Told Rationing Is Alternative

BACKGROUND-

Transfer of 50 American oil tankers to Britain has created acute transportation problem for Eastern States' petroleum sup-plies. Interior Secretary Ickes has suggested gasless Sundays and other reductions of normal gasoline use, criticized "jackrabbit" and high-speed motorists, warned that gas rationing will be necessary if citizens fail to cooperate in curtailing consump-

The District of Columbia and 16 Atlantic seaboard States were asked last night by Secretary of the Interior Ickes to reduce their consumption of gasoline one-third by voluntary co-operation or face the prospect of compulsory rationing. Speaking in his capacity of defense petroleum co-ordinator, Mr. Ickes told governing authorities of the Eastern territories that "it has become the patriotic duty of every one in the States affected by the impending shortage of petroleum products to reduce their consumption of such products." He concluded with a warning that "the rationing of petroleum products may become necessary unless the consumption of motor fuel be voluntarily reduced by 3313 per cent in the Atlantic Coast area.

Siege Is Proclaimed; Further Expulsions Of Germans Seen BACKGROUND-

German infiltration into South American countries has been reported intensified since the start of the European war, allegedly with the hope of bringing pro-Nazi regimes to power as part of a program of hampering hemisphere defense. Nazi subversive activities have been reported in many other Latin American countries, principally Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, July 19 .- The Bolivian government proclaimed a state of siege tonight and ordered the German Minister to leave the country within 43 hours in a swift move to suppress what informed persons called a threatened Nazi putsch.

The government announcement said the siege decree was to thwart "a revolutionary attempt being plotted by groups with totalitarian tendencies Although the government did not directly link the two actions simultaneously with the declaration of a state of siege, it announced that the German Minister, Ernest Wendler, had been declared persona not grata at a cabinet meeting this afternoon and was ordered to get out of Bolivia within two days.

Further Expulsions Expected.

The announcement did not mention the other members of the Legation staff, but unusually well-informed persons said it was believed they likewise would be expelled.

Police authorities took precautionary measures to maintain order throughout the republic, and ofiicial reports said the situation wa 'tranquil" everywhere.

Missing Girl's Body Is Found by Police In Unoccupied Home

Reading (Mass.) Student, 15, Vanished After Leaving for Grocery

the Associated Press.

READING, Mass., July 19 .- Constance Shipp, 15-year-old girl missing four days, was found slain tonight in a dwelling here, hardly a block from her home, State Po-lice Inspector Edward J. Sherlock said

Occupants of the house were away on vacation, he said.

The inspector did not disclose immediately the cause of the death of the Reading High School junior. The body, bearing a stab wound in the left breast, apparently had been slashed with a knife. District Attorney Robert F. Bradford declared a bread knife found clutched in her left hand had been "planted" and that the breast wound evidently also had been inflicted by her attacker in an attempt to leave the appearance of a suicide. Earlier investigators had pressed a tentative belief she had been abducted or had suffered amnesia

Disappeared Tuesday. She disappeared Tuesday soon after leaving her home to go to a grocery for her mother. The father, George Shipp, issued a widely published appeal to her, asking that she let her parents know her whereabouts.

Inspector Sherlock, Reading Po lice Chief Jeremiah Cullinane and other officers found the body. District Attorney Robert F. Bradford left Boston immediately for the in-

Wages Are Reported Excluded From Bill To Control Prices

Measure Is Expected To Be Submitted to Congress This Week

By the Associated Press.

Although details of the Administration's price-control legislation are not complete, a congressional source said yesterday that leaders had ruled against including wages among the items which would be subject to regulation by the President through the Office of Price Control.

The measure is expected to be submitted to Congress this week.

As explained by those familiar with its general terms, the legislation would fix a basic period-probably the first six months of 1941as an average level to be used in computing fair wholesale prices for various products.

A formula which would take into consideration the cost of production as well as other factors then would be applied to arrive at a "ceiling beyond which prices could not go. This formula, legislators said, would provide a degree of elasticity to meet possible basic cost increases.

Differentials In Prices.

Reported as definitely in the picture, also, were methods of computing differentials in prices for the same item in different parts of the country, taking into account variance in the cost of living.

Chief obstacle encountered thus far by those drafting the legislation was said to have been a disagreement over what should be done about farm prices.

One group, led by Vice President Wallace, was said to have contended that "parity" prices-those which would give the farmer the same purchasing power he had in the vears 1909-14 - should be established as fair return on those crops.

Barkley Opposes Plan. Senate Majority Leader Barkley was represented, however, as believing farm prices ought not to be pegged at that level. Sharing Senator Barkley's view leaders of farm organizations already have made it plain to Congress that they want no Government "ceiling" at "parity" levels on the prices of their products. Protests against such action already have been voiced before a Senate

Carretta, civic leader.

Mr. Carretta asserted that under the ruling Federal employes who become candidates for local county offices must run as independents.

"This is a difficult handicap to surmount because of the two-party system prevalent in the county," Mr. Carretta explained. He is considering running as an independent candidate for the Arlington County Board.

The intent of the amended Hatch proved. Act is to allow Federal employes to hold local offices and this objective could be achieved more successfully if they could become party nominees, Mr. Carretta declared.

Mr. Carretta, a Federal employe, is chairman of the Executive Committee of the Arlington County Civic Federation.

President's Advisers On Foreign Affairs Assailed by Wheeler

'A Motley Crew,' He Calls Members of Cabinet, Hopkins, Frankfurter

By the Associated Pres Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana contended yesterday that President Roosevelt was basing foreign policy on the advice of "a motley crew" consisting of Secretaries Knox. Stimson and Ickes, Lease-Lend Co-ordinator Harry Hopkins and Felix Frankfurter, associate justice of the Supreme Court. Renewing the running verbal exchange between himself and the Chief Executive. Senator Wheeler asserted that the great bulk of American public opinion was not reflected in the President's actions. Mr. Roosevelt, remarking that he could not disclose future troop movements, told a press conference Friday he did not want to "pull a Wheeler" Senator Wheeler had predicted in advance that American forces would occupy Iceland and was criticized by administration men who contended he possibly had endangered American lives.

"A Motley Crew."

In reply, Senator Wheeler told reporters that "if the President would 'pull a Wheeler' he would keep his promise to keep us out of War

Referring to those he said were the President's chief advisers, Senator Wheeler told a press conference: "Knox, Stimson, Ickes, Hopkins and Frankfurter-what a motley crew to determine foreign policy for 130,000,000 people in the United States.

"The President today seems to be wholly dependent for his information on a little handful of men surrounding him who couldn't be electtd to the office of dog catcher in their own home towns. And yet they, along with Winston Churchill (British prime minister) and the royal refugees in the United States.

are determining foreign policy.' The Montana Senator declared that if such a group "keeps on flouting public opinion, the main issue will be, not whether we can save democracy in Europe and Asia, but whether we can save it here in this country.

Preparations for Venture Reported Throughout Nipponese Empire

By the Associated Press

CHUNGKING, July 19 .-- Chinese ources said tonight they expected a new Japanese military move within a fortnight, with opinion divided as to whether invasion of Siberia or further penetration of French Indo-China would be the objective.

All-out preparations for a fresh venture were reported throughout the Japanese Empire-the calling of reservists, rerouting of shipping, concentration of men and munitions at embarkation points.

Chinese quarters expressed belief that movement of additional Japanese military forces into Indo-China, where Japan has three air bases. would be aimed at an attack on neighboring Yunnan province, China, to cut the Burma supply road.

He pointed out that Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka was the only one of four key ministers dropped in Konoye's formation of the new cabinet and declared the selection head the foreign ministry promised relations abroad.

Young Communist League Backs Longer Army Duty

NEW YORK, July 19 .- The Young Communist League, which once opposed extension of draft service bevond a year, announced today complete support of the plan.

Max Weiss, national president, told a meeting of the league's national council that before the change in the international situation the league opposed all proposals for the extension of service for selectees and added:

"But the present international situation is of such gravity and represents such a threatening menace to the United States, that we must state clearly and unequivocally our complete support of the proposals of the Army general staff for extension of the period of draft service for the duration of the unlimited national emergency."

Mr. Weiss said that while Communists were in the lead in denouncing conscription last year, "this resentment and indignation should not be permitted by the people to be capitalized on and manipulated • • • for the fifth column purpose of rendering America helpless in the face of the gravest crisis in its history."

Labor Seen Asking Parity in Defense Management

Would Have Equal Voice With Government And Industry

By CLARKE BEACH.

Labor is demanding a larger share in the administration of the defense program, and the 10.000.000 voices of organized workers making this demand became clearer and more audible early this month when the strike wave receded and the uproar and the chanting of the picket line died down somewhat.

It is an obvious echo of the cry of the British workers a year ago, when every soul in the United Kingdom was called upon to sacrifice to the limit to preserve the nation's freedom, and labor replied it was ready to place its hard-won privileges in escrow only after it had been given a share in the government equal to that of industry.

Many liberal thinkers in the administration doubt that labor could draw a true parallel between the situations here and in England.

Hillman Tried Conciliation. But Sidney Hillman obviously was attempting to conciliate labor on this score in two significant moves on July 9. That date could well mark a transition stage. Only one strike case was pending before the National Mediation Board. There were only 15 strikes in defense industries, involving 8,570 man represents only Hillman. workers. There had been a steady recession from the peak reached in administration says that Mr. Hillthe latter part of March, when 18.000 man has done a signal service for to 24,000 workers were out on strikes labor and the country in his posiin defense industries, and at the end of April, when 400,000 coal because of his foresight in estabminers were added to the 14,000 to lishing programs a year ago to train 15,000 workers who were striking in skilled workers that industry now the defense plants.

These complaints had reached a high pitch when Mr. Hillman on July 9 created defense labor advisory committees and established a "labor supply branch" in the Office of Production Management Creation of a labor supply branch was an all-out effort to mobilize the labor resources of the country for the rapidly expanding defense production program, and Mr. Hillman announced that both labor and management would be represented on the new agencies which would operate under the new setup. He called it "one of the most significant poolings of labor, management and Government resources that has thus far taken place in the national masses. defense program.

But neither these nor any similar moves by the administration have satisfied the labor men. In the first place, they say, they do not wish to be merely advisers; they want to be administrators. In the second place, they do not want any administrative work to be concerned solely with labor matters: they want to have a say in every phase of the defense effort.

Wartime Restrictions On Swiss, Relaxed by German Trade Pact

Nazis Also Are Granted Freedom of Choice in Purchase of Products

BERN, July 19.-After six weeks of negotiations, Germany and Switzerland concluded today a commercial agreement which from the first official outline appeared to relax to some degree wartime restrictions which were threatening seriously to cripple the foreign trade by which Switzerland lives.

Some observers said, however, that the practical benefits would depend somewhat on how the agreement is administered. The administrative regulations have not yet been issued.

A communique said Germany was granted the privilege of buying merchandise "according to its choice and within certain limits," a provision termed by one foreign source as an unequal arrangement not accorded other nations.

From the Swiss viewpoint one of the most important clauses of the accord, which extends until the end of 1942 the clearing arrangement between the two countries, is a provision exempting certain goods, including fine watch movements and some electrical machinery, from requirement of German permits for export and reducing what a communique described as hindrances in delivery of transit certificates.

stopped granting transit permits, to the British blockade and were extended the following October 9 to cover shipments through France. The list of products for which permits were required covered almost the entire field of Swiss manufactures and especially affected the watch industry, the exports of which to the United States alone formerly constituted a third of Swiss exports.

While the communique said While the communique said "Switzerland is able to obtain great facilities for the avnot of its used of smoke along an ocean horizon facilities for the export of its products to third countries," the statement gave scant information as to what Switzerland would furnish Germany in return.

It said Switzerland would de- U-boat 99, was credited by his liver cattle, fruits and "a certain quantity" of milk products, but it did not mention manufactures. Nothing was said of reports that Germany was asking credits for the purchase of Swiss goods and that a large number of skilled Swiss workmen were at work in German factories.

Other major terms included: German-Swiss clearing arrangements are extended to cover Alsace-Lorraine, Luxembourg and German territory in Yugoslavia. They continue to cover Belgium, the Netherlands and Norway.

CHICAGO, July 19 .- The slate was wiped clean today for Joseph A. Zettel, 51, who became a respected Chicago property-owner and building construction foreman in the 19 years he was a fugitive from the North Dakota State penitentary. Attorney Earl V. Cates said he received a ruling today from District Judge John C. Love of Minot, N. D., erasing from the official records the two-year sentence he imposed on Mr. Zettel 20 years ago for the theft of two horses.

Mr. Zettel, now construction foreman at the Government powder works at Wilmington, Ill., walked away from the prison honor farm May 31, 1922.

Governor Dwight H. Green of Illinois denied last May a request of North Dakota authorities for Mr. Zettel's extradition.

Mr. Zettel, who was arrested after in March after the vessel had been tain his job at the Government powder plant, contended he took the horses by mistake, believing them to be his own.

Only 200,000 of 750,000 Germans in West Held Front-Line Fighters

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, July 19 .- A reliable foreign source said tonight that private reports from the continent indicated the Germans had thrown so much of their air and land power into the Russian campaign that it appeared unlikely that they could attempt to invade Britain before next year.

These reports say the Germans still have 750,000 troops in Western Europe, but that only about 200,000 are front-line fighting men. the remainder being garrison or occupation troops. German air strength in the west was pictured as considerable, but designed now principally for defense.

As a result, Adolf Hitler probably has decided to defer any attempt to invade Britain until next year, the foreign informant said.

Best of Troops in East.

It is highly improbable, he said, that the Germans now would be able to organize an invasion of England before winter. Reports from continental agents indicate, he said that Germany had moved the best of her troops to the Eastern front and that the mere problem of reassembling them into invasion armies in the west would take a minimum of six weeks under even the most favorable conditions.

He added:

"But favorable conditions do not the heavy losses in men and material inflicted by the Russians, and two, damage to communications and bases in Western Germany and along the German-occupied French 'invasion coast' inflicted by the R. A. F."

As a result, Hitler probably will rely on a renewed heavy aerial offensive beginning at the end of August, this source said. This prediction recalled the warning of Prime Minister Churchill July 14 that British cities this fall and winter probably would "have to go through the same ordeal as last year, only rather worse.

Section 310a of the Communications Act forbids the licensing of a transmitting station controlled by a foreign government or its representative, but the problem has never arisen whether a diplomatic mission needs a license.

The British Embassy has a reeiving apparatus of moderate power. One factor in the considerable size of the Soviets' apparatus is that it is a diversified receiver, which can catch a signal that the ordinary receiver would not be able to get.

Plan Is Reciprocal.

The State Department authorized onstruction of the apparatus so the Soviet government would approve similar construction by the Amer-Ican Government in Russia if the United States wanted one. The Navy Department for three years has been broadcasting to American Embassies and Legations a news bulletin prepared by the State Department. of German armored troops, pushing on from Smolensk and perhaps toward or beyond Novgorod. These armored forces would normally swing inward toward each other and seek to complete the envelopment of the Russian northern armies. It may, however, be observed that the German losses, both of personnel and material-due to the stubborn Russian resistance and persistent Russian counter-attacks -have been very severe, and it is not yet certain whether the advance elements of armored troops are in sufficient strength, and can be sufficiently well supported, to effect very much. Probably much will depend on the activities of the German air force, and on whether the Russians still have in hand both armored and air forces with which to counter the German moves.

There is as yet no certainty that the Germans have crossed the Dnieper in force anywhere along the line from Smolensk to Orsha, Mogilev and Rogachev; if they have attempted to repeat Napoleon's famous flank march on Smolensk from the south, there is no hint of it in available dispatches.

By OLIVER McKEE.

Since the turn of the century nearly 13 years have been added to the average life of white persons in the United States, the Census Bureau announced yesterday According to new life tables, based on mortality statistics for the period 1930-1939, the average span of life is now 62.5 years, an increase of 3.3 years over the previous decades. Women account for the larger part of this extension in the life span. They not only live longer but their life expectancy has been extended a year more than that of men.

Women now have a life expectancy of 64.5 years, as compared with 60.6 years for men. In 1900 the corresponding figures were 51 and 48 years. In four decades. therefore, the average length of life of women has been extended 13¹/₂ years, as compared with an increase of 1212 years for men.

Offsets Excess Births. Asserting itself at the very moment of birth, the lower death rate among women continues through all ages. The higher death rate among men offsets the excess of male over female births. The more rapid lengthening of the life expectancy of women is progressively whittling away the male majority in the population of the United States, which has continued since the founding of the Republic. If this trend persists, the country will soon have a female majority, census experts point Though the new tables reveal e progressive lowering of the death rates, and a corresponding increase in the average lifetime, this does not mean that adults today have a life expectancy 13 years greater than in 1900. The improvement has been most marked at age zero, and 20-year-olds can look forward to a considerably longer life than those in this age bracket a generation ago.

Little has been added, however, to life expectancy for those reaching the 45-year milestone, and the improvement at age 70 has been to visit Washington. imperceptible

Non-Partisan League Assails John L. Lewis By the Associated Press.

NEWARK, N. J., July 19.-Labor's Non-Partisan League of New Jersey today repudiated "constant and unpatriotic condemnations" of President Roosevelt by John L. Lewis, national league chairman, and set itself up as an autonomous body in formulation of policies. The unit, which described itself as one of the founders of the na-

Fray and Braggiotti To Be Featured in Water Gate Concert

Two-Piano Team Praise Picturesque Setting For Symphony Programs

Mario Braggiotti, member of the two-piano team of Fray and Braggiotti, squirmed and wiggled in his chair vesterday and finally came out of his knot to say that he thought swing music in America is improving.

Flinging one leg over the other and sliding deeper into a chair at the Mayflower Hotel he continued: "These kids-they are amazing. They're getting a new approach. They're even playing some good boogie right now. Their parents bring them back stage to play for us, and some of them are really amazing.

He straightened up and concluded with this prophecy: "I think we are coming into a rhythmic-romantic era-if such a combination is possible

Intrigued by Setting. With his partner, Jacques Fray, M. Braggiotti then began a series of questions about the Water Gate where the two will play tomorrow night with the National Symphony Orchestra. Both were intrigued when they found they were to perform from the shell on the river, and that the audience would be seated on shore along the Potomac banks.

They will appear first in the "Spanish Concerto," by Braggiotti, and later in their own improvisations on familiar melodies. The audience might as well know in advance, they said yesterday, that they will play the "Bolero" as an encore Since they first did it they never have been able to get away from their pianos at any concert without repeating it, they said.

The two came from New York yesterday on the same train with a a return engagement to a nearby the pianists to accompany them and didn't go.

District to Seek Power for Food Condemnation

Congress May Be Asked to Amend Inspection Law

If necessary, an appeal will be made to Congress for amendment of the 1938 Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act to permit city food inagain to condemn "on spectors food products considered unhuman consumption, now by the Federal law, spokesbarred men for the Commissioners said yesterday

Revelation was made Friday by Health Officer George C. Ruhland that he had been compelled to warn his food inspectors they no longer could condemn unfit food products in summary action, in view of provisions of the 1938 legislation, but must place their complaints with the United States, whose agents may seek court libel actions.

Envisioning delays in this new legal process, Dr. Ruhland told the Commissioners he feared the safety of public health might be jeopardized. He asked that immediate steps be taken to clarify and correct the situation.

Declares Power Is Necessary. Specifically, Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz announced yesterday the Commissioners had called upon Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech to confer with Federal authorities to determine officially how they regarded the situation to see what might be done to return full power again to District inspectors.

Gen. Kutz said if no way out could be found under the 1938 law, Mr. Keech was directed to prepare proposed legislation to renew authority of District health inspectors to take "summery" action to condemn and permanently eliminate from possible human use food products found unfit for such consumption

"This power formerly exercised by District food inspectors," said Gen. Kutz, is very necessary and should be restored promptly.'

Four Residents of Nearby Maryland Are Appointed

Four persons in the Washington Metropolitan Area were included in the personnel of the District Council of Defense for Maryland Counties, appointed by Gov. O'Conor yesterday.

Four such councils were appointed in all, the Associated Press reported. They are to act as co-ordinating agencies under direction of the Maryland Council of Defense and in co-operation with local governmental agencies.

The council, embracing nearby Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, and also Anne Arundel, St. Mary's, Charles and Calvert Counties, is comprised of Alfred D. Noyes, Kensington, of the office of the Montgomery County Board of Election Supervisors; Eugene J. C. Raney, also of Kensington, former president of the Maryland State Firemen's Association; Mrs. Daisey F. La Coppidan, Mount Rainier, and Mrs. Ralph Wells, Silver Spring, both active in Democratic organizations.

Members of this council from other counties are William U. Mc-Cready, Annapolis; J. Purnell Johnson, Glen Burnie; J. Claude John-son, Morganza; J. Mayo Rector, Chesapeake Beach, and J. T. Bolling, Charles County.

"The creation of the district councils is in accordance with the expressed wishes of the advisory commission to the Council of National Defense in Washington," the Governor said. "In addition the administrator of civilian defense, Mayor set up these district organizations." Gov. O'Conor, acting under authority given him by the last Leg-

Only One Inspector Here.

Possibilities of delays and other difficulties in enforcement cases under the setup prescribed by the new Federal law were visualized by District officials in the light of information that the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Administration now has but one Washington inspector, and but eight for the "local" region which includes Maryland, the District, Virginia and West Virginia. whereas the District Health Designed to food control work within or rejected as unfit for military the boundaries of the Capital.

One District official suggested yesterday that unless a solution of the problem is found, a move might have to be made to relieve Dr. Ruhland of many of his 22 food inspectors, since the most important of their powers have been taken way by the Federal law. This law, enacted in June, 1938, became effective in June, 1939. Just why this issue over jurisdiction had not been raised earlier was not made clear by District officials

Montgomery Red Cross Appeals for Workers

An appeal for volunteers to knit, new, cut and make surgical dressings for the Montgomery County chapter of the American Red Cross was voiced yesterday by Mrs. Margaret Flewharty, executive secretary of the chapter.

The need is particularly urgent because of the large quantity of work to be done, Mrs. Flewharty said. Those able to contribute their services should telephone Wisconsin 3297 or call at the chapter headquarters, $700 Norwood Place, Chevy Chase.

Installment Tax Plan Proposed For Arlington

Hanrahan to Offer Suggestion at Next Board Meeting

A plan for installment payments in anticipation of county tax bills will be proposed at the next meeting of the Arlington County Board on July 30 by County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan, it was announced last night

Similar in some respects to the Plan now being considered by Congress in regard to installment payments on Federal income taxes, Mr. Hanrahan will propose a system which he said he first introduced in the United States while he was city manager of Portsmouth, Va., on March 7, 1932.

The system to be proposed for Arlington is still being used in Portsmouth, the county manager said, and permits installment deposits which accrue interest in anticipation of taxes and other dues.

Referred to Attorney.

The proposal will be submitted to Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas for approval.

Should it be found impossible to adopt a valid resolution, legislation at the next session of the Virginia General Assembly will be necessary Mr. Hanrahan explained.

A study of installment deposits at interest on anticipated taxes has been made by the county manager for the past several months he explained, because of the extra Federal taxes expected to be imposed next year, and he believs an opportunity for weekly, semimonthly or monthly payments of local taxes would reduce the financial burden on some taxpayers.

At the time he inaugurated the Gains Speed plan at Portsmouth, he said, nationwide interest was shown through numerous inquiries from other municipalities. He said the plan is of benefit to the small as well as the large taxpayers.

Flyweight Melon Gains in Esteem Over Heavies

BLACKSBURG, Va., July 19 .-Smaller average families and increased use of mechanical refrigerators have created conditions favorable for a "streamlined" watermelon, says S. B. Fenne, Virginia Tech plant pathologist, and Virginia growers have found just the melon to fill the bill.

This is the Hawkesbury melon, introduced several years ago by the Virginia Truck Experiment Station near Norfolk. It has won wide acceptance by Virginia growers because it is resistant to wilt disease that threatened for a time to wipe out the commercial melon crop in the State, and also because it has good shipping qualities.

It also is popular among consumers because the flesh is firm, sweet and of a good red color. Some buyers may overlook its good qualities, Mr. Fenne says, because it is gen-erally smaller than some other vari-

Apt Soldiers Move Up.

This poverty passes. Apt soldiers move up the ranks to first class privates, non-commissioned officers and specialists, and the pay scales up to $126 a month for a master sergeant. It is judged that about two-thirds of the Army of 1,400,000 men by midsummer will be getting $36 as first class privates or still better salaries for higher ranks.

Many soldiers even save money. They are encouraged by the company commander to turn over to him a bit of the monthly stipend to be put away at 2 per cent interest.

Until lately each soldier got a clothing allowance. By using his "housewife"-just a sewing kit-he could save on the apparel allowance. The allowance has been eliminated and housewives are no longer issued. All needs, including repairs, are handled by the Army.

The company commander is father-confessor and sometimes stern parent in financial matters. He Pia Machita's arrest he had been tries to prevent a soldier from obli-In handy for train fares on leave and other items

$10 Bill at Post Exchange. In general, a soldier can figure on running up a $10 bill at the post exchange, where he gets shaving cream, razor blades, tooth paste, cigarettes and candy at wholesale sentenced the other Indians to 16 plus a small percentage for overhead.

Laundry runs about $2.50 a month. Twenty-five cents goes to the Soldiers' Home fund. Camp movie admissions are sold in blocks of 10 at $1.40, and commanders try to limit low-ranking soldiers to two blocks a month-a seemingly ample cinema ration of two nights out of every three.

Life insurance costs 65 cents a month for each $1.000 up to a maximum of $10,000. The Army makes no provision for dependents. A selectee is not supposed to have any, and the regulars are yolunteers who presumably did not plan to feed dependents on a recruit's wage.

$5.55 a Month to Spend.

So if Rookie Doe has a normal sweet tooth, goes to 10 movies a month, has $2,000 worth of insurance, and doesn't let his laundry bills soar, he'll have $5.55 a month to spend recklessly. That fourthmonth pay raise will come in mighty handy

By the end of June, however, the number of soldiers getting only $21 will be a mere handful. About 400 .-000 men with specialist ratings and 350,000 non-commissioned officers get pay ranging up to $60 for a sergeant, $84 for a technical sergeant, and $126 for a master sergeant.

The landlord never comes around and there are no worries about grocery, fuel, light or clothing bills. All in all, Army officials say, the recompense for service in the United States forces not only measures up to that of other countries, but in net income compares not too badly with scales in private American industry.

The wild West will come East on ern Shore. July 31. It will come just about as far East as it can get-to a little island off the coast of Virginia-Chincoteague. Yes, you've heard of it. The big annual celebration there is called a "ponypenning" instead of a roundup because ponies and not horses are rounded up and because it has nothing to do with the West anyway, being perfectly indigenous to the island. The round trip to Chincoteague is an easy two-day junket, but three days should be allowed if possibleone day to get there, one for the pony-penning and one to drive home. The mileage to Chincoteague is 164 by way of the Annapolis-Matapeake Ferry and 241 by driving through Dover, Del., and around the head of Chesapeake Bay, A good idea is to go one way and come back by the other (see map), thereby taking in all the scenic and historic points of the productive East-

July 31 is the big day, but any day on Chincoteague is different. It has wonderful ovsters, which are edible the year-round. It provides some of the best pleasure fishing and boating on the Middle Atlantic Summer Cruises coast. Its sea food is world famous. But, in any discussion of Chincoteague, one always comes back to the ponies. Standing on the flat southern portion of the island, the visitor can see the breakers arching on the island. Paperboy Neck Behind Victor; Crowd Wild

Horse Redeems Self. In Earning $62,475 For Owner Moore

By ROBERT MYERS,

Associated Press Sports Writer. LOS ANGELES. July 19.-Big Pebble and Paperboy sank the overladen Mioland boat today in the biggest turf upset of the year. Battling it out in a stirring stretch duel, Big Pebble scored a smashing victory in the $75,000 Gold Cup Handicap before a screeching mob of 41,000 fans.

Paperboy, the rightly feared 3year-old, made a gallant challenge for the top money of this fourth running of the event, while Mioand, the odds-on favorite, ran third in the photo finish for the top money

It was the most exciting race in the series, and brought about the biggest surprise as Charles S. Howard's Mioland met, not one, but two masters in this 114-mile race. Living up to his reputation for the first time, Big Pebble, with Jackie Westrope in the saddle, ran like he did in whipping the Brad-ley horse, Bimelich, for the Widener Cup last winter and collected a purse of $62.475 for his owner, Edward S. Moore of Sheridan, Wyo.

Trainer's Strategy Works.

Westrope brought the big 5-yearold bay up on the outside, overhauling Paperboy and Mioland in the stretch and sprinting across the finish line the winner by a neck. Mioland was more than a length behind-thoroughly beaten.

The strategy of the Big Pebble handlers soon was evident. Trainer Bill Finnegan sent Shipbiscuit, the Pebble's teammate, out on a redhot pace. Shipbiscuit held it until the field of 13 pounded toward the head of the stretch.

Paperboy, owned by Harry L. Warner, and handled by one of the ligniweig OCKEVS game, little Nick Wall, boomed into contention on the back stretch, taking care of Mioland's stablemate, Porter's Cap, and, as the crowd set up a thunderous roar, moved into the lead half way down the stretch. Mioland charged up at him, but couldn't make the grade, and then Big Pebble stormed up like a thunderbolt. He passed Mioland and then Paperboy-and held on tight in a hard drive. Beaten only a week ago by an explater, King Torch, and by Mioland in the American Handicap two weeks ago, the Pebble nonetheless went postward with Shipbiscuit on almost even terms with Paperboy as the runner-up in the pari-mutuel betting.

WASHINGTON, Va., July 19 .--Peerless Margaret Cotter jumped her great Rocksie to a new American record for a woman rider when she upped the celebrated gelding over a 6-foot 6-inch bar on the concluding day of the Rappahannock County Horse Show here today. In the sixth jumpoff of the knock-down-and-out sweepstakes the bay son of Half Rock-Rosie O'Grady cleared the bar without touching toe to jump, after Mrs. M. E. Twelve horses went clean at 4 feet 6 inches and with the bar raised to 4.9, only one failed. At 5 feet 312 inches seven survived. They leaped at 5 feet 6 inches. None Sent Three Sets; Field Is Down to 32: Women Play Today

By BILL DISMER, Jr. Justifying his second seeded rating, Eddie Miller, young University of Maryland sophomore, knocked off a pair of opponents in love sets vesterday to become one of two entrants to reach the fourth round as the annual public parks tennis tournament opened on the Rock Creek courts.

Fifth-rated Hy Ritzenberg was the other man who, like Miller, capitalized on a first-round bye before winning two matches, but he didn't do it with the thoroughness and dispatch as the promising Terp racketer. For while Miller was whitewashing Joe Reiss and John R. Vosburgh, a former local ten-, nis writer, Ritzenberg was extended to two 6-4 sets by Ted Pierce after defeating Neil Johnson, 6-1, 6-0.

Eighth-seeded George Herbert didn't play, his opponent, Edgar Kellerman, requesting postponement of their firstround match until this morning.

Unseeded contestants who impressed in their initial starts were Charley Freer, now a student at Sewanee University, who whipped George Winnett, 6-1, 6-3; Ken Dalby, who was one of the double winners, beating both Bill McNeill and H. L. McCollum; Max Bost, another twin eliminator, whose victims were Arthur Varela and Larry Myers; Bill Wilson, who upset both George Botts and Elwood Hoffecter, and Bob Threadgill, who conquered Samuel Minkoff. Yankees Snare Pair From Bengals for 6¹/₂-Game Edge

Newsom Pounded in 9-3 Win; Lone Rally Gains Nightcap by 6 to 2

By the Associated Press. DETROIT, July 19 .- The leagueeading New York Yankees resumed their sensational winning streak with a double victory over the Tigers, 9 to 3 and 6 to 2, before 42,092 fans here today. The twin-killing stretched the Yanks' margin over the second-place Cleveland Indians to 612 games.

The first game was a breeze for Pitcher Spurgeon Chandler of the Yankees. He held the Tigers to six hits and did not allow an earned run in racking up his second triumph of the season. His slugging teammates landed all over Bob Newsom to knock him from the hill and deal him his 12th defeat of the Di Mag Starts Rally.

But the nightcap was different. For five frames young Earl Newhouser set the visitors down with three scattered hits, and he was sifting along holding a 1-to-0 lead over the veteran Red Ruffing when the bomb went off in the sixth.

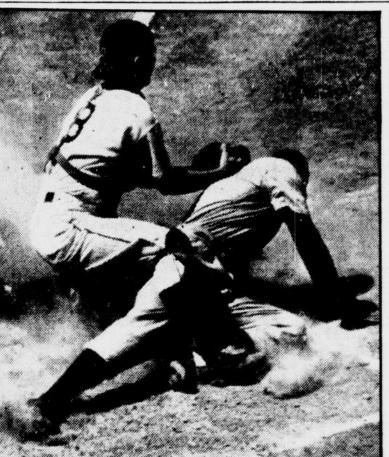

Joe Di Maggio started it with s triple off the wall in deep center, Gordon walked, here came the Yankees. Before the dust finally settled six runs had crossed the plate on five hits and two errors, Newhauser had long since taken his shower and the big crowd was ready to go home.

Ruffing's Eighth in Row. Ruffing, thanks to the outburst, was able to gain his eighth straight victory and his 11th of the season, even though he was relieved for safety's sake in the eighth after Rudy York had knocked in his second run of the game. The Yankees enlivened the opener with some spirited hitting. Charley Keller banged his 21st home run of the season in the fifth with one aboard to take the league lead in four-baggers, while Red Rolfe contributed four straight hits. Brain Injury Danger Is Too Great in Ring, Health Leader Says

Promoted as Recreation, Game Is Helpful, Army Director Contends

BY JOSEPH A. RAWLINGS,

Associated Press Sports Writer. CHICAGO, July 19. - Would America's fighting men be able to fight better if they stopped fighting with boxing gloves?

This question brought an emphatic yes from Dr. Arthur H. Steinhaus, physiology professor of George Williams college and an equally emphatic no from Lt Ralph Hauenstein of Fort Sheridan, III

Dr. Steinhaus is vice chairman of the health division of the American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Lt. Hauenstein is organizer of the boxing program at Fort Sheridan.

The dispute is over the hidden brain damage which a hard punch may do and whether this criticism applies fairly to Army boxing. Dr. Steinhaus said that there is danger of developing the well known punch - drunkenness and also emotional disturbances from boxing brain injuries. These are infects which frequently result are not always apparent at the time of injury.

He condemned the sport as "the American curse, inexcusably especially for men training for the flying corps," and recommended its elimination from Army camp activities. He joined with Dr. Ernest Jokl, head of the department of physical education at Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa who made a similar recommenda tion for British flyers, declaring he knew of two unexplained air crashes with fatal results concerning well known boxer-pilots.

Dr. Steinhaus' view was described by Lt. Hauenstein as "far-fetched." "In the first place," he said, "there is nothing mandatory about the boxing program-at least not at Fort Sheridan. It's on a purely voluntary basis.

"There is no better way I know to teach muscle co-ordination which is important because military maneuvers call for every form of physical activity

"More important, however, is boxing's recreational value-its morale building-not only for the boxers. but for the spectators. The men want boxing, and when you give them the kind of entertainment they enjoy, they are less likely to

Prospect of Hot Duel Of Aces at Kenwood Is Slightly Clouded

Ralph, Bob on Selective Lists; Links Battle Keenly Awaited

By WALTER MCCALLUM. A big question mark, tied up with national defense, surrounds the coming District amateur golf championship scheduled for Kenwood Golf and Country Club September 9, 10, 11 and 12. Ralph Bogart, the 21year-old titleholder, a registrant for the new Army draft, may be called up for service before he goes into the tourney for defense of his crown, although it isn't likely. The Army draft hasn't been working that fast.

Bobby Brownell, the Middle Atlantic champion, and the lad to lick in the coming District title tourney, also may be involved in the draft before the championship. So the two main factors in the chase for Washington's top amateur links crown could be out of the tourney before it begins, although probably both of them will be in there pitching.

Match Long Awaited.

For months now the amateurs around town have been looking forward to a meeting of Bogart and Brownell. It didn't come in the mid-Atlantic or the Marvland State championships, but it might come in the District title tourney.

If it does the match should be worth going far to witness, for both these youngsters are good enough to go a long way in any links company. And we mean both of them can do all right in any major tournament against nationally ranked stars.

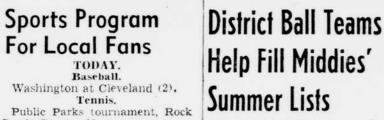

Of course such men as Maryland champion Volney Burnett, Claude Rippy, Roger Peacock (if he plays), Parker Nolan. Eddie Ault, Harry Pitt, Gene Pittman and Earle Skinker can do business against either Brownell or Bogart. But these two loom as the lads to lick In any compilation of the top golfers of the city. The big question mark centers around their Army status, or lack of it, at the time of the championship Brownell's Game Improved. Brownell hasn't played in the District championship for three years. He has been at Duke University at the time of the title tourney. Bogart has won the last two years. That doesn't mean that Bobby would lick Ralph, or necessarily would have won either or both of the tourney. the Bogart boy has won. But it does mean that with Brownell in there the tourney will have more Spice. Brownell is a 25 per cent better player right now than he was two a long way, has a lot of confidence and a well-grooved bag of shots and above all is a fighting competitor. The District championship at Kenwood, if the long arm of the draft doesn't reach out and take either boy, should answer some questions that have been popping up since Brownell has come back to competitive golf.

WHETHER this country is drawn into actual war or is able to skirt it, the United States will be forced into a postwar situation that will make the problems of 1919 appear as simple as an arithmetical sum. New political and economic philosophies, new inventions, new hopes, new horizons and even new understandings have developed within the past two decades, and while the outline of the shape of things to come is not clearly discernible, the trend of world events is manifestly away from the illusory security of 1939.

Experience has demonstrated that peace treaties, negotiated or dictated, do not solely determine the futures and fates of countries. What has happened determines the future, and even a peace conference cannot change the pattern for long.

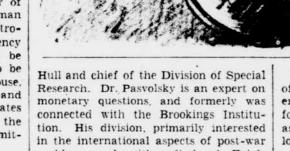

America's blunders during and after World War I have caused thoughtful governmental officials, industrialists, economists, historians and others concerned over the future of this country to think about the need of a plan to cope with inevitable post-war problems. It must be reported, however, that little progress has been made, and that no national group of promise has been organized. Several governmental industrial and volunteer agencies and a few individuals are amassing material on specific questions bound to arise, but there has been no well-directed effort to bring these relatively few groups under one head. At the beginning of this session of Congress Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, often a New Deal spokesman on social and industrial topics, introduced a bill for a "post-emergency economic advisory commission?" to be composed of 12 members - three to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. three by the President of the Senate and six by the President of the United States -but this resolution slumbers in the Senate Banking and Currency Commit-

Representative Jerry Voorhis, Democrat, of California introduced a similar bill in the House and brief hearings before a subcommittee of the Labor Committee have been completed. The record has not been printed and the subcommittee has not yet reported to the full committee. There is no doubt the subcommittee will report favorably on some sort of conference to study prospective post-war problems but if the

When the War Industries Board was created with new and clarified powers, a Conservation Division was set up to effect all possible savings in consumer goods. Emphasis was put on reducing the number of styles, varieties, sizes colors, finishes and in eliminating useless adornment and needless display.

Orders Farmed Out.

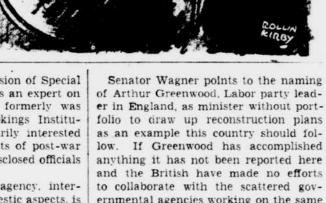

On a larger scale, industry was called upon to share shipping facilities in order to eliminate waste

In the early fall of 1918, Gen. Crowder came to Baruch to say that the number of draft effectives had been reduced almost to zero. And beginning with the first of the year. Crowder would have to find 150,000 men a month. Where would they come from? They could not be taken out of vital war industries If they were selected at random from shops, forges and farms, the national economy might be seriously upset Baruch and his aids realized that the most careful planning would be necessary to insure a continued flow of defense and civilian needs. They began to plan for even more complete standardization of civilian life.

If the war had gone on another year, Mr. Baruch has written, the whole civilian population would have gradually emerged, as wardrobes and inventories became exhausted, in cheap but serviceable uniform. The manufacture of pleasure automobiles was to cease entirely.

We are apparently still a long way from the kind of controls that were planned at the end of 1918. Before there can be any orderly rationing of supplies between civilian needs and defense demands, there must be over-all control exercised by some organization such as the War Industries Board And the chairman of this organization must have complete authority delegated to him by the President.

war gives some clue to what may be expected. Dollar-a-year men in the Office of Production Management have hesitated about cutting into the consumers' supply of essential goods. When they have proposed cuts which would mean eventual rationing of consumer goods, they have met with stout resistance from businessmen who are beginning to realize big profits from the new streams of purchasing power that the defense program is shooting into the economic system. Manufacturers with profitable consumer contracts would rather not have defense jobs. Dollar-a-year men with business connections have natural-

It is Leon Henderson's Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supplyshortened to Opacs - which has consistently argued the need for bigger cuts out of the consumer's share. And this is curious since Henderson's office was set up ostensibly to protect the consumer. But Henderson and the young economists he has gathered around him argue that since big cuts will come eventually, it would be far better if defense planners could decide now how Simple realism, whether or not it be labeled as "defeatism." demands recognition of the wide differences of opinion in various European countries regarding what now seems the best possible outcome of the war.

In one group of countries, composed of nations which maintained their neutrality during the first World War but have this time been overrun by Germany, there is undoubtedly a huge majority which hopes ardently for German defeat, disarmament and perhaps even dismemberment. In this group are Denmark, Norway and the Netherlands.

Reconciled to "New Order."

There is a second group of conquered countries where feeling against Germany is bitter but where there is also a strong minority reconciled to Hitler's "new order." willing to work with it and seemingly more favorable to a negotiated peace than to an indefinite material assistance, but also naval ascontinuation of fighting. In this group are Belgium, France, Greece and perhaps Poland, in the last of which Russia is the hereditary enemy.

A third group of countries, which have so far maintained neutrality is much divided in sentiment but for they will perforce accept negotiated ideological and political reasons has become more pro-German since Hitler turned against Russia. This group is composed of Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland.

A fourth category consists of states created by the Treaty of Versailles where the heretofore dominant majority has been ousted and is implacably anti-German but where important minorities. strange as it may seem, regard themrelves as "liberated" by Hitler and therefore desire a German victory. There is no shadow as "defeatism." Indeed, until Congress of moral defense for Hitler's diplomacy. But it would be idle to assume that this will render it ineffective. Peace Offensive Looms.

The answer to the anticipated "peace offensive" really rests in the hands of the United States, for the outcome will be determined primarily by the public reaction here if the Russian campaign ends in sweeping German victory. Then, at last, this country will have to face the issue squarely, and decide whether it will choose war or acquiescence in the at least superficially reasonable settlement which Hitler may offer.

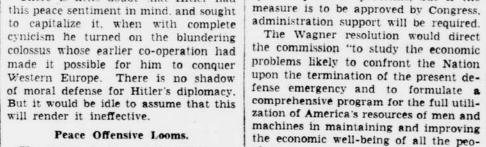

In making their stern decision, the American people cannot afford to be misled as to the essential factors involved.

There is already general realization of the iniquities of the Nazi system and of the necessity of defending the New World against its possible post-war extension to the Western Hemisphere.

There is also growing realization that Great Britain now expects not merely sistance and eventually a huge expeditionary force from the United States. If this necessary man power is denied, the British will with much justification feel embittered toward this country. And, beyond that, the time may come when peace.

What is not so well understood is that in making war on Germany we would also risk hostilities with non-German peoples who are resigned to, and in some cases actually partisans of, a unified Europe under German leadership. A hint as to the reality of this danger is provided by the reinforcements which Portugal has recently rushed to her Atlantic outposts. It is not toward Germany that the guns on the Cape Verde ple The New York Senator is quite willing to have the authority or the composition of his proposed commission changed to suit the desires of Congress. He introduced his resolution as a starting point. His objective is a competent organization set up to draw a blue-print which can be followed when peace, armed or otherwise, is restored.

"The experience of the World War." he points out, "taught this and other countries the importance of preparing in advance detailed industrial mobilization plans for wartime emergencies. For 20 years the formulation of such plans has been the statutory duty of an important official of the War Department. This joint resolution proposed that during the present defense emergency responsibility be fixed in a commission to plan for the equally vital task of marshaling and utilizing our full resources for the days and the ways of peace. Such planning has already been undertaken by Great Britain, which is engaged in a deadly struggle for its very existence. It is all the more appropriate for our Nation, which is untouched by the ravages of war. Post-War Economy.

American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations and several national religious federations, but so far no hearings have been held or scheduled. The C. I. Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve System, Leon Henderson of the Office of Prices and Civilian Supply, Bernard M. They and many amateur economists believe consumer consumption should be cut down during the emergency to build up a backlog of purchases after the war. Some businessmen want tax exemptions for encouragement of research for new inventions and new commodities. Real estate men are asking for national plans for the housing boom that may come after the

All of these questions and others, regardless of contradictions, could be studied by a national economic commission such as proposed by Senator Wagner. In his final report as Secretary of Agriculture, Vice President Wallace wrote:

"Will it be possible when the war stops to have a true economics of peace? This question really asks how the war will end, who will win it and what the terms of peace will be.

Revitalizing the Army

The recent drastic shake-up in commands among twenty of the highest ranking generals of the Army, which followed a mass promotion of brigadiers in recognition of ability, marks a forward step in the new War Department policy aimed at revitalizing the military services.

In effect, the shifts served as a timely warning to all officers to make good or risk the forfeiture of their commands. For this reason Army commanders will be more than ever on their toes during the fall maneuvers, which will provide the acid test of efficient leadership in the field. Other changes in command, the War Department has warned, may be expected to follow these maneuvers.

Charged with the responsibility of building up and training the armed forces almost from scratch in the face of revolutionary changes in the art of modern warfare, General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, has exercised good judgment, firmness and tact in contributing to a solution of the problem of command in American defenses. First, he was compelled by the exigencies of the emergency to discard in many cases the peacetime rules of seniority in selecting new commanders on a basis of merit alone. This he has succeeded in doing without noticeably affecting the morale or the loyalty of older officers who were passed over.

The merit system of promotion and will constitute "an indication of the getting his arguments before the willingness of the people of our country to co-operate with their Government" That is a factual statement of the truth, and the significance of the principle involved is important. If it should happen that Americans failed to give voluntarily of themselves and of their resources, then indeed the cause of freedom would be lost

President Roosevelt's announcement that he will send a message to Congress urging prompt enactment of legislation which would have the effect of lifting the one-year restriction on the period of service of selectees, National Guardsmen and Reserve officers serves to emphasize the importance of the time element in this connection.

In answering a question last week by Senator Austin of Vermont, Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, said that the "deadline" for such legislative action is August 1. Unless authority to keep the men in service is granted by that time, he said, a Coast Guard regiment sent to Alaska will have to start back to the United States about August 5. An anti-aircraft regiment in Hawaii, made up in part of selectees, will have to sail August 15, and at least one other regiment on outpost duty will have to be recalled during the month.

These instances cited by the Chief of Staff are merely illustrative of the manner in which virtually the entire Army will have to be broken up, beginning September 1, unless the desired legislation is approved without any delay.

It is hardly conceivable that Congress will refuse to grant the request made by the Chief of Staff. It will have to be approved in some form. or we are faced with the prospect of literally wrecking an Army which we have spent a year in building, and thereby leaving the Nation without adequate means of defense against the imminent danger confronting it. But there would be little purpose in passing the legislation after weeks and months of debate, for by that time the damage would have been done. Congress has a clear responsibility to take up this question promptly and to settle it during the next two weeks. Time is of the essence. At this late date, we dare not indulge in the luxury of putting off until tomorrow the things that must be done today.

Behind this brief news story lies one of the strangest and certainly people of that city, or before any other group in the country. Senator Wheeler has full access to the radio and to the press, and he will not be silenced by closing the doors of the Atlanta auditorium to him. On the contrary, it is quite probable that the net result will be favorable to him in the sense that persons wholly out of sympathy with his views will be inclined to resent any attempt to deprive him of the traditional American right of free speech." The more fundamentally disturbing aspect of this incident lies in the fact that it seems to be symptomatic of a definite trend toward abuse and intolerance. This was noted by Wendell Willkie last week, when he caled for an end to the bitter name-calling in which both opponents and friends of the administration's foreign policies have been indulging. At this critical time it is essential that all Americans retain their sense of proportion. The great issues of the day cannot be settled by impugning the motives or besmirching the character of those with whom one disagrees, and the more general the acceptance of this truth the more effective will be what must become our combined and united effort in defense of democracy.

Labor and Inflation

Declaring that the sharp increases in food costs during the past two months plainly indicate that the country is facing the threat of inflation, the American Federation of Labor, in the current issue of Labor's Monthly Survey, stresses the fact that workers of the United States have an important responsibility in helping to prevent runaway prices. That organized labor, as evidenced by the Survey's warning, recognizes the danger of inflation and the need for measures to check spiraling prices seems clear, and this will be the cause for justifiable gratification As the Survey well points out American labor would lose heavily by a price inflation. From 1932 to 1941-a period free from serious inflation-labor has won a real wage gain of twenty-seven cents in hourly earnings. A price inflation comparable in magnitude to that of the first World War, when rises in living costs outran wage increases, would wipe out virtually all the wage gains during the past nine years, the A.

F. of L. warned. Labor can help prevent inflation, the Survey asserted. One method would be to encourage voluntary savgoods is being drastically cut by

Chief of Staff Takes Problems in Stride

By Owen L. Scott.

The most difficult, and at the same time the most effectively carried out of all defense jobs of the past year, is that performed by Gen. George C. Marshall. This fact, often obscured by criticism directed at some particular point in a vast program, is coming now to be recognized.

Gen. Marshall is Chief of Staff of lems. It is when shadows deepen and the United States Army. One year ago the Army he headed was scarcely a skeleton force. A munitions industry to supply this Army is beginning to round into shape. Instead of being less than 5 per cent prepared for war, as it was one year ago, the American Army today is at least 50 per cent prepared for war.

Enactment of Wool Labeling Law

By Frederic J. Haskin.

The recently enacted wool-labeling law, which requires that all wool products be properly labeled as to their true fiber content, is not an isolated bit of legislation passed on the spur of the moment. On the contrary, it is part of a movement that had its inception many years ago, and now will vitally affect all consumers and most businesses throughout the Nation. Briefly, it is part of a changing philosophy of the relationship between buyer and seller, and as such it is of interest and importance to every one.

In olden days the buyer dealt with the seller at his peril. Haggling and bargaining were part of every purchase and the Devil habitually took the hindmost. The seller was often some itinerant trader who was here today and, fortunately for himself, gone tomorrow. While this unfettered state of affairs may have served its purpose then, its value now has been relegated to a mere source of amusing stories about Yankee horsetrading.

In the complexities of modern life, businesses have become firmly rooted. and consumers are confronted with a bewildering array of articles, good, bad and indifferent. The former, to survive, must build and guard an enduring reputation for honesty and -fair play, and the latter no longer have the time nor the knowledge to protect their interests without help. So a new order, embracing a definite responsibility on the part of manufacturer and seller toward the ultimate purchaser, has come into being. Many factors have contributed, individual businessmen of vision and understanding have co-operated, certain legislative action has helped, but back of it all, giving strength and direction to the movement, has been a constantly growing consumer demand.

One of the first great landmarks in the proper protection of the buying public was the passage of the original Pure Food and Drugs Act in 1906. This law was enacted over the protests of the food and drug purveyors, who insisted that it would ruin their business. Time ha shown the fallacy of these objections Today no housewife would give up the right to know the true contents of the bottles on the shelf, whether they be patent medicine or ketchup, and no legitimate manufacturer or dealer voice a desire to do away with this law. The have grown and prospered under its regime.

There is a very close analogy between the wool-labeling law and the law governing the sale of food and drugs, both in the intent of the legislation and in the futility of the objections brought forth by various manufacturers prior to passage. As far as needed protection for the public is concerned, they are both integral parts of a sweeping trend.

Agitation for a Federal law that would compel truthful disclosure in the marketing of wool products is not new At intervals for approximately 35 years bills were introduced in Congress had their hearings, and then vanished. These bills differed in scope and definition perhaps, but were similar in primary purpose. They were sponsored by a few individual consumer groups, and by a small number of forward-looking manufacturers, but chiefly they were befriended by the wool growers' associations. They were opposed, then as always, by those mills whose business depended on the undisclosed use of adulterants. These bills failed of passage, partly because of the pseudo-technical arguments of the objectors, but more importantly because the proponents were unorganized and, in certain respects. poorly informed. The consumer movement was growing, but it still was not large enough. The admixture of cotton in part-wool fabrics is no new story. In more recent years, however, the use of rayon with wool has progressively increased. But important as these two substitute fibers may be in their deleterious effects on the fabrics of which they form a part, the most subtle deception is reserved for the use of reclaimed wool in place of virgin wool. Virgin wool is new wool, never previously manufactured or worn. As a consequence, the individual wool fibers are relatively long, unbroken, resilient and lifelike. These characteristics are important because they give the fabric beauty, unexcelled tailoring qualities and, most vital of all, long wearability. Because the fibers are undamaged, they retain their natural thermal qualities. and afford the protection against extremes in temperature which virgin wool alone can give. Reclaimed wool is wool that has previously been manufactured, and in some cases previously worn. Before being respun and rewoven, it must be ground into a fibrous mass. This tearing process inevitably damages the fibers and makes them relatively shorter, weaker, less resilient and less lifelike. As a direct consequence, fabrics containing reclaimed wool have poorer tailoring qualities, hold line and pressing less readily and afford less wearability than comparable fabrics made of virgin wool. Because reclaimed wool fibers have been damaged, their natural thermal qualities are impaired, and clothing made from such wool provides less protection to the wearer. These important differences affect the purchaser's health, satisfaction and pocketbook. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, the United Textile Workers of America, the America Federation of Women's Auxiliaries of Labor, the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers' Grange, the National Farmers' Union, the United States Live Stock Association and many other organizations joined the movement to have Congress protect the consumer by enacting the wool-labeling law. The law does not prohibit the use of reclaimed or reprocessed wool, cotton or other adulterants. It merely requires that any wool product carry a single label showing by percentages the different fibers which have been employed in its manufacture. The manufacturer of the basic fiber must pass this information on to either the converter or the retailer, as the case may be, and he, n turn must present it to the con The retailer can use the manufacturer's label or he can substitute his own. Enforcement of the law is intrusted to the Federal Trade Commission.

in the A. E. F., gives the Chief of Staff a free hand in putting younger and more vigorous men in the important field commands. He has searched for and found commanders with vision, ingenuity and a "touch of the daring" in their make-up, a preferred quality, he explained, in leaders of combat forces. Men who adhere to fixed ideas or whose minds cannot readily grasp the new concepts of a war of rapid movement and surprise, are being placed in desk jobs where they can still render valuable service. That is as it should be.

In other respects, General Marshall has introduced a policy that will have far-reaching effect on the strengthening of defense commands. This was aptly illustrated by giving the Caribbean Defense Command, which stands guard over the Panama Canal and the island bases marking its approaches, to Major General Frank M. Andrews, an air officer. Hereafter, the policy is to put the supreme command in the hands of the service which carries the greatest potential responsibility for a given task.

Many of the moves now found necessary might have been avoided if merit, not hide-bound seniority, had been adopted as the guiding rule in the years following the first World War. Now that the emergency has reintroduced it in the Army as a temporary policy, the dictates of common sense require that it should be made permanent.

Upon the men in the ranks, who can always be trusted to follow a trusted leader "blindfolded." as "Stonewall" Jackson once remarked of Robert E. Lee, the new policy has had a tremendously improved moral effect. It is in wise recognition, also, of the latent talent that exists in the ranks, an augury that enlisted men who show evidence of capacity for leadership now may be given the chance of winning officers' bars.

Aluminum Drive

The local phase of the national campaign to salvage aluminum for defense uses will open on Tuesday. Three thousand workers, including off-duty policemen and firemen, American Legion members and Boy Scouts, will canvass the private homes of Washington in quest of household utensils made of the now precious silver white metal of ordinary commerce. The scrap obtained by solicitation will be refined for airplane parts. For obvious reasons a maximum supply is wanted. In its immediate practical aspect, the drive should meet with complete success because aluminum, derived from bauxite, is sorely needed as one of the material factors of American security in a turbulent world. Hundreds of tons of domestic wares made of aluminum are known to exist in the District of Columbia. Whatever can be spared should be contributed. It is hoped that the Nation's Capital will set a standard for the United one of the most dramatic episodes of the war. Colonel V. Britton is admittedly a pseudonym. No one outside of officialdom's inner circles knows who he is, but his appealing radio personality is called "The Voice of Doom.'

This extraordinary propaganda campaign started quite casually about a month ago in the course of a regulation "pep talk" addressed by the British Broadcasting Company to the German people, with the suggestion that anti-Nazis everywhere use the letter "V" as a victory slogan, the Morse code for the letter as an identifying symbol, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony as a theme song because, like the Morse code, its first four notes are three shorts and a long

The suggestion caught on and spread like wildfire. Each morning innumerable V's appeared, chalked or painted upon houses and deadwalls. The code signal was rapped out on doors or cafe table-tops. The strains of Beethoven's "Fifth" filled avoid. the air, hummed, sung, or whistled by high and low. Village clocks stopped, mysteriously at 11:05 with the hands making a "V." Fork tines in restaurants were appropriately bent. Even German officials often discovered that while they had been walking the streets a "V" had been surrepitiously chalked on their backs.

So annoyed were the Germans that, after many arrests, they resolved to fight fire with fire. Accordingly, they instructed their adherents to start chalking V's themselves, as a symbol for the German word "Viktoria." That, however, was rather far-fetched because the word is a foreign importation previously frowned upon by the Nazis as part of their language purification campaign. The ordinary German word for victory is "Sieg," which obviously does not fit.

Delighted with the success of this radio stunt, the B. B. C. has been stepping up its propaganda in every way, and Colonel Britton's mobilization appeal is the climax to date. It is interesting to speculate what it may portend.

Freedom of Speech

The refusal of Atlanta officials to permit Senator Wheeler to speak in the municipal auditorium carries disturbing implications.

Viewed in its larger aspects, the priorities, labor's buying power is increasing by leaps and bounds. The income of American workers, in 1941. will be $8,000,000,000, or 18 per cent higher than last year. Unless the greater part of the increased income is siphoned off into savings, labor's new buying power, competing for consumer goods growing increasingly more scarce, will inevitably cause drastic price increases, the Survey

The A. F. of L. also suggests that, where employers cannot pay a wage increase unless production costs are reduced, unions co-operate in every way toward such reductions.

Though admitting that wage increases, in many instances, may cause price advances, the A. F. of L. takes the position that these raises, in general, have not been an important factor contributing to the current upswing in prices. The validity of this position is open to serious question, in view of the recent wage increases won by large groups of industrial workers. If prices are to be stabilized through co-operative action among the Government, industry and other groups, labor, in logic and in fairness, must be prepared to withhold demands for general wage increases. Without some means of controlling wages, price stabilization cannot be fully effective. In urging the need for further wage increases, the A. F. of L., in effect, advocates a policy that will tend to raise prices, and thus encourage inflationary trends, although this, presumably, is the very thing that the labor organization wants to

Political Commissars

The good American communist awaits the latest party line from Moscow, or farther east if Moscow falls, so that he may quit the rather hopeless task of guessing, or thinking for himself, and root only for Stalin-approved gadgets. It seems to be only a question of time now until he receives Muscovite approval on political commissars for the American army, inasmuch as they have just been restored to the Russian forces They would have no success whatever here. The American soldier is far more concerned with such practical politics as playing ball with the mess sergeant, to secure extra delicacies, than with listening to the boring speech of some civilian political appointee on the glories of the administration. It is more important to keep on the good side, if any, of the top kick, and avoid kitchen police, than to bother with any commissar who tried to tell him how to think. Democracy has already taught him to think for himself. So successful is he at using his brain that he perfectly realizes that he is in the army for the sole purpose of preventing certain foreigners from coming here and stopping all thought. A New Zealand official recomin the jungles. Weapons for this warfare are different than the mechanized weapons that Hitler uses with such effect in Europe. A tank-airplane team trying to carry out blitz warfare in Panama or Brazil probably would do less well than a force equipped with small guns and some high-grade Missouri mules. Then other American troops must be prepared for warfare in the Arctic and again weapons and equipment and training must be specialized. The American Army must be a many purpose Army. Yet it sometimes is difficult to sell this idea to a Congress which is greatly impressed with the way Hitler's tank teams continue to over-run Europe. Gen. Marshall is criticized because American plans still call for the horse and mule and the foot soldier. Those plans likewise call for ski troops and mountain troops and jungle troops, as well as for a very large proportion of highly mechanized and highly motorized troops. The United States is unable to prepare for a single type of campaign and devote all of its energy and attention to that particular preparation because it is impossible to know whereover much of the face of the globe-an enemy will strike at American interests and American troops.

Congress and the country can forget that the United States runs an empire. not just an isolated area around home, but the Chief of Staff of the United States Army is unable to forget that important fact.

Normally, Gen. Marshall could feel a degree of confidence in the ability of the Army he heads to deal with any situation that might be expected to arise in the near future.

Actually, however, the general's troubles threaten to start all over again. The reason is that the Army of 1,450,000 men-built during the past ten months -threatens to fade away to half its size in trained men during the next six months unless Congress changes existing law. The law as it now stands calls for the National Guard soon to start home and for the selective service men to go home when one year of service is ended. This means that 850,000 new men will have to be found and trained at a critical time, unless Congress finds a way to deal with the situation. Gen. Marshall asks that the trained men be kept in service until the present emergency ends.

If forced now to break up his Army and to start over again with the training of a new base force, the Chief of Staff will be unable to garrison Iceland adequately or to supply the men needed in growing numbers for the other American bases that girdle a large sector of the world.

Yet it is notable that Gen. Marshall takes his problems and his troubles in his stride. He learned long ago, what every Chief of Staff must learn, that you cannot run an Army in this country without paying the closest heed to Congress.

If a change is to be made in the system of Army promotions so that younger and more active officers can be had, due attention must be given to the political repercussions. If sites are to be chosen for Army camps, the demands of Congressmen must be heeded. If national defense makes imperative a longer term of service for the new Army; that fact alone means nothing unless Congress first is convinced. If the slightest question is raised by a member of Congress concerning any part of the defense pro-

He is an officer who never questions the requirement that the Army be subordinate to the civil administration. The alternative involves danger that an Army might-as in Germany-gain control for its own ends. Congressmen indulge in much bickering and vote belligerently-so it is very refreshing and wholesome to find one preaching a lay sermon. There are notable ministers of the gospel in Congress. The only Roman Catholic priest ever to serve in Congress was Rev. Father Gabriel Richard, born in France and ordained a priest in 1790, who was sent by Bishop Carol as a missionary to the Indians in Illinois and Michigan and after his service in Congress was grand vicar of Detroit. A much-loved member more than a decade ago was Representative Henry W. Temple of Pennsylvania who graduated from Covenanter Theological Seminary and held pastorates at several places. Conspicuous in the present Congress are: Representative Charles A. Eaton, New Jersey, who graduated from Newton Theological Institute and was an ordained Baptist minister with pastorates in Natick, Mass.; Toronto, Canada; Cleveland, Ohio, and New York City; Representative Dewey Short, Missouri, an ordained minister of the M. But during the past week one rugged individual from "out on the range" in Oklahoma, actually preached a sermon that touched many of his colleagues -Representative Wilbern Cartwright, who grew up with the Choctaw Nation He told of attending an old-fashioned Sunday school rally: "We had dinner on the ground. Nazi and Communist Divisions Locked in World's Greatest Mechanized Battle

Review of Ninety-Eighth Week of War

By John C. Henry.

One of history's greatest battles, involving 9,000,000 men, continued inconclusively last week along the 1,000-mile Russian front from the Baltic to Black Seas. As the week ended, whatever margin there was seemed once again favoring the Hitler blitzkriegers, but pouring rains in the neighborhood of the Pinsk marshlands were not bringing any comfort to Nazi commanders as their mechanized units wallowed in mud and their Stukas remained grounded.

On other fronts British and Free French forces took over Syria; Nazi air raiders finally returned to full-dress attack upon England; British fleet units claimed important successes, while citing decreased losses of their own cargo carriers.

Behind the lines, Japanese cabinet fell and arose again in different mold.

Fighting Fronts

Working laboriously at time-honored and often successful German strategy of military envelopment, Nazi armies were attempting to jam their way through Stalin Line in order to circle back on three main Russian concentrations; those guarding Leningrad, Moscow and the Ukraine

Early in week, Berlin reported principal assaults in direction of Kiev and Leningrad-air forces blasting at former city while two ground columns punched at defenders of former St Petersburg Tank units meanwhile were biting into central Russian front and D.N.B. on Tuesday asserted that German spearhead was deep into Red defense line at Vitebsk

Later that day, however, Moscow reported a temporarily successful counterattack south of Vitebsk sector with Reds pushing Panzers Germans back across Push On Dnieper River and nearly 20 miles beyond. Recapturing Rogachev, Russians declared 1,500 Germans had been killed in this single sharp engagement and on Wednesday Moscow asserted continuance of counterdrive.

Two other arms of Russia's fighting forces were working out on Nazi foe at midweek, as Soviet warships stood off German-held Latvian port of Riga and poured shells into waterfront, and Red for three successive nights dropped their compliments on Rumanian city of Ploesti, heart of rich oil area. In light of early Nazi claims of destruction of 4.000 Soviet planes, reports of their continued activity were coupled with information released by British military mission in Moscow that Red air fleet was fundamentally intact and an effective fighting force.

On Thursday there came an apparent halt to Russian counter advances and out of welter of conflicting or vague claims came im-Smolensk pression that one Nazi Sector drive had broken through as far as Smolensk, southeast of Vitebsk and on main highway to Moscow. Fierce fighting was reported to the north over approaches to Leningrad, but as heavy rains on Friday turned dried plains and marshes into mud there was once again a noticeable optimism in Moscow. Out of this enforced hiatus came word of a reversion in war factics to those of 1914-1918 as Reds dug trench shelters from German artillery and air fire. Despite intense efforts of invaders. Kiev was still in Russian hands as week | miralty also said shipping losses hence-

Domestic interest centered during the week largely on discussion of keeping young American Army in training beyond its initial year of service.

On Tuesday President Roosevelt warned in press conference that Army faced disintegration if selectees, guardsmen and reservists are to be withdrawn from service after one year and on Friday he announced he would send special message to Congress on this matter next week.

Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, told congressional committee during week that one-year limitation should be removed. Likewise Gen Marshall has recommended lifting of restriction against sending men outside Western Hemisphere, but President indicated he would not press this point. Major shake-up in Army command was announced unexpectedly on Wednesday with shifting of 17 general officers to bring younger men into key spots.

At his Friday conference, President also reiterated determination to hold Iceland at all cost, explaining it had been occupied to avert seizure by unfriendly powers and that its defense will be maintained by any necessary means.

JAPAN DECIDES TO DRIVE TOWARD SOUTH

Will Leave Siberia Alone for Present, Observer Believes

By Constantine Brown.

the war has been finally determined and while no official indications of the government's intentions are available. enough has been reported back from Tokio to give the administration in Washington a picture of what the Nipponese government intends to do within the next few months. The cabinet shakeup has not affected the long-range plans.

Japan has decided that it must continue the drive southwards and, for the time being, leave Siberia alone. Within the next few weeks, the imperial army is expected to occupy the remainder of Indo-China's Thailand. According to reliable reports from the Far East, the Japanese government's decision was taken after a considerable amount of discussion and analysis of the war potentials in Europe. The attack on Siberia has been discarded because it involved too many risks.

A Professional Army.

The Russian Army in that section of the U.S.S.R. numbers between 500,000 and 600,000 men. Not more than two divisions (about 35.000 men) have been removed to the western front. Thus Gen. Stern, commanding the force since the purging of Fieldmarshal Bluecher, has at least 500,000 men at his disposal. This is a professional army. That is to say, the force consists of soldiers who have volunteered to serve at least five years, but most of them have been under arms for many more years than that. Political commissars were attached to the units in the period immediately following the 1936 purge which saw the demise of Russia's best military strategists, such as Fieldmarshal Toukatchevsky, Yurevitch and eventually Bluecher himself. But, on the whole, the commissars have not been able to deteriorate the morale of the troops, as has been the case in many western units. Gen. Stern, the commander in chief, who succeeded Bluecher, was considered a political general, but proved to be a man who knows his business. In the purely military atmosphere of his command he devoted himself exclusively to maintaining the morale and the preparedness of his troops and eventually became as good a leader as the purged Bluecher.

An air force, estimated at between 1,000 and 1.200 planes, is maintained in Siberia. Because of the long distance between Siberia and the industrial centers of Russia, large stores of military supplies have been gathered in the vast province for the last five years. Thus, even if the tunnels connecting Vladivostok with Moscow along the nearly completed double-track Trans-Siberian Railroad were blown up, the army would not suffer. It has arms, ammunition, supplies

The Japanese policy at this phase of 1 attack against this force would require , which might be fatal to the present govat least 1,000,000 fully equipped men with the most modern war paraphernalia, an effort Japan could ill afford these days when Chiang Kai-shek has not been liquidated yet and the conquest of Indo-China and Thailand has not been completed. But the fundamental reason why the Japanese have decided to leave Siberia alone-for the time being at least-is political.

From Tokio the situation in Europe appears as follows: The Axis will either win this war or there will be a stalemate. In the event the war is won, the Japanese don't know yet how the Germans will feel about allocating the rich Dutch East Indies to Japan if, by the time the war is ended, the Japanese flag does not fly over Batavia. On the other hand, if Stalin's hold on Russia is broken, the country will unquestionably be split into several "independent" kingdoms, principalities and duchies. The supreme authority from Moscow would disappear.

In such an eventuality, Gen. Stern might desire to proclaim an independent Siberia. But since he has not at his disposal everything that is required march.

to establish such a state, he may listen to words of wisdom from Japan and agree to enter into a political combination in which Japan would play the first fiddle. Tokio seems confident that Gen. Stern is a man of reason and experience and a substantial financial contribution from Japan, together with a promise that Siberia would share in the new order in Asia, might induce him to come to an agreement whereby the riches of that Russian province would be pooled, together with those of the rest of Asia and accept Tokio's sovereignty as the rest of Russia will accept that of the Reich.

Siberian Defenses Strong.

This appears to be the position of Japan, as seen from Tokio, in the event the war is won by the Axis. In the event of a stalemate caused by Russia's resistance which would give the United States time to intervene efficiently in the war, an attack against Siberia might mean disaster for Japan. The optimistic Japanese leaders feel that in the event of a war against Siberia Japan must reckon with at least a year of intensive fighting. Japan has been at war now for almost 10 years. The Japanese people have been required to make tremendous economic sacrifices. In these 10 years there have been over 400,000 casualties. But the people of Japan have been spared the horror of air bombardments. Should Tokio engage in a war with the Siberian forces while Russia is still fighting, there is no doubt in any of the leaders' minds that Russian airplanes will bombard the

The Tokio diplomats also feel that as a sequel to the British-Russian alliance. in the event of a stalemate. Britain and the United States would take coercive measures-if only of an economic nature -to compel the Japanese to desist from further operations in Siberia. Hence, the Japanese would incur severe losses in a most uncertain campaign with little chance of obtaining any positive and concrete results.

Because of the uncertainty and the risks of a campaign in the north, the Japanese government, with the consent of Emperor Hirohito, has decided to move-probably before the middle of the next month-to the south. The campaign will develop, according to information received in Washington, against Southern Indo-China and Thailand. It will not be a difficult or bloody operation. Vichy is expected to surrender the remaining parts of the French colony; as for Thailand, everything is prepared so that the Japanese occupation of that kingdom will be nothing but a triumphal

Six Air Fields.

The occupation of Cochin-China and Cambodia by Japan is important from the strategic point of view. Besides the important naval base at Cape Saint Jacques near Saigon, there are at least six very important airdromes in that region. These air operating fields have been constructed within the past three years by the French in conjunction with the British for the common defense of the Southern Pacific. Not only have they the most modern available instruments, but they have also protection much better than anything the British and the French had at the outbreak of the war in France or the British Isles The occupation of those two provinces of Indo-China would bring the Japanese to within striking distance of Singapore and the Netherlands East Indies. The occupation of Thailand by Siam would bring the Japanese forces into the immediate vicinity of Burma and the Malay states. In responsible military quarters in Washington it is felt that this move of the Japanese is only a forerunner of an attack against Britain at Singapore and the eventual attack against Java and Sumatra. Unless the Japanese forces have complete control over these important bases, the military, naval and air operations of the imperial forces would be greatly handicapped. Tokio assumes that within the next few weeks neither Britain nor the United States can do much to prevent the occupation of an independent Asiatic kingdom - Thailand - and of a Vichy and occupying the prize possessions in the Far East-the Netherlands East Indies-in an important operation. But this. Tokio feels, must not be undertaken unless the shape of the war in Europe becomes more clear and definite.

With the Japanese strongly intrenched in all of Indo-China and in Thailand, where a large number of Japanese troops and the major part of the air force will be brought in the course of the next few months, it would be an easy task to conquer these Dutch and British possessions once Hitler has won a complete victory in Europe.

On the other hand, if a stalemate develops in the western theater of operations, the Japanese don't risk much. While giving up their plans for the conquest of Singapore and the Netherland possessions, they will keep Thailand and Indo-China-two important possessions both from the military and economic points of view. Without firing a shot they would have presented the Japanese people with more territory which eventually would prove an important asset to Japan. Tokio figures that even if the Axis were to suffer a complete defeat, neither Britain nor the United States would attempt to dislodge Japan by force from the Asiatic mainland.

Thus, regardless of what may happen elsewhere, Tokio is convinced that the rounding up of Japan's conquest on the Asiatic mainland offers no dangers. If the Germans win and there is a stalemate, with all belligerents completely exhausted, they could still take the Dutch possessions. If the Axis is de-

HEMISPHERE DEFENSE PROBLEM ANALYZED

Suggests Political Obstacles to Co-operation Be Examined

By Carlos J. Videla.

The problem of military, naval and air , name is revealed by a look at its means | yards, in Massachusetts, in 1914 and co-operation among nations of the West- of defense. ern Hemisphere today is no nearer a solution than it was a year ago. Still the first essential, unity of command, or at least unity of thought among the various commands, is far off. Not even the declaration of Havana, which was supposed to take care of the political angles involved, has been unanimously ratified by the American republics.

Because complacency is the stuff of which reverses are made, it is well to point out that until political considerations are settled there can be no hope of achieving the much-talked-about "military co-operation" between the United States and Latin America

Stated bluntly, there is no military, naval or aerial problem here. There is only a political problem. Defense of the so-called "Western Hemisphere" (another fiction) is simply a political matter. The military factor trails behind, It trails behind because only the United States has the weapons, the supplies, the industrial facilities, the armed forces and the money with which to carry out that defense. All that Latin American nations can contribute is their existing bases and their acquiescence. To obtain these Washington needs only to solve the not-so-complicated diplomatic questions that arise.

U. S. Fate Held Real Issue.

The first problem is getting together on what is to be defended, and how. That is what is holding up a solution. Perhaps a long step forward in that direction could be taken if certain concepts were frankly accepted.

Candidly, the matter at stake is that of defending the United States, not the "Western Hemisphere." It is to the interest of the rest of the Americas that the United States successfully survives the present crisis.

Divested of all the oratory, that is the point that has to be put across. It has not been put across yet because of all the fancy embroidery and rhetoric with which that simple proposition has been dressed, making it appear unduly selfish and even hypocritical.

Never in the history of the New World has the United States enjoyed the popularity and the affection it now enjoys from Agua Caliente to Cape Horn. Even in Argentina the most staid newspapers, like La Prensa and La Nacion, which reflect the more solid part of public opinion, are clamoring for co-operation with Washington. If there ever was a moment when something should be done. that moment is now. But the cart has been put before the horse, and the question of "military" co-operation dragged out before the ground has been made 1915. They are ancient. The Brazilian battleships, the Minas Geraes and the First, the armies. It is safe to limit Sao Paulo, of 19.200 tons, were built in our study to six nations: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Colombia and Mexico

Argentina's standing army has about 45,000 infantry, cavalry, artillery and engineers-the equivalent of three divisions. Trained reserves are about 600,-000, but what they would fight with is another matter. With the exception of some trucks and some sample tanks, mechanized equipment is non-existent. Brazil's army numbers ordinarily about 50,000 men, with 100,000 reserves Chile has some 20,000 in active service, with 450,000 in reserve. What has been said of Argentine equipment can be said of Brazilian and Chilean equipment, too. Peru has about 15,000 men, according to latest advices, and Peruvian armament and other equipment is vastly inferior to that of the above-named armies. Colombia has, perhaps, 10,000

Mexico keeps 50,000 men in her active ranks and could mobilize 1,000,000 if she wanted to. She has done it in her civil wars. What she could arm them with for a modern war is not apparent.

men under identical disadvantages.

There is the whole military picture of Latin America-a picture of small armies of citizen soldiers, poorly equipped, although often ably commanded, because Latin America thinks of its armies rather in terms of a civic duty to be performed by its citizens than of a really effective military machine.

It is evident, therefore, that if there is to be any sort of joint action the problem of equipping and training those forces has to be solved without delay. Here, again, the differences between the nations to the south become apparent: A big, flat country like Argentina, with great distances between points, calls for an army of great mobility and a higher degree of mechanization than Chile.

which is a narrow strip between the huge barrier of the Andes and the Pacific. A nation like Brazil, whose main life centers on the coastal region bordering on the Atlantic, needs a different form of protection than Colombia, where the terrain, being exceedingly mountainous. demands above all the use of aviation. If we turn to naval defense, our study is limited still further, to four nations, Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Peru. for in the rest of Latin America there is nothing that can be called a navy. The South American line of battle on the high seas is made up of five battleships, two Argentine, two Brazilian and one Chilean. Even our South American dozen and a half destroyers in good working order and five submarines under age and in shape. In aviation the picture is still less bright. Outside of Argentina, Brazil and Chile, which could, perhaps, put into a fight 300 planes, the rest of the antiquated Capronis, Breguets, De Havillands and Morane-Saulniers with which most of the Latin American countries were saddled by not too scrupulous European sellers after the last war are just plain junk. Leaving aside the Caribbean basin, which is strictly the province of the American Navy, Brazil has two bases, at Pernambuco and Rio de Janeiro. Shore installations at Pernambuco are far from being capable of taking care of large ships with speed. The Rio base, however, is considered ample and up to date, Argentina has a naval base at Puerto Belgrano, near Bahia Blanca, on the Atlantic, with all the necessary equipment and dry docks, plus two smaller bases and naval arsenals at Buenos Aires and Rio Santiago, and a submarine depot at Mar del Plata.

Chile Has Two Bases.

Chile has two bases, at Coquimbo and Talcahuano. The latter is well equipped. In the port of Callao Peru has some naval facilities, and that is all for South America.

Mexico has potential bases at Magdalena Bay, on the Pacific, and at Veracruz on the Gulf of Mexico.

As to financing military, naval and aerial purchases for South American forces, in the event present priorities did not interfere, it is obvious the expense would have to be borne by the United States. The Southern nations are going through a very trying financial period and are in no position to make any commitments abroad. They simply haven't got the money.

With the problem thus stated, it resolves itself into the proposition of arming and equipping Latin America (with the unavoidable corollary of furnishing the necessary local industrial support) in exchange for Latin America's cession or lease of naval bases, or permission for

Early Excursions On The Potomac

Ephraim S. Randall, one of the best known of the river captains.

By John Clagett Proctor.

The topic of excursion boats and river resorts is always an interesting one when old-timers get together, and especially when some one mentions the Mary Washington, and then the flood of reminiscences begins to flow freely, and it is usually several hours before the subject is changed. But really there is some justification for this, particularly since this noted vessel is the most historic steamboat that ever plied the Potomac River around Washington, or at least many honestly believe this to be true.

Of course, however, during such discussions, some will speak in highest terms of the Jane Moseley, the Lady of the Lake, the George Leary, the Armenia and other vessels known to early local residents, but the general consensus will be that the Mary Washington was the most noted of them all. True, there was nothing particularly picturesque about this boat; it did not have the grace of a swan or the lines of a racing yacht, but the memories associated with this craft of our youthful happy days, is a part of the machinery was probably what makes the veteran resident of the District always speak of it in such glow- river. ing terms.

The Mary Washington was of an unusual design. She was a large, flat-bottom vessel, with a hull like a box with pointed ends-the only vessel of her kind, it is recorded, that ever plied the Potomac. She was built in 1874, at Occopuan Creek, Va., by a syndicate of farmers headed by Col. Edward Daniel of Gunston, Va. The idea of the builders it pieces of lumber or whatever was was to construct a light-draft boat with which they could navigate the small streams and thus enable the farmers to get their produce to market at a re- last of the Mary Washington. duced cost. She was fitted out and equipped at Alexandria, and when tried ly as a Sunday school resort, was Occoquan Falls. The Mary Washington was peculiarly adapted to shallow water and it was invariably of great interest to see the long trail of mud left in the wake of the steamer as she churned up the creek bed, the water of which seemed not over 3 feet in depth. When the water was clear, it was easy to see from the front of the boat the bottom of the creek as the craft steamed slowly up this historic stream, now quite close to the city's penal institution.

After Mount Vernon Springs ceased to be used as an excursion resort, Glymont, Fort Washington and Fort Foote were the main Sunday school excursion places on the Potomac. Marshall Hall was always popular, especially for night trips, and many a woman today will fondly recall the generous coatsleeve which protected her from the chilly night winds while taking in one of the evening trips aboard the "famous and commodious tideshover," Mary Washington. Though the Sunday schools usually arranged for the shorter trips, it was not unusual for them to go to Lower Cedar Point, Chapel Point, Colonial Beach and other places within a day's ride of Washington. River View came into operation in later days and belongs to a subsequent period. Excursion Days.

For the Sunday School excursions, the boat was usually chartered, and of course the bar was closed. Mount Vernon Springs and Glymont were probably dry resorts, and intoxicating liquors were not sold at Fort Washington and Fort Foote. as these were military reservations.

The Steamer Washington had a carrying capacity of 1,500 people, and in her day she is said to have carried more passengers than any other vessel on the Potomac. At an early date she was sold to Capt. E. S. Randall, and she ran for years between Washington and River View, until she was succeeded by the Samuel J. Pentz. After this the Washington was used for colored excursion parties to Notley Hall and other points on the river. Later the vessel was sold to Robert Holtzman who converted it into a clubhouse and anchored it at Analostan Island, near Georgetown. Her boiler and machinery were taken out before it became the property of Mr. Holtzman and subsequently used in other boats on the

However, when the British sailed up the river three days after the burning of Washington by Gen. Ross, Capt. Samuel T. Dyson, the American officer in charge, did not attempt to test the resistance and stability of the fort, but forthwith blew it up and made a hasty retreat, for which he was later courtmartialed and dismissed from the servic Unfounded Rumor.

The writer confesses he does not know just what became of all the old excursion boats that once plied the Potomac. His records show that the Lady of the Lake was an iron hull steamer with gross tonnage of 772.55; length, 210 feet; beam, 30; depth of hold, 10; horsepower, 250. She was built in Wilmington, Del., in 1866, and in 1874 taken to Norfolk by George H. Plant and put in service there. In the winter following she was burned to the water's edge, and later was towed to Wilmington and rebuilt. Afterward the vessel was sent to Washington for service in the Inland Seaboard Co. Her end came on February 15, 1895, when she was destroyed by fire at the Washington dock. The River Queen, long identified with excursions here, was built at Key Port, N. J., in 1864, and before coming to Washington where she ran for a time between Washington and Mount Vernon, was used by the Martha's Vinevard &

The writer's first recollection of going on an excursion on this boat was on July 4. 1876, just 65 years ago this summer and one will recognize from the date that the vessel was then new. The trip was to Mount Vernon Springs, long since off the map as an excursion resort, but which was then just south of the wharf of Mount Vernon and only separated from that estate by a cove which makes up at this point. As an excursion place it soon gave way to other and more popular resorts, but the old pavilion, with its weather-worn timbers, could for years be seen from the passing boats, until it finally toppled over from its own weight. But residents had faith in the country. "It'll come back," they said.

That's what has happened.

But this year Fishman is looking for a 1.500,000-bushel crop in the county. "And the future looks bright," he added. "There are lots of row crops and and ponds are full."

greatly since Napoleon invaded Russia in 1812, but passage of 129 years finds Hitler using the same system Bonaparte employed to give the world the kind of news he wanted it to read.

This is revealed by Library of Congress' files of newspapers printed when the French Emperor was at the height of his career. The yellowed sheets indicate that the people of Washington and the rest of the United States then, as now, were forced to rely almost entirely upon the controlled text of official communiques for news of the invasion's progress.

Beyond that, the old newspapers show the controlled "news" was not printed in this country until from 7 to 10 weeks after it had been issued from Napoleon's headquarters

The "Little Corporal" declared war on Russia at Paris July 3, 1812. Not until September 5 of that year, when the National Intelligencer "broke the news," did officials and residents of the National Capital know the action had been taken. Newspaper editors on this side of the ocean usually had to wait until one of their number was able to find a newlyarrived ship's captain who had brought copies of London and Paris papers with him. When text in those papers was copied and printed by that editor the news was picked up by editors in other cities of the United States as soon as mail coaches and couriers brought it to them

Loaded with half-truths, the official statements in those remote days tended to exaggerate enemy losses, promised important developments and ignored reversals. Writing with quills, the concocters of communiques used the technique which is being utilized by type- the 25th of last month. The French had writer pounders at army headquarters no favorable intelligence to announce these many years later.

"A great number of officers of the Russian staff and papers have fallen into our hands," it was claimed in one bulletin, the tone of which was much like that of Hitler's first invasion statements a few weeks ago

Three weeks later a statement from Russian headquarters brought first indication that all was not going so well with the invaders. It read, in part, as follows: "It is clear that from every circumstance the French Emperor has been forced, in consequence of our mode of conducting the campaign, to change his original plan of operations."

The plan, calling for strategic retreats and the destruction of everything in the path of the advancing invader, produced definite results. During almost a month no bulletins issued by Napoleon were received by European editors, and, consequently, ships brought no news from his camp to America.

Printed in Maine.

Then a paper in Portland, Me., printed this paragraph, copied from the London Courier of August 21, 1812, in its issue dated October 10, 1812:

"We can now account for the delay of transmittal of French bulletins to this country.' The last received was dated on since the date of the last bulletin. They have been worsted in every encounter

After reporting arrest of 300 incendiaries, he sent these words to the outside world: "While Rostopchin was taking away the fire engines of the city, he left behind much ammunition. This is a matter of importance. We are now supplied with ammunition for two campaigns. We every day discover cellars full of wine and brandy. Manufactures were beginning to flourish at Moscow; they are now destroyed. The conflagration of this capital will throw Russia 100 years back. The weather is becoming rainy. The greater part of the French Army now is in barracks in Moscow."

The last two sentences evidently were added for "back home" consumption to to bring distress to the army. Expected Disaster.

In another bulletin, Napoleon put forth fairly accurate idea of disasters he would encounter in retreating from Moscow:

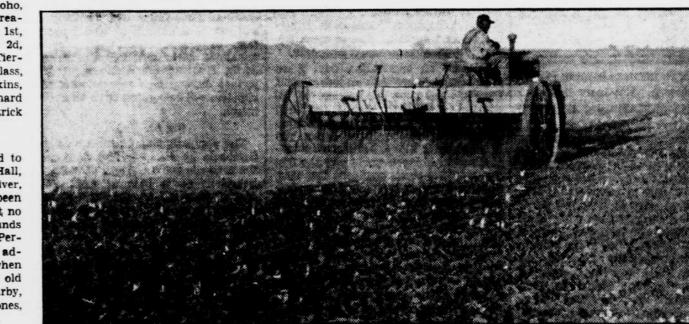

"The emperor participates in the feeling which will animate his good citizens of Paris upon learning that his imperial majesty is approaching his capital. It is for their glory that he braves all seasons and all climates. It is for their glory that he spreads his arms from the Pillars of Hercules to the Arctic Circle. Lawn owners rushed to their hoses. The Office of National Capital Parks was ready to do the same. The grass on the Mall must be saved.

But A. E. Rabbit, hired by National Capital Parks two years ago to wrestle with the problem of moth-eaten greens, nies for grass. said no.

As the grass on the Mall went offcolor, as day after day the drought continued, Mr. Rabbit kept right on saying no.

It was not until the drought had almost run its course that Mr. Rabbit allowed sprinklers to shower the thirsty Mall.

For all its thirstiness, however, the grass on the Mall didn't die. It came back, all of it, with a good color.

Just how great a victory that was will be illustrated when fall comes and the Mall is a lush green carpet instead of a bald-spotted, shabby stretch of off-color greens and browns,

If the Mall had been doused with water, as many lawns were, crabgrass would have sprung up and spread like an octopus over the Kentucky bluegrass. the lawnmowers to a higher cut. There water runs off and drains away more The Mall would have had its green carpet-until the first touch of cold weather. Just when the cool-loving grasses were cut, but Dr. Monteith found that a closebarely holding on, the crabgrass, which shaven lawn encouraged that summer thrives in summer heat and gets its richest encouragement from frequent water- nent grass to get longer, he discovered, it ings, would have stamped out the per- could put up a better fight against the

When Mr. Rabbit, his assistant, was hired by National Capital Parks, the picture began to change. It is still changing. First, there was the matter of sprinklers, a beautiful display; also a grass killer. The watering system was halted.

Then there was the question of seeding. Last September, seeding was started with more permanent grass.

Dr. Monteith maintained that a dollar spent for good fertilizer would contribute more to a good turf, if there was a reasonably good grass to start with, than $5 spent for grass seed to thicken up turf. Last fall $5,000 was spent to fertilize the grass in the city's parks.

manent grass, only to die itself in the crabgrass. The bluegrass would not only be more vigorous but also the crabgrass wouldn't be able to spread over the thick mat.

> Dr. Monteith believes that the process of working with nature to defeat crabgrass instead of helping it get the jump on the permanent grass can be applied as successfully to private lawns as to public parks. He admits that growing grass in Washington is a chore, for this is the borderland between the cool-loving bluegrass of the North, which suffers from Washington summers, and the Bermuda grass of the South, which can't take Washington winters.

Even so, he contends, lawn owners could do a better job. Their first mistake is overwatering. Start watering two weeks after you think you should, he advises, but water the grass thoroughly when you do.

Lawn owners get the urge, he points out, to revamp the lawns in the spring, when the flowers start opening. They scratch around the lawn, seed and sprinkle. The grass they get is crabgrass; the seed they sow is completely smothered.

He advocates doing the raking and seeding in September. It means cutting up all that lovely grass, but, he consoles, it's crabgrass anyhow

He also advises against such extremes in landscaping as steep terraces. The rapidly for one thing and for another the grass on the slope is going to get more heat, particularly if it faces the intense afternoon sun.

For the city as a whole, with its 2,000 acres of turf, Dr. Montieth believes in facing head-on the problem of borderland grass and looking at it this way:

The visitors who come to their Nation's Capital do most of their sight-seeing in the spring and fall. He believes, therefore, that if the grass looks a little offcolor in the summertime, it is not as important as if it were to look bald in the tourist seasons.

If you can't have the grass looking green and lush all the year round, he contends, it's better to sacrifice, to some xtent, the summer appearance of the ity parks so that the marble buildings vill be given the frame of green they deerve when the visitors are here to see hem

In his experimental plot at Arlington, Dr. Monteith is working on a grass that will stay green all year. But until that grass gets beyond the experimental stage. he will continue to propagandize for nursing along the bluegrass in the summer, even if it does look brownish, so that it may be green in spring and fall.

And for the first time, he's ready to predict now that this fall, when the crabgrass curls up, the city's most conspicuous grass carpet, the Mall, will have stood the test.

The Mall, where science gambled, will be green.

Boy Sailors Rescued in Atlantic

By Cyril Robinson.

AN EASTERN CANADIAN PORT, July 19 .- Young Brian Hardie, 15, of Gateshead, County Dover, England, a wisp of a youngster with a shock of auburn hair and clear blue eyes, fidgeted like a boy in church who has become bored with the sermon.

"It's too quiet 'ere," he complained. "I wish I was at sea again. The doctor says my feet and legs are coming around all right. So I'll soon 'ave another ship." His eyes glistened at the thought.

You begin to appreciate this youngster for his courage when you learn that less than two months ago he was nearly a corpse. The spark of life was getting low in him and his 13 shipmates when a rescue ship picked up them after 11 days adrift in the Atlantic-victims of a Nazi torpedo.

Brian's attitude-his unshaken determination to continue his role in the battle of the Atlantic-is shared by other boy seaman calling at this port-kids in their teens who not long ago were playing "cops and robbers" or swimming in the lakes and docks back 'ome when England was at peace.

Talk with Brian or his elder brother, Gordon, 17, who was his shipmate in the aforementioned torpedoing. Talk to 17-year-old Jeff Chequer of Birkenhead, Cheshire, England, who miraculously escaped death on a blazing tanker and drifted about four days before he was rescued. Ask teen-aged Jack Shepherdson, like the Hardies of Gateshead, who also knows what it is to be torpedoed at sea and left to drift about on the chance of being picked up; ask these lads if they want to return to sea. You'll get the same reply every time. "Of course we're going to sea again. We like it. And besides, England needs us."

This attitude of young Britons is important because it shows a high morale, and morale may yet be England's secret weapon in ultimate victory.

Brian's Story.

Here's what happened to Brian Hardie. Remember he is only 15 years of age. He lied about his age, put it up two years so as to get a ship. He was making his second trip, bound from England to Baltimore in a British freighter, when a Nazi torpedo suddenly ripped through the ship into No. 4 hold and there was a terrific explosion. The ship upended at a crazy angle and Hardie, mess boy, who was lying down at the time, scampered with others to the lifeboats.

The U-boat left them to their fate. There were two lifeboats, one with 25 in it, which has not been heard of since, and Hardie's, with 15 in it. For 11 days they tossed about in mid-Atlantic, soaked to the skin by rain, dried out in the sun, soaked through again, their boat in danger of capsizing at times.

An Arab shipmate, who could stand it no longer, drank himself to death with a mixture of salt water and brandy. Rations were getting low on the morning of the eleventh day. A fog which had closed in suddenly lifted and a young Dane, Kag Jensen, climbed the boat's mast and waved a torch in a last des-picked up and another shipmate died knew was when water started gushing four days alter-making three dead in our boat." He fished down into his pocket and pulled out a cablegram from his mother. It read: "Love and kisses, dearest, God bless you. Mother Hardie."

Brian stuffed it back in his pocket. "She nearly lost 'er two that time. She'll want me to stay ashore. But I won't do it."

Brian's brother, Gordon, galley boy on the torpedoed freighter, is equally determined to sail again.

The Hardies come of a fighting family. Mother does her bit. Dad is in the A. R. P. There are two boys in service besides Brian and Gordon, one on a warship and the other in the British Army One sister is a nurse and the other is driving a Royal Navy car. Both the Hardie boys admit their last experience was a close call. After they were picked up by the rescue ship the fog closed in again and that night it was freezing and bitter cold. Brian says he is doubtful if he or the others in their weakened condition could have withstood such weather. Although they both get around with a bit of a limp, their limbs are slowly coming back to normal. Close Escape. "Sailing is going to be my job for life," remarked Jeff Chequer as he waited here for his next ship. Jeff was a mess boy on a tanker bound for Canada when a Nazi sub torpedoed it last June 4, about 500 miles off the Azores. It was shortly before midnight when the torpedo struck and he was will keep me from going to sea. I wish asleep at the time. The first thing he into his cabin.

"I jumped out of bed and tried to open the door. At first I couldn't get it open, but finally I managed to bust it down. The ship was sinking and on fire. When I got up on deck, the deck was burning.

"I had been sleeping aft and the fire was on either side. It was between me and the lifeboats. It was lucky for me that the ship swung around and blew the flames to port." This, he related, made a path through the fire, enabling him to reach the lifeboats. In the hurry to escape from the burning tanker, young Jeff fell out of the lifeboat into the water. A shipmate fished him out.

For four days after the U-boat left them to their fate, Jeff and 15 shipmates drifted about the ocean. They had a compass and made for the sea lanes in the hope of being picked up. Breakfast consisted of one biscuit, dinner of two biscuits and a morsel of corned beef, with a biscuit at night. Each was given half a teaspoon of milk and a goblet of water per day. Not much for a growing boy like Jeff!

There was nothing downhearted about this boatload. They sang to keep up their spirits, told jokes and generally kept their minds off their plight. "We never gave up hope," Jeff said.

"Four days after being torpedoed we were picked up by a Norwegian ship and were brought into port." "Will I go to sea again? Sure. Why not? I can't stand it ashore. Nothing they'd hurry up and get me a ship."

This customer is getting might blue!" exclaims one mate to another, as The donor center here is unique behe bends over the donor.

"How many stitches will we need to plasm (not dried plasma) now being used take?" asks the second.

Donors grin, for the precious fluid is being extracted without either blueness speed to the fleet, to the Pensacola air or stitches, and with scarcely a twinge of discomfort.

Nerve center of the Army's daily expanding boat construction program is a small section of Washington's new Municipal Center Building. There Army officials work late hours on a project that has only one goal-a fleet of auxiliary vessels sufficient in number to facilitate the operations of the Army in all of its far-flung bases, including those acquired from Great Britain.

Young Reserve officers move through corridors carrying blueprints under arms, blueprints not of some new tactical problem, but of a new airplane rescue boat or a minelayer. Colonels and majors there speak knowingly of hatchways and coamings, starboard engines and underwater exhausts.

For a minute the Municipal Center visitor might wonder if he isn't in the Navy Department, 15 blocks away. But, no, it is the offices of the Water Transport branch of the Quartermaster General's Office.

Details of Program.

Tucked away at one corner of the building is Marine Design and Construction Section, presided over by a tireless, slight built man. He is Lt. Col. Werner W. Moore, chief of the section and the officer through whose hands pass the orders, specifications and endless details growing out of the Army boat program.

No newcomer to the Army's marine program is this native South Carolinian. For the past 14 years he has been identified with Army ship construction and repair, a background which made him the logical man to head the section when the War Department began expanding it a year ago this July.

Seamen would say he came up through a hawse pipe. Col. Moore was commissioned a second lieutenant during the last war after attending a cadet training camp. He left college at that time and has been with the Army ever since. Like many a Reserve shavetail, he received his first training in the infantry. At the close of the war he was transferred to than 25 miles an hour. The Army's curthe Motor Transport Corps, which under rent fleet of airplane rescue craft range

He proceeds at his own risk.

It is now time to beat a hasty retreat before being decapitated by a jack knife or crushed under a swan dive. Some degree of safety may be obtained by hugging the side of the pool, hoping to reach dry land without being torpedoed from below by the inevitable amphibian seeing how many times he can swim the length of the pool under water, or rammed by a muscular exponent of the Australian crawl.

What all swimming pools lack, and what they greatly need, are red, green and amber lights, boulevard stop signs, speed limits and a policeman to handle the traffic. Civic Problems, Civic Bodies The Friend of Many Passes On: Report on Sumners Plan Awaited

By JESSE C. SUTER.

The sudden death on Tuesday of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen has cast a shadow over District affairs and slowed down some of the activities. While Commissioner Hazen was recognized as being in feeble health his death came as a distinct shock.

The late Commissioner was a popular official who had many worthwhile achievements to his credit. There was probably no one ever in office as Commissioner who had so large an acquaintance, particularly with the personnel employed by the District. He was responsible for the recognition of the merit of former associates as subordinate employes and rewarded them with promotions rather than bringing in outsiders to fill the higher positions.

As one of the city fathers he was always approachable and friendly. He was a good mixer and always at ease in whatever company he happened to be. His passing is regarded as a distinct loss to the community.

District day on Monday last in the House of Representatives yielded a crop of seven District bills passed. It took only 30 minutes of the time of the House to complete the program and really imposed no hardship on most of its members. Not more than 50 of the membership of 435 were in attendance for the exercise by the House of its share of the power of "exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the seat of the Government of the United States, as provided by the Constitution

The bills passed were: 1. Reorganize and co-ordinate recreational activities. 2. Establish an industrial accident prevention commission 3. Allow minors 14 years of age and over to participate in professional theatrical productions and concerts for pay. 4. Tighten restrictions placed on the confidential records of the Board of Public Welfare relating to applicants for public assistance. 5. Authorize an increase in the cost of construction of the new building for the recorder of deeds from $450,000 to $500,000. 6. Permit out-of-town sight-seeing buses to engage in "occasional" operations without paying the present annual license fee of $100. 7. Authorize construction of pipelines for conveying petroleum and petroleum products in the vicinity of M and Thirteenth streets S.E. for a private firm.

Three other bills on the calendar regarded as controversial were carried over to the next District day, July 28. The new National Guard Armory, it is announced, has been commandeered by the Army and Navy Departments for occupancy upon its completion about August 1.

Police Inquiry Overlooked Probable Sources of Help Some surprise has been expressed in civic organization circles that only members of the Police Department were called upon to testify during the inquiry by the subcommittee of the House District Committee. The civic groups, it is thought, could have supplied helpful information.

The Public Order Committee of the Board of Trade, the Fire and Police Committee of the Federation of Citizens' Associations and similar committees of other groups maintain, at all times, close contact with the Police Department and seemingly are able to tell some of the things wrong with the department.

It was expected that surely the Washington Criminal Justice Association would have been brought into the picture for a diagnosis of the crime wave and effectiveness of the Police Department. The analytical studies by this fact-finding organization have disclosed numerous symptoms for which the remedial treatment recommended should be applied. This organization has urged repeatedly that there be substantial increase in the personnel of the Police Department. The small increases have by no means kept pace with the growth of the population.

The Executive Board of the Federation of Citizens' Associations has filed with committees of Congress and District officials a strong document regarding the crime wave and police situation. The document declares that the citizens know the problems and among other things blames a part of the trouble on the meddling of Congress in police administration, appointment and promotion of personnel and also official influence in cases of persons charged with offenses Interference by the Commissioners with findings by the Police Trial Board and the reduction of sentences were condemned as destructive of discipline. Resentment was expressed at the action of Congress, on occasion, in reinstating through legislation policemen removed from the force after trial and review of the findings by the Commissioners.

New Parking Meter Lock Developed to Beat Vandals

Test Installations of Changed Instruments Thus Far Good, Says Traffic Council Group

By JOHN W. THOMPSON, Jr.

Mechanics in the repair shop of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic have originated a new type of lock on parking meters which has thus far defeated the efforts of vandals to loot the meters in the test installations that have been made

This is revealed in the extensive report of the Special Committee on Juvenile Delinquency appointed by the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Council to investigate the damaging of the meters and the theft of money from them. Funds taken from the meters plus the added loss to the District from meters out of service and the cost of repairs themselves are estimated to have cost the District taxpayers about $20,000 a year since the meters were first installed. November 14, 1938.

The comparative ease with which the meter doors could be opened and the coins removed suggested a change in meter construction so coins would fall into the hollow portion of the stanchion supporting the meter. Hence, the mechanics developed a lock mounted 11 inches below the top of the post.

WD-UH-

Sixteen of the new-type meters installed experimentally on Market Space July 3 and although the doors to one were broken into, no money was taken. The council asks that any new meters be of this type and that Traffic Director W. A. Van Duzer be authorized to equip the other meters now in service similarly Extension of Use Sought.

Extension of the parking meters of a strengthened type has been consistently advocated by the Commissioners, but one bill drawn for the purpose of congressional authorization was killed and only last week the House District Committee declined to introduce another measure. According to a District official. some members of the committee were opposed to making people pay for the use of the streets.

No other city has the difficulty protecting its parking meters that the Capital has run into, according to information supplied the subcommittee by Mr. Van Duzer. The group itself communicated with the traffic officials in Pittsburgh, who advised they had no trouble in this respect

The investigators found that income from the 301 meters installed in November, 1938, to the end of the following June was something more than $24,000. The next fiscal year brought in $36,000 and the last fiscal year, ending last June 30, saw receipts drop to $27,000.

During the past year, which saw nearly a $10,000 falling off in income from the meters, the committee found 1.387 meters had been broken into. Some were actually damaged more than a dozen times and others never touched, but the average was about four break-ins meter in service.

He had been released in the care of his parents when the second of these two arrests was made

"The Board of Public Welfare, having been made responsible by the court for this boy, in turn released him to the boy's relatives at Clinton, Md. where he was supposed to attend school and keep out of Washington. Nevertheless, on February 4 he was again arrested and charged with five cases of petit larceny (arising out of tampering with meters) and was at once released in care of the Board of Pub-Welfare without first being brought before the Juvenile Court.

Court Needs Psychiatrist.

"Despite this boy's previous record he was once more returned to his relatives in Maryland and on February 9 was rearrested for breaking into parking meters, thereafter being held at the Receiving Home for arraignment in Juvenile Court. Subsequently, on February 26, he was examined at Gallinger Hospital and found to be feebleminded and arrangements were made by the court for his commitment to the District Training School

The committee found the police records showed the boy arrested on six separate occasions, but Juvenile Court records only indicated four. No previous psychiatric examination of the lad had been made, it was pointed out. The investigators felt the court should have a doctor or psychiatrist to aid in determining the health or mental condition of cases brought before the court Another discovery of the inquiry was that most of the property destruction on buses and streetcars was concentrated in the central area of the city, where recreation facilities are fewest

An effective vagrancy law, prompt trials and imposition of adequate penalties the report urges as necessary to bring about improved conditions.

A list of other recommendations follow, among which are the following: 1. All men should have opportunity to attend the F. B. I. or other recognized schools of criminology. Credit should be given for such self-improvement for promotions. The department should maintain a school of criminology for the retraining of men in the service. 2. A definite age should be set for compulsory retirement. 3. Policemen should not be permitted to engage in any other type of employment or own or participate in any other business. 4. Marksmanship training should be financed by the District

5. A modern crime laboratory should be provided with proper personnel and equipment and under a specially qualified analytical chemist. 6. There should be immediately a further increase of not less than 100 policemen. 7. Charges commensurate with the service rendered should be made for any special police assignments to private agencies and organizations. 8. Consolidation of the Metropolitan, Park and Zoo police, which are all paid out of District funds. 9. Replacement with civilians of all policemen performing clerical functions. 10. An iron-clad order prohibiting police from soliciting funds for any and all purposes no matter how meritorious the object.

The program outlined above has received much favorable comment because it is both timely and constructive. It is considered as evidence of the Executive Board of the Federation of Citizens' Associations being on the job even though the Federation is on vacation.

Problem of Financing the Highway Plan

The civic groups generally favor, in principle, the new highway plan, but fear that a too hasty rush into tax-raising will not be for the best interest of the District people. To a large extent this plan has become necessary by reason of the expansion of the Federal establishment and the large influx in population. Civic leaders given to close study of the District problems believe it is only fair that the Federal Government bear a substantial part of the cost. They are convinced that any plan for increased taxation should go along with undertaking the assumption of an obligation by the Federal Government to meet a definite percentage of the cost. An increase of the gas tax or any other tax without a corresponding Federal payment raises a danger of the District taxpayers being left holding the bag.

Some citizens and some members of Congress are of the opinion that the detail of the plan should be worked out in definite form before the revenue raising part of the problem is attacked. Legislation should be drafted and enacted as a preliminary step. * * * *

Next Move in D. C. National Representation Campaign

Plans for action will not be formulated by the Citizens' Joint Committee on National Representation for the District of Columbia until there is opportunity to study the forthcoming formal report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. This is expected shortly to be submitted by the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator Pat McCarran

The full Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Monday approved the unfavorable report on the Capper joint resolution. The report will carry the measure to the Senate calendar with the recommendation that its consideration be indefinitely postponed. This will permit Senators to address the Senate on the subject and may result in some illuminating discussion.

It is not known what action, if any, will be taken by the House committee, which in the Seventy-sixth Congress reported the proposal favorably with an amendment restricting representation in Congress to the House of Representatives.

Chairman Hatton W. Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee, in an interview early in the week, expressed positive disagreement with the explanations by members of the Senate committee of their adverse action. He ridicules the idea that voting representation for the District in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President would make the District a State and lessen the control by Congress.

In this position he is supported by the favorable report on a similar resolution in 1922 by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. There is a complete absence of a grant of the attributes of a State except and solely, through the authority to Congress, to permit the people of the District to have voting representation in the House of Representatives and Senate and in the electoral college. And it is provided the Congress would be empowered to modify or withdraw such voting privileges. The onlylimitation on this recapture power is that it could not affect the term of a District Representative or Senator during the time for which he was elected.

The grant of power to the people of the District, under the Capper-Sumners resolution, is so far below that possessed by the sovereign States that it is inconceivable that any of the large cities

Reserve Officers Bill Provides For Retirement

C-10

Measure Passes House Benefiting Those Diseased or Injured

The retired list of the Army is expected to be lengthened considerably through legislation which has just passed the House of Representatives and now before the Senate. It relates particularly to officers of the Reserve Corps who have been on extensive active duty for periods in excess of 30 days, at any time subsequent to February 28, 1925 Many veterans of the World War, who remained in the service, probably would benefit from the proposed legislation, having been denied compensation because of other benefit laws. ' However, the bill makes it plain that it is for the benefit of the officers who have served in the armed forces, because it specifically eliminates Reserve officers who have served over extensive periods in the Civilian Conservation Corps

All Reserve officers of the Army who come within the dated limitation of the act, and who have been on active duty for more than 30 days, regardless of the duty they performed, if found disabled through disease or injury contracted while serving under the direction of the Army are to be extended all of the privileges of retirement pay and hospitalization granted to officers of the Regular establishment, under the present laws, and which may be granted to them in any future legislation.

While the administration of the law is assigned to the Veterans' Administration, the determination of the disability of officer applicants under the legislation, and whether it is service-connected, is left to the Secretary of War, under the same manner as such determinations are reached for those under the Regular establishment

The legislation, however, is not retroactive. No benefits are to be held to have accrued prior to the passage of the act, and if the legislation becomes a law it is expected that there will be a flood of applications from officers who have served the 30-day minimum in any duty whatever and who can show that during the period they were serving that they contracted disease due to the nature of the service or that they were injured during such period of time that they were serving.

Norwegians To Dedicate New Wing

Crown Princess To Attend Party For 200 Tuesday

By MONA DUGAS,

This week's outstanding social event-the party at which Crown Princess Martha of Norway will dedicate the new wing of her country's legation-promises to be historically important as well as of social note in the Capital's annals. The Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne have invited more than 200 of their friends and "friends of freedom and democracy" to witness the dedication Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Sumner Welles, the Acting Secretary of State, will make the principal address of the afternoon, and Sir Arthur Salter, head of the British Purchasing Mission, will speak on behalf of the British Ambassador, who is on the West Coast.

Addition Composed Of Office Space.

The addition to be dedicated is composed entirely of office space, and is attached directly to the original building of the legation and made of the same material. A long terrace, the entire roofspace of the addition, will be the scene of Tuesday's party. The winding stairs from the lobby of the legation lead to the drawing room upstairs, and a pair of French windows open from this room on the terrace. At the far end a table will be placed for the speakers at the dedication, and the program will be broadcast from there for 15 minutes during the afternoon, beginning at 6:30 o'clock. The Minister will welcome the guests to the event for which the Crown Princess will journey here from her summer home at South Dartmouth, Mass.

With the staff of the legation having risen from eight members before the war to 40 at the present time, there is little wonder that more working space is needed. Norway already owns, besides the legation, the house two doors from the chancery, at 2720 34th street, as well as Pooks Hill, the residence of the Crown Princess and her family. in Bethesda, Md., which formerly was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Merle Thorpe.

Hallway Hung with Murals From Fair Pavilion.

The new offices are reached through the chancery, and here the counselors will have their headquarters, with code experts and a number of the other members of the staff, while others will remain in the old offices of the legation and in the house on 34th street, which has been converted into office space.

The hallway of the new wing is hung with murals taken from the Norwegian pavilion at the New York World's Fair. The murals depict legends and scenes taken from the life of the little country. The allimportant sea is emphasized, for fishing boats are shown in almost every group-even if only with two little Norwegian boys putting a toy Lady, Hollywood says no. Changing what the gods provided is a feminine custom dating way back when. In proof they mention such experienced lily-gilders as Ubangi damsels and French courtesans. Today beauty is easier.

All you need is to want to change, which is the catch. It's easy to start to take off five pounds, to plan to study up on coiffures and clothes, it's harder to stick to it and carry through. But Hollywood experts have seen the miracles that persistence and hard work can perform. It isn't a matter of having beautiful eyes, perfect hands, a model's figure. Beauty is the ensemble-face,

High Production Mark In Red Cross Work Set By Petworth Women

Membership Grows From 10 in 1939 To 125; Thursday Get-Togethers Provide Social Contacts

By FRANCES LIDE,

Woman's Club Editor. A Red Cross workroom that looks "almost like a sweat shop" when the women of Petworth gather there each Thursday has been the center of one of the most productive knitting and sewing units in Washington. Located in attractive quarters in the Petworth Branch Library, the workroom is supervised by the Petworth Woman's Club, but the women who work there are not limited to club members.

Began With 10 Women in Fall of 1939 Now Has Grown to 125 Membership.

So many nationalities are respresentted in the group that officers of the club proudly refer to it as a "melting pot." And the skill which some of the women acquired back in the "old country" has enabled Red Cross headquarters to rely on the unit for some of its most complicated knitting and sewing assignments.

Organized in the fall of 1939, the unit began with 10 women who brought two or three portable machines to the library each week for their "sewing bee." Today the unit now has 13 machines at its disposal and 125 members on its roster.

Though most of the women do the majority of work at home, the Thursday sessions are pleasant get-togethers which are always featured by a picnic luncheon. Mrs. Victor Sehorn., the general chairman, and her staff provide tea for the* group and many of the members bring sandwiches and cakes which are placed in a "pool." are placed in a "pool." Even on Thursdays, however, fin-

Several of the members have achieved enviable records of work accomplished in recent weeks.

NEW YORK, July 19.-Enjoy your vacation trip this year. Joe. Gas up the buggy. Pile in the wife and both the kids

Or hop the excursion train and go up to the big town for a week. Have fun. Joe. It's a fast moving world.

Yes, Joe-or maybe you're Tom or Mike, maybe Tony, or Stanislaus or Pete.

Roll, while the rolling's good. That's the boiled-down, private advice of some neighty smart men in business, government, industry, finance.

This may be the last summer for some time when you can do exactly what you please with your time off. and, if you're like most Americans, time off from the job means going places. Places may not be so easy to go to soon. Maybe sooner than you think. Why?

Well, especially if you live east the Mississippi, north of the southernmost tier of States, by next summer, maybe sooner, you may not get gasoline for fun purposes.

More Tankers Needed.

The Government already has taken from the oil companies 50 tankers which formerly brought crude petroleum from the fields around the Gulf Coast to the big refineries of the East Coast, where it was turned into gasoline.

This week reliable sources in the oil trade heard that the Government needed 14 more of the tankboats in the next 30 days, a total of 50 before the year is out

That would leave the oil-carrying outes from the gulf to the seaboard with about 65 per cent of normal carrying space.

DEPT. STORE.

The story thus far: Fort Marfield, in Southernmost Florida, is generally very quiet, but with the arrival of Lt. Jim Mason and his new fiancee, the European refugee, Stephanie Duprez, things begin to happen. Capt. Phil Howard, Jim Mason's friend, finds himself falling for Stephanie. Also, because he shows kindness to the post commandant's daughter. Joan Hammond, the old man's peculiar dislike of Phil is intensified. On maneuvers a soldier named Veretti unexplainably attacks a civilian sportsman, Stacey Van Arden; then Van Arden refuses to bring charges against the man. and a little later Veretti escapes from the guardhouse. Sheriff Haskins of nearby Seaberth is called and he decides to see Van Arden before beginning his search for Veretti.

With Movies Again Moving Public Resumes Its Trek Toward the Box Office

Films in Which Producers Have Gone Back to First Principle of Success Are Proving Popular on Screen Everywhere

By Jay Carmody.

It would be a good joke on a lot of profound thinkers if the recent trouble with the movies turned out to be merely that they did not move. There have been so many other explanations, all so very elaborate, that this simple, fundamental one was completely overlooked. Of course, there is the possibility that it may have been deliberately avoided by an analyst here and there. A man sounds sort of like a dope just saying the movies do not move. Moreover, it is far less suggestive of fine penetrative powers than to attribute audience apathy to weariness with, say, the old, old faces. Or, perhaps, to attribute it to a deeper descent of cinema writing into the land of banality. An expert must sound like an expert, mustn't he?

Whatever he has sounded like, he seems to have overlooked lack of action as the conspicuous weakness of movies in the first semester of 1941

With Movies Again on Move The Audience Is Coming Back.

That it was that is implied in the circumstance that now the movies have started to move again-it was a case of producers floundering back to an old, proved formula-attendance and interest have begun to pick up.

Movies currently on exhibition offer some neat proof of the appeal of action, just action. Take the case of "They Met in Bombay." Granting the allure of Clark Gable to his fans and of sleek, sophisticated Rosalind Russell to people like us, their presence alone could not make the picture seem so much better than it really is. As for the story, it is a berserkly implausible rewrite of that one about the gentleman crook and his genteel, lovely competitor matching wits over an attractive hunk of swag. Fredrick Lonsdale alone has written it four or five times and it must have been written once each by at least 10 other authors or playwrights whose tailors were beginning to get ugly about the bill.

The picture, however, leaves no time for quibbling. Once past the introductory passages, it flies into a sort of raging activity which sweeps one unresistingly, if not irresistibly, along.

The man who ventured to call Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer long distance to protest that it didn't make sense, undoubtedly would get the answer: "Who the -- said it did?"

"Billy the Kid" Was Another To Prove Yearning for Action.

"The Bride Came C. O. D." follows virtually the same formula. Its single element of novelty is the spectacle of seeing Bette Davis, one of the great ladies of the screen, being taken for a virtual slayride (to coin a pun) in one of the roughest roughhouse comedies of the season. Beyond that quality, it depends entirely upon movement to keep the audience so engrossed it won't notice the artificiality of much of the comedy. Miss Davis and her collaborator, James Cagney, are in constant motion not only on the earth but also in the air and even in the decaying, cobwebby shaft of an abandoned mine. That is covering ground, obviously, and with such taut, quick persons as Miss Davis and Cagney you can be sure the pace is a rapid, nervous one designed to leave the customers a bit breathless.

No Longer Synthetic Is Ina Ray New Personality

Developed by Miss Hutton

By John Ferris, Associated Press Staff Writer NEW YORK The fact that Ina Ray Hutton and her all-male dance orchestra made some phonograph recordings the other week was duly noted in the trade papers, but what they did not observe was that Miss Huton had, by means revolutionary on Broadway, triumphed in her own selfeducation. The synthetic star of 1934 had faded and a natural was shining. Even the platinum hair was gone. It was seven years ago that she burst upon the Broadway scene as leader of a dance band of woman musicians, doing the "bumps" wearing a close-fitting green evening dress of a material which revealed her white spangled tights and saucy curves. Variety, that journal of omniscience and discrimination in the amusement industry, described here as 'a near Cab Calloway in manner. isms, a near Jean Harlow physically," and, as an after-thought, "an excellent hoofer. She was all those things and many more, and the band itself was praised, but Ina Ray Hutton nevertheless was a synthetic star, filling a role that was ready-made, following a pattern designed by press agent and management.

Farce is not the only type of picture which encourages producers believe they have blundered upon .

the missing link in putting movement into their screen drama.

Another recent picture of extreme popularity is "Billy the Kid." The basic story of that film, starring Robert Taylor, is something that used to be turned out almost by the gross in Hollywood. Authorities on Billyiana, of which there are many of those, too, said it was not even a reasonable facsimile of his life story; that actually he was a murderous little weasel who couldn't even spell "honor," much less show it.

Did audiences mind? Did the critics, who usually are allergic to straightforward Westerns and sensitive to ravagement of the truth about scoundrels?

They did not. Unaccustomed as they were to pictures which put movement above all else, they took "Billy the Kid" to their sching hearts and found their aches relieved. Correlatively, so did exhibitors whose hearts ached even harder over the, until then, condition of their box offices.

The canniness of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in making the picture is being admired on all sides. How much smarter it was, the comment goes, than those other studios which have looked upon the Western as something to be burlesqued or satirized. The latter treatment naturally requires periodic pauses to point the fact that it is such a good joke, as indeed it was for a while. But there were too many pauses In too many pictures for the public to put up with them forever. Its members started finding their own action in other places, a process which seems to have taught the movies a lesson.

If they only will remember it!

Five in Color

For the first time since color photography was introduced into motion pictures, five full-length Technicolor features are simultaneously being made by a single company, Paramount reports. Four of the group are being filmed at Paramount's Hollywood studio and one in Florida. They are "Louisiana Purchase," "Reap the Wild Wind." "Bahama Passage" and "Her Jungle Mate." all being made in Hollywood or on locations, and the Fleischer studio's "Mr Bug Goes to Town." fulllength feature cartoon now in work et Miami, Fla.

Stardom Was Remote.

It came about in this way! Alex Hyde, the orchestra leader and musical director, and Irving Mills, the song publisher who also booked acts, decided to start a girls' oand. But merely forming one and getting it into the big money were two different things. They needed a personality at the head, somebody with plenty of appeal.

So they chose Ina. She was plain Ina Ray then, a cute little trick who had danced in the "Ziegfeld Follies" and in "George White's Scandals." Born March 13, 1916, in Chicago, the daughter of Mrs. Marvel Ray, a professional pianist, she had been in the theater long enough to be regarded as a veteran at 17. Ignatz Waghalter to Direct At Water Gate Tomorrow

Thursday Concert Will Present All Latin-American Program; Elsie Houston Soloist

Ignatz Waghalter, eminent composer-conductor, will make his second appearance as guest conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra on tomorrow night's "Sunset Symphonies" concert at the Potomac Water Gate in a program featuring Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony and a composition of his own, "Rhapsodie d'Austuriana." This and all subsequent concerts will begin at 8 o'clock.

On Thursday evening, in keeping with the rapidly-increasing interest in the artistic creations of our neighbors to the south, the program will be devoted principally to South American music. This concert will mark the Washington debut of one of the most sensational singers of the day-the exotic Brazilian soprano, Elsie Houston. The orchestra will be under the direction of Alexander Smallens in his second and final Water Gate appearance of this season.

Was Kindler's Conductor.

Mr. Waghalter was born in Warsaw, Poland, but went to Berlin in his early youth and most of his career, until the advent of Hitler, was tied up with that city. At the age of 22, acting as operatic coach for the newly-founded Opera Comique in Berlin, he suddenly found himself famous overnight for the sensational way in which he conducted the difficult "Lakme" without rehearsal, substituting at the eleventh hour when the regular conductor was taken ill. After a short engagement as first conductor of the Opera House in Essen, he was called back in 1913 to Berlin and given the post of general musical director of the Charlottenburg Opera, the largest opera house in Germany. It was there that Hans Kindler, then little more than a boy, played under him as first cellist. Waghalter's reputation soon grew. At the same time, he also distinguished himself as a composer and seven of his operas were produced in German between 1911 and 1937.

Under Mr. Waghalter's direction, the National Symphony will play tomorrow night overture to Weber's "Der Freischutz," Tchaikovsky's 'Symphony No. 6" ("Pathetique") 'Rhapsodie d'Austuriana" by Waghalter, Schumann's "Traumerei," Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and the Strauss "Emperor Waltz."

South American Relations Analyzed in New Book

Answers to Questions of Ties With the United States Are Not Always Encouraging

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Good Neighbors

By Hubert Herring. Yale University Press, New Haven.

To the many valuable studies of our neighbors to the south which have recently been published, there must be added this work by Mr. Herring, for 15 years director of the Committee on Cultural Relations with Latin America. It goes straight to the points which are foremost in all North American minds when South America is discussed—the extent of Fascist propaganda to date, the possible course of the different countries in relation to Europe's war, and their friendliness or unfriendliness toward the United States. It also has the merit of being gracefully written in a style which remains easy to read even when it is carrying a steep load of trade figures and statistics.

The main part of the work is given over to detailed studies of the three foremost South American countries-Argentina, Brazil and Chile. The other countries of South and Central America are treated more briefly, as also are Mexico, Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Cuba. In every case, however, the approach is the same-what genuine ties exist between ourselves and the land in question and what enmities? What is the probable future of the issue between Fascism and democracy?

The answers, unhappily, are not always encouraging. In the case of Argentina, Mr. Herring says, "Argentine distrust of the United States is chronic and angry." and offers two sets of explanations for the condition. The first set is the one which the Argentines themselves admit; they say that we are materialistic, imperialistic and guilty of unfair trade discriminations against Argentine products, particularly beef. The second set is the one which, he says, will probably occur to the psychologically minded American who wants to get at the bottom of the matter. It holds that our southern neighbors have a certain envy of us, a certain feeling of inferiority concerning the backwardness of their own hinterland population and a certain resentment that their country should always be rated second to ours in the Western Hemisphere. After examining the merits of all the complaints, Mr. Herring decides, with some whimsicality, that the surest healing balm is to be found in the matter of the excluded beef for that, he says, has become the popular symbol, in Argentine minds, of all our faults. He urgently recommends that a commission of experts be appointed to settle the matter as soon as possible. For once our markets are opened to Argentina's chief export, Argentine indignation at us, whether for our imperialism or our higher standard of living. will, he feels be ameliorated to a marked degree.

Brazil Is a Dictatorship in Every Practical Sense.

He says that Argentina is genuinely democratic and lists as active liberal forces in its life a free press, organized labor, a growing middle class, public education and "robust politics." These forces are pro-British and are in favor of American unity, but they are opposed by a number of conservative groups. The balance is delicate.

Writing of Brazil's relations to us, Mr. Herring says that that country has been "as conspicuous an ally as Argentina has been a nagging critic," but points out that, while hostile Argentina is one of the few real Latin American democracies, friendly Brazil is in every practical sense a dictatorship. It has no congress, no elections, no free press. Its leading intellectual. Francisco Campos, has recently written in praise of totalitarianism as the coming form of government and has called democracy "a fantasy." Sympathy, at least, would therefore seem to incline Brazil toward Europe's Fascist regimes, but, as Mr. Herring says, no dictator is so sympathetic with another as to want to hand over his own job to him. and he concludes that "Vargas will wait and see how the battle goes. He will side with the winner, with those who offer the best terms.

In Chile, he says, there is so much democracy that it is a tumult. "The clash of opinion, expressed with noisy vigor without policing or century France. And that is purely surveillance, offers grateful contrast to practices in Brazil, Panama, Peru arbitrary, since the wicked Chilbert and other lands." But, though the Chilean freedom is exuberant, it is in and his men could very easily be its infancy, practically speaking. The country is backward and largely un- cattle-rustlers. Mother Is Central Figure In Author's True Story

Ethel Hueston's Family Lived In Southern Iowa, Where Father Was Minister

Preacher's Wife

By Ethel Hueston. The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. It is doubtful if Ethel Hueston, in her nearly 30 novels, ever told a better story than this true one about her family. Her mother is the central figure, but the cast includes Father, a spirited man of the Spirit, nine daughters, two sons and a grandfather of whom we see entirely too little.

The Powelsons lived in Southern Iowa, where Father was a Methodist circuit rider. To augment the family income, he sold Bibles and traded horses (he had an unministerial fondness for horseflesh). He was gay, volatile, demonstrative and preached a rip-roarin' brand of religion. Mother, on the other hand, was placidity itself; no one ever doubted her authority, exercised with a calm, deliberate hand. Her ways were not so winning as Father's, her humor less keen, her religion far broader, but she was a pillar of strength. Running a household for 13 on a few hundred dollars a year was a job that called for Spartan effort and tactics that might now be called totalitarian, but the point is that she did her job and did it well.

Father died before the last of the children were grown, and it was up to Mother to run the household. She was equal to it. Some of the children were away from home and sending back money. With this help she made out. Then the children discovered that penny-saving Mother, who wouldn't even play cards, was a heavy investor in wild-cat stocks. They were shocked. It was unlike her. She invested her money in whatever stocks had the fanciest prospectuses, and the children let her have her fun. She grew more lenient in discipline as the years went by and even dallied with strange new religions that certainly were not Methodist in origin.

Mother's father, Grandfather Buell, was a man who deserves a book of his own. He evolved an embalming fluid of supposedly miraculous staying power and built himself an elaborate tomb in the front yard, where he intended that every one should see his formula triumphant when he was put into it. He fancied himself a philanthropist and converted his house into a Home for the Aged. He liked the idea, but not the aged Hough (Lippincott)-Story of West- who applied. He preferred horses and wished he had started a home for horses in the first place. He was quite a man.

The Powelsons were a "typical" family in many respects, with perhaps a few more children and a little less income, and their story has (Macmillan)-A novel of a gentle heroism and significance. It was a good story to tell, and Miss Hueston EDWIN TRIBBLE.

Our War and Our Peace

By James P. Warburg. Farrar & Rhinehart, New York.

This is our war, and the peace that will follow "must be our peace." So says Mr. Warburg, described by his publishers as one of this country's leading financial experts and one of its great liberal thinkers.

Of peace, he has this to say: "Our peace must be a peace of owitz (Jewish Publication Society)- justice. The order we seek to establish must be something more than a mere mechanism for the suppression of change by violence. It must be an order so permeated with justice that the majority of men will not be moved to violence-an order in which democracy, for those who want it. cannot only exist in peace but develop further. For economic democracy things which other children take for must develop much further if political democracy is to survive."

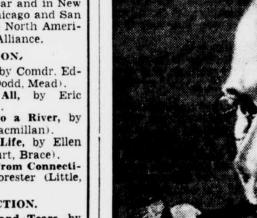

As for the sort of order that must be established, he says that Without Signposts, by Kathleen those of us who are not sleeping in air-raid shelters must begin thinking Wallace (Putnam's)-Story of fam- about it now. Admitting that victory is our first and immediate objective, he writes:

"But, if we can kindle in the hearts of men everywhere a real hope, a militant belief in a better future, our cause will triumph the more ily in San Francisco in early years swiftly, and we shall move more surely toward our goal-a peace that is more than the mere precarious preservation of a nerve-racked neutrality in the midst of conflict-a peace that is peace." German Fifth Column Is Everywhere, Author Finds.

Different as these countries are, there is revealed in this treatment of them certain marked similarities One is a common great disparity be- to Newcastle. tween rich and poor, a consolidation in the hands of a few of the greater part of the sources of wealth, a huge population which lives in a state of virtual seridom, and a tremendous illiteracy rate. Another is the German Aerial Vagabond fifth column. It is everywhere, says Mr. Herring. It deluges each country with propaganda issued openly from its government offices and, though undercover work is impossible to check, there are evidences everywhere of bribery and military measures. The activity seems to follow the pattern used in Europe-to secure Quislings in high places and to get possession of air bases and strategic materials.

This disquieting picture is repeated in most of the other countries of which the book treats, though there are notable exceptions in Colombia and Costa Rica. In the cases of most of the countries, indeed, the picture is even darker, for in many the democratic spirit and institutions are either lacking or lifeless. The total effect of Mr. Herring's interpretation of our neighbors to the south is of a vast, rich, undefended territory where small groups of educated people quarrel-sometimes idealistically, sometimes selfishly-over theories of government, and huge populations spend their lives in ignorance, hunger, hard work and hopelessness. As he says himself, "Latin America is cut to the order of aspiring empire builders.

Commenting briefly on the position in which this hard fact puts our own Government, he indicates that we must engage in some highly acrobatic diplomacy. We must good-neighbor it to the limit with loans and notably the Taj Mahal and the intrade concessions, and-above all-we must abide by our promise to stop interfering in Latin American domestic affairs. But, if we are to reap the reward of our expensive good-neighboring, how, he inquires, are we to avoid that very interference? The whole purpose of our new policy is to assure ourselves that Latin America will engage in no foreign entanglements which might endanger the hemisphere; what, then, are we to do if such an entanglement is made? In other words, we are to lay the Monroe Doctrine aside with one hand and tighten it up with the other. The implications become the more overwhelming when we remember that, Quest for any real military protection, we must be responsible. The armed forces of the whole southern continent do not make a respectable modern army. says this work, and the ill-nourished and disease-ridden rank and file of the people will not be turned overnight into panzer divisions. It is a large, not to say colossal, problem. Mr. Herring presents it with great effectiveness.

The China of Chiang Kai-Shek

By Paul M. A. Linebarger. World Peace Foundation, Boston.

This is primarily a text on the structure of China's present govern- experience as a sailor, found himment. As the author reminds us. The Japanese invasion, however, halted this progress at the second step. Had the country been allowed New Zealand. His journal is this to continue its peaceful program, says Mr. Linebarger, it probably would book. have reached the third step by now. But in the midst of war there was no It is plainly not the work of a opportunity to make elaborate governmental changes. The crying need writer; unfortunately, it is not just of the moment was for efficient military operations and a governmental the matter-of-fact observations of a machine which would allow for the best possible prosecution of the war. The drafting of a permanent constitution has therefore been postponed, and China today is not, as many writers have claimed, actually a republic. It is instead a one-party dictatorship But there are great differences the author's literary capacity. Yet between it and the one-party dictatorships of Europe.

For one thing. China's leaders have never lost sight of the fact ment is in the thing, and, if one that a republic was their eventual aim. They have, in fact, made the can forget the inept writing, one attainment of democracy a war aim, along with the defeat of Japan. The has a real tale of adventure. structure of government which was in existence at the outbreak of hostilities has necessarily been modified by war needs and, in some cases, the dictatorial aspects of the Kuomintang's power have been intensified. But insofar as democratic features have been possible, they have been added to the party machine. The result is a complicated structure of governmental bodies, which, to a western mind, will often seem to be contradictory. But, as Mr. Linebarger interprets it, the ancient nature of Chinese society and the new will to victory combine not only to support the regime, but to carry it forward. His book is an analysis, office by office, bureau by bureau, of China's government as it is now, after more than four years of conflict.

He takes the provisional constitution of 1931 as his starting point. goes on to the draft permanent, or "double five" constitution of 1936, dis-cusses the plan of government laid down in these documents and then describes the wartime additions. After this, he analyzes in the same manner the structure of the Kuomintang and shows the relation between the party machine and the government itself. He also goes into the puppet government set up by Japan and the Chinese elements which support it, and lists extrapolitical forces which have political effect, such as mass education, rural reconstruction and the new industrial co-operatives.

It is his belief that Chiang Kai-shek is genuinely carrying out the will of Dr. Sun, whom he sees as one of the world's great leaders. It is worth remembering, apropos of this, that Chiang has been accused of having a somewhat messianic concept of himself in China's life and that certain writers have suggested that he has a power complex. Mr. Linebarger says: "* * * His sense of leadership would be maniacal if not grounded on fact; but what assumption would not? Father of the Blues

An autobiography by W. C. Handy. The Macmillan Co., New York

The autobiography of the man generally recognized as the "father of the blues" scores on several points. Primarily, it is a revelation of that somewhat obscure world from which sprang the music which has held succeeding generations of gay people in its clutches since the turn of the century. Then, of course, it is an exposition of William Christopher Handy's outlook on the passing stream of life. This good-natured, indomitable outlook being what it is, the story, in its quaint and picturesque telling, proves a thoroughly entertaining piece of reading.

A prospering music publisher today, Mr. Handy started his musical career with a battered cornet at the age of 15. This was the fanfare to a life replete with struggle, disappointments and hard work. The traditional ups and downs of the barnstorming musician were Handy's as a "name bands," one gathers, lies in member of that earnest American institution, the minstrel show; as leader of one of those old brassy brass bands; as part of a wandering, down-at-heels quartet. Handy, in short, learned the ropes as only a trouper learns them. Many were the hard knocks: Starvation, brawls, race hatred, disappointments in his musical effort. But he always managed to meet them with a smile, or at least with the philosophic resignation typical duced this time by radio contracts of the Negro. What is more, his determination never flagged.

If, on the other hand, the knocks hadn't come his way, "Memphis Blues" and "Beale Street Blues" might never have been written. For their composer attributes the birth of such blues classics to the accumuwide. We see the hard-working per- lated memories of his days of pain and privation. "St. Louis Blues." for example, was the outpouring of a single evening; many of the others came band, the precarious existence of forth with equal spontaneity. And just as Handy's blues have become those who try to live by getting club an inseparable part of America's music, so should his life story fit into J. W. STEPP.

Low Man on a Totem Pole

By H. Allen Smith. Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc., Garden City, N. Y.

Mr. Smith's haphazard account of interviewing the famous and notorious who make New York their home or temporary headquarters leads one to wonder what kind of stories he wrote to his newspaper. Some of jazz-that the music for the dance his sketches are fairly full, taking in a number of interviews over a period today has gone far beyond the dance of years. Others are fragmentary, revealing more about the interviewer than the interviewee. Frequently Mr. Smith seems to be putting into his book those things that have seemed to him too trivial or too obscene for the musicians are of greater inter- newspaper purposes. The book is diverting, but, though it comes from the pen of a professional interviewer, it is scarcely a guide to the art of interviewing

Fred Allen, the radio comedian, introduces Mr. Smith in a series of colorful and questionable metaphors which lead one to expect more of music has become a great Nation- Mr. Smith than he produces here. From this introduction one learns that wide industry, but the dance itself Mr. Smith loves "screwballs." as he describes them, with a love that jogs along on an elementary and passeth our understanding. When he sets out to record his interviews with them, there follows a procession of strip-tease artists, misunderstood geniuses and movie stars. Among his notables are Gene Fowler, Jim Moran, Vivien Leigh, Maxie Rosenbloom and Sybil's Dreaming Royalist, a cow. There is also a burlesque queen who once was church editor on a newspaper, an inventor who rocks in a straight chair, a World's Fair amazon, the composer of "Three Little Fishes" and others.

The book is more autobiographical than the author apparently intended. That's the kind of an interviewer he is. Occasionally his view of life is very funny. At other times he conveys to his readers the boredom he himself apparently feels. MIRIAM OTTENBERG.

Democracy and Sport

By John R. Tunis. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

What this country needs, says the veteran sports writer who wrote this book, is more people playing games. He wants everybody to get out and take a sock at something or somebody, in a friendly way. Specifically, he would like to see a broadening of the base of all games.

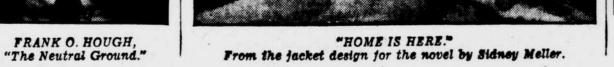

"Today." he writes. "when we need to strengthen the core and fiber of our democracy, we should pay more attention than ever to sport. We need to give every one an equal chance to play; rich, poor, black, white, Jew, gentile, Chinaman, those who are quick and perceptive as well as those who, in sports, are slow and inept.

"We must not decrease the sporting opportunities for the many. We should in every possible way subordinate to the good of the mass the wishes of the publicized title-holders who draw headlines in the press and stare at us from the newsreels. Never before in the history of the United States have we so needed the spirit of democracy in our sport and Huicar, the Spanish architect, put many years into planning this mission. His sweetheart, living in Spain, had promised to marry him, so she set sail for Mexico. Her ship was lost in a storm, and she was never seen again. Huicar, in her memory, carved a unique and beautiful window and named it after his lost loved one.

Thus, the famed window bears the name of the "Rose Window." It is not colored rose glass, as one might think, but instead is a plain glassed, iron barred and beautifully carved remembrance of a lost girl. DILEMMA. One effect of the current war is the problem it has brought to America's zoos - and to Heinz Ruhe. For years Ruhe has been importing. boarding, lodging and selling many of the wild animals sold in this country. Africa and India have always been the best source of animal supply. But military operations make it increasingly difficult for Ruhe to balance supply and demand. The animal man, however, has found two solutions: He's beginning to use South America more and more as a source of zoo inhabitants. And his ships from Africa travel around the Cape instead of through the Suez Canal. But the journey takes almost twice as long. The strain on the animals is greater, yet Ruhe rarely loses one. His last shipment arrived with a fresh baby hippopotamus. Both mother and child are doing well.

DESPITE THE WAR, American zoo directors can still buy from Ruhe, head of Louis Ruhe, Inc. If a circus needs a baby elephant, it calls Heinz in New York. If a bunch of the boys at a college class reunion want a python or a monkey for table decorations, they might talk to Ruhe about rental fees. Or if you wanted a camel, Ruhe would sell you one for about a thousand dollars. Terms: crated, F.O.B., N. Y.

RUHE, a big, blond, round-faced man in his thirties, is always traveling from one zoo to another to tell the animal buyers about his latest importations. Once a year he gets up a catalogue for the zoo and circus trade. The latest lists hippopatami, tapirs, camels, giraffes, bears, ostriches, and the 50 or 60 other species he has on his Long Island animal farm. Prices are fairly well stabilized. An Indian baby elephant is worth $2,000. A bird of paradise, the most expensive bird, has a $500 sales value. A tiger is worth a minimum of $1,000. Giraffes bring $7,000 a pair. Python is sold by the foot -a 25-footer is good for close to a thousand. Ruhe has sold six gorillas at $5,000 and up, according to size. The most expensive animal he ever sold was the giant panda - to the St. Louis Zoo - for $8,000. Heinz says that, just as you'd suspect, his most popular animals are monkeys and penguins. Ruhe himself doesn't keep a single pet at home. He doesn't know why exactly because he's sure he likes animals. - JERRY MASON

IT'S NOT SUCH A BAD IDEA TO KEEP TRYING

by Lena Madesin Phillips

THIS is the story of a woman who could outplay and outlast Europe's vicissitudes. Although she was old, poor, starved and almost totally blind, it is a success story. For by her own wits and perseverance she gained freedom. She is the mother of an old friend, but I shall call her Anna Wolfe.

FOR

I tell Anna Wolfe's story now because so many of us assume that today's cruel complexities must be resolved by someone besides ourselves. "It's a horrible world," we say, "but what can we do about it?" Then we settle back in our ringside seats to worry and wait — and criticize the players.

Anna Wolfe had handicaps. Her blindness was so nearly complete that she carried the white walking stick which in Europe only helplessly blind persons may use. She was weakened by months of starvation — not a single ounce of butter or fat for endless weeks. She was old.

Nevertheless, she never quit trying. Let me tell you about her escape.

When Hitler invaded Austria, Frau Wolfe's children and grandchildren were forced to flee. Last of all, she herself left fatherland, home, property, friends. Traveling by way of Paris, she was to join her daughter in the United States. Then the Germans approached Paris. Again she fled, this time to Marseille.

None had told her that her permit to stay there would expire in five days. On the sixth day a gendarme stopped her on the street, demanding to see her papers. "You have been here fourteen hours too long," he said. "Come to the police station."

Thus began her pursuit of Europe's indispensable permits and extensions, to stay, to depart, to cross frontiers, to enter another country. The station to which the officer took her was not competent to grant an extension, nor was the second. Likewise the third, fourth, fifth and sixth.

UNSUSPECTING, Frau Wolfe went to the seventh place to which directed. Other old ladies, cowed and silent, were there. After waiting many hours she asked permission to go across the street for food. "You will never again get out of this place," the attendant replied. "Don't you know where you are? In the Concentration Camp for German Women. You are now dead to the world. Can't you understand that, you stupid cow?"

But she did get out. When the French Commissar finally came, the others bowed silently, accepting internment although their mission was like her own. Doubtless Frau Wolfe leaned heavily upon the white stick, but the proud old head was held high. "Sir," she said in the exquisite French of the Parisienne, "a great mistake has been made. I have been unjustly detained, for I am a Frenchwoman. You will hear that in my speech. My dead husband was born in Bohemia. But what have I to do with the Germans?" He replied that obviously she was French, granted the extension and let her go.

AMERICA

The weeks crept by. Officials would permit none to leave France. Some refugees slipped across the mountains on foot, secretly and in night's darkness. Such an escape was impossible for her. Finally her permit to cross Spain and Portugal was about to expire. It could not be renewed. In seven days the doors of hope would close "for the duration." Feverishly she sought permission to leave France, only to fail in every attempt. At last she discovered where an important official lived and went to his home. A servant said, "The Commander is out."

BUT hearing strains from a piano Frau Wolfe — a great lover of music herself brushed past him and opened the door. A nervous lad was struggling with his music lesson.

Quickly she sat down beside him, talked, laughed, taught and inspired while minutes lengthened into hours. The Commander, returning, found her there and saw his favorite son, usually so morose, now radiantly happy. Could he do less than grant the permit? Of course not.

But travel agents said her journey was still impossible. Snow upon the Pyrenees had melted and, gathering into mighty torrents, had washed away the railroad bridges. After making interminable rounds of agencies, she located the single sound bridge remaining, on a route almost never used.

Nearly five months had now elapsed. Frau Wolfe was worn and emaciated. But she started, leaving most of her baggage behind because there was no money for its transportation.

At Saragossa, where it was necessary to change trains quickly, Spanish soldiers who had traveled with her walked off with the remaining baggage. As she stepped from the compartment, suddenly and silently a giant of a man lifted her into his arms and moved away. So she fought and screamed until he put her down. "Hurry," a voice from the darkness shouted, "your train is going." She tried, ran headlong into a wall and fell. Again the big man picked her up — this time depositing her on the train!

Blood and tears streamed down the wrinkled old face, but she was happy. She had escaped. And then the conductor led her into an elegantly upholstered first-class compartment. There, neatly stacked, were all her bags. Those who had seemed thieves and kidnapers were only kind, inarticulate friends trying to help. Frau Wolfe is now with her daughter on the Pacific Coast. I hear she is thinking of giving music lessons. I do not want to study music but she has taught me something more important. Keep trying.

INVENTOR. We noticed a rather new five-cent stamp the other day — a blue one with the picture of Elias Howe. Elias Howe? Surely you' remember him. He was the man who invented the sewing machine. He did more than any other man in his generation to lighten the labor of women. Nevertheless he was so poor he had to borrow a suit of clothes to attend the funeral of the woman he loved.

WET. Father Bernard Hubbard, the "Glacier Priest," is back in Alaska for his fifteenth summer of exploration. We were glad to learn that he is again taking full radio equipment with him. There was a time when the good Father was almost anti-radio. Two years ago his expedition had spent three weeks on one of the largest of the Alaskan volcanoes. Three weeks of rain, cold, mist and fog. Three weeks when their clothes were continually wet and they were soaked to the skin. They returned to their base camp - cold, wet, miserable and nearly snow-blind. Father Hubbard turned on the radio and idly twirled the station dial. Finally, he tuned in a program coming from a Hollywood night club - and almost threw away his short-wave receiver when he heard a lady songstress emot-ing with a then-popular tune called "With the Wind and the Rain in Your Hair."

HEREDITY. Did you ever have one of those nightmares in which you find yourself walking down Main Street in your undies? If so, you'll sympathize with the hero of "Must Hurry," the story by Roy Lopez, in this issue. We think it's funny. Lopez (that isn't his real name) could hardly help being a writer, since both his parents are conspicuously successful authors.

Before he could graduate from Harvard he was forced, for reasons of health, to move to a tropical climate. He chose Havana. There he conducted an advertising agency — until stung by the writing bee. Now he's back in the United States, writing fiction like mad. But Havana has left its mark on him in the form of a Spanish pen name and a certain Latin lightheartedness which we think you'll find delightful. Don't miss "Must Hurry." M.

as a Real Protective Food

Everyone knows there is great health value in fresh, crisp salads because they are rich in vitamins and minerals. Of course, you also get these elements in other foods in your daily diet.

BUT-Mazola contains a vital Food Factor essential to life! Very few foods are known to vield it. Yet, if your body lacks a sufficient supply of it, you can't think, look or act your best. It helps keep brain active, nerves fortified, body cells protected, skin soft and hair lustrous.

This vital Food Factor, found so richly and inexpensively in Mazola, is a protective oil compound which needs no digestion. It is not an added nutrient. Nature puts it in this fine oil of golden corn-and Mazola contains more of it than any other kind of oil!

Enjoy a freshly-made Mazola dressing on your salads at least once a day!... not only because Mazola is a great protective foodbut because it makes great salad dressings!

AKE it on the word of Milo Perkins. there'll be no meatless days, no wheatless days, this time. All told, there'll be food a-plenty, come what may. Oh, a few items on the grocery list may get temporarily low on the shelves — things the British particularly need, like evaporated milk and cheese - but even they will stay within reasonable price limits. Before long, increased supplies will be coming to market. The Department of Agriculture is stepping up food production, and planning two years ahead. And you won't need to do any hoarding. Milo Perkins is taking care of that. In Washington these days they are calling Milo Perkins "the Hoover of this crisis." That makes him fidget. The situation and the setup are entirely different from 1917, he insists. We aren't going to need a "Food Czar" with any such powers as Mr. Hoover had then. Furthermore, he loyally insists, if there is such a thing as a Food Administrator today, it is Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, under whom he works as a subordinate. It was the Secretary, he points out, who, in April, announced the program of expanded food production - a program as important to total defense, he thinks, as Secretary Knox's program for a two-ocean navy. But it is Milo Perkins who is doing the actual job of buying foodstuffs for a reserve supply that can be quickly released any time a shortage develops or profiteers start boosting prices too high. You might call him our official hoarder. More technically, he is Administrator of the Surplus Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture. He is also official buyer of food for Britain,

WHY WE'LL EAT

Perkins just laid it on the line. He told them the program, told them roughly how much money he was going to spend in their industry and told them just what he was going to do if they started boosting prices too high. No oratory, no highfalutin' theorizing. And when he finished, those hard-boiled businessmen rose and cheered.

As a matter of fact, Perkins gave up a brilliant career as a businessman himself to join the Department of Agriculture. Born in Wisconsin, he was on his own, a magazinesubscription salesman, at sixteen. He educated himself by studying nights in hotel rooms as he traveled from town to town, carefully laying out for himself the equivalent of a college course - including even business-administration study. At nineteen he went to Texas and became a salesman for a bag company, and at twenty-three he was made sales manager. At twenty-six, he started his own bag company with a partner, and quickly made it a success. A man of direct action, he is said to have been the country's champion long-distance-telephone salesman, conducting most of his business that way. When N.R.A. came along, he was one of his industry's representatives on the Bag Authority, and was often in Washington. And that is where the second part of his story opens . . .

He Wrote a Letter

ONE day, in those troublous times, the Secretary of Agriculture (then Henry A. Wallace) received a letter. It was in the same general classification as a lot of other letters then flooding into every governmental department: a how-about-a-job? letter. But there was a note of sincerity in this letter that wouldn't be scoffed away: the writer, one Milo Perkins, bag manufacturer, either really meant it when he said that he felt that the Department of Agriculture offered the most worth-while work that he could possibly do in the world, or else he was a genius at letterwriting. One of Wallace's assistants read the letter first. Then he showed it to his fellowassistants and, finally, to the Secretary himself - and Milo Perkins was invited to call around the next time he was in Washington. A few months later, having sold his share in the business to his partner, he was installed as one of the three assistants to the Secretary of Agriculture.

That was in 1935. In 1937 Perkins was made Assistant Administrator of the Farm Security Administration. One of his jobs in that post was the handling of resettlement projects - those government-built communities that were thrown open to farm people whose own land wouldn't produce enough for a decent living. The project itself was by no means free from criticism. And as a businessman, Perkins immediately saw a flaw in the way many of the new communities had been set up. They still couldn't provide good living from the land alone: there wasn't enough of it. What they needed was some industry to supplement their agriculture. The little attempts at handicraft sidelines weren't enough. Perkins looked around for an industry, found a hosiery manufacturer who wanted to expand, and propositioned him. The result was half a dozen hosiery mills, built on a government loan to the settlers, owned co-operatively by them, but operated strictly as a private business by an experienced hosiery manufacturer. That put those communities on their feet, and others were promptly made practical by similar ventures. Perkins's rare combination of hard-headed business sense and idealistic fervor had wrought a near-miracle.

One reason is Milo Perkins — a self-winding go-getter. Whatever may happen, his task is to keep America's tables heaped with plenty ... at fair prices. Let's watch him on the job for the Red Cross, for home relief and for the government's free-school-lunch program. Altogether, he probably will run up a grocery bill this year of some $750,000,000.

The neat part of the Perkins trick is that this buying is aimed in two directions at once. On the one hand, he buys to protect you and me against runaway prices. On the other, he buys to protect the farmer against disastrous price slumps, and thus encourages him to go ahead and grow the food we are going to need. It is a different sort of control from the direct price-fixing and rationing of Mr. Hoover's Food Administration, but it still makes Milo Perkins the Man Behind the Groceries.

It is a role he likes, for Milo Perkins has an evangelistic passion for making America a well-fed nation. A self-winding, go-getting salesman just turned forty, medium in stature, undistinguished in appearance, Perkins would pass in any crowd as the average American — until he begins to sell his favorite doctrine, the Doctrine of Plenty. His words are the words of a common man, slangy and colloquial, but they take on a trenchant forcefulness that makes them ring with challenge. "We won't get anywhere with a people who are hungry. If you want morale you've got to have full bellies!"

I was in Washington one day recently when he had a session with a group of canners. They were typical, realistic businessmen, inclined to eye governmental meddling with suspicion. You could almost feel their skepticism as Perkins started to talk to them. But

The Stamp Plan

BUT it was as nothing compared to his next major triumph. In 1939 he was handed the ticklish problem of farm surpluses to solve. You remember the shouts that went up over the killing of little pigs, the plowing-under of perfectly good crops. Perkins, too, thought it insane to destroy food when people were going hungry. It was indeed the very thing to rouse him to evangelistic wrath. Yet the buying-up of surplus foods by the government for free distribution to families on relief was hotly criticized, too. How were dealers and merchants to live if the government came in and gave away the very food they were trying to sell? If there were only some way to get this surplus food out to the needy through regular business channels. . . So mused Secretary Wallace and his associates.

Perkins worked out the way - the Stamp Plan. You probably know how it works: Families certified as needy are enabled, by

The hilarious story of young Mr. Fernandez who lost his pants on the way to New York

by Roy Lopez Illustrated by C. C. Beall

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HEN Paco Fernandez staggered down the swaying aisle of the Pullman in search of a drink of water, he had no idea what he was letting himself in for.

Under ordinary circumstances, Paco probably wouldn't even have remembered the nocturnal quest for the water. He would have wakened the next morning at the porter's call. dressed in leisurely fashion and stepped out of the sleeper for his first view of Washington, D. C. And of course Lynn Foster would have been down at the station to meet him, for Lynn was the reason behind this trip of Paco's, his first sortie beyond the strands of his native Cuba. Or rather, to be more exact, Lynn's father was behind it.

Grant Foster had viewed with dismay his daughter's transformation following her trip to Havana the preceding winter. He had listened for weeks to a non-stop rave about one Paco Fernandez, Cuban. And he was against. Definitely and violently against.

"Craziest thing I ever heard," he had grumbled. "You know the boy three weeks and you want to marry him. It's ridiculous." Lynn pleaded. "I love him and he loves me.

What's wrong with that setup?" "Look, kitten, here's what I'm driving at.

You met this boy in Havana and he was swell. But that's because he belongs there. Take him away from his own country and he'd probably be a completely different person." Then he softened. "I hate to throw cold water on the thing, but I know what you're letting yourself in for. This Paco is undoubtedly very charming, but from what you've told me yourself he must be completely irresponsible."

"He's not irresponsible. He's a dignified. reliable person, and if you knew him you'd realize it."

FINALLY. after more time — and more argument - had elapsed, Grant Foster decided that drastic measures were in order.

"All right," he said. "Invite him to Washington for a while. See how he makes out here. But I don't mind telling you, Lynn, that I'm pretty darned skeptical.'

Hence Paco's presence on the Havana Special bound from Miami to Washington. Hence his undeniable gloom as he sat in the club car and read for the fortieth time Lynn's final, fervent instructions:

been substantially augmented by a couple of hours of solid sleep. Thus it is understandable that after ten minutes of groping for his shoes, he journeyed to the wrong end of the car in search of the water cooler. Thus it is logical, or it was to Paco's way of thinking, that the near end of the next car would be closer than the far end of this car.

she leave the train in Washington and remain all night asleep in the station. No is true?"

"Yassuh, that's true, on'y this here ain't the car. The Washington car was right back days to get here. What I am going to do in the meanwhile?"

"That's your problem," the burly man said. Paco plunged in again. "Excuse me, please,

"... And above all, darling, please remember to be on your good behavior. Dad is terribly old-fashioned, and you must make him understand you're a solid, dependable citizen - even if it kills you. But don't worry about that yet. Dad will be in New York when you get here, so we'll have a couple of days alone for some last-minute coaching."

The appended word of cheer was a hopeless gesture.

"Is very sad," Paco decided. Simultaneously he decided that he needed a drink.

He ordered a martini and gazed dolefully at the olive at the bottom of the glass. A few minutes later he was gazing at another olive at the bottom of another glass. The olives continued to add up, and Paco's gaze grew longer and more blurred. These were heavy hours.

Maybe Lynn wouldn't be able to marry him after all.

"Is so sad," Paco wept, as the eighth olive appeared through the mist.

Somehow he managed to stagger back to his berth, but his mental state as he eventually dropped off into space could only be described as a cacophony of green confusion.

When he awoke some time later with a yen for a glass of water, the confusion had

THE next morning he realized that his judgment had betrayed him. He realized it under rather amazing circumstances.

His first discovery, when he managed to open his eyes, was that he was not in his berth at all. He was in the smoking compartment, stretched out on a leather-covered divan, his blue bathrobe lying on the floor in a heap, and his flaming red silk pajamas flaunted before the startled eyes of a dusky individual in a white coat who was standing by solicitously.

"Please, what time it is?" Paco managed to ask.

"Seven o'clock, boss. Thutty minutes mo' to get dressed."

"Thank you. Already we have reach Washington, no?"

"Washington!" The porter's mouth dropped open. "Boss, you is in New Yawk."

"New York!" Paco screeched. "You make to me the joke."

"Nossuh, I ain't jokin'. We done pass thoo Washington five hours ago."

"Si si. I comprehend that." Paco's hands pawed the air in search of the proper English. "But they have tell me in Miami that my car, of this one.

It was then that the awful truth broke upon Paco. The car which he had boarded in Miami was in Washington. Most horrible of all, his clothes were in Washington. And Paco was in New York - without wallet, without baggage, without anything but his shoes, a bathrobe and a pair of red silk pajamas.

"Is a mess," he said feelingly.

Paco told his story to the other men in the smoking compartment. One of them grinned and said, "Boy, you are in a jam. What are you going to do when seven-thirty comes and you've got to get out?"

At last the men departed, leaving Paco horribly alone. Acting on instinct, he wandered back to lower four, only to pause helplessly when he got there.

The occupant of this coveted space was now dressed and was engaged in packing his grip. He was a burly individual with the face of an English bulldog, and a hairline which broke halfway back on his head and gave way to a glistening bald spot.

But Paco didn't notice these things. He had seen something in the man's grip, and his pajama-clad being hungered desperately. He said, "Excuse me, please, but have you the extra suit, no? I am in the terrible pickle." And he poured out his story with passionate intensity. "My suitcase, she is in Washington," he finished. "Maybe takes itself two but the extra suit — could you permit that I use of it just until I arrive at a hotel? Right away I cash a check, I receive money, I buy clothes, and I return your suit to you in that very same moment."

The man put his hands on his hips, snorted a refusal, and strode off toward the washroom, brandishing a toothbrush.

Paco continued to gaze hungrily at the suit. And then he saw something else: a name plate on the suitcase, which said "Joe Breen," and then went on to give Mr. Breen's address in New York. The significance was obvious. Anything borrowed from Mr. Joe Breen could be returned.

Paco acted on instinct. Within a few moments Mr. Breen's ample pants were hanging loosely from Paco's middle, supported by a belt likewise pilfered from Mr. Breen's suitcase. The coat and vest followed the pants onto Paco's frame, and Paco departed.

UNCE outside, he wasted no time. His sockless shoes clicked off yardage on the concrete platform. He fell into a taxi and gave thanks for the partial protection it afforded him. And then for the first time Paco became conscious of a bulge in the pocket of Mr. Breen's coat. He drew forth a package, neatly wrapped in plain brown paper, and groaned at the sight.

BABY ENGINEERS

Watch the tiny fiddler crabs on the beach this summer. They're fun and the ocean can't fool them

by Paul W. Kearney

Men bridges, piers and other underwater structures until somebody hit on the idea of an airtight enclosure submerged in the water, in which they could work unimpeded by the tide. Yet if they had only thought of it, the engineers could have got this idea centuries ago from the tiny fiddler crab on the seashore, for he is the fellow who developed it first.

Only about an inch or an inch and a half in width, these ingenious creatures live in burrows in the sand or mud just below the high-water mark. When the tide is out, they sit in the doorways of their burrows or scamper around near by for food. Each home is surrounded by a crescentshaped mound of sand pellets.

Hundreds of fiddlers will be seen in a colony. Seen, that is, if they don't see you first, for immediately upon the approach of any stranger they dart out of sight into their burrows. The telltale holes, however, inform you that you are close to a fiddlercrab village, and if you will only stand quictly for three or four minutes, head after head will reappear in the holes, survey the situation, and then climb out in sight again. If you commit no quick movements for the next few minutes, they will lose all interest in you and resume their activities so undisturbed that you'll find them climbing over your shoes or into your outstretched hand.

The Bass Fiddler

THIS strange little creature got his name "fiddler" or "calling crab" from the one enormous claw which distinguishes the male from the female. This single front claw is as wide as the entire body and you don't have to watch a colony very long before a half-dozen of the masculine members will be up on their hind legs, waving their giant claws in a fashion that immediately suggests a bass fiddler in the Philharmonic. The procedure seems aimless to us non-fiddlers, but it is probably just another way of making an impression on the feminine vote in the colony.

Between tides the crabs live entirely out of water, yet they are not air breathers. Two reservoirs are carried within the body in which water is stored. They use these reserve tanks to absorb oxygen from the air instead of bringing it in directly through their lungs.

Despite the fact that the fiddlers cannot live without recourse to water, they obviously do not care to have it in too large doses — hence the sand pellets around the mouths of their burrows. At high tide, naturally, their homes are under water. But just about fifteen minutes before each incoming tide reaches their doors you will observe great activity in the crab colony. Each individual goes promptly to his own abode and begins to roll back the sand pellets from the semicircle.

The Ocean Keeps Out

CRAWLING backwards into his burrow, the crab drags the sand in after him and in a couple of minutes' time has sealed the doorway securely against the advancing water. By the same token, the tide isn't out fifteen minutes before every one of them has pushed out the sand door again, rolled it a few inches away and stacked it neatly for the next performance. Many times between tides, of course, occasional waves will wash up over the colony, but apparently no crab is ever fooled into thinking that the tide is coming in ahead of time!

Fiddlers are vegetarians, and very dainty eaters, too. They pick up minute particles of food in the small fore-claw and put them in their mouths just as a human eats out of his hand. Some fiddlers are colored much like the mud or sand in which they live, others sport really gay, varied tints. Like other crabs, they readily discard a leg or claw when caught by an enemy. They are so agile, however, that few other creatures bother them - except the herons, who are very shrewd. Realizing that fiddlers always disappear upon the approach of any creature, the heron merely stands quietly in the center of the colony and waits. And as the gleaming eyestalks of the crabs reappear in the burrows, the swift-striking bird pounces upon them.

"More bad lucks," he said feelingly. "Always my life complicate itself."

The possession of the package enhanced Paco's sense of guilt. He had salved his conscience up to now with the thought that the suit he had borrowed was an ancient thing at best. The package, however, might well be something of importance. Paco determined to guard it with his life.

Eventually the cab slewed over to the sidewalk and Paco found himself at the Hotel Tremaine. Clutching his bathrobe, he stumbled out and addressed the doorman smilingly. "Please," he said, "I have not sufficient acknowledge of your language. Do me the favor to pay the driver, no, and charge it to my accounting?"

The doorman stared at the pajama tops emerging from under Joe Breen's coat.

"That's quite all right, sir." he said grinning. "I understand perfectly, sir."

"Thank you," Paco said. It was then that he was besieged by Freddie, the bell hop. "Your baggage, sir?" Freddie exuded.

"Thank.you," said Paco, and handed him the bathrobe. Freddie was stopped momentarily, but then he sparkled once again. "I catch on, sir. Yes, sir!"

THE room clerk was even more baffled by Paco's attire; but the real ordeal lay in reaching the elevators. They were situated at the far side of the lobby, and Paco suffered agony as he padded across the floor. When he reached his room, there was another problem to be met — Freddie's tip. The bell boy snapped on the lights in Paco's room, opened doors and snapped on more lights — and to cap the performance laid the bathrobe on the bed and smoothed it out tenderly. He put his soul into an "Anything else, sir?" and waited.

Paco decided not to evade the issue. He said, "I am in the great difficulty. I tell you what happen. I have no money. As soon as I get some, I make to you the tip."

The slamming door thumbed its nose at Paco, and he resolved to settle the problem once and for all. He phoned the hotel haberdashery, and within a few minutes a sleek individual arrived with clothes. Paco ordered in bulk.

But when he told the salesman to charge it, the salesman said, "Must insist on cash. No connection with the hotel." And he stared pointedly at Paco's attire.

"Pay no attention at my style of dressing," Paco said. "I am a concentric millionaire."

It was useless. There followed an impassioned plea to the credit manager of the hotel to cash a check, but the suspicious clerk who had registered Paco had reached the credit manager first. "You see, sir," he was told, "your bank is in Havana, and that's a bit unusual. Of course we'll start investigation right away, and perhaps we'll have an answer in five or six days — "

In desperation, Paco phoned the Pullman Company and told them what had happened. They assured him that they would investigate at once, but added that it would probably be at least twenty-four hours before the recalcitrant clothes and suitcase — with money — could be brought up from Washington.

Paco removed Mr. Breen's suit and once again slipped his bathrobe on over his pajamas. As an added precaution, he also transferred the package from Mr. Breen's coat to the pocket of the bathrobe.

Then he thought of Mr. Breen himself. He looked up the gentleman's address in the phone book and found it without difficulty. And now that he was safely ensconced in a thoroughly private room, there seemed no reason not to tell Mr. Breen what had happened to his suit. Of course, care would

That way you save yourself so much unnecessary, hard work! And washday's so much easier on your hands.

Clothes Keep White Amazingly

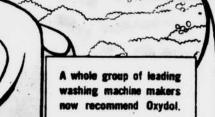

HERE'S another reason you should change to Oxydol—the way it helps keep that snowy, new-white look without bleaching. If your clothes get grayer and older looking, one big reason is your soap allows a gray deposit to accumulate in fabrics.

But Oxydol has an extra ingredient that cuts down that gray deposit without bleaching. Yes, it "pulverizes" that gray deposit—disperses it—floats it out amazingly in the rinse.

So, if you want clothes to come white and stay white, use Oxydol. And while you may want to use bleach for stains or unusual pieces, you will be delighted to see how white the rest of your wash comes without it.

OP

If you don't own a washer Try this easy method Just do this: Soak 10 minutes in Oxydol suds—a few good douses—a few guick rubs—rinse, and you're through! Does; it sound too casy? Try it and see how clean and white the clothes come.

Reg U.S. Pat. Off

was a little past three in the morning when the phone finally rang. Doc didn't have far to reach; he was sitting right there in the hall alongside it. For the first time in twenty-two years he forgot to say "Doctor MacGowan speaking."

Because this call was different; he knew instinctively how it would be. Ina had been out with Peter Logan often before, but she had never been out until three, or anything like it. "Ina?" Doc said.

"Ina?"

"Pop? Oh-oh, Pop

"Take it easy now. What is it, baby?"

"Pop — we're down at that gas station on Herkimer Road. We we had a little accident. Pete swung off the road to keep from hitting a car. They went on, but we - we hit a pole. I took the car and brought it here, back of the station. I couldn't drive any longer with - with Pete unconscious."

"You okay?"

"Yes. But-oh, Pop, get here quick!" "Ten minutes," Doc said.

He hadn't liked this Logan; he hadn't liked him from the beginning. Not that there was anything to put your finger on. He was perhaps ten years older than Ina, say thirtyone.

Logan was quick and graceful and very well built. He wore expensive, quiet clothes. His voice was soft - for all that, Ina seemed to be able to hear it from the top of the house when he came calling - and his speech without affectation or pretense.

In the phone book he was listed as Peter Logan, Inc., General Contracting, Barclay Street. Peter Logan, residence, Metropolis Club. Doc thought sometimes that he saw in his eyes the quiet caution of a man who had lived with danger - but there was nothing to pin on him. Everything about him looked fine. Still that didn't stop Doc's distrust, not when the girl was Ina, his own jealously-guarded, motherless daughter.

In six minutes Doc pulled in at the filling station. The attendant knew him. "Inside,' he said. "Your girl's all right."

"Thanks," Doc said. Then Ina was there, lovely even with that dark bruise on her cheek; he felt her shoulders and she winced. "I guess you're okay," he said. "Take a smell of this; I may need you. Now then."

PETER LOGAN was lying in the back room. He was out cold. Doc stripped back his shirt and stared down at him. Casually he let the shirt slip back. "Listen, Ina," he said. "I've changed my mind; I'll have to look him over myself. You wait out there."

A harsh sound rose in Doc's throat as he saw in her eyes what he had refused to let himself see before

A SHORT STORY COMPLETE ON THIS PAGE

THE LOCKED DOOR

"You're going to get away from Ina - and stay away!" said Dr. MacGowan grimly. "Yes?" said Peter. "And how are you going to make me?"

was going to come to you tomorrow and ask your permission to marry Ina; that's what we were talking about so long tonight. I was going to tell you about myself. And I was going to try to tell you this, because I know what she is to you - that just because she was marrying me, it wouldn't mean she was any less yours. Listen, Doc," Logan said, "we love each other. You think I'd take any chance on breaking Ina's heart - by - by breaking yours?"

Doctor MacGowan looked at him, and he heard his daughter's voice crying "Pete ---Pete!" behind the locked door. I can stop it, he was thinking; I can swear to drunken driving and I can bring his record out of the past. I can do it, all right. But Ina -

"Is it - is it that bad?"

"Don't think so, but I've got to see. You get out."

"But I'm good as a nurse - I've got to -- "

She could not say any more. A harsh, broken sound rose in Doc's throat as he saw in her eyes what he had refused to let himself see before. He remembered a morning far back, when he had slipped and hurt himself on the steps of a cheap South Brooklyn flat, and his young wife had come running down to him. The look in her eyes then was the look in her daughter's eyes now. The man who put it there was not a young doctor; he was called Peter Logan, and Ina loved him.

"Get out!" he said harshly, and pushed her through the door and clicked the lock.

He took off Logan's shirt and undershirt. It was all there, easy for any doctor to read. Peter Logan had a broken collar bone and possible internal injuries. He also had two neat scars up at his shoulder and a jagged one across his stomach that wasn't the result of an appendectomy.

Doc gave him a drink, and Peter Logan coughed and came around.

"Hello, Doc," he said. "Guess I passed out. Ina - Ina all right?"

"Yes. Now listen, you. How'd you get that? And that?"

Logan's eyes met his, steadily.

"I guess you know. Slugs. A shiv did that long one. It didn't heal right."

"You," Doc said, "running around with my daughter. You, out of a mob, running around with my daughter!"

"It wasn't any mob," Peter Logan said. "I was just a road kid who didn't know any better. I got started wrong, and I did three and a bit in Joliet for it. I got out eight years ago; I started clean and I've kept that way. I got a bad break as a kid, Doc, but I wasn't bad myself."

"Listen, you," Doctor MacGowan said very quietly. "When I've fixed you up you're going to get out of here. You're going to get away from Ina and stay away. You won't be seeing her any more after tonight."

"Yes?" Logan said, very quietly too. "How are you going to make me?'

"You don't know how easy it'd be. Drunken driving — maybe you haven't had a drink, but I'm a doctor; they'll believe me, not you. And a police record. Violation of parole, maybe. There's a million ways to get someone like you."

There was a rapping on the door, and Doc heard his daughter's voice. "Pete! Pete Pete — are you all right?"

"Go away, baby," Peter Logan called. "Your Pop is fixing me up."

"You get it?" Doc said.

"Listen," Logan said. "Maybe you're a shark at diagnosis, Doc, but not when you're the patient. I'll tell you something maybe you don't know yourself. You don't want Ina to grow up. When her mother died, I guess you built your whole life into her; well, maybe I don't blame you. But you're trying to keep her all to yourself. She's more like a pet, a baby doll, than the honest, healthy, living kid she really is. Don't you ever want her to grow up, Doc - and live for herself?"

"You don't have to talk," Doctor Mac-Gowan said. "All you have to do is get away from here and stay away, unless you want to go up the river yourself."

You think you can scare me with that stuff? Listen," Peter Logan said, "I'm in love with Ina and Ina's in love with me. I told her everything about me the second time I went out with her: You can jump me all over the lot and try to frame me and wreck the business I've built up - maybe you'll feel proud of yourself, and maybe you won't. I

What had he given her, his beloved? Food and shelter he had given her, and his life, and his whole heart. What else was there to give her? Was there anything else in the world?

YES, and Peter Logan had named it. There was one more thing to give, but it was the hardest of all. He could give her his noninterference. He could keep his hands off.

Maybe what Logan said about himself was true; it sounded true. But it didn't matter. at bottom, true or not, for it would still remain for him to let them make their own mistakes. They were entitled to that, with their youth and courage; all the young are entitled to it. That girl twenty-two years ago in Brooklyn, maybe her people thought she was making a mistake too, when she married.

Doctor MacGowan got up, his thin, lined face working and the sweat shining on his skin. He turned and unlocked the door. Ina came rushing in.

"Oh, Pop, is he all right? Pete, darling, are you all right?"

"He's all right," Doc said. "So far he's all right. Come on, baby, let's get him ready to take home."

"I didn't do it!" the girl sobbed. "I didn't! I found him — like that" opened the cash register, feeling foolish because he hadn't thought of robbery himself. About twenty dollars: then it wasn't robbery — you wouldn't expect to find more in a little pet shop.

He turned back to the two women, fighting down a sickening feeling that they knew this was his first homicide. He cleared his throat: "Now," he said, "it'll be a lot easier for you two if you tell me everything before the homicide squad comes — those guys are tough."

"I'll tell you this," the big woman said. "if I miss that train, you'll be transferred to Staten Island!"

Officer Regan blinked — you wouldn't think a lady like that would know about punishment posts. But he pulled out his book. "Name, please."

"Mrs. Cordelia Johnson, 34 East Grand Street, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., and you'll be sorry for this."

"Sorry don't count, lady — this is murder. You were comin' out of here when you ran into me, weren't you?"

"Why, I wasn't — " Mrs. Johnson glanced quickly at the blond girl — "I wasn't here very long. I came to leave the bird to board, and there wasn't anybody in the store, so I stood around awhile. But I couldn't wait all day. I was just leaving when that girl came in."

The girl was staring intently at the floor. "See anybody besides her?" Officer Regan asked.

"Well, there was that man. But I thought to myself — "

"Lady," Regan's voice was pained. "Lady, what man?"

"The man with the scar on his face. Didn't I tell you? Well, anyway, he just came in and went into the back room there, and I thought to myself — "

"Lady, for Pete's sake stop thinking and tell me what happened. What'd he look like? What did he do?"

WELL, he was sort of tallish and kind of thin and dark, and he had a scar on his cheek — which cheek was it? The left, I guess. No, I was standing here, it must have been the right one. I told him I wanted to leave the bird. I thought he owned the place. But he said. 'Wait a minute,' and went in the back and didn't come out. So I got disgusted. I thought they don't want customers!' Then she came in, and then I left.''

"Didn't you hear anything?"

"I did hear a sort of — bump — like he dropped something. But I didn't pay any attention — it isn't my bird store! I've told you all I know and now I'm going!" She waved the cage indignantly.

"Don't take it out on the bird, lady. You can't go yet."

Officer Regan turned to the girl: "What's your name?"

"My name is Mary Jones and I live at 15 West Seventh Street."

"Right in the middle of Washington Square! Tut-tut, sister, try again."

"I didn't kill that man!" She clutched Officer Regan's arm. "Believe me!"

"What I believe don't count, sister. But you were found in there by the body, so you Officer Regan stopped and unbuttoned his coat, stood there scratching his back and drinking in the dank air as a toad absorbs moisture from a puddle. Might as well cool off a minute — here he'd been six months on the Force, six months of helping old ladies across the street and chasing small boys, and never a sign of promotion — no crime, no excitement, nothing; might as well be a soda jerker. He sighed, buttoned his coat, stepped briskly into the street — and bumped smack into a large, florid woman.

"Lady, what's the hurry?" Officer Regan's voice was plaintive, but the dignity of the Force was in the look he gave her.

"I'm trying to catch a train, that's what!" She detoured around him, a big woman in a light print dress, with golden hair hanging bell-like under a little flowered hat. She carried a chintz-covered bird cage, and a black purse swung from her wrist, thudding against the cage at every step.

Officer Regan opened his mouth, but it sagged wordlessly as a scream, high, agonizing, cut through the murky heat. For a split second he gawked, then in one leap had the big woman by the arm. "Lady." he said, "that came from the pet shop."

"What of it? Let go of me!" She was so angry that for a second Officer Regan's grip relaxed, but he was Irish and stubborn. "Something's wrong in the pet shop, and you got a bird. We'll both go see."

"This is ridiculous!" she said. "I've got to catch a train." But she went with him.

The pet shop was quiet, drowsy; fish glimmered in cool green water; birds twittered. A rustling sound came from the rear of the shop.

"Who's there?" Officer Regan called.

The curtains that separated the front of the shop from the workroom parted and a girl stood there, her eyes dark with terror. She wavered for a moment, then flung herself, sobbing, onto Officer Regan's chest.

Officer Regan kicked the door shut behind him and learned against it while he disentangled himself. "What's wrong here?" he asked in a loud voice. The girl didn't answer, just continued to sob.

Officer Regan bolted the door against the gathering crowd. "We'll see what's wrong. Come on, ladies, and don't touch nothing."

He pushed the curtain aside and stepped into the workroom. It was cluttered with wrapping paper, seed bins, and uncleaned bird cages. A window and a door in the back wall stood open, letting in a hot breeze and providing a view of a drab, stone-paved yard. Under a kitchen table stacked with squat metal cans a man lay, curiously crumpled, in a dark puddle that oozed across the floor. The handle of a kitchen knife protruded from between his shoulders.

"It's Louis," Regan said slowly. "Dead." "I didn't do it!" the girl sobbed. "I didn't! I found him — like that."

"This is an outrage!" the big woman said. "An outrage — making me miss my train!"

REGAN gave them both a despairing glance, then closed the back door and window. "Can't be every place," he muttered. He herded the women into the front again. Then he telephoned Headquarters, reported an assault and called for an ambulance. After that he called the precinct station: "Thomas Regan, Post 19... Assault ... Louis Garbelach — G-a-r. — I don't know how you spell it. Runs a bird and fish store; naw, a pet shop

... Stabbed with a kitchen knife, and dead as Dillinger ... Got two women ... Not yet, I will ... " Officer Regan hung up and

"Yes," she said slowly, "I see. My name is Jane Kelly, and I live at 232 West 17th Street. I did not kill Louis Garbelach. When that woman left, I went back there to look for him. He was — like you found him."

Officer Regan stared at her. "Say — you must have known Louis!"

"No, I — Yes, I knew him. There now!" She stood straight, defiant. "He deserved to be killed."

"What did Louis do to you?" Officer Regan asked, more gently than he knew.

"It's my kid brother — he — Joe's a good kid, but that man got him in trouble." She faltered and wrung her hands.

"What did Louis do to your brother?"

"He — No, I've made enough trouble for one day." She set her lips stubbornly.

"We'll find out about Joe. Why did you come here today?"

"Joe wants to get away from them, but he's afraid to quit. I came here to tell Louis Garbelach to let Joe go or I — would — kill him."

"What were you going to kill him with — a knife?"

"No! No!" She shrank back, groping with her hands, her teeth chattering.

Officer Regan said, "Hold it, sister!" as an ambulance clanged to a stop. He admitted have to be taken that Mr. Breen did not learn the whereabouts of the suit's present possessor. Paco gave the number and heard something which might have resembled a "Yeah?"

He said, "Permit, please, that I speak with Mr. Joe Breen."

"This is Joe talking."

Paco shivered. "Mr. Breen, you have arrived this morning from a train, no?"

"Yeah. Say, who is this?"

"Well, I tell you what happen. I am the man who ask that you lend him your extra suit — " He got no further. Mr. Breen began to swear. For three and a quarter minutes he continued to swear, ending in a crescendo of strictly derogatory comments concerning Paco's feminine antecedents.

"Thank you," said the dazed Paco. "But you no understand. I do not steal your suit. I only make the borrow — " He explained that the suit would reach its owner by mail some time the following day. "No harm have been do," he finished. "Remember, all's well that ends."

A pause. Then: "Where are you now?"

"I no can tell you. I think if you know where I am, you make to me the extermination."

Paco hung up, but Mr. Breen held the connection. And finally the operator at the hotel came in on his line and said, "Did you get your party?"

"I think so," Breen said carefully. "What hotel is this?"

"The Tremaine," the operator said. Mr. Breen exulted. He said, "Let me speak to the fellow I was just talking to."

"That was Mr. Fernandez, wasn't it?"

The name seemed to fit the accent. "Yeah, that's right, Mr. Fernandez."

A moment later Paco's voice came over the wire. "Hello, I listen."

Confirmation was complete. Mr. Breen notified Paco that he was going to come down and knock him into the middle of the Hudson River, then have him arrested.

"Thank you," Paco said miserably, and hung up. Then suddenly, to increase his misery, he remembered why he had taken this trip.

"Lynn bring me to Washington so her father see I am dependable," he wailed. "And what I do? I achieve New York without pants. Is awful."

He sat on the bed and stared at the door. "Foments itself an eight ball," he groaned.

MEANWHILE, some two hundred and twenty-six miles farther south, Lynn Foster finally grew tired of waiting and sought the sleeper from Miami. She reached it in time to hear the wide-eyed porter reporting to an official of the railroad the disappearance of the gentleman in lower four. She said, "Was he a Cuban? Can you describe him?"

"I can do mo' than that. I can show you his clothes." Lynn was startled. She followed the porter, and identified Paco's belongings. Then she headed for a telephone and poured out the story to her father in New York.

"I know it's absurd," she said,

The detective surveyed the fuming Mr. Breen and asked, "Who is this guy?"

"In all my life I no see his face."

MR. BREEN poured forth his story. He demanded the return of his suit and the immediate arrest of Paco. He said, "If you're the house dick, go on and search the room. My suit's bound to be here somewhere."

"Sorry, brother, I can't do that." The detective looked pointedly at Paco. "Unless I get permission."

"Proceed," Paco said magnificently. The detective's search was swift and efficient. He looked in the closet, in the bathroom hamper, in all the drawers, even under the mattress. And finally he spread his hands helplessly.

"In my life I no place even one eye on your suit."

Mr. Breen charged. Paco sidestepped and headed for the door. As he fled down the hall he shouted to the bewildered detective. "Mr. Breen's suit, she is behind the radiator!"

Spurning the elevator, Paco raced down the steps and made it to the ground floor in nothing flat. The lobby saw a comet with flaming red legs, and a blue tail streaking through space.

He reached the revolving door just as an elderly gentleman was stepping out of it. The resulting crash was cataclysmic.

"Caramba!" Paco swore feelingly. Something clicked in Grant Foster's brain. The Spanish, the resemblance to a picture on Lynn's dressing table"Are you Paco Fernandez?" he demanded.

"Yes, sir. Goodby."

"Wait a minute. I'm Lynn's father."

Paco beamed. "I am delightful. But I must go away from here." Acting on instinct, he dragged the older man to his feet and propelled him through the door, into a taxi.

"Commence!" he yelled at the driver.

The cab shot away from the curb. Six blocks later Paco took a deep breath and said, "Now I can make the relax."

Grant Foster was staring at the bathrobe and pajamas. "Am I dreaming," he said finally, "or haven't you got any clothes on?"

"I tell you what happen," Paco said. He talked fast and he told the truth. Grant Foster listened in amazement, and when Paco finished he said, "Well, anyway, Breen has his suit now, and that's that. You can come up to my place if you want, my boy, (Continued on page 15)

Grant Foster spoke gently. "All right, Lynn, don't get upset. Have you any idea where he might be?"

"Just a guess. He used to talk a lot about the Hotel Tremaine. Said all his friends stayed there when they were in New York."

"I'll check right away."

Mr. Foster rang the Tremaine and asked whether a Paco Fernandez was registered there. The operator said yes, but then reported that the room didn't answer. "Any message?"

"No, thanks," Foster grumbled. "I'll drop around myself."

"Nice, reliable sort of guy," he added.

Paco stared with horror at the ringing telephone. One lesson had been enough. Mr. Fernandez was determined to hold himself definitely incommunicado until he could escape from the present predicament. He thought of leaving the hotel before Joe Breen arrived, but a glance into the hallway outside caused him to draw back with a shudder. A muscular individual slouched against the wall opposite Paco's room, and Paco knew enough about American hotels to realize that it was a house detective.

A FLAW IN YOUR LOOKS?

If it's listed here, you can conquer it by Sylvia Blythe

ALMOST any woman, given a choice, would rather have a major beauty idiosyncrasy, that she can make capital of, than to have some little defect, which is too unsubstantial for drama. Yet, none of us has a choice in the matter. To judge by reader-mail, Nature is more apt to temper good looks with some tiny defect or other, which has slight importance, except for nuisance value.

But these little flaws nettle the vanity and, sometimes, spoil loveliness, so I have culled from readermail a list of typical annoyances. For these I have asked experts in various fields to suggest solutions. Unless you are a darling of Destiny, and have no flaws in your beauty, you will doubtless spot one or more of these little problems as your very own.

If, for instance, your eyebrows are the wilful kind - handsome enough but curly in all directions - you have a small, but annoying, problem that irks many women. This need not be, says the movie make-up man to whom I turned. You can tweeze and brush errant brows into conforming lines, he says, but for brushing you may need stouter bristles than you ordinarily use. For better discipline, use a toothbrush, set aside for that purpose. Once you have brushed your brows into submission, use a fixative to hold them down. In those you have a choice of two somewhat unexpected aids. One is mustache wax, such as men use - it comes in a number of hair shades. This stuff, squeezed out of a tube and stroked on your brows with an orange stick, waxes brows into compass-drawn outlines and keeps them anchored until you wash t off. Another is hair-grooming lac-their faces detract from their feminine charm. If you are one of this number, you can bleach these shadowy spots and make hair look no more obtrusive than any other downy fuzz that dresses the complexion. For your bleach you can use ready-made commercial preparations or a simple mixture of full-strength peroxide to which a few drops of ammonia are added to hasten the color-stripping action. Either type of preparation bleaches hair in one or two applications, depending upon how long you leave it on. Leaving it on for only a few minutes at a time and repeating the application the next day is the best procedure if you have a sensitive skin. After you remove the bleach, wash with soap and water. This treatment has to be reapplied every week or ten days, since the results are only temporary.

If you want permanent relief, our dermatologist again suggests the electrolysis needle, which removes offending color by eradicating hair.

In the line of unwanted hair, there are those first few irksome grays that pop up in youthfully bright hair, like the bad fairy at the feast. If this is your problem, you can stroke color on these whitening strands with a hair-darkening pencil. This trick comes from a well-known hairdresser. He suggests singling out one hair at a time and stroking it from roots to ends. Pencils for this purpose come in all hair colors, and your camouflage lasts until you brush off the coating.

If Lips Are Flaky

Still another problem, high on the nuisance list, are flaky lips. If this is one of your vexations, there are two remedies suggested by our dermatologist. One is to have your doctor track down and correct your vitamin deficiency. The other is an external treatment in two parts. Part one prescribes the nightly application of a castor-oil cold cream, of which at least twentyfive per cent is pure castor oil, a lubricant by which almost all doctors swear. Part two prescribes a colorless antiseptic lipstick base or pomade to be worn under the red coat that brightens your mouth. In the same category with flaky lips are legs with scaly or roughened skin. If this is the cross you bear, you know that it is hard on both the eyes and the stockings. To correct it, have your doctor prescribe needed vitamins for your diet. To reduce the annoyance, use one of the emollients richly freighted with easily absorbed oils. Rub the cream all over your legs, and leave it on for as long as you can after each application. While we are on the subject of legs. let's take a look at the problem of blue-veined discolorations that spread out like lines on a terrestrial globe to disfigure lovely flesh. Here also remedy lies in two directions. One way is camouflage. That can be a non-transparent cream or liquid blemish-cover. filmed over the discoloration and faded out beyond its edges, just as you apply a foundation when you want to mask under-eye shadows or small flaws in your face. Such a camouflage hides your secret when you go barelegged or when you wear sheer silken hose. The other way of coping with this problem is medical correction.

No matter how tired I am at bedtime, I work Woodbury Cold Cream gently into my skin to dislodge every trace of make-up. Then I wipe my face clean quer, a little less adherent than mustache wax but effective on most brows. This can be stroked on with a brush and should be left undisturbed until it dries.

Ask Medical Advice

Next in the line of irksome offenders are hair tufts that sprout from moles on the face or neck. About these, your question naturally is: "Can this hair be removed safely?"

This is the question I, in turn, put to a dermatologist: "Yes, provided you seek medical counsel first to determine how innocuous the mole is and what methods of removing hair seem the most advisable."

If a mole is of the innocuous type and usually hair-growing moles are, says this doctor — your medical adviser may offer you a choice of two solutions. One is permanent removal of the hair with an electric needle, or temporary removal by shearing the hair close to the skin's surface with a pair of scissors. The other possible choice is removal of the mole itself, your doctor using the same diathermy treatment as for needling hair at its roots.

Another nuisance is dark hair on the upper lip and sometimes along the sides of the cheeks. Many women fret because these darkish areas on the driver and the intern, stood waving the crowd away, thinking: The kid certainly wasn't doing herself any good - pretty little trick, too . . . Something wasn't jake - a smart guy would know in a minute what it was; Officer Regan didn't.

The intern and the driver came out. -"Stabbed three times. Been dead about twenty minutes," the intern said. They left, and Officer Regan called Headquarters, reported that the assault was now officially homicide. He called the precinct station and reported the case D.O.A. - dead on arrival.

"Someone wants to come in," Jane Kelly said.

A skinny, undersized boy was fidgeting at the door. Officer Regan opened it, "What do you want?"

"I work here. Mister, what goes on?" The boy had a scared-rabbit look.

Officer Regan yanked him in and locked the door. "What's your name?" "Pee-wee - uh, excuse me, Mister George Green. I ain't done nothing, Mister."

"How long have you worked here? What do you do?"

"Two months I worked here. I sweep up and deliver tropical fish. Mister, I ain't done nothing."

Officer Regan studied the twitching face and the writhing fingers. "What did you do the last time, Pee-wee?"

"I never done it, they framed me! I never took that money. I got six months but I never done it. Now Louis says I'm stealing from him and I ain't. I'll show him!"

"You sure you didn't already show him?" Officer Regan asked slowly. "No, no, no!" Pee-wee wailed.

REGAN didn't know what to do next; the boy certainly was scared if he was innocent - too scared. Not knowing what to do, Regan drummed on the showcase and said nothing. Pee-wee squirmed like a bisected worm.

The detectives from the Homicide Squad arrived, busy and important. Officer Regan was awed to see Brown and Treat there. Detective Treat was the shining light of the Homicide Squad. Tall, dapper, immaculate in cool light gray, he looked anything but a flatfoot. It was said that Treat was a story-book detective, that his position on the Force was a concession to popular fiction. But Treat nearly always got his man, and, to Officer Regan, he was the personification of Sherlock Holmes and Hercule Poirot.

"Your report, officer." Treat stood quietly in the center of the shop while Regan, fidgeting, recounted the events of the past hour.

Jane Kelly, defiantly erect, stared out the window. Mrs. Johnson clung to her bird cage and gazed at Treat with an appealing smile that somehow froze there. Pee-wee's face turned green and strangely old.

Detective Brown unpacked his camera and disappeared into the back room. Treat stared cruelly at Pee-wee until he trembled - knees buckling, brother of yours do for a living?" he asked at last.

"He works on a boat. He — " She stopped, bit her lip. Treat swung on Mrs. Johnson.

"Let's see the canary." "You'll be sorry for this, all of you!"

she snapped, but she raised the cover; the canary fluttered and chirped.

"Say, he's cute!" Regan beamed.

TREAT gave him a withering glance. and turned back to Mrs. Johnson. "Whom did you see in addition to the man with the scar on his face and this girl?"

"Nobody. And I don't mind telling you that I'm not accustomed to being mixed up in things like this. I've got to catch a train."

Treat whirled on Pee-wee. "What was Garbelach's racket?"

"He sells - sold - birds and fish, Mister. That's all I know."

"Who was the man with the scar on his face?"

Pee-wee shuffled his feet and glanced at the women. "I - I dunno."

"But you are acquainted with the ladies?" Treat said softly.

Pee-wee hung his head. "I seen the young one once - Her and a young fella come here, he sells tropical fish to Louis - catches them like Treat swung on Jane Kelly. She was crying and didn't look up. He shrugged and turned to Officer Regan. "You should know it if this - Louis was engaged in a racket."

"He seemed okay to me, sir. I didn't suspicion a thing until he got killed."

Treat sighed and stepped into the back room. He returned in a moment. "Did you find the rear door and window locked, officer?"

"Oh, no, sir. They were wide open. But I couldn't be two places at once with two women on my hands-I locked them."

"Thereby replacing, no doubt, all previous fingerprints with your own." "I wrapped my handkerchief around my hand.'

Treat's sarcastic smile broadened. "So you wiped the prints off altogether? Ho, hum - you didn't see the man with the scar on his face?"

"No, sir. But if he climbed the fence, some of the women in the block must have seen him - they're always hanging out the windows, gabbin'. He didn't go through the alley."

"He might have carried the magic fern seed of invisibility." Treat sighed. "I hope that the rest of your report

To hide his embarrassment, he turned away and took the lid off a squat, paper-wrapped can. He said, "Phew!" Then he saw something move in the water. He poked his finger in, rippling the surface. There was a flash and a splash, and Officer Regan yelped. He held up a bleeding finger. "I didn't know a goldfish could do that!" he said in an injured voice.

Treat said, "You haven't been transferred to the S.P.C.A. yet, officer."

Officer Regan flushed bitterly. "Listen, Mr. Treat, you see this shelf? Well, it's pretty dirty, all covered with seeds the birds have scattered. But here's a clean spot on the shelf where a cage has been standing. I think her cage fits it."

Treat clucked deprecatingly. "I imagine some thousands of cages would fit that space - a coincidence, no doubt."

"Maybe it's a coincidence," Officer Regan's voice was desperate. "But see here, her bird cage is dirtywould a lady take a bird out to board in a dirty cage? And hers is as dirty as those on the shelf, and no dirtier." He took the cage from Mrs. Johnson, unwrapped it and set it on the shelf. "See, it fits!"

Treat nodded.

"I suspicioned all along it wasn't her bird, the way she banged it around." Officer Regan cleared his throat. "And, Mr. Treat, that pocketbook of hers weighs a ton. Ask her what's in it!"

"You've got no warrant!" the woman screamed. "Don't touch me!"

But Treat and Regan closed in on her, wrenched the bag away and shook out a pile of shimmering green stones.

"He cheated me!" she sniveled. "I never got my cut! He had it coming to him, the dirty rat!" Then, pawing at Treat, groveling, "I didn't kill him, though. Honest! It was the man with the scar, he went out back - "

"Listen," Officer Regan said, "nobody went out back. I know."

She looked at him and knew that he knew.

Treat glanced curiously at Officer Regan. "How can you be so sure?"

'Because - I was in the alley." "And what were you doing in the alley?" Treat asked softly. Officer Regan gazed pleadingly at Treat, but he had to answer. "I - I was scratching my back," he said. Pee-wee giggled.

Treat's eyebrows rose into amused crescents. He said, "Really!" in a voice that managed to be at once shocked and delighted.

Officer Regan studied the toes of his broad shoes, then he looked up. "Listen, Mr. Treat, if I hadn't stopped to scratch my back I wouldn't a bumped into the lady, and if I hadn't bumped into her I wouldn't a saw how she treats the bird, and I - you we - wouldn't know right now who done it."

"The luck of the Irish," Treat said. Officer Regan said, "Yes, sir." But deep inside him a determination was born that neither luck nor ridicule nor the monotony of walking a beat would ever down - some day he'd be Detective Thomas Regan of the Homicide Squad.

using a dollar's worth of stamps, to buy not only a dollar's worth of groceries in any store they choose, but to get as a bonus fifty cents' worth of whatever foods are in the surplus category at the time. The government pays the fifty cents out of the fund that Congress has appropriated to buy up surplus crops; but business, all along the line, benefits by it instead of being disrupted. That is the sort of simple cutting-through of a problem that is typical of Milo Perkins.

When Perkins was working out the administration of the plan, he put in such long hours, living mostly on coffee brought into his office every hour or so, that he finally landed in a hospital, and had to stay there a month to relax. When he left, the doctors warned him to take it easier, but today Perkins is practically back on the old schedule and his associates argue in vain that he ought to take an hour off once in a while. "Instead, he takes the job home with him even when he quits the office," one of them told me.

When Beans Are Important

But it is a job that even a much less passionate worker than Perkins would find hard to shake off. Not that the mere act of buying, say, 50,000,000 pounds of dried beans is so much more exciting than buying enough to fill one beanpot. But when Perkins buys beans it is with a lot of far-reaching questions popping in his head: What will this do to the price of beans? How much will the British want? How much should we carry in reserve? How much can be used in school lunches? Will this stimulate new plantings of beans? What will that mean in terms of beans available a year from now? And so on and on.

I asked Mr. Perkins how he could be sure he would not run into acute shortages if the crisis got worse.

"Tremendous changes have taken place in the last twenty-five years," he said. "Changes in production, in of which we had last time — we can increase plantings of any crop almost the minute we decide it should be done. We did it with beans — stepped up acreage within a week from the time we saw the need of it.

"We can get word out to the food industry much more quickly, too. During the last war we had hundreds of thousands of isolated corner groceries. Today we have big chains, co-operative groups and organized in-

"I am not so sure," he told me, "that what has happened in these last twenty-five years isn't even more important than the war itself. Up until a few years ago, if you took everything that you could produce at a maximum and divided it up, you still came out with one answer: a punk living standard. Today, for the first time in the world's history, if we produced at a maximum capacity and divided the production among all the people, we would come out with a very good living standard. For the first time there is enough to go around. "You can't tell me that we are going to be so crazy, so stupid, that we won't use it to build a civilization in which people won't go hungry!"

Not if Milo Perkins has anything to say about it.

merchandising, in processing of foods. Last time the whole problem was to produce enough to go around, and because there wasn't enough to go around we had to take a stab at rationing it. Today, for the most part, we have abundance — not only in terms of stocks on hand but also in terms of our capacity to produce. We have learned how to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before.

Yields of corn, for instance, are more than twenty per cent higher per acre than they were only ten years ago and it is the same story in almost every phase of agricultural production. Last time we plowed up the Great Plains to grow wheat; but this time we actually have an overabundance — a year's full supply on hand. And in eighty per cent of our crops, it is much the same. All we have to do is to get increases in the few crops that might run low: dairy products, eggs, pork, tomatoes, beans.

"And we can do that this time — we are doing it, much more speedily than we could last time. The farm-aid program of recent years, whatever else might be said of it, has given us an organization that can reach the farmer practically overnight. With that organization and with radio — neither

THE "Trapp Family Singers," who in the last three years have made successful concert tours in their own bus all over the United States and into parts of Canada, are Austrian refugees from music-loving Salzburg, their native city, and the beautiful Tyrol, seat of their ancestral castle. Want others to like you?

Whether we're sixteen or sixty, we don't want to lose out on life's pleasures because of halitosis (bad breath) . . . not when, for most of us, there is such a pleasant, refreshing way to keep breath sweeter, purer-the Listerine Antiseptic way!

For, while some cases of bad breath are caused by systemic conditions, usually, say some authorities, it is due to the fermentation of tiny food particles on mouth, teeth and gums. Wearers of dentures and plates are particularly susceptible because food is apt to cling to them and ferment. Listerine Antiseptic balts such fermentation and overcomes the odors it causes. That's why, when you rinse your mouth morning and night with full strength Listerine, your breath is fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend.

right; but except for their lovely manners and obvious good breeding, they =are unlike our idea of nobility.

In the first place, the Von Trapps wear the costume of their native Tyrol, colorful for ordinary occasions, black and white for best times. The girls --- all of them beautiful -- are not only gifted, but also very practical young people. They take entire care of the big house in Merion. Pennsylvania, where the family lives when not on tour. Here they do the housework, the laundry, the mending, the cooking; and, until recently, they even knitted the family's stockings. In addition, they, as well as their brothers, are expert seamen, having been taught by their father, who was formerly a distinguished officer in the Austrian navy.

Seamanship is of little practical value to the Von Trapps just now; but skill in the household arts is very important, indeed. And the fact that the girls were trained in this way is one of the things the Baroness calls "Providential." "It used to be customary for all Austrian girls to be brought up like this, but people gave up the custom more and more. We thought that was too bad," the Baroness says. "So as the girls finished school, they learned to do everything."

The beginning of the Trapp Family's public musical career seems even more "Providential." But let the Baroness tell it in her own way: "We always sang, but we never wanted even one listener and were famous for not singing even for our friends," she says. "We sang old church music in the private chapel of our castle and we sang folk songs. We walked in the mountains and picked up new, unpublished songs. Once when we were singing out-of-doors, Lotte Lehmann heard us, though we did not know she was there. After that she insisted on our entering a competition at the Salzburg festival. My husband was very hard to persuade, for he thought it was a terrible thing to sing on a stage. However, we did it and won the first prize. Then we sang on a Christmas program over the air, and Chancellor Schuschnigg heard us and asked us to sing at an important party he was giving. After that came a concert in Vienna, followed by an engagement for the next Salzburg Festival; and the day after that Festival, we had signed contracts for concerts in France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

"But the decision to sing in public was really a difficult one for us," the Baroness emphasizes. "Every now and then in life you come to a corner and don't know which direction to walk - either way looks good. But we have always tried to build our lives according to Christ and the Gospel, and to ask: 'What would Christ like me to do?' I've even heard our three- and four-year-olds-when they couldn't make up their minds what to entertain themselves with - say to each other: 'I wonder what He'd like me to play now?' "If it hadn't been for this," the Baroness adds reflectively, "we shouldn't have been here now. For the Nazis wanted to give my husband a fine command again and offered our eldest boy, just graduated from medical school, a post as first assistant in one of Vienna's finest hospitals. But neither of them hesitated for a moment. We wanted to continue a Christian way of life, not possible under the Nazis.

"Providentially for us," she finishes, "we had a contract for concerts in the United States. We knew we had to leave quickly. So we came over here. We had not then thought of being citizens of any country but Austria. Now, however, we are attached to this country and are taking out our papers. We are happy, too, that our youngest child was born after we got here, and so is a native citizen of the United States. We have had many happy experiences - none happier than at West Point, where our concert was a great success and where friendships sprang up between our daughters and the young cadets. What an exchange of letters there's been since then!" the Baroness says laughingly. "But now let me give you the recipes we are so fond of and which our daughters all know how to cook so really excellently."

Back On the Job

Culp was sixty-five, with a hurt look.

An' I want to tell you he was hurt. "Old Lafe" the boys was callin' him ten years ago in the machine shop down by the paint factory where he worked.

But all of a sudden Lafe was out of a job. He spent six months findin' another one, in a screwmachine works, where nearly everything was automatic an' not up to his skill; but anyway, it was a job. Only he lost it, after two or three weeks, to a younger man.

"Poor Old Lafe" they began to call him then. He walked the streets an' found a couple days' work here an' there. But mostly he got told he was too old, or to go get on relief.

We didn't see much of Lafe for quite a spell. I guess he didn't have a nickel for coffee.

Two years ago Missus Culp died, an' my missus and me went to the funeral. 1 never saw a worse-whipped guy. I took it as plain grief, but it was more it was the torture a good honest workin' man feels when somethin' he can't get at stops him from earnin' his own keep an' protectin' his family.

Well, I just saw Mister Lafayette Disraeli Culp today. He's got a job, an' it's a good one. Seems his kind of mechanical ability is just what the country is short of now. Lafe don't look hurt no more. He has got fire in his eye an' spring in his old flat arches an' he gives you a grin that is as cheerful as a toothpaste ad.

Now, if I was ever called on to defend Hitler I reckon about the only good thing I could find to say about him would be that anyway he scared the U. S. into findin' a use for the talents of Lafayette Disraeli Culp.

Paco smiled. "I just happen to remember that Lynn tell me you no like publicity. I protect you from the newspaper mens."

Once more the older man regarded Paco with approval. "That's using your head, boy. Maybe I was all wrong about you. Maybe you've got what it takes. Incidentally, I understand you're slated for a reward. How does that strike you?"

"Wonderful," Paco said vehemently. "But that which I want most is a flock of pants."

SEVERAL hours later, resting in Grant Foster's hotel suite, Paco wrote a letter to Lynn. He told her what had happened and apologized profusely. He assured her that he would be in Washington within a day.

He ended:

"Your father is now convinced that I am reliable and dignified. And he will like me better when I put some clothes on.

"Do you ever come to New York? The life here is very interesting. "Hogs and kisses —

LENIN

Russian revolutionaries of 1917 launched a "workers' state," proclaimed to produce a happy, classless, proletarian Utopia that would extend its benefits to workers of all the world. Subjects of this greatest of social experiments were 175 million people, speaking 150 different languages, following 40 different faiths and inhabiting one-sixth the earth's land surface. Behind it all was the old revolutionary, Nikolai Lenin. Excepting homes, personal property, the new state took title to about everything else. Time-worn conceptions of family, marriage, divorce and religion were brushed aside. Lenin died in 1924. Iron-handed Josef Stalin shoved aside Leon Trotsky as head man. And in 24 years Soviet Russia weathered two famines, hos-tilities on several borders, blood purges and "elimination" of whole social classes. But a tight-lipped, isolationist policy prevented close study by outsiders. Now a mighty conflict puts the experiment to the test. -A. P. Feature Service.

The Supreme Soviet has 1,-200 members. In theory, it appoints executive chiefs, makes national laws. But Stalin has charted the legislative course. Trade unions in industry, and co-operatives on farms exert a political influence. The state is the employer in industry; owns nearly all farms.

The Red Army (above in Moscow's Red Square) may decide Red Russia's fate. Supposedly modern, but shaken by purges, morale unknown; its manpower is rated at 20 millions. Industrialization trademarked the revolution, but has not approached U. S. standards of efficiency. Great rivers were harnessed to provide cheap power; waterways were dug; 55,000 miles of rail laid; great factories built.

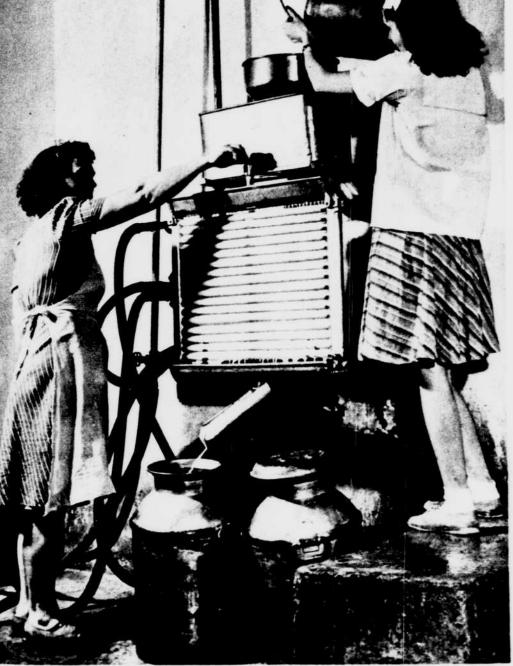

Only one in 80 Russians belongs to the Communist party, Russia's inner power. Propaganda and pictures like this seek to make Communism more attractive to the world and a deathless Russian ideal. The controlled press and radio help the Russians experiment and survive purges, famine, and organizational failures.

Crimes of state have a broad meaning in the socialist state. Secret police (OGPU) check words, acts, efficency of all groups. Thousands have gone to prison or faced firing squads. Above, Moscow court condemning five conspirators.

UP near Boyds, Montgomery County, Md., a mother and her five daughters do all the work connected with the operation of a dairy farm owned by George F. Pollock and J. E. Pollock, brothers. Twice daily—at 4 a.m. and 4 p.m.—the milkmaid sextette goes through the gruelling routine of cleaning the barn, milking cows, cooling and shipping milk and a hundred other chores. The father, Welby Tavenner, works in the grain fields and leaves the dairy's operation entirely to his wife and five daughters. On this page are shown some of the tasks they perform.

(See story in today's news section.)

Elvie and Marie open gates to ramp leading to dairy barn so cows can file in for the 4 o'clock milking. Cattle go to their own individual stalls inside without guidance.

Elvie, with milking machine, attaches suction cups to the cow's udders, which she has previously disinfected. The machine is attached with a hose to a suction pipe running the length of the barn above cow stalls. All pitch in to keep barn and cattle clean at milking time. In the photo, left to right, are Betty, using fly spray; Bonnie, sweeping the floor, and Dorothy, washing cows.

THE day of the rubber banddriven model plane has gone. Here and there some youngster may build himself a plane and use rubber for power, but he would like to get an honest-to-goodness motor. Plants are now turning out miniature motors on a mass production scale. They are filling orders from boy builders (and grownups, too) who are experimenting with, and racing model planes. Aeronautical circles look with favor on the boy builders, for from them is expected the air experts of the near future.

Gliders Get Army Attention Since Crete

Assembling the first glider for the Army Air Corps at Elmira. At this stage the wings, one of them seen on the ground, are about to be attached to the body of the glider.

The great natural saucer at Elmira, N. Y., is the gliding center of America. From the rimming hills there's a 750-foot dip to the valley floor, a perfect setup for the soaring sport which has thrills all its own as the glider pilot masters the mystery of air currents and how to ride them. That big two-place glider in the air is coming in from the take-off hill.

A glider takes off at the end of a tow-rope attached to a motor-driven winch. When it has attained sufficient altitude the rope is cut loose, drifting to earth by the little parachute which prevents it from knotting.

Dick Johnson of Los Altos, Calif., is only 18 years old but he's already one of the country's top gliders. He won third place in the 1940 competition at Elmira.

YOUR CAR, TOO, IS GOOD SECURITY FOR A BANK LOAN

Just as approved stocks and bonds are acceptable collateral for a loan at any bank, so, too, is your automobile acceptable as security at the Morris Plan Bank.

Whenever you require a loan, we are just as glad to have you use the title to your automobile as security, as we are to have you use stocks, bonds or an endorser. Of course, the car remains in your possession, and title in your name.

All that you do is . . . drive your car to the Capital Garage, 1320 New York Avenue, N.W., and leave it with the attendant, informing him that you wish it inspected for the Morris Plan Bank. By the time you reach the Bank, we will have an inspection report all ready, at no cost to you for parking or inspection. It is not necessary that your automobile be fully paid for to use it as security, only that . .

- 1. It be titled in your name.
- 2. You have a reasonable equity in it.
- 3. Its model be not more than five years old.

It makes no difference whether your car is registered in the District of Columbia, Maryland or Virginia . . . just bring your title certificate with you when you come to the Bank. If your title certificate is not in your possession, but is held by a finance company or others, we can obtain it for you.
