get there (the Red Sea) by the time the Germans do.'

Senator Wheeler said, "of course, if one wants to get us into the war the way to do it is to take more and more chances on sending our ships where they are most likely to

If American ships are destroyed, he added, an effort will be made to involve the country in war. people should realize," he added, "that if we get into this war the chances are very great that we'll be fighting all over the world-and we'll be doing it alone."

Berlin and Rome Attack Move. In Berlin, authorized sources called Mr. Roosevelt's opening of the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden the first open American intervention in European affairs and a violation of the European Monroe Doctrine.

The official Stefani Italian News Agency said the President's action was based on one of his "original as well as arbitrary" interpretations of international law. Stefani said the interpretation grew from a theory that Egypt, to which goods could be shipped under the new order, was a neutral.

Cairo business circles predicted that opening of the Red Sea to United States shipping should enable the British Near East and Balkan forces to receive American equipment rapidly and would increase Egypt's trade in non-military Already the best Cairo stores are advertising women's fashions from New York instead of Paris, and United States products have replaced numerous articles formerly imported from Europe.

The Government will try to prevent any unwarranted price rises for these and other commodities through economic restrictions on those who fail to co-operate rather

McCarran May Head District Committee, Capitol Hill Hears

Friends Hint Nevadan May Take Chairmanship He Once Rejected

Senator McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada may accept the chairmanship of the Senate District Committee if Senator Reynolds, Democrat. of North Carolina relinquishes it to take over the Military Affairs Com-mittee, according to well-informed sources on Capitol Hill.

The subject will remain in the speculative stage until formal action is taken to fill the Military Committee chairmanship left vacant by the death of Senator Sheppard of Texas. Senator Reynolds is in line for it under the seniority rule-and Senator McCarran threw no light on the question yesterday

Although Senator McCarran declined the District post three months ago, before Senator Reynolds was appointed, some of his friends are of the opinion he has not closed the door against acceptance at this time.

The Nevada Senator has been a diligent member of the committee for eight years, during which time he has been brought into contact with major problems confronting the National Capital.

If the chairmanship becomes vacant, Senator McCarran is the next Democrat in line, after those who already have other chairmanships. The seniority rule would give him first choice, assuming Senators Glass of Virginia, Tydings of Maryland and Bankhead of Alabama retain chairmanships they already hold.

If Senator McCarran finally decides to pass up his claim, the next in line is Senator Bilbo of Mississippi, and, after him, Senators Overton of Louisiana and Clark of Idaho. Senator Bilbo was in Mississippi when Senator Sheppard died, and went to Texas to attend the funeral yesterday.

If the space you can allow for a piano is small and the price your budget will allow you to pay for a piano is also small here's a nice little instrument that will fit both. It is a full keyboard spinet with standard action and string length and has practically all of the features of much better pianos. The case is well-rubbed mahagany and will stand a lot of wear. At $198 it is a real value and one we probably won't be able to offer for long, in view of fast rising wholesale prices, so take our advice and come in and buy one now.

Ford Calls 20,000 To Work Tomorrow At River Rouge Plant

N. L. R. B. Pushes Plans For Vote to Determine Bargaining Agency

Ps the Associated Press. DETROIT, April 12.—The Ford Motor Co. today called 20,000 to work Monday to reopen the huge River Rouge plant after a shut-down of nearly a fortnight because of a strike called by the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.).

While officials of the company enlarged their first back-to-work call, they said no production men were included among those directed to report on Monday. Reopening of some departments, they said, might take from 10 days to 2 weeks.

Ray R. Rausch, superintendent of the River Rouge plant, cautioned workmen not to rush to the plant expecting immediate jobs. He said the business of reopening was com-

Representatives of the National Labor Relations Board went ahead today with plans for an election at the plant to determine a bargaining agency. One of its officials went to the plant to inspect Ford pay rolls so that a list of those eligible to vote may be compiled

The U. A. W.-C. I. O. has demanded a 10-cent hourly wage increase, a contractual agreement with the company and substitution of uniformed protection men for the Ford service department. The agreement reached yesterday to terminate the strike made no mention of these demands, but postponed until after the bargaining election a hearing by the N. L. R. B. on a union complaint against the company.

Southern Operators Seek To Settle Work Stoppage

NEW YORK, April 12 (P).— Southern soft coal operators who withdrew yesterday from the Appalachian joint wage conference made overtures to the United Mine Workers Union (C. I. O.) today in an effort to settle the work stoppage which has kept their mines idle since early this month

They appealed to John L. Lewis, head of the union, to come into immediate conference in the hope that they might reopen their mines his former nurse, will be married by Mr. Lewis, without re- a municipal judge Monday. plying formally, left for Washington to spend Easter with his family.

A spokesman for the United Mine Workers said it was unlikely that anything would be done to relieve an imminent coal shortage, which already has caused curtailment of steel production, until both Northern and Southern bituminous producers agree to a $7-a-day basic wage. (It is now $6 in the North and $5.60 in the South.) An alternative suggested was to reopen the mines and make any subsequent Mr. and Mrs. George P. Converse. contract retroactive in effect.

Commissioners Put 4 Church Properties On Taxable List

Value Placed in Excess Of $152,500, With Yield Of More Than $2,600

Directions for the levying of Distrist real estate taxes against four properties owned and operated by church organizations as church home, house of studies and Sunday school purposes were issued yesterday by the Commissioners as they acted on another set of tax exemption cases.

In nine other cases on which recommendations were made by the Commissioners' Real Estate Tax Exemption Board, church and other properties were found to be properly exempted from taxes.

The total value of the properties held taxable, involving holdings of Catholic, Lutheran, Episcopal and Presbyterian church groups, was placed at more than $152,500. The annual tax bills would total more than $2,600. Applying principles adopted earlier in its work, the board ruled that the properties were not operated as public charities," or that the buildings did not constitute "churches," or were not used for "educational" purposes within the meanings of the law.

Big Ship to Help Train Inspectors and Check On Airline Pilots

The twin-engined Douglas DC-3 airliner has been stripped of conconverted into a flying workshop for addition to the C. A. A. fleet of aircraft of representative types.

One of the principal functions of the new plane will be the continued technical training of the C. A. A. inspectors who are in charge of testing the professional qualifications of the world's top-notch group of pilots—the men who fly the Nation's airliners.

For this purpose, the big Douglas has been converted into one of the most highly specialized aeronautical available space devoted to crew, observers and test equipment. It will be used in an effort to keep the staff of Federal airline and personnel inspectors not only abreast of but, if possible, ahead of developments in the rapidly developing air transport and general aviation field.

Room for 12 Inspectors. To keep these inspectors in training for their task of testing the airline pilots requires "periodic, specialized and concentrated" instruction of the inspectors themselves, it was explained by Brig. Gen. Donald H. Connolly, C. A. A. administra-

The second is a dual automatic radio direction finder, the result of three years of work by radio engineers of the C. A. A. and three manufacturers working in collaboration. This instrument, is was explained, "presages navigation in the entire ocean of air rather than in the relatively narrow channels maintained by radio directional beams."

Although this is the first installation of its kind, the three manufacturers who aided in its development are expected soon to have the equipment in production for addition to regular airline equipment. The flying laboratory is to be based at the new C. A. A. Standardization Center at Houston, Tex.

The German radio reports hold more than a suggestion of terroristic propaganda in their efforts to portray a Yugoslav state already tot-tering to its fall, "slashed into sections" and the like. There is nothing from any other source which suggests that the Yugoslavs have lost even one position-with the possible exception of Bitolj-which was included in their original "final defense zone"; and from several sources come reports that a strong Yugoslav counter-attack toward Bitolj and even Skoplje is develop-

The surprising force of the German effort here is said to be due inforcements for the drives on to the Germans having brought over their equipment in ships, their men by air. One is inclined, however, to regard this as an oversimplification. When all is said and done, the conditions of sea transport even under the shadow of the German air power in Sicily are not such as to allow a really large German force to be sent across, or to be supplied in offensive operations after its arrival.

Some supplies have no doubt been accumulated, but these cannot last for long; the period of their use is being timed to coincide with the German advance into Greece and Yugoslavia. Moreover, the Germans—on the same principle which causes them to use middle-aged Landwehr men for truck drivers, hospital attendants and clerical staffs—have unquestionably made use of Italians wherever possible to fill out their organizations, of Italian officers and men as well as Italian equipment of every sort, of which there must have been a good deal

Drug to Treat Pyorrhea Made From Persimmon

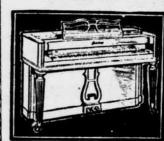

TUSKEGEE, Ala., April 12.-Dr. George W. Carver, Negro scientist of Tuskegee Institute, disclosed today he has developed from the persimmon a drug to treat pyorrhea.

Dr. Carver said the persimmon, which grows wild in profusion in the South, was boiled and the juice was combined with other ingredients to form a powerful liquid astringent. The aged and largely self-taught chemist, who specializes in developing useful substances from common products, said the drug would not be marketed until it has been thoroughly tested by the dental profession. With three vice presidents general on Mrs. Pouch's ticket, four posts as vice presidents general remain to be filled. The six candidates are Mrs. William Wesley Brothers, Pocatello, Idaho; Mrs. James F. Donahue, Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Thomas Clair Maguire, Plant City, Fla.; Mrs. C A. Swann Sinclair, Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Elly Ruff Barnes, Montgomery, Ala., and Miss Lillian Chenoweth of the District. Miss Chenoweth ended her two-year term as State regent for the District last year. She was indorsed for the nomination as vice president general by the District society a year ago at the conference which completed her administration and a number of local chapters have recently indorsed her for the post.

Mrs. Haig's Term Expiring. The District now has one vice president general in the cabinet, Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, but her term expires at this Congress.

Since getting up a slate of officers and winning indorsements from chapters all over the country requires months of preparation, there is little likelihood that a dark horse will enter the race for any of the as vet uncontested national offices. Mrs. Pouch's ticket includes Mrs. Joseph G. Mullins of Fort Worth, Tex., for organging secretary general; Mrs. Ralph L. Crockett of Redstone, N. H., for librarian general; Mrs. Samuel James Campbell of Mount Carroll, Ill., for treasurer general; Mrs. C. Edward Murray of Trenton, N. J., for curator general, and Mrs. Harry E. Narey of Spirit Lake, Iowa, for reporter general to the Smith-sonian Institution.

Only one candidate is in the field for honorary vice president general, elected for life. She is Mrs. Frank Madison Dick of Cambridge, Md. Nominations Wednesday.

Formal nominations will be made Wednesday evening, with the polls open the following day. The new officers will be installed with traditional ceremony at the close of the congress on Saturday.

The customary full Sunday schedule has been curtailed because it coincides with Easter Sunday. Instead of making their annual memorial pilgrimages to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and to Mount Vernon today, the Daughters have reserved Tuesday afternoon for the pilgrimages.

Hearing to Open Wednesday on D. C. Suffrage

Senator McCarran To Begin With 'Background'

By J. A. O'LEARY. Plans for a comprehensive study of District suffrage were announced last night by Senator McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada, who fixed 10 a.m. Wednesday for the opening of public hearings on the subject. The Nevadan is chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee appointed to handle the Capper-Sumners resolution for a constitutional amendment that would empower Congress to grant the District representation in Congress, the right to vote in presidential elections and such changes in the powers of the local government as it may see fit to make.

Senator McCarran said the tentative program is to begin by developing the "history and background of the law and conditions that have prevailed in the District from its inception to the present with regard to the form of government and suffrage.

The proceedings, he said, must of necessity be interrupted as the other business of the Senate requirs, but I hope to proceed as rapidly and orderly as possible.'

Capper to Be Heard. After the historical background has been developed, the subcommittee will hear Senator Capper of Kansas, a veteran member of the District Committe and co-author of the pending suffrage resolution.

Witnesses who wish to present legal phases of the subject will be heard next, followed by former District Commissioners and the present Commissioners.

"Following that testimony." Senator McCarran continued, "the subcommittee will invite statements from members of Congress interested in District affairs, particularly Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee and others who desire to be heard.

Senator McCarran also made known he would ask the newspapers of the city to send representatives to express the views of their papers. The subcommittee he said, then will hear "civic organizations and individuals not connected with any of the foregoing groups.

Urged to Name Spokesmen. In extending the invitation to civic organizations Senator McCarran said "it must be readily apparent that it would be impossible to hear every one who might care to express himself. Boarding House Overcrowding To Be Probed

Rent-Control Hearing Friday Will Study Health Conditions

By JAMES E. CHINN. Sanitary and general health conditions in Washington's overcrowded boarding and rooming houses are to be considered by the special Defense Subcommittee of the House District Committee when it resumes public hearings Friday on a bill providing for creation of a commission to control rentals here. Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, and his staff have been summoned as the principal Representative Randolph, Demoerat, of West Virginia, sponsor of the rent control bill and also chairman of both the House District Committee and its special Defense Subcommittee, yesterday called the second hearing on the proposed legislation for 10 a.m. Friday.

Crowding "Held Health Menace. "At our first hearing," he said, it was indicated there was overcrowding in boarding and rooming houses with resulting serious health complications. In view of that testimony, I have requested Dr. Ruhland and his staff to appear for a meeting Friday and tell the conditions as now exist and make recommendations they believe are necessary. Perhaps their testimony will occupy most of the time."

The Defense Subcommittee, at it initial hearing on Mr. Randolph bill more than a week ago, was told that in some rooming houses there is only one bathroom for 15 occuas seven beds in a room. Overcrowding of these places, it was testified, is due to the influx here of national defense workers who would rather live within walking distance of the Government departments than in private homes in Cleveland Park, Chevy Chase and other similar residential sections, where 6,000 rooms are available.

Citizens to Give Views. Chairman Randolph also plans to give representatives of the Federation of Citizens' Associations an opportunity at Friday's hearing to outline the organization's views on the proposed rent control legislation. The Federation has gone on record as opposed to the plan.

Resumption of hearings on the rent control bill is only one of the local issues scheduled to be given attention this week by House mem bers. The Fiscal Affairs Subcommittee of the District Committee is expected to meet before the end of the week to consider a proposed amendment to the Overton fiscal formula bill that would make the Federal Government's annual payment toward municipal expenses available primarily for capital outlays. Stabilizing Holiday Celebrations on Mondays for Week-End Travel, Instead of Particular Dates, Poses a Question for American Vacationists workaday public, up the bulk of travel-conregret, in a particular year, that opinions received by the travel bu-Memorial Day, to cite one, fails to reau: fall on a Friday or Monday, offering a three-day week end in which to or stay longer amid refreshing scenes. But by and large the public does nothing about it, and the idea of juggling celebration of momentous events to stabilize them on a convenient day might with logic strike the average person as being a monumental task. The more faint-hearted could even point to the failure of President Roosevelt to achieve unity among the States transplanting Thanksgiving from the last to the third Thursday

In the travel industry, however, the plan to anchor as many holidays as feasible on the nearest or another appropriate Monday is an issue-an issue about which vacationists are likely to hear more. The idea began to creep upon public consciousness several years ago when a national magazine published a symposium of views of wellknown writers and others on tying the celebration of an event-not the actual occurrence itself, of course -to a day, Monday, instead of a date. The Monday Holiday Association, formed to promote the plan, also began about that time to pubquarters in Atlantic City, N. J.

Nat-Yank Tilt Tomorrow Opens Baseball Season Promising Thrills All Way

Win, Lose or Draw

Over the Winter Griff Planned and Plotted

From the ruins of the misfit, seventh-place ball club which finished 26 games behind the pennant-winning Tigers, and from a select group of enemy castoffs, Clark Griffith has fashioned his thirtieth Washington entry in the American League.

What it will do now, six months after completing a disastrous season, is an answer nobody can give, especially in these times when the military draft threatens to cut deeply into the strength of the baseball armies. The consensus of the so-called experts rates Washington a poor seventh. About the safest thing we can say, after watching the unfolding of the club since mid-February, is that it could be one of the best seventh-place teams in American League history.

Griffith has not remained idle since last October. Indeed, he made a surprising number of changes in an unspectacular series of moves. He believes them all to be changes for the better. With the records to back him, we have to put in with the old guy. The Nats are shy a well-balanced pitching staff, the infield is a trifle leaky at times and the power is not quite terrific. But on paper it is a better team.

For Chapman He Gave a One-Game Winner

Griffith's first move was to get a new first baseman. From Seattle he drafted the Pacific Coast League's most valuable player, George Archie. So far Archie has been "good field, no hit," but even this must go on the credit side because last year no less than half a dozen took cracks at the bag, starting with Jimmy Wasdell and running down the line through Zeke Bonura, Sammy West, Jimmy Bloodworth, Jack Sanford and Mickey Vernon. All lacked something. In Archie's behalf it must be said that never during his career in the American Association and the Coast League has he failed to hit well over .300.

Bitterly disappointed in Outfielder Gerald Walker, Griffith looked around for a trade. The Cleveland Indians were willing to take a flyer on Joe Krakauskas, the wild left hander. The Indians were willing, even straining, to rid themselves of Ben Chapman, who was not one of the ringleaders of the 1940 uprising against Manager Oscar Vitt. To Griffith's unconcealed joy he got Chapman for Krahauskas.

What he got was a fast, sure left fielder who in 11 years of major league ball has a lifetime average of .306, stole 282 bases, scored 1.091 runs and drove across 930. What he gave up was an unnatural thrower, constantly tinkering with his delivery. Krakauskas' big league record shows Pitch Made by President 23 wins and 29 defeats. Last year he won one game and lost six. He was getting worse, year after year.

Nats Capitalize on Players Not Wanted

Griffith gleefully capitalized on another intraclub fued. For some vague reason, Center Fielder Rog Cramer became persona non grata with the Boston Red Sox. In order to get a catcher, Boston traded Cramer to Washington and, after taking Walker in exchange, sent him along to Cleveland for Frankie Pytlak.

How does this deal compare-Cramer for Walker? The guy Griffith got is one of the good center fielders and one of the best throwers in the game. Walker couldn't throw and he was an erratic fielder. It is difficult to compare them as hitters. During his 10-year career, Walker has batted .310 and Cramer .305. Yet they are different types.

Cramer is the guy who gets on the bases and scores runs. Walker used to drive across runs, but after he was traded from Detroit in 1937 he lost his spark. With the White Sox and Nats he was a disappointment. At Cleveland, where the morale is low, anyway, he may again disappoint.

For free, Griffith picked up Danny MacFayden, the old Boom-Boom of former days. In effect, MaeFayden replaces Krakauskas. The former's lifetime record was 23 wins, MacFayden's, 132. MacFayden is 35, Krakauskas only 25, but last year with Pittsburgh Deacon Danny won 5 and lost 4, with an earned-run average of 3.56, and Krakauskas' same average

It Could Be a Crack Seventh-Place Club

For an unannounced sum, Griffith bought Steve Sundra from the Yankees. In the interim he cleaned house. He disposed of Pitchers Rene Monteagudo, Joe Haynes and other rare pieces of junk. It is reasonable to assume that Sundra is better than anybody who was cut loose.

Here, then, are five new cogs—Archie, Chapman, Cramer, MacFayden and Sundra. To get them, Griffith weakened himself to the extent of giving up Walker, Krakauskas and cash. He didn't weaken anything, in other words, except possibly the exchequer. And then not enough to hurt, although it might be pertinent to add that the fans don't give a hoot Less tangible, but equally as weighty has been the development of There could be no better opening some of last year's holdovers. That is what the New York Yankees, for instance, hope to get from their novice infielders, Phil Rizzuto and Gerry Priddy; what the St. Walker Cooper, Pitcher John Grodzicki and other fancy freshmen, and what the Brooklyn Dodgers hope for from Outfielder Pete Reiser along with veteran additions.

Last Year's Rookies Shine. Last year the standout rookies

Goldun Spurts in Last Half Mile, Takes Gruelling Belmont at Middleburg

Greer Horse Outruns Port Law, Mowgli For Hunting Title

Mansfield Park Scores Easily in Cup 'Chase; Tiger Lane Second

By LARRY LAWRENCE.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., April 12.-C. M. Greer, jr.'s, courageous hunter Goldun, ridden by John Bosley, 3d, forged to the front in the last half mile today to win the revised Raymond Belmont Memorial national hunting championship, feature of the 21st annual Middleburg Hunt race meeting at the celebrated Glenwood Park course.

Before a crowd of 5,000, Goldun triumphed over the most representative field of hunting-hunters ever to face a starter in Virginia. The son of Westwick-Golden Maid, in his first steeplechase, earned the Memorial Trophy and the major share of the $1,000 purse for the Piedmont Hunt's paneling fund, as well as national hunting laurels.

Fifteen of the original 26 entries went to the post. Metope, owned and ridden by George T. Walker of Washington, led over the first jump. followed closely by Port Law, ridden by Thomas T. Mott. jr.: Five Star, of the Orange County Hunt, ridden by Louis E. Duffy, and Slim Hope, Mrs. Amory F. Carhart's Warrenton Hunt entry, ridden by Dick Kirk-

T. Beatty Brown, a favorite in the betting with Mrs. Crompton Smith's Mowgli, went down at the first fence. Neither horse nor rider was injured. After the first jump, Port Law took the lead and held it until just before the finish of the race. At different times he was challenged by Clifton's Gem, Rockland Lad and the highly favored Manarue of the Sewickley Hunt near Pittsburgh, Pa. But Port Law shook them all off with the exception of Mowgli, who, in the last mile, moved up to within a length of the Mott

A half-mile from the finish Mowgli passed the Redland Hunt entry and it looked as though Mrs. Crompton Smith's hard-luck horse would take the award. Between the 25th and 26th jumps, however, Goldun started his sprint which brought him within challenging distance of the two leaders. After the last jump he passed the tiring Mowgli and Port Law.

Course Is Severe Test. The 4-mile course, well devised, was a test for any hunter. There were 26 jumps and 4 circles over fine turf. Despite the good going there were plenty of casualties. Of the 15 starters, only 5 finished. In the 10 mishaps none of the riders was injured and but one horse Slim Hope, appeared in a bad way.

In the Middleburg Steeplechase, co-featured with the Belmont, 6 horses of the original 10 entries went to the post. At the start Paul G. Daly's Mansfield Park, ridden by Johnny Harrison, went to the front and never was headed. The Middleburg is a gruelling 4-mile test and the Daly entry proved his ability by winning in 7 minutes, 58 seconds, within 5 seconds of the record made by Black Sweep last MONKTON, Md., April 12.—Stuart S. Janney, jr., Worthington Valley sportsman, rode his own horses to victory in the My Lady's Manor Point-to-Point and the John Rush Streett Memorial race today as Maryland's spring steeplechase season opened under ideal weather conditions.

A smart pre-Easter crowd of 6,000, basking in the balmy sunshine, saw Janney take the My Lady's Manor with Vaunt and come back to win the John Rush Streett with Winton. Both races were run over a 3-mile course studded with 17 difficult timber jumps.

Sets Record in Easy Win.

An easy victor, Vaunt negotiated the course in the record time of 5 minutes, 312's seconds, 483's seconds better than the time made by last year's winner, Louis A. Randall's Monty R.

That is the idea of Horton Smith, the Mr. America of golf professionals, who has done as much as any man in the world to spread the gospel of golf promotion among the youth of the land. "I'm sure the day will come," said tall Horton, "when we will see chairs of golf established in many of the leading colleges. If I had the money to do it I would endow a chair of golf as an opening wedge in one of the large colleges. I would set up an advisory staff consisting of some of the leading professional and amateur golfers, some of the foremost administrators and would set an example in golf clinics."

Such clinics are held in many colleges. Smith spoke at a clinic at the University of Baltimore a few days ago, and is scheduled to speak at Minnesota and Purdue, two colleges which have led the way in golf education among their students.

"We go into the broad phases of the game," Horton said. "Such angles as proper etiquette on the course, generalities on the stance, and the way to play the game. But such as instruction in the swing and all the angles that make fine

15 Scraps, Battle Royal On Program of Event At Ritchie Coliseum

Amateur ringmen will take over the sports spotlight in Prince Georges County Thursday night when the county police boys' club stages its first boxing show at the University of Maryland's Ritchie Coliseum.

Some 15 bouts and a battle royal are planned by Sergts. E. H. (Mike) Mulligan and Ralph Brown of the force handling the program. The card will feature county boys' club battlers against National Training School ringsters in most bouts and other engagements will be filled by outstanding amateurs from Washington and vicinity. Walter (Buddy) Thomas, out-

HYDRA-MATIC DRIVE

ELIMINATES ALL CLUTCH-PUSHING FOR ALL TIME!

... and Gear-Shifting is Completely Automatic!

ELIMINATES CLUTCH PEDAL ENTIRELY-Hydra-Matic is the only drive in the world that does away with conventional clutch and clutch pedal.

2 GIVES FULLY AUTO-MATIC SHIFTING-No other drive, or combination of drive and gear-shifting device, gives completely automatic shifting.

3 PROVIDES QUICK GET-AWAY WITHOUT HAND SHIFTING-Only Hydra-Matic Drive gives you this advantage.

4 HAS SPECIAL PICK-UP GEAR-Hydra-Matic provides for quick burst of power for passing other vehicles or climbing hills.

5 DOES NOT FREE WHEEL -Hydra-Matic Drive is always in gear-does not free wheel. Braking power of the engine is always available.

6 CAN BE PARKED IN GEAR-Unlike some new "drives," Hydra-Matic permits parking your car in gear for additional safety on hills or grades.

In some cars you push a clutch all of the time, in some you push a clutch part of the time, but in an Olds Hydra-Matic you push a clutch none of the time-because there's no clutch pedal in the car! Why buy a car with a "drive" that requires clutch-pushing even on a part-time basis - that needs hand gear-shifting to give its best performance? Why not buy the car that goes all the way to reduce driving to its simplest, easiest, safest terms! Note the six Hydra-Matic advantages listed at the left. You get them all in a Hydra-Matic - and in no other drive in the world! *OPTIONAL AT EXTRA COST

King Cole Breezes to Triumph in Paumonok Before Record Crowd at Jamaica

Trainer Fitzsimmons Has Winner Fourth Successive Year

Phipps' Horses Bolster Derby Stock; Zacatine Takes Cedar Manor

Bs the Associated Press. . NEW YORK, April 12.-Steering a flying course for a Kentucky Derby starter's spot, handsome King Cole made a tremendous 3-year-old debut before a record-smashing crowd which jammed Jamaica race track to welcome the gallopers back to Cheered on by 37,284 opening-day customers, who packed even the aisles of the grandstand, swarmed over the infield and hung from everything except the light bulbs of this rebuilt racing plant, the big Nursery-Rhyme colt from Ogden Phipps' stable romped home with the featured Paumonok Handicap in such easy style one could almost hear the bluegrass calling him.

He was just about the whole show of a first-day program which broke all records for attendance and betting and which saw two other Kentucky' Derby eligibles, William Woodward's Perisphere and Lou Tufano's Market Wise take a beating from F. J. Buchanan's Zacatine in the Cedar Manor sprint, secondary feature on the card.

Another One for Sunny Jim. In scoring by three lengths just galloping in the Paumonok, King Cole, a son of Pharamond II, made it the usual opening day holiday for Trainer "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons. Deaconesses' Home Project Is Approved By Zoning Board

Methodist Organization Permitted to Use Property As Abode for Nine

Ruling that a group of nine persons occupying premises as a single housekeeping unit might be considered as a "single family" under the meaning of District zoning regulations, the Board of Zoning Adjustment yesterday granted use of 1410 Kennedy street N.W. as a home for no more than nine Metho-

The Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church had appealed to the board from a decision by the inspector of buildings of the District that the proposed occupancy would not be proper under the "single family"

Objections were voiced by a group of nearby residents at a hearing by the board on the society's appeal. The board's formal opinion said the term "family" is not defined in the District zoning regulations; that any limitation as to number "must be more or less arbitrary;" but that a dividing line must be drawn "somewhere." It held that a single family, other than a family related by blood or marriage or other sign of kinship, should not exceed nine persons to come within the scope of the zoning regulations. It noted that in the Kennedy street case the society proposed to use the premises as a single housekeeping unit and not as a group occupying a boarding house, lodging house or hotel.

Outcome of Struggle in Greece Involves Destiny of Americans

If Britain Loses, Only a Huge A. E. F. Would Be Able to Furnish Man Power for Overthrow Of Nazis, Observer Declares

By Felix Morley.

Sunday has concentrated the attention of the American people on the Balkans and caused them to follow with bated breath every shred of news emanating from the embattled area which was once known as "the cockpit of Europe."

For with the opening of the latest blitzkrieg, a year almost to the day after the Nazi invasion of Scandinavia, the war entered a new phase and one of the greatest moment to the United States. If the present onslaught of Hitler's legions fails in completely attaining its objectives, our present policy of unneutral non-belligerency may be continued without substantial change. But if Germany crashes through again it will mean an end to our present precarious balance. We shall have to come down from the tightrope, either on the side of war or of appeasement.

The attack on Yugoslavia and Greece represents the fourth great German offensive of this war. The first, in September, 1939, knocked out Poland in three weeks and cemented a Russo-German co-operation which as yet shows no real sign of deterioration. The second offensive, in April, 1940, brought all of Scandinavia under German control. The third, last May and June, resulted in the rapid conquest of the Netherlands, Belgium and France. The present aggression is designed to eliminate the last remaining resistance on the continent of Europe to Hitler's "new order."

Developments Clarified.

If the British can halt this Balkan drive, the success of the other conquests will be jeopardized. But if it succeeds, nothing short of a huge American expeditionary force would be able to provide the man power necessary for overthrow of the Nazi continental system. In the event of a sweeping German victory in the Balkans the United States, to put it crudely, must either put up or shut up with regard to the alteration of the European status which will have been provisionally accomplished.

The influence of this struggle on American policy would of itself be sufficient to make the British strain every nerve to consolidate their position in the Greek peninsula.

As long as this foothold is maintained. the growing likelihood of an ultimate German victory can be effectively denied and steadily developing material assistance from this country may be safely anticipated. But if the Balkan fighting leads to another Dunkerque, the defeatist sentiment which Col. Lindbergh has come to symbolize must be expected to strengthen in the United States. Unwelcome as this development would be, common sense demands that it be

The outstanding importance of the Balkan picture clarifies many military developments that have heretofore seemed obscure or unrelated. It explains why the British have been straining every herve to conquer Italy's empire in East Africa; why they have resigned themselves to yielding so much of the recent gains in Libya; why every effort has been made to destroy the Italian fleet and achieve command of the eastern Mediterranean even at the cost of inadequate protection for the lifeline to Britain itself.

Egyptian Base. To maintain the British expeditionary force in Greece, it was essential to develop Egypt as an adequate base. To accomplish this, the threat to the rear from Italian East Africa had to be eliminated and communications up the Red Sea and across the eastern Mediterranean made impregnable. In balance, retention of the gains along the Libyan desert coastline is relatively unimportant To establish the Egyptian base, it was vital that the last Italian forces should be swept from the Red Sea area. As a result, President Roosevelt has logically declared this artery free from Neutrality Act restrictions and open to the passage of war supplies carried by ships under the American flag.

Egypt, very deficient in its manufac-

It is a sound instinct which since last | turing potential, leaves much to be desired as a base. Munitions cannot be made there in any quantity; they must be shipped in. But in the present necessity this deficiency has to be accepted. The foothold in Greece is of primary importance and to retain it Egypt must be protected and developed for supplies. The same factors which make the support of Greece vital for Britain also render its reduction imperative from the German viewpoint. That Germany would have preferred to keep Yugoslavia neutral during the carefully prepared attack on the Grecian peninsula goes without saying. But when the Yugoslavs' courageously refused the minimum concessions demanded by Berlin, it became certain that Hitler would strike to secure this passageway to Greece. And the onslaught was bound to be the more determined because, before Greece can be reduced. Yugoslavia must be wholly eliminated as a factor of resistance.

Yugoslav Prelude.

If the position of Greece is compared with that of France last May, then Yugoslavia, from the German viewpoint, is a preliminary impediment similar to that offered by Holland and Belgium.

There are differences, of course. The mountainous terrain of Yugoslavia, and the absence of all but primitive communications, have presented much greater obstacles to blitzkrieg tactics. This time, also, the element of surprise was wholly lacking and resistance should be the more desperate because Yugoslavs and Greeks both realize that their continued national existence is at stake. Last but not least, the British are better aware of the magnitude of the emergency than was the case in France last

Nevertheless, events are confirming the many German advantages. Their armies, close to well-equipped bases, had been able to concentrate overwhelming strength at carefully selected points on Yugoslavia's long and almost unfortified frontiers. As the abortive adherence to the axis indicated, there is a large element in Yugoslavia, especially among the Croats and Slovenes, which regards resistance as hopeless even if it is not actively anti-Serb in sentiment. In mechanical equipment the British and their Allies are inferior.

Finally, Germany is strong enough to distract the British by continued submarine and air attack at home, even while concentrating tremendous power on the smashing drive in the Balkans.

History Being Written.

No man with any sense of the awful issues at stake would care to venture idle predictions on the outcome of this appalling death grapple. But it must be plain to all, and the tension thousands of miles from the scene of the struggle attests the fact that one of the great decisive battles of the world is under way. History on the grandest scale again is being written in that Eastern Mediterranean area, which was the cradle of our civilization, and which through the centuries has been the scene of conflicts to which the present issue seems a shattering culmination.

It is a struggle to which Americans should not and cannot be indifferent, for in its outcome our destiny also is involved.

This does not mean that if the British stem the tide such outcome would necessarily preserve our easy way of life, nor that another German triumph would of itself endanger the security of the United States. Such an analysis of the issue now being decided is superficial.

But what we do know is that a great turning point in history has been reached. And we know further that by the turn of the fighting in the Struma and Vardar Valleys the lives of future generations along the Mississippi have been deeply affected. Our highly individualistic country is soon to realize its inexorable entanglement in the sweep of human destiny. For better or worse it is soon to realize the full force of the old Roman saying that "The Fates lead the willing. They drag the unwilling."

The Battle of the Beaches

Writer Draws Vivid Picture of How Britain May Be Invaded

By Drew Middleton. Associated Press War Correspondent.

This conception of an attempted invasion of England by the Nazis, drawn by Artist William Heaslip, is reprinted from The Star of October 6, 1940, because it illustrates so well the conditions envisioned by Drew Mid--Wide World Service. dleton in the accompanying article.

War Correspondent Drew Middleton, home from London on vacation, has drawn a graphic word picture of his conception of the "Battle of the Beaches" if Germany should launch her long-promised invasion of Britain. Middleton was with the British Expeditionary Force in Belgium and France last spring, and since has studied the British home defense setup. Here is his imaginative story of what invasion could be like.

TT COULD be like this:

 Some morning—perhaps next week, next month-the bleak office of the director of military intelligence in the War Office in Whitehall will slide from its usual studied nonchalance to the tenseness it has exhibited on such days as September 2, 1939, and May 9, 1940.

There on the old, highly polished desk will lie the evidence, the reports of questionings of German pilots shot down over Britain in the past 48 hours, terse messages from Sunderlands flying over the North Sea's wastes, crisp reports of fighter pilots back from combat patrols over the French coast. The evidence adds up to one word-

Captured German pilots promise a mighty blow by land, sea and air. The Sunderlands report a rendezvous of transports in Norwegian fjords. Fighter pilots see columns of trucks creeping along the arrow-straight French roads, barges thick as water bugs in the battered Channel harbors.

Grand Fleet Moves to Sea.

Across Whitehall, where Nelson's statue broods over the destinies of his successors, the Admiralty is awake, too. Destroyers and motor torpedo boats off the Low Countries scout German submarine concentrations.

From the Admiralty's secret radio station the First Sea Lord "makes a signal." In some far northern harbor the anchor chains of the grand fleet grind as the Royal Navy prepares to send its finest weapon to the defense of Britain.

Further down Whitehall the Air Ministry flashes orders to hundreds of hidden airfields where in twos and threes the Spitfires, Hurricanes and Whirlwinds wait. Elsewhere the little trucks trundle out the bombs. The Wellingtons, Hampdens, Halifaxes are loaded and the crews standing by in the sunshine.

The army puts in motion the delicately balanced plan with which it hopes to smash the invaders. Tommies nestle in rifle pits and pillboxes along the coastline, with extra ammunition at their sides. Far from the coast, gunners clear their weapons' snouts of camouflage.

By evening the portents are more plain. The R. A. F. has encountered unusually heavy anti-aircraft fire along the roads leading to the French coast. There are fleets of German fighters where none was before. The heavy German guns are speaking across the Channel with

This beach, a semi-circular bit of sand backed by chalk cliffs, is an annex to hell. From dilapidated beach houses, from concealed pillboxes comes the rifle and machine gun fire of the infantry. The air is heavy with the drone of many motors. In the sky above, British fighters slash at the Germans seeking local command of the air. From back in the hills come the shells from 6, 8 and 10 inch guns, dropping methodically "by squares" in the surf

now crowded with the invaders' barges. A Blenheim bomber breaks through the German fighters and lays its stick of bombs across the water.

One . . . two . . . three. All misses. Then two blinding fiashes. Twin columns of shattered bodies, water and twisted steel rise into the air. The other barges falter, then come on, bumping the waves created by the explosion.

Replacements, dizzy from noise and the heaving earth, appear to take the shock of the gray green tide of Nazis.

Here and there men meet in that oddity of modern warfare, hand-to-hand combat. A lance corporal of the Guards tosses away his empty tommy gun and goes for a German with his bayonet. The figures struggle until the great white flash of an exploding bomb envelops

The last British fighter at the station takes to the air to combat the attackers. As it climbs, a battery of field guns some miles distant begins to pour its shells onto the field.

Seizure of Axis Ships Focuses Attention on Hobbs Alien Bill

But in a time of national emergency the non-citizen becomes Uncle Sam's red-headed stepchild. or permitted to remain. 5. That he has Within the ranks of these uninvited complied with the requirements of the guests of the Nation in a time of crisis lurks the Trojan Horse.

The most recent episode in the drama of what might be entitled "Waging Undeclared War by Aliens" has been the seizure of 28 Italian, two German and 39 Danish merchant ships tied up in American harbors, and the detention or internment of their alien crews.

Deportation proceedings await almost a thousand alien seamen who manned the vessels of the axis powers, and who are charged with the unlawful sabotage of ships in American territorial waters in violation of one section of the 1917

The alien crew of one German vessel, the tanker Pauline Friedrich at Boston, is held at the immigration station there, and sailors of another Nazi motorship. the Arauca, are detained at the Coast Guard station in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Meanwhile, the axis governments clamor for the release of the seized vessels and

The problem of the disposition of the alien crews of these ships focuses renewed interest on the Hobbs bill (H. R. 3) now pending before the House, and recently reported from the Judiciary Committee. The Hobbs bill, by all signs of political augury, seems destined for favorable action by Congress this spring.

Aliens Since Registered.

Representative Hobbs, who has served from Alabama's 4th district since 1934, introduced his bill originally on May 5, 1939. Its purpose was to place in custody about 850 deportable aliens who were white slavers, drug peddlers, anarchists, advocates of the overthrow of our Government by force and felons whose crimes involved moral turpitude.

Opponents of the bill at the time claimed that its purpose was "to authorize the establishment of Hitleresque concentration camps and stockades"to quote a line from Mr. Hobbs himself. This and similar arguments were sufficient to prevent Congress from enacting the Hobbs bill at the time.

A great deal of water has gone under the bridge, however, since May, 1939the Alien Registration Act of 1940, for instance—which makes legislation of the type sponsored by Representative Hobbs not only desirable, but imperative.

The Hobbs bill in its amended 1941 form would establish in the Justice Department a board for the supervision of deportable aliens, consisting of three members, appointed by the President with senatorial consent. Each board member would receive an annual salary of $8,000. This board would have jurisdiction over all aliens against whom a valid warrant of deportation was outstanding, pending deportation. Such aliens could be held without bail, but not put at hard labor, for varying periods up to a year (or additional time if necessary) at the discretion of the board. The bill grants aliens of this class certain immunities and imposes other prohibi-

Changes in Status Provided.

Under the terms of title 4 of the bill, the Attorney General would have authority to grant a change of status from that of a non-immigrant to that of an immigrant for permanent residence to any alien who applies within two years after the effective date of the act and who can make a satisfactory showing on one of the following grounds:

1. That he was admitted to the United States as a non-immigrant prior to January 1, 1941, and has resided in the United States since such entry. 2. That he is racially eligible to naturalization. 3. That he is a person of good moral partment an effective method of handling character and "attached to the principles | alien deportees and undesirables.

In piping times of peace, aliens are | of the Constitution of the United States." except for having remained longer than the period for which he was admitted Alien Registration Act, 1940. 6. That there is substantial reason to believe that he would be subject to political, racial, or religious persecution were he to return to the country of his nativity, citizenship, > or last permanent residence. If enacted into law, this discretionary authority to the Attorney General to change the status of non-immigrants to immigrants would solve a lot of the headaches which are perplexing the Alien Registration Division of the Justice Department, as an aftermath to the 1940 alien registration.

Alternatives to Deportation.

Attorney General Jackson has informed Representative Sumners, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, that the Justice Department has outstanding 8,091 warrants of deportation. Of these, 6,249 cannot be executed because of conditions due to the war beyond control; 3.947 of them having been issued against aliens whose native countries have refused to issue passports permitting them to return, and 2,302 of them being unenforceable on account of transportation difficulties. The Attorney General said in his letter: "I am forced to the conclusion that during the period of world disorder we must cease to rely solely upon deportation as a protection of our society against undesirable aliens and must adopt a realistic policy based upon the impracticability of deportation." Alternatives to deportation are not easy to devise. Hundreds of the deportable aliens have criminal records and ought not to be paroled. For criminal classes of the deportees, confinement pending deportation is the only feasible solution. In other cases, a limited parole of the aliens, under bond or upon their own recognizance, can be followed.

During the months of our participation in the first World War, 1917-18, the question faced the government of what to do with enemy aliens; unnaturalized persons who had been born in Germany or Austria-Hungary. On April 6, 1917, the date of our entry into the war against Germany, President Wilson issued a proclamation which forbade enemy aliens to possess firearms, or to enter military or naval areas or arsenals.

World War Restrictions Cited.

By subsequent acts. German men and women 14 years of age and over who were aliens were obliged to register with the Justice Department and to have their registration cards with them at all times. No alien enemy could change his place of residence or occupation or even travel from place to place without full and clear authority from the Attorney General. In order to do away with the hysterical overtones of the spy mania of 1917-18, the Smith bill was passed by Congress in June, 1940. This measure required all aliens to register and be fingerprinted between August 27 and December 26, 1940 (about 100 days for completing registration). When registration ended on December 26, nearly 5,000,000 aliens had registered, or one-and-one-half over pre-registration estimates. The information which the 5,000,000 alien registrants put on forms is now being coded and answers punched on index cards, in a way which will ingeniously tabulate the data, and yet be meaningless to the uninitiated. Cameras photograph the forms at the rate of several thousand a day on microfilm, and the miniature negatives are so admirably compact that the photographic reductions of the registrants of all America can be stored in a couple of cabinets. If the Hobbs bill is enacted into law in amended form, it will help to straighten out many of the kinks in alien registration problems, and give the Justice De-

The Resurrection

The world needs Easter in 1941 as it never required it before. In nearly two thousand years there have been few disasters which might be considered comparable with that which now afflicts humanity. The influence of the strife in Europe, Africa and Asia already has changed the pattern of life for millions of people in the Americas. Before the triumph of Christ over the grave again shall be celebrated much of the civilization which derives from Him may have perished and been lost. Multitudes of men and women are conscious of the danger.

What panic might develop were it not for the promise of the Saviour can be imagined even by the dullest mind. The pledge of salvation which the Son of God was commissioned to give to His sorrowful brothers nineteen centuries ago still is a valid covenant upon which a mutual and tolerant society may rest. Let it be reaffirmed that it is the denial of the doctrine of Jesus, the rejection of His philosophy of justice and mercy that is responsible for the agony of the race today. The pagan dogma of greed and violence is expressed in the revolution which the dictators have created to the end that "a new order" of conquest and subjugation may be established under the helpless sky.

But it does not follow that the cause of Christ has been defeated. His mission was supposed to have failed when He hung upon the cross. | defense, will do so without com-The centurian who watched Him die | plaint, and that is an additional thought of Him as a hero or a martyr who had been destroyed. Joseph of Arimathaea, who wrapped Him in linen and laid Him in the rock-hewn sepulchre, certainly believed Him dead. The chief priests and the Pharisees remembered His prediction that He would rise from the tomb; yet they did not expect an authentic fulfillment of His prophecy.

Even Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, and Salome do not seem to have guessed the inevitability of the resurrection. It was to them that the angel said: "He goeth before you into Galilee," but they were not credited when they reported the ultimate miracle to the disciples. It is written that "He appeared unto the eleven * * * and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen."

So is it now, when ages have passed and the masters of nations make choice of evil over good, Hell over Heaven. The spirit of Christ remains the great reality, His sacrifice the redemption, His Word the key to peace. Perhaps the terrors of this present Easter may prompt an acceptance of His teaching from which freedom and fellowship throughout the world would accrue. If not, God help His children in the hour of their final suffering.

Philippine Exports

In pointing out in the House that the objectives of our embargo on the export of strategic raw materials are being defeated because the axis powers have obtained some of these commodities from the Philippines, Representative Stefan has sounded a timely warning. In addition to large shipments of copra and coconut oil to Russia, the Philippines have exported to Japan, in recent months, substantial quantities of manganese, iron ore, and Manila hemp, which is used in the manufacture of rope for the Navy. That Germany has received part of these shipments can hardly be doubted.

If the embargo of the United States Government is to be fully effective, it is essential, therefore, that the flow of war materials to Germany from the Philippines be checked. Mr. J. M. Elizalde, resident commissioner of the Philippines, has stated that his government desires to "co-operate with the United States in any form of export control that may be deemed effective in safeguarding the interests of national defense." In his opinion, this Government has the authority, under existing law, to place shipments from the islands under export control.

Representative Stefan takes a different view. In passing export control legislation Congress excluded the islands from the operations of the law. Inasmuch as the Tydings-McDuffle Act conferred local self rule on the Filipino people, Mr. Stefan seems to be on solid ground in named Rashid Ali Beg Gallani, who by the State Compensation Board. declaring that extension of export control to the Philippines should native army. This legislation would become effective on approval by the President of the United States. In view of the importance of complementary action by the Philippines, it is to be hoped that the commonwealth government, on its own initiative, will enact export control legislation without delay. As Representative Stefan pointed out, such action is within the power of the Philippine government, and would clearly be in line with the desire of the Philippine people to co-operate with the measures taken by the United States to safeguard national defense in the present emergency.

An Emergency Need

Reports that the Federal Government is planning to requisition office space from the District to accommodate pressing national defense needs will come as a disappointment to the local community, but at the same time there will be general recognition of the fact that every effort must be made to satisfy Federal emergency requirements.

From present indications, it seems probable that either the east building of the new Municipal Center or the new National Guard Armory drill hall may be taken over temporarily because of the War Department's urgent and immediate need for office space. Should that prove to be the case, and if an election is possible, it is to be hoped that the drill hall rather than the Municipal Center will be chosen.

In the first place, the Municipal Center building is not scheduled to be completed until June 1, while it is believed the drill hall could be made ready for Federal occupancy within two weeks. The latter is more than adequate to meet the War Department's reported need for 120,000 square feet of space. Another important consideration concerns the fact that the east building has been specially designed in part and contains specialized equipment to accommodate such local units as the Department of Vehicles and Traffic. This specialized equipment would have to be torn out if the building were turned over to the War Department, but no such difficulty exists in the case of the drill hall.

The people of the District, if called upon to give up either building temporarily in the interests of national reason why the Federal authorities, in making a selection, should do so with a view to satisfying their own requirements while working the least possible injury to the necessarily subordinated needs of the city.

Trouble in Iraq

The recent political upset in Iraq typifies the disturbed conditions which today prevail in the Near East. Better known by its historic name, Mesopotamia, Iraq was set up as a mandate of the League of Nations after the collapse of the Turkish Empire in the Great War. The mandatory power was Great Britain, and its effective status was that of a protectorate of the British Empire, though with a native ruler in the person of Emir Feisal, son of the Shereef of Mecca.

Iraq's international importance is due mainly to the rich oil fields in its northern province of Mosul. This oil is piped westward across intervening desert to the Mediterranean, the output being shared between the British in Palestine and the French in Syria. An uninterrupted flow of this precious stream of oil is vital to British naval and mechanized land power in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Though numbering less than 3,000,-000, the Arab population of Iraq is turbulent and unstable. Outside the towns and narrow bands of cultivated land along the banks of the great rivers Tigris and Euphrates, the inhabitants are largely nomadic tribes, wandering with their flocks and herds according to the seasons. The British mandate was never popular, and chronic troubles led the British to relax their control. In ·1927 Feisal was acknowledged king, and the mandate was terminated in 1932, when Iraq was admitted to membership in the League as an independent state.

Despite technical independence, Britain retained a considerable measure of veiled control. However, the arrangement worked well. because King Feisal was friendly to Britain. Unfortunately, Feisal was killed in a motor accident in the spring of 1939. In the Near East a change of monarch is always a serious matter. This was especially true in Iraq, because Feisal's son and heir was only four years old. Obviously, there had to be a regent. And that, in turn, opened up bitter controversies between the leading notables. In Arab lands there are always a few great clan-families who intrigue and fight one another with all the venom of Montagues and Capulets. When one faction controls the government the other automatically goes into opposition and seldom scruples to accept outside aid. German and Italian agents have been busy in Iraq and certainly played a part in the palace revolution staged last week in Baghdad, when the pro-British regent, Abdul Illah, was ousted by a rival notable seized power with the backing of the The proposal advanced by Mr. wealth. cites an opinion of Vicente Villamin, be interpreted chiefly in terms of

Furthermore, the position of the new government is unstable. Already, the exiled regent has made an attempt to stage a counter-revolution. That was put down. But several powerful Bedouin tribes have declined to recognize the new setup, while some high army officers are reported to have resigned in protest against Rashid's coup. Meanwhile, a British air force remains in the country, under treaty rights, though it seems to be discreetly neutral. Also, Britain has a further hold on Iraq through its protectorate over the small yet highly strategic sultanate of Kuweit at the head of the Persian Gulf. So, in case of necessity, Britain has trump cards to play.

The Red Sea

A history of the Red Sea would be a history of the world. President Roosevelt, announcing its availability to American merchant ships carrying supplies to the British forces in the Eastern Mediterranean, prompts a recollection that the waters between the coasts of Arabia and those of Egypt, Nubia and Abyssinia have been an important channel of commerce since the dawn of civilization.

The Red Sea was navigated as early as the second millennium B.C. Menetah I, whose monuments are numerous at Karnak, is supposed to have dug the first canal from the Nile toward the rising run. Rameses II had a fleet which operated to the south. According to Herodotus, a Phoenician-Egyptian expedition circumnavigated Africa about 604 years prior to the Christian era.

There are twenty-four references to Yam suph in the Scriptures. It was over the Gulf of Suez that the Hebrews fled before Pharaoh and his hosts. Whether or not the latter actually were drowned in a miraculous flood probably now is a purely academic problem. Moses and the unknown Psalmist believed the story; and Gustave Dore, long after their time, illustrated it convincingly, with chariots and horsemen being overwhelmed in the manner described in the fourteenth chapter of Exodus.

Meanwhile, when the Arabs produced a culture of their own during the "dark ages" of Western Europe, they used the Red Sea as a path to India and Persia. The influence of the thinkers of the farthest Orient came to Islam over its waves. After the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 the traffic to Australia and New-Zealand, the Malay States and Burma, not to mention the Hindustan peninsula, was directed through the strait called Bab el Mandeb and the Gulf of Aden. That lifeline recently had been relieved of Italian pressure by successful campaigns to recapture British Somaliland and release Ethiopia. American shipping could not have been routed to Alexandria via the Indian Ocean had those efforts failed.

The color of the Red Sea, it might be added, is due to a marine plant designated Trichodesmium erythraeum. A German naturalist, Christian Gottfried Ehrenberg, discovered the solution of the mystery in 1826.

Virginia Fee System

A proposal advanced by L. Mc-Carthy Downs, Virginia State auditor, to abolish the fee system of compensating sheriffs and city sergeants deserves the careful study of legislators and the public alike. For some months the matter has been receiving the attention of a committee of the Governor's Legislative Advisory

Mr. Downs, who said he made his proposal independently for whatever consideration the legislators may choose to give it, has summarized the shortcoming of the present system in a convincing manner.

Objectionable features listed by him include the incentive on the part of the sheriff, sergeant or deputy to make an arrest because he receives a fee for his service, and may also receive a mileage allowance. The arresting officers in many instances also receive witness fees. Furthermore, sheriffs and sergeants often have an incentive to place as many people as possible in jail because they get committal and release fees. In addition, the sheriff, sergeant or deputy, if he is the jailer, may be tempted to keep the jail population high because the greater the number of prisoners the larger his income, and, while it may not be exercised, the incentive is there to feed prisoners at the lowest cost possible to maintain the income of the officer at a relatively high

Finally, Mr. Downs contends, the system is bound to be unsatisfactory to the sheriff, sergeant or deputy because he never knows how much he can count on as income-and is placed in the "ridiculous position" of having his income depend upon the amount of litigation and crime in his neighborhood.

Salaries proposed by Mr. Downs in lieu of fees would give the officers approximately the same income they have been receiving, as it is not his idea to reduce the income of the officers involved. He believes the cost of administering the salary bill would be approximately the same as under the fee system. In a few years, Mr. Downs predicted, the cost of operating the jail system probably would be reduced and the officers would be in a position to receive higher salaries. Exact amounts would be fixed

Discusses U. S. Role in War at Sea

By Owen L. Scott.

The real mystery of America's part in the present World War concerns merchant shipping. From the start of the war it has seemed clear that the issue might be decided at sea. Probably no person in the world was more convinced that sea control would be decisive than was President Roosevelt.

The problem of sea control involved assurance of a line of supply for Britain and blockade for Germany. To assure a line of supply for Britain there had to be either naval action to protect existing merchant ships against submarine and air attack, or a program of shipbuilding that could outdistance the submarine and air sinkings.

Yet the United States has done and is doing relatively little to solve the problem in either field.

There is a pledge to give to Britain every aid short of war. However, American ships may not carry that aid to England or even to Canada. Not only that, there is no program of shipbuilding large enough, or speedy enough, to supply Britain or Canada with the ships they need to carry their own and American war goods.

Shipbuilding programs have been announced with great fanfare during the past year. But the actual facts show it will be 10 months before a single merchant ship is completed for delivery to Britain under the emergency shipbuilding program. It will be nearly two years before ships are turned out fast enough to overcome the present rate of submarine and air attack. By that time there may not be a war.

The mystery is heightened by a closer look at the figures.

In the last war the United States started by building 821,000 tons of shipping in 1917. This total shot ahead to 2,502.000 tons in 1918 and then to 3,580,-000 tons in 1919, as the program mapped in wartime reached its peak.

In the present war the United States started by building 171,000 tons in 1939. This total rose to 349,000 tons in 1940. The emergency program calls for total construction of 2,541,000 tons during 1941 and 1942 and this two-year program is being augmented by another 212

Ship sinkings of late have averaged about 100,000 tons a week, or at a rate of 5,000,000 tons a year. Ships are being damaged and put out of use for varying periods, at an undisclosed rate, but it is reported to be high. Great Britain is able to build replacements at a rate of no more than 1,000,000 tons a year, so the problem falls into the lap of the United States.

* * * * It is apparent from the figures that the present situation cannot go on if Great Britain is to maintain her position at home and build up a new front in the Balkans that will require large amounts of shipping to supply.

Thus, the choice open to the United States is becoming clear.

Either the United States, pledged by national policy to aid Britain, can start out now to build ships at record-breaking speed in an effort to make up for nearly two years of lost time, depending meanwhile upon seizure of idle foreign shipping in American ports and upon sale of more American ships to Britain, or it can start out to protect available ships from submarines and aircraft so there will be less need for emergency construction of a vast fleet of "ugly duckling" merchant vessels to overcome the submarine menace by their numbers alone.

If the second choice is taken, the mystery of the delay in merchant shipbuilding will be cleared up. The reason is it then will be apparent this country's decision is to see that ships are not destroyed in unusual numbers. Mr. Roosevelt may have made that decision long ago. If made, it would rest upon the premise that there is little to be gained by building ships and filling them with the products of American mines, factories, forests and farms only to have those products sent to the bottom of the ocean.

But how is the problem of delivery to be solved, except by outright war? With war the United States Navy immediately would tilt the balance against the submarine and the air attacker. The present problem really breaks itself down into two parts, one part of which is not difficult to solve.

This first, and easiest part, can be said to be that of supplying a Balkan front. Great Britain now has cleaned out most Italian forces in the Red Sea area, Once that job is complete this area no longer need be a combat zone and American merchant ships can enter it. When that happens, war goods from the United States will move in American ships around Africa, on a 12,000-mile jaunt to the Red Sea and the eastern end of the Mediterranean, where British ships can take over in a sea area dominated by their navy.

The second part is much more difficult. It concerns getting goods to Brit-

An overworked British Navy is proving unable to police all of the seas of the world against German raiders. The United States already has made it clear that it intends to keep sea marauders out of the waters of the Western Hemisphere. Geographers, whose opinions this Government accepts, say the hemisphere in the north extends to a point just west of Iceland. Within this area an American neutrality patrol, composed of the Atlantic Fleet, is operating now. The governments and peoples of the hemisphere have accepted the operation of this patrol.

As a result, there would be little new in a decision to warn all nations that any interference with shipping in the waters of the Western Hemisphere would not be tolerated by the United States. This warning would extend to German submarines, German surface raiders and freedom of the seas in the area of American control they would do so at their own risk and with the understanding that they would have to face the United States Navy. To simplify the task of policing to enforce the freedom of hemisphere traffic lanes, the Atlantic route could be pushed farther north to a point that means he will operate in waters even affects all other countries." beginning. From the fatigue of labor we go to our rest, from the refreshment of sleep we go forth again to labor. Thus life is broken into fragments and thus we measure the flight of time. Men have found in the divisions of time the symbols of death and of life. Sleep, that "knits up the raveled sleeve of care," is the "death of each day's life." The awakening of the morning is the symbol of the recreated life. It is with "each morn we are born anew."

So with the recurring seasons, man has found that which speaks of the changing phases of life, its springtime renewal, its summer that breathes contentment and relaxed energies, its golden autumn that calls for reflection and meditation, its winter that suggests the shortened days and twilights that remind him of the lengthening years and the swift passage of time itself. Life's moods are largely governed by the changing seasons. That Easter comes as a spring festival has a deep significance. It is of all the seasons the period of rejuvenation. Nature's swift changes under warming suns and gentle rains bring back to life and beauty shrub and grass and flower and leafy tree. It seems as if some magician's wand had touched that which seemed dead and cold and with irresistible power had called it back to life. The resurrection story is associated with a garden, and its mighty teachings broke upon a sleeping world with a new day's morning. Even the early visitors that came to the tomb of the crucified Christ thought, as with bewildered eyes they beheld Him, that He was the gardener. And so He was! He was the new gardener who was to bring to men the noblest vision of renewed life the world had ever known. All the glow of a finer and larger life came with the dawn of that first Easter morning and it came with the spring and the renewal of the things of nature. From the dark shadows of a fateful

Every new day is a rebirth, a fresh | Good Friday with its seeming defeat and lost opportunities, the Easter dawn with its sunrise brought to mankind the demonstration of a power that even death itself could not master.

It is not strange that the message of that new morning has made each Easter. through the long centuries, the day of days in the calendar. Never possibly in the lifetime of living men has its message conveyed a stronger or more appealing lesson than it does today. The world is once again shadowed by the dark clouds of war. Nations, hitherto friendly, have risen to smite and destroy their neighbors. The fine things laboriously built up have suffered disaster and destruction. All that men cherish most is imperiled. Despite this, and despite the folly and wickedness of men, the Easter morn breaks again and its mighty message still persists. After the grave, victory. After defeat, triumph. After all the leagued forces of evil have spent their force, peace. Strike out from the cherished hope of the world this great truth and life loses its truest meaning and the hopes of men turn to bitter despair and hopelessness. That "hope springs eternal in the human breast,' and that the high purpose of God as revealed long ago in a garden and at the dawn cannot be defeated, this is the inspiration that once again comes to a tired and distracted world and makes it believe that the triumph of all that man most desires must ultimately come to Little wonder is it that the exigencies and stern realities of life find here in this oft-repeated Easter story the one assurance that after "life's fitful dream" there comes the new and eternal morning. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." We have hope of better mornings ahead and beyond the last upon which human eyes shall open, there comes at length the eternal morning, upon whose dawn no slanting shadows ever fall.

Railroad Proposed to Span Sahara

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Although war is now engaging the attention of all Europe, there are said to be many plans in the making for gigantic after-war developments. Possibly the greatest of these is a determination of interested nations to lay down a railway to span for 1,000 miles the rocky, sandy Sahara Desert. The idea is not entirely new, for 10 years ago the French worked out such a project and sounded out Italy, Great Britain and Belgium as to their interest in its development. It was reported at the time that reaction on all fronts was favorable.

The long camel caravans which have traversed the Sahara for generations have taken their leisurely course along traditional paths determined by the oases. Beyond these more or less habitable spots where there is water and some vegetation lie great expanses of waterless plains and hills which until recent years were entirely unexplored and unmapped. After the close of the first World War, the French, impatient for exact knowledge of their African domain, penetrated deeper every year into the Sahara and brought increasing areas of it under control.

In their explorations the French plowed their way across this great desert with motor trucks fitted with caterpillar wheels: they flew above it and traced ranges of dunes and ancient water courses upon maps previously characterized by blank spaces; they drilled artesian wells and cultivated crops where there was nothing but dry sand before. During those years they looked forward to the day when one would be able to ride across the Sahara in a Pullman car sipping iced drinks in front of an electric fan all the way from the Mediterranean to the Gulf of Guinea, traveling from Paris to Timbuktu in four days.

But the trans-Saharan railway is not proposed primarily for the benefit of globe-trotters who would enjoy the novelty of journeying from the center of civilization to the edge of the tropical jungle in a de luxe train. Its principal use would be to bring the now remote countries of Africa within convenient reach, from the administrative and military as well as the economic point of view. The new line would enable French commanders or other military officials to throw a regiment or so upon any disturbed point with a promptitude which would insure a pacification of the desert and make policing of it manageable. Moreover, the trans-Saharan line would serve to stimulate economic development of the colonies south of the desert, carrying wine, salt, sugar, dates, gasoline, clothing, and the manufactures of Europe to the relatively isolated populations near the Equator, and bringing back cotton, cocoa, palm oil, rubber, timber, hides, tobacco, and numerous other raw materials of lesser value.

Africa's greatest handicap is its lack of ransportation, but its trade has expanded steadily for many years. For instance, the aggregate of its commerce has been about 35 per cent greater in the last decade than in the previous 10 years, while its production of foodstuffs and raw materials has gained a greater percentage. Exports and imports of Nigeria, the Gold Coast, the Belgian Congo and French West Africa alone now amount to approximately $500,000,000

According to present plans, the line would extend from Oran, Algeria, to Gao on the Niger, thence following the Niger Valley via Niamey to the Gulf of Guinea It is here that the international part of the project comes in. The railway might be prolonged into Nigeria to connect with the British system there and through the Cameroons and French Equatorial Africa into the Belgian Congo Before the Nazis seized Belgium, the Belgians expressed a keen interest in this possibility, and it is assumed that their interest still remains. The consensus is that if the Belgians are not interested Hitler is and the plan would likely meet his approval.

Adjoining the Belgian Congo on the east are the British possessions of Uganda, Kenya, and Tanganyika, the former German East Africa, representing with the French colonies to the west and north an immense and little developed tropical area abounding in a variety of raw materials, and capable perhaps of becoming a greater market for European goods. The new line would put this vast territory in touch with world markets.

Fortunately for the explorers and railway builders, the Sahara is not entirely an area of shifting sand. It is a great stony, windswept expanse, composed mostly of rock which here and there forms hills and plateaus. On the immense plains, which are remarkably level is found a fairly solid surface of sand and pebbles which offers a natural base for motor road or railway. It is the regions of moving sand, together with general scarcity of water, which makes the Sahara formidable for transport These areas are always covered with sand dunes which sometimes are as high as 500 feet.

The actual construction of the proposed railroad, according to engineers, might take place at a rapid rate. A few years ago in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan a railroad was laid at the rate of 4 miles a day, and in Siberia at the rate of 6 miles a day. In Arizona, in the United States, in Russia, Turkestan, and in Australia, railways have been built across great deserts. In the Sahara the question of water supply for builders and for trains is a difficult one, for water in the middle of the desert contains too much magnesia and sulphates to be used in boilers. To meet this difficulty, it is suggested that water from the Niger be carried north in a canal, or that Diesel engines be used to generate electrical power at stations about 300 miles apart.

Italy's interests in Africa are relatively small, and this is one of Italy's principal grievances. Italy was invited to join the Sahara railway scheme at the time it was proposed, because she, too, had long contemplated building a desert railway, a rival line that would run from Tripoli to Lake Chad, roughly parallel to the proposed line and about 800 miles east of it. So the question arises whether Italian Tripoli or French Algeria will first serve as the Mediterranean terminus of a railway to the center of

Battle of the Balkans Reaches Critical Stage as Axis Invaders Drive Southward

Review of Eighty-Fourth Week of War

By John C. Henry.

This was a dark but dramatic week in the world's war, one which brought sudden new setbacks for the nations fighting the totalitarian axis. In the Balkans, roaring Nazi columns drove simultaneously last Sunday morning at Yugoslavia and Greece. By yesterday they had occupied a sizable portion of North Yugoslavia, had cut a swath across the southern portion of the country to territory occupied by Italian troops in Albania and had taken over the eastern neck of Greece, including Salonika.

In North Africa German-Italian forces had driven the British almost out of Italian Libya, but in East Africa the empire troops were completing their wipe-up of Italian detachments.

Here President Roosevelt announced agreement for defense of Danishowned Greenland, opening of Gulf of Aden and Red Sea to American

On Fighting Front

The swift German assault in the Balkans actually was launched from three nominally non-German lands-Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria-and was concentrated in five spearheads driving toward (1) Ljubljana and Zagreb in Slovenia, (2) Belgrade, (3) the rail junction at Nis, (4) Skoplje, strategically located Serb city commanding Vardar Valley, (5) down Struma Valley toward

As per customary Nazi pattern, heavily mechanized and fast-moving columns were supported by strong air forces, including dive bombers and strafing planes which blasted at defending transport lines and particularly at capital city of Belgrade. Earlier declarations by Yugoslavs that latter would not be defended failed to afford it immunity from destructive air raids.

Nazi advances averaged about 25 miles in the first 24 hours, but developments of Tuesday were even more alarming. Apparently aware that British-Greek-exposed to attack down river valley. Although Greek forces in this area held on valiantly through hours of toughest attack, and eastern Greek defenders had been holding own in Struma fighting, German break of Serbs actually wrote fate of Salonika area.

At this point it was evident that Nazi strategy was to separate Yugoslavs and Greeks completely, while establishing contact between their own forces and the less successful legions of Il Duce in Albania. Meanwhile, out of action and in fact out of sight was British Army, reported large and well equipped, which had been landing in Greece for at least two weeks past.

In face of these initial reverses, one of announced Allied objectives was to drive Italians out of Albania by pinching movement from three sides. Only in Nis and Belgrade. slight degree was this strategy translated

By Wednesday morning, capitulation of Nis and Skoplje was established; by that nightfall, Salonika had fallen to German arms Salonika and remnants of Greek defending army in Thrace and Macedonia were reported surrounded and surrendering. Abandoning Salonika, Greek rear guard units destroyed harbor facilities and oil installations valued at millions of dollars.

Considered best harbor on Aegean Sea, Salonika may now become base for German air operations against Lower Greece, British-occupied islands, and perhaps Suez area itself. As gravity of Balkan situation became obvious in midweek, Britain's Prime Minister Churchill made comprehensive report on progress of war to House of Commons. Admitting German successes on Greek-Yugoslav fronts, Britisher countered these by announcing capture of Red Sea port of Massaua and virtual completion of Italian defeat in East Africa, acknowledged British reverses in Libya, then directed specific warning at Russian Ambassador (seated in House) that Nazi designs must soon embrace drive for rich Ukraine and Caucasus areas of Southeastern Russia.

Although Churchill then acknowledged that British forces in Greece had not yet engaged invaders, indications on Thursday were Strategy that fundamental Greek-British defense plan from beginning-apparently formulated before Yugoslav resistance to axis had been assured-involved establishment of line from Aegean to Adriatic, excluding Salonika area, cutting Greek-Yugoslav-Albania corner and extending to Adriatic along present Greek-Italian front.

And as Yugoslav resistance recoiled from shock of first few days of Nazi assault to slow down invading columns, German sources on Thursday announced another step in their accustomed pattern of conquest-the formation of a pro-Nazi government for Croatia, headed by Ante Pavelic, exiled leader of Ustachi terrorist organization which is blamed for plotting assassination of Yugoslav King Alexander in Marseilles in 1934.

What effect this development might have on further Balkan fighting is not yet apparent, but Berlin claimed on Friday that "the enemy forces fighting in Southern Serbia are destroyed," that German columns had occupied both Zagreb and Belgrade, and that several Serb divisions had been trapped between

On Wednesday night, perhaps in angry retaliation for bad news from Balkans, swarms of British bombers-probably including the latest heavy raiders built in America-roared over Berlin to give Germans fair taste of what London has been taking. "The battle of the Atlantic may well decide the result of the war," London sources admitted.

Tightening control of ship movements was reflected in British closing of one of two ferry routes still operating between England and Eire. And tightening control of Britain's economy for war purposes was reflected in announcement on Monday of 50 per cent income tax on England's rich and poor.

Of interest during this week also were two pronouncements from France's Vichy government. First of these was address by Chief of State Petain containing declaration that "honor requires us to undertake nothing against our former allies (the British)." Second was announcement that emigration of young and ablebodied Frenchmen was being restricted, with unofficial explanation that thousands were seeking to join the "free French" forces of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

CHURCHILL NEVER IDLE, SLEEPS AT WILL

Smoking 30 Cigars a Day, He Often Discharges Work of Two Men

By H. J. J. Sargint,

Winston Spencer Churchill, Prime Minister of his majesty's government in the United Kingdom, to give him his formal title, rose this morning, he had no idea when his day's work would finish. He never has. To him every day is a new adventure and, as with all men who are linked with the control of the great events of these times, he can be tied to no hard and fast schedule. Mr. Churchill once wrote of himself, "I have never been idle," and nobody knows better than the members of his staff the truth of these

Reckoned by the hours worked by the average citizen, a day in the Prime Minister's life really counts as two, for it is by no means unusual for him to work 18 hours straight off. Whatever the hour when he starts, which may vary according to the duration of his overnight discussions with servivce chiefs, he always begins the day by going carefully through the news. Mr. Churchill has agreed with a certain grim amusement to the urgent appeals of his colleagues in the cabinet not to sleep at 10 Downing street. Where he goes is a secret, but he is sometimes to be found back in Downing street as early as 7 a.m. Bodyguard Comes In First.

One of the first persons to see him is his bodyguard, a member of the metropolitan police. This man brings to the Prime Minister the first batch of papers and dispatches and he is commonly reputed being armed with a pistol which belongs to the Prime Minister himself.

Often when Mr. Churchill reaches Downing street in the morning he will go straight back to bed, because he can do an enormous amount of paper work, reading reports and annotating minutes. propped up in bed and so conserving his energies for a long day. Possibly the news awaiting him will necessitate arrangements for seeing people during the morning and instructions are given from his bedroom for the fixing of appointments. Frequently, too, he will have his advisers and others intimately associated with him in the conduct of the war at these early morning meetings, at which important decisions are often reached. Then he will turn to his personal correspondence, which, as may be imagined,

But even at meal times a secretary is never far away. There is always the possibility the Premier will want to dictate something.

Often Coins Phrases Then.

Those closest to him say that some of his most brilliant phrases have been coined at a meal or in bed. Nowadays the whole of the rest of the morning is spent with other members of the cabinet or in discussing points with expert advisers and with leaders of the three fighting services.

Generally, Mr. Churchill lunches at about 1:30 p.m. with Mrs. Churchill and sometimes with members of the family or with colleagues who may have been invited to continue talks begun earlier. The meal is quite informal and simple.

The afternoon activities vary considerably. Sometimes it is necessary for Mr. Churchill to go to the House of Commons, either to make a statement or to listen to some debate on matters dealing with the policy of the conduct of the war. He likes to do this whenever possible. Before going to the House, the Prime Minister may have to visit Buckingham Palace for an audience with the King. Sometimes, engagements permitting, Mr. Churchill will call to his aid his remarkable faculty of being able to sleep at will. He can curl up for a short sleep almost anywhere and will awaken obviously refreshed. A black band fixed over his eyes with a piece of elastic enables him to go to sleep almost immediately. Values United States Opinion.

Mr Churchill, as might be expected of a British Prime Minister who is also the son of an American mother, particularly values opinion coming to him from the United States. All the distinguished men who have recently come over from America realize this fact to the full. Wendell Willkie, Harry Hopkins, Col. William Donovan will bear me out. When John Winant came over to succeed Joseph Kennedy as Ambassador, he saw Mr. Churchill almost before he had shaken off the dust of his travels. He went to dinner with the Prime Minister and they spent the whole evening together. Mr. Hopkins spent the largest part of his time when in this country with the Prime Minister. As for Mr. Willkie, it is related that one discussion Prime Minister's time. He has simple he had with the Premier lasted for

Sir George Downing, after whom the street is named, although born in Ireland, spent his adolescent years in America before returning to be Secretary to the Treasury. Mr. Churchill rarely fails to remind American visitors of this connection between the dingy little street, leading from Whitehall to St. James' Park, and the United States.

Despite the enormous demands on his time, Mr. Churchill insists on preparing all his speeches himself. While dictating he paces up and down his room, is punctilious about the accuracy of his facts, which are checked and rechecked, and then, although a master of English, he will often have paragraphs read back to him for revision if he thinks it a devastating remark. Ordinarily, Mr Churchill will dine with his wife and possibly a few friends, after which there will be further consultations with colleagues, ministers and civil defense leaders, prominent industrialists or men of the fighting services. These searching discussions often last well into the night. As Minister of Defense, he keeps the closest possible touch and a tight finger on every aspect of the war. Occasionally, but not as often as he would wish, he makes a swift decision to see things for himself. In the early days of the London air raids, for instance, he would put on a steel helmet and set off before it was light to inspect damage and talk with A. R. P. workers.

He appreciates forthrightness of speech. Recently he paid an unannounced visit to some south coast defenses. Wandering ahead of his party, he was challenged by a sentry, who him. Moscow Pact With Belgrade May Bring Direct Conflict

By Constantine Brown.

The German attack in the Balkans was I precipitated by the "indiscretion" of the Yugoslav government in signing an agreement with the U.S.S.R. It is obvious that Yugoslavia can expect no help from the Soviet Union. But the gesture was important for the morale of the people in Serbia, who still looked upon the Russians-despite Stalin-as the patrons of their country.

The signature of such a token agreement, to which Great Britain and the United States did not object, might-according to a story which can be revealed now-bring the U.S.S.R. into direct conflict with the Reich. High United States diplomats believe that the honeymoon period between Berlin and Moscow is over, and that a spectacular divorce is likely to occur sometime this

But what was really important in that abortive discussion was that Hitler, who had let himself go, reportedly informed the Russian-born and Soviet-hating Paul that in June or July the axis powers would attack the U.S.S.R. and thus "eradicate an abscess which is poisoning the new European political and economic

Soon afterwards the news began to trickle out of Germany that no less than 100 German divisions, the largest Nazi force yet mustered in this war since the downfall of France, were gathered on the Russian-German border. High Washington officials, who had been apprised by responsible sources of the Hitler-Paul conversations, followed the Matsuoka-Hitler-Ribbentrop conversations with great interest. Rightly or wrongly, the White House and the State Department are taking lightly the alleged Japanese menace in the Pacific. They consider danger there possible only if the victory of the German arms in the Balkans and against Great Britain is overwhelming-and at the present moment they consider this a speculative matter. But an eventual joined action of the Japanese in the Far East and the Germans in Europe against the Soviet Republics is not being discounted.

So far as Japan is concerned, the U. S. S. R. always has been a thorn in its side. Moscow has facilitated Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's resistance to the Tokio aggressors. Furthermore, the presence in Siberia of a substantial Russian army and airforce has been worrying the Japanese general staff. It has not prevented Japan from taking Indo-China because only small forces were involved in that operation. But if Japan should decide to go in for expansion in the Southern Pacific with all her strength, an operation requiring most of her remaining man power as well as ships, Tokio would have an uncomfortable feeling as long as the Russian armies remain next door to Manchukuo.

Japanese - German efforts to bring about a genuine non-aggression pact with the Soviets have failed because Stalin is demanding a price the Japanese cannot pay-the Chinese Eastern Railways and the cession of Mukden and Harbin to Russia.

While there are no reliable reports from Berlin and Rome to prove what actually was decided between the representatives of the Emperor of Japan and the two dictators, there are certain indications that Mr. Matsuoka contemplates making a last appeal for something tangible from Stalin during his visit to Moscow. But neither Hitler nor Matoka trusts Stalin, and the Red dictator good faith that if he provides them he Eastern Europe and in Asia rather than will lose face altogether. here that Russia will be asked to demobilize portions of her Siberian armies and to remove most of the aviation from its present bases near Vladivostok. Furthermore, the Soviet government will have to step up its production of raw materials considerably and effectively, in order to live up to its treaty with the Reich regarding the delivery of such materials to Germany. The same sources believe that, as a guaranty that Russia will fulfill her treaty obligations toward the European end of the axis, the Moscow government must accept complete control by German "technicians." Berlin intends to take as firm a grip on Russia as she has taken on Italy.

What the policy of the U.S.S.R. will be when faced with these demands is an open question. There is no doubt that it will attempt to start protracted negotiations with both of its powerful neighbors.

Nazis Watch Russia.

This is fully expected in Berlin and for the time being Stalin is likely to be encouraged. But in the meantime, despite the requirements of the Balkan developments, no German troops have been removed from the Soviet border for other battle fronts. The German high command preferred to withdraw troops from Norway, Belgium and France rather than make any change in troop dispositions on the Russian border. The same thing applies to aviation. The 1,300 planes reported to have been stationed since last winter in Rumania and Bulgaria were not considered sufficient for the Balkan campaign. At least another 1,000 were added to that force, and it was decided to take these bombers and fighters from Western Europe rather than weaken the Luftwaffe on the potential Russian front. The Japanese are worried particularly about the presence of a substantial Soviet air force in Western Siberia: Japan is allergic to air attacks, as the distance from Vladivostock to any of the important and structurally vulnerable. Japanese cities is only 800 mile -a stretch which the new Russian bombers can fly with ease with a full load of bombs and return to their bases. What the outcome of this situation will be is hard to say. But British and American diplomats are doing their best to take advantage of the strain which unquestionably exists today between the will be required to give such proofs of this war may be fought ultimately in

Anniversary of Lincoln Assassination Recalls History of Ford's Theater Church Was Erected on

Site in 1834 Structure Rebuilt After Destruction By Fire in 1862

By John Clagett Proctor.

Good Friday, which, in 1865, fell on April 14, will ever be recalled as one of the saddest days in the annals of America, for it was upon this holy day that President Abraham Lincoln was shot while attending a performance at Ford's Theater, still standing at 511 Tenth street N.W., a grim reminder of a great diabolical crime.

Tomorrow will be the anniversary of this cruel deed, and yet, though it occurred 76 years ago, no doubt it is still remembered by a large number of Washingtonians, and others of advanced age, coming as it did as a climax to the four years of strife between the States, and the sacrifice of many thousands of lives, that this country might not perish from the earth.

Indeed, the farther we get away from the Civil War, with its many unpleasant memories, the greater will the martyr President loom in the hearts of the American people, for some day all will know him alike for his sympathetic nature, his kindness of heart, his unselfish motives, his high ideals and his devotion to country.

The interior of the theater building has been stripped of everything that went toward making it the most attractive playhouse in Washington in 1865, and here is now shown the famous Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics, formerly exhibited in the building opposite the theater, in which the President

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies

City Cleanliness Drive Pushed; Hearing Near on Vote Measure

By JESSE C. SUTER.

The past week started off with a most unusual incident. The daughter of the chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia appeared in the Police Court to answer a charge of traffic violation and paid the fine which the judge assessed against her. There was no suggestion of "ticket fixing" because "dad" refused to use his influence to have the ticket "fixed.' Traffic officials have long, in private conversation, admitted that one of the greatest obstacles to the fair enforcement of the traffic regulations is the large privileged class Senator Reynolds is being highly commended in civic circles for the stand he took in this case.

Among other notable happenings of the week was the conference of Senator Overton, Representative Jennings Randolph, and Commissioners Young and McCoach with the President on Monday. The President approved the Overton fiscal formula with a slight modification. The President also indicated that the District would receive a Federal allotment for the additional schools required to meet the emergency increase in the population of the District.

The District's Negligent Homicide Law was upheld by an opinion handed down on Monday by the United States Court of Appeals. It was announced that with the constitutionality of the law being settled the 20 pending cases will be put on trial promptly.

The proposal to legalize gambling in Montgomery County, Md., on the game of "Jai Alai" aroused the good citizens of the county more than any issue since the "belt line" proposal. The opposition was so general and vigorous that the proponents are reported to have capitulated. Leaders of the opposition urge that no chances be taken and that the fight be kept up relentlessly until the bill is vetoed by the Governor.

Assessor Dent is anxious for every one to know that Tuesday, April 15, is the last day for the filing of District income tax returns and the payment of the first half of the tax. The day that that "submerged half" of the District population is fined, through the local income tax, for being voteless, happens to be the 150th anniversary of the laying of the first cornerstone of the original District of Columbia. From the reading of contemporary history of the 1791 period there is no indication that the people had even the remotest idea that they were beginning the erection of one of the world's most notable despotisms.

Help Make Washington the World's Cleanest City

There is a job for every good citizen in the clean-up campaign which opens tomorrow and ends Saturday, April 26.

Officially the campaign is under the direction of a committee of the Board of Trade. It is approved by the District Commissioners and the Outdoor Cleanliness Association of the District of Columbia. Hearty co-operation is being given by the Commissioners, the City Refuse Division and the association.

The Commissioners have made the campaign thoroughly official by a proclamation in which they have urged the citizens generally to aid in making the city and in fact the entire District clean and attractive. It is a big job, and is made much bigger through the thoughtless, carelessness of many who seem to have no pride in the appearance of the Nation's City.

The community is fortunate in having the Board of Trade undertake this job with the attendant financial outlay for posters, printed matter and incidentals. The streetcars are to carry signs appealing to the public to "Co-operate-Keep Streets Clean." Similar posters are to be on all trash receptacles. There are available for distribution small cards in replica of the posters. On the reverse of the card good neighbors are told how to co-operate, by following simple rules, in making Washington the world's cleanest city.

Organizations and individuals may have a supply of these cards for distribution in their neighborhood or to members by calling at room 425, Evening Star Building. There is no charge for the cards.

The job is a big one, but it can be done readily if every one will help. Don't throw trash of any kind on sidewalk, street or parking. Learn to identify a trash receptacle from a mail box-during the campaign the trash receptacles will wear the showy posters with a picture of a broom and an appeal for your co-operation. When you have discovered what a trash receptacle is like throw into the receptacle that piece of paper, chewing gum, empty container or what have you that you want to discard. Encourage others to do likewise and it will help a lot at the trash production end.

Then clean up around your home and arrange for systematically keeping it clean. Tell your neighbors of your ambition to help make Washington the cleanest city in the world and try to enlist them in the clean-up game. There are no "deferments" or "exemptions" in this selected service for cleanliness, sanitation and fire protection. The element of individual responsibility cannot be dodged.

Closing Virginia Avenue Before Senate Committee

Chairman Maloney of the Senate Public Buildings Committee has appointed a subcommittee to consider the bill which would permit the closing of Virginia avenue and the diversion of Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets for the erection of an annex building for the Pan-American Union.

The District Commissioners and civic groups, interested in the safe movement of traffic, are opposing this legislation.

The chief proponent of the measure is the Secretary of the Interior, who insists on preventing the blocking of the view from Constitution avenue of the new Interior Department Building. Congress in 1929 passed an act authorizing the erection of the annex on the triangular block known on the city plat book as square 146. A tunnel connecting the main building with the authorized annex has already been constructed.

The members of the subcommittee are Senator Andrews, Democrat, of Florida, chairman, and includes Senators Green, Democrat, of Rhode Island and Brewster, Republican, of Maine The closing of Virginia avenue and the proposed changing, by off-set, the lines of Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, it is contended by experts, will produce an intolerable traffic situation at a point where the flow is at present none too good. The Board of Trade Traffic Committee is putting up a strong fight against the creation of another bottle-neck.

National Representation Hearing in Prospect

Senator Pat McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada, chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, has announced that hearings will be held shortly on the Senate joint resolution 35, introduced by Senator Arthur Capper, Republican, of Kansas, which is identical with House joint resolution 28, introduced in the House by Representative Hatton W. Sumners, Democrat, of Texas. The other members of the Senate subcommittee are Senators Tom Connally, Democrat, of Texas; Carl A. Hatch, Democrat, of New Mexico; George W. Norris, Independent, of Nebraska, and Warren A. Austin, Republican, of Vermont.

The pending resolution proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant citizens of the District of Columbia voting representation in the Senate, House of Representatives and among the electors for President and Vice President. It would further give Congress the power to delegate to such local government as it might establish in the District all or any of the legislative powers possessed by Congress, under the Constitution, over the seat of Government. It would also give residents of the District the same access to the courts of the United States as possessed by the citizens of a State.

Any legislation enacted by Congress under the authority of the proposed amendment may be amended or repealed, with a single limitation. No such repeal shall affect the office of a Senator or Representative during the time for which he was elected.

It is reported that Chairman McCarran has called to his aid experts of the Brookings Institution to give an opinion as to whether a constitutional amendment is necessary to grant national representation, and if it is, what kind of self-government can be set up here without a constitutional amendment

One of these experts, Lawrence F Schmeckebier, in the book "The Government and Administration of the District of Columbia, Suggestions for Change" published by the Brookings Institution in 1929 is on record both as to the question of the necessity for constitutional amendment and the power of Congress to set up such form of local government is it sees fit. Or page two, after discussing the latter the following statement is made: "Two things are beyond the powers of Congress to grant: Participation in the election of President, and voting representation in Congress. These require an amendment to the Constitution."

This is the same position as taken by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia in its report of 1922 and by the House Committee on the Judiciary by its report in the Seventy-Sixth

The discussion of form of local government or any other details are not germane to the pending proposed amendment which is merely an enabling provision granting new and needed powers to Congress over the Federal District. Consideration of statutory enactments are due after the Constitution is amended.

Now is the time for the forces to rally and put on as impressive a hearing as that before the House Committee in 1938.

Secretary of Mt. Pleasant Unit Enjoys Work

Although the early records of the Mount Pleasant Citizens' Association are sketchy, John De La Mater, 14 years and is one of the few civic secretaries who takes notes in shorthand, plans to "hand down to posterity" a complete account of the association's activities.

When asked to become secretary, after having served a term as president, he told the group that he would take the post "for a little while."

"And I've had it ever since." he remarked in an interview. He said he had "never thought of it before. but guessed his shorthand did make for more complete records than usual.

"I enjoy the work," Mr. De La Mater said. "If I didn't." he continued with a smile, "I wouldn't

"I guess it's a printing problem rather than one of right and wrong,' he observed. Mr. De La Mater traced his in-meetings this week: terest in local government-here and elsewhere-back to near the turn of the century, when he was secretary to a railroad man in Chicago who was with a group in the Commercial Club there, interested in civic affairs. In 1909 the committee presented to the city the plan of Chicago, or Burnham plan -named after the noted architect and city planner, Daniel H. Burnham-dealing with the lake front, streets and bridges.

Asked whether he favored local suffrage after observing and comparing the non-elective, commission form of government here with elective, municipal governments in other cities, Mr. De La Mater rehe personally did not want local suffrage, adding that he felt we had a "better and more efficient government here." In the case of elective, municipal governments, he continued, it is an "eternal fight to keep things as they

A native of Illinois, Mr. De La Mater came to Washington in 1914, when he became secretary to an of the Federal Reserve Board, where he still is employed. He also became secretary of the Committee of 100 on the Federal City of the American Civic Association, which he said had interested itself in the creation of the present Park and Planning Commission. And he holds membership in the Board of Trade, where he is vice chairman of a subcommittee dealing with water front

Ghosts Never Die by Rufus Heed

The story thus far: Sandra Starr finds her husband, Dr. Joseph Star, shot to death in his study with his own gun under his hand. She conceals the gun in hope of avoiding the stigma of suicide, and as she does so sees a "man with a scar" outside the study window. She mentions the man to the police and they find his footprints and immediately agree with her suggestion that Starr was murdered. Only Dr. Walker, Starr's assistant, persists in the belief that the doctor killed himself. Parker, the butler, confesses to Mark Cotton, the Starrs' family lawyer, that he saw a man in his master's study shortly before Sandra found the body, but they are interrupted before he has a chance to describe whom he saw. Examination of the wound proves it was not self-inflicted ,and when the gun itself disappears from its hiding place, Sandra is terrified.

CHAPTER VI.

When Mark came in to see Sandra shortly after dinner that evening he found her so exhausted he became alarmed. She was waiting for him in her little morning room, resting on a sofa by the fireplace. Her eyes were shadowed and there was a haunted look in them that worried him. "I shall stay only a few minutes," he said, as he drew a chair toward the fire. "You must get rest right away. I can't have anything happen to

"None that I know of." "Then he had something some one wanted very badly."

Fete at Mexican Embassy Honors General and Senora de Camacho

Ambassador and Senora De Castillo Najera Fete Kin Of Their Country's President

By MARGARET HART,

Against the background of the murals depicting the history and folklore of Mexico which adorn the walls of the republic's Embassy, the Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera held the most brilliant function in the social history of the mission when they entertained last night for the brother of the President of their country.

High-ranking officials of this Government mingled in happy accord with diplomats from other American republics to welcome to this Nation's Capital in good neighbor style Gen. Maximino Avila Camacho and his attractive wife.

Vice President and Mrs. Wallace To Fete Honor Guests.

The Vice President, Mr. Henry A. Wallace, who with Mrs. Wallace was so extensively entertained during the inauguration of the new Mexican President, arrived at the Embassy at an early hour and broke his precedent of remaining at a social function only a short time. He and Mrs. Wallace met the honor guests during their stay in Mexico and there were warm words of welcome spoken between the foursome.

Today Gen. and Senora de Camacho will enjoy the hospitality of an American home—when the Vice President and Mrs. Wallace entertain at luncheon for them. This is a forerunner of events that will be crowded into the all-too-short stay of the distinguished visitors. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace will give the party in their apartment at Wardman Park Hotel, the fete being the first given there since the suite was remodeled.

Senora de Castillo Najera Wears Beige Lace Gown.

In addition to being the most brilliant, the party was the largest ever held in the Embassy. More than 800 guests assembled there to pay

In the spring the thoughts of residents of this city and nearby sections invariably turn toward the annual Flower Mart of All Hallows Guild, and the Alexandria association's tour of old houses. Although the Flower Mart at the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul will not be held until Wednesday, May 7, plans and preparations already are being made for the event. The Alexandria tour of old houses will take place Saturday, April 19, from 11 to 5 o'clock.

Howard R. Tolleys Lend Historical Home for Tour.

Almost Perfectly Preserved.

Each week another house is added to the series of those to be open and word now come that Mr. and Mrs. Howard R. Tolley have loaned their historical home at 212 South Fairfax street for the occasion. Once lived in by Dr. William Brown, "Physician General and Director of Hospitals" of the Continental Army and charter member of the Society of the Cincinnati, the house is of outstanding interest architecturally and historically.

The paneling in the hall is unusual and the best woodwork in the house is in the mantel, overmantel and cupboards in the upstairs front room. This is unusual and there is no other just like it in Alexandria. The household possessions of the Tolleys add much to the attractiveness of the interior, which is furnished with 18th century pieces, many signed. Kitchen, With Brick Oven,

The kitchen, with a brick oven in the side of the great chimney, is in an almost perfect state of preservation and the sightseer will be much intrigued by some very ancient and peculiar water works that formed a part of the sanitary equipment in the culinary department.

The garden is composed of three gardens, each shut off from the

The house of Senator and Mrs. Robert Taft at 1688 Thirty-first street N.W. was built by Joseph Henry Bradley, who bore a striking resemblence to John Wilkes Booth. Today Is 150th Anniversary of First Easter Service Held in Present Territory of the District

By FOBERT CRAWFORD.

Today marks the 150th anniversary of the first Easter service in the present territory of the District of Columbia. It was held in 1791 in St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek, and today another Easter service is being celebrated in the same historic place. At that time it had been settled that the Federal Capital would be situated on the Potomac River. As was usual in the South, tobacco played a large role in the building

The Rev. John Frazier, who in 1719 was rector of Broad Creek Church in St. John parish on Broad Creek, which empties into the Potomac below Fort Foote, found his parish was growing to such proportions that a chapel was necessary, so September 19, 1719, the people of the Eastern Branch and Rock Creek hundred called a meeting to select a site and build a chapel.

Hobby Helps Professionally, Says Collector of China

Mrs. Ethel Hess Has Made Career of Her Childhood Interest in Fine Dishes

By GRETCHEN SMITH,

Hobbies may prove helpful professionally, as well as diverting in leisure time, declares Mrs. Ethel J. Mrs. Hess, who holds an executive position with a local wholesale glass and china company, said her love of china and "all things which go

"The majority of glass blowers in Ohio are of Italian, Hungarian or Polish descent," she explained, "and the art is carried on from father to son. Glass blowers don't live very long," she added. "It is considered very hard on the lungs."

After her marriage, when she moved to Washington, Mrs. Hess said she became so lonely in her new surroundings that she decided she wanted a job. She found employment immediately with a glass and china store and has remained there ever since.

"There is a never-ending interest about china," she remarked. "People don't realize it but china changes style almost as frequently as clothes," she said. Speculators Find Rich Harvest in German Bonds

Collect as Much as 50 Per Cent Interest by Fancy Juggling

By CHARLES E. HARNER, Associated Press Pinancial Writer. NEW YORK, April 12.-By one of the most amazing juggling acts in international financial history, some speculators are now collecting as much as 50 per cent in interest on the purchase price of depreciated German bonds

These securities, issued by the to permit profitable operation of government, states and municipalities of Germany and by German industries, are called dollar bonds because they originally were sold to United States citizens for United States dollars.

coming from Germany and with all but two minor German dollar issues in default, speculators in default, speculators are buying these bonds to such an extent that some recently rose to the highest quotations obtained since the present war began.

The United States Treasury, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Post Office Department all are known to be watching the operations closely. Speculators say none of the activity is illegal.

The speculative risk, of course, stems from the uncertainties over the ability of Germany to continue to make interest payments, with its monetary reserves depleted and its normal trade cut off. The speculator who buys a German depreciated bond, gambles that the next interest payment will be met when the most lucrative, of operating the speculation is as follows: Buy a German government bondeither the 7 per cent Dawes plan or the 51/2 per cent Young planfrom your neighborhood broker. Both these bonds are listed in the New York Stock Exchange. Be sure you get one which is stamped U. S. A. domicile of 1938, to prove it was in this country before the war. Neither one pays the interest it Neither one pays the interest it June. Many manufacturers expect year's low with a fall of 31% points originally was supposed to; the Dawes now pays 5 per cent and the to deliver the first units well in ad- to 15634. Germany: you can buy a Dawes for larger $130 to $140 and a Young for $80 pated."

The interest payoff, however, still is based on the $1,000 face value of the bond. J. P. Morgan & Co. and the Hamburg American Line, as paying agents, have been paying $50 per Dawes plan bond and $40 per Young plan bond in interest annually

In other words, unless things change, you get $50 a year on a $140 plane output soared to over 1,000 investment or maybe as much as $40 units. These figures will be sharply a year for your $80. These payments are guaranteed by the German government Other Pays Better.

The more complicated method employed by speculators has ramifications leading to Switzerland in Eudemand during the first three rope and Rio de Janeiro and Buenos months of the new model year, Aires-as well as other capitals-in

Commitments Cut Pending Outcome of Balkan Battle

By FREDERICK GARDNER, Associated Press Financial Writer. NEW YORK, April 12.--War doubts continued to bear down on the stock market today and the list finished a generally discouraging week well under water. While many in Wall Street stretched out Friday's holiday for a lengthly week end, most of those who appeared were inclined to cut commitments pending outcome of the critical Balkan battle between the Allied and German armies. Some comfort was derived from the settlement of the Ford strike, but the labor picture was still sufficiently spotty to keep buying ardor subdued. Threats of a General Motors walkout and the deadlock in soft coal mining wage dispute were viewed as market handicaps.

Drop to New Lows. Steels and motors touched new lows for the year, along with a number of others. Rails and oils were fairly resistant as net revenues for the carriers mounted and quotations for crude and gasoline showed further rising inclinations. Shock-Proof to War Events Role of Industrial

Business Nerves

U. S. Emphasized by Balkan Drive

By FRANK MAC MILLEN, Associated Press Business Writer.

NEW YORK, April 12.-When Germany opened its spring offensive in the Balkans this week it both emphasized anew America's role as the industrial warehouse of democracy and showed business nerves in this country to be virtually shock-

The stock market, sensitive cardiograph of the business organism, hardly faltered as Reich forces swept into Yugoslavia and Greece. Marked was the contrast with the spring of 1940, when the Low Countries were invaded. Then share prices on the average lost a third of their value in a little over the events in the Balkans, admittedly of great significance in the world struggle, nevertheless, appeared inconclusive as factors in he trade and industrial situation here for the next few months.

Now prices, for long in a sidewise movement, have dipped only about 5 per cent since the first of this month, and have quickly levelled

German Risks Greatest.

One commentator suggested Britain could not lose the war solely in the Balkans, although Germany conceivably could if things went badly for her.

Business Week, commenting on this aspect of the growing struggle in Southeastern Europe, said: "Unless the Germans conclusively Recovery Is Resumed demonstrate that they can first know out the British not just their knock out the British, not just their Balkan allies, the war will not be over, and this country will continue in the role of the 'arsenal of democ-

"Moreover, an out-and-out German victory would simply intensify the armament effort here.

"Therefore, it is the lesser part of wisdom to consider our current high level of production a temporary thing-dependent on the outcome of the Balkan campaign." The production level remained very high indeed, despite dips in some of the indices which business analysts use to measure the trend

In the perennial problem of the pay envelope, these two important developments occurred during the week: 1. The part settlement in the coal fields included a boost of $1 a day for miners. 2. National Steel Corp., with about per cent of the industry's capacity but an important supplier of the automobile companies, raised pay 10 cents an hour. The move was of wide interest because the giant United States Steel Corp., producing more than half of the country's steel, has a similar wage demand from its men now pending. Business analysts fastened on these two developments as of more than usual significance because of the basic nature of the industries involved. Easter Trade Brisk.

Meantime, both higher pay scales here and there and the growing number of men getting jobs in expanding industry gave stores their best Easter season in a dozen years. Shoes, hats, blouses, dresses, children's wear and men's suits topped the lists of spring shoppers, store men were impressed with the good sale of many other items not directly traceable to the demands of the season.

Merchants thought not only the fatter pay envelopes of customers, but, more significant, their willingness to spend, were reflected in unusually good demand for such things as housewares, refrigerators, automobiles-new and second handwashing machines and vacuum 191, 16 Am Metals (.25g) ... 19 18 161, 164 121 111 Am Metals pf (6) ... 130s 121 117 117

Junior Rail Issues Under Pressure on Bond Market

B. & O. Convertibles Active, With Loss Of 5/8 of Point

By the Associated Press. NEW YORK, April 12.—Secondary and "receivership" rails were under pressure in the bond market today and the list as a whole showed losses somewhat outnumbering gains.

Baltimore & Ohio Convertibles. with a turnover of $180,000 face value and a loss of % of a point, stood out in the retreat in the carriers. Most other losses were also fractional, as in Rock Island General 4s of '88, Erie 5s, Pere Marquette 5s, Southern Pacific 41/2s of '69 and Trisco 41/28 of '78.

Other unchanged to a bit lower included Studebaker 6s, Youngstown Sheet 34s, Continental Oil Convertible 31/2s and Anaconda 41/2s. Commonwealth Edison Convertibles lost a point in light dealings. Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies 5s advanced 2 in brisk trade.

In the United States Government section action was restricted mostly to the longer term issues, where small gains were the rule.

Foreign dollar loans showed a few face value of those funding bonds Insurance Stocks wide swings. Up a point or so were at any time. Italy 7s and Milan 612s; down as much were Japan 51/2s and Colombia

Clip the coupons; their face value is $240, although that doesn't mean much. Send these coupons to an agent in Rio de Janeiro. Down there he can get unregistered funding bonds for the coupons. Have him send the funding bonds up here-and cash them in.

Maugham, It's Safe Bet, Is Author With the Most Enviable Reputation

His Practice of Honesty as an Art Earns Even His Pot-Boilers Praise From Sternest Literary Critics

By Jay Carmody.

A graduate student in English looking around for a suitable thesis subject might do worse than set out to demonstrate that Somerset Maugham has the most enviable standing among the literary craftsmen of his time. The research involved would not be especially difficult and the theme could hardly fail to be interesting.

It apparently is a basic premise of literary criticism, and a sound one. that Mr. Maugham cannot write a bad book. The very worst he can do is write a book that is not as good as the one before, or the one before METROPOLITAN-"The Mad Docthat. The comparison, as in the case of virtually all other authors, is not with another man's book, but another Maugham book. A Maugham potboiler, unlike some one else's pot-boiler, is nothing to drive a critic into a reproving rage. It is so frankly what it is, so gleaming and slick a job of its kind, that there is nothing to do but praise the author for his craftsmanship and applaud him for his honesty. The same type of book from, say, Sinclair Lewis, would be bitterly diagnosed as a compromise with his artistic integrity. Nothing Mr. Lewis could do would disarm his judges. The same judges will throw their guns at Maugham's feet, meantime proclaim to his, and their, audience that he has indulged in a Films Strike Up the Band pretty literary exercise that the audience would be a fool not to read.

Such is the reward for having made an art of honesty.

Impeccable Maugham Style Gave His Subject Glitter.

These happy reflections upon Mr. Maugham's genuis are the result of his impending appearance as original author of "Theater," which comes to the National tomorrow night.

"Theater" was not one of Maugham's great novels. It was a clinical study of a popular actress done in his impeccable style. Its theme was and practicing frantically for new warbling roles. Thespians who don't trite, but the Maugham style obscured its triteness so fetchingly that know one step from another will be seen swirling through intricate dance none (well, not this one, at least) who read it felt hoodwinked.

In dramatizing "Theater," Guy Bolton did something that dozens of persons perceived as one of the bright possibilities of the novel. Many, indeed, have been insisting from the beginning that it might make a far better play than a nevel. The scope and zest of the discussion at the time, two seasons ago, and ever since, adds stature to the occasion which in marks the play's premiere here tomorrow night.

It Could Have Been Written As a Play Originally.

Mr. Maugham himself could have written it as a play so far as mechanical skill in the theater goes. He would not have had the will to do so, however. He is not kindly disposed toward writing for the theater despite the fact that he has made a considerable fortune therefrom. It amuses him to reflect upon the fact that he does not have to write for his musical knights. the stage to derive not merely profit but even further recognition from it. The latter inheres in the fact that one of the ultimate forms of obscurity is to make a successful adaptation of a Maugham novel or short story for either the theater or the movies. The final product, no matter by whom done, always is referred to as "Somerset Maugham's 'Rain'" or "Maugham's 'Beachcomber'" or something else.

(For the life of him, this commentator cannot at this moment think of the chap who actually translated "Rain" into dramatic form. Chances are you can't either.) Novel a Sort of "Gone" With Regard to Casting.

An incidental part of the speculation concerning the adaptation of "Theater" to the stage was in the casting of the Julia Lambert role; Miss Lambert, of course, being the actress heroine of the novel who was just beginning to appreciate that her charm was fading. In its way, the novel was a sort of "Gone With, Etc.," in this particular respect. Each person had his own idea of the perfect actress for the part and was prepared to defend it to the moment of actual casting.

John Golden's idea, as the billboards attest, was Miss Corneila Otis Skinner. Miss Skinner, who has been looking for years for an escape from the monodrama, and found it for one season in a revival of "Candida," saw in it the perfect part, as what actress would not?

In private life, Miss Skinner is no Julia Lambert. She is much too In private life, Miss Skinner is no Julia Lambert. She is much too sings "Luna Verde." . . . But Miss Hellman has written in "Watch on the Rhine" a play that doesn't have to depend primarily upon the interest aroused by dispatches on the front pages of your newspapers. Here she reduced the complex international insanity into the common denomination of a single family, a single intelligent and humane family

Her Kurt Mueller, splendidly played by Paul Lukas, is an intelligent German engineer with a sensitive heart and a warmth of feeling for humanity. He faces a brilliant career, but there is no place for him in his corner of the world which is dominated by the Nazis he disapproves so much

All this Miss Hellman, as a good measure to her previous successes in "The Children's Hour" and "The Little Foxes," assembles in a play that has both strength and dignity and yet never goes overboard so that the label of propaganda can be applied. "Watch on the Rhine" is the very human and engrossing story of the Mueller family, and the Nazi and Democratic and other political aspects are only backgrounds in which this family survives or perishes.

The younger part of the family looks forward to a new life and new hope here in this democracy, but their father is resigned to the fact that he must go back to the hopeless fate which he has fled. But, he gives a parting word of

MORE THAN JUST A MOVIE-The gala premiere of Bette Davis' latest motion picture, "The Great Lie," at Littleton, N. There was this aerial tramway, for instance, to take the visitors to the top of who comes into his own cinematically in "The Devil and Miss Jones," now at Keith's, celebrates the 50th anniversary of his theatrical career this month. It was at the old Savannah Theater, founded in 1818 in Savannah, Ga., that the 13-year-old Charles Coburn (upper right) got his first job, as a program boy, in 1891. The theater (upper center) is still in use—as a second-run movie house. After almost 40 years the movies got Mr. Coburn, too, he making his screen debut as the Doctor Shingle (upper left) in "Of Human Hearts" in 1937. Below are three high lights of the Coburn stage career. The rip-roarin' buckaroo of the title role of "Freshwater Jack," in 1906; the Old Bill of Bruce Bairnsfather's popular wartime play, "The Better 'Ole," and the Macbeth he played more than 300 times throughout a 24-year period, with Mrs. Coburn as Lady Macbeth.

Broadway's Lotharios Spend More Hollywood Brand

Teresa Wright Wins Role in 'The Little Foxes' After Refusing Less Alluring Cinema Offers

By Gladwin Hill, Associated Press Staff Writer.

NEW YORK. Teresa Wright is only 22, about as big as a minute and so demure she wouldn't say "boo" to a boogie man, but she has just beaten the movie moguls at their own game. She refused to be a "sweater girl." For a year and a half Teresa has been getting an enthusiastic hand as the principal romantic interest in the Broadway hit play "Life With Father," the dramatization of Clarence Day's reminiscences of his boyhood family life.

Her First Part. It's her first Broadway part and she landed it, almost immediately after getting out of high school in East Orange, N. J., on the strength of summer theater work. The Hollywood scouts, always on the alert for a presentable girl who can speak English, walk across the room without knocking over tables, and photograph well doing so, spotted Teresa early in the game and bombarded her with the coveted 'Hollywood contracts." These sound impressive, but frequently amount to just a job for a year at $50 a week, posing for alluring photographs and not getting much nearer the movies than Tillie Anguish back in West Milkshake.

She'd Rather Act. Now Teresa, who has nice hazel eyes, a cute turn-up nose and heavy dark brown hair, is plenty sweatergenic, but she has a yen to act on the screen rather than on the gravure pages of fan magazines. So, demurely but determinedly, she turned down the contracts and held out for a McCoy acting opportunity.

The months went by, but Teresa stuck to her anti-sweater guns, and now, after a year, she has just been signed by Sam Goldwyn for a definite part-alongside of Bette Davis, no less—in Lillian Hellman's stage hit "The Little Foxes." The contract also tentatively books Teresa's services—in pictures, not show at Baltimore. It was followed two recent newcomers to the Nabers' competition.

> The miniature schnauzer is a responsible for some of his popularity, but his brains and spirit are the things that count with those who last week for the final qualifying know him. He is a small, pepperand-salt-colored dog, not unlike the wire hair terrier in appearance, but smaller and with a monkeyish lenge trophy, and by popular deexpression that is very fetching.

Falla is probably the most popular dog to have entered the White House in the last 10 years. He is a pure-bred Scotty of excellent pedigree and probably fine type. But the general verdict on him is that he would be a finer specimen if he were properly trimmed, groomed or put down. Whatever term you care to use, the idea is that he needs a shave and haircut.

Mrs. Taynton will be glad to answer inquiries pertaining to dogs. Address her in care of The Sunday Star, inclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope if a personal reply is desired.

The Art World—Reviews of Current Exhibitions and News of Artists

Skill and Versatility Are Shown by Gifford Beal in Phillips Gallery Display

Oskar Stoessel Demonstrates His Ability at Portraiture in Corcoran Presentation

By Leila Mechlin.

Quite out of the ordinary is the exhibition of paintings in water color. tempera and oil-on-paper by Gifford Beal which now occupies both printrooms in the Phillips Memorial Gallery. To an extent, the 49 paintings which compose this collection give indication of both the artist's way of working and the breadth of his interest, his versatility and adaptability Mr. Beal is, and has been for a considerable number of years, one of our leading American painters and .etchers, one whose works have been it is understood, accomplished with of impression and skill in rendition. His interest has been much engaged by what he saw around him-the American scene — colorful, robust, significant, but, above all, pictorial, as the artist who is a painter would interpret that term, not meaning illustrative but essentially paintable.

Varied Themes. Undoubtedly, his work is many-England coast and under the "big top" circus tent, as well as of New Central Park with a backdrop of architecture for nature's most lovely performance; but these themes represent only a small part of his accomplishment. He is represented in many of our leading museums by paintings of widely varied themes; has done murals for Federal buildings under commission of the section of Fine Arts, Public Buildings Administration, in Washington and in Allentown, Pa.; he has won, it would seem, almost every prize offered for meritorious oil paintings by the leading art organizations since he began exhibiting, about 1903, including second and third Clark prizes in Corcoran biennials. And, in the field of water color, he has been scarcely less successful. It should also be added, by way of further background, that while Mr. Beal is a National Academician, he

The paintings now on view are presumably of two kinds—those made as studies for future use and those which have been done purely for the fun of the doing. Albert Sterner once remarked, although perhaps not in these precise words, that in order to insure the vitality of a painting, it was necessary for an artist to register his impression with a pregnant brush before the inspiration of the moment had faded. This is what Mr. Beal apparently has had in mind, although perhaps subconsciously, in rendering the paintings which compose the current showing. They are straight from the shoulder; details are omitted, or merely suggested, but the essential spirit is there. There is no evidence of hesitation, no stumbling; the public, for the moment, is forgotten, nothing has mattered to the artist but that which he wanted to do-to record what he saw, or had seen, which filled his mind and stirred his emo-

Of Permanent Interest Frescoes of St. Francis and Entombment Mural Among Outstanding Examples

By Florence S. Berryman.

Easter Sunday is a joyous day in all its implications. The season's significance, from the time of the first Easter, has inspired artists in every generation up to the present. Washington has paintings of religious subects in both Catholic and Protestant churches which will have special meaning for the thousands who attend services today; the esthetic qualities of these works give them permanent interest.

Over the entrance to the chapel is a fresco representing St. Francis receiving the stigmata. According to the story, he climbed Mount Alverno, passed 40 days in prayer and fasting and then had a vision of a seraph with extended wings nailed to a cross. It filled the saint with ecstasy, mingled with sharp pains in his hands and feet, and he discovered that on them were marks corresponding to the nail wounds Christ received in the crucifixion. Autobiography of Woman Physician Is Marked by Fine Individual Qualities

Story of Doctor's Life Is Told In Unpretentious Style and With Dignity and Humor

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Mine Eyes Have Seen

By Alfreda Withington, M. D. New York: E. P. Dutton Co.

In the past two years, the reviewer has read perhaps 20 autobiographies of doctors, and all of these books have been absorbing reading. On the evidence, there does not seem to be any conclusion possible except that doctors-all doctors, any doctors-have interesting lives. When they start telling their experiences, you have to listen. Whatever you may say about it, life and death seem, somehow, to remain fundamentals in the human consciousness. So, when the reviewer announces the present book to be "one more" doctor's story, the adjectives must be taken to refer to quantity only. Dr. Withington's history has the same authoritative interest as has marked its predecessors. You read on and on. You have not the slightest inclination to lay the work aside.

But, while Dr. Withington's book tells fundamentally the same story as those which have gone before—the story of the fight of science against death-it has certain decided individual qualities. It covers a long span in the practice of medicine, and it includes in that span the change in attitude toward the woman physician from one of incredulous disapproval to one of matter-of-fact acceptance. Dr. Withington got her degree in the middle '80s, when few medical schools admitted women students and most medical associations indiscriminately refused membership to all women doctors, no matter how well qualified they might be. But the last position which she took was in response to an advertisement which read: "Wanted, a woman physician for settlement work in the remote Kentucky mountains; all calls to be made on horseback, no other licensed physician within 25 miles." This appeal, with its obvious admission of confidence in the woman practitioner, appeared in the August journal of the American Medical Association itself in the year 1921. The first 35 years of Dr. Withington's practice coincided with the growth of that confidence.

Describes Postgraduate Studies In Germany and Austria.

She tells of studying and getting her internship in one of the two American medical schools then open which had been founded by women, the Women's Medical College of the New York Infirmary, established by Drs. Elizabeth and Emily Blackwell. She gives several chapters to describing postgraduate study in Germany and Austria, where prejudice against women scientists was so strong that she was seldom able to enter a hospital as a staff member and had to be content with admission as a visiting observer. Even this concession, one feels as one reads between her dignified lines, was probably brought about by demure exercise on the masculine authorities of something still known in the world as "feminine The European doctors, she says, were most cordial to her socially, but they often answered her applications for work with large paternal counsel to marry, cook and rear a family. In her three years | Charleston: An Epic of abroad, however, she managed to attend prominent hospitals and clinics, and always she gained the professional admiration of her male colleagues when she was finally allowed to take her place beside them.

Returning to America in the '90s, she entered private practice in Pittsfield, Mass. Twelve years before, the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal had coldly announced its "regret" that the State Medical Society had voted to admit women members. After her first attendance of her own branch association, a townswoman, who evidently shared the Journal's sentiments, eagerly asked a man physician how she had "behaved." And a patient, on learning her charge, exlaimed, "Why! I South for 50 years after its found-might have had a man doctor for that!" Such incidents colored her ing in 1670. It is the history of the pioneering period, but, as she emphasizes, there were also liberal men who accepted her on the basis of her work and asked nothing of her as a doctor except that she be a doctor. To these colleagues, she pays gen-

Tells of Dangerous Life

In 1906, she joined the staff of the famous Grenfell Mission in Labrador, and several chapters of her book are given to description of the dangerous and adventurous life of that lonely outpost. Returning to Pittsfield, she became interested in the Red Cross and in preventive work in tuberculosis. When the war broke out, she volunteered, at the age of 57, and spent the years to 1921 in France in service to tuberculous refugees and soldiers. In the town of Dreux, she was made head of a dispensary maintained jointly by the French and American governments. But even there, at that late date, she encountered sex prejudice; the civil and military doctors of the town agreed to her appointment only on the condition that she should be replaced by a man as soon as one qualified could be found. When, however, she was transferred to the Paris Refugee Clinic in deference to their request, they unanimously asked that she

The final 10 years of her long career were spent on the Kentucky settlement job. It was in connection with the famous Pine Mountain School in Harlan County. Her chapters describing this assignment are pure adventure; she was on call at all hours, she made her visits in all weathers, she treated wounded feudists and moonshiners, she performed operations, cared for contagious cases and brought babies into the world under completely primitive conditions, she dealt with snakes, landslides, floods and cantankerous mules as ordinary incidents. She retired in 1931 only in deference to her own weakened health.

She writes with dignity and humor and without the slightest pretentiousness. She has a fine story, and she lets it tell itself.

Fares, Please!

By John Anderson Miller. New York: D. Appleton-Century Co.

It seems to be the fate of the instruments of human transportation to some into good repute only after they have passed out of fashion. Thus we all have today a firmly intrenched romanticism about the stagecoach and the sailing ship, and are even becoming mellow on the subject of the early models of the automobile. But our ancestors, who had to travel by coach and clipper, quite probably cursed those vehicles for their comfort- Men and Volts lessness and irregularity, and the contemporary opinion of the horseless carriage has been expressed within the memory of those living by such songs as "Get Out and Get Under" and by countless more or less ribald

But still the convention holds. And so deeply is it fixed that, though this present history of the trolley car is plainly and unsentimentally written, the reviewer will stake her word on it that nobody of an age to remember will be able to go through it without feeling some nostalgia. If the text alone does not produce the effect, certainly the pictures willpictures of the old-fashioned open "summer cars," pictures of the vanished fast-running interurbans, pictures of the rear-end platform car from which the conductor used courteously to alight to help his passengers on and off, and of 50 other models which now are gone forever but which, only yesterday, were indispensable in our lives. Who would have dreamed that street cars could ever be romantic? But so they are becoming, simply by virtue of disappearance, and the great streamlined buses which are displacing them will no doubt undergo the same change when something better has supplanted them. Mr. Miller's book, to be sure, does not deal with the trolley car alone It dips back into history somewhat farther, beginning with the omnibus, from which stage it progresses through the horse-car and the cable-car to the trolley proper. And it comes down in modernity to the last-word developments, by way of the "El" and the subway. But it was the trolley of all these, which lasted longest. Alas for this shocking personal attitude in book reviewing! But-it was also the trolley on which the reviewer used to ride to school, her nickel tied tightly in the corner of her handkerchief. It was the trolley which carried her to the local amusement park, where the merry-go-round operated for a penny. It was a stalwart trolley car conductor, indeed, who was the object of her first and secret passion, a devilish fellow who wore his cap at a killing angle over one eye. How, then, is she to write of a book on trolley cars with critical detachment? It is a thorough, comprehensive work, and for modern bus-minded youth it will probably be dull as ditch-water. But, in contemporaries, it should stir the gentlest and tenderest emotions,

Where Angels Dared to Tread By V. F. Calverton. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co.

This is a study of a dozen or so of the attempts which have been made to establish perfect communities in America, a sort of rapid historical survey of our more picturesque gestures toward Utopia. Through all these changes, and wars and fires and earthquakes, Charleston has remained one of the few American cities with a distinct personality of its own. Mr. Rhett (the name is a guarantee to those know Charleston) does not dwell upon the personality of the city in his history. Wings of Victory

By Ivor Halstead. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc.

Although it is obvious that the real story of the European air war cannot be written until long after the thunder of falling bombs and the chatter of guns high in the blue has died away, there is no reason why is good, full history; the later years good, if one-sided, accounts from the viewpoint of the eye witness may not be written during the heat of the crisis.

Mr. Halstead's story of the British Royal Air Force in action is such book. Part of it was written during German bombing raids, and he tells us that certain of the manuscript was torn by bomb fragments which badly damaged a shelter in which he was working.

Of especial interest is his description of the smashing of the German attempt to invade England last September. There have been many and conflicting accounts of what happened in those stirring days when the Nazi air war reached its peak and the R. A. F. also reached a zenith of heroism and endurance which should live as long as human history. Mr. Halstead tells us that the German invasion attempt was a full-fledged affair and that a great army of invasion actually was launched upon the English Channel, to be beaten down by the R. A. F. and the British Navy, with a loss of at least 50,000 German dead by bombing, gunnery and

The author has a military background going back to the World War and also has gained some note as an author and historian. His volume is as good a job as one could reasonably expect of a work prepared so close to the scene. It is partisan-and naturally so. But that does not destroy its factual value or its authenticity as a moving, intensely colorful firsthand account of some of the most tremendous days in human history. JOSEPH S. EDGERTON.

Spy and Counterspy

By Emanuel Victor Voska and Will Irwin. New York: John

This is a true story of adventure behind the scenes of the first World War, as told by one of the most noted spies of that period. Capt. Voska in collaboration with an eminent author reveals facts, stranger than fic-This volume is the history of the tion, of his experiences and those of his associates. Every American knows about the disastrous Black Tom explosions. Just recently, the Mixed Claims Commission decided Germany was responsible for the horror. Yet, even today, Capt. Voska wonders if it wasn't a Russian job.

> He claims that his men unearthed a plot whereby the Russian Army was being sent cartridges of a caliber which did not fit its rifles. Also many boxes supposedly carrying ammunition arrived at the front filled only with scraps of metal. Such sabotage contributed in no small measure to the defeat of the Russians. The plot, he says, was hatched on Black Tom Island, which he describes as a hot-bed for intriguing Russian elements opposed to the war. Fearing exposure, Capt. Voska believes, these Russians may have blown up Black Tom.

The Zimmerman plot to furnish Mexico with German arms and stir an uprising against the United States also is reviewed. When Huerta, ex-President of Mexico, arrived in New York for a conference with Boy-Ed, Von Rintelen and other German sabateurs, Capt. Voska's spies had the stage all set to learn every detail. Voska had placed his agents in every position, from doorman to chambermaid, at the hotel where Huerta was to stay, and it was, as the captain tells it, a simple matter to learn every detail of the plot and thus prevent its fulfillment.

Dr. Heinrich Albert's famous portfolio is history, but few know how the incriminating papers of this famous German spy fell into the hands of United States officials. They were stolen, Capt. Voska relates, when his agents staged a fake fight on a New York City elevated train on which Dr. Albert was a passenger. In the commotion, there was a clever substitution for the doctor's portfolio.

Capt. Voska worked through a remarkable organization of several hundred thousand Czechs, loyal to the United States, who were fired by the belief that defeat of Germany would result in the independence of their Warner Brace (Putnam's)-Life on native land. When this book is judged for journalistic competence, it seems incredible that it is the work of a writer still in her early 20s, but so it unquestionably is. Miss Homer is the daughter of highly gifted parents, of Mme. Louise Homer, the singer, and Sidney Homer, the composer. But she does not need the family introduction. She is obviously a brilliant young woman in her own right.

She was sent to China in 1938 as a reporter for the United American Relief Boards. She made a tremendous swing around the Chinese circle. She saw the devastated cities of the East, she went into the southwest as far as Thibet, she traveled over the great North Road, she visited the famed Communist armies in the northwest, she camped among the guerillas, she visited the "cave universities," she saw the new Chinese industrial co-operatives, she looked at the occupied districts, and generally combined in one journey the whole Chinese scene, which most journalists have taken a bit at a time. She experienced, too, the usual hardships of modern Oriental travel-went by cart, donkey and shank's mare as well as by truck, train and airplane; slept in native inns, crowded refuges, missions, hospitals and sometimes on the ground; was in so many air raids that one loses count of them; was machine-gunned once by Japanese soldiers, and lived through a great flood. Of all these things, she has nothing of an editorial nature to say which has not been said before, and more than once. She believes that the Chinese are invincible in courage and morale, that the war is regenerating China more rapidly than peaceful education could possibly have done, that the Japanese have shown themselves bad administrators and often bad strategists, and that in China there is a potential quality which may profoundly influence the coming order of civilization. All this-yes-has been said before. But there is nonetheless a difference about Miss Homer's book.

It is, though astonishingly mature in its technique, almost divinely youthful in its spirit. She has written not just a description of a country at war, but the song of a young heart giving itself unreservedly to a joyous adventure. She was not primarily covering China for the United Relief Boards, she was going on that long journey which calls to all the young. It was the journey which Marco Polo made, but only by chance was it into the same physical land. Miss Homer may have other splendid journalistic assignments yet to come. But one doubts that any of them will ever seem to her so wonderful. For, be they what they may, she cannot be 23 again when she covers them. And it is being 23 which has made this book what it is.

South Sea Vagabonds

By J. W. Wray. New York: D. Appleton-Century Co.

In 1892 Capt. Joshua Slocum, a Nova Scotian and a sailor, acquired an old sloop, rebuilt her with his own hands and three years later set out from New Bedford on a one-man cruise around the world. "South Sea Vagabonds" is a pleasant addition to this library. J. W. Wray, an office-bound New Zealander, lost his job and decided to build The Patriotic Murders, by Agatha a boat. He apparently intends to spend the rest of his life aboard, for after one futile effort to go back to civilization and work, he gave it up and pulled up his anchor and sailed away. The final paragraph of his book finds him happily moored in a lagoon off the island of Euakafa, with a brown maiden singing in the cockpit and the author about to go ashore to hunt turtles. This is Mr. Wray's first book. He writes naturally and well.

Some of his descriptions of South == Pacific hurricanes are excellent, and he has a sailor's eyes for interesting detail in cruising that his landlubber stay-at-home readers will appreclate. B. M. McK.

The book opens with a dictatorship, flowers with revolution into a provisional democracy and closes as it opened, with a strong military man assuming full power.

The development of a dance star parallels the revolution and appears to be just as important to the young journalist hero, Felipe The Blonde Died First, by Dana de Somar, who transfers his affections in the course of the tale from the fiery Pilar Obando to the delicate Lilita. Pilar is "The Pomegranate"-"a fruit with the heat of the tropics in it, a definite hard-

America Can Win

by Maj. Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson

Major Wheeler-Nicholson's recent book "Battle Shield of the Republic" laid down a detailed program for modern reorganization of the army. Now he presents in equal cold, accurate detail, a plan for all-out and immediate use of such of our forces as are in being. His daring and original suggestions as to military objectives, diplomatic weapons and propaganda make it stimulating and exciting, even to the least military of laymen. 1.75

AN EASTER MESSAGE BY A FAMOUS SCIENTIST

WHAT YOU AND I NEED MOST

A Message for Easter Day

by Arthur H. Compton

Famous Scientist and Nobel Prize Winner

UR country is growing richer. Not alone in the gold buried at Fort Knox. More in the influx of brains and genius from all the world. The refugees of a shattered civilization seek sanctuary in a land where worship of God and human freedom go hand in hand.

Albert Einstein and Thomas Mann, Sigrid Undset and Jules Romains, Franz Werfel and Maurice Maeterlinck are among those who have seen in the Statue of Liberty its true meaning — a meaning that the turmoil of a world crash is now resurrecting.

We have been fascinated and obsessed by invention and research which have given us airplanes that fly, 400 miles an hour, radio that carries the human voice 10,000 miles through space, and scores of other wonderful things.

Inventive genius has provided innumerable slaves to work for us; science has brought us a greater material advancement in the last half-century than in the previous 2,000 years.

Yet what have we gained? One half of the civilized world is plunged back into the jungle, and the other half is now threatened. How plain it is that genius does not suffice, that science is not enough!

Even our very freedom, which we have taken for granted as much as the air we breathe, has the fingers of death at its throat. And no achievements of science alone, no matter how wonderful, will be enough to save it. The test tube and the scales, the microscope and mathematics cannot reach those intangible, yet real, qualities of life in which is rooted human freedom.

I speak of the virtues by which man lives and progresses, on which civilization is built and by which alone it can endure. I speak of the spiritual elements of love and sacrifice, justice and honor, integrity, equality and good will. Call them intangibles if you will—yet they are real and they are indispensable. They are the qualities on which democracy and freedom are built. They are the qualities which must be strengthened if we would safeguard our liberty and our civilization.

THESE qualities in turn are rooted deep in religion. To strengthen them we must strengthen our faith, for faith is the cornerstone of religion.

There is a story about the late Thomas A. Edison that illustrates the kind of faith I am talking about. A newspaperman once asked the famous scientist: "What is electricity?"

"I do not know," Edison answered. "I only understand some of the things it will do."

"But how do you explain it?" the reporter persisted. Edison's voice became even more humble as he answered. "I can't explain it," he said. "It just seems to me God has given it to the world to demonstrate His power. I simply take it on faith and go on working."

Without an abiding, dynamic faith, there can be no freedom; no incentive for further experiment or study; no impulse to progress. In physics there have been times when many scientists thought the limits of new discovery had been reached. But others, with greater faith, went on working, only to have strange truths revealed and whole continents opened for exploration! Faith that something lay ahead broke down the barriers.

What is faith? And how can it be strengthened? For myself, faith begins with the realization that a Supreme Intelligence brought the universe into being and created Man. It is not difficult for me to have this faith, for it is incontrovertible that where there is a plan there is intelligence — and an orderly, unfolding universe testifies to the truth of the most majestic statement ever uttered: "In the beginning, God..." When man achieves this Faith he finds a key to greater

THROUGH the centuries men of science have demonstrated their faith. "A little philosophy inclines man to atheism, a depth of philosophy brings him to religion," said Francis Bacon. Sir Isaac Newton was a man of profound religious faith as well as of science. Louis Pasteur was very devout.

Today such great scientists as Kirtley Mather, the geologist; Sir Arthur Eddington, the astronomer; Edwin Grant Conklin, the biologist; Robert A. Millikan—all find that the facts on which their scientific knowledge is based clash in no way with their faith in God.

The realization that a Supreme Intelligence brought the universe into being is the first step in the growth of Faith. The second is the understanding that God, who created life, has given it a meaning and a destiny. There is a purpose for our being and doing, and faith in that purpose spurs man to struggle and to progress.

Here is no room for cynicism, for defeatism, for frustration. True, there is chaos in parts of the world, but in the midst of that chaos we see human progress. Hospitals and colleges, asylums and orphanages gird the world, founded on the impulse given by the cardinal element of religious faith: the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. Science and religion join hands in the battle against ignorance, superstition, disease, poverty and underprivilege.

Religious faith exalts man and gives him freedom. It spurs progress because it teaches an unfolding destiny for every man, woman and child, with opportunity for all. These concepts are the heart and soul of democracy, in which governments become the servants of men.

Totalitarianism debases man and regiments him for the state. It makes men the tools of government. It may beget efficiency, but it destroys liberty.

If religion fades, freedom and democracy wither. If religious faith is reborn, we have the first guarantee of the perpetuation of our democracy. Every church and every synagogue becomes a sentinel of liberty. A strong church is the defender of freedom because it breeds the faith that makes men free.

Easter once more brings us the message of resurrection and the rebirth of religious faith. May it renew for us, in the midst of calamity, abiding faith in the ultimate reign of righteousness and justice so that our freedom, which is based thereon, shall not perish from the earth.

THE RUMOR BOARD. Recently THIS WEEK published an article by Paul W. Kearney showing how unfounded rumors can undermine national morale. In commenting on it, Ralph M. Farley of South Milwaukee, Wisconsin, sends us this interesting suggestion:

"During World War I, at Fort Monroe in Virginia, a blackboard known as the 'Rumor Board' was set up in the clubroom of each company. Anyone who heard a good rumor was supposed to write it on the Rumor Board with his initials. Once a week the best rumor from each board was transmitted to headquarters and a prize was awarded to the best of all.

"The result: whenever anyone started spreading some morale-destroying rumor, his listener would immediately suggest that it be put on the Rumor Board and perhaps win a prize. Rumors soon became huge jokes throughout the encampment and hence did no harm."

PAGING MR. McGARRY! Your old friend Detective Dan McGarry and his helpful girl friend, Kitty, are back again, by popular demand. Some of our readers have tried to place the scene of McGarry's exploits, but the author, Matt Taylor, won't commit himself. He is a native New Yorker, but he isn't sure that Dan is a New York cop. Several people have written from Philadelphia, Chicago and points west, claiming that they know McGarry. "Maybe they do," says Mr. Taylor, "but I'd rather meet Kitty, and if anyone knows her, I wish he would get in touch with me. She might be as great a help to a writer as she is to a cop." If you haven't already met the lovable Dan yourself, turn to "McGarry and the Four Weird Brothers" in this issue.

GOOD NEIGHBORHOOD. The United States and Latin-American countries are becoming good neighbors in many new and interesting ways. By way of example, the magazine, "The Pan American," cites these recent developments:

Latin-American beauties will, from now on, be invited to compete in Atlantic City's annual beauty contest.

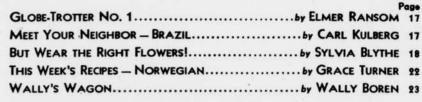

Mayors of Latin-American cities will be invited to join in the annual U. S. Conference of Mayors.

 Latin-American musicians will be invited to participate in the annual tours of Leopold Stokowski's Youth Program.

The next step, we are told, will be an expanded program of athletic contests and exhibitions among the nations of North and South America.

YOU NEVER KNOW WHO

This is the true account of how three people remade this noted author's life. One was a fragile old man. Another, a stenographer. The third was a tipsy sailor. It proves . . . as you'll see . . . that the most unexpected person may be your genuine best friend

by Sir Hugh Walpole

Tealizing that I have been saved, more than once, from real disaster by a chance association of people and events.

I say "chance," but was it really mere coincidence that sent certain people into my life at certain critical times — and gave them the courage to do what they did?

I am thinking especially of one crisis which, at the time, I didn't know was a crisis at all, and I can see that never in all my life has my character been so seriously threatened and never have I been so curiously saved, without knowing I was saved at all. This, of course, is important only to me, but it may interest others to compare it to the miracles that have affected their own lives.

I was saved by three people. None of them was I to see again.

The time was soon after the First World War. I had made a long lecture tour in America that was very successful financially, and at the same time I had published a novel that also was very successful. So when I returned to England with more money and fame then I had ever known I thought that I would have a little fun.

I took a house in Regent's Park. It was a lovely house, looking directly over the Park. I engaged a butler, a very admirable cook and maidservants. Now, I was a bachelor and had, alas, no wise wife to advise me, but I thought that I was well able to advise myself.

This was the beginning of the "boom" both in England and America, and everyone was out for enjoyment, including myself. There was no harm in that. This was, however, the only period in my life, I think, when I had no misgivings and no dreads. And I believe in misgivings and dreads. They keep one sane and level-headed.

I entertained lavishly. I moved into that world where entertainment is the order of the day. Socially I went everywhere and everyone I asked came to my house.

I saw my real friends of course, but they were inclined to be lost in the crowd. I was flattered inordinately and, being rather simply convinced that people spoke the truth, believed the flattery.

Now, there was nothing essentially wrong in all this. Plenty of people have been able to conduct such a life without any danger to their character at all. For myself, however, flattery, riches, many social engagements, hours spent every day with people who didn't really care for me, for whom I didn't really care, were exceedingly dangerous. For one thing, I accepted very readily the notion that I was a rare and remarkable person. For another, I was driven to considering money and popularity as circumstances of especial importance. All my values began to slide.

Three Years of Grace

I DIDN'T see any of this at the time. I was happy, carefree and, I should imagine, unbearably complacent. For three years this continued; if it had lasted another year or two the damage to my character would have been irreparable. Indeed, I did suffer some damage from which I have never altogether recovered.

Three people saved me. The first was my butler: I will call him Horton. He was the perfect butler except for one important drawback —his age. He was a little man with white hair and the face of an ascetic. He was perfect in his cleanliness and had a voice of silver. He was, however, very old and it was most important for him to keep this job: it was probably the last he would have. He worked like a demon, he was ready to do anything and everything.

I thought him my devoted slave. Imagine then my amazement!

I had promised to pay a week-end visit to two old people in the country who had been friends of my parents. It would be a very quiet week end. Then I received an invitation to a very grand house for that same week end and I wrote an excuse to the two old people. I told Horton that I wished certain clothing to be packed.

"Very good, sir." He was on his knees in my bedroom. "But aren't you going to S——, sir?" He had never asked such a question before

"No," I said, astonished. "I am going to Lord M.'s."

He said no more and continued to pack.

I was about to leave the room when quite suddenly he got to his feet.

"Oh, sir," he said, "I do wish you were going to S--."

I can see now that this was probably the bravest act of his life. It meant, it must have seemed to him, the losing of his job.

"What on earth do you mean?" I asked.
"Only that they will be so very disappointed. I am sure that they have been looking forward to it for weeks. I was so very glad that you were going!"

"You were glad!" I couldn't speak. I was angry, provoked, and curiously ashamed.

"I am going to them later on," I said.
"Yes, sir. Of course, sir."

He was down on his knees and continued to pack. I paid my visit to Lord M. and didn't enjoy it at all. On my return I wondered whether I shouldn't dismiss Horton. He was so very old, and now, although he was once again the automaton he had been, I was not comfortable in his presence.

A month or so later he was found dead of heart disease in the pantry.

Disillusionment

Apparently he did not. He even disapproved of me. There were others perhaps who did the same. I was even haunted by Horton. I looked sharply over my shoulder when I was going to bed and fancied that I saw him, standing in front of me, murmuring: "Oh, I am sorry, sir..."

I was now uncomfortable, but not uncomfortable enough.

Miss Miles was the second one. Miss Miles came from an agency, and to her I dictated my work when I was overpressed. I hate to dictate. My work is inferior when I do so. But now I was overpressed, always overpressed. For I had to make money. I didn't as yet realize it, but I was living very expensively indeed. I began to think of money a great deal. Many people came to meals whom I had not invited. Friends of mine brought friends of theirs, and parties were large, joyful and oddly impersonal, as though they were being held in a restaurant. I didn't, in fact, know the names of all of my guests.

I had to make money. I was invited to write a series of short stories for a magazine. Occasionally I can write a good short story, but never to order. I had, until now, preserved my integrity and written only for the joy of writing. This series was not a joy. Miss Miles came and I dictated them to her.

Miss Miles was a very plain woman, nervous of manner and not neat in her dress. She supported an aged and irascible grandmother; she had, I fancy, a longing to be married, but no man had ever paid court to her.

She told me that she adored my books, that she had bought them when she could afford to, that she had read some of them again and again. I graciously gave her some that she did not possess. I thought that it must be wonderful for her to sit there and take down my masterpieces straight from the horse's mouth, so to speak.

Then came the shock.

One morning I said: "There. That will do for today. Pretty good, I think."

She said nothing, but gathered together her bag and her gloves.

"I think the editor ought to be pleased with them, don't you?"

She had an exasperating little cough which always came when she was nervous. She

THE FOUR WEIRD BROTHERS

It's like this: Detective McGarry feels punk. He goes to the country to rest. It's new to him. So is being away from Kitty, who does his best thinking. Will Dan get into trouble?...Ha-ha!

by Matt Taylor

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

T ISN'T that this Dan McGarry works harder than the other detectives on the squad - it is just that the whole thing comes harder to him. He shrinks to a hundred and ninety pounds under the mental strain, and instead of bouncing back after a touch of summer flu, he gets as bedraggled as a wet airedale. The doc shakes his head: "I never thought I would tell this to a cop your size, but you will have to go away on a leave of absence and get your mind off your work."

"I cannot keep my mind on my work as it is," says McGarry. "I am always thinking about my girl Kitty. But I can't marry her until I save up a bank roll and how can I save up if I take a leave of absence?"

The doc throws up his hands: "I'm only a doctor! Figure it out for yourself."

"I can't," says Dan. "I will have to ask

And as soon as he asks her, she knows the answer. "You are going to take care of your health, exactly as the doctor ordered," she says. "You will drive out to the country by yourself and forget all about police work and crime and come back to your job refreshed and full of pep and, in the long run, we will be married almost as soon as we planned."

"I will not be refreshed at all," argues Dan, "if I don't see you. But if I got to, I got to. Only I don't like the country."

"How do you know? When were you ever there?"

"Two years ago I had that post in the park, and I do not like it. You hear just enough traffic to get lonesome for it."

"Where you're going you won't hear any traffic," says Kitty. "Oh, Dan, you must make this a real vacation for yourself! You need a complete change. Find a spot that's peaceful and restful. Forget you're a cop. Don't even talk about it to people."

"What'll I talk to them about?" says Dan. "Anything you want. But promise me you won't talk about crime, or read about it, or even think about it. Dan, I don't want to marry a nervous wreck of a cop! Give me your word of honor you'll do as I say.'

So Dan gives her his hand on it, and then he kisses her to make it double strength. That afternoon he goes with her to the bank where she is saving his money for him and she draws out enough for his trip. In the evening Kitty gives him a small farewell party and invites a few girl friends and also his Uncle Dennis, who is a lieutenant on the force, and her own cousins Tommy and Bill, who are rookie detectives. And in the morning she kisses him goodby and he drives off, and she hopes he will not get in too much trouble all by himself.

Dan drives along, feeling pretty blue. It is a lovely June morning and the country is not as bad as he expects, but he hates to leave town right now, with a couple of fresh murders on the books that need cleaning up. He begins figuring clues on these killings and then he remembers Kitty has his word of honor and he goes back to looking at the

It is like this all day. When he stops for lunch at a roadside place, who does he see at the bar but a pickpocket he remembers from the line-up downtown. It is a safe bet this guy is up to no good, but Dan is that scrupulous he drives off and leaves the dip alone. The car radio helps to pass the time until the music changes to a news broadcast and there is a lot of talk about the hatchetfaced old dowager, Mrs. Millicent, who is snatched out of her grandson's limousine this very day by a gang thought to be the Tubby Myers outfit. Mrs. Millicent is big money and the Tubby Myers boys are big-time and

Dan is dying to hear more. But he cannot break his promise to his sweet little mouse Kitty. He snaps the radio off.

Along about sunset he is on a narrow road, wondering where he will find a place for the night, when he passes an old farmhouse that has a faded "Tourists Accommodated" sign in front. It is a big boxy house, with some white paint still showing, and it is tucked up against the side of a hill. There is a wide porch across the front, and barns spotted all over the place, and a pump at the kitchen door and a stream cutting through a meadow at the side. When Dan cuts off the motor there is quiet the like of which he has not heard in years. Then a flock of cows come ambling down the hill with a dog and an old man behind them and there is some cow-mooing that sounds restful in the evening air. Dan raises his eyebrows. "Not a bad setup, for the country," he says.

He steps out of the car and looks around.

"Golly!" he tells himself. "Just look at that field with apple trees all over the outfield and a brook running down the third-base foul

The collie is yapping at the cows, directing traffic, and they go into the barn like they have done a long stretch on the farm and know all the ropes. The old man comes over to the car. He is a weatherbeaten old boy with criss-cross lines on his neck that make it look like a map of Brooklyn, and white hair coming out from under his straw, twinkly blue eyes, and a grin wide enough to show how many teeth he hasn't got.

"Lookin' for someone, young feller?" he says to Dan.

Dan points to the sign. "Can I put up here tonight, and maybe longer?" he says.

The old fellow chuckles. "Land o' livin'," he says, "I plumb forgot about that there sign. Been quite a spell since anyone stopped here. Not many tourists come this-a-way.

Well, I can always use a little extra cash. And there's plenty room, now that my sons ain't here. I will go tell my wife."

He goes off into the house and Dan looks around again. He sees a cornfield across the road and he thinks it is a real pretty sight with the rows so straight - just like the police parade coming down the Boulevard. Then he whiffs the roses in full bloom along the porch rail, and thinks he has not smelled the like since the perfume shop on Adams Street is shot up during a stickup. "It is a lot better than the park back home," he admits, getting himself an eyeful of the sunset, which is all in technicolor.

By this time the farmer is back and there is a white-haired little lady with him, real friendly. She tells Dan he can have his choice of the upstairs rooms, and says she will stir up some biscuits and have supper on the table in an hour.

"Then I will have time to stroll over and watch the cows get fed," says Dan.

"They are gettin' milked, young feller," says the farmer. "You don't have to feed 'em when they are in the fields all day."

"Don't you?" says Dan. "I should think they'd get hungry out in the open air."

THE farmer gulps at this. He coughs and says, "Come along, young feller, and I'll show you what a cow looks like."

So Dan trails along, gets a close view and is real excited, because those cows have soft brown eyes that make him think of Kitty somehow, even if hers are blue. He tries his hand at milking and gets maybe half a cupful before he is called for supper.

In the evening he sits with Mr. and Mrs. Brown, which is the name of the nice old couple, and Mr. Brown talks about the kid> naping of Mrs. Millicent by the Tubby Myers gang, and how her grandson will probably have to pay the ransom. Dan finally cuts him off. He says he does not want to discuss crime matters, and Mrs. Brown says isn't that sweet and wholesome of him?

four Brown sons who are all happily married in the city, and about Mr. Brown's health, which is not so good, and how he would like to sell the farm and move into town. Dan thinks this is a shame, especially with all those nice cows around the place and he is much surprised to find Mr. Brown wants only a thousand cash, and the rest like rent, to close a deal.

Before he goes to bed Dan writes to Kitty. He tells her he has found a wonderful place where he will stay for his whole vacation, because it is peaceful and quiet, and he likes cows. He says the country lives up to the build-up she gives it, and he ends by telling her the Brown place is for sale and is a great bargain for

Mr. Brown has promised him he can help with the milking the next morning, and he is up early. He goes downstairs expecting to find Mr. Brown behind a stack of pan-

"LET'S GRAB A BITE"

If you go to a lunch wagon or a drugstore counter, you can look for good food . . . quick and cheap. Here's why

by Silas Bent

Keystone

BOY entered the restaurant and called: "Ham and, cracked, Java,

Behind the counter a waiter repeated the order to a cook down at the other end, and in three minutes the boy was on his way. A regular visitor, he knew the lingo of the place and he got what he wanted: sandwich of ham and fried egg on crackedwheat bread, with a paper container of coffee. In other restaurants the argot might have been different. The slanguage created by and for the midday meal is as varied as the places that serve it. Born in a hurry, it is so terse that often it is possible to order by number or letter of the alphabet.

Luncheries feed Americans every week day in the tempo they prefer. In Miami there is a counter where one hundred a day are served at each stool. As our defense program widens, that pace is likely to become commonplace in many sections of the country. Even now the quick-lunch business amounts to considerably more than two billions a year, although in many chains the average check is twenty cents. Drugstores alone do a half-billion-dollar food turnover.

Twenty-five years ago eating places could be classified roughly as hash houses and expensive restaurants. Today the despised hashery has blossomed into oyster bars, rotisseries, grills, delicatessens and vegetarian restaurants, tea rooms, coffee shops, beaneries, brass rails, barbecues and diners. Few are stuffy and smelly nowadays, thanks chiefly to the electric fan and air conditioning. That last item alone cost the industry four million dollars in 1940.

Feminine Influence

DINGINESS has disappeared generally with the kitchen odors. Many walls are still tiled in white but tiling is giving way to landscapes, elaborate murals, even period styles. That's the feminine influence. Ten years ago four-fifths of the patronage was masculine; now men are in the minority.

With dinginess and smelliness, bad cookery and inferior foods went into limbo. Your American may bolt his lunch but generally it is a good one, edible and fairly digestible. Otherwise this business would not have tripled as it has during the last decade, making it probably the fastest-growing business in this country.

More than speedy service was required to achieve that growth. Noisy eateries are on the wane; quiet efficiency is an asset, the quieter the better.

Every year more than four thousand new luncheries get underway, but they must be good to survive. Yet they keep growing faster than the population. And they are depressionproof. Their number increased faster when times got harder.

A prevailing sense of pressure and hustle has made the quick lunch popular. Then there have been tiny apartments, a greater number of women in business, smaller families and the servant problem. In New York nearly half the meals are eaten outside the home. In San Francisco and Los Angeles the average is onethird, in Chicago and Washington more than one-fourth.

Yet cities don't have a monopoly on the quick lunch. In the whole land more than one-fifth of all lunches are eaten in a hurry. In the tranquil village where I live, from which 150 persons commute to work in New York, a restaurant, two diners and three drugstores do a thriving noontime business with those who are left behind. Thursday - the maid's afternoon out - is the boom day.

In small towns drugstores and diners do most of the business. All told there are nearly 44,000 drugstores with fountains, and the fountains sell more sandwiches than icecream sodas. Many a pharmacist would go under if it weren't for this business.

But the diners that dot our corner lots by the thousands are a more distinctive product of America's eating habits. So named because of a somewhat remote resemblance to the railroad dining car, they have done their bit to spread the quick-lunch habit. They are in lineal descent from the "night owls" on wheels that made their appearance in New York toward the middle of the last century, where men in toppers, on their way home from parties, ate beside laborers on their way to work.

Stripped of wheels and set on a solid commercial basis, they multiplied amazingly. Near one of our Eastern universities there is a lallapaloosa eighty-four feet long - twice the usual length - which cost $25,-000 and seats a hundred undergraduates at a clip.

Modern refrigeration makes it possible for the diner, whether in a big city, a small town or on the roadside, to offer a varied bill. Many of them get their meats frozen, and their vegetables, too.

Log Cabin Millionaire

Dolled up and disguised, diners are known by other names. California gave birth to a chain of concrete structures on steel frames that were known as Log Cabins, and spawned other chains of White Towers and White Castles. The originator of Log Cabins, who started out in 1930 with $16,000 working capital, perceived the advantages of quality and of quiet, and is now a multimillion-

About half of all run-of-the-mill Elizabeth, New Jersey. A former hotel manager, he got into the business back in 1913, with the idea of a bigger and better product. In his first year he took in $1,380, but fifteen years later his gross was a million and a half. He sends out diners complete with pots and pans, refrigerators, steam tables, menu signs and dishes, plus plenty of free advice. And he credits the advice for the high rate of success among the dentists, mechanics, salesmen and clerks who buy his output on a threeyear installment plan. Slices of pie should be generous, never skimpy; plenty of Bermuda onion with the hamburgers; offer mouth-watering blue-plate combinations, such as pork chops and sweet potatoes, he advises.

Hamburgers make up half the business of the diners, and White Castles, 117 of them, sell thirty-seven million in a year.

Frankfurters and hamburgers combined, however, are not the end-all of the quick lunch by any means. New York has had its spaghetteria and Los Angeles its chowmeinery. And in the others, the food fads which sweep the country are reflected on the bill of fare. More and more people are asking for whole-wheat bread now. The vitamin ballyhoo is responsible

Josephine, my poor wife, had a bet on that filly's aristocratic nose. Jo is a scientific bettor; she picked this horse because she liked the blend of the jock's shirt. Me, I added eight to her two just because the name was Last Chance in the last race and we were leaving next morning for New York, anyway.

"If this oatbag comes in," I said, "we'll take a week off and go by the old homestead in Alabammy. You'll see the monument they put up on the spot where I was born."

Then there we were by the cashier's window, fingering three hundred and ten dollars in fresh manna that had just dropped out of the blue.

"How big is this monument?" asked Jo.

"Look, Sweetiepuss," I said. "You're sure you don't want to go on home and do over the living room? This is American money, you know."

We weren't in Florida just following the ponies. I'm only a hack writer trying to angle along in New York. This Florida thing was a barter deal - hotel bills for publicity blurbs - to get us a little sunshine after the blizzards.

"I wouldn't miss that monument, darling," said Josephine with the old acid. Then suddenly going female on me: "I do want to go, Charlie," she said softly into my collar. "I want to meet some of your family."

I kissed her by the bar. "Just remember you asked for it," I told her. We had two Old Fashioneds in salute to the War Between the States and left for Alabammy.

I am one of that unfortunate lost generation - I often tell myself when crying into my beer - whose elegant Southern forebears were well along toward creating something fine and cultural. Then Ulysses Grant's enforced anschluss liquidated all wealth and luxury, leaving only some very forlorn culture in spots. Us poor devils had to get out and scratch for a living against the handicap of distinguished ancestors. The result has not been too pleasant for any of us.

"By the time we could forget that Grandpap was a general, we were too old to be worth a damn," I was telling Cousin Viola at the big dinner she gave the returned prodigal. I stopped because a look about the table showed that most of the assembled cousins were still working chiefly at being the general's grandchildren. Then I saw Lizzie Lou. She was helping serve. I realized that I was staring at about the loveliest little girl I'd ever seen - my Jo is five foot eight.

"I was wondering when you'd discover her," Jo whispered.

"Who is she?"

"Lizzie Lou Abernathy. Your cousin Ansley's daughter."

"Get her in the car after dinner," I whispered. "We'll drive into town for a soda."

Watching Lizzie Lou, I have only a vague idea about the rest of that dinner. She moved about the room, head high, like a little prin-

Her figure, full in just the right places, was perfection embodied. Her voice, I noted, was soft and gentle.

"Scandal must be rearing its beautiful head," I told her in the car. "You simply can't be an offspring of Old Anse."

"I'm the youngest. Five boys, then me."
"She came along after I left," I explained to Jo.

"I've realized that, darling," she said, "for the last hour."

The soda-pop place had one of those noise machines and a spot for dancing. I picked a piece I knew and dropped in a nickel. Lizzie Lou rose without a word when I went over and took her hand.

"Pure research," I told Jo. She wrinkled her nice nose at me. Midway of the piece I stopped and led Lizzie Lou back.

"You saw?" I asked Josephine. "It's born in her like all us Draytons. Dancing blood." I turned to Lizzie Lou beside me.

"Look, you lovely creature. Answer me some questions—and honestly— First, who are you in love with?"

A wonderful blush rose in her clear cheeks. "Not anyone, Cousin Charlie."

"Then who's in love with you the most?"
Her lashes, a yard long, dropped. "Albert,
I believe — He runs the filling station. He's a great grandson of Colonel Nathan Bedford Forney."

Before taking Lizzie Lou home we found that she had the looks, education — Old Anse had sold a blooded bull to put her through college — family and personality to play in a much higher league than Laurelville. Josephine and I talked it over that night in bed; one of Cousin Viola's four-foot high, four-poster feather beds that I'll be a sack-eared mule if we didn't have to climb a ladder to dive into — but it slept like a cloud.

"It'd be a catastrophe, a sacrilege," I contended, "to allow that luscious little dumpling to stay down here and marry Albert, who'll dedicate the rest of her life to selling gasoline."

Even Jo liked Lizzie Lou, and was in favor of giving her a better break in the matrimonial sweepstakes. "Let me talk to your cousin Ansley tomorrow," she said. "It may be doing the child a great wrong, but we can show her Times Square, anyway."

It became my pleasant duty to meet Lizzie Lou at Pennsylvania station two weeks later because Jo, who goes to business, had to keep office hours. I couldn't find my sweet cousin for a long time because I kept walking around a crowd that stopped just outside the gate. It wasn't the Fordham track squad, as I'd thought at first, but only those fellows who got off the train with Lizzie Lou to make certain she found me all right.

They went along with us to the car. I told them all to call her later at the St. George hotel, which was where I did not live.

"Look, dumplepie," I told Lizzie Lou, once we got started for Brooklyn, "there are some facts of life that I'll have to cram into that gorgeous head of yours some way."

Lizzie Lou gave me a smile that turned my flinty old heart to raspberry jello. "I was only being friendly, Cousin Charlie."

"Look. This town is vicious and evil and sinister and — "

Lizzie Lou shivered slightly and seemed to snuggle closer to my shoulder for protection. She had that effect, always. "I think it's nice, Cousin Charlie," she said.

"But you — can't — speak — to — strangers," I told her, impressively. She just squeezed my arm and made me drop ten years.

The plan was for her to rest up from her trip that first night. Then she could sight-see days, and we'd take her somewhere after working hours. We both shoved off at eight thirty each morning; Jo to her office and me to the basement. I know, we took that apartment on Columbia Heights because the landlord sold me such an inspiring view of the harbor. But this writing racket is funny. After wasting two weeks gaping at passing ships, I rented an empty mop room in the basement from Sam, the superintendent, and holed up down there for my six hours daily

That night Jo suggested the Aquarium and Natural History Museum for the next day, with the added suggestion that it really was unwise to speak to strangers in New York — whatever the cordial custom was in Laurelville. "I'll just collect some material for my memory book," said Lizzie Lou.

I even tore that page out of the classified directory and marked the subway map so she couldn't get lost once Jo delivered her next morning at Bowling Green for the Aquarium.

"If in doubt, ask a policeman," was my parting admonition. "Not, mind you, the first stranger you meet."

I didn't get much writing done next morning. I got to worrying about who I'd ask over that night to meet Lizzie Lou. Finally, I went upstairs and called Jo. "Look, Sweetiepuss," Y said, "you bring someone out from the office for Lizzie Lou tonight. I can't seem to get hold of anyone."

Jo sounded doubtful. "I'll try," she said. She came in after five, alone. "Everybody was tied up for tonight," she said, "so I thought we'd just take Lizzie Lou —"

"Quit stalling," I told her. "You've probably discovered what I did today. We've lived in New York eight years. We know thousands of people. We have about ten real friends, of whom only two are suitable bachelors and both are out of town. Now what?"

"We've asked the child up here," she said. "We'll have to plan something for her before she gets back."

"You mean, if she gets back," I said. "One of us should have gone with her."

BUT Lizzie Lou got back all right, and before we had time to do much planning. With her was a well dressed, pleasant young man. "This is Mr. Clark, Cousin Josephine," said Lizzie Lou. "I met him on the ferry to Staten Island."

"What!" I yelped.

"I got mixed up, Cousin Charlie," she explained, "and Mr. Clark brought me home."

"I announce the Consolidated Food Show," the boy said, with some pride, "for CBS."

"Oh, you're Don Clark!"

"That's right."

"I'll have to hurry and change," said Lizzie Lou. "Mr. Clark is taking me to dinner and to a radio theater, if you all don't mind."

"Thought she might like to see the Allen broadcast," Clark said carelessly. "Be glad if you folks would go along."

"No, thanks," I said. Jo kicked me in the shins with her eyes. We'd been trying all week to finagle tickets for the Allen show.

"Just see that you get her in early."

They shoved off and left me alone with my poor wife. "Look, Sweetiepuss," I told her. "We failed to turn up an eligible man for our curvesome cousin. If, by the grace of God and the luck of the Draytons, she managed to find one herself, she's not going to be handicapped by having us along — Come on to a movie."

We moped around afterwards waiting up for Lizzie Lou, and it's well we did. There were only five of them. Besides Don Clark, there were two production engineers, a page boy who — I gathered — was also Harvard '38, and a solemn, dignified individual who, it turned out, was a radio gag man.

"Where's Fred Allen?" I asked Lizzie Lou.
"He and Portland had a date they couldn't break," she said, "but we'll see them Sunday."

"Remarkable daughter you've got there, Mr. Drayton," the gag man told me while the others were all out in the kitchen. "The 'Sunshine Girl,' you ought to call her. Start her out in one of the morning spots. She'd have a sponsor in a week."

I didn't bother to explain.

"Don't mind me," he went on. "I'll go when the others do. You see, she's the first really friendly and unaffected girl I've seen in five years. I fell in love with her — after my fatherly fashion, of course. Just let me sit here and bask awhile." I thought he was going to break down and sob.

We got them out finally, after Lizzie Lou had fed everyone hot chocolate — "Make you sleep well," she said — and bacon and eggs. Then Joe went in to tell the cousin good night and came out after awhile with a scared look in her eyes.

"Lizzie Lou was saying her prayers," she said.

I guess I just looked dumfounded.

"And, Charlie" — Jo came over to me and began to sniffle on my shoulder — "she just held out her arm and I knelt down too."

"I know this is a little sudden, Mr. Drayton," Don Clark said after Sam had brought him down in the basement next afternoon. "I made him bring me down here because I had to see you alone — It's about Lizzie Lou. I left her at the studio so I could come over here. I'm making about eight thousand now with a good chance to —"

"What about Lizzie Lou?"

"She's at the studio watching rehearsals. I want to marry her— That is, I love her. She's the sweetest, loveliest, finest—"

"Save it. Did you talk to her about it?"
"Not yet," the boy said. "I thought as you were her cousin I'd better get your permission first. I thought she'd like that."

"Are you scared you're going to lose her?"
I asked him.

"She's a pretty wonderful person to last long in this town."

"Then you'd better get back there and look out for her," I said. "The marrying part's up to her."

On my way upstairs a little later the switchboard girl handed me twelve calls for Lizzie Lou. I went on up and got out Flip, our pooch, for a breeze around the block. In front of our place we met Lizzie Lou just getting out of some foreign car that looked forty feet long. With her was a tall, dark and slick-looking Romeo, dressed like a show window. Certainly not Don Clark.

"Mayor LaGuardia, I presume," I said to Lizzie Lou.

"Cousin Charlie!" She sounded bubbly. "I've had the most marvelous day. This is Tony LeMon. He has an orchestra."

"A band, my dear," said this clothes rack, and offered me a wet dishrag. I brushed by it and took Lizzie Lou by the arm.

"We're going for a walk," I told her; and to LeMon, pointedly, "Goodby."

His look gave me a chill, but I walked Lizzie Lou off firmly and left him. It took me so long to think of a way to tell her about him convincingly — and keep it clean — that she got scared.

"Did I do anything wrong, Cousin Charlie?"
"Look, Sugarbun. I'm only a working man.
I don't run with this radio bunch you've got into. You know as well as I do that LeMon is a big shot. His radio hour is strictly coast-to-coast."

"Isn't it thrilling?"

"It could be a lot more. LeMon is also a

THE PERFECT PAL

Deliberately, Steve had killed a man. But he felt sure Henry would help him. For Henry was loyal to the core

by Leslie Gordon Barnard

Lou didn't suspect a thing. Not yet. She wouldn't till too late

THEN you have killed a man you want to run. But you don't run, because you've got to keep cool and hold on to your nerve. You come out of Joe's apartment and walk down the corridor to the elevator, whistling, and stop to light a cigarette when you reach the street. But all the time your mind goes shuttling back and forth. Back to Joe lying there crumpled up on the floor. Forward to things you've got to do.

Sooner or later somebody will investigate Joe's apartment and call in the cops. Maybe that woman in the next apartment. You could hear her coughing easy enough.

It's all right, though. You'll shake clear because you've got a cool head and perfect plans, and your papers in order and plenty of dough. Everything's figured out. You'll just grab a taxi to the airport, and the first plane out will land you where a ship is leaving for South America. South America is a very big

From the corner drugstore you telephone Henry. "Hullo, that you, Henry? Listen, Henry, you have those bags of mine all packed and ready. I'll be there in a few minutes. No, Henry, I told you, didn't I, you wouldn't be coming with me this time? Not this time, Henry."

You don't take a dim-wit like Henry to South America with you. You take a girl. A girl like Lou. "Hullo, Lou. I've got everything fixed like I told you. I'll pick you up in half an hour. Better make that twenty minutes, Lou. Sure, honey, sure. What's the matter with my voice? There's nothing the matter with my voice, honey. Not a thing. I'll be seeing you soon."

It's tough on Henry, of course. He'll be as lost as a dog whose master's gone away. "While I got you I got a friend, haven't I, Stevie?" Henry would say. "And while you got me you got a friend, too. That's how it is with us, isn't it, Stevie?" Sometimes you get mad with Henry, he's so dumb.

But Henry's tight-mouthed, even if he doesn't think fast. Henry has the dumb loyalty of a dog. If you're right with him, you're right, whatever happens. Tell him anything and he'll believe you. Even the night of the split-up with Joe, when Henry was supposed to be gone for the evening but walked in unexpected on you and Joe. And all that dough lying there. Piles of crisp new bills. The cops had been chasing their tails for a month, and Joe said it was safe now; he toted the stuff in a suitcase, to make the

"Say, where you come by all that?" Henry wanted to know.

JOE was in a dangerous mood, but he grinned faintly. "Didn't know we printed our own money, did you, Henry?" And Henry looked at you, his eyes asking, "Is that right?" Because yours is the only word Henry takes. So you nod, because one story is as good as another, and you've got other things on your mind.

"Lots more where that come from," Joe said, lighting a cigarette. "Eh, Steve?" You know right then you're going to kill Joe. Because, counting the stuff, you knew he was holding out on you. He'd cached the stuff after the bank robbery and now he was holding out.

He was trying to put over a fast one.

"Goin' to tell the cops we make our own money, Henry?" Joe said.

"I guess I'm Stevie's friend, ain't I?" Henry is like that. He wouldn't tell a soul. Because he's for you, Henry is. You can trust Henry. He's not like Joe - holding out on you and mocking you with his baby-blue eyes, saving in his slow drawl: "You wouldn't want that girl of yours to know, would you, Steve? Because I —" then stopping and smiling bleakly. You knew he meant it. You knew he'd tip off Lou if you made a squawk.

"O.K.!" you said. "O.K., Joe." But you knew you'd get even with him. You began to plan it. No, Henry wouldn't even tell Lou. Even if he knew you'd killed Joe.

Lou doesn't suspect a thing. Not yet. Compared with girls you've known she's a dewy-eyed innocent. But the kind of a girl who'll take a chance for the man she loves. You'll break it to her gradual. She'll learn. She'll need to. South America is a long piece from home. You can't walk back.

You walk a block along from the drugstore where you telephoned her and hail a taxi. You don't want to think about Joe lying there with that surprised look on his face. You just want to think of Lou. You keep seeing her as you did that first time, with the lights of the Lower Price Basement shining on her gold-bronze hair. "Can I interest you in something?" Sure, she could interest you, with a figure like hers, and her long lashes, and her little-girl mouth just made to be kissed. But you've got to go easy with her. She's that kind. It's going to be fun teaching Lou. And South America is a long piece from

A couple of blocks short of your place, you pay off the taxi. Trust these fellows to add up two-and-two; they've been about. No good taking chances. It's the little things sometimes that put a crimp in a perfect plan.

You itch to take it on the run, but you keep cool and walk slowly along, and let yourself in the outer door of your own apartment

You then step in the lift with a man who comes behind you. You nod to him because he lives on the third floor and he says isn't it nice weather, and you agree it is. It's good flying weather you think, and you wish you were in a plane with Lou beside you, a bit frightened, a bit shy, her long lashes playing tricks with your heart. She's a nice kid, Lou; and with the right kind of connections none at all. All on her own. Nobody'll ask any questions about Lou. Except maybe the landlady at her boarding house, who'd made a fuss about Lou staying out so late, and that fellow in the Lower Priced Basement Lou used to go about with.

You get off at the fourth, and walk along to your own door and let yourself in. You take a look at Henry, and close the door with a bang. Something has happened to Henry. Something big has happened to him.

"Stevie," he says, "I guess you got one friend when you got me. Even if you're not taking me with you this time, Stevie, I don't hold that against you. I'm your friend, ain't I. Stevie?"

"What's happened?" You've got to talk sharp to Henry sometimes.

"People think I'm dumb, but I'm not so slow as people think I am, am I, Stevie? Because I knew they was cops - right off, I knew they was cops."

"Cops?" You rap the word out. You push your hat back; your forehead is all damp.

"They said they'd be back later, the cops said they would, Stevie!"

You push past him. You've got to grab that money fast and get away. You know where you've parked all those crisp bills you've split with Joe, and you go there and kneel down and put your hand in to get them, and then you turn slowly and face Henry. Henry's face is all lit up. He can see you're worried, but he knows it's all right. You're worried because if that money was missing, there'd be no airport, no South America, no Lou . . . and you can't run far from the cops when you've nothing much but carfare left. But Henry knows it's all right. Henry's your

"It's all right, Stevie," he says, beaming at you. "You're looking for all that money you and Mr. Joe printed. I'm not so dumb as people think I am, Stevie. I guess I know what kind of trouble you'd get in if the cops found that. I guess I know how much phony money's worth. You needn't worry about them finding it, Stevie, because I dumped it all down the incinerator when I knew they was coming back. I wouldn't want you should get into trouble with the cops - see? - because you're a friend of mine."

in field behind the barn and sure enough there are the eight cows lying in the shade of a great big oak. Dan finds a stick, walks up to them and says, "Come on, you guys! Break it up, break it up!" Right away the cows get up and start moving, the collie yapping at them. Dan feels cakes. Instead, he finds four guys and they are all working on ham and eggs.

He can tell right away from their clothes they are city and not country guys, and though they are a little sour-looking they are polite enough to jump to their feet the minute he comes in. Dan is surprised, but friendly. He says "good morning" and asks for Mr. Brown.

"The old folks took a trip, sort of unexpected," says one guy, who is a little heavy around the waist. "Where did you come from?"

"He must belong to that jallopy out in back," puts in another guy. Dan nods at them.

"I am stopping here," he says pleasantly. "Are you guys boarders, too?"

"Sort of boarders," says the fat guy.

And then Dan gets wise. He puts back his head and laughs. "Golly, I am dumb," he says. "I know who you are, all right!"

THE fat one puts his hand in his pocket and steps up. "Yeah?" he says. 'Who are we?"

"You are Mr. Brown's four sons that are married and live in town," says Dan. "He tells me last night you are liable to drop in any time and surprise him. Oh, I sure heard a lot about you guys!" He goes around shaking hands, asking how are all the babies and did they bring their wives with them?

"No dames this trip," says the fatty. "How long are you staying?"

Dan says he likes the joint so much he wants to stay a full two weeks, and he hopes Mr. and Mrs. Brown's sudden trip won't make any difference, because he sure has been looking forward to helping with those cows.

The fat guy looks him over while talks and then he nods and gets the other three around him and they whisper together. The fat one comes out of the huddle chuckling. "You can stay," he says. "You can help us take care of the farm for our dear pa and ma. In fact, we will turn the cows over to you if you like them so much. We will not even charge you board if you will run a few errands for us now and again in that jallopy of yours. We do not like to take our big bus out on these dusty country roads."

"Sure I will," says Dan. "I sort of like to mosey around these hick towns."

"The only thing is," says the fat guy, "we will have to move you into that room next to the kitchen. Me and my brothers like to have our old rooms when we come back to the farm."

"Oh, I can sleep anywhere," says Dan. "Don't worry about me."

The fat guy looks at him a while and then he grins. "We won't," he

Dan sits down to the ham and eggs and falls to. The four boys scatter, except for one who sits with Dan until he finishes and goes to the barn to find the cow-dog.

This cow-dog is a smart collie, and he can certainly put the finger on those cows. He leads Dan to a fencedpretty proud of himself. "Nothing to it," he says to himself. "It is easier than bringing in those kid crapshooters from in back of Dugan's garage.'

He ambles along behind the cows. He smells nice early-morning smells and listens to a train whistle far, far away and the singing of birds. "I wish," he says out loud to the collie, "someone had told me about this cow racket sooner."

HE LETS out a long sigh, and all of a sudden being a cop seems silly. He thinks why should a guy spend his life knocking up against mugs who are crooks and killers when he can live like this in the country and meet people like the Browns who are simple and honest? When you are a cop all you see is the seamy side. His eye lights up and he grins. He hopes Kitty feels like he does about it. They have five hundred in the bank to buy furniture with. Maybe they could borrow another half a grand and buy the place.

The cows walk into the barn and Dan follows. He is a little disappointed to find the fat guy and another one sitting on stools and waiting for him. "I guess you want to do the milking yourselves?" Dan says.

"Milk?" says the fat one. "I never use it. But maybe my brother Spike will help you." Dan grins and finds a stool.

"I am not much good at it yet," he says. "You have to learn the grip, like when you join a new lodge."

Spike starts at one end of the row of cows and Dan at the other, and after a few minutes Dan is making real progress, even if his wrists get so tired he thinks his hands will drop off. He doesn't want Spike to show him up. He can hear Spike swearing and grunting and then all of a sudden there is a clatter and a yell. So he stands up and sees Spike sitting on the floor of the barn with the milkpail in his lap. Spike glares at the cow that did it and says, "Wise guy, huh?" and picks himself up.

The fat guy on the stool laughs and laughs. "Spike has been away so long he has forgotten how," he says. "I guess you will have to finish by your-

If you can lay five hundred on the line quick, we will fix it up so that pa will be satisfied with that. But we are shoving off in a few days."

He runs back to his room and starts a long letter to Kitty. He tells her (Continued on page 15)

MANHATTAN SUNSET

WATCHING THE SUN SET, the proverbial man from Missouri wouldn't believe it was coming up again . . . until he saw it do so with his own eyes.

And when Metropolitan invests money for the benefit of policyholders, it adopts that sound old habit of taking nothing for granted. Like the man from Missouri, we want to be shown.

►And that's because our first consideration must be safety. Of course, there is no such thing as an absolutely riskless investment, but we like to be as certain as possible that each investment is a good one. Our staff of investment specialists is well equipped to investigate proposed investments and therefore should make fewer mistakes than an individual attempting the same thing.

Of course, all Metropolitan investments are made in accordance with the insurance laws, which wisely limit the fields in which life insurance companies may invest. In addition, all such investments must meet our own investment standards.

►Suppose, for example, that Metropolitan is considering the investment of a sum of money in the bonds of an industrial company, or a company distributing light, heat, or power. The first thing we do is to gather all available data about that concern . . . its financial statements, recent audits, and similar material.

►In many instances, it is necessary to go further . . . to make a more exhaustive study of the company's management, its position in the trade, its record, and its

The mass of first-hand, up-to-date information thus obtained is carefully considered by those charged with this responsibility. The recommendations of these men must then be approved by the Finance Committee of Metropolitan's Board of Directors.

Once the securities have been purchased, Metropolitan continues to follow the company's operations through annual or interim reports, and to watch trade developments and changes in the industry in which the borrower is engaged. Metropolitan is better able to watch these things than an individual, and is better prepared to handle any difficulties that may arise. ►As we said before, safety is the first consideration in all Metropolitan investments. Second to safety, is the income from the investment-the interest that helps pay the cost of your life insurance.

The care with which Metropolitan invests funds for the benefit of its policyholders is reflected in the sound assets which enable the Company to fulfill its obligations.

THE scene is a hospital operating room. Nurses and doctors in white gowns and sterile masks stand around the operating table, ready for the patient.

The director nods to the cameraman; the doctors and nurses assume what they hope are professional attitudes; the double doors

They wheel her over to the operating table and make ready to place her upon it.

"Cry, Gretchen," the director says. (There was no sound track to worry about in those days.) Gretchen looks up and around at the glaring lights, white gowns, white pads covering the lower halves of made-up faces. Gretchen's jaws are set; Gretchen is frightened stiff.

"Cry!" one of the doctors says to her. Nothing happens. One of the nurses says gently, "Please try to cry, dear."

Suddenly from the mouth, eyes and nose of Gretchen comes such a job of crying as the cinema had not experienced up to then, which was 1918.

They lift her, howling, onto the table.

"Some little actress," the director says delightedly. "Boy, what a performance!"

Now it is time for the little girl to be put to sleep.

"All right, Gretchen," the director says, "you can stop crying now. You're supposed to lose consciousness — from the ether, see?"

"You can stop now," repeats a doctor. She keeps on raising the roof.

"Stop it!" yells the director. Gretchen hits high C. The director's hands go over his ears. "Take her away!" he orders.

Good-by, Gretchen. Some little actress...
In 1927 Lon Chaney and Loretta Young are playing a scene in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" that calls for Miss Young to break into tears. To break into tears, on purpose, is one of the hardest things for any actor to do. One way is to remember back to something sad and pretend it's now.

"Can you do it, Loretta?" the director asks. "I think so. I'll try."

The camera starts turning. Chaney and Miss Young go into their action. Suddenly Miss Young begins to weep. She weeps harder. She weeps longer than is necessary, but it is so well done that the director nods to the cameraman to keep going; motions to Chaney to carry on.

"All right, Loretta," he says presently. "Cut. That was splendid. That was one of the best — What's the matter, Loretta? What's the —"

"That's all, Gretch," Chaney says. (Miss Young's friends still call her Gretch.)

She turns away, sits down in a chair, sobs once more, takes out her hanky and wipes her eyes. "I'm sorry," she says: "it was just that I remembered something terrible that happened to me when I was a little kid."

Young Old-Timer

LORETTA YOUNG is in some respects the most remarkable person in Hollywood. Although she has been in pictures most of her life, she just now has reached the age at which many other current stars were, or are, getting their first good parts. That isn't very clear, is it? Here's what I mean:

Miss Young is twenty-eight. Many star players in Hollywood don't break in until they're that old. Yet she has been in pictures for twenty-three years, has taken leads for fifteen years, has been a star for ten.

Many people, having seen her perform as far back as they can remember, are waiting for her to break down all of a sudden, take the plaster off her wrinkles and do character parts. They think she can still play romantic leads only because the cameramen are gracious in the use of soft lenses.

They think she must be fifty.

The truth is, she doesn't even come close to looking her comparatively tender age; she uses almost no make-up; she is one of the easiest persons in Hollywood to photograph because she can stand any lens or camera angle; because the strongest lights they can invent faze her not one whit.

In her earlier days her main problem was to look old enough for grown-up parts. (In that business I mentioned in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," she was fourteen-going-on-fifteen.) Today she keeps right on looking like a kid. She'll probably look like a kid for ten years more.

Just to give you an idea: once, in the same picture, she played a girl nine years old and a grown, mature woman. Usually they employ two people for that. Miss Young did it alone. It had never been done before, and it never has been done since.

Lost Track of Roles

Nobody has any idea of how many pictures she has played in; it takes a good man to keep track of those in which she has starred. Once, when she was pretty well along and taking good parts, she played in fourteen pictures in a single year, which is another record. As recently as 1938, when she was a top star, she played in six pictures.

Primary reason for all this, perhaps, is that she is a genuine product of the movies. She came from no stage or theatrical academy; neither was she tapped on the shoulder by Destiny while selling yard goods, or sent starry-eyed to Hollywood as the winner of a beauty contest.

She simply started in at the bottom when she was five and kept going, learning little by little as she went along. She has not put in one minute studying the art of acting, outside of her daily work. That has been around

Motivated by no juvenile artistic urge in the beginning, she was sent in there to garner an occasional three and a half bucks to help out with the family grocery bill, which, since

But for one conspicuous item that irks: That hat.

A girl in spring is a skylark's hymn, An evensong in a cloister dim, A moon in June and a dove in love, But why the discordant detail above: That hat?

WAR DECLARED ON DIRT

of Lubbock, Texas, enjoy city clean-ups

Here's one kind of mobilization in which 130,000,000 Americans can participate

by Paul W. Kearney

HIS spring there will be an uprising of 8,000,000 Americans. Armed to the teeth, they will go to war against a common enemy within our midst—dirt.

It was twenty-nine years ago that a man in St. Louis got the idea. That man was the late Allen W. Clark, schoolteacher, editor and publisher, and his idea was a Spring Clean-Up Campaign to beautify his native city. For several years he financed the annual drive out of his own pocket with increasing success, but it wasn't long before popular acceptance of the doctrine snowballed the project to tremendous proportions. Civic organizations, trade groups, women's clubs, schools began to pile in and help. The plan was seized upon by other cities. And today over 7,500 communities stage their own Clean-Up Campaigns, in which 8,000,000 householders, armed with brooms and mops, paint brushes and hammers, rakes and spades, do battle with Dirt and Dis-

The dividends are enormous in beautification, increased civic pride and the reduction of accident and disease hazards. In Flint, Michigan, they used to have ten playgrounds—and eighteen kids killed each year while playing in the streets. The citizens finally went to work cleaning up vacant lots and back yards; now they have forty-five playgrounds and 2,500 vacant-lot and back-yard play areas—and not a child traffic death in three years!

Clean-ups Cut Fire Loss

EVEN the actual cash returns from Clean-Up Campaigns are amazing. Cincinnati has, through consistent clean-ups alone, reduced its annual fire loss by $850,000 — which means a saving of over $150,000 a year in reduced insurance premiums. It is axiomatic that "a clean house seldom burns."

From its modest beginning in St. Louis, Mr. Clark's idea is now organized as a national competition between cities and towns, with coveted awards offered in various population groups. Your city is probably competing in this contest (in 1940 no less than 2,900 communities asked the National Clean Up and Paint Up Campaign Bureau in Washington, D. C., for details on how to operate). The question is, what can you do to help your municipality win?

There is, of course, no uniform date for the intensive drive. Southern California and Gulf towns begin as early as February or March; northern cities get going in April, May or June, depending upon climate; the peak of the offensive is reached early in May. Neither is there any uniform procedure in conducting a drive. But the one outstanding fact about this wholesome effort at civic betterment is that the campaigns are invariably staged on such a small cash outlay. Scores of small communities get amazing results out of committee expenditures of from $10 to $100. Binghamton, New York (population, 78,000), ran a model campaign on $242 cash. St. Louis wins repeated prizes on a budget of around $2,000. In Chicago, where 600,000 school children and 1,100,000 families took part in 1939, the cash outlay was only $5,007.

In addition to Clean-Up and Paint-Up campaigns, many communities have included such projects as Fix-Up, Light-Up, Dress-Up, Modernize, Plant-Up, etc. In St. Louis alone 19,000 flower boxes were planted in last year's campaign, not to mention 36,000 flower gardens, 22,000 shrubs and 50,000 trees. And when you learn that in that same city 10,000 houses were painted and 125,000 walls repapered or calcimined in an elevenday drive, you realize what a marvelous thing Allen Clark's idea has turned out to be.

You realize it even more clearly if you happen to see its results in a smaller municipality where it is possible to watch everything tickwhich chanced to be my good fortune when my wife and I were touring through Texas. Up in the Panhandle we stopped at Lubbock, a city of 31,500 population, and soon learned at the hotel that this was the "Cleanest City in Texas," having won the award in its population group eleven successive times in the national competition. Since no other Texas community approached that record, I hied myself to the Chamber of Commerce - and in an hour they gave me an earful!

"This town isn't as clean as it ought to be," began Mr. R. D. Shinkle, the Chamber's publicity man. And that startling statement was the first clue to their success: refusal to be satisfied with their past record. The second clue that soon became apparent was the thoroughness and efficiency of the Clean-Up Campaign organization; another was the enthusiastic co-operation of virtually the entire population, from the City Board (which appropriated funds for the employment of 331 men to take care of municipal properties) right down to the orphan asylum (whose inmates pitched right in and went to work with their

House-to-House Canvass

All the public schools and churches worked in the drive; the twelve organizations of the Federated Women's Clubs took care of front-yard inspections in a house-to-house canvass totaling 7,153 calls; the Boy Scouts, white and colored, handled back-yard and alley inspections and collected 17,515 pounds of trash; members of the American Legion, Kiwanis and Rotary met at appointed places with rakes and shovels — and worked like dogs.

An inspection blank gets into every Lubbock home, either by mail or through the newspapers or school children, and is followed shortly by a personal visit from a volunteer worker. If no action is visible, a follow-up notice is delivered by a telegraph messenger and a reinspection is made later. Through neighborly example, crowd psychology and personal pride, every householder is stimulated to the desire to climb on the band wagon. And that desire is deftly fanned into flame by the insistent prodding of the children — who have to bring back to school reports of household cleanup activities — and by the awarding of numerous prizes in cash or merchandise donated by public-spirited merchants. For instance, Scout troops collect awards for the greatest amount of rubbish collected; younger boys gather up tin cans from vacant lots to win free movie tickets.

If you wonder how a community that has earned the title of the cleanest city in its state eleven times can have so much trash around, you simply forget what the cities that don't win look like. The fact that each year in Lubbock shows a bigger clean-up job than the year before is just an indication of what you and your neighbors could accomplish in your city if you really put your minds to it the way these Texans do.

Amazing Record

A FEW year-to-year figures taken from Lubbock's records should drive the point home to anyone. In 1939, for example, 3,987 alleys and vacant lots were cleaned: an increase of 1,268 over the previous campaign. A total of 8,195 back and front yards were cleaned - an increase of 42.5% over the preceding year. In 1940 a grand total of 113,970 clean-up accomplishments was an increase of 43.1% over 1939, when they gathered in their tenth straight award. And remember that every win in this contest makes the next one that much harder because the matter of improvement over previous conditions counts heavily, giving a decided edge to the newcom-

Some of the more specific figures from this community of 31,500 are particularly interesting. The report shown me for the campaign completed just prior to my visit recorded a total of 1,178 porches repaired; 1,444 rats killed; 2,809 piles of rubbish burned; 1,210 street-name signs cleaned; almost a thousand homes painted (78% more than the previous year); 1,661 walls papered or calcimined; 3,170 walls scrubbed. In short, the whole grand total of clean-up accomplishments tells a stirring story of civic pride converted into a priceless tangible asset.

Not long ago Harvard's Professor Albert Bushnell Hart wrote an observation about a condition that has impressed every American traveler abroad: "The United States with all its wealth is a dirty country measured by standards of most European countries."

Shamefully enough, it is true. But in 7,500 American communities "steps are being taken" this spring to quash that indictment. And when you think of what Lubbock, Texas — just one of those 7,500 — can accomplish each year, you get a glimmer of what an all-out, nationwide war on dirt could achieve in terms of health, safety — and actual dollar economies.

what a bargain he can get and he asks her to draw the money out of the bank quick and wire it to him. He knows now, he says, that he is a farmer at heart just like his greatgrandfather, and that he will never be happy doing anything else. He goes on for pages, getting excited about the cows and life on a farm, and he is still at it when Spike comes and tells him they want him to run into town and pick up the evening paper.

The village is only ten minutes away, and Dan mails his letter and buys the city paper. It is a homey little town, and he thinks how pretty soon he will be standing around the chain grocery store talking crops with the neighbors, just like his great-grandfather sits around the peat pile in County Clare years ago. He can just see Kitty in the farm kitchen, up to her elbows putting up preserves like the farm women do in books, and socking her egg money away in a teapot on the mantelpiece, like in the movies.

SPIKE is waiting for him when he comes back, and grabs the paper. He turns right to the classified ads, and the three other guys crowd around, look over his shoulder and whisper, all excited. Dan shakes his head and thinks what saps they are to be worrying about getting jobs when they could live on the farm and take care of cows.

The next day passes the same way, with Dan getting better at milking and fonder of the cows and going to the village to buy the evening paper for the boys. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are still away on their trip, and Dan doesn't like this so much, because he is getting tired of eating ham and eggs three times a day, which is the best the boys can manage. When he asks about it, the fat guy looks up from the classified ads and grins. "It won't be long now," he says

The following morning Dan takes ten minutes off his milking time and he feels pretty good. He goes back to the house and finds the four boys in the living room and they are sitting around as though they are waiting for him. "We want you to do a little errand for us," says the fat guy.

"Why not?" replies Dan pleasantly. "But the paper don't get here till late afternoon.'

"We don't need the paper any more. We want you to go out and pick up a package for us."

"An important package," says Spike.

"It is like this," says the fat guy, putting his hand on Dan's shoulder. "We have found out one of those cows is pretty sick, and we got to get some medicine for her.'

"It's the big red one with the spotted nose," says Spike.

The red one is Dan's favorite and he is pretty upset. "But she don't look sick this morning," he says.

"You are not an old cow hand like us," says the fat one. "She is in a bad way, and this is very special medicine and the doc ain't got time to bring it out. So he is leaving it in the mailbox at the place where he lives and you can pick it up."

That cow is sicker than you think."

But they don't need to tell Dan. He covers the five miles over country roads in eight minutes and finds the mailbox. It has the right name painted on it, but the farm it belongs to looks as though it hasn't been lived in for years. Dan thinks he has made a mistake until he reaches inside and finds the package, just like the fat guy says. But Fatty is wrong about one thing. There is someone around. He is a thin, well-dressed young fellow and he steps out from behind Dan's car with his lips tight and his face white as a sheet.

"Morning," says Dan pleasantly. "I didn't expect anyone to be here."

"I know that," says the young fellow, "but I waited anyway." He looks down at the package in brown wrapping paper in Dan's hand. "So you've got it, have you?"

Dan nods. "Thanks a lot. Nice of you to leave it."

The young man's lip curls. "I followed instructions," he says. "I think you will find everything in order."

"Sure," says Dan. "This package will save her life, all right."

The youngster gives a little shudder. Then he touches Dan's arm. "Tell me," he whispers hoarsely, "is she all right?"

"Well, to tell the truth," replies Dan, "she looks fine to me this morning when I bring her in."

"Bring her in? From where?" "The field behind the barn," says

The boardinghouse was on Green Street in Hollywood, started by Mrs. roung shortly after the migration of the family from Salt Lake City, when Gretchen (later Loretta) was four years old and her two sisters, Polly Ann and Betty Jane, a few years older. The boardinghouse venture was tough going at first, even with all three girls occasionally picking up what was then considered big dough for doing extra and juvenile work in the movies; but it grew, as the movies did, into something colossal, overflowing into three houses and accommodating up to seventy-five guests. The largest boardinghouse in the world, for all I know.

Anyway, as soon as it was over the hump, Mrs. Young yanked the kids from the pictures and sent them to the Sacred Heart convent school, near Los Angeles. For a while the movies were forgotten, except once a month when the girls were home for the week end. Then they devoted every minute to amateur theatricals, movie style, in the living room, for the alleged entertainment of the guests; and later, as they began to show some competence, at church affairs.

This was all right until the two elder sisters finished school and went back into the movies, where they began to go places in a modest way. (Betty Jane is now Sally Blane, a current film actress.) This was tough on Gretch. The three girls had decided they all would be movie actresses, and here was Gretch falling way behind the others.

Well, one week Gretch was home alone, and the phone rang. It was Mervyn LeRoy, who was just starting his directorial career. He wanted to speak to Polly Ann. He had a part for her. He directed Gretch to tell her, when she came home, to report at once to a certain casting director.

She was about to explain that Polly was out of town on a visit - which she was - when she realized, from what Mr. LeRoy had said, that the casting director in question never had seen her sister. She kept her mouth shut, hung up, put on her best dress, hurried over to the studio and reported as Polly Ann Young.

The casting director seemed a bit surprised at Polly Ann's youth. He asked her to do a scene for him. Poor Gretch. It was far beyond her ability. She got in there and tried to pitch, but it was pretty awful, and she had to confess. But whatever may be said about the wages of sin, this one worked out fine. She had done well enough to demonstrate potential acting ability, and she was given a screen test at once, within the range of her experience, her age and her ability.

She came out swell, and forthwith was given a small part — but a part - in "Naughty But Nice," in which Colleen Moore was starring.

It was the beginning of Loretta

I saw her recently on the set of "The Lady From Cheyenne," her forthcoming vehicle. She was all dressed up in white and she was lovely, for the scene was that of a ball at the governor's mansion; but in the rest of the picture she is a rough-andready frontier product: a distinctly new type of role for her.

"I want more of these," she said. "The first time I ever was on a movie set, just before that business of the operating room, the director took one look at me and told me to go home and wash my face. I think that made too much of an impression on me. I mean, maybe I've kept it too clean ever since. I'm beginning to think I ought to muddy it up a little. People have been looking at it, the way it is, for a pretty long time."

Well, maybe they have. Maybe you ought to wear a mask, Gretch. Maybe you ought to grow a beard.

And maybe you ought to leave your face alone after this picture, and wear your pretty dresses. Maybe you're all right the way you are.

for that - just as it has brought the tomato sandwich, fruit juices and raw vegetables to our quick lunch.

Vitamins boosted the quick lunch by teaching us to get more nutriment in less bulk. We look back with a smile to the time when we ate dinner in the middle of the day. Workers who get an hour for lunch wouldn't think of spending it over a four-course meal; no, we should rather have spare time to window-shop or get a haircut.

There are more than twelve hundred chains, most of them growing. Among those on the wane are the cafeterias, which once promised to dominate the business. Cafeteria means a place where coffee is served. Chicago appears to have been the first to use the word as the name for a place where the customers waited on themselves. After the first burst of popularity, the novelty of self-service wore off a bit. Now there are but twenty thousand of them, about onetenth of the total number of places where one can get a quick lunch. But a lot of us still prefer them, because thus we escape tipping.

Wait a minute. When I spoke of a two-billion dollar business I took no account of the tips. On a ten per cent

There are twice as many waitresses as waiters in our quick-lunch places. Girls serve more daintily, spill less soup and coffee. Some managers will hire redheaded girls only; all admit that good-looking girls build business — if you can get 'em.

No lunch is too quick for a bit of badinage. If counterboys are not quick-witted it is just too bad. If the girls are slow in give and take they lose caste, and sometimes their jobs.

While it is unlikely that the late Senator Copeland's prophecy that the family kitchen would disappear altogether will be fulfilled, there is every probability that the business will continue to grow. Its employees already number over half a million directly, to say nothing of those who work in the industries that supply it.

In other countries it is possible to eat on the run, but only as a matter of emergency. Nowhere else has the quick lunch been made a major activity on a mass-production basis. It is as democratic as hot dogs, as American as pie à la mode. It is a national institution. Long may it wave!

ing when an ornithologist friend of mine pointed out to me the world's greatest traveler, a bird whose tireless pinions carry it almost from pole to pole, and back again, every twelve months.

In all nature there is nothing that so challenges the imagination as the migration of the arctic tern; nothing that explains the strange, living chemistry which drives this migrant on his twenty-thousand-mile round trip with the changing seasons.

The arctic tern nests as far north as land extends and from thence south to the Aleutian Islands, Alaska, and even as far south as Maine and Massachusetts.

When the babies' wings are stoutened, parent birds and their two or three young begin their long trek south, flying 1,000 miles a week for ten weeks.

For years the migration pathway was shrouded in mystery. Great flocks left the north polar regions, and seventy days later were reported in the antarctic seas. Even now, records from banded birds are so sparse that we can make no positive statements.

Birds traveling the eastern flyway seem to pass between Greenland and Labrador, and then head southeast across the trackless Atlantic to the west coast of Africa. There some continue down the African coast and cross antarctic seas. Others recross the Atlantic—this double ocean crossing has always mystified me—and, paralleling the east coast of South America, continue to the icebound antarctic wastes. Birds using the western flyway race down the California coast, along the western shore of South America and thence to Antarctica.

The arctic tern is a small-bodied, wide-winged, swallow-tailed bird. He closely resembles the common tern familiar to everyone who has seen the sea. His bill is carmine. His red legs are held back against his body to streamline his flight. In his summer plumage his under feathers vary from silver gray to pure white. He wears a black cap on his head, fringed with a thread of white near the bill. His back is silver-gray.

One might think that the arctic tern has a restless urge for daylight. For eight months he never sees the dark of night, and for four of these months he never sees the setting sun. He might be said to pursue the sun, this pre-eminent globe-trotter, who views each year more daylight and a larger part of our globe than any other living creature.

coughed now. She stared at me through her spectacles and said:

"The editor may be pleased, Mr. Walpole, but I'm sure you're not."

It seemed to be impossible that I should hear such words from the adoring Miss Miles.

"Not pleased?" I repeated. "I'm very pleased. I'm delighted with them."

In a kind of frenzy she began:

"Oh, no you're not, Mr. Walpole. Don't say that you are! I'm afraid you'll be very angry with me, but I can't help it. I wouldn't dare, but I've liked some of your books so very much and — and — but you are writing too much, Mr. Walpole, and in your heart you know it. You're writing these stories for money, and that's all right if you need the money, but you don't need it and these aren't good stories. Anyone at all might have written them — "

And she rushed from the room.

Painful Aftermath

I KNEW that she was right and I was furious with her. Miss Miles, to whom I had been so friendly and even generous! Miss Miles, with her spectacles and two-colored hair and irascible grandmother!

I pulled myself together. I did an unkind thing and hired someone from another agency. I never saw Miss Miles again, yet I often thought of her. I saw her standing beside Horton. I saw Horton and herself having tea together. Oddly enough, I even envied her life, so orderly, so quiet and so authentic

I began to feel for the first time that I was being pressed in on every side. I went to bed too late. I was eating and drinking too much. I was getting too fat. And — yes, in my heart I knew it — the short stories were really rotten!

Strangest of all, I compared Horton and Miss Miles with my own guests. Horton and Miss Miles seemed to me superior. There was something they had that I and many of my guests had

What was it?

It was directly after Miss Miles's astonishing outburst that I fought my fight. I didn't fight it consciously at all. That, I think, we seldom do. I went on with my silly life, entertaining and being entertained, spending a lot of money on nothing at all, never passing an hour by myself, rushing about in the company of people for whom I did not care.

Underneath all this activity I was unhappy, restless, dissatisfied. I simply could not forget Horton and Miss Miles

Final Scene

And so it was that the third antagonist stepped in, and with him the climax. Mr. Parker was an "extra" waiter. He was hired when you had a party. He had come to me on a number of occasions and I liked him very much. He had been for many years in the Royal Navy and was, I believe, for a time their champion heavyweight boxer.

He was a huge man with chest, arms and thighs quite out of the natural size. He was immensely goodnatured and his only weakness was liquor, though when he was on a job he was strictly sober.

His ideas were simple. He thought that the English were supreme, he hated Bolsheviks and fascists, he believed in "sticking to a pal," he liked women but distrusted them.

He declared himself my faithful servant. I was "an English gentleman." I was generous. I had no "side." In truth, I was sure that he considered me perfect.

Then came the Catastrophe, if that is what you would name it. You might equally call it the Victory.

I had given one of my larger parties and up in the blue-ceilinged library had said farewell to my last lingering guests. It was four o'clock of a summer morning and already the sun was shining. Clawed about the brows by an animal headache, I went down to the dining room.

Here a strange sight met my eyes.

WHEN ugly flakes and scales begin to speck your clothes, when your scalp begins to itch annoyingly, it's time to act—and act fast!

Nature may be warning you that infectious dandruff has set in... may be telling you to do something about it before it gets any worse.

Start now with Listerine Antiseptic. Just douse it on your scalp and hair morning and night and follow with vigorous and persistent massage.

This is the simple medical treatment which has shown such outstanding results in a substantial majority of clinical test cases . . . the easy method used by thousands in their own homes.

Listerine, the antiseptic that has been famous for more than 50 years as a mouth wash and gargle, often brings quick improvement in cases of infectious dandruff, because it gives both hair and scalp an antiseptic bath. The loosened dandruff scales begin to disappear. Your scalp feels healthier, more invigorated. And meanwhile, Listerine is killing millions of germs on scalp and hair, including the queer "bottle bacillus," recognized by outstanding authorities as a causative agent of the infectious type of dandruff.

Clinical results of this simple, pleasant treatment have been literally amazing. In one test, 76% of dandruff sufferers who used Listerine and massage twice a day, within a month showed complete disappearance of, or marked improvement in, the symptoms.

If you've got the slightest symptom of this trouble, don't waste any time. You may have a real infection, so begin today with Listerine Antiseptic and massage. To save yourself money, buy the large economy-size bottle.

BUT WEAR THE RIGHT FLOWERS!

Your choice must vary with the occasion and with your costume

by Sylvia Blythe

RESH flowers, if you know how to choose them, give personal adornment of color in its richest hues, of design in its purest form, and of fragrance in all its clean, crisp, dewy

Yet knowing which flowers to choose, and how and when to wear them, calls for some thought, ingenuity and imagination, says one man who knows. He is Benny Hubbard, designer for one of this country's most fashionable florists. His chic creations dominate flower-fashions everywhere-even thousands of miles away from the counters where he snips stems, mixes blossoms, wires petals, and thinks up new and exciting effects. Urged to confide some of the secrets of his trade, he gives you rules and out-of-the-ordinary tricks to remember the next time you pick flowers from gardens, meadows, flower stalls, or from the florist's frosty vaults.

The first rule has to do with keeping flowers in character with your costume and scaled in size to your figure. If your clothes are of the feminine type - soft, frilly or lacy - wear small, dainty, delicately-colored flowers; generously massed, if you are large; scaled down to size, if you are small. Lily Pons, the tiny and very feminine Metropolitan diva, likes to wear a small bouquet of sweetheart roses and forget-me-nots, says Mr. Hubbard. Mary Martin, petite singing star of the screen, another customer of the feminine type, frequently wears a slender spray of dainty white Stephanotis, combined with blue corn-

With tweeds or other clothes of the casual type, the flowers that bloom in your lapels must be made of sterner stuff. Excellent choices are mimosa, acacia, marigolds, daisies, heather and thistle. It's smart to tie a heather or a thistle boutonniere with a tiny bow of Scotch plaid ribbon.

Sophisticated Flowers

ON THE other hand, if you prefer sophisticated clothes, you need the more sophisticated flowers: calla and Easter lilies, gardenias, camellias, birdsof-paradise, irises, cyclamen, roses (of the haughty type), dahlias, and, of course, orchids, if you can afford them. The tall and broad-shouldered Joan Crawford, for instance, who dresses with superlative chic, likes rare white orchids - three large blooms, festooned with sprays of smaller orchids.

But orchids, showy in size or opulent in color, and expensive for many of us, shine best against a background of cocktail or evening clothes. They are not appropriate, for example, when you choose flowers to give the daytime speaker who addresses your woman's club. Do a bit of sleuthing to find out what costume this speaker plans to wear and pick the kind and color of flowers that suit it best. If she is small and plans a classic black outfit, a corsage of small calla lilies - mounted perhaps on a "star" of Easter-lily petals - would make her rise and call you blessed, says Mr. Hubbard. A corsage of small brown orchids, if she wears a green and brown ensemble, would also rate fervent praise.

On the other hand, a lady in a natty blue suit, with feminine touches at the neck, might like in these days a patriotic floral emblem for her lapel. This ornament can be made up with a red rose in the center, circled by a small ring of white stock or sweet peas, and then outlined by a final ring of blue cornflowers.

For a daytime speaker of imposing stature and wearing a classic black dress, a mammoth red cabbage rose, minus stem, foliage or ribbon, offers a smart corsage. To make this cabbage rose florists use one ordinary rose for the center and enlarge it by wiring the petals of four other roses on to the center one.

Once you have decided on the kind of flowers to wear, you can use them for any costume purpose for which you would use artificial flowers. You can perch them on your hat, entwine them in your hair, tuck them under your belt, or pin them on your lapel, on your shoulder, or on your daytime or evening bag. But always wear them heads up. You can slip them through earrings, bracelets, finger rings and dress clips. You can wear them garland-style around your neck or sew them, blossom by blossom, around the hem, armhole or neckline of an evening dress. But don't blossom out in too many spots. Twin arrangements are usually the smartest. These can be a boutonniere on each lapel; a cluster of flowers on your hat and another tucked inside your belt: a tiny nosegay on your wrist and one planted in your hair.

Helping Your Face

Any woman, no matter what her age, can wear flowers in her hair. If you have a round or broad face, wear your flowers at top-center of your head for their elongating effect. If you have a too-slender face, bring out width by wearing your flowers, Carmen-fashion, behind each of your

Your own garden can supply you with flowers in season. But often with garden flowers and always with field flowers, it is a wise precaution to go over them with a damp cloth, petal by petal, and leaf by leaf, to make sure that no insects will start roaming afield. Then if you want to dress up the nosegay you make for yourself, use brown or black velvet, or black cire ribbon, tied with a neat French bow in two loops.

There is a last and very important rule that will help you make the most of flower ornaments. Wear a lipstick that harmonizes or matches in shade, Mr. Hubbard says. For instance, blue or purple violets, delphinium, lavender orchids or cornflowers look best with a lipstick that has a hint of blue in it. On the other hand, with mangolds, yellow daisies, talisman roses or brown orchids, wear a lipstick in the yellow-red spectrum. With red or pink flowers it is smart to choose lipstick that matches exactly.

"You left her out in the field all night?" cries the young fellow.

"Oh, we do every night," says Dan.
"She likes it under that big tree."

The young fellow tightens up all over. "Fiends!" he whispers.

"Who's a fiend?" says Dan sharply,
"Where'd you expect we'd keep her—in the house?" He stops and chuckles,
"She is a great old girl. Got the funniest waddle you ever saw when the dog yaps at her and starts her off."

The young man is gritting his teeth. "If you hurt her — "-

"What do you mean hurt her?" says Dan, getting sore. "I am real fond of her. Every time I pass her I pat her on the nose."

He is so mad he slams the car into gear and speeds off. Dan is almost to the farm when he passes a car that looks familiar. He slows up, and sure enough there is his Uncle Dennis, in his civilian clothes, behind the wheel. Next to him is Kitty and in the rear seat are Kitty's cousins Tommy and Bill, the rookie detectives.

Kitty is out of her car as soon as Dan is out of his and they meet in the road. But she won't even give him a chance to kiss her. "Tell me quick!" she cries. "Have you signed anything yet?"

"Not yet," Dan says. "But — "
"Thank Heaven!" sighs Kitty.
"We're in time!"

Uncle Dennis sticks his head out the car window. "Ain't you ashamed," he barks, "dragging us all up here in the wilderness on our day off to keep you from making a fool of yourself over a bunch of cows?"

"No one asked you to come," snaps

Uncle Dennis gives a snort. "Kitty asks us," he says. "She practically makes us come. We have been driving all night to bring you home. Now make it snappy."

"I can't go back," says Dan. "One of the cows is sick."

Kitty is standing there shaking her head at him. "The trouble is," she moans, "you got an overdose of Nature all at once."

"But let me show you the place," Dan begs. "It is the sweetest little joint you ever put an eye on."

There is a lot of grumbling, but finally they follow Dan and park the two cars behind the barn. "Now we will go up to the house," says Dan, "and I will show you around and you will see why I want to buy the place."

So they start to stroll across the field to the house — the four cops and Kitty. But they have hardly started before there is a yell from the house. The fat guy is on the porch. "Who you bringing here?" he shouts.

"Dan cups his hands to his mouth and yells back: "Just some cop friends of mine."

The five of them start again to cross the field. "None of you mugs," says Dan, "understands what the country is like. It is such a relief to get away from criminals. To enjoy the peace and the quiet—" He breaks off because a shot rings out. "Someone must be hunting rabbits out in back," says Dan.

"If someone is hunting rabbits out in back," says Cousin Tommy, "why does something whiz past my ear?"

"Unless I am seeing things," says Cousin Bill, "that fat guy is back on the porch hiding behind that pillar." Uncle Dennis squints. "The fat guy," he says, and his voice starts rising like a police siren, "with a sawed-off machine gun!"

It is a good thing there is a thick tree behind them. Dan gives Kitty a push and she gets behind it before the guns start barking again. The other four finish in a dead heat just as the tree is peppered, and puffs of dust rise up from the ground around them.

"The peace and the quiet!" grunts Uncle Dennis, inching along on his stomach

Then all of a sudden the shooting stops. They peek out from behind the tree and see why. The four guys are coming down the porch steps, but they are safe behind old Mr. Brown and his wife and a hatchet-faced old lady who shakes her cane in the air and scolds in a shrill voice.

"It's Tubby Myers and the toughest snatch gang in the country and the old dowager herself!" growls Uncle Dennis.

THE guys keep their human shield in front of them and edge over to the shed where their big car is. Uncle Dennis and Cousins Bill and Tommy have their service revolvers out, but there is nothing they can do. One of the men runs for the car and the motor roars. Then the other three jump for it, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown run in the other direction and Mrs. Millicent stands her ground and waves her cane and then stamps her foot.

The car comes plunging out of the shed. "Tires or gas tank," says Uncle Dennis, taking aim. "Call your shots."

The target is not so far away, but it is moving awful fast. The three cops behind the tree keep shooting, but nothing happens. Then Dan steps out and gives a quick wind-up and lets go with a rock. It is a clean strike into the driver's seat. The car bounces off the drive, blows two tires, and noses into a stone wall with a crash that turns it over with its wheels spinning in the air like an upsidedown beetle kicking its legs. There are two mugs able to stand on their feet by the time Dan gets there. After about a minute there are none at all, and Dan is hardly warmed up by the

In about fifteen minutes things are a little quiet again. The four guys are on the grass face down, with their hands behind them. Mr. Brown is through telling how he and his wife and old Mrs. Millicent are kept prisoners in the upstairs rooms. Mrs. Brown is inside cleaning up her kitchen, which is a terrible mess. Mrs. Millicent finally runs out of breath giving orders. She turns to Kitty and says, "Who is responsible for getting these men here to rescue me?"

"He is," says Kitty, pointing to Dan.

Dan gets so red it shows under his sunburn. "But sort of indirectly, ma'am," he says. Mrs. Millicent glares at him and bounces her cane on the ground.

"Took your time about it, didn't you?" she snaps. She spears at him with her stick. "What's that you've got under your arm?"

Dan holds out the brown paper package. "I got it from a young fellow down the road," he says.

MRS. MILLICENT grabs it out of his hand and tears down the paper at one corner. "So my grandson paid the ransom, the ninny!" she barks. She glares at Dan again. "You're a smart young man!" she says. "Come and see me in the city. There will be a reward."

But Kitty speaks up quick. "He is a police officer, Mrs. Millicent," she says, "and he oughtn't to take a reward for doing police work, even if he is on a leave of absence. It is reward enough for him to know he is a good cop. That's all he ever wants to be." She fixed Dan with her eye. "Isn't that right, Officer McGarry?"

Dan waits. There is one of those sudden stillnesses, when everyone stops talking at once, and away off in the distance someplace a cow moos. "Isn't that right, Officer?" Kitty says again, her voice rising.

Dan sighs. He gulps. His mouth twitches. "Yeah," he says slowly. "That's right."

WHY SNORING IS NO JOKE

AIM AT A TREE...by FULTON WILLIAMS

Follow this suggestion and get the loveliest pictures you ever took

F THE thousands of pictures I have made in my time, there are only three on the wall in my office where I can always see them. One is a picture of a cat; the other two are trees: a group of white birches by a lake in the Adirondacks and a stand of swamp cypress against a dying sun in a Florida marsh. I have scores of prints that are better technically or finer artistically than those trees - but none that are as satisfying to look at.

So if you want a camera project that will be fun to work at and gratifying to look back on, start a collection of tree pictures - pictures taken with some appreciation of their characters and temperaments. Snap different trees as you meet them on your travels or at home. Snap the same trees at different times of the day from sunrise to sunset. Above all, snap them in successive seasons: some stark naked in the winter, others laden with snow; some bedecked with buds and delicate leaves in spring, to contrast with their full dress of summer.

For pictorial variation in your album you can also rely on varying weather conditions. Strong winds do things to trees that can be photographed much more easily than described, and changing cloud effects offer a wide range of backgrounds for those who have the patience to wait and watch for them. Variety can also be achieved through composition and arrangement. Every shot needn't be a complete tree; oftentimes a single branch against a sky, or a distant vista under a gracefully arching bough, or the glint of a slanting sun or a gnarled trunk will tell a perfectly adequate story.

Watch, too, for those strange shapes of trees, wind-twisted, weather-beaten or lightning-scarred, which suggest caricatures. From Georgia I brought home a shot of a dead trunk draped in Spanish moss swaying gently in the breeze. It is a stark, morbid thing that I call "The Hag," and the very fact that my wife shudders every time she sees it is the best evidence that it really is a picture that conveys its meaning without explanation.

Much more cheerful and festive, of course, are the trees in blossom in the spring, and pictures of these are allotted a large space in any album. The dogwoods, the horse chestnuts, the various orchard blooms in the North; the redbuds, the locusts, the jacarandas in the South - all vie with each other as camera fodder for the wide-awake snapshooter. There are scads of lovely pictures to be made of them in blackand-white - and lovelier ones to be made in color. But whichever medium you use, remember that blossoms turn out most gratifyingly in close-ups. A single branch showing a dozen or more blossoms distinguishable as such is infinitely better than a shot of a whole tree covered with a maze of meaningless white spots. And when working with color film, always try to jockey your branch of ossoms so that you have a patch of blue sky for the background; the results will make you gasp with delight.

Don't forget, too, that whether you are working in color or in black-and-white, close-ups of blossoms turn out best in a soft, diffused light rather than in brilliant sun. Pick a time when the sun is hidden by a cloud. The most common mistake of tyros is to shoot these delicate blooms in an intense light, which gives you just so many chalklike blobs in your picture.

The only other rule is, get to know these "people," the trees, and you'll have a camera project that will provide untold pleasure for a long, long time to come.

"I was watching his rehearsal with some of Don's friends. Afterwards, he came over. The first thing I knew we were in his car," she explained.

"And the first thing that batonwaver knows he'll get a bust in the eye!" I said.

That was a Thursday. The rest of the week we caught our luscious cousin only on the run.

"Maybe we ought to take a couple of rooms over in Rockefeller Center,' I told her, "so it'll be handier for you."

"I'm having a simply scrumptious time," she told us, "and I'll never get over thanking you darlings."

Thursday night Don Clark brought her home. If he had made any progress, she never mentioned it and we didn't ask. Next night there was another crowd; seven or eight came piling in around midnight. Seeing Lizzie Lou home must have become a popular custom over on 52nd Street. One youngster stood out from the rest because he had manners. Lizzie Lou called him Brock. Jo said he looked

"Brock who?" I asked when they'd "Hartford, or Hart something," said Lizzie Lou. Jo and I just stared at each other.

"Darling," said Jo. "Where did you meet Brockholst Hartley?"

"WE WERE going up into the Rockefeller Center tower to see the view when I first noticed him following us," said Lizzie Lou.

"His family's company has offices in the building," said Jo.

"And when we started over to noon services at St. Philip's Cathedral today's Good Friday, you know --I asked him if he didn't want to go. I asked everyone."

"You must have had quite a pewful," I said. "His father gave most of the cathedral."

"Well, he's a nice boy, anyway," said Lizzie Lou, her small chin up. "You'll practically never hear me disparaging a hundred million dollars," I said.

Saturday had been planned ahead. We walked eighteen and a half miles showing Lizzie Lou the Metropolitan Museum and other sights. Poor Jo and I staggered back to the apartment plenty ready for bed.

I always sleep late Sundays, and besides I was sore all over from the day before. Lifting a phone book is the most exercise I usually take. I kept hearing confused noises between naps. Finally, I wobbled out of bed and peeked in our living room.

I saw about ten or twelve young men in various examples of Easter dress - and more were coming. The room was crowded with flowers. I signalled to Jo.

"I know I'm dead," I said when she came out. "But how did the news spread so fast?"

"Get up," she said. "They're the men Lizzie Lou asked to take her to church, and you're coming with us."

That explains the pictures the papers carried. The very fact of Charlie Drayton appearing in church for the first time in twenty years should have been sufficient to bring out the photographers, but beauteous Lizzie Lou — and my Jo — surrounded by over twenty escorts were a smash hit.

They got us posed after the service on the church steps. LeMon had a smirk a mile wide, knowing what a pleasant shock his publicity agent would get. They shot Lizzie Lou posed separately with LeMon, Don Clark and anyone else, I guess, who needed a free plug. Even old man Hartley, himself, who decidedly didn't, came up and they got him arm in arm with Lizzie Lou. All this was put on the air by the portable broadcaster who'd been sent out to describe the Easter parade. We were it.

"I'm sorry Mr. Fred Allen's not here," Lizzie Lou told me. "He said he'd see me in church."

Monday morning Lizzie Lou came down to my mop room where I was biting my nails as usual. "A nice man called up and said he was the Mayor's secretary," she announced. "The Mayor wants me to come to lunch. Is it all right if I go?"

"It's okay with me," I said, "only you're piling up one whale of a lot of material for that memory book." I went upstairs and verified the call. They said they'd send a motorcycle escort for her.

"Mayor Favors More Churchgoing," was the head over the shot of Lizzie Lou and His Honor on City Hall steps. "Most of our present problems could be solved by a return to the teachings of Christ," the Mayor was quoted. "I have only the warmest commendation for this lovely young lady, who has brought happiness and an awakened interest in the Church to New York City."

Jo and I sat up late reading Lizzie Lou's press. The phone rang steadily. The Churchgoers Brotherhood wanted her for a lecture tour. The Kings County Girls' Organization invited her to address the monthly luncheon. The Alabama Club called up, among many others.

That was the night Lizzie Lou disappeared.

We didn't get worried until about one o'clock, and then not much. But when our comely cousin had not appeared by two o'clock, I began to do some telephoning. I didn't suspect the Mayor, but I did insist on getting through to a secretary who told me that Miss Abernathy had left shortly after two P.M. in the company of Don Clark. Some bright boy in the City Hall newsroom checked with the secretary and got wind that there might be a story. Anything about Lizzie Lou was red hot, anyway.

This fellow called me a few minutes later and asked to speak to Lizzie Lou. I cussed him out for calling so late and made the mistake of telling him she was in bed asleep.

That must have set him off, for when I finally got hold of Don Clark, he said that some reporters had already got him up. He wanted to know what the hell it was all about. The last he'd seen of Lizzie Lou she was leaving the studio, about six, with LeMon.

"Get dressed and stay here by the phone," I told Jo. "I'm going to kick a band leader's beautiful teeth out."

I thought I knew how to find people in this town, but it being around four in the morning I had one devil of a time locating LeMon's apartment. The press boys were there ahead of me. "The butler's not talking, Mr. Drayton," one of them told me. "We've been waiting for you."

LeMon's man let me in when I introduced myself. Quietly and with determination I took him by the neck and promised to beat his ears off if he didn't tell me where his boss was. He was a little fellow, so he believed me. LeMon was on his boat. "23rd Street," he said. "The Mahana."

I knew better than to waste wind trying to shake the reporters, so I got in one of their cars to save time. A newsboy in front of Grand Central was yelling, "Radio Star Elopes With Happiness Girl," as we went by. The Mirror man looked at me, grinning.

"Nice going," I said sourly.

LeMon's boat wasn't at the foot of 23rd Street. Someone woke a sleepy dock attendant and we learned that Mahana had left around seven the night before for her home port at Hempstead Harbor, on Long Island. Yes, Mr. LeMon was aboard, but he had no record of any guests. The newsmen stopped long enough to call their rewrite desks and we were off again for a long dash out the Island. I was seething mad.

"Kick him just once for me, Mr. Drayton," the Mirror man asked.

The sun came up and we stopped for coffee. I called Jo. It was around seven when I finally climbed aboard the anchored Mahana from my rented dinghy. I felt like a fool and had no idea what action I would or could take. The horrible thought occurred, I confess, that Lizzie Lou might be a willing guest. I wanted just one punch at LeMon in any event.

Nobody had answered my hail, but I'd glimpsed a frightened Chinese face at a porthole forward. Nothing was locked, so I went below, followed by two faithful newshounds who had rowed out with me.

In the last stateroom I tried, the one farthest aft, was LeMon, dead drunk, to believe the smell. I rolled him over. One of his eyes was puffed, completely closed. A gash in his cheek. Someone had beat me to him. A reporter handed me a wet towel and I slapped LeMon awake with it.

"Where's Lizzie Lou?" I demanded.
"Shanghaied by my own crew," he mumbled. Then he saw me. "How should I know? Go look for little Lizzie Lou. Give her my love." He fell back.

There was no one aboard, we found, but LeMon and the Chinese. We pieced the story together from what we got out of the Chinese boy. Lizzie Lou had been aboard when Mahana left 23rd Street. There was an argument in which the Captain came back and took part, finally slapping LeMon around somewhat and locking him in his cabin. The boat had been turned back to set Lizzie Lou ashore at 23rd Street before continuing to Hempstead. The Captain and a deckhand had cleared out after anchoring.

More reporters and photographers were now arriving, for the dinghy was making quick trips. Flashlights were popping in LeMon's cabin. I went in and shook him. He was a sorry sight.

"I ought to bust you," I told him.
"Don't hit old Tony," he mumbled.
"Wasn't going to wrong your girl.
Going to marry her."

"What difference did that make with your first four wives?" I asked.

"This was diff'rent," he said.
"Sweet little Lizzie Lou. The only girl"—he pointed a wavering finger at me—"the very onliest little girl Tony ever met who's not on the make. 'Cept she could make a man out of old Tony—"

"She's no magician," I snapped, and started home.

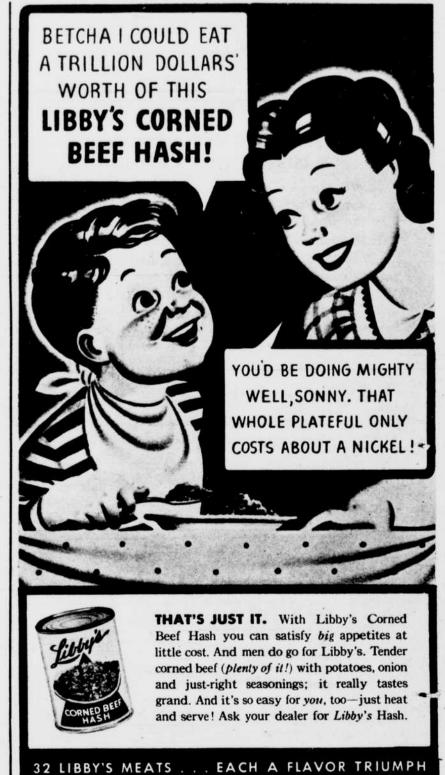

The papers I bought in front of our place around noon screamed, "Happiness Girl Jilts Radio Star," "LeMon Slugged By Yacht Captain." Those pictures of LeMon would certainly never do his popularity any good. I went upstairs expecting to find Lizzie Lou but, instead, Brockholst Hartley was there.

"If Mrs. Drayton will excuse us," he said, "I should like to ask that you take a short drive with me, sir." I looked at Jo, who shrugged off any knowledge of what was up.

"Stay by the phone," I told her.
"And stop worrying." Considerably mystified I went with Hartley to his car and we drove off.

"It's just that I wanted to talk with you alone, Mr. Drayton," he said. "First, let me relieve your mind of any further anxiety concerning Lizzie Lou. She is now on her way to Alabama in Mr. LeMon's auto."

This Week's Recipes — Norwegian

A noted hostess gives some new and practical ideas for hearty meals

RS. J. BORDEN HARRIMAN, the last representative of the United States in Norway, has been a fine hostess all her life and the entertainer especially of men of affairs. She began as a young wife in her native New York where the financially important and socially elite of the Metropolis were frequenters of her drawing room.

But Mrs. Harriman's greatest reputation came to her later in Washington. At her house in the Capital during the exciting pre-war days of the Wilson administrations, you met the people who were molding our national history - statesmen, political leaders, economists, labor authorities and high-ranking journalists. To her famous Sunday-night suppers, where the talk was virtually an open forum on current problems, came both Democrats and Republicans. Moreover, the Harriman hospitality outlasted changes of administration and of political party.

"We had no list of guests, and there were no assigned subjects of discussion," Mrs. Harriman says, "but everyone knew that problems would be discussed and that he could talk freely. Bill Hard was around a great deal and he used to set the ball rolling for me. There would be from thirty to fifty present, and we ate at little tables. Everyone was waited on, however, for I do not like buffet meals they do not seem to me complimentary to the guests."

In Norway the Harriman genius for entertaining again had full scope, for as Mrs. Harriman puts it: "You keep open house in a legation. People are always coming through, and my house was a rendezvous for American newspapermen stationed all over Europe in Rome, London or Spain. So I always planned what I called an 'elastic' luncheon. Then I could feel free to invite any one at any time. Macaroni with a rich and 'gooey' tomato-meat sauce stretches far and tastes delicious. Cold meat and salad take care excellently of both expected and unexpected guests. Shirred eggs, topped with cheese that is lightly browned under the broiler, can be prepared on the briefest notice. For dessert, a well-made brown Betty is satisfactory and simple to prepare in quantity.'

Legation entertaining has its more formal side also, and often Mrs. Harriman's dinner parties ran on well past midnight. "Sometimes there was dancing, often people played cards, always there was candid talk," Mrs. Harriman says. And up almost to the final minute of her stay in the Norwegian Legation, Mrs. Harriman was serene in her official entertaining, one of her last services being a dinner for the new French minister and the Countess de Dampierre. Four days later, with the Nazi bombers booming overhead, twenty-five persons sat down to snatch a hasty breakfast at the legation table - wives, children and retainers of the consulate staff in Norway. Before ten, they were on their way, for the Royal family had gone and Oslo was being evacuated.

Mrs. Harriman, now in her late sixties, retains a spirit adaptable to a changing world. She liked Norway for the simplicity and true democracy of its people. She notes with satisfaction an increasing simplicity and unpretentiousness in this country also. especially among the favored ones of the younger generation. "On the cook's day out," she says, "my granddaughter gets the family meals and likes it. That is the way things should be."

In Norway, hospitality is simple but lavish. "There is no time when a Norwegian does not seem able to eat," Mrs. Harriman points out. "It is the result of the climate and the tremendous amount of exercise they take. They make, you know, almost a cult of physical culture. Even I took up skiing, though I wouldn't bother with it here. There in Norway you can step out your front door, put on your skis and off you go. That is the kind of life that produces hearty appetites."

WALLY'S WAGON

Easter Moon

THE human race is kind of funny. One time it will do something so nice that you're glad you're a member—an' then next minute it will behave so that you feel like resigning from it.

Here it is Easter. I notice how nice the moonlight is, always, around Easter time. So I remark on it to Mr. Grink, who works nights at the Weather Bureau.

"Sure," he says, "and why not? Easter each year falls on the first Sunday after the Paschal full moon. It was picked out in 325 A.D. at a meeting in Nicea so the pilgrims could see to travel at night."

These wasn't our pilgrims—
the Plymouth Rock ones—Mr.
Grink explains. They was early church pilgrims on their way to shrines to celebrate the resurrection. But I guess our folks up around Plymouth found the Easter moon handy, too, in their time, about 1,300 years later.

Think of it. For over 1,600 years now, people have been able to stick to an agreement about a date that meant new hope an' faith to 'em!

But Bushy Barnes just come in with the mornin' papers. He glances at the headlines while I'm drawin' his coffee.

"It says here," says Bushy, slow, like he was apologizin' to somebody, "it says, 'almost perfect bombin' weather is in prospect for the next few nights."

None of the three of us looks at each other.

I guess we was all just so ashamed of the human race right then we couldn't any of us look another man in the eye!

"How do you know?" I asked.
"Our firm has quite a large organization along the major highways.
Also, I took the liberty of engaging private investigators. By now, some of them should be trailing her to ensure her safe arrival in Laurelville."

"You seem to be assuming a hell of a lot, Hartley."

The boy colored up. He wasn't much over twenty-five. "I've had to act more rapidly than I should have preferred, sir," he said. "I determined yesterday to ask Miss Abernathy to be my wife. My father has taught us, his sons, the virtues of simplicity, the obligation of wealth and, if I may add, the ability to estimate character. As a partner to share my future responsibilities, I find Miss Abernathy definitely superior to that type of girl - rather hardened in sophistication - with whom I've been largely thrown, Miss Abernathy has a quality seldom found except among Spanish women; the capacity for making a man - marriage - her career. I hope to be the fortunate man."

"Let's go home," I told him. "Mrs. Drayton will want to know about Lizzie Lou."

He broke our silence just once.

"I should like to add, Mr. Drayton, that when I read the first extras this morning telling of the purported elopement, I realized beyond any question that I love Lizzie Lou more than — more than — "

He stopped. I felt somehow relieved. I put a sympathetic arm around the youngster's shoulder. We arrived to find Jo waiting in front of the apartment entrance. She trotted out to the car with a letter, special delivery. It was from Lizzie Lou, mailed at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and very long. I read it through, then went over parts of it again aloud for the benefit of Hartley:

"— We only went aboard for a few minutes to see his trophies. I thought you wouldn't mind that. While I was downstairs the boat started moving. I ran up on deck, but it was too late. Mr. LeMon only laughed when I begged him to let me go ashore . . .

"'He wanted me to come downstairs and drink with him. Finally the Captain, the kindest sort of man, went downstairs and there was a fight. Then the Captain came back up and turned the boat around. He let me off where we started from. The Captain was so sweet. He said he'd had a daughter just like me once and he couldn't stand LeMon's actions.

"'I felt like crying. The Captain gave me Mr. LeMon's auto keys and told me to drive right straight home. I ran out of money here, but I pawned my ring and wrist watch to the nicest man in the filling station. I'm so ashamed because I disobeyed you and I know you'll never want to see me again.'"

There was a lot more about how ashamed she was; and how grateful for the "wonderful" visit. And to tell LeMon that one of her brothers would return his car. Then — "'P.S. Tell Brock goodby for me, please.'"

Jo was starting to sniffle. Hartley was staring straight ahead. I got out of the car. "I warn you," I told Hartley. "You're going to find some competition down there from a boy named Albert, a great grandson of Colonel Nathan Bedford Forney."

"Yes, I realize that," said Brock.
"He runs our station in Laurelville — and over the phone he sounded like a very fine chap."

I stuck out my hand. "Well, so long," I said. "I hope you get her."

I didn't tell him, but I'd heard Old Anse say a dozen times that he didn't want his children to marry for money, but he hoped they'd love where money was. As it happened, Lizzie Lou did.

The End

So easy to get tender, flakier pastry with "Sure-Mix" Crisco! It's different!

Is your pie the flaky kind that melts in your mouth almost before you bite through it? Or is it "just pie"? Well, don't be discouraged...

There's grand news for you in the experience of hundreds of housewives who discovered how the change of one ingredient gave them tender, flakier pies.

These housewives, in 20 cities from Coast to Coast, were using every kind of shortening you can think of; independent investigators stopped at their homes—gave them cans of New "Sure-Mix" Crisco—and asked them to make pies with this Crisco and their regular shortenings—and compare.

New Crisco wins 4 to 1 . . .

When these housewives told us which shortening they liked best. "Sure-Mix" Crisco pies won their vote by 4 to 1 over all other shortenings combined! Yes—they said Crisco pies were "tender and flakier"... they "tasted better." And the home folks heartily agreed.

And Crisco cakes got the same 4-to-1 vote. "They're lighter—smoother-textured—more delicious!" women said, "and Criscofried foods are crisp—not greasy—better-tasting."

No wonder "Sure-Mix" Crisco won this great big preference. A patented discovery makes this pure all-vegetable shortening act differently from any home shortening we know of.

Change to New "Sure-Mix" Crisco for your baking and frying. It's made to make everything taste better. Just watch your family "sit up and take notice"!

When a question was sent to doctors by a leading medical publication, 2 out of 3 of the doctors who replied called specific attention to Crisco's digestibility. CRISCO

Calvin Coolidge, with a grip across the seam of the ball, seems set to chuck a curve. Bucky Harris, Nat manager, appears uncertain of the result.

There must have been a spin on this pitch by Woodrow Wilson. It certainly evoked the admiration of his physi-Harris-Ewing Photo cian, Admiral Cary Grayson. (See Pages 4 and 5.)

Kenesaw Mountain Landis was the poultice that took the black eye off organized baseball, hard hit by the Black Sox scandal. For 20 years, the former Federal jurist has kept the game in line. Styles have changed since the days of this picture, but no pitching style has come along to outmode that of Walter Perry Johnson's when this was snapped in 1909. Then not quite 21 and less than two years with the Washington club, Walter was hailed by many as the game's greatest moundsman. Barr-Farnham Photo

His face is lined now by managerial woes of three clubs, but this is the way Stanley Raymond Harris looked when he came here in 1919, later to take over the Nats' helm in 1924.

For Trout Anglers It Was No April Fool

ELY FISHING on the "Fishermen's Paradise" of Maryland's Big Hunting Creek is a sport for women as well as men. Among those making early catches on opening day was Mrs. Helen Shure of Baltimore, shown landing a 10-inch brookie. Hundreds of anglers trooped to nearby mountain streams to celebrate the trout season opening. Some got their limit of 10 fish and some got none. Because of the heavy fishing, which soon would remove all fish from the stream, it is necessary for the State to raise them artificially in hatcheries and plant them before the season opens. Gone are the days when an angler had long stretches of stream to himself, but in spite of crowded conditions they still manage to enjoy the oudoors and catch a few fish. Ten inches is a good size these days, with the best ranging up to 16 inches long.

Good rainbow water. Game rainbow trout like fast water such as this at the foot of Frederick Reservoir on Fishing Creek. Trying their luck with "natural" bait of minnows and worms-April 1 is too early for good fly fishing—are Milton Frank of Frederick, Md., and E. J. Smith of Mountaindale, Md.

An unusual catch. The fly fisherman's paraphernalia frames this catch of four kinds of trout from Big Hunting Creek. They are, left to right, rainbow, brown, brook and "native" brown. The "native" brown, not hatchery raised, is the prize of the lot, being more highly colored and tastier.

He's happy anyway. This 8 inch trout was the best Charles M. Burras of Frederick could do on opening day, but at that it was better than some of the other fellows were doing. Burras was "bait" fishing, with a minnow bucket draped around his neck.

Beginning of the end. Trout raised at the Lewistown (Md.) Fish Hatchery being seined (above) from one of the rearing ponds by Sherman Hewitt and Alton Powell for planting in streams to be caught later this season by anglers. At right, George Palmer pours a bucketful into the specially constructed tank truck that will take them on their last ride.

Checking the catch. The law permits only 10 trout per day, all of which must be over 7 inches long. Here Game Warden D. W. Kettells (right) is checking a limit catch made on Fishing Creek by Austin Rippeon of Frederick, Md. Rippeon's fish all passed the examination.
