Priority System to Halt Use of Metal In Civilian Industry

BACKGROUND-

Rapidly increasing demands for steel in defense production have belied estimates at beginning of defense program expan-sion that steel-producing facilities were adequate to meet all needs for consumer indutsries as well as armaments. Rigid Government priority control is designed to assure defense program against delays through failure to obtain steel in amounts and at time needed.

By the Associated Press.

The Office of Production Management yesterday placed steel in all forms under full Government priority control.

E. R. Stettinius, jr., defense prourities director, issued the order, which covers alloy steel, because of "a growing shortage in certain types of steel products."

The order is designed to place all the country's big fighting ships are defense needs for iron and steel products ahead of civilian needs.

It stipulates that defense orders must be accepted by steel companies, subject to certain exceptions, even if the acceptance means the deferment of non-defense orders already on the companies' books

The preference given defense orders extends to contracts for the Army or Navy, for certain other Government agencies and for Great Britain or "any other lend-lease country

Must Explain Purpose.

Beginning September 1, purchase orders for steel will have to be accompanied by a special form setting forth the purposes for which the material will be used.

Modified Sales Tax Aimed at Luxuries

> Opposition to Broader Base Developes in Senate Committee

By the Associated Press.

Opposition developed in the Senate Finance Committee yesterday against further broadening of the income tax base, and, as an alternative Senator Brown, Democrat, of Michigan, suggested a modified form of sales tax applied chiefly to luxury items

At a finance committee hearing Friday, Secretary of the Treasury emptions be reduced from $2,000 to

> Chairman George of the finance group indorsed the suggestion and said he believed "a majority of the committee is disposed to accept it." However, Senator Brown, a member of the finance committee, told

Senator Connally, Democrat, of Texas, another committeeman, said he doubted that cutting the exemption from $800 to $750 for single persons would raise any appreciable declaring "if there is any one derevenue, but added that a reduction from $2,000 to $1,500 for married persons might be worth while. When the exemptions were cut from $2,500 to $2,000 for married persons and from $1.500 to $800 for single individuals, Senator Brown declared, the new group of lowerbracket taxpayers provided only $19,000,000 in revenue. In addition he said it cost $15,000,000 to collect that revenue. 'The additional revenue we would gain from a further cut wouldn't amount to anything," Senator Brown contended, "and we would merely be harassing a group of already-dis-ressed people Senator Brown said "an intelligent sales tax" might be levied on such articles as expensive clothing "We could exempt the man who buys a $5 pair of shoes and tax the man who pays $12," he said. "A man who spent $12 on a suit would pay no tax, but the man with a $125 suit would be taxed. Expensive

CLEVELAND, Aug. 9.-Charles A Lindbergh declared tonight that while there is still time. Americans must ask themselves this question-are we operating under a government by representation, or are we operating under a government by subterfuge?

The rally was held at the city's public auditorium. Police and hall officials said most of the 10,500 seats were occupied, and the sponsors estimated attendance at "at least 9,000 with more coming in before the meeting was ended.

Greatest Battle Here.

Mr. Lindbergh's address was interrupted frequently by applause when he denounced war and the policies of the national administration

"We are told that we must fight for the freedoms of mankind," said Mr. Lindbergh, "but the greatest battle for freedom is being fought right here in America today. If we cannot maintain our freedom in the New World, we cannot force our freedom on the Old World." He asked "Where has freedom gone when we in America are not even informed of the underlying intentions of our Government; when the agents of a foreign power are encouraged to speak and to travel throughout our land, while the same lecture halls that are open to them are closed to those of us who place To Enter Pictures the walfare and independence of our country above the interests of a foreign power?"

A burst of applause followed, and as the sound subsided, a man in the balcony cried "Lindbergh for President." The applause heightened and the speaker raised his hand for quiet before continuing with the statement that freedom lies in the meetings of "fearless men and women throughout this land," such as tonight's meeting here and hundreds of similar meetings.

Realizes Change Is Serious. There were resounding boos when he declared "They want us to send our soldiers to the East Indies, the Cape Verdes, the Canaries, Madeira, the Azores, Scotland, Ireland and Possibly England as well.'

New Unit to Be Set Up To Expedite Flow of Exports to Americas

$50,000,000 in Orders Tied Up by Licerse and Priority Difficulties

By OLIVER MCKEE.

To expedite the shipment of goods to South and Central America, and cut the red tape that has impeded the flow of materials needed by the American republics and other friendly nations, Brig. Gen. Russell L. Maxwell, export control administrator, has established an export clearance section in his organization, it was disclosed yesterday.

According to estimates of Commerce Department officials, approximately $50,000,000 worth of Latin American orders have been either frozen or sidetracked due to the difficulties encountered by American, manufacturers in obtaining export licenses, and priorities for materials needed in the production of goods ordered by Latin American countries. Creation of the new machinery is expected to eliminate this bottleneck, and make it possible for Latin America to obtain, with a minimum delay, materials needed by its industries

To Strengthen Economic Defense. The action taken by Gen. Maxwell will strengthen the economic defenses of the Western Hemisphere, it was pointed out yesterday. Nazi agents in South America have cited the bottlenecks in shipments from this country as evidence that the United States is unable to meet essential Latin American requirements. Before the war, the Axis supplied a large proportion of these needs.

As part of the program to streamline clearance procedure, and expedite the granting of priorities, a committee on inter-American affairs will be set up. The Departments of State, Commerce, Treasury and other agencies concerned with economic defense measures will be represented on this committee, which is expected to meet every week to consider Latin American trade problems.

Difficult to Fill Orders.

Because defense contracts and materials receive first priority, many American companies are finding it difficult to fill Latin-American orders, according to reports reaching the Commerce Department. The International Harvester Co. is a good illustration in point. Before this war, this company did a large business in Latin America, chiefly in the sale of agricultural machinery and instruments. Its annual sales are estimated at approximately $20,000,000. A large part of its Latin American market has been lost because of its inability to obtain

House Approval Seen For 18-Month Army Service Compromise

Foes Ready to Offer Dozens of Amendments To Bill Senate Voted

BACKGROUND-

President Roosevelt, insisting that release of citizen soldiers at end of 12 months' training would disintegrate Army, has asked Congress to "acknowledge" national emergency to permit selectees, Reservists and National Guardsmen to be continued on active duty indefinitely in line with Selective Service Act provision that President could extend their service whenever Congress declared national interest was imperiled. Senate has passed compromise bill for 18-month extention of service.

House Republicans drafted amendments by the dozen yesterday for attempts to modify administration legislation which would keep the Army's sank and file in service incompromise

Foes Seek Two Main Changes. Democrats said the fate of the ships already planned, including the bill probably would be determined by the votes of their large blocs from New York City, Philadelphia and Chicago.

As President Roosevelt's lieutenants sought to influence a group of 30 or 40 "doubtful" Democrats, Republican members of the House Military Affairs Committee arranged a conference to discuss their strategy. Representative Short, Republican, of Missouri, one of the floor leaders of the opposition to the legislation, said the minority would make their principal fight for these two amendments:

By WILLIAM J. WHEATLEY. This is the second of a series of stories by a Washington youth, a survivor of the Zamzam sinking.

By DONALD STEWART KING, As Told to W. H. Shippen, Jr.

After Nazi dynamiters rolled the pattered old Zamzam into her South Atlantic grave we captives of many nations, races and creeds began to share a common state of mind-a psychosis of fear.

Hitler Miscalculations Created Necessity for Diversion, He Asserts

Germany's reasons for breaking relations with China-by recognizing Japan's puppet regime at Nanking-are discussed here by the former Chinese Ambassador to Berlin, who arrived in New York recently on the United States transport West Point after three years' residence in Germany.

By CHEN CHIEH. NEW YORK, Aug. 9 (N.A.N.A.).-Until you have lived in a country ruled by dictatorship you have no idea of the precious value of democracy.

I have lived in Germany for three years, representing my government there. It was my purpose when I first went there to keep relations between China and Germany as amicable as possible. China had at that time but one enemy. That enemy was Japan. We did not want more

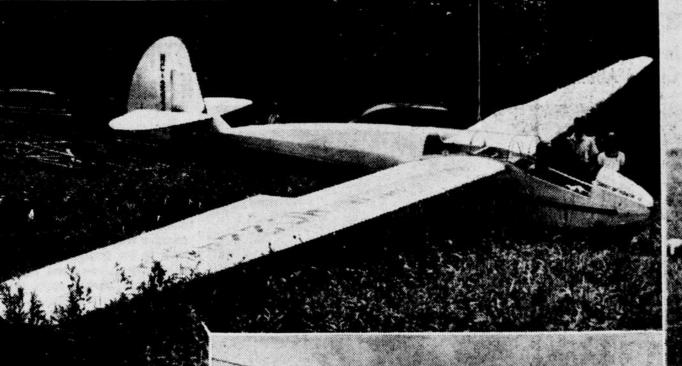

But China was basically opposed to all aggression and believed in hnman rights and freedom. Before it came to my knowledge that Germany was contemplating recognition of Japan's puppet regime at Nanking I repeatedly called to the attention of the German government the declarations of my government that any such step would be regarded by us as an unfriendly act.

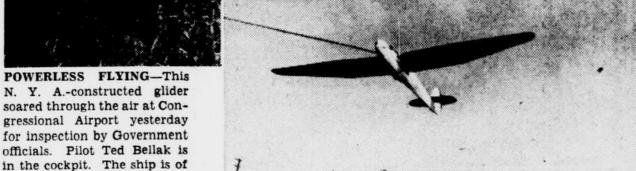

Acted Despite Warning. Yet, despite my warnings, Hitler and Von Ribbentrop decided to recognize the Nanking puppet regime on July 1. They did this in total disregard of the majority opinion of the German people, knowing full well that Wang Chingwei's regime is but a tool of the Japanese militarists and totally unworthy of any support by any foreign power.

Although she did not want to many wanted to induce Japan to bush her South Seas expansion at this particular time. Germany had It had been scheduled for May, but was put off until June because of her adventure in Crete.

She hoped at first that Russia could be crippled militarily and politically within the first few weeks of the war. She also hoped that Great Britain and the United States would not be able to aid Russia in time, but when Russian resistance proved to be stronger than she anticipated Germany became desperate. She therefore had to create some diversion in another sphere is the South Pacific.

price rises and long delays in receiving normal orders of steel for local needs as a result of yesterday's action of the O. P. M. in placing all forms of steel under full Government control.

Charles H. Tompkins, jr., presi-dent of Tompkins Co., said it would very definitely make it difficult to fill even small orders." Unless a builder could get a very high priority on a specific job, he indicated it would be a matter of "luck" if the steel could be supplied in three months. Under normal conditions before the defense program, a builder could get small deliveries of steel the day after an order was placed, he explained

It was expected that a great deal of the Government building done here would benefit as coming within the scope of necessary defense work. On other jobs, however, Mr. Tompkins said the speed of deliveries would depend entirely on the degree of priority obtained. It has been difficult for some time to fill local orders for steel, even though there has been no shutdown of mills.

Two Appendices Taken From Man, Surgeons Report

the Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Aug. 9.—Surgeons here reported today the rare operation of taking what appeared to be two vermiform appendices from a patient.

The operation was performed Wednesday by Dr. Joseph H. Rutter at Halifax Hospital. The patient was Oliver T. Ray of Atlanta, former Georgia census director.

Dr. Rutter said he and other doctors here felt almost certain the two fingerlike protuberances were appendices. They have been sent to Tulane University in New Orleans for examination by Dr. W. H. Harris, professor of pathology.

Dr. Rutter said that occasionally a growth called a diverticulum often found on the small intestine appears near the vermiform appendix and sometimes looks like another appendix.

But in this case, Dr. Rutter said all the doctors who saw the objects agreed they apparently were real appendices.

Mr. Ray had been here on a vacation only three days when he became ill and underwent the operation. Dr. Rutter said his condition was good.

President Roosevelt's latest move in enforcing sanctions upon Japan, if it is to be followed by a watertight economic blockade, will, I believe, so cripple Japan that she will be unable to succeed in her plans for domination of the Orient.

One thing that Hitler has not entertained any illusion about is the strength of the Chinese Army. ## Red Armies' Position In Ukraine Untenable, Germans Declare

New Victories Reported, Bringing Prisoner Count To More Than Million

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, Sunday, Aug. 10.-The position of the Russian Armies fighting in the Ukraine has become untenable, informed German sources said early today as official reports told of new victories in the drive on this important southern front, bringing the German count of Red prisoners to more than 1,000,000.

Declaring the Russians had suffered a crushing blow in the encirclement battle south of Uman reported earlier in the week, high German sources said they thought the Soviet forces now would soon have to yield that part of Ukranian territory east of the Dnieper River bend, including the Black Sea Coast and its large port of Odessa. Although German war reports claimed destruction of Soviet divisions by the dozens, they said that the Russians were pouring a seemingly endless stream of millions of men into new bloody battles along the continent-wide front.

Softening of Resistance. Germans said, however, there was a marked softening of resistance and that the great battles of the last seven weeks in which Russian soldiers stood and accepted annihilation were paying increasing dividends for German arms now cutting deep slices into the Ukraine and Central fronts.

The German count of prisoners mounted to more than a million-1.036,000-with the wiping out of an encircled unit at Roslavl. 60 miles southeast of Smolensk, as reported by the high command.

Military commentators predicted decisions "of the broadcast scope" in the Ukraine where the high command also announced the capture of Korosten, 80 miles northwest of Kiev, one of the keys to the defense of that capital.

In the north the German Luftwaffe was reported peppering everything afloat in an offensive which Germans compared with those at Dunkerque, Greece and Crete, to prevent Russians fighting with their backs to the Baltic, from executing successful evacuation of Estonia.

Wedge Apparently Widened.

The reported capture of 38,000 prisoners at Roslavl apparently meant the Germans had widened their wedge to a broad front aimed at Moscow, 230 miles or less away. The Germans first reported this force partly surrounded and partly annihilated three days ago.

Large amounts of war booty. including 250 tanks and 359 cannon were said to have been taken here.

Added to the 25 divisions which the Germans said were destroyed in the Ukraine with Russian losses of were a year ago by day, and that 200,000 casualties and 103,000 pris- at night three times the weight of oners, the Nazis thus totaled within 14 hours Soviet dead, wounded and

Army specifications require that the ash content of cotton powder bags be not more than 0.2 per cent, in order that gun breeches be not fouled by the residue.

Without Real Victory for Nazis in Russia By MAJ. GEORGE FIELDING

ELIOT. Sifting the German and Russian communiques, it appears probable that the Germans are attempting, as previously suggested, to cut off and envelop the Russian forces on the extreme left of the Russian line, that is, those forces which were up to now considered as defending the front along the River Dniester.

The Germans report having reached Uman, at the end of a small branch railway line, about half way between Kiev and Odessa. Reports of operations developing "southeast of Uman" are significant, Fabric bags are used in guns to the interior of Russia to Odessa

The intemperate language of these claims-to have "destroyed" the 6th and 12th Russian Armies and part of the 18th Army-seems likely to overshoot the mark. It may be anticipatory of the effect for which he Germans hope in cutting the rail communications referred to. ## Nazis Investigated Jay Allen as Thoroughly As if He Were One-Man Crime Wave of six articles in which an American war correspondent tells the story of his arrest and imprisonment for four months by the German forces in occupied France and discloses information he gleaned from other prisoners and Nazi guards.

By JAY ALLEN,

Correspondent of The Star and N. A. N. A. NEW YORK, Aug. 9 .- There are plenty of people to testify that when Herr Allen was brought in by the Nazi dragnet along the demarcation line at Montchanin on March 13, he was, though a bulky figure of some 210 pounds, only one person. Yet from the investigations that ensued upon his arrest he might have been a whole crime wave.

As has been explained in these articles, the Gestapo in Chalon thought he had an honest face and only as a matter of form turned his case over to the military tribunal in Le Creusot. This was the second phase. There was to be a third, bringing the S. S. and the Vichy police into the picture and, at the very end, when he was about to for yourself was not unflattering?" cross out of occupied France into Franco's Spain, the Spanish police popped in.

When, in March, George Axelsson, New York Times correspondent had been trying to translate it but in Paris, came down to Chalon to see me, the Gestapo and the officers So we read it together. The Herr the Kommandantur told him. Kriegsrat was not displeased by its in all sincerity I am sure, that my case was a simple one-illegally crossing the line. The strafe would be only a few weeks' imprisonment.

Silent Drive to Le Creusot. But in the second phase politics reared their ugly head. On my third Sunday morning in Chalon I was told by my guards to make myself pretty for a trip to Le Creusot, 25 miles away. A young lieutenant called for me in an army car driven by a Prussian soldier with a steel cut profile. Not a word was uttered by any of us during the drive through the wine country of Mercurey, but when I was about to be shown into the office of the judge advocate, the lieutenant, in beautiful English, remarked that he had been an instructor in fine arts at Princeton and New York University. Before that he had done research at Cluny, not far from Chalon, and when the war broke out was sent to Burgundy to handle counterespionage work.

On the way back when it was evident that I was not a case for a firing squad the Prussian chauffeur broke down to the extent of telling me that he had been a cop in Berlin. This was when we met a peasant family cycling in their Sunday best, occupying the entire road. The ex-schupo stopped his car until they were past and then, very grimly, said, "No discipline these French. We've got to teach them! And dirty good English and better French, talked to me about Spain where he had worked as an artist for years. He had stayed on after the outbreak of the Spanish civil war, I asked him where. He did not answer and from his silence I gathered that he had been on whatfor the Nazis-was the "wrong" side I changed the subject and asked him why Le Creusot was never bombed. He said that only locomotives were being manufactured in the once great Schneider arms plant.

Connections in England.

And anyway, he added, "M. Schneider has connections in England-around the royal family-who will see to it that his property is never damaged." (I am merely quoting my corporal.) He volunteered with a chuckle that M. Schneider had always been more or less Naziphile but had nevertheless lost the Skoda works in Czecho-Slovakia.

After lunch my English-speaking lieutenant who was later to introduce himself as Dr. Walter Schlunk took me to a requisitioned villa on a hillside overlooking M. Schneider's vast plant. There was a sign over the gate "Kriegsgericht" (courtmartial)

There, for seven hours, I was interrogated politely but so cleverly that I was glad that I didn't have to sustain an elaborate lie. The judge advocate (Kriegsrat) was a sandy, spectacled gentleman who had been a magistrate in civil life.

Letters Pieced Together. He spent an hour piecing together the mass of torn letters and notebooks that my pal, the customs guard in Montchanin, had gathered up as mine. He smiled faintly when I told him the story and took my word as to what was mine and what wasn't. But he was severe and very meticulous. Later I heard from an officer in the counterespionage service in Dijon that he was not a member of the Nazi party, was considered too judicious, too "legalistic" in his approach to cases that required "decision" and had been transferred to some minor post. He asked me solemnly if I had

Port of MAZATLAN, Sinaloa State

In this port, and with a like purpose, the Government has continued constructions of a maritime nature which were initiated by the previous regime and they are in such an advanced stage that it is expected, within a comparatively short time, big tonnage craft will be able to tie up on main wharves without the necessity of lighters and so effect a saving on the handling of exports and imports.

Port of ACAPULCO, Guerrero State

In this beautiful Port improvement works are being carried out and it will shortly count upon a wharf of great extension constructed with concrete blocks. It will permit the berthing of heavy draught vessels and will facilitate the export of rich regional products. It will also serve as an attraction for tourists who are already coming here in large numbers and find hotels, lodgings and residences with all the comforts they need.

Port of SALINA CRUZ, Oaxaca State

This Port has been opened for oversea service with ample dock accommodation and a dry dock sufficient for the repair of deep sea craft. The energetic efforts and action of Lic. Rojo Gomez, as head of the Federal District Department, has been so universally favorably received throughout the City of Mexico that, in a recent number, the prominent magazine "Estampa" published a series of opinions expressed by live forces of the Capital regarding the labors of this public functionary since he took office in December

Lic. Horacio Casasus, President of the "Lions" Club and Vice President of the Mexican Automobile. Association, when asked for his opinion on the work of the Chief of the Federal District Department, said: "When Senor Lic. Rojo Gomez kindly invited the 'Lions' and representatives of the Automobile Association to inspect the construction works under way in the Federal District, including the amplification of transits, repairs and improvements on streets and especially the network of drainage facilities to improve drinking water supplies and sanitary services, we were all pleasantly surprised to see for ourselves his great efforts to make Mexico a modern city."

Senor Enrique Zuniga, President of the National Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Mexico City, also expressed a valuable opinion when he "The basic purposes of the construction of public works are to satisfy the actual necessities of the inhabitants of Mexico and to look ahead into future necessities without exceeding current economic capacity of ways and means. That was well appreciated by the Federal District Department, and we must sincerely congratulate Lic. lavier Rojo Gomez whose administrative period has been characterized by such laudable intention."

Regarding the introduction of a new system of drinking water for Mexico City—a labor which will result in pride for General Avila Camacho, President of the Republic, as well as for Lic. Rojo Gomez—Senor Leopoldo H. Palazuelos, President of the Confederation of Chambers of Commerce in the Mexican Republic, said: "Our institution looks with great sympathy on the labor which the Federal District Department is carrying out to solve the city's water problem with the urgency it requires, and all this will contribute to our industrial and commercial growth.

Thus has this special correspondent obtained the opinions of different representatives of social sections in the Capital of Mexico regarding the honest and constructive labor of Lic. Rojo Gomez, Federal District Department Spends Over $23,500,000.00 (Pesos) In The Nation's Capital.

An important governmental labor is being effected by the Federal District Department, occording to the program formulated at the beginning of the current year by its head, Lic. Javier Rojo Gomez, who has energetically attacked the problem of public works as a basic necessity in the functions of his Department.

In effect, and only so far as the dotation of clean drinking water to numerous zones within the Federal District is concerned, an expenditure of six million pesos will be incurred during the current year to benefit thousands of the Capital's inhabitants.

The "dynamic" head of the Department of the Federal District has also made an allowance of six end a half million pesos for that period to be expended on drainage and general health improvements not only within the Federal District itself, but in other outlying districts. His purpose is not only to create conveniences where none at present exists, but also to increase public services where there is actually some system of conveniences.

If the activities of the Federal District Department in such important chapters as the provision of drinking water and improved sanitary services are worthy of mention, so is the policy of Lic. Rojo Gomez on the question of improving paving conditions within Mexico City itself. For that purpose he has appropriated more than eleven million pesos to be spent prior to the end of 1941 on the betterment of street accommodation and construction where there is none at present. Excellent proof of the practicability of this project is seen from the fact that during the first five months of the present year the Federal District Department has paved around a million squage meters in various portions of the Federal District. That emphasizes the energy and work of the pres-ent authorities which have the Mexican Capital in their charge.

On the question of education, the Federal District Department has paid especial attention to collaboration with the Ministry of Public Educaion by providing for the construction of twentytwo schools at various points within the District. They are completely new centers of education where Mexican childhood may find its future scholastic preparation.

It is no more than just to say that the work of authorities of the Federal District Department has found hearty approval from all sections of Mexican society, and that the personality of Lic. Javier Rojo Gomez, former Governor of the State of Hidalgo, has served to confirm him as

The Steady March And Progress of the Petroleum Industry in the United States of Mexico

Production of Crude Oil. Transport of Oil by Pipe Lines and Auxiliary Works. Refineries. Sales in the Interior. Exports. The Prospects for the Future. Efficient Services and Assistance to the TOURIST and TRAVELER in OLD MEXICO.

The progress of the PETROLEUM INDUSTRY in the UNITED STATES OF MEXICO since March 18, 1938, has been influenced by the greatest variety of happenings-political, economic, social, and in a special measure by international problems arising from the war. As a succinct expression of those three years, the following may be accepted as the principal phases of this industry.

Production of Crude Petroleum:

During the year 1940 Mexican production of crude oil was of greater volume than that reached in 1938 and would have assuredly have been greater than that of 1937 and 1939 if foreign markets had permitted the development of oil fields of greater capacity. Figures covering the last four years are as follows: 1937, 46,805,000 barrels; 1938, 38,467,000 barrels; 1939, 42,890,000 barrels; 1940, 41,876,000 barrels.

The potential production of oil fields actually controlled by the "PETROLEOS MEXICANOS," which at the time of the expropriation reached 140,000 barrels daily, is at present 240,000 barrels and in 1940 only 114,729 were taken out per day, sufficient to supply domestic necessities and an exportation market seriously affected by the European war.

It is convenient to add that during the year 1941, exploration work was initiated in various sections of the country, including the Pacific Coast, which involved an expenditure of more than $9,000,000 (pesos).

Further perforations in fields already proved as oil-bearing, carried out for the purpose of increasing production, included in the northern zone and the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, accounted for a total of 23 wells. Seventeen of them proved pro-ductive, increasing the capacity of petroleum by about 72,000 barrels daily.

Transport of Oil by Pipelines and Auxiliary Works:

The system of pipelines was extended considerably. The volume of transport in the POZA RICA-BARRA de TUXPAM sec-tions, by means of parallel derivations which increased the conduction capacity by 25,000 barrels per day, brought a total of 110,000 barrels daily. There was completed a new line of transport between POZA RICA and ALOMO, with a capacity of 50.000 barrels per day which, connected with the systems previously in existence, makes it possible in the future to supply the TAMPICO refineries and avoid pumping across the BARRA de TUXPAM terminal, which has remained available for shipments; further, the POZA RICA-ATZCAPOTZALCO pipelines were subjected to important improvements which now enable it to transport 22,500 barrels daily, as against the 15,000 barrels which were previously the transport capacity.

The new works described above afford the system a major flexibility and security against possible emergencies, and increase transport capacity of crude petroleum to 82,500 barrels per day.

There should also be mentioned the construction of an aqueduct from TANCOL to the refinery at CIUDAD MADERO for the purpose of supplying it and those at BELLA VISTA, ARBOL GRANDE and MATA REDONDA with sufficient water for their boilers and general services.

Refineries:

At the time of the expropriation, the condition of the refineries, in their majority, was deplorable. Their operation status was maintained on the basis of constant repairs and frequent replacements; their products were only half-finished and, on that account, they were dispatched to foreign refineries for final completion.

That branch of the Petroleum Industry demanded the immediate formulation of studies for the realization of conservation works. increase of capacity and improvement of procedures. The respective projects were terminated during 1940 and during the current year. 1941, arrangements have also been made to amplify the refining capacity.

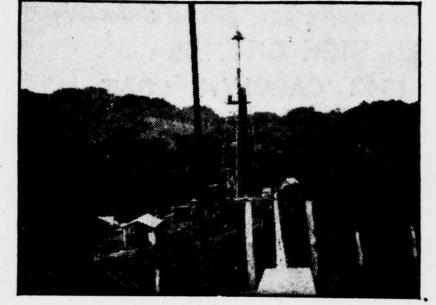

The quantity of crude oil treated in 1940 amounted to 29.803.000 barrels which resulted in an average of $1.650 barrels per day in the refineries at CIUDAD MADERO. ARBOLD GRANDE, MATA REDONDA. MINATITLAN, ATZCAPOTZALCO, BELLA VISTA and primary distilling plants at POZA RICA.

It is sufficient to mention some of the most important works, which are as follows: At CIUDAD MADERO, steps were taken to recondition four towers for the purpose of increasing a daily capacity of 35.000 to 75.000 barrels, including 7.500 barrels of crude (PANUCO) to elaborate asphalt or combustible oils in accordance with the demand. Of those modifications, 60% were completed in two towers and 25% in the remainder.

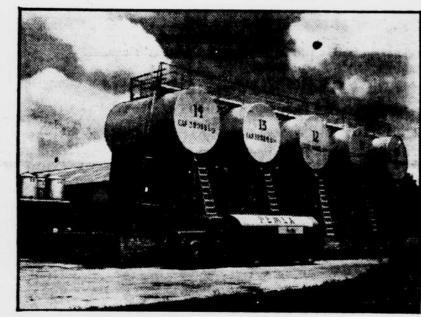

At ABBOL GRANDE, preliminary works were undertaken, and a portion of the material and equipment was acquired for the purpose of duplicating the actual capacity of 6.500 barrels per day.

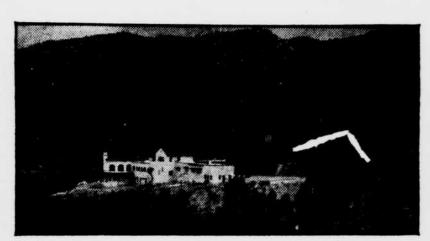

At ATZCAPOTZALCO, preparatory steps were taken, and part of the necessary material was acquired to increase capacity from 13.000 to 16.000 barrels per day.

Among the operations carried out during 1940, special mention should be made of the "CLARK PLANT" which, by means of a process not used previously in the UNITED STATES OF MEXICO. will on of heavy residues for light quality products.

Sales in the Interior:

The total sales of petroleum products in Mexico during the year 1940. reached $195,500.000 (pesos)—approximately. It showed a considerable increase over the figures of 1938 and 1939, as follows: Total sales for 1938 were $158,500.000, while that for 1939 was $176,150,000, or an increase—from one year to another—of 11%.

There has been constructed, and is now ready for operation, the TERMINAL LOADING and STORAGE STATION in the PORT OF SALINA CRUZ. State of OAXACA: this terminal, with a storage capacity of 240,000 barrels and with all facilities for loading and discharging of ships and railway tank cars, will go toward a satisfactory solution of the supply problem for towns and industries on the PACIFIC COAST, UNITED STATES OF MEXICO.

Efficient Services and Assistance to Tourist and Traveler:

"PETROLEOS MEXICANOS" has dedicated preferential attention to the establishment of efficient services for TOURISTS who visit OLD MEXICO. Along the principal highways the tourists find, aside from stations which offer every class of convenience for the traveler. ## Exportation sales during 1940, in spite of international difficulties arising from the war, and the persistency of the boycott against Mexican petroleum, reached a gross approximate figure (in dollars) of $16,000,000, and the prospects for the future are enviable and very promising.

GAS AND OIL FOR PAN-AMERICAN HIGHWAY TRAVELERS

At the time of the expropriation, conditions in the petroleum industry in MEXICO were in pretty bad shape; a tenacious fight was necessary against the boycott, to which MEXICAN OIL was subjected by the great International Trusts, and it lacked a fundamental factor to sales, i.e., means of shipping and transporting Mexican oil, but now MEXICO has the following oil-tankers, which represent a

President Suspends Shipping Load Limits To Offset Shortage

THE HECHT CO.

Roosevelt Acts With Approval of Other American Countries

The United States acted to help relieve the current shipping shortage yesterday by revising the road restrictions on ships using American ports to permit most vessels to carry heavier cargoes.

Secretary of Commerce Jones announced that amended regulations being sent out immediately would have the effect of allowing a modern cargo vessel to load to a point that would submerge it approximately 7½ inches deeper in the water than the previous legal limit.

Proclamation Issued. This action was authorized under a proclamation issued by President Roosevelt, suspending the International Load Line Convention, signed at London on July 5, 1930, so far as the United States is concerned for the duration of the present emergency. Secretary of State Hull, announc-

Secretary of State Hull, announcing issuance of the proclamation at a press conference yesterday, said Latin American nations which were parties to the convention had agreed to its suspension in view of the need for extra tonnage in inter-American trade, particularly for oil tanker facilities.

The suspended convention established international procedure for placing load lines—the line around a ship's hull marking the limit to which it may be submerged in the water when loaded—for most merchant vessels.

Within Margin of Safety.

The proclamation authorized the Secretary of Commerce to fix the load lines of ships using American ports during the emergency under a 1929 law stipulating that no limit be set "above the actual line of safety."

Secretary Jones said the deeper loading provided in the new regulations was amply within the margin of safety.

"In effect," his statement said, "the amended rules will permit vessels which are in all respects structurally qualified to load to the tropical mark in the summer zone and to the tropical fresh water mark in the tropical zone, which amounts to approximately 7½ inches of extra draft in a modern large cargo vessel. No change is made at this time with respect to vessels in the North Atlantic in the wintertime." The department estimated that 700 vessels of the United States would be affected by the amended

Labor Board Orders Poll In Chrysler Tank Arsenal

By the Associated Press. An election to choose collectivebargaining representatives for the tank arsenal operated by the Chrysler Corp. in Macomb County, Mich., was ordered yesterday by the Labor Board.

At the same time the board announced dismissal of petitions filed by two A. F. L. unions for recognition as bargaining representatives for employes of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. at South Charleston, W. Va., where the corporation operates a naval ordnance plant under lease.

In the Chrysler tank arsenal election the board said employes should vote within 30 days on whether they wanted to be represented by C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers.

Dismissing petitions in the Carnegie Steel case, filed by Local Union 466. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the International Association of Machinists, Ordnance Lodge No. 615, both A. F. L. organizations, the board held that the unit proposed by the unions was inappropriate.

Rally Condemns Slaying Of 2 Brothers by Policeman

An outdoor mass meeting of about a hundred persons sponsored by the District branch of the Communist Party, adopted a resolution last night condemning the fatal shooting last Monday of two colored brothers, Jasper and Edward Cobb, by Officer Donald E. Webber of No. 13 precinct. On Friday a coroner's jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide. The officer said he shot the two youths in self defense as he wrestled with them as he attempted to arrest one for intoxication.

The resolution also criticized the corner's jury for the verdict.

Heat Mark Due, Forecaster Gets Promotion By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS. Aug. 9 .- Weatherman Walter J. Moxom celebrated St. Louis' record-equalling heat wave today by announcing his promotion to La Guardia Field, N. Y., where he will supervise forecasts for 13 Atlantic Coast States north from Virginia.

"Any other forecaster could have obtained the same results," said Mr. Moxom, becomingly modest, in commenting on the city's protracted hot spell.

"Besides, today only equals the record of 21 successive days of 90 degrees or above, established by my predecessor, Roscoe Nunn, in 1936.

"Of course, the record's in the bag because all signs point to a temperature of 98 degrees or better for tomorrow, and that breaks the record all right.

Mr. Moxom, who takes over his new job under the Civil Aeronautics Administration's new setup next month, has been with the Weather Bureau since 1907, and was head of the rivers and floods division during the disastrous Ohio River flood of 1937. His successor has not been announced.

But it is What's left of his salary after the problematical how far they have progressed. At any rate, the directives still are being fired at them.

Col. Hare reports that prime contractors, holding about a million contracts, have subcontracted about 415,000 orders. But these figures don't indicate the extent of farming out. Col. Hare's subcontracts include all the prime contractor's normal orders for material and equipment.

The colonel now is poring over the Army's blue book of manufacturers, entitled "Industrial Facilities, 1941." Here, between pale blue cardboard covers, are listed the 10.849 elite of the industrial world, the firms which the Army has investigated for years and has adjudged better able than any other firms in the country to handle orders for war materials in an emergency.

But 20 per cent of these prime producers don't hold even one defense contract. On January 1, there were 70 per cent who hadn't taken on one defense order.

Two Reasons for Delay.

To the layman this is surprising news, after hearing the Nation's leaders talk for a year about an allout defense effort. But Col. Hare explains it this way:

1. The Army is utilizing most of the capacity which is readily available; it has given contracts to most of the firms equipped to commence immediately to turn out the items wanted. Nearly all the firms not yet given contracts lack part of the necessary machinery or other facilities. 2. The Army hasn't needed all the plants, since there have not been enough orders to go around. Congress has not yet put a heavy enough defense load on industry to require its maximum effort.

Behind all the interest in subcontracting lies a mass of rather inconclusive statistics on idle machinery. States, cities and indus-

Ickes' Aide Denies Action Taken on Gas Rationing

Reports that gasoline ration cards already were being printed here were denied yesterday by a spokesman for Petroleum Co-ordinator Ickes

The spokesman said the petroleum co-ordinator had not ordered ration cards printed and that it was not known yet whether such action would be needed to avert the threatened oil shortage.

The denial was made in response to a statement by Jack Abbott, chairman of the committee of Baltimore retail gasoline dealers directing the gas curfew there, that ration cards already were being prepared. Mr. Abbott told a meeting of dealers in Baltimore last night that "ration cards and gasless Sundays are only a matter of time.

Indications were given at the meeting that the price for regular gasoline would be raised, effective Monday, from the present 16 to 17 cents to 18.3 cents per gallon.

A checkup in Washington disclosed no move to increase the price here. Officials of several large retailing groups said that as far as they knew the price would remain unchanged for the time being.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 9.-Eightysix tenants of homes owned by the Shetzline estate in South Philadelphia have proclaimed a strike against a $3 rent boost and threaten to picket their landlord unless the increase is canceled.

Women of the neighborhood signed petitions addressed to President, Roosevelt, City Council and the estate manager declaring they could not afford to pay the higher rents because "our husbands are not defense workers."

We refuse to pay the increase. We would rather be evicted first." asserted Mrs. Tillie Bisnon in announcing plans to form picket lines outside offices of the estate.

Conservation Group And Ickes Ask Aid Of City Heads

Metropolitan police are expected to be directed this week by the Commissioners to require inspection tests of all cars whose owners indulge in "jack rabbit" starts or permit smoke-belching exhausts.

A vigorous move in this direction was recommended to the Commissioners yesterday by the District Petroleum Conservation Committee after Oil Co-ordinator Ickes had written a third letter to the city heads spurring them to greater activity for gasoline saving.

Meanwhile a reduction from the previous week of almost 5 per cent in the sale of gasoline in 40 stations in Washington and vicinity for the six-day period ending last night was reported by H. R. Wainwright director of research of the Retail Gasoline Dealers' Corp. The period covered the days since the 7 p.m. to a.m. gasoline "moratorium" has

The question is financially important to a number of car owners. Acting on orders of Secretary Ickes, park police have been halting what he calls "oil burner" autos and requiring them to report to a District inspection station. > The question is financially important to a number of car owners. The Interior Department has no statistics which would determine press division. No figures are available there to show whether a pint or a tanker of petroleum would be of the gasoline wastage he studied was of the kind that would make smoke, he said, and repairs dealt with were spark plug replacements, coil replacements and carburetor adjustments-not costly jobs dealing with cylinders, pistons, etc., such as often are needed to end smoke. It is Mr. Bruce's opinion, shared by other experts referred to, that probably a majority of heavily smoking cars do consume a large amount of oil or gasoline-enough so that even expensive repairs would pay for themselves in a few thousand miles of driving.

Smoke is of three kinds, the experts say. Gasoline smoke is black. Oil smoke is yellow, according to the District vehicle inspectors (or blue, according to the Bureau of Standards). Water condensation smoke is white.

This last, which appears as a plume of steam, probably results in no loss of petroleum at all, it is stated. Officials of the inspection system say there is no worry about being rejected for this, because the watery form of smoke never registers on the smoke meter. As one last element of scientific mystery, the meter's designer, Lt. McMillan, says such mist does register.

We turn now to the field of legal mystery. What gives park police the power to order smoky cars to inspection stations?

Metropolitan police are expected to be directed this week by the Commissioners to require inspection tests of all cars whose owners indulge in "jack rabbit" starts or permit smoke-belching exhausts. A vigorous move in this direction was recommended to the Commissioners yesterday by the District Petroleum Conservation Committee after Oil Co-ordinator Ickes had written a third letter to the city heads spurring them to greater activity for gasoline saving. Park police, who operate under Mr. Ickes, as Interior Secretary, already had initiated a campaign against non-co-operating motorists when driving through Federal park areas here.

D. C. Police Held Off. Twice before, the Commissioners had declined to issue orders to Metropolitan Police to follow suit, stating they preferred to wait longer to see the results of the voluntary gasoline-saving program before taking more vigorous steps.

The plan recommended vesterday is that all police be instructed to issue notices to violating motorists requiring them to have their cars inspected at the District inspection stations within 10 days when they are charged with permitting gas wastage resulting in smoke-belching exhausts. Meanwhile a reduction from the previous week of almost 5 per cent in the sale of gasoline in 40 stations in Washington and vicinity for the six-day period ending last night was reported by H. R. Wainwright, director of research of the Retail Gasoline Dealers' Corp. The period covered the days since the 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. gasoline "moratorium" has been in effect.

Mr. Wainwright also revealed that during the same period lubricating oil sales fell 6 per cent, while accessory business was down 7.9 per

According to its designer, Lt. C. W. McMillan, the smoke meter was wastage, and does not measure it. Lt. He merely wanted to make a device that would measure density of smoke, considered a nuisance.

He produced the smoke meter which passes exhaust gases through does no good. There is "too much" a 112-inch glass tube. On one side of the tube is a small light, on the smoke and "too much" wastage of opposite side is a photo-electric cell.

fied couples and young people who get married who are of the socalled "child-bearing age" has loaded up the maternity wards of Washington hospitals beyond capacity, Dr. Ramsey explained. One hospital has closed its visitors' rooms and put maternity beds in rooms which never were intended for hospital beds.

No Beds Available.

The extreme shortage of maternity beds in Washington hospitals here was recently demonstrated when an expectant mother came all the way to Washington for care, could not find a maternity bed and had to return to a hospital at La Plata, in Charles County, Md. Up to the middle of last year

Washington hospitals were able to meet demands, but now hospital population, according to Health Security Administration figures, is virtually at the peak which it reached during the worst weather of last vinter.

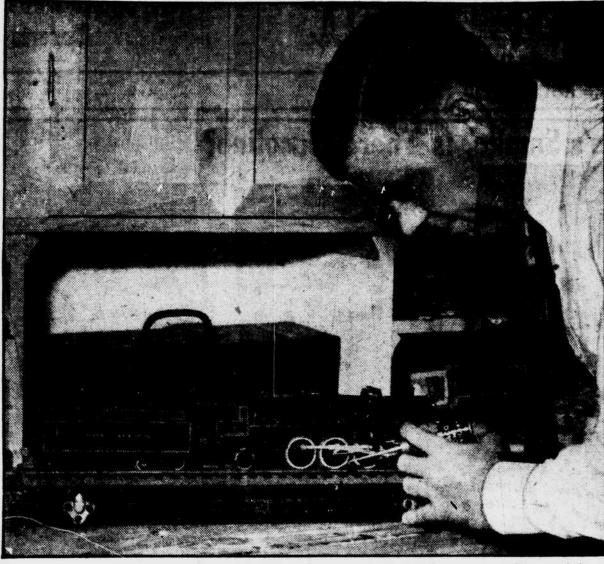

The biggest project now under consideration, for Garfield Hospital, was handled for the institution by the Building Committee of which Frederick M. Bradley, lawyer, is hairman. The new Garfield buildng is designed to be erected on the outh slope of the grounds, between he present parking space and the treet. It would increase the capacty of the hospital by 650 beds, and ould make Garfield a big medical enter.

The new building would expand he already large maternity section f the hospital and provide more vards, an X-ray department, physic to show reporters a completely therapy department and adminis- equipped woodwork shop in his baserative offices, according to Dr. F. Eiseman, superintendent. The ut-patient department would be ocated on the Florida avenue level. Eventually about two-thirds of the ld hospital would be torn down, said. The bed capacity of the ospital would be increased to 801.

Arlington Hospital Plans. The new hospital for Arlington is consored by the Arlington Hospital Association, whose president, Gilert L. ## Hearing at Detroit Set On Migration of Workers

The Special House Committee Investigating National Defense Migration will conduct a three-day hearing in Detroit September 23, 24 and 25, Chairman Tolan, Democrat, of California announced yesterday.

"There is some indication," Mr. Tolan said, "that the change-over to defense production in the automobile industry may throw considerable numbers out of work and hence set in motion migration of unemployed to other parts of the country

"If this proves true, the situation also to see that the appellate proshould be carefully studied with a view to avoiding undue hardship and loss of skills for the defense program.

Mr. Tolan added that the view of Government officials and others concerned in Michigan was that the type of public hearing customarily produced by the committee on migration lent itself to full development of a defense population study there, with attendant problems high lighted.

High-Pockets Hank of Anti-Tank

Nobody can be conscientiously surprised at the news that Pvt. Henry Greenberg has been promoted to the rank of corporal exactly three months after he stepped out of the flannel of the Detroit Tigers and into the uniform of Uncle Sam's Army. Nobody can be surprised because Greenberg is first an intelligent citizen and is secondly an athlete.

Now we may joke all we want about athletes and how they supposedly are muscle-bound between the ears. In another month or so, when football again will be a drawing room topic, it probably will be fashionable in certain smart sets to revive the old gags about discovering a fullback strolling across a campus while carrying a strange and unread pair of books under his arm. If this still makes people laugh, go ahead

But there is a war going on and America is arming in case it becomes necessary to defend democracy, and anybody with an ounce of here today. They experienced the common sense and a sports background will know that the more baseball, football, basket ball and boxing stars there are in Mr. Whiskers' Fenway Park, where they had sufnew Army the better it will be.

We wouldn't know, offhand, how many of Uncle Sam's defenders outrank Hank Greenberg of Fort Custer's anti-tank division. They run well into the thousands, of course. But we have a hunch that the rise of Greenberg from buck private to corporal is worth a sermon and that no apologies are in order for waving a flag and giving three cheers for the soldier who comes from our alley.

He Started in Army as in Baseball

Hank Greenberg started in baseball as a gawky, flappy-footed Jewish boy from the Bronx. When he first went to a big league training camp the veterans laughed at him because he was awkward and because his feet hurt and made him walk as if he were treading on eggs. From this humble and almost ludicrous beginning he rose until he was the most valuable player in the American League in 1935 and in 1940 and until he proved himself one of the good players of all times.

He got no privileges when he was drafted from his $55,000 job as a ballplayer to his $21-a-month stint in the Army. If anything, Greenberg had to come from behind because the Army can't play favorites with any pouting baseball stars without risking the morale of a battalion or a division or something bigger.

To tell the truth Greenberg was a good soldier even before he could identify an anti-tank gun from an ice cream wagon. He was a soldier that day last March in Orlando when he drank a coke at the bar and told us that he would be ready if he was called, flat feet or no.

He was a cinch to be a good soldier because Greenberg always was a team player. He spent eight years in the majors and was an integral part | two out and none on in the first, of three pennant-winning teams. He was used to making lightning matched that bit. decisions and to facing an enemy in the pinch. That's how he knocked 58 home runs one season, 247 during his career and drove across 1,003 runs on 1,281 hits.

When "Black Jack's" Chauffeur Took the Air

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 9 .- Three of the Nation's topnotch marksmen, one from the East Coast, one from the slopes of the Pacific, and one from Texas, recorded scores of 200 today to pace a field of 305 into the final stage of the 25-target shoot. off for the national skeet championship.

At the peak, without a miss after two days of firing, were Alex Kerr, 28-year-old Beverley Hills (Calif.) sporting goods store owner who tied for the crown a year ago; George Devoe of Washington, D. C., winner of the recent Lordship (Conn.) classic, and C. H. Poulton, San Antonio (Tex.) automobile salesman. Poulton and Kerr hit the same pace last year with 200, Poulton missing twice on the final 50, and Kerr once.

On the trail of the leaders, waiting for them to muff a target in Sunday's 50-clay finale, were seven sharpshooters with scores of 199. 15 others with 198, and a dozen with 197. In the 198 class was Dick Shaughnessy of Dedham, Mass., 19year-old defending champion and 1936 winner, who missed twice today after going straight in yesterday's opening century.

Pro Scrap Hot. Too.

Just as torrid as the amateur race, which the old-timers classed. as the best in history, was the scrap for the professional laurels. In that sector, big Grant Ilseng of Chicago. still blazing away with mail order house ammunition, was out front with 199 after a perfect century today. That gave him a one-target edge over A. R. Crosby of Detroit and Graydon Hubbard of Elwood, Ind., the defending king.

In the women's race the leader was Mrs. M. L. Smythe of Aurora, Ohio, who skidded to a 96 today after an opening 99, for a 195 total, two ahead of Ruth McCutchan of Evansville, Ind., and Jane Hoffman of Lakeview, Ohio. In 1918 one of the great figures to emerge from World War 1 was fetched Foxx home and Di Maggio's the ex-chauffeur to Gen. John "Black Jack" Pershing. He had been an. single to center scored Doerr. auto race driver. When the war was over Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker was America's air ace, with 22 German planes to his credit. It had been a comparatively simple matter for Rickenbacker to transfer his deft and daring from speed cars to airplanes.

The first major league ballplayer to enlist in World War 1 was Hank walked Jim Tabor. Walter Master-Gowdy, the gaunt catcher who started as a private, performed heroicly in action, and returned as a sergeant.

Back to '18 With Grant, Baker & Co.

One of the great athletes in the glorious history of Princeton was Hobey Baker, hockey and football star. Just before the armistice was signed Hobey became a captain . . . and then gave his life.

There were hundreds of others. One of Notre Dame's good halfbacks, ington locked the score with five teammate to the late George Gipp, left school to join the air force. When consecutive singles. he returned he was Lt. Dutch Bergman, now of the Civil Aeronautics Commission. A returning sergeant in the Marines was Gene Tunney and a single to right and Johnny Welaj Mrs. Cooke for the women's title one of the most famous of all the athletic stars was Eddie Grant, the batting for Masterson, sent him to Harvard boy who was good enough to play third base for John McGraw. He was Capt. Grant when he died on the battlefield.

This could go on indefinitely. Suffice to say that 47 per cent of the varsity athletes in Uncle Sam's last great Army received commissions. Compare this figure with 4 per cent of the entire enlistment which received commissions and try to laugh off the athlete.

Team sport as we know it teaches continually that no man has a despite that heartening outlook. corner on courage, alertness and all of the other qualities which are required in the clutches. American kids learn that in every game they play. They learn to respect the Greek boy who plays left tackle, the English lad who plays shortstop, the Bohemian who jumps center, the Irish guy with the good backhand and the Negro who can punch hard with both hands.

In Mr. Hitler's Aryan army a guy like Greenberg wouldn't stand a chance because he's a Jew. Apparently Hank's good enough for Mr. Whiskers' Army and, by the way, does Mr. H. or any of his predecessors have a war average of 1.000 like Uncle Sambo?

Johnny, on Own Course, Plays It Down Middle To Get Best Results

OMAHA, Aug. 9 .- "You can mark this down in your book-this year's national amateur champion will be a guy able to crack them right down the middle-all the time. Maybe not so far, but straight." That's Johnny Goodman. Omaha's former national open and amateur champion, talking. He based his prediction on his knowledge of the tricky Omaha Field Club course-his home club where he started his golf career as a caddy, and site of the National Amateur tournament August 25-30. He might have been talking about himself, because that's the way Johnny plays when he's at his peak -not so long, but down the middle all the time.

No longer the young upstart from the caddy ranks who skyrocketed to golf glory by taking the trans-Mississippi in 1927 and 1931, the National Open in 1933 and the National Amateur in 1937. Goodman is a settled but well-knit business man now

Victory, 6-4, Is Primer For Regional Legion Tourney This Week

Costello Post, champion of the American Legion Junior Baseball League, finished prepping for its entrance into the regional title tournament at Albemarle, N. C., beginning Monday by making a clean sweep of a two-game series against a team of Junior Legion All-Stars. Costello captured the second game yesterday at Griffith Stadium, 6-4, after scoring in the opener on Friday, 4-1. Bob Mulvihill, former Gonzaga star, furnished a lot of the individual punch yesterday with two hits, both doubles, scoring two runs. Sammy Webb on the Costello mound went all the way and although nicked for 13 hits managed to keep them well scattered until the last two innings.

Costello saved the game from going into overtime by counting two runs in the ninth, scored by Mulvihill and Al Lauck, which balanced the two runs counted by the All-Stars in a late rally which fell short.

All Teams in League Still in Race for Industrial Flag

B-7

Postponed Games Foul Race; Champion May Miss City Series

With the circuit's six teams still in the race for second-half honors, the Industrial League this week turns into the home stretch of one of the closest and wackiest flag chases it has produced in a decade. Technically, the campaign ended August 1, but actually it is only getting underway. A number of postponed games remained on the docket, clouding the title claims of several teams and making it necessary for President Bill Flester to reschedule all such contests.

Cameos Blew Chance.

The race could have ended last week in orderly fashion with Connie Wyche's Cameo charges carrying off the bunting but it wasn't in the cards. Instead the clubs found themselves locked bumper to bumper in a confusing jam that will require at least a week to untangle. That raises another point of confusion. The city championship series, out of which will emerge the District's representative in the national amateur tournament at Youngstown, Ohio, opens a week from tomorrow and the Industrial champion will not be known at that time. After the second half is decided a three-game series with the Heurich Brewers will be necessary to decide the winner and that may take another week if pennant playoffs of the past are a criterion.

Tavern Plays Twice.

Little Tavern is in position to entrench itself more firmly in first place this week, having two games with Vinnie DeAngelis' Reliance Insurance crew tomorrow and Wednesday. Cameo, which blew three consecutive games last week and dropped from first to second, meets Reliance Tuesday. If Reliance should take all three games it would go right to the front of the parade. If it loses all three it would be eliminated.

Flester must hold the rest of the schedule in abeyance, pending the outcome of these games but hopes to book some double-headers later With approximately 150 ambitious in the week in an effort to reach a

Players Stressing Card Make Nerve-Racking Ordeal of Game

By WALTER MCCALLUM. There's always more to golf than the mere slugging of a big tee shot or the roll of a fast putting green We won't go into raptures about the scenery out in the country away from the dizzy whirl of the city, or the birds or the texture of the rough. but any golfer knows, if he looks around him, what we mean. And even though a good golf game, and a successful one, is part and parcel of the whole, in itself it isn't all there is to enjoyment of the game.

Out in Minnesota there's a chubbyfaced, likable fellow named Harold Stodola. Harold happens to be president of the Greenkeeping Superintendents' Association. greens the ball rolls too fast with the grain and too slowly against it. If the grass is heavy it is too slow and if it is thin it is too fast. The metropolitan golfer judges everything by score. He has little time to notice the trees, the grass, the beauty of the lakes, the flowers or the neatness of the clubhouse grounds. He is wrapped up in his score and his game. If he shoots well the course is well kept and okay; if he shoots poorly it just isn't right.

Make It Nerve-Racking.

"Golf has become a nerve-racking game instead of a game of relaxation. I heard this remark several years ago: 'A foursome goes to a golf course for a friendly game of golf. The course is there and the condition of it is just as fair to you as it is to me. Now we go and play that course. We cannot change it, so let's try to conquer it, and in the meantime have fun.' But it is not Now true all of this is you can udge for yourself. There's far more to any golf game than the mere hitting of a ball and scratching of a few figures on paper. country atmosphere. Those things far outweigh any score or even the pools winning of a trivial silver mug.

- no matter what make they are." ? "How?" "LifeGuards take all the danger out of blowouts, give you the confidence to drive your tires much
- longer than you normally would." Q "What are LifeGuards?"
- "LifeGuards are 2-ply reserve tires built inside extra-sturdy tubes - a
- reserve tire within your tire!" Q "How do they work?"

Q "Why?"

"If your tire blows out, the Life-Guard reserve tire lets you steer to a sure, safe stop."

Q "Are LifeGuards expensive?" "No. They actually save you money through increased tire mileage and reduced tube expense. You can pay cash, buy on regular terms or pay only $1.60 a week on Easy-Pay Terms for a set of four, which includes a small carrying charge."

HERE'S THE BEST ANSWER OF ALL!

Equip your car completely with LifeGuards installed in new "G-3" All-Weather Tires. Then you're all set for a long, long time.

YOU CAN BUY THEM SEPARATELY-BUT IT'S A SWELL IDEA TO GET BOTH TOGETHER!

Later, if the carcasses are sound, have them retreaded. This gives you many extra thousands of safe miles-at low cost. You can use LifeGuards in one set of the same size tires after another. Many car-owners report 100,000 miles and more of service. LifeGuards save money, rubber, and lives. "You can't get better protection to save your life!"

PLAN 3. The best plan of all! Get both "G-3" All-Weather Tires and LifeGuards. This will give you complete peace of mind and many, many MONTHS OF MILES!

Ask your Goodyear Dealer right away, about his low prices and Easy-Pay Terms.

Two Churchill Remarks Augur Drastic Changes for America Prime Minister Goes Further Than President, Sees Nation 'Advancing' Toward War With Regimentation Increasing

By Felix Morley.

In his latest speech to the House of , ing its defenses but is also advancing Commons, defending the record of his toward war.

government against charges that it is not achieving the attainable maximum in war production, Prime Minister Churchill made two observations of exceptional interest to American readers. One of these was the statement: "The United States, the greatest single power, is giving us aid on a gigantic scale and is advancing in rising wrath and conviction to the very verge of war."

The other remark of peculiar impressiveness was: "There are no doubt a number of minor aspects of our national life which have not yet been effectively regimented, but when and as they are wanted their turn will come."

Though widely separated in the text of Mr. Churchill's speech of July 29 there is nevertheless, for this country, a striking relationship between these two statements. The first remark sums up the British belief that the United States is moving rapidly into active belligerency. The second observation sounds implicit warning as to the social and economic consequences which Americans can and should expect once "shooting war" begins.

Guns and Butter Jibe Perishes.

There was a time, not very long ago, when the slogan "guns instead of buter" aroused many wisecracks at German expense. This Nazi edict, issued by Marshal Goering to epitomize the purpose of the five-year plan which he directed, was said to illustrate both the harsh discipline of German economy and the socially undesirable effects of totalitarian doctrine.

Both criticisms were richly justified. But with silk stocckings rapidly disappearing from our stores and with the first tentative limitations on the sale of gasoline already in effect, the guns vs. butter fibe seems somehow to have lost a lot of its humor. That change in outlook, however, does nothing to minimize the force of Mr. Churchill's brusque warning to such British industries as have not yet been socialized. "When and as they are wanted their turn will come."

This warning by the British Prime Minister to his own people would have less applicability for Americans if Mr. Churchill were not simultaneously certain that this country "is advancing * * * to the very verge of war." Considering the authoritative source, it seems rather surprising that this statement has received so little comment in the American press.

Similarly, Mr. Sumner Welles, as Acting Secretary of State, has been careful to point out that the economic sanctions we are taking against Japan are wholly defensive in intent.

Our occupation of Iceland was defensive. The Japanese occupation of Indo-China was aggressive. But the penalties imposed on Japan for its aggressive action are defensive on our part, though, as Mr. Welles points out, France was close to being aggressive by assuming that Indo-China needed what it pleased Vichy to call defense by Japan.

Uses Word "Advancing."

So much effort has been expended in making this clear that one wonders why Mr. Churchill should have thought desirable to say that the United States "is advancing"-instead of is being pushed by the Axis-"to the very verge of war."

However, he used the words as quoted. And since British Prime Ministers are always meticulously careful in the language of their reports to Parliament, it must be assumed that Mr. Churchill meant what he said. Moreover, though nearly two weeks have elapsed since this official statement regarding our policy was made to Parliament, there has as yet been no denial of its accuracy from Washington.

So even if Mr. Churchill did not inform Mr. Roosevelt in advance what he proposed to tell Parliament about American foreign policy-which would have been normal diplomatic procedure-it still seems undeniable that what the British Prime Minister said accords with fact. For if it were deniable it would by this time have been denied. It is not merely the assumption of the Axis governments, but is also the considered opinion of the British Prime Minister that the Roosevelt administration has gone far beyond the expressed purpose of the Lease-Lend Act "and is advancing in rising wrath and conviction to the very verge of war."

More Regimentation Coming.

This conclusion, transmitted to the elected representatives of the British pecple by Mr. Churchill, gives broader to give some contrasting elements of applicability to his warning of the advent of effective regimentation in all aspects of British national life. If that must be expected in Great Britain, in order to achieve the productivity necessary to carry on the war, it must also be expected, though not necessarily immediately, if, as and when the United States becomes a belligerent. Already, while still serving only as "the arsenal of democracy," there are accumulating intimations of great and basic changes in our economic system. Increasing strain will bring those changes with increasing speed. Mr. Roosevelt suggested as much in his price-control message of July 30, but it is to be feared that this was rather too soothing for the actual situation. In terms reminiscent of Warren G. Harding, the President spoke last week of "a return to a normal peacetime basis." There will be no such return, at least for this generation, if the United States takes over from hardpressed British hands the ultimate responsibility of securing a knockout victory over Germany, Italy and Japan.

Long Planning Behind Japanese and American Ships By Logan Reavis

Some of the contrasting elements in the Japanese and the United States navies are indicated in above sketch. The drawings are scaled perspectively so that some sense of relative proportion may be determined. Comparisons are mostly of older ships and those long in service.

American Weapons, Numerous and Potent, Still Need Expert Use Both for Victory and Post-War Problems

By Oliver McKee.

In establishing an Economic Defense Board, armed with broad powers, Presi- | eral officials have laid special stress on dent Roosevelt has acted for better coordination of effort by the agencies through which the United States is conducting its "economic war" against the Axis. Headed by Vice President Wallace, and with a membership of seven cabinet officers, the new board will have the duty of protecting and strengthening "the international economic relations of the United States in the interest of national defense." Its creation plainly presages a tightening of economic pressure against the totalitarian oppressors. In modern war, with its mechanized armies and vast air fleets, economic factors have assumed an importance unknown before. Oil, rubber, manganese, tin and other strategic materials are not only essential to the armed forces of every nation, but are needed in vast quantities. Economic defense, therefore, has two major objectives. First, to conserve for the United States and its friends large stocks of vital materials. Second, to prevent their flow to unfriendly nations.

Through the War Trade Board, under the chairmanship of Vance McCormick, the United States in 1917 and 1918 carried on an effective economic warfare against the Central Powers. In conjunction with the Alien Property Custodian, this agency was vested with full powers to curtail enemy trade. By a system of licenses for exports and imports, it exercised virtually complete control over the foreign commerce of the United States. The board plugged the leaks through which, in the early part of the war, considerable quantities of goods reached Germany by way of neutral countries, and in return for permission to buy essential goods here it made arrangements to secure certain war materials from neutral states. Trade in nonessentials with South America and the Orient was limited, and their production

Differences From 1917.

Though current economic measures parallel, at certain points, those taken by the United States in the first World War, the situation now differs in four important particulars from that of 24 years ago. First, Hitler today controls at home was discouraged.

In their economic defense plans, Fed-Latin America. The recently published pro-Axis blacklist resulted from investigations made by the Department of Commerce and the Office of Co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Government intelligence services provided much pertinent data on the pro-Axis activities of the United States firms in South and Central America. According to the Commerce Department, American firms have already eliminated more than 1.000 "undesirable connections" in Latin America. The economic defense program also aims to increase the buying power of the American Republics, promote their industrial self-sufficiency and build, on a permanent foundation, a larger two-way trade between the Americas. These are the broad objectives of many of the loans made by the Export-Import Bank.

Through the purchase of strategic materials, Federal Loan Administrator Jones has helped to increase Latin American exports to the United States. As a result in part of these purchases, Latin America, in its trade with the United States, has a substantial balance in its favor during the first six months of 1941 -a reversal of the trend of recent years.

Much Buying Preclusive.

In many instances, these materials have been bought to prevent their sale to Nazi and Japanese agents. Preclusive buying is thus being used to halt the flow of strategic materials from the Eastern Hemisphere to the Axis. Under agreements recently negotiated, Mexico and Brazil hereafter will sell all their exportable surplus of certain war materials to the United States.

Freezing of the assets of unfriendly countries is an essential part of the economic defense program. The Treasury has placed Axis funds under an effective control, and has prevented their use to finace propaganda activities in the American Republics and to purchase strategic and other materials. According to reports reaching Washington, the dollar blockade has increased the difficulties of Axis agents operating in South and Central America.

Economic defense includes another financial weapon-assistance to friendly nations. A good illustration of its use are the loans made by the United States to

Goes Further Than the President.

Although largely overlooked, the statement is in several respects startling. In the first place, it goes further than any report with respect to our foreign policy which President Roosevelt has yet made to Congress. And it is certainly unusual to have a British Prime Minister give Parliament information about American policy which the President has not divulged to his own Legislature.

Mr. Roosevelt has never said publicly, as did Mr. Churchill, that the United States "is advancing * * * to the very verge of war." On the contrary, he has been most careful to emphasize that every step taken is of a purely defensive character, designed to ward off possible aggression against America by Germany, Italy or Japan, but in no case an intentional advance toward war on our part.

Thus, in explaining the occupation of Iceland to Congress, a few days before Mr. Churchill's speech to Parliament, President Roosevelt said that: "The United States cannot permit the occupation by Germany of strategic outposts in the Atlantic to be used as air or naval bases for eventual attack against the Western Hemisphere."

Three Assumptions Made.

This explanation made three separate assumptions. First, that Germany proposes to occupy strategic outposts in the Atlantic. Second, that if occupied, these outposts would be used as air or naval bases. Third, that if so developed it would be for the purpose of attacking the Western Hemisphere.

But while these assumptions are justify Mr. Churchill's conclusion that | a victory, if it comes, will find the victors the United States is not merely prepar- still democracies.

Capitalism Faces Changes.

Mr. Churchill is not talking, and none of his responsible fellow-countrymen is them. talking, of "a return to a normal peacetime basis" as something which will automatically follow the conclusion of hostilities.

It is totalitarian regimentation which has given the Axis its tremendous fighting and staying qualities. It is totalitarian regimentation which explains the disciplined power of Russian resistance.' It is totalitarian regimentation, as Mr. Churchill warns, which must be carried ever further if the democracies are to win the dictated peace which is still generally envisaged. And there is narrowbroad they are not broad enough to | ing ground for the assumption that such of both fleets. While secrecy enshouds details of the United States Navy's latest construction, it is known that the United States is building 17 battleships in addition to the 15 already in service. Of the new ones, six, including the North Carolina, are of 35,000 tons; four are believed to be around 45,000 tons and seven, not yet started, may reach 65,000 tons each.

Ten Battleships in Service.

Japan has 10 battleships in service and is believed to be building eight others of 40,000 tons or over, although the Japanese have been ultra secretive about the program Little is known of the 10 or more Japanese cruisers in the building, but of the 54 American cruisers building or ordered, at least five are to be super battle cruisers of 25,000 or more tons. The building programs of both nations are changing the picture so rapidly that the newest of the ships cannot be compared because nothing is disclosed about The Pacific is a broad arena and in event of war, an arena which must be crossed with ships-ships to fight, to, transport men and to carry supplies. For 20 or more years the naval designing staffs of the United States and Japan have worked as though in a grim but silent contest to be the first to complete the ultimate in a ship for a designed mission.

The cost has involved millions of dollars in experiments alone. The race for seapower has mounted rapidly toward a climax since Japan in 1935 abrogated the last major treaty limiting the tonnage and types of navies, and especially since the European war lifted the lid entirely on naval construction of all kinds.

Japanese destroyers continue their aping in appearance of their big sisters, the cruisers. They still maintain stress on employment of the torpedo, however. The Samidare, one of 10 in the Sigure class, is 33512 feet in length and carries, besides its complement of five 5-inch guns, two machine guns and eight quadruple-mount torpedo tubes.

Seagoing Submarines Big.

The Japanese I-8 submarine is another example of the submarine which challenges the destroyer in weight. It is somewhat contemporary with the Sargo (American) vessels commissioned in 1939: The I-8 belongs to what the Japanese refer to as the improved, oceangoing class. One of the largest submarines ever built in Japan, it is rated as making 17 knots on the surface and 9 knots when submerged.

Although the new American "T" class Tautog does not equal the I-8 in some characteristics, the Tautog is rated highly efficient as to maneuverability and torpedo discharge.

Merely to recite the respective numbers and mountings of guns, tonnages and armor thicknesses, is, of course, not the final appraisal of the fighting qualities of the vessels.

Take, for example, the North Carolina and the Nagato. All the former's secondary battery of 5-inch guns are inclosed in protective mounts above the main deck free to fire at aerial or surface enemies. On the other hand, part of the Nagato's secondary armament follows the old custom of side mounting Koryu) is 6881/2 feet long and has a in the hull below the main deck and few rated speed of 30 knots. "enemy" country. Second, because of the Axis program of commercial and political penetration, Latin America has become a major theater of economic war. Third, Japan, one of the powers aligned against Germany in the first World War. is now a full-fledged partner of the Axis, and a nation palpably unfriendly to the democracies. And fourth, as a result of Japan's policies of territorial aggression in the Far East, this country faces the possible cutting off of its supplies of rubber, tin and other strategic materials. In 1917, we faced no such danger. Through half a dozen agencies, the United States Government has already launched a vigorous economic defense program. In the aggregate, the measures taken all have contributed materially to strengthen our armor. Some of them, such as the curb on exports to Japan, have been aimed to weaken the economic power of the Axis.

Under authority of legislation passed by Congress, President Roosevelt last year set up the Export Control Administration. An Army officer, Brig. Gen. Russell L. Maxwell, heads this rapidly expanding organization. The staff includes many Army and Navy officers. More than 60 per cent of our exports. by value, are new subject to export control. Licenses are issued by the State Department, under general rules laid down by Administrator Maxwell.

Export Control Program.

In addition to defense agencies, many other Government departments have a hand in shaping its policies. Though the principal purpose of the Export Control Administration is to prevent the shipment abroad of materials needed by the armed forces, this agency, by controlling the flow of exports, has become an important instrument in the conduct of economic war. Where questions of foreign policy are involved, the State De-

Though so far there are no indications that Soviet Russia will receive similar assistance, the Washington Government already has given assurances to Moscow of material aid. This is in line with one of the cardinal principles of our economic defense, policy-to help, where possible, the nations fighting Axis aggression.

Board's Role Important.

Government agencies, for many months, have been carrying on "economic warfare" over a wide front. A close co-ordination of effort, so far, has been lacking. As the "general staff" directing an expanded program, Mr. Wallace's board may be expected to supply the needed co-ordination, with emphasis on the proper timing upon which the success of economic warfare measures, as well as military moves, largely depends.

Since the economic weapons at the disposal of the United States are both numerous and potent, the new board seems headed for an important role in the Nation's expanding defense effort. In its future actions, it will no doubt hew to the general line of economic defense already charted by other Federal agencies. Supplementary measures may be necessary, such as the control of imports, increased shipment of materials needed by Latin American and other friendly nations, and a wider resort to preclusive buying. Canada, too, may require additional help to keep its war economy on an even keel.

Under the Executive order, the new board will study the relationship of economic defense to the problems of postwar reconstruction. Such studies are clearly needed. Though the exact system of international economy that will emerge from the war is any man's guess, many changes are inevitable. It is the part of wisdom, therefore, for the United States to prepare plans to meet these partment has the determining voice. • | changes.

In Santo Domingo, as a matter of fact, the pro-Axis element is large, much more so than in Haiti, where the link with France makes for pro-British sympathy. Members of the British Legation in Santo Domingo say that 75 per cent of the people in that republic are hoping for a German victory. Americans who are in close touch with the people say that sympathy is divided equally.

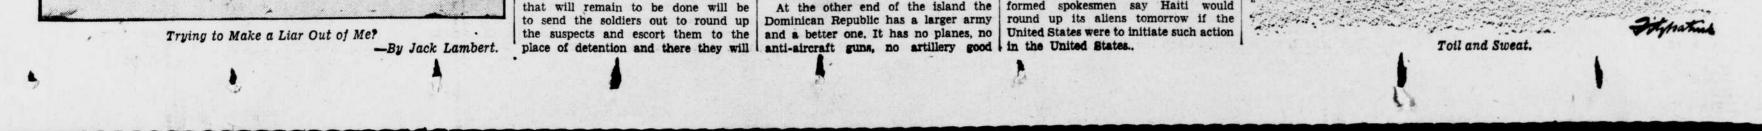

Serious-minded Haitians are convinced that Germany knows all she needs to know about Haiti. They believe that many resident Germans and Italians have their posts assigned to them. There is no reason to take seriously the assertion by Representative Fish that the legislation to extend Army service is part of a "gigantic conspiracy" to involve the Nation in foreign wars. Such a statement is patently absurd, and no doubt it will be treated as an absurdity, but there is reason for very genuine concern over the partisan character of the approach to this issue in the House.

The Republicans in the House evidently are prepared to oppose any extension of service for the selectees, although they seem to favor an extension for National Guardsmen and Reservists. They contend that the Nation is more secure than it was a year ago, and that if danger arises the President has authority to recall selectees discharged after one year of service.

These contentions are not realistic. They take no account of the fact that the selectees will not be adequately trained after one year. They do not harmonize with the implied recognition of danger in substantial Republican votes for huge defense appropriations. They are in open conflict with General George C. Marshall's statement that enforcement of the one-year provision would "wreck" the Army. And they seem all too obviously to be an attempt to "pass the buck" to the President.

Nevertheless, on the basis of a careful poll of the members, it is reported that not more than ten or fifteen of the 170-odd Republicans in the House can be expected to support any extension of service for selectees.

This should be welcomed, not only as indicating a spirit of independence on the part of the rank and file, but also as reflecting a healthy distaste for any and all efforts to use their union as a cloak for subversive activities.

Encirclement'--- New Style The present totalitarian leaders of Japan, like their Axis colleagues in Europe, have evolved a new theory of world politics. It is best summarized by the word "encirclement." The spokesman of the Tokio Foreign Office puts it trenchantly when he asserts that Japan is being encircled economically, politically, militarily, 'and even alphabetically" by a coalition of hostile powers determined to strangle her. The alphabetical aspect of the process is a sarcastic reference to what Japanese call the ABCD bloc, consisting of America, Britain, China and the Dutch Indies. This "encirclement" process is a far-reaching one. When Britain allows the transport of supplies to Free China over the Burma road, far in the hinterland of Asia, that is encircling Japan. The same is true of British and American attempts to halt Japanese expansion into French Indo-China and Thailand, though these countries are some 2,000 miles from Japan proper. Equally heinous is Anglo-American protection of the Netherlands Indies from Japanese pressure. In Japanese eyes such unethical procedure calls for drastic countermeasures. A Japanese naval officer, writing in a leading Tokio paper, says that getting what Japan wants from the Dutch Indies and Malaya may be "a bit difficult, but it should be a cinch if we tackle the problem after the German fashion." The German fashion is, of course, to grab everything wanted by force of arms.

The kernel of this new political philosophy is that "strong, poor and vigorous" nations need adequate living space. They plot out on the map what the living space should be. Thenceforth, this is their rightful sphere, and any attempt by outsiders to interfere with the process of forcibly validating the claims staked out is aggressive encirclement. The countermeasures taken by the "encircled" nation thus become legitimate self-defense.

Secretary of State Hull effectively punctured this fallacy when he declared at a recent press conference that if the Japanese believe themselves to be encircled, they have no one to blame but themselves. This range of any likely German inis pre-eminently true of Japan. No nation or combination of nations has threatened Japan since the Great fields. War a generation ago left her the strongest military and naval power in the Far East. Had Japan not embarked on a career of aggressive expansion, first in China and later in Southeastern Asia, she would be enjoying today a booming prosperity as the one great industrial nation not involved in the giant deathgrapple which is tearing Europe to tatters. She has no one to blame but herself that the attempt to conquer China has drained her resources, decimated her best man power and brought her to practical isolation among suspicious or openly hostile neighbors Such are the first fruits of Japanese aggression. The closer Japan comes to the deadline drawn by the ABCD bloc, the more perilous her far into the interior. situation becomes. If Japan takes the final plunge and stakes her future on aggressive war with this formidable coalition, plus the likelihood of a hostile Soviet Russia, her "encirclement" indeed will become a grim reality. But it will be a nemesis which she herself has created.

ceased to be envied. It is more practicable to work in association with colleagues inspired by the co-operative tradition of Pasteur and Edison. The efficiency of each participant in a laboratory enterprise is enhanced by his association with his fellows. Results, it follows, are obtained with less waste of time. And it is this latter factor that is of supreme importance in the current crisis. If the United States is to protect the historic liberties to which it is pledged, unlimited speed in the achievement of its purpose is demanded. Perhaps some unknown Fulton or Morse or Whitney, McCormick or Steinmetz already has guessed an answer to the challenge of the dictators. It is conceivable that science may possess the solvent of war itself-the medicine for the correction of "the vast disease" of armed strife among nations.

Dr. Bush has announced that he desires the help of chemists, bacteriologists, physicists, mathematicians, practitioners of medicine and surgery, zoologists-and all others who feel that they have an intellectual contribution to make to the cause of freedom and progress. No interference with existing institutions is to be attempted. The Government has authorized the campaign, and the whole people certainly will support it with enthusiasm.

Harvest Battle

Behind a screen of propagandist military communiques whose sensational claims suggest the joint advisership of Baron Munchausen, the titanic struggle between the Russian and German armies goes on with the outcome still uncertain.

However, even though the Russian armies should be defeated in the next few weeks, the Soviet Union will have won another battle-the battle of this year's harvest. Seemingly nothing can prevent the attainment of this notable victory.

Shortly after the Germans began their blitz attack in late June, the grain fields of Russia's far south, toward the Caucasus, became ripe. Instantly a vast army of tractors and harvester combines, , largely operated by women, went to work, literally racing against time. As the weeks passed, this mechanized agricultural battle front swept steadily northward as green fields changed to yellow and gold. At present, harvesting is in full swing throughout the Ukraine, Russia's traditional bread basket. A month hence, the harvest of North-Central Russia should likewise be in. Everywhere the precious grains are being shipped far to the eastward, well beyond the

It should be said that the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, Gen. George C. Marshall, always has had a healthy respect for mechanization and motorization as basic developments underlying the building of a new Army. But Gen. Marshall hasn't gone along with those who concluded that the experience in France removed the need for infantrymen who could march and fight on foot or for weapons and vehicles that are drawn by horses or for artillery of a classic mold.

Now the Infantry Journal, a publication that is semi-official, comes forward with the first story of the experience of a German panzer division in France. From that experience the Infantry, Journal draws some morals that undoubtedly are getting attention from those who are shaping this country's Army.

The story, which is told in detail in the August issue of the infantry magazine, concerns the 1st Panzer Division and the 1st and 2d Tank Brigades in that division. The period covered is from May 10 to May 17, 1940, as this division led the assault that flanked the Maginot Line and then drove deep into Belgium. There were river crossings against weak resistance. There were some battles with French tanks, which the Germans pulled away from whenever they could. As a rule, the French withdrew their forces with the approach of the German panzer outfits. But, on May 14 the Germans came up against the Dyle line and bumped into two divisions of Moroccan troops who wanted to fight. These troops were lodged behind a rail line and possessed artillery. The German tanks were stopped cold. On the next day, the Stuka bombers came to support the tanks for an all-out push to break this resistance. Here was the famous tankplane team at work. But again there was no luck.

As the Infantry Journal describes it: 'Losses were many, especially among the heavy tanks, which always seemed to draw heaviest fire. But the tanks fought steadily and fiercely back, and there were actions of heroism on the part of more than one tank crew. The officer Star of August 8, 1891, said in part: leaders of several crews left their tanks and tried to overcome especially troublesome obstacles and guns by hand-tohand fighting. In this desperate encounter, too, the higher commanders were found where fighting was heaviest. The brigade commander was put out of action and severely wounded when his tank, moving even farther to the front, also took a direct hit."

There are no accepted alibis for neglected opportunities. It has been universally true that the less-favored, forgotten people of the world have recognized more readily the word of life which the Master of men gives than those whose self-dependence and selfassurance make them unresponsive to His call. A new day has come or will come presently to the world. It will be a day of stern and righteous judgment for those whose privileged lives render them cold and indifferent to the way of life set forth by Jesus Christ. It will be a day when a finer, nobler, more consistent expression of Christian democracy will prevail. It will be a day when there will be less of discrimination as to who is worthy and who unworthy. This bust is surrounded by memorials of Britain's distinguished statesmen, poets and other men of letters. Sulgrave, in Northamptonshire, the ancestral home of Washington, is only 60 miles from London. In Brighton Church near this historical site are two sepulchral stones, one dated 1611 over the grave of the father of John Washington who emigrated to America, on which his heraldic arms appear impaled with those of his wife. The other stone covers the remains of the uncle of the emigrant and presents on brass the simple Washington family shield, with the extraneous crescent, the distinguishing badge in heraldry of a younger son. It is supposed that the stars and stripes of the American flag were taken from the shield of the Washington family. In the Washington family coat of arms the stripes are alternate red and white, as are those of this country's flag.

England, by acts and words, honored and respected Washington throughout his career. For example, at the time of the Revolutionary War, only a small minority of men in England had votes, Parliament being dominated by the great landholders. With the extension of the parliamentary franchise in later years and the growth of the press and democracy, the British appreciation of Washington also grew. This appreciation is attested by the words of Lord Brougham. great English barrister at the time, when he proclaimed "the test of the progress of mankind will be their appreciation of the character of George Washington." To this, the British historian, Green, added: "It was almost unconsciously that men learned to cling to Washington with a trust and faith such as few other men have won."

This estimate, if correct, is suggestive of an exceedingly dangerous form of partisanship. The legislation is not political in character, and it should not be approached from a partisan standpoint. To do so would be to engage in an exceedingly hazardous gamble with the national security.

unwise is the position Equally which has been taken by Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee. Mr. May says he will insist on his committee's bill, which calls for an unlimited extension of service, despite the fact that the Senate has passed and administration leaders in the House are supporting a modification which calls for an eighteen-month extension.

This compromise, providing as it does for further extension should need arise, seems to be adequate to insure the maintenance of the Army as an effective military organization. And it is believed to be acceptable to the Army high command, charged with the duty of perfecting our defenses.

In the light of these facts, it is evident that the national welfare requires that both Chairman May and the minority members of the House abandon their extreme positions and come to a prompt agreement on the Senate-approved compromise.

Purging a Union

The rank-and-file delegates to the United Automobile Workers' convention at Buffalo seemingly are prepared to override their national officers if necessary to deal effectively with Communist elements in the union.

At the outset, the convention refused to seat a slate of delegates headed by Harold Christoffel from the Allis-Chalmers local in Milwaukee. That local, allegedly under Communist domination, staged a costly defense strike several months ago, but the refusal to seat the delegates was based on the unconstitutional character of their election. On Friday the rank and file of the auto workers went after bigger game. By a decisive vote, the delegates, under the leadership of Walter and Victor Reuther, voted down a committee report which, in effect, would have permitted Lew Michener to resume his post as West Coast regional director. Mr. Michener was suspended after taking a leading part in the North American Aviation strike, which also was alleged to have been Communist inspired.

The union leadership, including R. J. Thomas, international president, and Richard Frankensteen, aviation director, who suspended Mr. Michener in the first instance, worked out a plan, embodied in the committee, report, which would have brought about his reinstatement with past "mistakes" forgiven.

Organized Brain Power

It is natural that the trained intelligence of the people of the United States should be correlated to the cause of national defense. President Roosevelt has assigned Dr. Vannevar Bush, a famous electrical engineer who has been at the head of the Carnegie Institution of Washington since 1939, to direct the Office of Scientific Research and Development, intended to enlist the brain power of American men and women of every class for the protection and the advancement of democratic civilization. This step obviously will offset the regimentation of genius which has been accomplished by the totalitarian countries in the recent past. But it also has other connotations which deserve consideration at the present moment.

What the future of free society may be will depend upon the outcome of the prevailing conflict in Europe and the Orient. Every thoughtful person realizes that the character of life is changing under the influence of the most compelling emergency the world ever has known. Millions aspire to an improvement of the elemental conditions of human existence. They are familiar with the tremendous gains achieved since the beginning of the twentieth century. All the more reason, then, have they for believing that many problems which now puzzle them may be solved in the years to come. The driving power represented by the axiom "necessity is the mother of invention" is an authentic creative force, as they regard it. But the public also is aware that a

It is well known that capture of Russia's harvest was one of the main German objectives. The reason why the Wehrmacht delivered its hardest blow in the center toward Moscow was not merely to split the Russian armies at their middle point and capture the Soviet capital, but also to force a bloodless evacuation of the Ukraine, thereby getting the still unburnable green harvest without trampling down the crops and otherwise disrupting the harvest, as a direct attack on the Ukraine would have done. This German agricultural objective has failed completely, owing to the magnificent fight put up by the Russian armies, which stood up to the Germans on the Soviet borders instead of retreating

How great is Germany's lost prize can be gauged by the fact that last year's Soviet grain crop amounted to the tremendous total of 4,430,000,-000 bushels-more than one-fourth of the average annual production for the entire world. And the indications are that this year's crop will be still larger. What this would have meant to strictly rationed Germany and its half-starved European vassals can be imagined. But this alluring hope now is a vain one. Amazing reports from various European sources tell of a mass migration of the civilian populations of the Ukraine and Central Russia eastward toward the Urals. This gigantic exodus, said to involve fully 25,000,000, will leave nothing behind for the Germans when the destruction squads have done their work. But, with the garnered harvest awaiting them, the refugees should not face famine during the coming winter, and their productive labor, if necessary, can be used to build up a new center of resistance along the Urals and in Siberia, like that in Western China after a similar mass migration.

Such shifts of populations stagger our Western imagination. Only Oriental or semi-Oriental peoples presumably are capable of carrying them out. In Soviet Russia the task is rendered easier by the fact that individuals own nothing except their personal belongings, so the abandonment of state-owned lands and dwellings involves no personal sacrifice. It is in the Soviet Union that the "scorched earth" policy first adopted by Free China may be pushed to its grimly logical conclusion.

Insects, science declares, are lured by scent. North woods visitors are sometimes prepared to admit that black flies, midges and mosquitoes are passionately fond of the aroma of pennyroyal, tar and citronella.

Only with difficulty did the Germans withdraw from this engagement to pull far to the rear out of range of the French.

The sequel is, however, that on this occasion as on many other occasions in the battle of France, the French command ordered its troops to withdraw during the night, leaving the field to the beaten panzer division. Said the Infantry Journal:

"The repeated repulse of the all-out tank attack on the Dyle positions west of Baudeset shows clearly the reasons for the general German tactical principle of using panzer divisions only against weak resistance and over favorable terrain. There is no indication that, left to their own devices, the tanks would ever have succeeded in crossing that railroad cut." The infantrymen say that it's the easy part, the 25-mile-a-day thrust against weak opposition, that the public remembers when thinking about tank attacks, but then they draw this moral, when commenting on the tough but less spectacular part:

"It is such scenes of 'blitzkrieg' war that every citizen should remember as well as every soldier and student of war. Such scenes as those hard, repeated, unsuccessful attacks by the panzer division on the French Dyle line. In those attacks, when the tanks couldn't gain another foot, even with Stuka and artillery support, the 'blitz,' the lightning, was arrested, but the 'krieg,' the war, was now there in the highest degree." The point is made that machines are necessary and vital in war, but so are men. After what Germany did in France with no more than 100.000 men in a relatively few tanks, the idea grew that the war of the future would be a war of relatively few men and a great number of machines. A more detailed understanding of what happened in France leads the military experts to conclude any lessons drawn from that part of the war may be unsatisfactory lessons. The reason is that resistance often was broken off before real fighting had occurred and when resistance was successful retreat was ordered nonetheless. German experience in Russia, too, suggests that the tank-plane team isn't an unbeatable combination when the enemy is ready to fight and is armed with adequate weapons.

The trouble with the United States Army, as it now is being built, lies not in the relative degree of mechanization. but in the slowness with which weapons are being provided. After a full year of supposedly high speed preparation the troops now in service are only partially armed with basic weapons of late model. There are rifles-some of older vintageand enough old-model machine guns. But there isn't enough ammunition for these weapons. And there remains a very great shortage of all kinds of artillery and of tanks and of aircraft.

Also on August 8 The Star printed a story of an extraordinary plot concocted by a pair of local conspirators. The testimony was brought out in a hearing before the Commissioners, in session to try a policeman, Officer Work, for making an unwarranted arrest and assaulting two citizens, Messrs. Bradshaw and Burgess. Says The Star: "It will be recalled that Officer Work arrested these gentlemen as suspicious characters and fired his pistol at them. They subsequently preferred charges against him, and the trial board after hearing the evidence recommended his dismissal from the force. "An effort has since been made to save the officer and that accounts for the affidavits presented today "A. Miller * * * states that he overheard

He swears that he heard Bradshaw explain how easy it would be to get up and walk over the roof of a certain frame house and thereby make it appear haunted."

The officer indignantly denied any misconduct on his part and threatened to "make it warm in the criminal court" for his accusers. Thus a new crime. conspiracy to haunt, was introduced to the District.

He has sent out letters to persons whose names appear in such publications as "Who's Who"-"the names of outstanding people of the day." In his letter he says: "Every one realizes that we are face to

He bemoaned the deletion of "applause," "loud applause," "laughter" and "boisterous laughter," which members have been accustomed to insert parenthetically with the corrected copy of their speeches. All "applause" and similar descriptive notations have been ruled out by the Speaker with the result that for nine weeks now there has been an "applauseless" Record. In his continuous observation of Congress for 40 years, Mr. Ludlow said, he has witnessed "two exhibitions of superlative honesty"

It was then the Speaker ruled that such words as "applause" are not

How the United States postal service has expanded since the first postmaster was appointed in Boston in 1639 and Benjamin Franklin was appointed first Postmaster General in 1753 is emphasized by Representative Wirt Courtney of Tennessee. He recalls that just before the Revolution Postmaster General Franklin was dismissed from that office by King George for insubordination, but when he left the office postroads were running from Maine to Florida and from New York to Canada and mails were being carried to and from the British Isles on a monthly schedule. > But London honored George Peabody not alone for his generous gift to aid the poor. Peabody's English ancestor was Francis Peabody, who emigrated from St. Albans, Hertfordshire, in 1665 and settled in Topsfield, Mass., two years later. The distinguished American statesman, Benjamin Franklin, had quite an interesting experience in London. Arriving there about 1725 without resources other than his ability to work for his own living, in his emergency, he took lodging in "Little Britain, Smithfield, at 3 shillings and 6 pence a week. The locality in which he lived being the center of the bookselling and printing trade, Franklin obtained employment in the art with which his name is always associated. Later he became postmaster for the English colonies in this country, and subsequently the first Postmaster General of the United States. Every Londoner takes pride in pointing to the marker on the little house in which Franklin lived in the days before the world knew his greatness. In the Middle Ages in England the word franklin meant a freeholder as distinguished from the great feudal landholders and their tenants. Benjamin Franklin's ancestors lived in the village of Ecton, Northamptonshire, for at least 300 years on a freehold of about 30 acres, the head of the family being a blacksmith, the eldest son always having been trained in the trade. Benjamin Franklin's father came to New England in 1682.

Japanese Moves Bring Far East Crisis Overshadowing Stalemate on Soviet Front

Review of 101st Week of War

By Blair Bolles.

The two current major mysteries of the war intrigued the world last week as they had been intriguing it for several weeks previous-the mysteries of what is happening in Russia and what is going to happen in Asia. Are the Russians putting up a resistance that will keep the Germans long occupied on the Soviet front? Are the Japanese going to take the step which, apparently, will mean outbreak of war in the southeastern corner of Asia? The second question is of more urgent importance to the United States, because in its answer lies the earliest prospect of American military action.

With President Roosevelt absent on a vacation at sea, Washington all week heard rumors that he and Winston Churchill, the British Prime Minister, had met on the wide Atlantic to discuss how far this country would go to halt the Japanese. Mr. Roosevelt went aboard his yacht, the U. S. S. Potomac, at New London and left reporters behind. The rumor originated in London, but it flourished in Washington. Its truth or falsity still is unknown.

Having established themselves in Indo-China, the Japanese now are seeking rights in neighboring Thailand. In Manila the belief grew among the informed that the British in Malay and Burma were making preparations to take control of the key points in Thailand before the Japanese got to them. This would be a forestalling move similar in general intent to the campaign waged by the British in Syria, which the British determined to seize before the Germans should seize it."

Large reinforcements of British imperial and Indian troops reached Singapore, along with R. A. F. personnel, while the aggressive plans now in motion have that objective." With that in mind, Secretary of State Hull on Thursday gave a new scolding to the French government at Vichy while he stayed himself from a clear statement regarding Siam. The Secretary disclosed at his press conference that he had received a new note from Vichy which was said in that provisional capital to inform the United States in general terms that France intended to defend her empire in her own way.

The Secretary made it clear that this country will remain skeptical of any French assurances on paper Vichy until events prove that the assurances mean something. Warned The Vichy note was considered an answer to a statement by Undersecretary of State Welles. He took France to task for allowing Japan to establish bases in Indo-China.

The Japanese throughout the week took a blustering attitude toward the United States. On Tuesday Comdr. Hideo Hiraide, the Japanese Navy's official spokesman, predicted in a popular magazine that the United States would seek bases on Russian soil and said that Japan "could not remain unconcerned," inasmuch as Japan would consider such bases a threat to herself.

On Monday the last Japanese ships in American ports cleared these harbors, and the feeling in San Francisco was that no other vessels flying the Rising Sun flag would be seen in those ports for a long time. But the difficulties of operations in the Karelian Isthmus, northeast of Leningrad, and against the large Russian garrison in Leningrad were expected to force the German drive in that direction to meet with slow success.

The German plan with regard to Kiev calls for enveloping the city by sweeping around it north and south. But the country is swampy, and advance is slow. Hungarian troops are leading the way into the Ukraine.

By the end of the week the German' high command reported that Axis troops knifing deep into the lower Ukraine had annihilated a Red Army force trapped southeast of Uman, 125 miles south of Kiev, capturing more than 30,-000 prisoners and the supreme commander of the Russian 6th Army. The high command report indicated that the main German thrust was directed at cutting off the Black Sea port of Odessa, 140 miles below Uman. London said the Kiev-Odessa railway line had been cut by the Germans.

In the north the Nazi high command said German columns driving toward Leningrad had captured Wesenberg, 68 miles southeast of the objective, and had penetrated to the Gulf of Finland, If the German armies are at the Gulf of Finland, the Russian Baltic fleet is in jeopardy.

SOVIET'S STAND MAY BRING FALSE HOPES

United States Defense Experts Fear Two-Front Action

By Constantine Brown.

The unexpected and spectacular resistance of the Russians on the western front is looked upon with certain misgivings in military quarters in Washington. This is not because high ranking Army and Navy officers have any bias against the political angle of the situation and fear the expansion of Communistic doctrines more than they fear the spread of Nazi beliefs. They are all pleasantly surprised at the stamina of the Red troops and hope that soon their defensive operations will turn into offensive action. But what worries our naval and military leaders is the fact that six weeks of deadlocked battle between the Nazis and the Soviets have brought forth another wave of optimism in this country. This optimism can be translated into a general belief that the Nazi total defeat cannot be far off and all the military dangers which have been besieging the United States are now considerably reduced.

Nothing is further from the truth, according to those responsible for the country's military defense. The United States is today strategically in the same position as was the Reich in 1939. It is facing a war and must make up its mind whether it must meet the totalitarian menace on the western or eastern front, in the Atlantic or the Pacific areas.

But we are not in a position to fight successfully on both fronts. In order to give our full measure of assistance to the British. Japan's threat must be removed. This can be done either militarily or diplomatically. In the latter case the diplomatic branch of the administration must maneuver Japan into such a position that definite assurances from Tokio are obtained that there will be no further expansion in the Southern Pacific.

Nazis May War Elsewhere.

The news from the German and the Russian fronts is scanty. The surmises of the War Department are based on generalities. But the professional soldiers in Washington do not believe that the German effort has been exhausted yet. They go further and say that in the event the war is stabilized on that front-which in their opinion is the maximum that can be expected this year -the Germans have enough man power and war material to move into Western Europe once more. In the Far East, Japan has been halted. It is only a temporary halt. The Tokio government directs its activities in accordance with what is going on in Europe. It has done so ever since it embarked on its expansionist move, as far back at 1931, when it entered Manchuria. Tokio was sure that the Russians would collapse within a few weeks after the German blitz started. They were mistaken, but could no longer stop their military movements. The plans for the occupation of Southern Indoof the British Empire and the United States were focused again on the Atlantic, Japan would jump into Thailand and prepare a major offensive against some of the Dutch and British possessions in the Pacific; not necessarily Singapore, Java or Sumatra, but some less well-defended positions like Borned and the Celebes Islands. Military and naval quarters in Washington feel that this country cannot at the present time face a war on two fronts. Neither our naval preparations nor our air force and Army are ready for such a stupendous task and they won't be ready for at least another three vears.

Consequently, naval and military strategists would like to see more clearly into the future. The fact that Japan is, for the time being, comparatively quiet does not mean that she will remain so for a long time. It is feared that German operations in the North Atlantic and the revolutionary outbreaks in South America would be synchronized with another leap of the Japanese into the Southern Pacific. This, it is felt, must be definitely avoided. Strategists argue that even if Germany is stopped in Russia and compelled to face a war of position, she still has enough forces to cause trouble in other theaters of operations.

our strategists, must be tangible-such as the military evacuation of Indo-China and the partial demobilization of the fleet. In exchange, the Western powers would undertake to recognize certain territorial gains of Japan on the Asiatic mainland.

Such an action of the leaders who are ruling Japan at the present moment seems highly improbable. These military leaders cannot consent to commit political harakiri and would rather plunge Japan into a total war than accept these terms. They count on the optimism of the Western powers, which believe that if Japan is quiet for a few weeks, everything is all right in the Far East.

Our military and naval observers know better. Many of them suggest that in order to avoid being embroiled in a war on two fronts later on, stringent measures involving, if necessary, the use of armed forces should be taken against Japan immediately. These observers don't believe in the early collapse of the German military power. They are conportant problems of the day.

Even in ordinary times the chairmanship of either the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or its Finance Committee is a full-time job. However, until last week, one man occupied both positions.

Now Senator George has given up the Foreign Relations post. He was compelled by Senate rules to yield one of the positions, and finance always has held an interest for him. He is regarded by many as the tax expert of the Senate and his studies into monetary problems have for years taken up much of his time.

He assumes his new post determined to use his influence to hold down the rising prices which threaten the country. Moreover, his committee will consider the new tax bill, probably the highest which this country has ever faced.

He approaches his new job as he has every other problem which has ever confronted him, and should you manage to get a peek into the Finance Committee room when that body is in session you would see sitting at the head of a long table a calm, deliberate-looking man.

Always Appears Unruffled.

No matter how heated may be a discussion, he always looks unruffled. His stiff, prim white collar never wilts, his starched white cuffs are always immaculate.

Emotion seemingly plays no part in his make-up. Judgment and reason combined with caution are behind all his utterances and actions. Moreover, he never forgets that he is a United States Senator. Despite this aloofness, Senator George is extremely popular. Down where he comes from he is considered unbeatable. He proved this to be true when President Roosevelt tried to lead, as Senator George puts it, "a second march through Georgia" in order to prevent his renomination as Senator. After a virulent presidential speech, Senator George who was on the platform, arose and shaking Mr. Roosevelt's hand said: "I accept the challenge." Senator George was sent back to the Senate for a third term.

heroine of a novel and not after the former capital of Austria), twice a day to get his mail, he is bombarded with salutations, traffic stops and business is at a standstill. He is so regular in doing this that townsfolk set their clocks by him.

Popularity followed him to Washington. Here, too, he gained the reputation of being one of the country's most valuable lawmakers. Carter Glass named him as the ablest member of the Senate since the death of Senator Borah. He is considered one of its most effective orators, notwithstanding that he makes few speeches, and has never had one of them printed. He talks without notes and confines himself to facts. Even his after-dinner addresses are never lightened by jokes, yet he has a certain dry humor which crops out unexpectedly.

Senator George in a frank conversation on world affairs displayed the same caution and calmness that have marked his entire career. Although he has been an active supporter of the administration on the defense and lease-lend measures, he said that he viewed with deep concern our active participation in the war and any steps that are not connected with our legitimate defense. On the other hand, he dreads any letdown in defense and cautions against any delays. And he regards it highly important that "we choose our own friends and maintain such a position that we also determine our own national policies." He considers this paramount in connection with Japan's move into Indo-China. While he thinks we should consult with the British in the course of our planning, he says our collaboration should stop at the exchange of informa-

From his talk I gathered that he is a mild non-interventionist, and I asked him how he accounted for the strong feeling in the South for active participation in the war.

suggested a plan of compulsory investment of profits in Government securities as a preventive measure, but that the Treasury had turned down the suggestion

When Senator George first became a member of the Senate, he had hoped to become a member of the Judiciary Committee. This was not strange, for up to the time he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Thomas Watson, he had been a judge in various State courts.

Born 62 years ago in Preston, Ga., he was educated in that town's graded schools. Then he went to study law at Mercer University, where he worked to pay his own way. He opened his first office in Vienna, and there he has lived ever since. His home is a reconstructed tenant's house on a large farm, and when there he rarely goes out in the evening except to see an occasional moving picture.

Dislikes Evening Clothes.

He has an apartment in a local hotel, and if he is not entertaining a few friends informally, he is likely to read or play rummy with Mrs. George. He hates evening clothes.

Not so long ago he was invited to an informal dinner at the White House to talk over financial matters. It was hinted that dinner jackets were to be worn. While the Senator has a tail coat, he has no dinner jacket, and he and Pat Harrison, who was still alive at the time, decided they did not want to talk taxes in stiff shirts. They told this to Steve Early, the President's secretary. When they arrived they found the President and his other guests in business clothes. He is an extremely early riser and gets to his office before any of his secretaries, When they arrive they find him at one of their desks opening his mail. He does not like any one else to do this. "Right busy" as he is, there is a cer-

By John Clagett Proctor. Boat racing in the District of Columbia has always been a popular sport, and the record shows that a boat race took place here more than a century ago, when, according to a newspaper clipping, "An interesting aquatic entertainment took place on the 22d of May, 1838. A boat race of 1 mile, in which five boats were entered, started near the Navy Yard and was witnessed by several thousand persons, who had previously repaired to the yard and arsenal for that purpose." Here, however, the item ends and no information is given regarding the participants or how the race resulted.

However, where this is the first race recorded, so far as the writer knows, one of the leading clubs in and around the first boat club in the District is reliably recorded as being the Falcon, Washington. It was known far and wide which was organized September 2, 1844, for its skill with the oar and its dogged with Joseph B. Tate as president. Matthew Henry Stevens was its first treasurer and John F. Coyle, who was for a decade or more one of the proprietors of the National Intelligencer, the secretary. The other original members included W. H. Topping, George McD. Burke, Curtis B. Graham, George Patten, Charles King, John Waters, Potomacs, representing Georgetown, and James Charles, Charles T. Smith, William E. Marcoe, A. S. Newton, James deus A. Prevost, Whitman C. was one of the most active in originating the club, and expressed himself as being desirous of getting together a crew "with plenty of beef in the boat."

The Undines proceeded to select a crew of heavyweights, with a view to entering into contests, but there was little prospect of this, since the ages of the men of the older club and the difference in boats made a contest on even terms out of the question, though at times they did try to see which crew could row the farthest during a gale of wind or during a freshet. Following this and for several years, superb style. #### determination to win. First on Potomac.

An account printed in The Star more than half a century ago says that the year following the organization of the Analostans, two other boat clubs were formed, namely, the Anacostia, representing East Washington, and the it is said that between these two clubs the first boat race on the Potomac was F. Halladay, Josiah R. Bayley, Thad- held, over a mile-and-a-half course, the wharves erected along this water course,

Though the forming of the Potomac Club is indefinitely set at 1869, yet, under the name of the Potomac Barge Club, it had its actual beginning in the summer of 1859, and about this event The Star of June 13 of that year has this to say: "A number of our citizens have formed themselves into a club under the title of the Potomac Barge Club for the purpose of aquatic exercise and pleasure. They have purchased a beautiful barge of 40 feet in length with six oars and finished and furnished in most at Georgetown, from which place the club will embark in her this afternoon at 5 o'clock and proceed to their new boathouse at the Tenth Street Canal Bridge under the escort of the Falcon Boat Club, in their beautiful barge, which has so long been the champion and pride of our waters." How strange it must seem to many, especially to the newcomers, when they read that this boathouse of the Potomac Barge Club was located "at the Tenth Street Canal Bridge," and yet even today many are still living who can recall the old canal that sluggishly flowed along B street north and the capal boats and other small craft that could be daily seen unloading their cargoes at the once the old Tiber Creek. Indeed, there are others still among us who, in their childhood days, have taken the excursion boat for a summer's outing well up into the Washington Canal.

It does seem odd, and yet it is a fact, that from Sixth street to the Potomac River, well up into the Mall to the south, was once covered by water, as well as was quite a strip to the north of B street, which-between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets-even extended to include a part of the site of the beautiful marble building of the District government. The Center Market, the granite building of the National Museum, much of the Department of Commerce Building and all of the limestone building for the Bureau of Internal Revenue rest upon ground which, during the early days of Washington, was covered by the Tiber and even afforded good fishing.

All of Ohio avenue from Twelfth to near Fifteenth street, a part of Louisiana avenue from Ninth to Tenth street, and nearly all of the block in which stands the old Ford's Opera House might well have been bought at one time with riparian rights.

> posed this organization. Some years ago Mr. Doyle, in going over the history of this club, referred to some of the important events when the Potomac crew carried to victory the colors of the club, and mentioned as the greatest of these prior to 1906, the one which made up the heavy and light fours, and which, when thrown into an eight, formed a crew that was the best the city ever had. The heavy four included Dyer, Reynolds, Robinson and Elmore, and the light crew. Fisher, Kearney, Cornwell and Warden. These two made up the famous light-oared crew that, with Doyle in the coxswain seat, won the $1,000 cnampionship cup given by the Staten Island Boat Club for a race on the Kill von Kulls course between Staten Island and New Jersey

The beginning of the Columbia Boat Club is contained in an item in The Star of April 12, 1880, which reads:

"A New Boat Club .- A meeting for the purpose of organizing a new boat club was held Saturday night at the Riggs House and was well attended by gentlemen of Georgetown and Washington. and an organization to be known as the Columpia Boat Club was formed, with an active list of about 40 members, comprising many of the best known among our amateur boating men. A tasteful town, and the flag of the new aspirants thrown to the breeze. As the Potomac is broad enough and the material plentiful for another boating association in our midst, it is to be hoped that the existence of a new club will add an impetus to boating during the coming summer never before known in our waters." Just a little over two years after they were formed into a boat club the Columbias acquitted themselves gloriously at Philadelphia in the regatta of October 26-27, 1880, winning the four-oared and the eight-oared races. Always interesting in its sports columns today, The Star covered this event in its usual interesting way. Here is a part of the report of the lace:

"THE WASHINGTONIANS IN PHILADELPHIA.

"THE REGATTA YESTERDAY-COLUMBIA'S TWO VICTORIES. "The first race in the regatta yesterday afternoon was between the four-oared crews of the Columbias of Washington and the Crescents and Fairmounts of Philadelphia. "COLUMBIA'S FIRST VICTOR. "At the first quarter the Crescents led by half a length. Columbias second and Fairmounts third. The three crews were soon together and a foul was imminent. but the Columbias pulled out and at the end of the mile the Fairmounts had gone to second place. A pretty contest followed between the Columbias and Fair-mounts, but the Washington boys got warmed to their work and crossed the line winners by four lengths in 9.29%. Fairmounts second and the Crescents far behind. The crowd of Washington people present greeted this victory with cheer after cheer.

"COLUMBIAS WIN THE EIGHT-OARED RACE.

"The last race of the day was the one for eight-oared shells, in which the Columbias had for their antagonists the famous crew of the Metropolitans of New York.

"The race was very hotly contested and excited the greatest interest among the spectators. The two crews got an even start and at the first quarter they were still pulling side by side. Nute commenced to pull on the pressure and the Columbia boat began to forge ahead. The lead they maintained and crossed the line the winner in 8:10, the best record made by an amateur club since

"Among the members of the Columbia Club here, besides the crew, are Messrs. Conn. Williams, Coffin, Buckingham, Harry, Lem and Len Towers. Berthrong, Johns, Rothrock, McFalls, Ward, Kennedy, Ryan, Livingstone, Zeigler, Ballantyne, Reed, Babcock, Dorsey, Brown, F. L. Williams, W. B. T. Keyser and H. B. Noble, ir."

The next big outside race in which the Columbia eight came off victorious was when they won the Schuylkill Navy race at Philadelphia on July 10, 1884. Like the Potomac Club, undoubtedly the Columbia Boat Club also has living a number of its old members, and one of these, whom the writer knows well, is Johan Kondrup, a member of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants, who never tires of talking of his experiences in boat racing in trying to uphold the reputation of the District of Columbia and the Columbia Boat Club. Of the many events of this kind, in which this club engaged, perhaps the one on the Potomac River on October 10, 1883, is the most notable. At least it was a thrilling race and one can almost picture, in his mind, the desperate struggle of the crews and the intense excitement of the crowd of interested spectators. And again we fall back on The Star for its description, which follows: "The boat race this afternoon between the Potomacs and Columbias has called forth the greatest interest among boating men. It will undoubtedly prove a, very close race, and the finish, which can be seen from the boat houses, the Aqueduct Bridge and Analostan Island, will be a fine sight. The judges are: Col. Jones for the Potomacs, W. A. Smith for the Columbias and Richard Pairo of the Analostans, the last mentioned to drop the flag. Charles Galt and Robert Leding will be timekeepers. The referee, President McKenney of the Analostans." The following day The Star says: * The contest yesterday between the Columbias and Potomacs was a glorious victory for the former, yet until the race was nearly over the majority of the spectators thought the Potomacs would win. The defeat which the Eurekas and Crescents met at their hands at the late regatta, raised the expectations of the Potomacs and their friends to a high pitch. An immense amount of money changed hands upon the result of yesterday's race * * *. At the word the Potomacs took the lead, but did not hold it an eighth of a mile. The Columbias soon began to creep up on them, and, aided by a little wild steering on the part of the Potomacs at about the quarter, they were soon even with them. "Then a desperate struggle for the lead. When the Potomac men in the referee's tug saw that the Columbias were holding their competitors and even passing them, rowing 40 strokes to the minute, while the Potomacs were rowing 47. their hopes fell. The Columbias gained the lead, but the Potomacs held on doggedly, fighting, for every inch. At the Aqueduct Bridge the Columbias were leading by nearly a length. Here the Potomacs made a desperate spurt. but so did the Columbias, and the struggle was magnificent. As the two boats swept past the Columbia boathouse, with scarcely open water between them, cheer upon cheer rent the air from the large crowd assembled at the boathuse and on the neighboring wharves. The Columbias spurted again and had increased their lead to a length and a half when the line was crossed. Time: Columbias, 9:221/2: Potomacs, 9:27. Although the Potomacs were bitterly dis-Work of living artists may be shown appointed at the result, they took their defeat as gracefully as possible, acknowledging that their men were fairly outrowed, but consoling themselves with hopes for next season.'

Source of Boat.

The Falcon's boat was purchased from s club in Philadelphia and, according to an early account, was an eight-oared lap-streak barge and was considered a model craft. It would bear very favorable comparison, even after the lapse of years, with many of the boats of today, although it was entirely and unnecessarily too heavy. However, its owners-like a child with a new toyhandled it very delicately and got in and out of it with the utmost care, always wearing slippers or pumps. According to the recollections handed down by an early member: "The club located its boat house on the east bank of the canal at the corner of Sixth and B streets N.W., where the Baltimore and Potomac Depot now stands. Soon after the formation of this club another club was organized called The Gazelle. It was composed of Samuel Lewis, the well-known jeweler; John Reese, William Sloan, Charles Husleman, William Birch, John Williams, William Llody and Robert Ball." And the report said: "We purchased what we then considerd a beautiful six-oared race boat, built at Kensington, Pa. Our boat house stood on the south bank of the canal just east of Twelfth street. There was a friendly rivalry between the clubs, but we never succeeded in getting up a race between the two, though we sought to do so. Both of the clubs practiced daily on the river and Arlington Spring was their favorite resort. "About 1843." Mr. Bell goes on to say, "a cyclone appeared to form over the Virginia channel of the Potomac River, from which a column of water of vast proportions was drawn up to a great height where it mingled with the clouds. The whirlwind took a northeasterly direction over to the entrance to the canal at Seventeenth street, thence down the canal to Twelfth street, where it picked up the boats of Mr. Kilman and scattered them indiscriminately. It then struck the lumber yard owned by Ulysses Ward, on the north bank of the canal at Twelfth street, and carried large quantities of lumber whirling and crushed to splinters through the air. It next struck the market house at Ninth street from which it stripped the entire roof, extending to Seventh street, crushing it into small pieces and scattering them, literally, to the winds. At this place its fury seemed to be spent and it retired to the higher atmosphere."

"Well, here it is. Let us make a bow to it all. The last 30 or 40 years brought to its apex the day of the resplendent parvenues. The museums they have built memorialize the culture of the colonial mind which looked uneasily abroad to make sure that its new wealth had the right sort of trappings. That day, except for a few backward individuals, is ended. The 20 and 30 year clauses which protect the uneasy superiorities back of our rarity collections still hang on. Let 'em hang. "If we are to have a living art in America we must get it away from the museums. We who live do not want to be listed only with the dead. The dead are all right. Their works are all right. But a living art needs a living environment." concludes Mr. Benton. "I have said I'd rather have a picture in a lively saloon than in a museum; I mean it. There is no precious Ivory Tower palaver in a saloon, to stand between a picture and the people who want to see it." John Sloan, 70-year-old art teacher never painted a still-life, has been a fighting president of the Society of Independent Artists most of the time since the World War. "I am not surprised at the shivering another art gravevard or catacombs." the New York artist says. "It is nevertheless very regrettable that such a potentially powerful assistance to the living American artist is not to be available."

Additional criticism comes from two men of widely divergent origins now represented in Washington by murals for the Department of Justice and Interior Department buildings. George Biddle, artist member of the famous Philadelphia family, declares that the scarcity of American paintings "does not in any way surprise me since the donors of the collection never showed the slightest interest in American art."

"I can not criticize the policy of the trustees in blacklisting American art." Mr. Biddle says. "They are quite justified in limiting their sphere of interest to any school of art they choose-18th century English, Italian, Egyptian, Sumerian. > He declares the difficulty with presentday American art "is that no one is able to judge it with any perspective. By waiting a quarter of a century after an artist's death, most of his contemporaries, who might be swayed by sentimental considerations, will have passed from the scene."

"Every so often some one, probably seeking publicity, makes the statement that museums are mausoleums, devoted to dead art because they do not fill their galleries with the work of living artists," Mr. Burchfield asserts.

"The only proper way to make a distinction between 'dead' and 'living' art is to consider the spirit-when it was produced has nothing to do with the case. Recently it was my privilege to view the Chinese paintings in the Freer Museum (in Washington). Some of these are over 800 years old, yet they are more 'alive' than at least 99 per cent of the work being done by living artists. It is the 1 per cent, or one-tenth of 1 per cent. that a museum like the National Gal-

"The great need today is not to make museums, but for the creation of a much higher standard than now obtains. Twenty-five years ago there was a real need for a liberal revolution, but the pendulum has swung too far in the opposite direction. The decline of American art patronage almost to the vanishing point is probably due to many reasons more or less obscure. But one reason I think must be the progressive lowering of our standards, which has created in the mind of the public confusion and resentment.

"In times of decadence, as at the present, it is well to have a few institutions that are above and beyond the ever-shifting tastes of the moment. It is only through them that storms are weathered. That is the purpose of an unalterable creed in an organized religion, of a constitution in government. "I consider the situation serious * * * it is evident that we have reached some kind of all-time low in depravity. Just one illustrative incident: "In a local (New York State) art exhibition consisting of the work of adult artists, an 11-year-old girl was given a 'place of honor.' She was given a dinner, had her picture in the paper, etc. And her work, not without naive charm, was no better, or worse than any 11-year-old child does. In another current exhibition, boys of 15 have their work accepted along with older men. We are so, so afraid we are going to miss a few geniuses. But it never hurt a genius of twice 15 years to be kicked around a little." A settlement of the gallery debate is suggested by John Steuart Curry, distinguished artist-in-residence at the University of Wisconsin. He thinks it would be a "good idea" for the Government to build a second art museum, "contemporary works could be placed in this and be allowed to sit for some years before they would be moved up to the National Gallery."

Completed plans for such a museum of modern art are already in the posession of Edward Bruce, head of the section of fine arts in the Public Buildings Administration. This would be the projected Smithsonian Gallery of Art, on the site across the Mall from the National Gallery. Mr. Bruce, well known painter, considers its construction vital to house examples of an "American art which is on its way as never before."

The idea also finds favor with Director Finley of the National Gallery. Reporting the gallery is firmly opposed to letting in contemporary art, he points out that it was the idea of Andrew Mellon to follow the lines of the National Gallery in London and the Louvre in Paris, where "there is a similar period of waiting after the artist's death, until his reputation has become firmly established and his work can be judged more dispassionately."

Fighting Fires by Parachute

By Bill Clark.

MISSOULA, Mont., Aug. 9 .- That daring young man on the flying trapeze, swooping out of the sky by parachute, is fast becoming Uncle Sam's forest fire trouble shooter in the rugged Western wilderness Successful last year with two pioneering six-man crews, the Forest Service has expanded the idea to a first largescale experiment in which smoke chasers plunge out of airplanes to pounce on fires in remote, roadless sectors.

The service, recognizing that speed to the scene is a prime factor in fire control, is training a flying squadron of 24 sun-bronzed, muscular collegians in the new technique.

Significantly, each is a forestry school fully hand-picked, not for jumping ability but for fire control qualification. Having learned that crackerjack fire fighters can be taught to jump, the service looked to colleges in Montana. Idaho, Washington, Oregon and California for its recruits.

adopted this stepchild of modern warfare. Maj. Evan W. Kelley, regional forester here, said the first forest project was instituted by the North Pacific region at Winthrop, Wash., October 5 to November 15, 1939, with these principal objectives:

To determine the feasibility of landing smokechasers by parachute in rough terrain at high altitudes in timbered areas:

To develop and test protective clothing suitable for safe landing in timber, rocks, on steep slopes and other hazardous jumping sites: To investigate devices and procedures for applying the method, if found practicable, including communication, lower- trolled parachute for emergency.

and a crash helmet. The first real innovation in equipment came with adaptation of the Army-type of static line to the special parachutes made for forest use. The device in effect is an automatic trip attached to the plane at one end and the jumper's parachute release at the other. Now the jumper simply leaves the ship and the 'chute opens mechanically. #### Times Changed.

Times have changed. With the arrival of 65,000 to 80,000 sailors, 40,000 to 50.000 soldiers and 20,000 defense workers, many with families, the housing problem became acute, food prices soared and the problem of entertainment for thousands of unmarried men at loose ends became a serious one.

A similar situation exists in defense centers on the American mainland, but this island of Oahu has only 598 square miles, much of it mountains, and most of the useful land is owned by estates and is available only on lease. What land is for sale for residential purposes is sold only by the square foot. Fifty cents a square foot is not an exorbitant price for desirable lots. Prices go much higher.

Hawaii Faces Acute Housing Problem

By Hugh Lytle.

HONOLULU, Aug. 9.-Hawaii is being fortified against invasion, but a great invasion is already under way as soldiers, sailors and defense workers concentrate on this outcrop of lava in the mid-Pacific from all parts of the Nation. Hawaii means defense to the Army and Navy, loneliness for soldiers and sailors. profits for business and landlords and romance to some women. It means paradise to the tourist bureau, although the tourist industry is not what it was.

But to the national defense worker Hawaii is just the Babylon of the Pacific, where island-brewed beer has been hiked to 25 cents a bottle and where rents are incredibly high.

Time was when the erstwhile Sandwich Islands furnished an unusually pleasant, albeit an unusually expensive, place to live. With the coming of 150,000 service men, defense workers and numerous attached families this city has been transformed from a sleepy, small town into a boom community with the honky-tonk overtones of Coney Island.

It is more primitive than ever because of the overtaxed public utilities. It is

One lot owner built four two-bedroom houses on his property, put them on the market at $10,500 each and when they did not sell in two days rented them at an average of $125 a month

The Army and Navy built blocks of houses, not nearly enough, and took steps to, protect their personnel from being gouged. Nothing has been done, however, to protect civilians from having rents jacked up. This has been done, but there was no place to move, and the civilians stayed put.

Advertising Shows.

Rental advertisements are an indication of conditions. A long list of houses wanted to rent includes, for the most part, requests by people who want twobedroom homes at $25 to $75 a month. Some offer cash bonuses for information. Another very short list offers houses to rent, perhaps furnished, at $100 to $350 a month. The speeded tempo has put a strain on public utilities that has made the automatic telephone system break down fre- progress of civilization rendered obso- him that if he pulls that other closely quently, necessitating an expansion program.

Region 1 headquarters at Missoula commandeers a private flying service ship which heads for a ranger station deep in the forest where the flying squadron is quartered, there to pick up fire tools, supplies and at least two parachutists.

Once above the fire locality, the equipment and rations go overboard by parachute. The fire fighters plummet earthward, always in twos, so that one can help his companion extinguish the blaze. and help, too, if he is injured in landing.

The smoke chasers, their 'chutes retrieved, are directed to their equipment by two-way radio from the cruising plane. The fire is routed with shovel or pulaski (a combination grub hoe and BX).

It's a risky business. A jumper must be skilled in steering his parachute away from roaring creeks and canyon walls. He must know how to reach the ground quickly if carried into a tree. Most of all, he must swing just clear of the fire area itself.

There's drudgery, too. With the fire killed, the smokechasers face a long hike back to the permanent base, around cliffs, across creeks, through dense thickets. Usually there are no roads, and trails are few conference. The top money question in a quiz session is simple compared to the most elementary that may come flying at him from any spot in his oval office.

Neither the questions nor his answers are sugar coated. The questions are framed deliberately to elicit the most news. And the subject that will turn the biggest news tap is not necessarily a pleasant one. The audience is not a group of tourists and partisans come to listen and admire and applaud. The men and women in it have seen Presidents come and go.

Moreover, in a period of international stress and strain his audience holds correspondents not only from Russia, England and Canada, but from Germany, Japan, France and other Axis-dominated countries.

Mr. Roosevelt knows when he winds up his preliminary and brief conference with Stephen Early, his press secretary, a minute or so before the newsmen come swarming in that not only what he says, but how he says it, will soon be recorded in the newspapers of the world. A nod of the head, a flick of ashes from his cigarette, a stubborn slant to his ivory cigarette holder, a chuckle, a word of derision, all of these will have a bearing upon the interpretation given to what he says.

Wilson Criticism.

Five, or at the most 10, minutes of He said foreign correspondents were suppreparation puts President Roosevelt in plying confidential information to their shape for the most rigorous question bee embassies. The same argument has been raised with regard to Mr. Roosevelt's conferences. But no curb has yet been placed upon their attendance. Mindful of their presence, he is extremely careful when he talks about foreign affairs and the American defense program.

Now and then one of the German correspondents uses a telephone in the outer lobby of the White House to give news to his Berlin office immediately after an important White House press conference. More foreign correspondents than American waited for advance copies of the President's last fireside speech and the full text had been telephoned to Berlin before it was broadcast in America.

The whole structure of carefully built diplomatic relations might be smashed by an unguarded press conference word. The newsmen about the President's desk realize this. Often a question will be phrased: "Mr. President, is there anything you can tell us about" this or that phase of international affairs. But there never is any indication that a reporter would try to protect Mr. Roosevelt from himself, as has happened at other press conferences of public officials. No one ever speaks up and asks: "Is that what you mean to say, Mr. President?" Every one takes it for granted that he knows exactly what he means to say, even to the slightest gesture and shade of emphasis.

All sorts of dire predictions arose in 1933 when he announced on March 8 that he would follow the same style of behave, from Caesar's Commentaries on, so has the slower but equally inevitable lete most discussion on the art of fishing. When life was simple, it was possible to get the entire lowdown on it from one book, Izaak Walton's Compleat Angler. Ike told where to go for what variety, how to use what tackle, when to use what bait, and how to cast it. He even told what the fish thought. Ye Compleat Angler was one of the six best sellers of the century, and even today copies may be found in club roomsof various Izaak Walton Leagues all over America. But not as a practical textbook. Too many complications have cropped up since his time, of which he had no conception. Many of these have been handled by less gifted but more up-todate authors, but by no means all. Some of the most obvious problems have been totally neglected. A few of these the present author proposes to discuss, had to throw most of them away to keep the boat from sinking. Also tell allied one-that tomorrow he expects to do even better than vesterday-he must bet $100 even money on it, or shut up.

Naturally the captain realizes he has drawn a lemon on this charter, but he is a philosopher and knows that has to happen some of the time. Tomorrow, no doubt, he will catch a load of greenhorns even more naive than usual, and his luck will even up. Meanwhile, although he is definitely hooked, he can be quite co-operative in plans for success. If he keeps his bait box on deck, you can get him to move it below. Just tell him that your five companions are the usual run-of-the-Bay cloth headed amateurs, and he will realize as well as you that sooner or later one of them would knock the bait overboard by accident if given the ghost of a chance to do so. Make an agreement with him on the amount of bait that he allows on deck by them, you have only yourself to blame.

Let us assume that you, one of a party of six, have been commissioned to hire a boat for use on the Chesapeake Bay. The haphazard way to do this is to pick the nearest craft, ask the price, and charter it with no more ado. The correct way, however, is to cruise along the waterfront, asking each skipper to start his motor when it is cold. When you find one who can do this in half a minute, he is worthy of further consideration. If not, to heck with him. There is no percentage in drifting around aimlessly on the Bay while a major overhaul takes place, and it doesn't help a bit to hear the captain say that such a thing never happened to him before in 50 years, come Michael-

Next Price Step.

The next step, just after the engine starts, is to knock $10 off the charter price, and walk away when the offer is refused. Not too far; you must give the skipper a chance to catch you somewhere on the dock. Ye Compleat Angler should realize that the vessel will be every bit as good, when the boss meets your new price, and much easier on the pocketbook.

and if you, Mr. Fisherman, fail to profit at any moment. Four ounces should be about right. The same principle applies to the beer; allow only one unopened bottle on deck at any time. Salt water is not much of a thirst quencher.

Using Jumbo Shrimp.

And before leaving the subject of bait, if he uses shrimp get him to provide the jumbo kind instead of the usual peewee variety. If you don't get any fish, jumbo shrimp are not bad to take back to the wife for a meal.

Your dockside labors over, your move should be to visit, one after another, the other five fisherman and collect their share of the mazuma, well in advance. Neglect of this precaution may mean that at payoff time you may have to carry good old Charley's share of the load and wait for reimbursement until his next pay day. The strictly honest should assess each for one sixth of the true charter price, but there is also an opportunity for gangster-trained anglers to discard six as a divisor, use another one ranging anywhere from five down to three, and pocket the difference. This has been done, but never by high-class people.

The above discussion is not to be construed in any way as a slur on Izaak Walton. He just happened to live in the wrong age, and the author feels sure that if he could get him on the ouija board, and tell him all the terrible things

No Duties Here.

If and when any of them are returned to their home stations as a result of the field cleanup work, it was indicated that so far as the local men are concerned, there will be no duties for them to perform here, and they would have to return to their civilian status. While the law permitting the organization of home guards within the States was adopted, it was said that no provision is made for the organization of a home guard force for the District of Columbia.

There are said to be several reasons for believing that no action would be taken locally. One of the most important is that there is no apparent need for such a force here, because there is a local force of regular units, including the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, which could be called out to handle any emergency in this area which required the presence of the troops to assist the peace authorities. The other reason is that the expense of operating the home guard force tion will take place at the meeting must be borne by local funds, without any help from the Federal Government

Much Equipment Coming,

Belief that the time is not far F. Gordon, Joseph F. Brooks and distant when the last of the local | Walter W. While no additional planes have been received, other material which will be needed as soon as they are called upon to be inducted into the field service are being shipped to local headquarters. In the repacking of the equipment for prompt shipment, there is needed for carpenters, and the officers in they have been trying to find carpenters for enlistment in the organization. ## The Loan Shark Problem

By JESSE C. SUTER

Last Monday the long-expected unfavorable report on the Sumners-Capper District of Columbia national representation joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution, was filed with the Senate by the Committee on the Judiciary. The report followed closely the oral report and suggests clearly that a new proposal may be readily drawn which will overcome the apparent misgivings of the committee. The report is considered by advocates to be of special value as indicating that every objection may be met by a new and simple form of amendment.

Monday was also notable for the holding of the first conference of the Senate District Committee with District officials and the new municipal attorney to the committee. Police Department, crime-wave control and consolidation of some of the local government activities were among the matters discussed. It is understood that Attorney Camalier is to busy himself drafting a plan for the reorganization of the District government.

The highway plan and the proposed increase of the District motor vehicle fuel tax has continued to engage the attention of the House District Committee. So far no one has raised the question as to what part of this costly highway plan is to be paid by the principal beneficiary, the United States Government

Chairman Frederic A. Delano of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has produced a new plan as a partial solution of the downtown traffic problem. Every fourth street in the downtown area would be made a major thoroughfare. These streets would be crossed by traffic only at every third block, with turns on or off at intermediate blocks. Signals would be simplified and "clover leaf" separations would be placed at each major turn. Parking would be prohibited on these 6-lane major thoroughfares.

Definite announcement has been made of the retirement of Maj. Ernest W. Brown as superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department. He has been granted leave of absence until October 31. Prior to the expiration of this accumulated leave he will submit his formal request for retirement from the department. Inspector Edward J. Kelly has been designated acting superintendent and has already assumed office.

The acting superintendent, with approval of the Commissioners, is making a number of shifts among the chief officials of the department and will put into effect some of the recommendations of the House District Committee.

Proposed Industrial Accident Prevention Commission

Organized labor and the civic organizations united at a Senate District Committee hearing Wednesday in support of the proposed law setting up an Industrial Accident Prevention Commission under the local government. The pending bill would create a commission charged with the administration of the law.

Chairman McCarran would amend the bill so as to put this work under the District Minimum Wage Board. This would be the beginning of the Senator's plan to cut down the number of local boards and would initiate a proposed reorganization of the District government

It has been learned that the proponents of the bill are satisfied with the plan to give the jurisdiction to the wage board instead of to a new independent body. They see in this development the ultimate creation of a local department of labor. Administration under the Minimum Wage Board is perfectly feasible, for the actual work would be done by inspectors and a clerical force employed specially for the purpose. It is expected that any added burden on the board would be light, once the work is organized.

Industrial accident prevention was advocated in a report to the Federation of Citizens' Associations by its Committee on Safety. The bill under consideration, at the time, was approved in principle with a number of recommended changes. These changes have been incorporated in the bill considered at the hearings with the result that there is a united civic and labor support of the measure. Corporation Counsel Keech represented the Commissioners in the hearing and put up a strong case for approval by the committee.

That there is a positive need for this legislation is shown by the recent report of the United States Employes' Compensation Commission for the month of July. Industrial accidents in the District of Columbia during July, 1941, resulted in 6 deaths and 3.222 cases of injury.

C-7

This United States agency would like to be given the authority to perform the functions contemplated by the bill but it is contended by Mr. Keech that this is a District matter and belongs to a District agency. In this he was given unanimous local support. * * * *

No Progress in Many Years on Loan Shark Problem

Welfare and civic organizations have for a long period sought of Congress needed amendments to the so-called Loan Shark Act of 1913. Since 1935 organized efforts, supported by the District officials, have been made to induce Congress to act. Numerous hearings have been held and substantial data submitted.

The Act of 1913, which limited the interest rate on small unsecured loans to 1 per cent a month, was supported by well-intentioned social welfare interests and was designed to relieve needy borrowers of the necessity of paving heavy interest charges to loan sharks for the loan of money which was needed desperately. The theory was that the reputable loan agencies and individual money lenders would handle such business to the exclusion of the extortionists

It was soon found that the act did not solve the problem but, possibly, did make it a little more inconvenient for the needy borrower to contact an outside "shark" when he could get no loan here. The risks involved in the making of such loans are so great that lenders are unwilling to take a chance at a 1 per cent rate.

Each year the social service and civic forces have continued to petition Congress to modernize the law so that these needy ones may get money from reputable lenders who will deal with them honestly and charge no more than is justified by the hazardous character of the loan.

The 1913 law requires small loan companies in the District to pay a license fee of $500 annually and they are then permitted to charge a maximum of 1 per cent per month up to $200. That would be fine if the borrowers could really get the money. When these borrowers have to turn to sharks operating here illegally or to concerns in nearby Maryland and Virginia they have to pay much higher rates with numerous charges and fees added.

The bill pending before the House District Committee permits a charge of 2 per cent per month on unpaid monthly balances on loans up to \$500. Representative Jack Nichols, Democrat, of Oklahoma, devoted considerable time and study to this problem. His bill in 1939 would have made  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent per month the legal rate on loans not exceeding \$300. No brokerage, insurance or service fees would be permitted. Loans in violation would become invalid or uncollectable. False or misleading statements in connection with small loans would be prohibited. Small loan companies, under the Nichols bill, would be required to procure a license, maintain a bond of \$5,000 and keep a cash capital of \$25,000.

Some borrowers are said to have been charged by loan sharks rates and fees equivalent to from 20 per cent per month upward. Some of such charges it has been reported have aggregated 80 per cent a year

All of these conditions and more have been brought to the attention of Congress through committee hearings but the problem continues to be among those unsolved. Most of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives who have shown an interest in the question express indignation at the loan sharks and sympathy for the victims but a practical settlement of the question is always postponed. Each District day in the House it has been hoped for some time that the bill would be ready with a committee report but it has had the unfortunate classification of being a "controversial" and as such is withheld from action.

Some of the civic and social leaders have been known to wonder If the individuals and concerns engaged in the loan shark game are responsible for delay in the settlement of this urgent civic and social problem. They consider the required relief as being long overdue.

Model Transportation to Water Gate Concerts

To complain vigorously at the service of the Capital Transit Co. is considered a fundamental prerogative of the individual citizen as well as the right and duty of all civic organizations. Such complaints are looked upon as the regular thing and entirely devoid of news value save as to the degree of unsatisfactoriness.

The mild, and almost bashfully expressed, favorable comment on the fine bus service supplied by Mr. E. D. Merrill's organization is so unusual as to rate as news.

Some patrons of the earlier concerts in former years found the Water Gate a rather inaccessible point to reach by means of mass transportation system. This caused some to stay home and content themselves with listening to the brief portion of each concert which was broadcast.

Great was the surprise of some of these stay-at-homes to attend concerts this summer and find that the bus service to and from the Water Gate is the best they have ever found anywhere. This service was specially noticeable at the conclusion of the concerts when buses for every line of the Capital Transit Co. system were immediately available in sufficient numbers to take care of

Estate to Be Occupied by Swiss Minister and His Wife Was Once Part of the Woodley

By KATHARINE BROOKS.

A chalet like those in Switzerland was the hope of the Minister from that republic and Mme. Bruggmann for their legation in Washington. But failing to find that, they purchased Single Oak and have remodeled the house. The result of their work and that of William Lescaze, the Swiss architect, who designed the Longfellow Building, is a very attractive house which from the garden at the back does look like a Swiss chalet. Single Oak originally was a part of The Woodley, now known as Woodley and the home of Secretary of War and Mrs. Henry L. Stimson. More than a quarter of a century ago The Woodley was the home of the late Senator Francis G. Newlands of Nevada and when his daughter Edythe was married to Mr. Charles H. L. Johnston, Senator and Mrs. Newlands built the house on the corner of their property and gave it to her, naming the place Single Oak for the large and beautifully shaped oak tree standing alone on the rise in the gracefully rolling ground at the

Senator Connally, New Head Of Foreign Relations Committee, Favors Firm, Vigorous Policy

By ROBERT CRAWFORD.

During these hot days, when Washington seems turned into an ant hill of commotion and just one mad whirl of hectic activity, it was delightfully restful to talk with Senator Tom Connally, the new chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in the air-cooled office into which he has recently moved as the head man after serving for 10 years as a member of the committee.

Advocate of a firm and vigorous foreign policy, he is what they would call down in Texas a straight-shooter when it comes to defending the honor and traditions of the United States. There are few men in Congress as familiar with foreign policies of the Government, or who have had closer contact with men connected with international affairs during the last decade. His work was outstanding as a member of the Inter-Parliamentary Union at Geneva in 1924. An all-out supporter of the administration, Senator Connally does not hesitate to differ from the President when his convictions so point-as witness his firm opposition to the Supreme Court reorganization bill. The boat ride this year will serve twofold purpose. Not only will it be the summer social roundup of Tar Heels in Washington and their friends, but the proceeds from the trip will, in part, go to the District's quota of the Old North State fund for the airplane ambulance for Britain. To avoid conjestion at the pier, those who plan to go on the cruise are urged to obtain their tickets as soon as possible from Mr. John K. Slear, president of the North Carolina Democrats; Mr. Wesley E. McDonald, Mr. Hand James or any officer of the club. Miss Marion Sedberry, who is assisting with the airplane ambulance fund, is assembling a program of entertainment for the evening.

To Our Regular Stocking Patrons

Please do not become panicky. Our regular resources assure us that we shall have Silk Stockings for a time-Nylons to some extent continuously and later, cotton meshes and lisles. We will take care of you.

Again let us say that we feel it most inadvisable for us to participate in the mad rush for silk stockings of any kind at any price. We do not wish to do anything to accelerate the rising price tide.

Please bear with us in this emergency. Our limit now is three pairs to a customer. The response we have already had to our suggestion that we all ration ourselves voluntarily as suggested by Miss Harriot Elliott of the O. E. M. has been heartening.

Let's make the best of things in the best way! Frank R. Jelleff.

By BIGGS ANTIQUE COMPANY

Makers of Authentic Colonial Reproductions

For more than fifty years, we have been manufacturing and shipping Biggs Authentic Colonial Reproductions all over the world. We have more than thirty thousand satisfied customers, and during our more than fifty years of business experience, we have never before had any difficulty in securing fine solid mahogany, solid brass hardware, and the many other materials that go into the making of our furniture.

Today, we are having trouble. Our mahogany comes from Central and South America, for it is the best that can be bought. Few, if any, ships are available to bring the logs to the United States. We have never in our more than fifty years' experience used a substitute-and we do not propose to do it now.

Hardware is very hard to get, due to priorities. Labor has increased considerably.

We anticipated some of these hardships more than a year ago and bought in advance of our requirements a great deal of mahogany, brasses, etc., and today we have a fairly well-balanced stock, not only in furniture, but in raw materials, and as long as our stock lasts we will accept your orders at prevailing prices, based on our cost of raw materials bought many months ago. To illustrate the point, the average increase in mahogany, due to increased cost of water rates, has advanced $66.00 per thousand feet. Brasses and furniture hardware, as of today, are in proportion, But we have not raised our list prices and do not propose to do so until the present stock is depleted.

Fabrics and other upholstering materials are likewise hard to secure and have advanced in price, so in upholstered pieces, we may be a little slow in delivery.

Therefore, we suggest that you place your order within the near future and avoid disappointment. A little later we must advance our prices, but never will we cheapen in one iota the Design, Quality or Craftsmanship of Biggs Authentic Reproductions.

Y. W. C. A. Service Is Geared To Solving Problems of Girl Strangers in City

Query, 'Where Can I Meet Some Men?' Is One of Easiest to Answer: Activities Expanded

> By FRANCES LIDE, Women's Club Editor.

"How do I get to points of interest about town?"

"What can I do on Saturday afternoon and evening that's fun?" "Should I give up my job in my home town to take a $1,440 position In Washington?

"If you can't let me have a room, where can I find one that's nice and clean and not too expensive and near my work and within the downtown taxi zone?

"And where can I meet some men?"

Answering these questions and many, many more keeps staff members of the Young Women's Christian Association in a whirl these days as the defense program brings hundreds of young girls to the Nation's Capital, according to Miss Elizabeth M. Haney, the general secretary. Some Questions Require Wisdom

Of Solomon to Answer.

D-10

For some of the questions, the Y. W. C. A. has stock answers. For instance, little packets are kept on hand which contain a map of the city, the association's own catalogue of activities and a copy of a bulletin listing the month's activities in Washington.

Often, however, Y. W. C. A. workers yearn for the wisdom of Solomon when confronted with such questions as whether Sally Jones, who lives at home in a small town in the Midwest, would find it advisable to programs show up later for the Satpull up stakes and come East for a urday night dances and then come while. If one knew Sally's family, again the next Tuesday. Swimming, fencing classes, week seems the hardest to those who know the preponderance of women in the Capital's population is actually one of the easiest. When a girl wants to know where the can meet some boys, the Y. W. C. A. staff promptly answers: "Just come over to our Saturday night dances.'

These dances, initiated this year for girls who are newcomers and service men on leave here, have made more attractive by colored been highly successful affairs. And lights more men attend than girls-the ratio being about five to four.

Ousted Georgia Educator Defends Rosenwald Fund

By the Associated Press. ATLANTA, Aug. 9.-J. Curtis Dixon, vice chancellor of the university system of Georgia, said yesterday the Rosenwald Fund and other foundations accused by Gov. Eugene Talmadge of fostering racial equality in the South have never "tried to impose any program on Georgia or any other State." The policy of the Rosenwald Foundation, Mr. Dixon declared in an address here, "has been and is now to grant aid only where it is requested, a fact for which any wellinformed schoolman in Georgia can vouch.

He added that Gov. Talmadge, in impugning the motives of the foundation, "has never been more wrong in his life-and that's saying a lot. State regents voted not to rehire Mr. Dixon because of his former association with the Rosenwald Fund on the same day that they voted not to renew the contracts of Dean Walter D. NEW YORK, Aug. 9 .- The buyover a fairly wide front.

The question of money rates figured in some recent price regulation hearings and one administration spokesman suggested an upward revision of interest rates as a stabilizer In the event of important change in money rates the high grade bond market, according to investment circles, might be expected to undergo some readjustment.

In the curb exchange there was a further display of mild interest in Russian bonds, which were the obligations of the overthrown Imperial Russian Government. The 61/2s and  $5\frac{1}{2}$ s each rose slightly, the former to \$7.50 per thousand dollar bond, face value, and the latter to \$8.75. Since the start of the Russo-German War the bonds have shown occasional periods of moderate activity. Lower in the stock exchange bond list were Erie Convertible 4s of '53 "B" at 53, Commercial Mackay Incomes at 52½, Baltimore & Ohio Stamped Convertibles of '60 at 313/8.

She's One School Teacher Whose Pupils Stand in Awe

Being a Note on Maria Ouspenskaya, Something of a Martinet, Perhaps, Her Students Might Hint, But Also a Truly Great Actress

By Vern Haugland, Associated Press Staft Writer.

HOLLYWOOD. There's this about Maria Ouspenskaya: She never plays a casual part, many people fear her and she's not so old as she looks

To the average filmgoer, who remembers her as the mad countess of Garbo's "Conquest," as Greta Charles Bover's grandmother in "Love Affair" or as the maharani in "The Rains Came," Mme. Ouspenskaya appears at least 70. Actually, she says, she's 54.

Her first picture was "Dodsworth" in 1936, when she re-enacted the role she played on the stage. In five years she has appeared in but 11 films, yet she is one of the best known of character actresses.

"I will only do roles that make my heart go like this," she explains with an expressive flutter of her fingers. "Most of my time is taken up with teaching others."

In her most recent film, "Dance, Girl. Dance." she played the role of a harsh dancing teacher, a martinet of the fiercest type. In real life, too, she's something like that.

Either Version.

Students at her Sunset boulevard dramatic school confess that, slight and without physical menace though she may be, she cows them. "We call her madame," said one.

"without knowing whether it's an official title-like the British 'dame.' But no one would dare call her 'Maria,' and her last name is too long for daily use."

The surname is pronounced in the Russian manner, with the accent on the second syllable, or, American fashion, accented on the third. "Madame" responds to either pronunciation, at school and studio, without comment.

"Has she ever been married?" The student smiled. "Nobody here ever had the temerity to ask."

Same Story, Arranged Differently

That's the Promise For Hemingway's 'For Whom,' Etc.

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD. Paramount paid Ernest Hemingway $150,000 for the rights to "For Whom the Bell Tolls" and then hired Louis Bromfield to rearrange it. Broomfield is getting a tidy chunk, maybe $25,000.

"And a good investment," said Sam Wood, who will direct it. "Bromfield will turn a fine story into a fine scenario." Bromfield is not, of course, rewriting Hemingway. In changing the novel into a screen play, Bromfield is using, Wood said, Hemingway's dialogue and mood, not Bromfield's. That It Will Remain.

"This, as at least a million readers must know, is a love story laid against the brutal background of the Spanish Civil War." Wood declared, "And that is what it will re-Not an essential will be main. changed."

The opening sequences are oifferent from Hemingway's. His opening is casual. The movie will start with the incident of the bombing of the train, told in close-ups of Jordan and the Russian accomplice he is obliged to kill, to give the story immediate vitality and action Hemingway tells this in retrospect

Well, Almost.

This will be followed by a scene in the notel in Madrid where Jordan gets his instructions for blowing up the bridge. And then, Wood said "We'll pick up the book and go on from there. It will be the book from then on." Almost, anyway. Those who have read it know there are a few paragraphs Bromfield will be obliged to omit.

Although the filming won't start for two or three months, the actor interest already has reached a stage that is annoying in some quarters, including the director's. A surprisingly large number of players apparently are willing to work for

Paramount announced such a full series of tests that no person with any possibilities at all will be over-but only implies-a criticism of Hollywood. Her roles in both are comic, far removed from the wistful, beautiful, tragic waif of fortune

she played in the cinema. On the subject of the cinema, Miss Sten is engagingly realistic.

Once She Thought She Was Pretty Good Then Rita Hayworth Overheard a Critical Remark And She Hasn't Quite Recovered Yet

Rita's likeness hadn't been on the bia, Warners made her a golden screen many seconds before one of blond and photographed her as rethe men said caustically: vealingly as the Hays office will "She's pretty, all right, but, ye allow. Her resemblance to Sheridan gods, where'd she learn to act!"

That remark knocked the wind with her hair a darker red, she out of young Miss Hayworth's sails sometimes is mistaken for Ann. and she hasn't recovered yet. Hearing, You Wonder in her even a trace of the ego that is part of the actor's stock, the thing that gives him confidence when he needs it most

F-3

You can't help wondering, hearing Rita talking so diffidently about herself, whether she is this way naturally, or because of a criticism not intended for her ears

The immediate effect of that remark was to cause Rita to rush out and begin taking dramatic lessons. ("I thought I was pretty good, until then.") She continued these lessons until recently, and she still studies diction and singing.

What Not to Do.

Rita doesn't say. "I know I have become a better actress." She says: "I guess I have become a better actress.

"You learn in many ways. You learn by watching others. Mostly I've learned what not to do by watching others."

No, she's never argued with a director. No, she's never thrown a tantrum. No, she's never protested with tears, as do some actresses, but occasolonally she cried from exhaustion while working.

She thinks dyeing her hair did her the most good. "I used to feel like a Spanish girl, but with red hair I feel-well, like an American."

Rita is Spanish and she was born in New York 22 years ago. Her real name is Cansino (Hayworth was her mother's name) and she began dancing with her father, Eduardo, when she was 12. She has been in the movies since she was hired for a Spanish number six years ago.

Success Bred Success.

Rita rated very little attention before the "Strawberry Blond" incident, which just goes to prove, she says and I agreed, that luck is what counts most in Hollywood.

A public which is advised to accept no substitute accepted Rita in Sheridan's place; at least, the picture was successful and that's what counts. The campaign also resulted in local interest in Rita. She was borrowed for another "A" picture, "Blood and Sand," in which she played the vamp in an adequate if not inspired man-

Returning to her home lot, she was treated like a star, not casually like the fixture she had become at Columbia. She then was cast opposite Fred Astaire in "You'll Never Get Rich," a part she never would tractive at the box office as the pout- have been given had she remained

She should be bubbling over with enthusiasm for and confidence in Later that day, Teresa saw Mr. and Mrs. Goldwyn in the studio's coffee shop. "It was one of those things," she said. "Both of us seemed eager to meet each other, but as I passed Mr. Goldwyn happened to be busy with somethinga sandwich, if I remember correctly. Then, when I went to the hairdresser's Mrs. Goldwyn was there and introduced herself and said she just knew, from what Mr. Goldwyn had told her, that I was going to be all right."

From this may be deduced: (1) That the whole family is sweet; (2) that Mr. Goldwyn is the kind of a boss who talks over all his business with his Mrs.

"When I'm not acting, as when I'm before a still camera," Teresa said, "funny things happen to my face. My mouth droops down at one side and my face falls down from my eves and I look very sad. The stills are terrible, but I never knew that. I just thought they were realistic.

He went on and on, telling them what he saw in me and telling them that he wanted them to see that, too. No, I can't tell you what he said he saw in me. I'd blush too much.

"Finally, the head photographer spoke up. 'Yes, Mr. Goldwyn,' he said, 'but you forget, it's not what we see in her, it's what the camera sees.' That stopped him dead, but it killed me.

Without her realizing it, the minister induces her to offer the church a large donation, then refuses to let her give it except in the name of her dead husband.

"In thanking her, I closed my eyes, as the minister did in the pulpit just before each sermon. Dr. Peale ruled that I play the scene with my eyes open, lest a suspicion of deceit attach to the minister." March admitted he is by no means a regular churchgoer, but he sends his two children faith-

In fact, Rubens' had a scale of prices for works done solely by him and those with the assistance of apprentices, retouched, and in his memoranda to patrons stated this fact. The same was true of Van Dyck. But the style of the master was closely followed, and it must be admitted that in both the National Gallery portraits there is some of the grand manner which Rubens' work always took on. But it must not be forgotten that Van Dyck was himself a pupil and assistant of Rubens and if these canvases were executed in 1621 (before Van Dyck went to Italy and Vos), they would quite naturally

Kolisch Unit Will Close Series

Quartet to Be Heard Twice in Starlight Music

For the final two concerts in the Starlight musical series Tuesday and Friday, C. C. Cappel is bringing to Meridian Hill Park the famed Kolisch Quartet. The two programs this great quartet will play are notable for their appeal and their musical distinction.

Tuesday night's concert will be the first al fresco appearance the Ko-lisch Quartet has ever made. This is the second conspicuous "first" the Capital has been responsible for in the history of this top-ranking group. It gave its first American concert here in 1935 under the sponsorship of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge at the Library of Congress. Since its debut, the Kolisch Quartet has enjoyed pronounced success and has introduced many outstanding modern compositions, not a few of which were written especially for the group, among them compositions by Schoenberg, Bartok and Alban Berg.

Schoenberg's connection with the quartet is important on other scores. Mr. Kolisch studied with the celebrated Austrian composer and later served for three years as Schoenberg's chief assistant, participating in concerts of the Schoenberg Society, in addition to giving recitals of his own. When Mr. Kolisch had organized his own quartet, Mr. Schoenberg was responsible for the fact that Jascha Veissi joined the quartet as viola player. At that time Mr. Schoenberg was in California, where he headed the music department at the University of California, while Mr. Veissi was Hollywood's highest paid viola player, helping, at a fabulous salary, to supply background music for sound films

Mr. Kolisch is a Viennese, and it was in Vienna that he found the quartet's second violinist, Felix Khuner. Mr. Khuner abandoned his advance work in chemistry and mathematics to join the group. But for Mr. Kolisch he would not today be a professional musician. Stefan Auber, cellist, also has his memories of Vienna, where he made his debut with the Vienna Philharmonic at the age of 12. His father before him had been a well-known cellist and the son easily followed in his footsteps

Novel of Europe Described As 'Atmospheric Writing'

Traces Wanderings of Young American Over Continent Between '36 and '39

The Skies of Europe

By Frederic Prokosch. Harper & Bros., New York. Frederic Prokosch is without question one of the most interesting of our young novelists. He is not yet one of the very best, despite the fact that he has had distinguished successes. But he is one of the most individual; he has originality of an extraordinary kind and degree; he is nobody's man but his own; his contributions to the novel field add in quality rather than in mere quantity. One cannot recommend him to that happy section of the public which looks upon the novel simply as entertainment, but to students of the novel as part of literature he offers profitable material for examination and thought. He is a fine stylist, he has a poet's sense of the wonder of physical appearances, he is becoming aware of irony, he seems irresistibly drawn toward symbolism and is concerned with the humanistic implications of our dehumanized time. His trouble is that, with so many artistic influences playing on him, he seems unable to organize his material and that, though he works in the novel form, he concerns himself very little with a story. His present novel in particular displays these defects. It is like a long meditation or soliloquy. Its characters are dim, symbolic wraiths formed without any apparent effort at life. Its action is so disconnected that one can hardly call it action at all .. Yet the book is a fine thing and the power of a genuine genius is on it

One can best call it a piece of atmospheric writing. It follows no plan except to trace the wanderings of a young American over Europe in the years between 1936 and 1939, and to attempt to show, through the American's eyes, the spiritual condition of the people in the different European countries. It begins with Paris and winds on through Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and Provence. Life under the shadow of death is its prevalent atmosphere-life, sometimes old, terrified and shabby, sometimes young, lovely and full of promise, sometimes distorted and selfdestructive, but always overhung with despair, always aware of inescapable fate. It is Mr. Prokosch's peculiar talent to keep this spiritual duality as an unchanging theme in constantly changing settings. Whether he is describing a painfully correct tea in a middle-class German home or a battle in Spain's civil war: whether he sets before us a peasant dance in Austria or a murder in the Bois, he maintains his atmosphere of impending cosmic disaster, of forces in conflict so much greater than men that men's own conflicts become mere splintered reflections before them. The field of human life, in his vision, shows like a lovely formal garden lying under a lurid cyclonic sky. From whatever point he looks he sees some aspect of this view and his book is simply the repetition.

Hero Listens to Dialogue

Of Two Shadows.

Yet one cannot believe that the threatened disaster which darkens his pages is the threat of war which was current over Europe during the period of which he writes. One cannot believe this, although he himself tries to convince one of it. He would have his readers take him for an interpreter of political influences; he stops his narrative, indeed, at one point and has his hero listen to a dialogue between two shadows, one on the "left" and one on the "right," in which the merits of the old liberalism and the new politics of force are compared. He shows, too, toward the end of his book how political influences have hastened the decay of his characters, particularly of those in Germany. But no one can really take him for a political thinker; no one, indeed, can take him in London, the circumstances of her for other than a complete romantic. He feels with creative poignancy the wonder of change and has a Teutonic response to the ideas of death. doom and gotterdammerung generally. There is no realism in his political argumentation There is, indeed, no realism in his realism. He is on his true ground only when he is creating a sense of man's helplessness before his fate. And he does not analyze that fate beyond reiterating that it is destruction. It is a cosmic gloom, rather than a worldly one, which envelops his characters throughout this work.

This stands out in particular clarity in the chapters on the Spanish war. There, more than elsewhere in the novel, Mr. Prokosch attempts to come down to concrete issues and is unable to do so. He can write nothing of the war as a conflict between parties. He can do no more than relate some anecdotes of horror and describe some characters. The war itself was all one to him. "I found." he says. "that quite without knowing it, without any sign of it. I had passed from Nationalist into Government territory." It was equally dreadful on both sides. Something was being done to death in Spain and it was something more fundamental than any political party or system.

Australian Story Presented In Mark Twain Style

Itinerant Laborer or 'Bagman' And Assorted Companions Are Central Characters

The Battlers

By Kylie Tennant. The Macmillan Co., New York.

This is an extraordinarily good novel. Indeed, it is so good a novel that reviewing it becomes a problem. It comes, you see, within the bounds of that rare group which can simply be described as Books, wherefrom the initiated will understand that no further word is needed. Be it said, however, for those who want unimaginative detail, that Mrs. Kylie Tennant seems to have inherited a shred, or even more, of the mantle of the late Samuel Clemens.

Her novel is a tale of the kangaroo-haunted strands of Australia and has been most unkindly, most inaccurately, described by its publisher as an "Australian 'Grapes of Wrath.'" Perish the thought. It is a robust, sane and solid piece of writing and there is not a tint of violet ink in it. Sentimentality it simply does not have. It is about a group of itinerant laborers, to be sure, and so its subject matter is something the same as the Steinbeck torch song. But does that signify likeness? If so, since when?

No. Mrs. Tennant's work, if it must be compared to some other, is Low on the War, by David Low more like H. P. Davis' "Honey in the Horn" of some six years ago than it is like anything else which the reviewer can call to mind. In Mr. Davis' book a young farmhand took to the back country of Oregon, of the work of the great cartoonist, having first had a misunderstanding with the law, and thereafter for dealing with the war and covering several years led a lively, wandering life, sometimes alone and sometimes with companions. That was all there was to it, except that the book had such heartiness, such humor, such an acceptance of life that the companions. They wander up and down the "track," which seems to be the Australian word for highway; they camp, they starve, they steal, they fight, they drink, they sing. They take jobs when they can get them, they take up their belts when they cannot. Nothing very positive has happened to them when the book comes to an end, but something very positive has happened to the reader. He has been out of himself. Mrs. Tennant writes with the true tale-teller's enchantment. She has led the American-the foreigner-through hr own Australian world into that international realm of the imagination where Huckleberry Finn may well be president. It is the world of all "tracks" and all wanderers-all gypsies, Indians, small boys, hunters, dreamers, and tramps. It is no fanciful place; it is peopled with men and women as true to their time and location as were the riverside dwellers who contributed to Huckleberry's immortal journey. But it has the same sense of impermanence, of moving always toward a new campsite, of being free, of being in the world but not of it. Well, as said above, it is simply a grand book.

Words, indeed, can hardly convey the quality of Mrs. Tennant's humor. It is too completely basic It is such humor as has for its ground a completely clear eye. Mrs. Tennant no more sentimentalizes over her bagmen when they are cold and hungry than did Mark Twain ovr Jim and Huckleberry. The whole structure of life, she says, is ridiculous, and mankind, scrambling desperately over the surface, slipping, sliding, hair flapping in the wind, eyes popping with effort, unable to see more than an inch before his nose, is ridiculous, too-but not, therefore, devoid of some queer inerradicable dignity. The bagmen of Australia may be the result of economic causes, but, in Mrs. Tennant's view, they are not for that reason more admirable or more interesting than their fellows. She leaves sociology for the sociologist. She writes of men and women. And the reviewer is willing to lay it before a commission composed of Shakespeare, Bocaccio and Cervantes to decide which system produces the better book. M.-C. R.

The Reluctant Republic: Vermont, 1724-1791

By Frederic F. Van de Water. The John Day Co., New York. The intense individualism for which Vermont is famous has a solid indation in history. In pre-Revolutionary days the Green Mountain country was a safety valve for the rest of New England; to it went hotheaded youths who found the Puritan confines of Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire too much. They were wild, free-living, freethinking men looking for a good fight. They found one. New York was claiming the territory as its own. The land was given settlers originally in the form of grants from the State of New Hampshire. New York held the grants invalid and it was then that Ethan Allen and the Green Mountain boys rode into history. New York became the prime enemy. Vermonters did not like New Hampshire control and they liked New York less. The Green Mountain boys conducted a bloodless "civil war" which has always been a military miracle. They showed that rule by threat and intimidation might be effective. This method has been used with less happy results in later years. But it was then a necessity of pioneer days and that stands as its justification The Revolution came and Vermont played her cards well, due in a large measure to Ethan Allen's adroit younger brother, Ira. She played both ends against the middle which was her own mountain-centered State and in the end she and the Colonies won and there was a 14th State-but not soon, not until 1791 did the boys allow themselves to be roped into the new Union. Mr. Van De Water, who has written many books on Vermont, has told here a colorful history of the turbulent birth of the State. It is good reading and dramatic. The author is not above making a point more times than once, but it must be said the point is usually an apt one EDWIN TRIBBLE

As said, symbolism plays a great part in the work. In every land the characters seem to be presented as symbols of national spirit. They are not human beings. They are demonstrations-demonstrations of the Gallic, the Germanic, the Austrian or the Spanish reaction, or lack of reaction, to the twilight which is setting in over Europe. They are all weak, all more or less blind. They mouth phrases which their particular culture has put in their minds, but they do so by custom and seem nothing more than talking puppets, febrile, frail and futile. Flat shadows, they simply jerk about in the ominous gloom of Mr. Prokosch's creating.

One crowning symbol, however, stands above the others-the figure of Saskia, the woman whom the young hero loves. Saskia is false and unrewarding. Like the other characters, she fades; her beauty lessens, her lure becomes a custom. But the passion which she inspires in the hero remains unchanged, for Saskia symbolizes change itself, the one constant element in the world, the one dependable source of wonder. Through his love of Saskia he seems to say he loves life.

The great fault of the novel is that it attempts too much. It tries to cover more ground than any but a master could cover, and Mr. Prokosch is not a master yet. He is much more a poet than a novelist. A single theme he can control But a great mass of material seems beyond his governance. So it is with the present book. He has admirably created an atmosphere, but within that atmosphere there is much material which seems to defy assimilation into the whole.

Men Working

By John Faulkner. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

John Faulkner is the brother of William Faulkner and this book. "Men Working," is John's first novel. The subject matter of the work is that which has so often engaged William-the poor whites of Mississippi-and there are occasional passages of writing which indicate that John admires William's violently individualistic style. But, on the whole, the book is no mere younger son but a substantial thing well endowed with its own integrity.

Mr. Faulkner, so his publisher announces, has been supervisor on a number of W. P. A. projects in his native State, and that he has put this experience to service in writing his novel needs no announcement. His purpose has been to give a well-rounded picture of the modern Mississippi sharecropper descended from generations of sharecroppers and conditioned only to a sharecropping way of life, but his approach has been entirely through the W. P. A., its effect on these backward people, its meaning in their haphazard lives. He takes one family, the Taylors, and relates flatly and with little comment what happens to them from the date when the father gets a W. P. A. job to the date when he is finally dropped. It makes a novel of no more than average length, but there is enough sociological revelation in it for those less economical writers, the sociologists themselves, to turn into three fat statisical volumes

The basic thing about the Taylors-and, of course, about all their kind-is, in Mr. Faulkner's telling, their inconceivable ignorance and their equally wonderful confidence that, come what may, somebody wil! take care of them. Weak, inefficient, devoid of initiative, completely out of the stream of progress, they have survived for generations as croppers when, by every law of nature, they should have met with extinction. The dubious but powerful intervention of the land owners has preserved them. And thus they have come to believe with complacent and mindless by himself alone, but by his decertainty that some strong hand will always provide for their needs. Going from the farm, where at least their elementary necessities are supplied them according to established custom, to the unfamiliar town, where they are expected to live on a cash wage and meet such simple responsibilities as the payment of bills, they make no change whatsoever erations of Americanism improve in their outlook

By Robert Gibbings. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

Robert Gibbings began his trip along the Thames at the old Roman well where the river rises and when he reached Newbridge he thought of his father

"If ever there was a saint on earth before myself it was my father." Mr. Gibbings assures us. "My father was a parson, a canon at that, and he could have been a dean, the Dean of Ross, no less. But he was a large man and when he went to inspect the deanery he found that there wasn't a room in the house in which he could sleep with his legs straight unless he put his feet through a window, and so he was compelled to remain a canon.

Mr. Gibbings is an Irishman and his subject is England. The result is a fine, witty, literary book which is, in essence, the story of England, although not a bomb fails on any of its pages. From the old well to London's Tilbury dock the author takes us and the story of his progress informs us why the British hold now with such passion to their island in the face of dreadful difficulties. The clay is native and can be obtained from the banks of a running stream. Oh, look! Those girls are working in wood; they are making napkin rings and plaques. One girl is carving soles for wooden scuffs. She tells us the pattern was made from her own shoes. The wood is obtained from a felled tree at the camp. She plans to work an emtoes. That short girl is weaving a raffia belt. Nature hikes through real wooded spots are a highlight, and this year's campers hope to add important specimens to the already valuable collection of ore, coral, etc.

The girls also are instructed in first aid, map-making, health and safety, and how to give intelligent directions to persons en route to certain places, which is all to help the girls to aid in their small way toward the national defense program. #### Captain Fried was ready

FORESIGHT. I had heard of Captain George Fried for a good many years before I met him. A school friend of mine sailed under him in some obscure freighter with a Dutch name. "We never got torpedoed," said my friend after the war, "because Fried would begin to watch for submarines in Hoboken. He took his job seriously."

Then Fried, commanding the Roosevelt, made his famous rescue of the crew of the Antinoe, a British freighter. When I met George Fried I asked him, first, how he found the Antinoe, when no other ships could find her. And how, having lost her in a snow squall, he found her again.

"I'd been planning that rescue for thirty years," he said.

IMPOSSIBLE. "Nobody would have blamed me if I hadn't succeeded in taking those men off," said Fried. "It was an impossibility. I didn't care whether it was impossible or not. I had to rescue those men. But if I hadn't been planning to make a rescue for twenty years or so, it might have been impossible."

A rescue at sea, he went on to explain, means careful training of the boat crews in port. It means constant inspection of the crews and the boats themselves, constant overhauling of the "gear" to be sure everything is ready for the emergency. This in addition to the thousand and one daily responsibilities of a ship's captain.

I was deeply impressed. All those lives had been saved because Captain Fried had been ready, not only then, but for years beforehand.

I was a reserve officer at the time and I was thinking of dropping my commission. But I remembered what Fried had said: "It is no time to start training a boat crew when a sinking ship heaves out of the snow to leeward."

MAXIMS. So I kept on with my peacetime training. The call to duty this year found me assigned to a battalion of the Armored Force. And Fried's

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

IT'S A FAMILY YOU CAN JOIN by Homer Croy

Let me tell you about myself. My name is Persistence. I pop up here and there. One day I popped up on a Wyoming ranch. It seems the cowboys were having the big fall roundup, were trying to get the cattle to a corral for the winter. There was one steer they couldn't get to the corral. They would ease him into the herd and start for the corral, but the steer would break back. He was bad medicine. Second offender, too. That is, they hadn't been able to get him up the winter before, and now he had the same idea; he simply wasn't going to that corral, come what might.

It came.

One of the cowboys did some thinking. He explained the idea to the other cowboys and they liked it. They took a burro that had been living at the corral. You should have seen him: small, inconsequential, shaggy. They roped the steer and tied the steer to the burro, loose enough to cause no great inconvenience, and yet tight enough to keep the two teamed up solid. There they stood: the big, raw-boned, eleven-hundred-pound steer and the little, sleepy, none-too-bright burro.

You ought to have seen what happened. Immediately after the cowboys loosed the rope from the steer's legs, he leaped into the air; that is, as far as he could go. When he came down he ran here and there with this parcel of stubbornness hanging to him. He kicked, bucked, bellowed. After a time, the steer paused to get his breath. While he was getting it, the burro took a step in the direction of the corral, where he knew he could get food and rest. The steer gave in that much. After all, what difference did a few inches make?

After he got his breath, the steer gave another jump. While he was getting the crimp out of his knees, after he came down, the burro took another step in the direction of the corral.

C

Some time later the steer showed up at the corral in good condition — except for one thing. His mind was in a bewildered state. He didn't know how it had happened. He had given in just a little here and a little there, never very much at one time. The thing the steer didn't know was that when you get hooked up with Persistence you've got to go along.

One day, years ago, I popped up in Brooklyn. A father and his son were walking through what is now Prospect Park. The two stopped to examine a bird, for birds were the father's hobby. He pointed out certain things about the bird, its color, markings, and so on. The boy was fascinated; a new world was being opened up for him. The father said, "It's too bad there is no book covering all the birds of America. Even John James Audubon's book lists only four hundred and thirty-five species." You can see how foolish it was. Mind you, only ten years old. Well, that foolish boy started in to draw every bird in America. When he was older he worked his way up and down this continent, earning money by picking berries, pitching hay, milking cows. He went on a fishing boat to the Georges Banks, where he studied the whiteness of the polar birds. He floated down the Ohio River. He went to Florida, waded the Everglades with a sketchbook.

For years he kept at the job. And he didn't just paint a bird now and then, when he felt in the mood; he painted all the time. One day when he was thirty-three he started to arrange his precious drawings. And now that he was older and more mature, he was shocked at how poor his early drawings were. There they were! They were the total of his life's work so far. But they were poor. So then and there he tore them up!

HE STARTED in again, worked eight years, examined his drawings again — and tore them up!

He was forty-one years old. And there were more than 1,200 kinds of birds in America for him to paint. If he had been a man of less character and determination he would have given in. But he didn't give in. He kept right on.

He became famous; people beat a path to his birdtrap at Kent, Connecticut. And there he is now, seventy-two years old and going strong. That determined statement Rex Brasher made that long-ago day in Brooklyn has caused him to out-Audubon Audubon. He is considered by some to be the greatest living authority on birds.

His work has become so famous that the State of Connecticut has reported a bill out of committee to buy 874 of his drawings to be preserved for all time. And how much do you suppose those paintings are valued at? Quite a bunch of money. A quarter of a million dollars.

For sixty years he pursued his dream. Nothing could stop him. Poverty tapped him on the shoulder, but he had set out to accomplish something and he would not be pushed off the path. And now that path he has been traveling so long has opened out into a fine, great vista.

What wonders I will perform - I, Persistence.

Put a man in the grease pit of a locomotive roundhouse and give him Persistence and he'll come out Walter P. Chrysler. Make him a second fiddle in an obscure South American orchestra and give him Persistence and you'll have Toscanini. Make him a country schoolteacher in Ohio and give him Per-

JEWELS. Diamond cutters and diamond merchants have fled to America from Holland and Belgium since the Nazi invasion, and with them have come immense quantities of precious stones. But America is not yet the jewel capital of the world. That honor, we are informed by Mr. Francis Taylor, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, still belongs to India and Indian princes are still the chief purchasers of precious stones.

SMUGGLER. Rey Scott spent months in the Orient taking pictures for his "Ku Kan," the new epic film of China's struggle for life. About to return to America through Canton, he learned that the Japanese censors would not allow him to take his film out of China. Then he recalled a story he had once heard about several sixteenth century Jesuit priests. Forbidden to carry silkworms out of China, they hid the worms in hollow bamboo poles and took them past the Chinese guards.

So Scott and two faithful servants spent a day stuffing 7,000 feet of film into bamboo poles. They carried it past the Japanese sentries in Canton and

Niels examined the body from head to foot. He took out his handkerchief and touched it to a stain on the forehead and briefly felt the cuffs of the gray slacks. "Tim!" he called, "where's the man who found the body?

"Here he is. sir," said the uniformed cop who worked with Niels.

It wasn't a man, but a lad of perhaps seventeen. His name, he said, was Chuck Spiker. He had been doing a bit of moonlight sailing with his girl friend, and they had noticed the Sunfish aground on the shore.

"SHE was broadside to the beach, and grinding her hull on the gravel." he explained. "Mr. Christie was a racing man. who kept the hull of his boat just like glass. The sheets were cleated down, too. and she was heeling over. A sailor just doesn't leave a boat like that, sir."

"That's right," said Niels. "Then what?" "Well, I gave the boat a hail, and there wasn't any answer, so I went up and looked."

"You didn't touch anything?"

"No, except to make a line fast so I could tow the boat back to the club."

"That's fine," Niels nodded. "What else can you tell me about him, Spiker?"

"Nothing - no more than anyone else around the club. His name is - was - Clive Christie, and he was an architect. He was keen on sailing - won a couple of mugs last year."

"Married?"

"No. That is, he wasn't married yet. I think he was going to get married -

"What's all the mystery about?" Niels asked sharply.

"Well — it isn't exactly a mystery. It's just that they say he - he was in love with Mrs. Hampton. She's the Commodore's wife that is, she was. She got a divorce a few weeks ago - " The lad's face was red.

dock, sitting there alone and watching the moonlight on the lake, I guess; just about everybody else that's at the club is out sailing, you see. Well, when the Commodore sees her coming, he gets up and starts toward the clubhouse, because they're divorced and I guess it's kind of awkward - you know what I mean. But she hails him right off.

"'Wait a moment, Lester,' she says. 'I want to tell you something.' So he comes down to that end of the dock, and she starts telling him all about it. She's so mad her voice is shaking. It seems that she has found out that Mr. Christie has been" -- the lad glanced at me apologetically -- "two-timing her right along, all the time that he's been having her get a divorce from the Commodore so she can marry him."

"Did she mention the name of this other woman?" Niels asked:

"Yes: Rosemary Thorpe. She doesn't belong to the club; she has a place down at the south end of the lake. A little cottage, all by itself; there aren't any other places at that end of the lake, because the water's shoal -full of sand bars and snags. She used to work for Mr. Christie."

"And what does she do now?"

Andy glanced at me, and shrugged. There are things a gentleman does not discuss before a lady.

"I see," nodded Niels, smiling faintly. "And so Mrs. Hampton had just found out about it?"

"That's right. And she tells the Commodore she's been a fool. A blind, silly fool - stuff like that. I - I hated to listen, but if we'd got up and started to go away, they would have seen us and known we'd heard part of it, so we just sat there."

"THERE wasn't much else for you to do," I put in sympathetically.

That's what I thought. Anyway, the Commodore takes her in his arms, and calls Mr. Christie a lot of names, and says he's going looking for him - right now. Mrs. Hampton says oh, no, he mustn't. The Commodore asks her why; is she afraid of what will happen to her precious Clive? And she comes back at him like a flash. 'No!' she says. 'I hate him! He deserves to be killed for what he's done to me!' The Commodore starts for the boat. 'You can leave Mr. Christie to me,' he says, and shoves off. The Cherub is footing in ten seconds, and Mrs. Hampton turns and walks up to the clubhouse."

Close up, you could see what had happened to Rosemary

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

GUESS I broke a few speed laws, but it was late and the traffic was light; anyway. I skidded into the yacht club parking lot just as Niels and Tim got out of the police car.

"Someday you'll get picked up for loitering, Virginia - doddering along like that!" Niels reproached me fondly.

I waved that aside. I've seen Niels do some tall driving himself.

"What a lousy night for a murder," I sighed. From where we stood, we had a grand view of the lake. There were just a few fluffy little clouds in the sky - just enough to accent the brilliant, moonlit clearness of the heavens. "If ever a night was created for love and romance, this is it.'

Niels shook his head, chuckling. He has a deep-throated chuckle that goes with his big, bearlike body: he's the biggest man on the homicide squad and, if you ask me, the best.

"You should be writing love stories, instead of trying to be a reporter, baby," he said. "You've got a gift."

We went on down to the docks, where there were bright overhead lights, and a small crowd of people clustered around a sailboat.

"Clear that mob away, Tim," ordered Niels. "All except the man who found the boat.'

She was a smart little craft, with her name on the bow: "Sunfish." There were seats running along both sides of the cockpit, and stretched out on one of them, his arms folded easily over his abdomen, was the dead man.

He was clad in a white, short-sleeved jersey, grav slacks, the lower six inches or so of which were damp. and rubber-soled blue canvas shoes. The left side of his head showed all too clearly the cause of death. There were

"I see," said Niels. He climbed into the cockpit, and started looking around.

Something glinted in the light of the naked bulbs strung overhead: a bit of glass on one of the narrow boards forming the rack in the bottom of the boat. Niels picked up the glittering thing, examined it a moment, and then showed it to me. It was a small piece of glass, roughly triangular in shape, jagged on two sides, but cut in the arc of a circle on the third side.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Exhibit A." said Niels. and slipped the bit of glass into his breast pocket.

As we were walking back to the clubhouse a few minutes later, young Spiker waylaid us. With him was another chap, about his own age. Both of them were pretty excited. "This is Andy. sir." said Spiker. "John Anderson. He's a junior member, like me. He has something he thinks you ought to know about."

"It's this. sir." said Andy. "There's a bench down on the point beside the dock. There's a lot of shrubbery, and the lights over the dock make a heavy shadow. I was sittin' there with my girl friend when Mrs. Hampton comes alongside the dock in her boat. 'Cherub.

"The Commodore is on the other end of the

"She's still there?"

"She was, just a few minutes ago."

"And the Commodore; has he come back yet?"

The two youngsters looked at each other, questioningly. Each shook his head.

"Why, no." said young Spiker. "I guess-"

"Look!" interrupted Andy, pointing. "That's the Cherub coming in now."

"Go down and tell him I'd like to see him right away," said Niels.

· I glanced at Niels as the two lads raced away. "It looks as though the Commodore may have talked himself into a spot.'

"A lot of men have done that, baby," Niels said thoughtfully.

Niels heard Mrs. Hampton's story first. She was not a pretty woman, but she had that quality which some plain women have of being excitingly attractive to men. My first impression of her was that she had long, good-looking legs and unusual green eyes, deep and cool as the sea.

She told her story very briefly, very clearly. Her voice was calm - but I had the impression it was the calm of a pool below a dam which backs up a mighty flood.

"There are certain personal facts you must know to understand what happened tonight." she said, weighing every word. "Perhaps you already know them - some of them.

"I recently divorced Mr. Hampton because I was very much in love with Mr. Christie. Today I discovered that he -- Mr. Christie had been having a cheap affair with a certain young woman who ---

"Rosemary Thorpe," said Niels. "The occasion doesn't call for delicacy, Mrs. Hampton."

She flashed him an oblique, unreadable glance from her green eyes. "True. Naturally, I wished to make my position quite clear to Mr. Christie. I learned he was here at the club, so I came out. He was sailing. I followed in the Cherub.

"It was some time before I located him. I think we recognized each other about the same time, for he tried to get away behind Big Sandy. That's an island, Mr. Jorgensen. But I had a jenny - a genoa jib - and he was using his working jib, so it was only a few minutes before I rounded Big Sandy also, and caught up with him. He was sailing deep in the shadow of the island, but when he saw me he headed for the open water, and pretended - I'm sure he was pretending - to recognize my boat for the first time.

"When I came alongside, I found there wasn't much to say, after all. 'I've just found out about your girl friend Miss Thorpe,' I told him. 'I'm not flattered.' He begged me to be quiet, but there wasn't a boat in sight, and I wanted to say what little I had to say then and there. 'I've been a terrible fool, but thank God I found out before I married you. I hope I never see your face again!' It sounds pretty melodramatic, now; I never knew that people actually talked like that, but they do... He tried to argue the matter, but I just filled my sail and went away from there as fast as the wind would take me. That's all, I think."

"Nor quite," Niels said in that deceptively gentle voice of his. "You met the Commodore on the dock when you came in, and had quite a little chat with him about Christie. Isn't that correct, Mrs. Hampton?"

The green eyes flickered, but she did not lower her gaze. "That's quite correct," she said. "Mr. Hampton then took the boat and went for a little sail."

"To look for Christie?"

She hesitated "Yes. To look for Christie."

Niels nodded, slowly and thoughtfully.

"Thank you, Mrs. Hampton," he said. "I believe that's all - just for the present. Virginia, will you ask Mr. Hampton to come in?'

I hurried out of the little room which was the business office of the club. I was anxious

"I thought you never noticed such things." "Purely in the line of business, baby. Goodlooking gams have caused a lot of trouble in this world — I think I'll send her home. Then we're going for a little ride."

In a minute Mrs. Hampton came out of the little room and headed for the parking lot.

"Sit down and relax a few minutes," Niels said. "I want to talk to our young friends there; they seem a useful pair of lads.'

I lit a cigarette, and tried to fit things together to make some sort of pattern.

Gloria Hampton had motive enough; I've covered enough of Niels' cases to know that the hell-hath-no-fury angle is always worth considering. More than that, she had had the opportunity: she admitted that she had met Christie out there on the lake, with not another boat in sight. Motive and opportunity make a pretty good combination.

But Commodore Hampton seemed the better bet to me. He looked like a man who would be capable of anything. He had a squarish sort of face, with a chin that looked as though it could take it - and had. A grim mouth, and a beakish nose, and eyes that once had been piercing and ruthless. There were little red marks on the sides of his nose between his eyes, showing that at least part of the time he wore glasses, though he had not been wearing glasses when I saw him. He was at least ten years older than Gloria.

Hampton had a motive, perhaps even stronger than his ex-wife's, and certainly an opportunity as good as hers. So far, it was a tossup between the two-but the Commodore had run away. To make a break for it seemed almost as good as a confession.

Just then Niels came up, with a big flashlight. It must have been nearly two feet long, and capable of shooting a beam half a mile. Painted on the side, in big green letters, were the initials "G.H." "Belongs in Mrs. Hampton's boat," explained Niels. "I sent Andy for it. We may need it a little later on. Did you get tired of waiting?'

"No; I've been thinking. The Commodore did it, didn't he, Niels?"

"Time will tell." He shrugged.

We got into the car, heading due north. Then Niels took the next three left-hand turns we came to. I knew it wasn't any use to ask questions; Niels is a great won't-talk guv when he's working something out. The mileage indicator showed we'd gone a little over eleven miles when Niels doused the lights and eased the car to a silent stop on the near side of a white-painted steel bridge.

"We walk," he said. "Take the flashlight, and don't bang your door when you get out."

We walked down the road, perhaps a hundred yards. It was a lonely stretch of blacktop, with heavy undergrowth on both sides. The land sloped upward on our right; to the left I could catch a glimpse, now and then, of the waning moonlight on the lake. And somewhere, far out on the water, I could hear the soft, thin whine of an outboard motor.

WE TURNED off the highway and into a narrow, crooked private road that wound its way toward the lake. It ended beside a little cottage of log siding, stained light brown, with a stone chimney at one end, and a screened porch across the end which faced the lake.

Niels pressed my arm warningly: I was not to ask questions. He walked up to the screen door of the porch, rapped sharply. Someone stirred only a few feet away. A startled voice asked: "Who's there? What is it?"

"The name is Jorgensen, Miss Thorpe. Niels Jorgensen. From the homicide squad."

There was a gasp, and then a long moment of silence.

"Homicide squad?" A dim figure moved across the porch; a floodlight mounted high on a tree some distance away beat down on us suddenly, leaving the porch in darkness.

Niels drew his badge out of his pocket, held it up briefly. "Here's my authority,' he said. "Let us in, please."

Another light snapped on - the porch, this time - and I caught my first glimpse of Rosemary Thorpe. She was beautiful, all right; tall and slender and with hair that magnificent shade of mahogany that never comes out of a bottle.

She unlocked the screen door, staring at us with wide, frightened eyes.

"I don't get it," she said.

Close up, you could see what had happened to Rosemary Thorpe. She wasn't more than thirty, but her face was beginning to break up. She was still lovely, but there were little lines at the outer corners of her eyes, a tightness over the cheekbones and the upper angle of her jaw, and her mouth was no longer smooth and firm. Her lips had the slightly battered, jaded look that marks the woman who has ridden life too hard and too fast; they were smeared with scarlet rouge.

She motioned us to seats, and dropped into a chair herself. Niels offered us both cigarettes; she accepted one leisurely, but I noticed that her hands were not quite steady.

"There's been a murder on the lake," Niels said suddenly. "That's why we're here." "Murder?" Only a redhead's face could have gone as pale as hers.

"That's right, Miss Thorpe. Clive Christie was murdered some time -

"Clive?" She leaped to her feet, almost screaming the word. "No! Oh, no!"

"I'm sorry," said Niels. "They found him a couple of hours ago."

Somehow, Rosemary got a grip on herself. "Who did it?" she asked in a level voice.

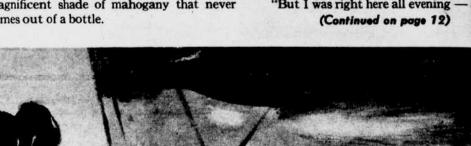

"I'm not quite sure - but I do know that # Commodore Hampton is headed this way right now to accuse you!"

'Yes. You see, he overheard the story his wife told me. The Commodore is smart enough to realize that he and Mrs. Hampton are in very much of a jam. He's coming here to try to hang it on you - that's his motor you hear out on the lake, headed this way.'

"I just said that the Commodore is smart. He has probably read in the newspapers about women who have bumped off their boy friends rather than see some other woman get them." Rosemary stared at us with horror-stricken eyes to hear his story.

"But I was right here all evening - alone."

"Me?" gasped the girl. "What do you want? Who is that with you?" "But why me?"

He was not where we had left him, on a settee near the door, nor was he anywhere in sight. I was just about to report the fact to Niels when young Spiker and his friend Andy came hurrying in through the big double doors which opened onto the porch. Both were obviously excited.

"You lookin' for the Commodore?" asked Spiker.

"Yes!"

"Well, he's gone! Andy and I were kind of watching him, from the porch. He stood real close to the door; listening, I think, to what you were saying there in the cabin the Commodore's office, you know.

"Then, just a couple of seconds ago, he left. In a hurry. We followed him to see what he was going to do. He ran down to the dock and piled into the little boat the caretaker uses there, you can hear it now!"

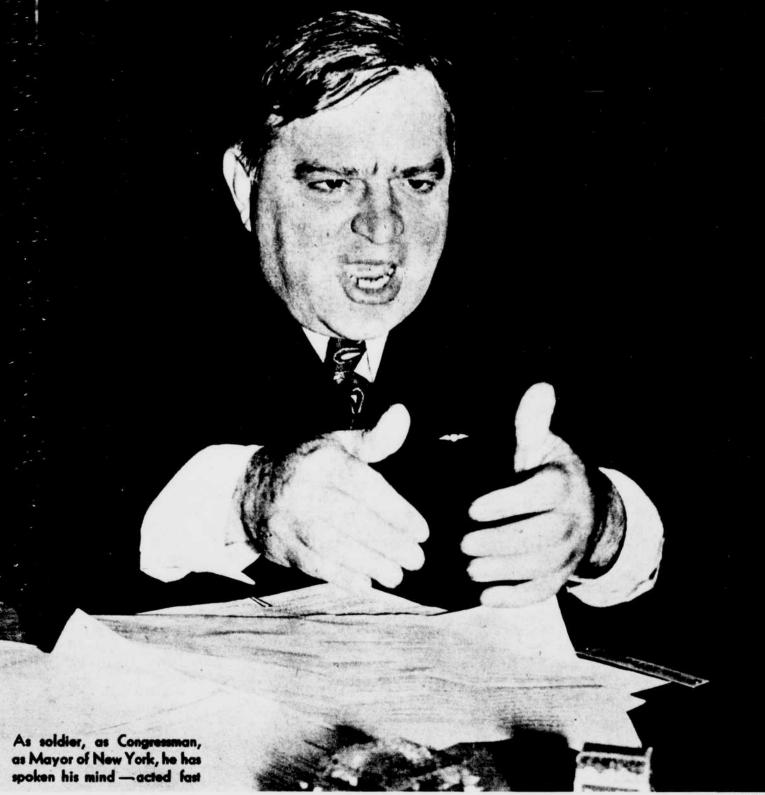

From the lake came the thin hum of an outboard motor, wide out. "Thanks!" I said, and dashed back to Niels.

I called Niels outside and told him the news: I wasn't sure he'd want Mrs. Hampton to know. "Well!" he said. "That leaves us with no one to talk to, doesn't it?"

"Except ourselves. What do you think?" "Of Mrs. Hampton? She's a deep one. Very good-looking legs."

"He begged me to be quiet, but there wasn't a boat in sight. 'I've been a terrible fool,' I said"

THE MAN WHO'LL KEEP YOU SAFE

FIORELLO HENRY LAGUARDIA, America's Home Defender, is one of the political miracles of the generation. His career has been fantastic enough to inspire the belief that the more practical angels occasionally take heavenly time out to push doorbells and try a hand in ward politics.

Eight years ago he sat in his Washington apartment a defeated and dejected man, almost a pathetic figure. His constituents on New York's Upper East Side had ousted him from the House of Representatives. His How will our cities be protected if war should reach America? Meet dynamic Fiorello H. any kind of controversy. He punctured a dull and pompous Congressional leader with the retort: "If the gentleman will devote as much attention to polishing his mind as he does to polishing his façade, he will make a more useful member." The "stuffed shirt" (LaGuardia's pet epithet for certain types of politicos) was never the same again.

Both as Congressman and Mayor, he has been branded as "wild" and "radical," a "prima donna," a "show-off" and a "sensationalist."

Certainly, he is a spectacular and colorful figure, sometimes melodramatic. He admits it and explains why. He believes that in this day of radios, automobiles, movies, wars and daily distractions, the man with a worth-while message or policy must dramatize both them and himself to stir public interest and support.

When he sought to impress Congress with the need to check the rising cost of living, he stood before his fellow Congressmen and extracted small but expensive cuts of steak from his pockets.

He ridiculed Prohibition by setting up a bar in the House Office Building, donning an apron and making a bootleg drink out of two legal beverages — a 4 per cent malt tonic and near beer. He repeated the stunt on Broadway, and almost wept when the Irish cops he new bosses begged for a schooner instead of arresting him. The drys hated and feared the member from Manhattan more than their more academic foes on Capitol Hill.

The "Congressman-at-Large"

H<sub>E</sub> was — and still is — a gargantuan gadfly. He prevented many bad bills from becoming law by his objections and exposures of their jokers. He loves baseball, but when other members slipped out to the Washington ball park, the little figure in the blue serge suit was in his seat in the House — or standing beside it — arguing, pleading, fighting, gesticulating.

For all his didoes and dynamics — or because of them — his colleagues knighted him with the soubriquet of "Congressman-at-Large." The press gallery voted him the "most serviceable member" year after year, and they know a phoney when they see one.

"I'll tell you this about LaGuardia," said Jack Garner many years after the former had quit Capitol Hill. "I never knew him to fight foul, or to make a promise that he didn't keep."

He is not the saturnine, scowling figure that his photographs — or his career — make him cut to be. There is usually a whimsy behind the Mayor's most serious performances. Some years ago he replied rather scornfully to Nazi protests when New Yorkers desecrated Hitler's swastika. But when the German consul sought police protection against an angry populace, LaGuardia gave it gladly. He assigned three of his huskiest Jewish cops to the man from Berlin.

Subsequently, the Mayor consigned Hitler to the Chamber of Horrors. It provoked a furious protest from Berlin, and LaGuardia was criticized for endangering international relations. But Cordell Hull and President Roosevelt privately congratulated him, the chief executive greeting him with an cutstretched arm and a "Heil! LaGuardia!" the next time he visited the White House.

The furniture was draped in deathly white wrappings. The cold rain beat against the windows like a requiem. His normally merry eyes were somber, and his forehead was lined with frowns — frowns of amazement rather than resentment. Sitting there with one leg curled under him in characteristic posture, he said with a shrug:

"I tell you it's discouraging trying to be a reformer in the richest country in the world."

Ten months later this political cast-off entered New York City Hall to give the sprawling, cynical metropolis what conservatives and radicals, Republicans and Democrats alike have described as one of the finest administrations in its history.

And today this short, swarthy, barrelbodied man, who pounds and rants and swears — and gets things done — has captured the imagination of the entire country.

Next to President Roosevelt, he has been entrusted with more national defense jobs than any other citizen. He served as chairman of the American Section of the Canadian-American Defense Commission, which made preliminary plans for the air-naval bases designed to protect America from invasion. And, with that job under control, President Roosevelt drafted him for the post of Director of the Office of Civilian Defense.

Purposeful anger appears to be the chief characteristic of the man who is now mobilizing the nation's non-military personnel against the day when the United States may be subjected to a blitzkrieg or an air attack. Often it is only a show of fury, but it gets people and problems to move faster than is their wont. Indeed, there might now be no office of civilian defense if LaGuardia had not utilized that very strategy.

The Mayor Goes to Work

WHEN LaGuardia first argued for creation of a home defense organization last winter, there was only a mild interest in the idea. It was suggested that civil and social and fraternal organizations in each community could handle the task.

New York's Mayor turned on his wrath.

"That stuff is all right for basket-weaving, dancing in the streets and community singing," he crackled. "But this is serious business. This is preparation for war, if it should come our way."

With characteristic energy, LaGuardia went to work. He mobilized the influence of the United States Conference of Mayors, of which he has been president for six terms. He sold the idea to members of Congress. Then, as Hitler swept across one European boundary after another, he sold it to President Roosevelt.

Within a few days after his appointment, the Director of Civilian Defense was on the march with a batch of practical speeches in his fat brief case. Giving nightly addresses to groups of local and state officials, he argued the need for a home defense system including World War veterans to guard bridges, business men to serve as air raid wardens, women to

pact of his dynamic personality, men, women and children in thousands of communities are enrolling for whatever task they are qualified to perform.

Long ago, as a member of the House of Representatives, he discovered that his contagious excitability was a most excellent parliamentary weapon. His explosions often dynamited the legislators into long-delayed action.

Then, as now, he was caustic and cutting in LaGuardia, fortunately for himself, often smiles at his own antics and adventures. Referring to his relationship with the President, he once said with a quizzical grin:

"You know — the President calls me 'My Boy, Fiorello.' He knows that I am only one year younger than he is, for we have often discussed our ages. I wonder if he wants to make me feel as little as I am."

Despite their personal and political intimacy, the Mayor does not like to feel himself under obligation to the President. On the eve of the 1937 Mayoralty election, F.D.R. sent LaGuardia a letter congratulating him on his handling of a threatened subway strike. It was obviously meant for publication as a last-minute boost. But the Mayor stuck it in his desk. He knew he was going to win, anyway, so why give credit even to the man in the White House!

He has not changed his technique since he became Mayor of New York. He has dramatized practical reform so as to impress its HERE is just no pleasing Gertrude. I remember when we got engaged and I bought her the diamond ring for two hundred dollars. "Ridiculous," she said. "For two hundred dollars we can buy wallpaper and a set of dishes and pots and pans and a correspondence course and a carpet sweeper.'

So I had to take the ring back, and when the man didn't want to return the down payment, Gertrude went around and got it from him. He was a very hard man to do business with, but Gertrude got the money. With it she bought a dustpan, two mops, an ironing board and an electric toaster. Wholesale.

And then when we got married and lived in the two-and-a-half-room flat on Williams Street, she kept on being hard to please. I mean Gertrude's such a peach of a looking woman, white complected, with kind of chestnut hair and all, it seemed a shame to have her moving furniture and putting her hands in dishwater. So I tried to kind of help.

But there's no pleasing Gertrude. "You keep out of my kitchen," she'd say. "I've got my job, you've got yours. Your books are all set out for you."

The books were a correspondence course. I worked for Grover Bros., Inc., and Gertrude wanted me to become a bookkeeper. Sometimes I'd get pretty sleepy, studying, but Gertrude sat in the same room with me, turning the collars on my shirts. She never let me quit before I'd done my lesson.

But it's the anniversaries that I really want to talk about. Every time my parents had an anniversary, my father used to give my mother a five-pound box of chocolates and a dozen roses. If he wasn't working at the time he'd just charge the presents. Even if he hadn't been working for a long time and we were living more or less on potatoes, he wouldn't forget my mother on their anniversary. And when he was working, he'd always give her an evening gown in addition to everything else, so that after a while she had a lot of evening gowns. If my father had only earned more money, she would have got a chance to wear them sometimes.

I mean, my father was very thoughtful.

AND that's the way I wanted to be. So when our first anniversary rolled around, I had a dozen roses sent to the house, and after work I came home with a five-pound box of assorted chocolates. I figured I could afford the presents, because I'd been promoted to bookkeeper - somebody told Mr. Hanford I'd been studying bookkeeping.

But do you think Gertrude was pleased with the gifts? "Ridiculous," she said. "Do you know we're two hundred dollars in debt?" "But, Gertrude, it's our anniversary."

"I know." She was quiet for a minute, and she looked at me kind of tender-like. "You're sweet, Henry," she said, "but if you wanted to remember our anniversary, why didn't you get me house dresses or a decent-sized kettle or a nice warm blanket?" Well, golly!

She kept the stuff, though, I noticed. But she said it was terrible for her budget. She claimed those presents and the Christmas gifts I'd bought for all our relatives kept us for a whole month from moving into the nice anniversary," I said. "I just wanted you to admit you expected a present."

"Oh," she said, "it is our anniversary, isn't it?"

"And you thought I'd forgotten."

She looked across the table at me, and her face had an awfully queer expression. "Henry, Henry," she said. "Don't you know yet what I'm mad about? I'm mad because I called the gas company and found that you didn't pay the bill today after I gave you the money for it. I suppose you used the money to buy me this - whatever it is."

four-room flat on Mt. Vernon Street.

Well, by the next anniversary I'd got two raises and I was in line for an auditor's job. Somehow Mr. Hanford had found out that Gertrude had me studying auditing now.

So for the second anniversary I bought Gertrude a lot of silk underwear and an evening gown and a new comb, brush and mirror set, and of course the chocolates and roses.

She didn't like it at all. "Henry," she said, "I don't want you to buy me any more of this useless stuff.'

"Well, don't you want me to remember you on our anniversary?" I asked her.

"Not this way. I'd like a new ironing pad or some pot-holders, yes - or maybe" - she looked at the underwear hanging limp over the arm of a chair - "maybe, if you want to get personal, some service-weight stockings. But all this - " She shook her head. "Ridiculous," she said.

"Well, haven't you got any sentiment?"

"Yes, Henry. But I don't need stuff like this. I'm a pretty plain person." She was wrong there. Gertrude is a very fine-looking woman. "And we're not very rich," she went on. "All this stuff would set us back months - if I kept it."

"You're -- you're not sending them back, Gertrude? All my presents to you?" I asked. She put her hand on my arm and looked at me for a minute. "Yes, I am, Henry," she said. Her voice was low, and her hand dropped. "I've - it's just that I've got to teach you somehow, Henry," she said.

I didn't know what to do for a minute. Finally I walked into the kitchen; I was afraid she would see my eyes.

And it was while I was running the water for a drink there that I made up my mind that on our next anniversary I would see that she was pleased for a change.

WELL, our third anniversary was just vesterday.

The past year has been pretty nice. I'm an auditor now, and we've got a nice duplex five-room place, with upstairs and downstairs, and for almost a whole year Gertrude's let me have an allowance of seven dollars a week.

Well, like I say, yesterday was our anniversary. I came home like it was just any ordinary day. I kissed Gertrude on the cheek, as usual, and said: "If supper isn't ready I guess I'll take a look at my books." I'm taking a course in business organization now.

I fussed around getting the books, and Gertrude stood in the middle of the sitting room watching me. Finally when I settled down with a book open before me on the card table, she said: "Pretty studious. You must have a guilty conscience."

"Why, Gertrude" - I looked surprised -..."

She didn't answer, just went to the kitchen. All through supper I didn't say anything -and neither did Gertrude. But when I'd had my last spoonful of bread pudding and pushed the plate back, she stopped me. "Haven't you forgotten something?" she said. I looked innocent. "Forgotten something?"

"Yes. Forgotten something?"

"Why, no," I said, "I don't think I've forgotten anything."

"Henry," she said, "I'm surprised at you. I thought you could be - well, could be relied on to -- " She was all choked up. I got an envelope out of my pocket and slid it across the table.

'What's this?" she said.

SHE tore the envelope and took out the bank book. She opened it and stared at what it was. I was rolling little bread balls between my fingers, waiting, kind of, for her to say something. But when she spoke, all she said was. "Henry!"

"I've been saving most of my allowance all year," I said. "I didn't pay the gas bill because I figured it would be nice to put that money with all the other and have an even two hundred and fifty dollars for your anniversary present." She still didn't say anything, or look up, so I added, "It's in your name, Gertrude. It's yours."

Well, then she started to cry, soft-like.

After that it was one of the nicest evenings Gertrude and I have ever had. But just as we were getting into bed, she said:

"There's one thing, though, Henry. Today was the last day for the discount on that gas bill."

See what I mean? There's no pleasing Gertrude. Not completely. But now that I'm beginning to get the hang of it, I'm going to keep on trying.

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

ERRY BRADFORD bounced out of bed and hurried to the window. Surveying the sun-drenched sky, he felt as happy as a lark, as frisky as a colt and as carefree as the wind. Never in his twenty-nine years had he felt this good at 6:30 A.M.

Could it be that he was actually getting such a wallop out of the prospect of spending two whole days with Connie Haynes? No, that was silly. But a short while ago he would have repudiated that absurd notion much more vigorously, since it implied that he might be falling in love - and love was not for him. "Look," he would have chided himself, "with the world all loused up the way it is, only lunks let themselves go. You, Jerry, my boy, are avoiding entangling alliances right now."

That applied to Connie Haynes too.

He had met her over a year ago, and from the start she had thrown him off-stride. A blonde, pert little thing, she should have been lightheaded, frivolous and full of the old zing. Instead, she turned out to be very much on the serious side. Oh, not a long-hair, but nevertheless a gal who believed life was real, life was earnest. She could dance, she could wear clothes and she could get the point of almost any joke, but she also collected recipes, saved money, and had more knowledge of world affairs than he had ever believed a blonde could assimilate.

He was never quite able to decide why he had bothered to see her again - she was definitely not his type. It was surprising to find, after a couple of dates, that he actually liked being with her. When they were together he did not feel obliged to play at the endless game of thrust and parry which made an evening with most girls so strenuous. Often they did nothing more exciting than go for a walk on the Drive or a ride out in Westchester, talking or not talking, as they pleased. And yet it was fun with Connie. It was nice to have a pretty girl at your side and not feel obliged to say something clever or comical.

"My Blue Heaven" in a loud, slightly fruity baritone, substituting "Connie" for "Molly"

(It took some doing, but he managed.) These serious gals, he thought dismally. One kiss and they wanted to call the preacher. Why couldn't they accept a kiss for what it was a kind of combustible tribute to their desirability - and let it go at that? He had hoped, when he finally called her again, that she would tell him off. He had it coming to him and he knew it. But she had replied, a catch in her voice, "Oh, I'd love to go out tonight, Jerry!"

night; something unexpected came up - and he and Alice won't be able to leave town before noon. We're to go ahead and lay in the

BUT it was insidious, too. Habit-forming. That was why he always put off calling Connie until the queer ache of separation was too sharp for comfort. Then he would phone, casually, and ask her for a date, happily certain that she would give it to him without stalling or hedging. She invariably said, with an odd little catch in her voice, "Oh, I'd love to go out tonight, Jerry!"

Of course he had always meant to set her straight. "To avoid any misunderstanding." he had intended to tell her, "you ought to know that I'm not contemplating matrimony - not with the world all out of whack the way it is. If you're on the prowl, you're working a cold trail."

But somehow he could never bring himself to tell her that.

So he had taken an easy out and persuaded Alice Manton to put Connie straight. "She's such an earnest little party," he explained. "I wouldn't want her to get any wrong notions. If you'll just drop a hint that I'm not in the mood for mergers this season, I'll appreciate it a lot.'

Alice had given him a scornful look. "I'll warn her," she said; "but I think you're an old prig, Jerry Bradford."

He went into the bathroom and ran the shower. As the stinging darts of water broke at the end of the chorus:

"Just Connie and me,

And baby makes three .... "

Boy, he thought, I've really got it this A.M. But bad . . .

In the year and a half he had known Connie, the propriety of their relationship had been shattered only once. Then, with spring, a great white moon, and Connie's tempting nearness conspiring to undo him, he had taken her in his arms and kissed her long and hard. All his senses were fused in the white-hot core of their kiss, and beyond her lips, her closed eyes, and the silky wisps of her hair which the breeze had caught, he was aware of nothing. He had tried to laugh off the impact of their fierce collision.

"That," he said, "was an accident."

"Accidents will happen," Connie said quietly.

Her quietness fooled him until he saw her tense face and the tears gleaming in her eyes. "I'm sorry," he muttered. "Terribly sorry."

"You needn't be," she said. "I'm not."

"It's not that I regret kissing you." Her simple honesty made him feel like a blundering schoolboy. "It's just that I don't want you to - to - "

"- take anything for granted?" "Well - '

"I understand, Jerry," she said.

It had made him feel terrible.

But now he didn't feel terrible. Now he felt great. Super. Any man would get a kick out of spending a week end with a pretty girl, wouldn't he? Connie was pretty, wasn't she? And he was human, wasn't he?

WHEN he had had breakfast and was ready to leave, he phoned Connie.

"Hello, darling," he said cheerily. (The "darling" meant nothing.) "I'm just shoving off. I'll be round to your place in about twenty minutes."

"I'll be waiting, Jerry." That was Connie for you. Always ready and waiting. Punctual as the tides. She would make a fine wife for some fellow with sense enough to appreciate her good qualities.

"By the way," he said, "you and I are to make the trip by ourselves. Bill has to go to the office this morning - he phoned last supplies. Mind?"

"Of course not!" She sounded rather pleased. Well, he was pleased, too.

He was even more pleased when he saw her. She was wearing a white two-piece sports dress, a red jacket and red sandals. Her legs were bare and brown and lovely.

"Miss Haynes," he said, holding her at arm's length and inspecting her, "you're beeyootiful!'

"Thank you, Mr. Bradford," she said. "Nice of you to notice."

"No fooling," he said earnestly. "I've never seen you look so pretty."

"Perhaps," she said with a wry smile, "I show up better in the daytime."

The 150-mile trip seemed to take no time at all. He rolled back the top of the roadster and turned down the windshield, but the breeze which poured in on them was warm and dry. The green countryside and the distant blue hills shimmered in the glare of the high hot sun.

Connie had removed her red jacket. Her head was thrown back and her throat rose cool and perfect from the V-neckline of her dress. Her eyes were closed against the dusty breeze. There was a kind of charming pagan innocence in her attitude.

HE DANCES ON AIR And the woodcock sings as he performs

by Roy Chapman Andrews

Director of the American Museum of Natural History

NE evening not long ago I had a rare and charming experience. When we arrived at Pondwood Farm, our country place in the Berkshires, the caretaker said to me:

"Queen was pointing a woodcock in the meadows just outside the door for about half an hour this afternoon."

I knew what that meant. If we were lucky the woodcock would sing that night. It was a warm, soft evening flooded with the thousand scents of spring. Just at dusk we heard a peculiar nasal "peent, peent" near the edge of the forest enveloping the meadow; then another and another, from half a dozen spots at once. It was almost like a chorus of frogs. My wife and I took flashlights and walked slowly out into the meadow and kneeled down. In a few moments the nasal "peent," preceded by a soft little coo, came from right in front of us. Then, like a ghost, a woodcock fluttered against the sky in a long, sweeping curve. Suddenly the bird shot upward in a corkscrew spiral. At the apex of his flight he paused a moment, glided slowly downward, side-slipped, righted himself and shot into a headlong dive. As he tumbled earthward a series of indescribably sweet ethereal trilling notes floated down to us.

All this time we had been moving forward. Suddenly the fat little singer landed softly almost at our feet. With the flashlight held beside my head, I snapped the button forward. There sat the bird in the sudden glare and I caught the pale, greenish light reflected from its eyes. For a moment or two the little fellow strutted on the ground, then uttered its "coo-peent" and was off again on another long upward spiral. Half a dozen woodcock were in the air at once, filling the night with their sweet tremulous notes.

Sportsman's Favorite

OF COURSE no one ever thinks of a woodcock as a songbird. It is endeared to every sportsman because it is exceedingly hard to hit in its erratic flight, and is delicious to eat.

Once you have been lucky enough, however, to hear that ethereal warble drifting down out of a starlit sky, you will think of a woodcock in different terms.

I never cease to be surprised at the determined way in which these birds follow the reluctant retreat of winter. Even in Connecticut, late snow flurries will catch a woodcock sitting on its eggs or find the downy young running through swamps before ice has left the ponds. This, even though the long, slender bill must be pushed down into the soft earth for earthworms and insects.

This remarkable bill, by the way, possesses many nerve endings which make it very sensitive and enable the bird to feel in the ground and discover food which it cannot see. It will eat in twenty-four hours twice its own weight of earthworms.

victims, its beneficiaries and the vast audience of the metropolis and the nation. Politics is still both a sauce and a science to him.

The root of most social and municipal evils, in his belief, is the crooked alliance between political machines and the police force. So, on one of his first days in office, he showed up at Police Headquarters for an impromptu talk to "the finest." He did not deliver a "Goo Goo" speech. He simply said:

"The day has passed when all you need is a helmet, a big fat belly and an alderman to get on the police force."

They understood that kind of language. They understood it better when he named as their boss Lewis J. Valentine, a first-rate officer who had been exiled to a bush-league beat because he took his civic oath seriously. Crime has showed a steady decline

No Party Man

THE politicians dislike and distrust him because he is not a "party man," and does not behave as a "regular." They cannot understand one who has run for office as a Republican, a Progressive, an Independent with Socialist endorsement, a Fusionist, an American Labor Partyite. They brand him, and truthfully, as a "man without a party." He regards that characterization as a compliment. To him most politicians are "clubhouse loafers," "payroll leeches," "treasury looters." When Republican leaders submitted their slate of suggested city appointments to him he tossed it in the waste-basket. When they pleaded with him to inform them twenty-four hours in advance of appointments (so that they could pretend they had been in the know and agreeable) he declined. When, in 1937, they threatened not to renominate him because "LaGuardia had not d one anything for the Republican Party," he shot back:

"Than ks for the compliment."

The ep ithets — "grafters," "crooks" and "burglars" — come easily to his lips as he condemns interests scheming to profit off the city. But he has saved millions in contract costs, bankers' interest rates, excessive salaries of payroll patriots.

When he entered City Hall, New York was so broke from Tammany misrule that it was paying 6 per cent on short-time borrowings. LaGuardia summoned the bankers to his office, demanded a reduction. When they refused, he bowed and said.

"Then I shall have to see the biggest banker in the United States."

They asked what and whom he meant. "Jesse Holman Jones," he replied. "He happens to be chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation." The rate is now 1 per cent.

He has obtained millions to build new schools, parks, subways, slumclearance apartments, etc. He has remade the façade of New York City, made it a finer place to live in — and he also has balanced the budget.

He is an imperious boss. With three stenographers lined before him, he rifles his mail and machine-guns his answers. All day long he rants and scolds and swears at his aides. He pounds and frowns. He struts. He waves his dark, horned spectacles like a baton or a sword. Yet his staff adore him. And they work almost as hard as he does. If they don't, they're out. He is the autocrat of City Hall.

With his new defense assignment, he performs the work of three men. Frequently, he holds a before-breakfast conference in New York, flies to Washington on the 10 o'clock plane, confers with Army, Navy and O.P.M. officials in the afternoon, delivers an evening address at Philadelphia, Baltimore or Richmond, and climbs into bed at 2 A.M. There are times when the Home Defender does not appear to have a home to defend.

How does he keep up this nervous pace?

He frequently pretends that the job is killing him. Actually he has put on weight, and has had to abandon his favorite dishes of macaroni and spaghetti. He thrills and thrives on work.

Relaxes at Home

HE IS a naturally buoyant person. He says that he cannot remember when he was unhappy or disheartened, despite more ups and downs than have befallen most men in politics today. He is blessed with a rich sense of humor and a flair for self-dramatization. He never fails to see the odd, the human, the whimsical aspects of events and individuals. He entertains his family and friends with a re-enactment of his day - and himself. With his strange mingling of small-boy egotism, his childlike charm, his imitative ability, and realistic insight, he would have starred on the stage. He is fortunate, too, in that neither he nor Mrs. LaGuardia possess social ambitions. Though the great and wealthy now seek his presence, he rarely breaks his rule against dining out. Leaving his office late in the afternoon, he shuts the door on his headaches once he walks into his modest apartment. On nights at home, he listens to music on the radio or plays Russian Bank with Mrs. LaGuardia. With Mrs. LaGuardia and their two adopted children - Jean and Eric - and a few close friends, he finds relaxation from official pressure. Sundays he sleeps, just to keep in practice. In the old days he delighted to spend Sunday in the kitchen, where he is as expert as he is in Government. But the days are vanished when he can seek culinary surcease in making minestrone soup, serving a deliciouslycooked turkey or curry of rice, whipping a dressing for a salad. Sometimes he wishes wistfully that they hadn't.

WHEN TO GO HOME

When a hostess says "Stay" does she mean "Please go!" Here is the way to find out

Author of "Etiquette: The Blue Book of Social Usage," "The Personality of a House," Etc.

ODAY'S subject is suggested by a question whose several answers depend upon the time, the place, and the girl - or the woman and her visitors. The question is about the length of time one visitor should stay after the arrival of another. Should the first-comer leave at once and let the new arrival have an uninterrupted talk with the hostess, or would it be more polite to stay - and if so, for how long?

Before considering the man-andgirl angles, let us take a typical social situation of a hostess who is talking with two visitors in the later afternoon. Let us say that Mr. and Mrs. Town who are staying at a summer hotel go and see Mrs. Seavue, an acquaintance who has a cottage. Mrs. Seavue offers them tea or similar beverage, and before they have finished it Mr. and Mrs. Stroller arrive. Mrs. Seavue greets them with cordiality, but impersonally.

This situation is, of course, no problem at all. The first comers, seeing plainly that the new arrivals are, like themselves, semi-formal visitors, join them in general conversation, and tranquilly continue to sip their tea. The Strollers are also given tea - or whatever else; and the Towns stay for as long as the conversation is entertaining, or at least goes along smoothly.

When the conversation lags or when time has grown long, the Towns leave. Or if the Strollers rise to leave, then the Towns should, if possible, manage to leave first. This will give the later comers a chance, in case they want to have a moment's conversation alone.

Tact Is Important

ALL social expertness is dependent upon a reasonable degree of tact, which is not so much a natural gift as painstaking attentiveness. We hear a great deal about sensitiveness; (I too, probably write about it more often than I realize), but a plainer word for this quality of awareness is the habit of observing.

If you go to see a friend and another arrives, you will know quite plainly whether to go or whether to stay, if you will merely take note of the tones of their greetings. If the hostess, says: "How do you do, Mrs. Jones, I'm so glad to see you," or: "Hello, Mary, how are you today?" it is quite all right to stay.

But a surprised and eager "Darling !! where have you come from?" and "darling's" answer: "Oh, I have so much to tell you!" indicates plainly that you should hurry away and let unless Mary is willing to advertise her liking for the man, she says: "Come sit down, Jane!" Jane, if she is clever and a real friend of Mary's should say, with frank regret: "I wish I could stay, but mother sent me for the book your mother said she'd lend her."

It makes little difference what she asks for, but it should be some thing that she must take to someone who is waiting for it! In other words, if she comes as a messenger, the reason why she doesn't stay is not made plain to Soldier.

If it happens that Mary isn't particularly interested in the man, her manner in telling Jane to stay is plainly understood. Girls may, perhaps, have a whole code of phrases and signals by which each aids and abets the other. On the other hand, if Mary's visitor had been a friend of her own as well as of Jane's and she had known that neither Jane nor he were especially interested in the other, then she would, of course, have stayed for as long as she felt like it.

It is true that the romance angle. although heavily underscored, is exceptional. A more typical unwelcome visitor is Mrs. Self-assured, who is told by the maid at the door, that Mrs. Jones is expected home soon. She goes into the living-room and there she finds Mary with a group of her own friends. Instead of giving Mary a message for her mother, she sits down and makes polite conversation until Mary's friends depart.

Much more serious, however, are the many occasions when those, who are tactless, break in upon the private lives of their neighbors. It would be wonderful, if only it might be possible for private families to copy the traffic rules and put up "stop" and "go" signs. As it is, invisible signs, saying the same thing, are seemingly perceptible to those who have the right kind of awareness. Those who would like to acquire this insight might learn to associate a "go" sign with such a circumstance as the home-coming of a husband from a long business trip, or of a son and daughter from college, or more particularly, of a son on short leave from training camp.

There are few times, in other words, when visitors are less welcome than when a mother and father and their son or daughter, who does not live at home, are having a thoroughly happy half hour together. It may be that there is nothing of any importance to talk about, but any outside person is all too often like an interfering radio station that keeps you from tuning in on the one that you want to hear.

On the other hand, it is very stupid to be always looking for evidence of not being wanted. The occasions when you're not welcome are scarcely more than the few mentioned. If you pay any attention at all, you should be able to sense these moments.

One last word on how to go. Many people find it awkward to leave when another has arrived. It is easiest to take leave at once, before the newcomer is seated. Grace of manner, as it is called, is best produced not so much by any conscious posture, but by a friendly, tranquil and amiable frame of mind, and a manner that is not apparently hurried, but wastes no time. The thing not to do, is to stalk out as though annoyed, or at the other extreme, to scuttle away like a frightened rabbit. Neither is best behavior!

A very important "go" moment is when you find an intimate friend just a little distracted - her attention not quite in focus. Since she is an intimate friend, you naturally ask: "Am I keep, ing you from something?" If she is so self-consciously tongue-tied that she is unable to answer, frankly, "yes" or hedgingly, "nothing really important," you yourself will have to decide whether it is wise to stay or not. In my opinion, whenever one is in doubt about whether one's visit may be welcome, it is best to go; but go amiably, understandingly, lovingly.

I can hardly over-emphasize the joy that a friend, who shows understanding, brings to an over-busy person who is not always able to spare the time to welcome even those whose friendship she (or he) values most.

Ordinarily, however, first visitors do not leave when the others arrive. I have a neighbor, not far from the four-score-year mark, in whose house you will find whoever happens to be in town about an hour after the steamboat has arrived, or a yacht has dropped anchor. In this house, people seemingly never leave. Those who come at half-past three, are still there at half-past six. When a new arrival enters, those present straighten up as though to take leave, and then all lean back again and stay. This however is an exceptional house, whose exceptional hostess is quite outside the ordinary rules.

The most obviously unwelcome visitor is the one who interrupts a man and girl who are especially interested in each other. For example, let us say that Jane, going to see Mary, finds her having a twosome conversation with her new boyfriend, Stuart Soldier. In this case, the question is not one of stay or leave, but of how Jane is to go without letting Soldier know that she realizes her arrival displeases Mary.

Tilly Tactless would surely exclaim: "Oh, I wouldn't think of crashing a twosome!" or "I know when I'm not wanted!" These are remarks that Mary couldn't answer except by begging her to stay. In any case, however,

"That's just what I was afraid you'd say, Miss Thorpe- You're sure that you were here alone all evening? That there was no one here who could bolster up your alibi?"

"Alibi? Who said anything about an alibi? I don't have to give any alibis!"

The motor, very close now, cut off suddenly. The Commodore was landing.

"We'll go inside," said Niels. "I want to hear what Hampton has to say to you." He drew me into the darkened room off the porch - the living room, I could see from the porch light - with a huge fireplace, and many pillows strewn around.

ROSEMARY opened her mouth as though to protest; then, hearing the Commodore striding up the path from the lake, she turned to face him. "Who's there?" she asked sharply.

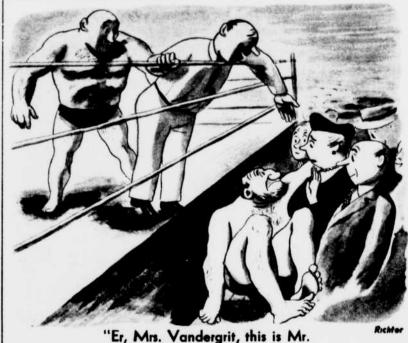

"Les Hampton. I want to talk to you." "About what?"

"About the murder of Clive Christie!"

"Murder? Clive Christie!"

In the gloom of the inner room, Niels touched my arm. "It's fairly light in here. Let's be sure we're out of sight."

We tiptoed into the next room. Niels closed the door, took the flashlight from my hand, and turned on the switch. We were in a bedroom. The voices outside were clear.

"Let's not play games, Miss Thorpe," Hampton was saying. "I haven't any time to waste. You killed Christie. I don't blame you in the least; he had it coming to him - but at the same time, I don't propose to have either Mrs. Hampton or myself accused of it. God knows it's a messy enough affair already!"

"You think I - killed Clive?" "Stalling won't help, Miss Thorpe.

You were out sailing with him; otherwise he certainly would not have been sailing in the south end of the lake, full of sand bars as it is. He saw my wife's - he saw Mrs. Hampton's boat, recognized it, and not realizing that she knew of his affair with you, dodged out of sight around the island, bundled you ashore on some pretext or other, and then met Mrs. Hampton. Undoubtedly you heard the conversation between them, realized that he had planned for months to marry her and give you the gate. Then, when he came back for you, you killed him. Your footprints are all over the beach there on Big Sandy; I stopped on my way down and looked."

There was a long silence; a silence that made my scalp tickle. "All right," Rosemary said. "I was out with him. I was on the island. But I didn't kill him.

"I did hear him talking to your wife; you're right about that, too. But I didn't wait for him. It's only a few hundred yards to the shore, on the other side of the island, and I thought I'd let him worry. I swam to the mainland, made my way along the shore, and came home and went to bed. That's the truth. I swear it !"

NIELS touched my hand. "Come on," he whispered. "It's up to us, now!" We then entered the door. "You -? What -?" the Commodore stammered.

"Easy does it," Niels said soothingly. "I'm sorry, Miss Thorpe, but you shouldn't swear to lies, you know."

She turned on him. Her features were distorted, her eyes blazing, her lips drawn thin in a hateful smile. "It's the truth," she said. "You can't hang this on me."

"You say you swam ashore?"

"I did. I can swim twice that far and not even be breathing hard when I come out."

"Very possibly- In your clothes?" She hesitated, her eyes darting from one face to another. Twice she

METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

NEW YORK CITY

To all Metropolitan Policyholders:

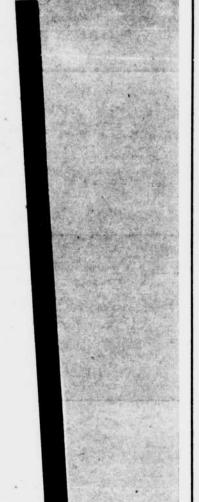

Three and one-half years ago, we decided to devote part of our advertising effort to explaining how a life insurance company operates.

Since then, we have published thirty-nine advertisements having this as their aim. We have told you about mortality tables, dividends, surpluses, diversification of investments, and many other subjects. However, so far in the series we have not covered in detail Metropolitan agency practices and principles which govern life insurance selling activities.

Accordingly, we are devoting this and several succeeding messages to their explanation. The principles underlying our sales practices are designed to help us provide you with the kind and amount of insurance protection you should have at the lowest cost consistent with safety. Briefly stated, these basic selling principles are . . .

- 1. Your life insurance program should be fitted to your own particular needs and those of your family.
- 2. In taking out life insurance, full consideration should be iven to the relationship between your income and your insurance needs.

3. As your insurance needs change, or your income varies, your insurance program should be fitted to your new situation in whatever way will best serve your interests and your family's. Your Company or any representative will be glad to advise you in such cases without charging you a fee of any kind.

4. The Company should do everything it reasonably can, not only to make it convenient for you to keep your life insurance program in force, but also to help fulfill its objectives.

Life insurance companies have found that the most satisfactory way to help you accomplish these things is through the Agency System. Metropolitan agents are especially trained in life insurance, so that they may be equipped to help you with your problems. This method of selling life insurance has been given the stamp of public approval by generations of policyholders.

COPYRIGHT 1941 - METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE CO. This is Number 40 in a series of advertisements designed to give the public a clearer understanding of how a life insurance company operates. Copies of preceding advertisements in this series will be mailed upon request.

"It just won't work, Miss Thorpe," he said quietly. "If you had stripped off, your clothes would be on the island - and they're not, I'm sure. If you'd worn your clothes, they'd be wet - and they're not. Only your shoes, and the socks you wore. They're in there, under the bed.

"I'll tell you exactly what happened: Christie came ashore for youit's a shallow beach and he couldn't come close enough to leap ashore; the bottoms of his slacks were wet from wading in. You came aboard. There was an argument; you were bitter, and he was brutally frank, I imagine. Anyway, you hit him with the flashlight - a long, heavy affair, like this one we have. Then you sailed to the nearest shore and cast the boat adrift. The weapon, of course, you dropped into the lake.

"But you were sorry; I guess you must have loved him, Miss Thorpe, for you arranged his body so carefully on one of the seats, and just before you left, you - kissed him on the forehead."

It was just a little too much for Rosemary Thorpe. She dropped into a chair and hid her face in her hands. (Continued on page 18)

"Sounds great."

Under a Winter Shade of Powder

Why risk the beauty of your new summer skin? Dramatize it—accent those rich new tones—make yourself look radiant, _exciting. How? By using your LUCKY SUMMER SHADE!

SUMMER, with its sunshine and flowers, is no time for dark clothes-for heavy fabrics. You want gay, pretty things-don't you?summery and colorful.

But what about that old winter shade of face powder? Isn't it just as out of season now as winter clothes?

Perhaps you never stopped to realize what a traitor your January powder is in July-how it can steal the very richness and charm of your deepened new complexion – how it can make it do a "fade-out." Now's the time for your skin to look its most glamorous – its most exciting! Now's the time for you to find the shade of powder that really flatters your lovely new summer complexion! own skin. Your mirror will soon tell you which shade is yours, which is most flattering.

If you could only read the letters I've had from thousands of women! They say they love the texture of Lady Esther Face Powder -the smooth, even way it goes onthe way it clings so long and so well! That's because my powder is made a new way-the Twin-Hurricane way-which whirls and buffs it to almost unbelievable softness. mettle by rejecting a half dozen steaks and three or four chickens before finally accepting the ones which met with her approval. Jerry got a great kick out of watching her stand up to the butcher. He winked at Jerry as he paid the bill. "Your wife knows her meat, all right," he said, admiringly. "She's an authority on the subject."

Grinning, he told Connie of the butcher's tribute. "He thought you were my wife."

"How absurd!"

"What's absurd about it?" he demanded, nettled by the cool irony. "The very idea."

"I don't see anything absurd about it. People do get married, you know."

"Why, yes," she said, as if it had just occurred to her. "I guess they do." All right, he thought peevishly. Go ahead and be funny. His indefinable annoyance persisted throughout lunch and the remainder of the trip to Moon Lake. He felt that Connie had deliberately tried to get a rise out of him, and yet he could find nothing to justify his grievance.

BUT when they reached Bill's place his annoyance vanished. The cottage was set in a grove of pines; only a deep-seated grouch could survive the healing, pungent odor which filled the air. Through the trees they could see the cool lake.

"This is it," Jerry said.

"Oh, it's grand!" Connie breathed. "Wait till you hit the lake," he said. "Or it hits you. It's the coldest water this side of the Arctic Circle. I hope you brought your fur-lined bathing suit."

"Don't worry about me," she laughed. "My ancestors were seals."

She ran up the slippery pineneedled path and he followed with their bags and the huge bundle of groceries. The excitement he had felt earlier began to return.

The mustiness of the cottage vanished magically when he had opened a couple of windows and the faint breeze had brought the scent of the pines to them. Connie, exclaiming, inspected the living room with its great stone fireplace and rustic furniture, the cheerful, brightly-painted kitchen with its slightly primitive appointments, and the bedrooms with their bunks and homemade furnishings. "Oh, it's heavenly!" she said.

"Bill built it himself, with occasional assistance from butter-fingered apprentices like me. He and Alice spent their honeymoon here, and if things ever get real tough, they plan to move up here and eat rabbits."

"Do you think I could persuade them to take me?"

WALLY'S WAGON

Sort of Handy, Too

A LADY named Caroline McKee from Cincinnati wrote in to tell me she had come across a sayin' to the effect that a wise man, like a pin, had a head on him, to keep him from goin' too far.

Bushy Barnes comes in while I'm readin' her letter. He has just closed up the newsstand an' brings me by a leftover copy of the paper.

I look through it, between customers, an' I am surprised how much news is made by people that went too far. You just look over any paper an' you'll see what I mean.

Well, I am tellin' Bushy my thoughts an' he takes the other side, just to make conversation.

"But look at how many don't go far enough," he says. "Here's a yarn about a fellow who saved his dough but kept it in a hole in the floor instead of puttin' it in a bank or in a savin's bond or somethin'. The rats got it.

"An' here's one about a gal who got a ticket on her car for leavin' it too far from the curb. She didn't want to get her whitesidewall tires dirty, she told the iudge."

"Okay, wise guy," I tell him.

"You can go too far or you can fall too short. So how does the human race keep itself in the middle?"

Bushy thinks a minute, then he cracks out with this one.

"I guess the human neck is a mighty important part of the anatomy. It lets a guy hold his head up, look around an' see where he is goin' an' what is comin'. Then, at the right time, it can jerk his noggin down into his collar an' let him duck the trouble he can't dodge. Yes. sir, the neck is very useful to keep a man in the middle of the road."

Well, I got to readin' the paper some more after Bushy left, an' come across a little piece that says some ancient tribes thought the neck was where their conscience was located, because of the lump they got in their Adam's apple when they was sad or wrong or scared.

Can you beat that! An' heretofore I had always sort of thought of the neck as just the part of a small boy that gets washed last — an' least.

Wally BOREN

"Don't you think I've ever been lonely, Jerry?"

Again he felt an inexplicable antagonism burning like a subtle fire in him. Is she trying to get my goat? he wondered. Or are my sensibilities just working overtime?

"I supposenyou have," he said. "I imagine most people are lonely at one time or another." "Even you, Jerry?"

HINTS FOR VACATION MOVIE MAKERS

Ideas for making your films just as much fun as your holiday itself

by Fulton Williams

HAVE you noticed that the movies you-bring back from a trip look swell the first time you show them — but that by the fifth or sixth screening you begin to pick flaws in them yourself? That's simply because most of us movie makers commit some mortal sins — in our anxiety to show everything.

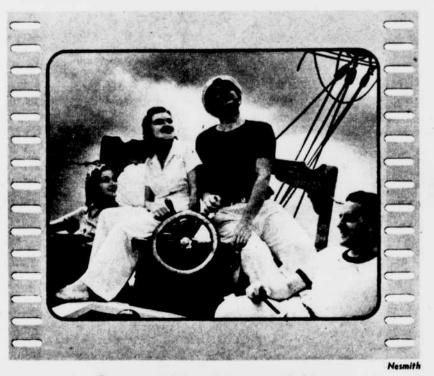

The three cardinal offenses of the home-movie maker are: (1) Too many short, fleeting glimpses of things in rapid succession. (2) A wobbly camera and crooked lines. (3) Profuse "panning," which is very hard on the eyes of the audience.

Short shots are hard to grasp. You already know what the scene or situation is, but your visitors don't. By the time you've started to explain, the picture has changed. Count at least to four seconds as you shoot — "one hundred and one, one hundred and two," etc. — and if you can hold a scene six seconds, so much the better.

The wobbly camera is an obvious fault and the obvious remedy is a tripod. But you can never win the tripod argument with the average amateur. Suffice it to say that it does matter if your movie camera moves unintentionally: it jerks your eyes when the picture is, projected. The very least you can do is brace your legs, hold your breath and press your camera firmly against your face when you shoot.

As for "panning," a book could be written on that! The temptation to panoram with a movie camera is terrific — and so are many of the results. Here are a few do's and don't's:

Don't begin panning the moment you press the release. Open up with the camera stationary for two seconds, go into the panoram, then finish with a two-second still.

Before you start any panoram, study the situation and see if it can't be done just as well in two or three consecutive still shots, pivoting the necessary degree for each half or third of the sequence. The bulk of vacation movies would be immeasurably improved by less panning.

Don't "Spray"

ABOVE all, do not pan back and forth over the same scene. There is absolutely no excuse for it. If you missed something the first time, do the whole scene over again and cut out the original when you edit your film. Remember that a movie machine is a camera, not a garden hose. It was never intended to be sprayed over a landscape.

There are other faults which mar a film and make it tiresome to look at long before its time. Chief among these is the inclusion of too much footage of relatives, friends or visitors doing inane and trivial things. Maybe you enjoy looking at Cousin Fred time and time again as he mugs the camera or makes donkey-ears with his hands. But to others who have to look at your films it's trashy stuff — and even you will get sick of it by the eighth screening.

This doesn't mean that people shouldn't be in your movies. But when they do enter them, they ought to be doing natural, sensible things.

Another common flaw — and this applies to both people and scene — is a scarcity of close-ups. If you really want to show your friends or distant relatives on the screen, you've got to have a few close-ups so we can see what they look like. And for trip pictures in general, close-ups serve very refreshingly to break up that inevitable series of one long-distance shot after another.

Every time you take your camera out of its case, tell yourself that no amateur movie ever had too many close-ups — and look around for suitable subjects. Animals are always a sure-fire relief and flowers are "naturals" which never bore anybody. In fact, whenever you get into a garden with your movie camera, you've little choice but to take close-ups, for longdistance shots of flowers en masse are rarely as satisfying as you'd hoped.

What to Look For

HERE are other close-up shots the vacationist should watch for: Architectural details of buildings such as doorways, etc. Highway signs, route markers, historical markers, etc., which serve well for location titles later. Local characters or scenes such as old inhabitants, fishing boats or nets, saddles and spurs, natives in costume. Any oddities like quaint street signs, lampposts, store fronts.

For the movie maker on cruise there are numerous ship details such as the wake astern; a life ring with the ship's name on it; navigating instruments (or men) on the bridge; coiled hausers, anchors, rope ladders, lifeboat davits; ventilators or belching funnels; trunk and baggage labels, and the like.

One last hint: whatever your conveyance may be, you can always get shots of an approaching city or town through the porthole, out of the train window or through the car's windshield, using them as frames for the picture.

You'll find that touches like these will prove invaluable in sustaining the interest of your vacation film long after the first flush of gratification with your good exposures and unfamiliar scenes wears off. That's the only kind of film, indeed, that you can enjoy looking at again and again.

BEAUTY FOR TWEEN-TEENS

They can follow these rules—and be happy by Sylvia Blythe

TITLE girl babes-in-arms search in mirrors for entrancing images. When the teen-age comes, ideas as to how they want to look are as flourishing as young bodies, bursting from seams or shooting from clothes:

Yet, as reader-mail from little girls and daughter-perplexed mothers shows, these ideas get mixed into woeful tangles. This is due partly to adolescent changes and partly to a premature beauty-consciousness.

So, with the idea of piloting both mothers and daughters through these mazes, I made a poll of beauty problems that beset the growing girl and turned to the experts for help.

Number one on the unpopularity list is the little oily face which has a magnetic power for attracting blackheads. Blackheads are the villain in the piece, because when they burrow in, they act up, and cause horrid little bumps.

If this is the image you see in your mirror, remedy lies in corrective soapand-water habits. Begin these with a vow — hand upon heart — that you'll tap the faucets at least two times a day — morning and night — and in between, if necessary.

Use soap in either cake or liquid form, but have Mother pick one for your own private use that is free of alkalines or super-fats and that has a mildly antiseptic action. If soap disagrees, causing puckering or splotchiness, use a foam-preparation, in liquid form, specialized for young skins.

Don't eliminate the oil from your skin with brutal scrubbing. Such an attack only stimulates oil glands and steps up their output. Gentleness is your cue. To be gentle and at the same time thorough, make a mask out of the soap, and put it on in two coatings, letting the first dry before you apply the second. This mask loosens up impurities and draws off oil, with no rubbing. When you are ready to remove it, frisk a wash cloth over skin surfaces. Wring your cloth out in warm water for cleansing, in cold water for rinsing.

When you dry, blot up moisture thoroughly with a towel. Rubbing your face is still O-U-T.

If plugged-in blackheads fail to yield gracefully to this treatment and flare up to annoy you — treat them to a medicated ointment. Put this on at bedtime after you cleanse, and leave it on overnight to dry up these nuisances. Don't ever squeeze or pick at them.

See a Dermatologist

I<sub>F</sub> ACNE — pimples — that make a chronic appearance — are the cross you bear, the person best able to take you in hand is a good dermatologist. It's not smart for either mother or daughter to shrug acne off as an adolescent disturbance that will eventually right itself. It may do so, but not without leaving some distressing imprints on nice young skins, to say nothing of complexes that may warp a sensitive young mind.

There are little girls, of course, who fret over dry skins. They ask if they can use creams, and if so, what kind. If that's you, you can use them, of course, since there are many creams safe to use on babies. If a very young girl has a dry-skin problem, it is not a be didne to bable for these some light mineral-oil creams that are prescribed for infants. Then, she's safe from risks of loading a young, active skin with heavy oils. When she digs into Mother's pet creams and lotions, she may be off on the wrong trail, because some of these adult preparations are geared to older, less active skins.

What about hair? Indications point to more interest in decorative effects than in basic care. And that's off on the wrong track again. The hair of teen-age girls is so naturally lovely rich in color, gleam and vitality that it requires only the simplest styling. But to keep it lovely and to stake out claims for future good looks, weekly washings with a good shampoo and daily set-tos with a brush are "musts."

The Hand Problem

NEXT on the list come small hands, which, in competitive play with little boys, get tough and rough. What-todo, what-to-do is the cry that comes from beauty-conscious little girls, all over the land. If that is you, yelling for help, get yourself a bottle of handlotion, and use it every time you dry your hands. But never wash your hands without rinsing off every vestige of soap. And never, never put the towel back on the rack without making sure that your hands are dry as bones. Moisture left on hands after a washing causes more unsightliness than any other form of abuse. When hands are dry, rub on the creamy oils.

Now come the problems that cause all of those heated debates between mothers and daughters and sometimes drag in fathers, who want to add their two cents' worth.

One is the manicure. What kind for the young thing who covetously eyes the long ovals and crimson polishes that Mother wears? The answer may dash your youthful hopes, but you'll be in good taste and in select good company if you'll pass up colored lacquers in favor of natural pink tips and a natural shine. Keep nails irreproachably groomed, filed into slight ovals, and shining like little mirrors with polish-powder and a buffer. One manufacturer of colored nail polishes, rather than sell you something that is not right for you, equips little-girl manicure kits with powder polish and buffer.

As for lipstick, you'll look far lovelier with a light touch of pomade on your fresh, young lips, and you'll, run no risk of having people look at you with amazement or amusement.

And pass up the rouge. You don't need it, even if you are as white as your little muslin dress. There are a healthy tone and a translucent clarity in young cheeks that beat anything artifice can produce.

But powder, yes. It takes off a soap-scrubbed shine, and is a finishing touch to good grooming. Moreover, a becoming shade of powder discourages you from wanting to tamper with the color in your cheeks.

A deodorant? Please. But have Mother search for the kind that is safe to use on sensitive, young skins, that keeps your clothes safe from stains and that will preserve fastidious fresh-

"QUITE SHAMELESS"

"I certainly do!" she exclaimed. He pinched her, anyhow. On the arm, gently.

"What's that for?"

"I want to be sure I'm not dreaming."

"Why not pinch yourself?"

"More fun to pinch you."

She laughed gayly. "Idiot!" she said. "Come on, I'll race you to the lake. Last one in is an elderly egg."

They ran down the path. At the water's edge Connie poised briefly, then plunged. Jerry shivered.

She came up gleaming, with little round jewels of water on her face and shoulders.

"Scaredy cat!" she taunted.

"For that you get ducked," he said, and dived after her.

The water took his breath away for a moment, and when he came to the surface, she had swum out of reach and was grinning at him.

"Think I can't catch you?"

"Try it."

"All right. But you're only postponing the inevitable."

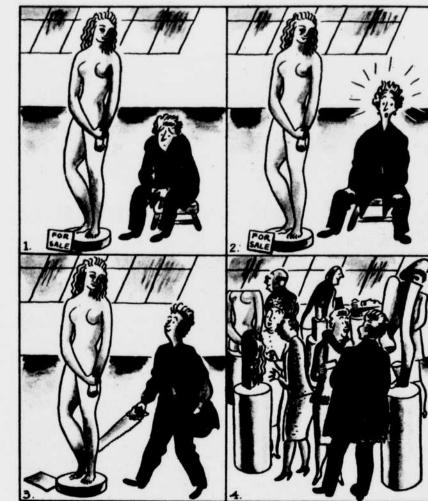

SHE was an excellent swimmer, and catching her was not as simple as he had anticipated. He was beginning to think he never would — his wind wasn't what it used to be — when she finally surrendered. She turned and confronted him, white-faced and panting. He seized her shoulders. "Please don't duck me, Jerry." she gasped.

"The way of the transgressor is hard," he said ominously, putting a warning pressure on her shoulders. "One... two..."

"Please, Jerry!"

She clung to him tightly, and her face, close to his, was serious and beseeching.

"I guess I'm just a softy," he sighed. She was really done in, he thought, as she continued to cling to him. He experienced a kind of outraged concern. The little fool! What was she trying to do, drown herself?

"Come on," he said gruffly. "You'd better get some dry land under your feet."

"Thanks, Jerry," she murmured gratefully. "I'll let you duck me some other time."

"Nuts!" Jerry said.

When he had shepherded her to the shore, they lay on a great flat rock and let the hot sun dry and warm them. Once he stole a glance at her. She was staring at the sky, her gaze shuttered and brooding; although he could have reached out and touched her, she seemed miles away — as remote as the lone tattered cloud that drifted lazily through the blue above him. He felt baffled. What was wrong with him, anyhow? One moment he was on top of the world; the next, his elation abruptly fizzling, he was down in the depths. It was like riding an emotional scenic railway, and he didn't like it.

It was after four when they went back to the cottage. He made a couple of drinks while he waited for Connie, and turned on the radio. After considerable dialing he got a station in Albany that was playing dance records. "I'll pep up this outing if it kills me," he vowed.

"Oughtn't Bill and Alice to be here soon?" Connie said as she came out of the bedroom into the living room. "It's hard to say. They weren't sure when they could get away, and with the Saturday afternoon traffic they may not make very good time... Let's sit out on the porch and listen to the music."

They sat on the porch, listening to the music in silence, and his uneasiness began to return. "What do you say we dance?" he exclaimed, suddenly and too loudly.

"All right," Connie said.

She was warm and soft in his arms, and her faint perfume was like the faraway scent of flowers. But even with her body close to his she seemed remote. To have her and not to have her was a torment. "Connie," he blurted, "what's wrong with us?"

"Is THERE something wrong?" she asked evasively, giving him a smile that was not a smile but a mere movement of her lips.

"You know there is. We're not having any fun and there's no use pretending we are."

"I'm sorry you're not having fun, Jerry."

"Are you?"

"Oh, loads! But then I'm easily amused. A date every three or four weeks and I'm in Seventh Heaven."

He stopped dancing and stared at her with puzzled, angry eyes. Her face was tense; her lips trembled. "I can't understand you, Connie. You're different today."

"I thought I was my usual happygo-slappy self."

"You have a chip on your shoulder. You seem to want to pick a fight."

Shame on me!"

"Don't be like that."

"Hew do you want me to be? Just tell me and I'll do my darnedest. After all, I've done nothing for a year but try to please you. Why should I stop now?"

She suddenly burst into tears and hid her face against his shoulder.

FAREWELL KISS

"You-you saw it !" she whispered. "Oh, it was so horrible! I didn't mean to-to do what I did. But he was crazy mad after what she said to him. He told me it was all my fault ---that he was through with me - that he hated me - that I could get somebody else easily enough; there was a good market - for what I had to offer -- "

Niels shook his head wearily.

NIELS and I had breakfast together in a little place. "But how," I asked, "did the Commodore guess?"

"Same as I did, in a general way," Niels said, looking around to see if he were observed, and then shamelessly dunking a doughnut. "He explained it quite thoroughly to Miss Thorpe, you'll remember. It wasn't such a tough thing to figure out."

"I didn't guess it," I said honestly.

"You weren't in a jam. Hampton was. All the evidence pointed to him or his wife. You think hard and fast when you're on a spot. He ran away because he was afraid we'd hold him, and he might not have a chance to prove his theory. A risky bit of business, but it succeeded in this case."

"But the flashlight - and the farewell kiss?"

"I showed you the bit of glass I found in Christie's boat. One edge of it was rounded; it was part of a disc. It was bright and clean - fresh. It didn't click right away, but finally I remembered that small sailboats don't carry running lights, ordinarily; they merely signal with a flash, throwing the light up on their sails, if another boat comes close. And there wasn't any flashlight in Christie's boat. That made it look as though a flashlight was the well-known 'blunt instrument'.

"I checked that, and also the fact that there was a flashlight in Mrs. Hampton's boat. She would have used her own flashlight, in all probability; she or the Commodore, since he used her boat. The bit of glass was part of the lens of a flashlight, and the missing flashlight was from Christie's boat. So it didn't look like the Hamptons, on second thought, did it particularly after you noticed that the bottom of Christie's slacks were wet, as though he had waded ashore somewhere? That made the landingon-the-island idea look good - and I didn't believe he'd land there with anyone as unfriendly as either of the Hamptons."

THIS WEEK MAGAZINE

"I'm just dumb," I sighed. "And the farewell kiss?"

"You should have noticed that," Niels said. "There were smears of blood on his face; red smears. But one smear on his forehead had a peculiar shape, so I touched it with my handkerchief. It was lipstick, a very vivid shade. Mrs. Hampton used a much darker shade, and used it very sparingly. I swiped the lipstick off of Rosemary's dresser, and it matched exactly. It was only a hunch that it was a farewell kiss, as you so dramatically call it, but that idea seemed to fit her highly emotional nature, and the gesture of posing the body with such loving care."

Niels finished his second cup of coffee, and signaled to a waitress. "Fill it up again, sis. I've had a tough night of it."

He looked at me across the table as the girl hurried away. "It's a hard life, baby," he said. "A hard life." 'But you love it!"

Niels' blue eyes went serious for a second. "That's right. It's one of the two things I love - When do we get married?"

free herself from his encircling arms but he would not let her escape. He raised her tear-stained face and kissed her.

"Don't!" she said angrily. "Don't you dare kiss me!"

"Darling --- !"

"And don't call me darling. It doesn't mean a thing and you know it." "It means - I love you."

Now that he had said it, he experienced an almost unbearable relief. It was like throwing off a great suffocating weight and filling his lungs with fresh sweet air.

"You needn't say that," she sobbed. "I know how you feel. The world's a mess. Things are topsy-turvy. We may be in a war. We may be in another depression. Or even a plague of athlete's foot. No one can tell what's going to happen, so love had better stay underground till the moon is right and the weather report says fair and warmer." Scorn burned in her drowned eyes.

"I've heard all about your philosophy, Jerry, and I hate it. You make it sound smart. But it's not. It's stupid and spineless. It makes me ashamed. Ashamed for you and ashamed for myself for -- for loving you. Oh, gosh, Jerry, Casper Milquetoast's a better man than you are. He at least doesn't drape his timidity with wisecracks."

He felt as if she had stripped him to the skin and exposed him in all his puny nakedness; and although he quivered inwardly under the lash of her words, he did not flinch. He, too, was repelled by the scrawny wretch she had revealed, but now he could regard that craven individual with a kind of detached loathing. That's not me, he told himself grimly. That's someone masquerading as me --- some impostor.

Connie cowered against him. Her fierce outpouring had left her weak and spent. "I'm sorry, Jerry," she whispered. "I - 1 didn't mean those awful things I said."

"Of course you meant them," he said quietly. "I'm glad you said them. It's about time someone showed that other fellow up."

BEWILDERMENT showed through her grief. "What other fellow?"

"That fellow who's been posing as me. I didn't mind him looking like me and talking like me; I didn't mind him wearing my clothes and signing my checks; but when he began to make passes at the girl I love, that was too much."

"Jerry, what on earth are you talking about?"

'About the other Jerry Bradford -the fellow you just told off so effectively. If you look quickly, you may see him skulking off through the trees. He's a sorry specimen, all right."

She looked up at him and smiled. "I'm not interested in the other Jerry Bradford 1'll have nothing but the genuine article."

'Oh, darling," Jerry said hoarsely, "I love you, I love you, I love you!" "That much?"

"That's not the half of it. Will you marry me, Connie?"

"What do you think?"

GO AHEAD, PRESERVE IT!

Here's how to make a few choice dainties - with little trouble

by Grace Turner and Demetria Taylor

S THE fruit stalls at market grow daily more aromatic and tempting, with their pyramids of peaches, plums, blackberries, blueberries, melons, pears and watermelons, it becomes clear that the impulse to do a little personal putting up of this and that is not extinct in modern woman. A gleam comes into her eye. She sniffs desirously at the fragrant fruit. She envisages a row of choice jars and glasses, to be drawn upon for occasions that demand a special elegance at table, a touch of gourmandise.

The point is that few women today want to go in for extensive preserving. Excellent commercial products, of great variety, satisfy their day-by-day needs. What they do want is a modest store of the more unusual sweetmeat accompaniments. This article, therefore, is scaled for the city-dweller even if her habitat is only a pint-sized apartment, and her leisure extremely limited. A few extra blackberries picked over and washed along with those she is papering for dinner and cooked while she has to be in the kitchen anyhow, can be turned into a spicy, delicious relish that she will love to serve with roast fowl some time next winter. Or without having to cook at all, she can prepare a couple of glasses of pickled blueberries. There's no myth about this and nothing could be easier - witness, the recipe given later.

Again there is pickled watermelon rind - to be prepared the first time you serve watermelon to the family. If you sample the first small batch you turn out, you will be tempted to make double or treble the quantity every time you serve watermelon thereafter.

Since we are speaking of pickled things, we might as well take this moment to remember the grapes that will be coming in plentifully with the fall. Ever heard of whole pickled grapes? They are not only delicious but have the most amazing appearance, for they look exactly like fresh fruit. Use them as a garnish for sa prove very rewarding for the tiny amount of work it demands of you.

Then take our recipe for pear preserves - very delightful in both consistency and flavor. Here is a special tip about them, too: you can pack them as soon as the cooking is over if you want to. But don't. If you let them stand until they cool, the pears will stay plump and shapely when you finally seal them into the jars.

The last sweet on our list for today is a very nice plum conserve. Put up a couple of half-pint jars of it some day when you get a surplus supply of plums for the table.

Finally, there is piccalilli. Almost every woman has a trick recipe for that, but we think ours is extra good and, best of all, there is very little cooking involved - in fact, very little work of any kind.

Pickled Watermelon Rind

- 1 pound peeled rind
- 2¼ cups sugar
- 1 cup water
- 1/2 lemon, thinly sliced
- 1 cup vinegar 1 stick cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon whole cloves
- 16 teaspoon whole allspice

Approximate yield: 2 half-pint jars.

Spiced Blackberries

- 2 cups brown sugar, firmly packed 1 cup vinegar 216 pounds blackberries
- 11/2 teaspoons whole cloves
- 1 stick cinnamon'
- 4 whole allspice

Dissolve sugar in vinegar; add blackberries and spices tied in a cloth bag. Boil rapidly until thick. Remove spices; pour into clean hot jars and seal. Approximate yield: 5 half-pint jars.

Pickled Blueberries

- 1 pint blueberries
- 2 tablespoons molasses
- 1 teaspoon vinegar
- 1/2 cup brown sugar, firmly packed

Wash and pick over blueberries. Add remaining ingredients. Cover and let stand 3 or 4 days or until sugar has drawn out enough juice to make mixture liquid. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal. Approximate yield: 2 halfpint jars.

Whole Pickled Grapes

Select bunches of grapes of the same size and ripeness. Any type of grape may be used, but they should not be over-ripe. Leave the grapes on the stems. Wash, drain and pack closely in clean glass jars. Do not crowd them in packing. Make a syrup of 11/2 cups of sugar to each cup of white vinegar. Boil 5 minutes. Fill jars with boiling syrup and seal at once. These grapes retain the appearance of fresh fruit, and are delicious served with meat or as a garnish for salads.

Peach Marmalade

- 21/2 pounds peaches, pared, pitted and finely sliced
- 31/2 cups sugar

1/2-pint bottle maraschino cherries

Combine peaches, sugar and syrup from cherries. Cook until syrup sheets from the spoon. Add chopped maraschino cherries. Remove from heat. Cool 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Pour into hot sterilized jars; seal at Boil sugar and water 8 minutes. Add remaining ingredients. Cook, stirring often, until pears are clear and tender and syrup thick. Let stand several hours. Reheat to boiling. Pack in hot, sterilized jars and seal immediately. Approximate yield: 3 halfpint jars.

Plum Conserve

1 pound plums, pitted and chopped 1/2 orange, chopped 1 cup water 1/4 cup raisins 11/2 cups sugar 2 tablespoons coarsely chopped walnut meats

Cook plums and orange in water 20 minutes. Add raisins and sugar; mix well. Simmer until thick. Add walnut meats. Pour into hot sterilized jars and seal at once. Approximate yield: 2 half-pint jars. Note: Walnuts sometimes cause conserve to turn dark. To avoid this blanch the meats in boiling water 3-5 minutes. Then cool in cold water and drain thoroughly before adding them to the conserve.

Piccalilli

- 1 quart green tomatoes 1 cup gherkins 1 green pepper 1 sweet red pepper 1 small onion
- 2 tablespoons salt
- 1 cup cider vinegar
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 2 teaspoons peppercorns 1 teaspoon mustard seed
- 6 whole cloves

Chop fine tomatoes, gherkins, green and red peppers and onion. Add salt and let stand overnight. Drain thoroughly; press out all liquid. Combine remaining ingredients; boil 5 minutes. Add vegetables and bring to boiling point. Pack in hot sterilized jars. Seal at once. Approximate yield: 5 halfpint jars.

Thoroughly blend meat, bread, egg, and season-ings. Mold into shape of chops. Brown quickly in small amount of hot shortening; then cook until done. Dress with chop ruffle, and garnish with watercress. This makes 4°to 5 servings.

Peach Cantaloupe Preserves

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C.-GRAVURE SECTION-AUGUST 10, 1941.

"Auld Lang Syne" was the song as Americans joined hands in this fraternal spirit. Anybody shy about it as Songstress Lucy Monroe suggested the warming bond with the neighbor (be he stranger) on your right? Not many.

There was faith and purpose and meaning in the way the songs were sung. Here's just a random bit of the crowd that made American musical history along the Potomac last Monday night.

It was a mighty deep crowd. If you happened to have a back seat, about the only way to see the National Symphony Orchestra—and Miss Monroe—was to stand on the seat.

Singing was only part of it for Miss Monroe. After the program she plied her pencil generously in handing out autographs asked by admirers who pressed around her.

Ded's car made a nice, private seat for 12-yearold Mildred Statts — even if it wasn't very close to the center of things. Mildred kept right .up with the program with The Star's copy of the songs.

Along the upper level riverside wall the singers were banked three and four deep. But such a never-to-be-forgotten event was worth standing up for.

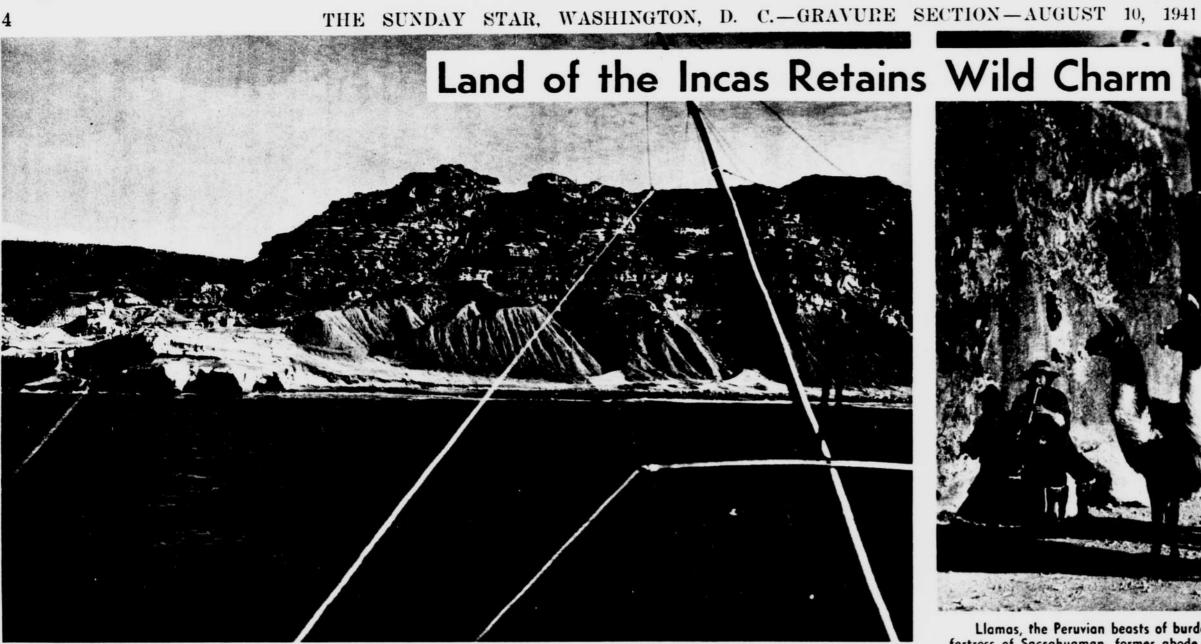

Bird's-eye view from their car top. And one thoughtful man of the party brought along his field glasses to bring the distant principals into closer range.

Perhaps theirs was the best idea knowing how water lends charm to music, and a canoe lends itself to relaxation.

MODERN civilization has touched little of the picturesque beauty of Peru's wilderness and coastline, discovered four centuries ago by Pizarro. A land of violent contrasts, arid deserts and unbearable tropic heat within sight of towering peaks snow-capped throughout the year, it has modern cities nestled near green, lush valleys where natives work primitive farms much as they did when Pizarro found them. These pictures, conveying much of the natural life and beauty of this strange land, its seal herds, its flocks of guano birds, were made by W. O. Runcie in company with Hans Hinrichs, New York sportsman, who recently returned from a big-game fishing expedition to Peru.

Much of the Peruvian coast rises in a rugged, high table of rock, weird in its formations, and its feet lapped by the sea. Almost in the shadow of the cliffs is the feeding ground of great swordfish and marlin, recently discovered by adventuring anglers.

Llamas, the Peruvian beasts of burden, rest with their herder at the ruins of the Incaic fortress of Sacsahuaman, former abode of the Inca chief, Huayana Coapac.

A variety of birds and native children mingle on the beach at Cabo Blanco. The pelicans, buzzards and gulls pay little attention to the peon youngsters at play. It's a coast of alternate wide beaches and desolate headlands.

Gannetts, the guano birds of Peru, return every year by the myriad to nest on the same coastal hills and cliffs. Export of the fertilizer they provide is one of Peru's most important sources of revenue The birds nest on mounds of soil hollowed out just enough to hold the eggs.

Along the rock-bound coast are breeding grounds for great seal herds. These lumbering members of one of the colonies pay little attention to the cameraman as he takes this close-up.

A relative of the llama and much like it in appearance is the vicuna. But, unlike the llama, it produces fine wool. Note the difference in coloring in this herd of vicunas, a familiar sight in the grassy tablelands of the Peruvian highlands.

Bill Nosker (in viscred cap), as an upper classman at Randolph, is realizing the ambition of every flying cadet-to "process" the newcomers, or "dodoes," who wear the overalls.

HERE'S the day of a typical young flying cadet at Randolph Field, Tex., the "West Point of the Air." It's saying a good deal for even that top layer of American youth to call 21-year-old William C. Nosker of Columbus, Ohio, only typical. When the commandant of cadets told Nosker he was one of the best-looking students ever to enter training at Randolph Field, he swallowed a deep blush. For a man with a record of three years of varsity football at Chio State, along with near-top scholastic marks, he's surprisingly shy. But he's in dead earnest about winning those wings. At basic flying school, midway between primary and advanced training, he is sergeant-major of the first battalion of the field's flying cadet regiment. That makes him the highest ranking non-commissioned cadet officer. So supreme was Nosker's urge to fly for his country that he quit Ohio State just before he was scheduled to get his degree. And he had to convert his mother to the idea before he started flying at a primary training school in Tulsa. Now she goes up too!

AS VITAL as its flyers to the Nation's great air defense effort are the skilled craftsmen required in the ever expanding scale of aircraft production. Typical of the 35,000 workers in the plant of the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. at Burbank, Calif., is Kenneth McMahon, a plumber by trade who has found opportunity opening in a big way to him in the lightning expansion of American aviation. Ambitious to get ahead for his wife and their 18-month-old daughter, McMahon sees a bigger future in plane production for himself than in his strictly plumbing line. In the shop, and two nights a week, he's using every opportunity for study to become a shop supervisor. He has already had three pay increases with Lockheed in his job of installing hundreds of feet of pipe for hydraulic and fuel lines and engine cooling systems.

The day's flying is done for Bill as he watches other cadets coming in from instruction flights. His cadet companion, Jimmy Doolittle, jr. (left), is the son of the famous speed flier and test pilot. A. P. Photos

Bill is riding forward in the 450-horsepower trainer as he flies his instructor over the placid Texas plain. He flies from 1 p.m. to 5:15 every afternoon.

Life isn't all grind for the young plumber turned plane builder. In his snug little bungalow at Glendale, Calif., he has plenty of leisure to enjoy small daughter Linda with Mrs. McMahon. Here's how he does it.

Saturday noon brings "open house" at Randolph Field, and here Bill and his girl friend, Miss Virginia Davies of San Antonio, Tex., have a date at the Gunter Hotel.

Even at bunk-time the boys are still "flying." "Now when I go into my bank——" Bill (right is saying to Cadet C. E. Uptegrapht (top bunk) of New Philadelphia, Ohio. His other rocmmate, reading, is Don F. Scott of Canton, Ohio. Lights are out at 9:30-and tomorrow another day of flying.

More and More They Come to Town– And Here's How They Live and Like It

Irmgard and Norma (in that order) are the two girls at the left of the young woman who heads the dinner table at the boarding house where they live the typical life of the young girl Government worker.

CHOOSING at random a couple of Uncle Sam's working girls who've come to town for Federal jobs on the mounting tide of defense work, here's how most of the thousands of newcomers live and play and like it. About as typical as you'll find, Norma Gilham, 21, of Butte, Mont., and Irmgard Koehler, 22, of Milwaukee, came to Washington a few months ago for jobs in the Navy Department. Both make $1,440 a year, or $120 a month, of which $45 goes for room and board. That leaves a tidy balance for other things with maybe a little left over to send home or soak in the bank. With that job, in the beautiful if a bit crowded National Capital, today is pleasant. Tomorrow, after the emergency Well, that can take care of itself.

A radio and phonograph party in one of the girl's rooms at night is not so dull—even if the boys are conspicuously absent. Don't be misled that the girls are dateless. Under the landlady's eye the boy friend is welcome. And there are still some around to liven things up even if the times are making heavy demands on manpower.

On these occasional summer week ends with Mrs. Roosevelt at their Hyde Park, N. Y., home, the President takes most of his job along with him.
