

President Orders Navy to Seize Kearny Shipyards Tomorrow; Union Pledges Co-operation

Roosevelt Statement Cites Rejection of Mediators' Plan

BACKGROUND-

Work on $493,000,000 in defense shipping, including two cruisers and six destroyers, in yards of the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. at Kearny, N. J., has been at a standstill since the C. I. O. Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers struck August 7. A defense Mediation Board recommendation including a maintenance of union membership clause was accepted by the union but rejected by the company.

> By JOHN C. HENRY, Star Staff Correspondent

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Aug. 23. President Roosevelt tonight ordered the Secretary of the Navy to take possession of and to operate the strike-idle plant of the Federal Shipbuilding and Drydock Co. in Kearny, N. J.

The depths of the Government determination to have the plant back at work as soon as possible on $493,000,000 in defense ship contracts was reflected in the White House announcement that:

"The further methods and policies relating to the ultimate title and other matters between the Government and the company will be worked out after further studies and negotiations."

William D. Hassett, press relations secretary, explained here that these negotiations will include the question of whether the Government will buy the plant outright, will lease it, or will merely engage a manager to operate it

There had been reports, not confirmed here, that the present ownership of the plant had indicated an unwillingness to continue its management under Government control. perhaps forcing the Government to buy the physical equipment and install a complete new management.

Senator Vandenberg said opponents of the proposal overlook the fact that the pending bill already singles out numerous commodities for special excise taxes, and that the general sales tax, with the proposed exemptions, would not apply to 80 per cent of the wage earner's expenditures.

While a general sales tax is not likely to be adopted, there probably will be a number of changes made in the House list of specific excise taxes.

Present indications are that the new excise taxes proposed by the House on time sold by radio stations, on billboard advertising and Page 2 of the rotogravure section on film used in news reels will be today. eliminated.

Dr. Townsend expressed fear the tax system will collapse unless it is simplified and predicted the process of constantly looking for new things to tax will bring chaos

Mr. Hushing said the labor groups he represents favor the expenditures being made for national defense and aid to democracies, and are willing to meet a fair share of the cost, but want to see the new taxes properly applied. He said taxes that would hit the pay envelopes of workers would hurt earning power and "is the wrong way to finance the defense program."

He opposed lowering the personal forms of sales or pay roll taxes. When the labor spokesman said adoption of such taxes might result in changing the political complexion of the House and Senate, Senator Vandenberg, smilingly suggested

Nazis Report Bloody Hand-to-Hand Fights In Odessa Sector

Defenders' Position Seems Hopeless, Berlin Hears

By the Associated Press

BERLIN, Aug. 23 .- Bloody handto-hand engagements outside the Black Sea port of Odessa between German-Rumanian troops and fanatical bands of defenders, with neither side asking quarter, were described tonight in dispatches from the eastern front.

Equally desperate struggles between the Nazi forces and the vast Russian population, soldier and civilian, were reported in the Leningrad area to the north, while D.N.B. spoke of violent battles along the Dnieper River and the capture of the river city of Cherkasi, 90 miles southeast of Kiev, capital of Ukraine, where the Germans were trying to force a crossing.

The news agency reported also that the courier plane of Marshal Klementi Voroshilov, commander of the Soviet northern forces, had been shot down when it flew over a German-occupied airfield and that important secret documents of the Soviet high command had been seized.

Airdromes Attacked.

Waves of German bombers were said to be smashing Russian airdromes on the outskirts of Leningrad as the ground troops pressed their offensive.

Between Smolensk and Kiev, D.N.B. indicated, a new threat to Moscow was developing. The Nazis said they had smashed 60 miles beyond Gomel, toward Bryansk, some 300 miles southeast of the Soviet capital.

D.N.B. said.

ler's headquarters merely said: "Operations on the East front continue according to plan."

Strong Opposition.

The dispatches from the Odessa sector said the mechanized forces of the invaders, German and Rumania, were encountering strong opposition, but that the defenders' position seemed hopeless. Marines and sailors have been called from ships in the harbor to prepare for a fight in the streets alongside ordinary factory workers. Communist party members and chauffeurs and others. The battered remnants of the stubbornly through Bessarabia and then across the Southwestern Ukraine, however, remained the backbone of the city's defense.

British May Move Into Iran in 4 Days, Observers Predict Compromise Measures

Are Not Acceptable, London Quarters Say

By the Associated Press. LONDON, Aug. 23.-Some well-informed neutral observers said tonight there might be British military action within the next four

Britain and Russia have asked Iran to expel about 3,000 German "tourists and technicians" who have filtered into the country; Iran has replied. These neutral observers said that if the British had made up their minds that no half-way measures would satisfy them and that Iran would be "safe" only if occupied by British troops it was likely that action soon would be taken.

The Iranian reply had not been made public tonight, and it was said there was scant likelihood that authoritative information would be forthcoming over the week end.

Compromise Seen Unacceptable. Unofficial quarters held that Britain and Russia were in no mood to accept compromise measures from Iran which might weaken their prestige in the Near East.

Near Encirclement Of Viipuri by Finn Forces Reported 'Avalanche Offensive'

Reported Directed Against Russians

By the Associated Press. HELSINKI, Aug. 23 .- The Finns reported today that the port of Viipuri was near encirclement by victorious Finnish troops smashing days against oil-rich, strategically located Iran (Persia). southward across the Karelian Isthmus and that an "avalanche offensive" now was being directed against its Red Army defenses. Viipuri, which as a city of 75,000 was Finland's second largest before being given to Russia after the Russian-Finnish war of 1939-40, lies approximately 15 miles inside the new Russian-Finnish frontier. It is 75 miles northwest of Leningrad. Anticipating the city's recapture, the Finns took a poll of the 41,316 citizens who left Viipuri after it became Russian and reported that 40,560 were ready to return. After capturing Kakisalmi, important rail town on the opposite side of the isthmus, 60 miles northeast of Viipuri on the shore of Lake Ladoga, the Finns said they drove southward over the isthmus along the Vuoksi River, reaching Kiviniemi, east of Vilpuri and less than 50 miles north of Leningrad. The Finnish strategy appeared to be to establish a line across the isthmus between Leningrad and Viipuri, thus isolating the latter city. Finnish reports stressed that the campaign was being conducted by the Finns rather than by their German allies. Delayed reports of the capture of Kakisalmi, which fell Thursday, disclosed that Stalin's "scorched earth" policy had been carried out in fine detail in this third largest Karelian city. It was described in Finnish

One report to D.N.B. from German-Rumanian field headquarters said the land encirclement of Odessa was tightening hourly-not always swiftly, but with irresistible force.

Nothing in all these reports hinted how close the attackers were to Odessa, but it was stated that river fortifications had been occupied almost down to the city.

(The N. B. C. listening post in New York picked up a British broadcast which said that Bucharest had reported the Germans and Rumanians were within 9 miles of Odessa.)

Emergency Fortifications.

In the fighting along the Dnieper east of Odessa, the advancing Nazis reported they found clever Russian emergency fortifications - tanks buried in the earth with only their camouflaged guns protruding.

The vulnerable bodies of the tanks were thus protected and the fortified lines, created after a few hours of digging, were hard nuts for the infantry to crack.

Mistook City for Another.

(N. B. C. also picked up a Berlin radio report which said the Germans had broken through all Russian field fortifications near Lake Ilmen, about 130 miles south of Leningrad, and had taken several bunkers by storm.) The court-martial convicted him on these counts, to which he pleaded guilty, and dropped another accusing him of refusing to obey a command to stand at attention. Then, the court sentenced him to 10 years and 9 months at hard labor in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta.

War Department officials said the case already had been given over to the Judge Advocate General's Department. The latter was ordered to conduct a study "directed both to the legality of the proceedings and to the question whether recommendation should be made to the Secretary of War for clemency." At the same time, the idea of sending him to Atlanta was dropped. It was announced that inasmuch as Pvt. Habinyak's offenses were purely military "confinement in a penitentiary is not authorized." Fort Bragg authorities said the sentence was being changed from Atlanta to the military disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans,

Vichy Cabinet Takes Steps to Halt Rising Tide of Disorders

Death Penalty Provided Without Appeal in Cases Involving Communists

By the Associated Press.

VICHY, UNOCCUPIED FRANCE, Aug. 23.-Marshal Philippe Petain and his cabinet held two long meetings today to study means of stemming the tide of terrorism, sabotage and subversive activities in France.

A decree published in the official journal, as predicted, turned over to military courts cases involving Communists and Leftists, with the death penalty provided and no appeal possible.

Even as the cabinet gathered for its morning session, however, word reached Vichy of a new train wreck in the unoccupied zone at the entrance to the Valdonne tunnel east of Marseille yesterday. Thirty miners were injured.

The Petain death-for-Communist activities decree published today was drafted August 14, the same day the German military command made a similar ruling because of the demonstrations and shootings in Paris August 12.

Blockade Blamed by Implication. At the late afternoon session, a communique said, it was decided to "social and labor conseremedy quences" of the industrial crisis, which is considered an important factor in the swelling unrest of the working classes.

The communique by implication blamed the British blockade, saying. "the slowing up of industrial activity is due to lack of raw materials.

The cabinet announced it also discussed reorganization of the food supply, which is regarded as another source of discontent.

Paris newspapers, under orders, published in the upper left-hand four columns of their front pages the German military decree holding French prisoners as hostages under pain of death for future offenses in the occupied zone.

Concerted editorial comment described this order, resulting from the assassination of a German colonel in Paris Thursday, as a "final warning to saboteurs."

British Influence. The editorials blamed the present ferment on British influence as well as on Communists, Jews, Freemasons and capitalism.

L'Oeuvre, in a front-page appeal, said Communism "is a mortal peril, directly menacing order on the streets and the lives of our people. "France is becoming one of the O. P. M.'s Tank Unit "France is becoming one of the have reached the conclusion the numerous traffic lights in Washington, coupled with delays on traffic-congested streets, cause a waste of about 35,000 gallons of gasoline a rive at. Recent traffic counts, if I our loyal workmen and employers recall correctly, revealed that at least 150,000 motor vehicles operate on the streets of Washington each day. I don't believe it would be an exaggeration to estimate that each labor or capital, and calling upon one of these cars wastes an average of a quart of gasoline a day due to motor idling at stop lights and in traffic tie-ups.

300 Parachutists To Join New Battalion Ahead of Schedule

Dare-Devils Assigned To Outfit Commanded By 'Jumping Colonel'

About 300 Army dare-devils who have been training as parachutists since mid-July are being assigned to the new 503d Parachute Battalion at Fort Benning, Ga., ahead of the original September 1 schedule, the War Department announced yesterday.

Third battalion of its kind in the Army, this group will boost to 1,500 officers and men the number who now comprise the special parachute group, commanded by "the jumping colonel," Lt. Col. William C. Lee.

Next month, 200 additional men will be assigned to the 503d Battalion to bring it up to full strength. The original 300 had been going through the "jumps" at the parachute section of the Infantry School at Fort Benning, which is the home of this branch of the service.

With parachutists beginning to take an active part in the Army maneuvers, which continue to December, Brig. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Fort Benning's commander speeded up the organization of the new battalion. Progress was aided by improved methods of training and by the accrued experience of Army instructors, who have pioneered in parachute activities ever since the permier unit of sky fighters, the 501st Battalion, was formed in October, 1940. The United States Marine Corps, following the lead of the Army, is also training groups of parachutists.

Makes Jumps Himself.

During their training the 300 men for the new group were attached to the 502d Battalion, which will complete its parachute training this month and then start its tactical ground training. The 502d was activated July 1. Some of its tactical training will be gained during the war games.

These three battalions make up the parachute group under Col. Lee, and other battalions will be organized as rapidly as men can be trained. Special physical qualifications are required and married men are barred because of the hazards of sky-jumping.

Col. Lee, a native of North Carolina, took over the command of the group on April 1, 1941. He gained his sobriquet, "The Jumping Colonel" from the fact that he never asked his men to do anything he wouldn't do himself.

Soon after taking command he contracted pneumonia and three days after his release from the hospital he set out to jump from a plane. In his weakened condition it was more than hazardous. His fellow officers thought it foolhardy and tried to persuade him to postpone his attempt.

NAVY TORPEDO TESTING BARGE, NO. 2, PINEY POINT, MD .- At a distance of more than half a mile, United States Navy torpedomen today scored four hits in six shots on a floating target no larger than your corner lamp post. Russia to Be Omitted From Five Billion Lease-Lend Request

Instead, Credits Might Be Given if Needed For War Purchases

By the Associated Press.

Administration lieutenants disclosed yesterday that the new lease-lend appropriation to be asked of Congress will approximate $5,000,-000,000 and will provide no funds for Soviet Russia.

Congressional leaders discussed an additional lease-lend appropriation with the President earlier last week. A well-informed official, unwilling to be quoted by name, said yesterday that the Chief Executive had agreed at that time that none of the new money would go to Russia. Instead, it was said, the Russians probably will be given credit if they need it. Jesse Jones, Federal loan administrator, already has intimated that a loan might be made to Russia to help finance purchases of war equipment in this country.

Would Reduce Opposition. The congressional leaders were said to have advised Mr. Roosevelt that a new appropriation for aid to Britain and China probably could be whipped through Congress without difficulty if it were made clear that none of the money would go to Russia.

It was decided, informants said, that no mention of Russia would be made in connection with the request for an additional allotment, but that administration floor leaders would be empowered to state that Russia was not to benefit from the appropriation.

Congress already has appropriated $7,000,000,000 for the aid-to-Britain program. While virtually the entire fund has been obligated, only a minor portion actually has been spent.

Request May Be Delayed.

Mr. Roosevelt's request for more lease-lend funds may be delayed until late September or October, congressional authorities reported. Prior to asking new money, the Chief Executive is expected to make one of his periodic reports to Congress regarding the use of funds already appropriated.

Senator Pepper, Democrat, of Florida, advocate of more active aid to Great Britain and Russia, said he saw no reason why lease-lend money should not be advanced to the Soviets. "They are fighting Hitler-ism," he declared, "and in that their fight is our fight."

Senator Pepper added, however, that so long as the Russians were able to pay cash for military supplies and could receive ample Government credit, "they probably will be able to keep up the fight."

To Direct an Acquittal By the Associated Press.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 23 .- The Nation's three largest tobacco manufacturers filed motions in Federal Court today asking Judge H. Church Ford to direct the jury to acquit them of criminal charges of monopoly and price-fixing.

The motions, filed separately by the R. J. Reynolds, Liggett & Myers and American Tobacco companies, declared that the Government, in the 11 weeks it devoted to presenting evidence, had failed to produce "competent, substantial proof" of its charges.

Filed with the general motions were requests that hundreds of documents introduced by the Government and testimony of many of its witnesses be stricken from the record as incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial if a directed acquittal is refused.

Arguments on these motions are to be heard by Judge Ford Monday as the trial enters its 13th week. Anticipating a full day of argument, Judge Ford instructed the jurors when he recessed the case last week that they need not report back until Tuesday.

British General Finds Russians at Front 'Full of Fight'

Gen. Mason-Macfarlane Praises Soldiers And Air Force

By HENRY C. CASSIDY, sociated Press War Corresp

MOSCOW, Aug. 23.-Red Army forces on the central front are "full of fight and are fighting well," Lt. Gen. F. N. Mason-Macfarlane, head of the British military mission to Moscow, said today on returning from the front where he watched operations in the direction of Smo-

The general said he witnessed a Russian counterattack against the Germans and declared the Soviet division he watched was "well trained and a first class formation." He added that "co-operation of all arms of the air force was most efficient.'

Accompanied by Col. Eric Greer British military attache, Gen. Mason-Macfarlane spent a day at the front and was escorted by an aide of Soviet Marshal Semeon Timoshenko.

"I saw the division still in the process of carrying out a successful attack which started 24 hours before," he said. "The previous day they advanced about 15 kilometers (about 10 miles)."

Field Battery Smashed.

Describing how a German field battery was captured by the Russians, he said "their guns were rammed by Russian tanks and smashed. Only one German gun was left intact.'

"In front of it," he added, "was a Russian tank with the turret The Russians already blown in. had buried the crew of the tank just beside it.

German guns against the enemy by turning them around." While he was watching the operations, the general said, there was sporadic shelling while the Germans attempted to dive-bomb the spearhead of the Russian attack.

Very Good Relations.

"The men looked very fit," he went on. "There were very good relations all-around. "Everywhere I got the impression of a very deep-rooted and universal hatred of what they called the 'Fascisti.'

The British officer said he was particularly impressed with the smooth way all Soviet rear organizations were running. These included truck and horse transport, field kitchens and supplies.

Two years after his marriage Lord Mounthatten was back here once more with his cousin the Prince of Wales.

His experience in this war makes an exciting story of endless action. In simple chronological outline it goes thus:

Schedule Given For Duke of Kent

The Duke of Kent will arrive here tomorrow morning on the train bringing the President back from Hyde Park. The time of the President's arrival is never announced

The Duke will leave almost at once for Norfolk from Naval Air Station at Anacostia for inspection of naval and air facilities in the Norfolk area. He will fly back to Washington the same day in time to reach the White House for dinner at 8. He will land, on his return journey from Norfolk, at Bolling Field.

Tomorrow night he will be a White House guest. Tuesday morning he is scheduled to fly from Bolling Field to the Glenn L. Martin airplane plant near Baltimore, turning out bombers for Britain.

Tuesday afternoon the Duke will make a sightseeing tour of Washington-the Capitol, National Gallery of Art, Lincoln Memorial, Washington Monument and a cocktail hour is tentatively scheduled at the

Lewis Keeps Silent On Rumors That He Will Seek Comeback

Reports Says Miners' Union Chief Plans to Regain C. I. O. Presidency

By THOMAS F. COMAN. (The Star Special News Service.) On the top floor of an office building overlooking a shady park on the edge of downtown Washington, the currents of gossip and rumor continue to swirl around the bulky figure of labor leader John L. Lewis, whose past made labor history, whose future is his secret. Almost any day-if you want the

"inside dope" on the man some people thought was washed up when he guessed wrong on the 1940 presidential election—you can hear: That he is making a comeback on the public stage and will grab the C. I. O. leadership away from Philip Murray; that he will form a third political party; that he will engineer a coup to unite the divided labor movement under his command, or that he may hire three radio chains again to tell the Roosevelt administration where to get off.

That's how easy it is to learn whet is in the back of the graying head of the man who has ruled the United Mine Workers Union since 1920, who revolutionized the labor movement with C. I. O., tossed more than $500,000 into a political campaign, is credited with twice turning down a cabinet post, and lives conservatively in an old Virginia house.

Strategic Silence.

For years Mr. Lewis has been a magnet for gossip and rumor as well as an object of great affections and great hates.

He listens to the stream of gossip and rumors, too, and says nothing, apparently taking a keen delight in the continuing curiosity about his movements, which more often than not have foreshadowed spectacular maneuvers.

The Lewis technique for the moment seems to be to maintain a strategic silence and a fluid position. Political and economic changes at home and abroad may go far toward shaping his future course. If he is thinking of expanding his activities and taking a more prominent part in the public life, then his latest moves look like a decoy. For several years people who have come to visit him have been accustomed to seeing him in the huge, sumptuous oak paneled offices on the second floor of the United Mine Workers Building. There behind a desk with a freshly lit cigar and surrounded by a dozen big leather upholstered chairs, he was ready to do business.

And if the occasion warranted greater privacy, he had an adjoining room-the inner sanctum.

But he gave all that up a few days back; turned the space over to a branch of the miners' union in the chemical field, and windows that used to give his office a throne-room air, his new quarters have two windows that look out at the blank wall of an adjoining building.

Right now he is seemingly interested in fighting congressional approval of the St. Lawrence waterway and power project, and giving a personal touch and push to the organizing of some 600,000 workers in the gas, coke and chemical industries.

Not many of his friends and associates think he will be content merely with the paper details and routine affairs of the miners' union. After all, he has coal so well organized that the coal operators collect his dues and assessments for him

Take it from his friends, he could have the C./I. O. presidency again without a struggle if his successor, Mr. Murray, now ill in a Pittsburgh hospital, should resign or decide because of his health to forego another term at the C. I. O. helm.

There is a confident note in their conversation-mixed with some undisguised grumbling about the present C. I. O. leadership-that Mr. Lewis is the only man who could hold C. I. O. together if Mr. Murray stepped out.

After all, they argue, Mr. Lewis has given five years of hard work to building C. I. O., which now claims a membership of 5,000,000, and could not stand off and watch his handiwork disintegrate if no other strong man were available for the job.

Murray Has Support. Mr. Murray's friends hold equally strong views that the quiet-spoken Scotsman must retain the C. I. O. leadership even though it may take him a long time to recover his health.

They see Mr. Murray in complete command of the next C. I. O. convention in November, his regime fortified by newly won successes and prestige, especially in steel and in autos, where Henry Ford was signed to a C. I. O. union shop contract.

Mr. Lewis does not like the Roosewelt administration policies on foreign and national defense affairs, and he cares even less for the direction given to defense labor problems by his one-time ally, Sidney

Bathtub Gin Nearer As War and Raids Hit London Liquor Supply

Many Prices Have Gone Up 500%, and Some Things Are Unavailable

By SHEILAH GRAHAM. We were dining in Scott's in Pica- dening, jr., acting supervisor of dilly, the center of the blitzed world. special investigations of the bureau, My companion ordered champagne. has been here only a few weeks. "Sorry sir," he was told, "but we in the place." This was a few weeks ago and accessible and covered with the debris of the last big blitz.

Bombings, the impossibility of importing wines from the continent, the sending of huge supplies of Scotch whiskey to America to create dollar reserves and the fact that more women are drinking beer and liquors, are responsible for the present shortage of liquor in England. Consequently prices are high and going higher.

Distribution is uneven and with the exception perhaps of Liverpool drunkeness is practically nonexistent. Liverpool is a port and visiting sailors come in from dangerous journeys and warm up at pubs. Who can blame them?

Champagne Now $10.

Champagne which used to cost $5 a bottle in reputable restaurants children spent two weeks at the is now $10. In gyp joints, the num- camp, 27 were kept all summer beber of which is increasing, the price cause of home conditions, Maj. is $15 and upward. Claret has increased in price 300 per cent. Creme de Menthe a few years ago was $1.50 a bottle, now it's $10. Whisky has jumped to $4 and Kummel, which used to be $1.50, is $9, when you can get it.

I was at a restaurant the other evening with Quentin Reynolds. We asked for kummel and were brought "the last quarter bottle in the house." Quentin has a theory about the kummel shortage. He says they are using it for gasoline. In prewar days kummel was imported from Holland and Russia.

There is a tremendous shortage of vermouth, which used to come from France and Italy. When you ask for a dry martini-made of gin and vermouth—you usually get a mixture of gin and sherry. It tastes awful. The other day I was in the Ritz bar and saw an officer in the navy empty his glass on the bar and stalk indignantly out after saying: "If that's a martini, I'm a Dutchman. Bathtub Gin Considered. Gin is not too plentiful, either. During a recent raid 120,000 bottles went up in flames and people are beginning to consider the manufacture of bathtub gin. In fact, I've been asked several times for the American prohibition era formula. Speakeasies are beginning to urish underground inst as did in the United States when liquor was prohibited by law. To meet the demands of speakeasy clients, a new "black market" is arising. Already there is a black market in food where illegitimate traders who try to corner the market on such rationed foods as butter and meat to sell them at an enormous profit for themselves. The black liquor market is controlled by shady traders who bought up huge stocks of liquor at the beginning of the war and are currently making an undercover fortune. I was told of one man who has cornered most of the available vermouth in this country. He bought it at something like 8 cents a bottle and is selling at $7.50 a bottle.

U. S. Seeks to Deport Former Convict to Italy A date for a deportation hearing described as a former member of a ring of forgers of naturalization papers, will be set at District Court Tuesday by Justice David A. Pine. The Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization is seeking to deport Rizzi, who was arrested here Monday, to Italy, Rizzi told the court he had been Correspondent of The Star and N. A. N. A. living here 18 months, working as LONDON, Aug. 23. (By wireless)- a bricklayer. However, W. P. Glensaid he had been informed Rizzi Mr. Glendening testified that haven't a bottle of any kind of wine Rizzi was sentenced to five years in uralization papers and on one octhe cellars in the City of London casion was picked up for suspicion belonging to the restaurant were in- at the Panama Canal. Rizzi has lived here at various times in the 1100 block of N street N.W. and the first block of H street N.E. Mr. Glendening said Rizzi acted as the "front" man for the ring of forgers, which operated out of New York. Rizzi contended at the hearing that he was born in San Francisco and was taken to Italy before his first birthday.

More Beer Being Made.

With regard to the beer shortage, more beer actually is being made in this country than before the war. But more people are drinking it. The British people paid 140,-000,000 in beer taxes last year. The amount will be the same this year but the beer will have 20 per cent less hops and less sugar. I talked with a woman worker in a munition factory in Northern England recently

"I didn't drink beer before the war," she told me, "but after work in a factory (an airplane factory) until 7 or 8 in the evening, I need a bit of a pick-me-up.

She and her feminine co-workers have to hurry to a pub or they will be out of luck. The supplies usually run dry well before the 10 o'clock closing time.

Bottled Beer Hard to Get. In the country most of the pubs close during the week and save their Seer for the week end. Bottled beer is hard to buy and will be more difficult in the months to come. A friend of mine wanted to give a small party at home and had to postpone it 10 days because that was the shortest period in which the local dealer could get bottled beer. The men who used to make bottles are in the fighting forces. The women who could replace them are needed for vital war factory work. In addition the draymen, the big strong men who used to shoulder casks of beer from trucks to shops and pubs, are mostly in the services like the tank corps, which need physically powerful men.

A Home in the District or Virginia? Army Expects Answer This Week

President Roosevelt, returning to Washington tomorrow, is expected to settle once and for all the controversy that has raged for three weeks around the Army's proposal to 'erect a $35.000.000 "dream" War Department building on the Arlington Experimental Farm.

Tomorrow, or sometime this week. the Army men behind the project will lay before the Chief Executive a redraft of their plans. What these plans will be, only the Army knows, and the "no comment" order has been clamped on tight since Wednesday.

That day the President called to the White House Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy and Brig. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, construction chief of the Quartermaster Corps. He told them to restudy plans both for the War Department building and its site. "Put three shifts on it and come back as soon as you have finished," the President directed.

Use of Navy Building. The day before he had given evidence he would take last-minute action regarding the proposed building. During the World War, the President told newsmen, he had had a hand in the desecration of Washington parks through erection on the Mall of the old War and Navy Department Buildings. He declared he did not want to do anything like this again.

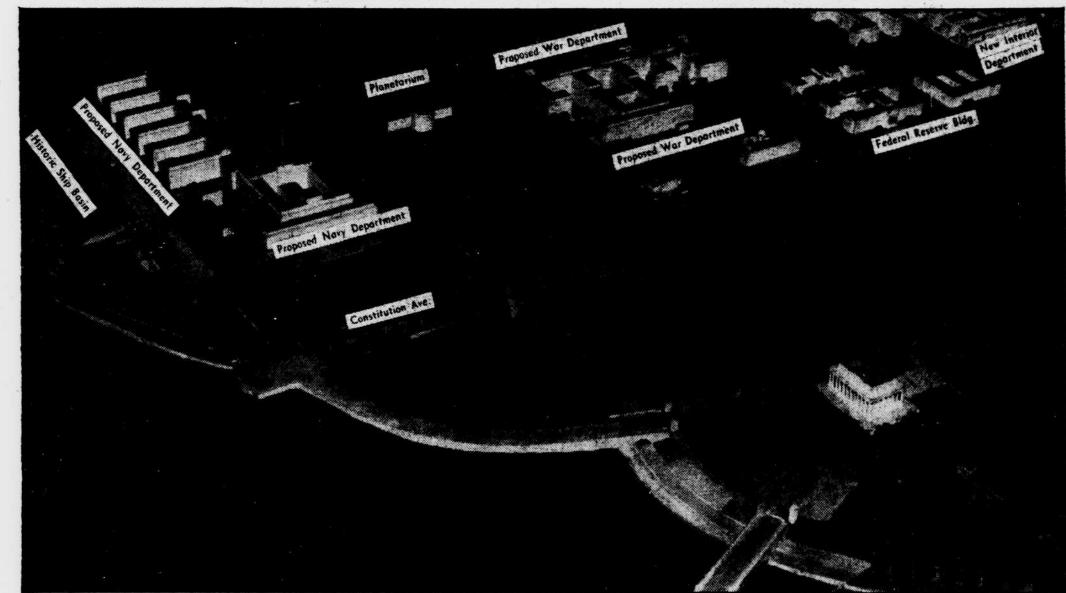

The President also said he was considering a scheme whereby the Army could expand its new War Department Building on Virginia avenue while a similar large Navy Department building was being put upon the site of the Naval Hospital. Both buildings, he explained, could then be turned over to the Army "for the duration."

This scheme would be in accordance with the so-called Northwest Rectangle plan developed 10 years ago by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which has actively opposed the idea of placing a building for 40,000 employes on the experimental farm. Conjecture immediately arose as to whether or not the President had told the Army to use the rectangle site.

Emerging from the White House conference the next day, however,

Millions Risk Injuring Their Teeth-Be Safe! Brush Your Teeth the Liquid Way

Liquid Dentifrice Cannot Injure - Contains Absolutely No Abrasives

Today millions of people are unknow-ingly causing serious damage to their teeth—by regular brushing with denti-frices containing abrasives or scouring

In fact, among people who brush their teeth regularly, a very large percentage of all cavities along the gum line that require filling are probably the result of this injury. This was shown by a clin-ical study in a leading dental journal.

Naturally, you want to save your teeth from this injury. If, however, you feel that your teeth need an abrasive scouring, at least occasionally, we suggest that you follow special directions on the Teel package.

In the same manner, these scientists tested the new liquid dentifrice—Teel. In no case did Teel injure the teeth in any way, because Teel contains ab-solutely no abrasives of any kind.

Recent clinical studies con-ducted by dentists under a Research Foundation showed Teel doesn't depend on abrasives for cleansing. Instead, it uses a newly-dis-covered patented cleansing agent that's almost magic-like in the way it helps reveal the natural whiteness and beauty of your teeth. It isn't soap, yet multiplies into thousands of tiny, cleansing bubbles in the mouth.

How Teel Reveals Beauty of Your Smile

These active bubbles amazingly help remove the daily accumulation of de-caying food particles and dulling sur-face film. Thus your teeth look so much whiter, more thrillingly beautiful. They "feel" satin-smooth—your mouth glo-riously refreshed.

Get Teel at any drug, de-partment or 10¢ store. And see your dentist regularly for his professional advice. eel TEETH

Election of Officers Closes Convention At Louisville

By the Associated Press. LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 23.-Joe Carr of Tennessee, elected president of the Young Democrats of America by acclamation today, declared the organization "shall be mobilized to the full strength of its manpower behind the President of the United States" in the national emergency. The youthful Tennessee Secretary

"Wherever it takes us-from Dakar to the Orient; whatever duties it may impose upon us; our reply is that we are not only ready, but on our way.'

Praise Roosevelt and Hull, Earlier the convention, at the final session of its biennial threeday meeting, adopted resolutions commending President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull "for their courageous and astute conduct of our foreign affairs, and we stand with them in their titanic fight against the armed might of Nazi Germany."

The convention also approved the administration's policy of "full and complete aid" to England and China and said that "we approve of the policy of full and complete aid to Russia, believing that our hatred of Communism and our determination to destroy its roots in this country should not blind us to the fact that Russia is battling our common enemy."

With noisy demonstration the Young Democrats voiced their disapproval of Japan's occupation of bases in Indo-China and after condemning the collaboration of the "spineless and undemocratic Vichy government" resolved that "the United States should oppose by every means at its disposal any further aggression by the Japanese government.

Approving a statement from Mr. Roosevelt read to the convention at the opening session Thursday night, the organization adopted a resolution "that those obstructionists who still wear the Democratic label are in the wrong party." Back Occupation of Bases.

The convention further adopted a resolution stating that "our military leaders should be authorized to use our armed forces to occupy and defend such strategic areas and bases as our leaders deem essential to the security of our country."

The resolution as originally introduced yesterday urged occupation of Dakar, the Cape Verde Islands and Singapore but these specific places were eliminated by the Resolutions Committee. Approval of the eightpoint peace program recently formulated by President Roosevelt and

Union Activities Welfare Post Barred in D. C. Expected to Go 'Vital Services' To Van Hyning

City Heads Don't Want Any More Local Units Set Up, Mason Says

"Strikes or any other union activities" which would interfere with mal policy adopted by the Commissioners.

In announcing this policy, Com-missioner Guy Mason declared yesterday the city heads were opposed to development of any more union "local chapters." as such, among rector workers in "vital" governmental agencies, and he listed police, fire, health, the jail, workhouse and reformatory

He said the Commissioners believed in and supported unionism as a "broad national policy" and were not opposed to individual workers joining national unions but that in the case of vital municipal services set up for the protection and care of the public "the line must be drawn somewhere" as to the extent of activities.

Dr. Bocock Reversed.

Commissioner Mason, acting as spokesman for the Board of Commissioners, said that under the newly adopted policy municipal workers, organized or unorganized, were assured the right to select their own spokesman to present complaints or suggestions as to working conditions for consideration of department executives and that if they were dissatisfied there they might appeal cases to the Commis-

86 Pct. Came From Public Funds, U. S. Survey Shows

A total of $17,816,754 in public funds and $2,897,927 raised by voluntary contributions was spent for health and welfare service in the District in 1940, according to a survey made public last night by the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department

Public funds amounted to 86 per cent of the total of $20.714.681 spent in the District as compared with an average of 90 per cent in 33 other urban areas ranging from 100,000 to 2,800,000 population included in the survey.

The absence of State contributions in the District partially explains the difference, it was said. The Federal contribution here, however, was slightly lower than the average, and although the local fund contribution was larger, the deficit caused by lack of State money still was not made up, the report indicated

Washington figures were complied by the Council of Social Agencies, which represents the bureau here in collecting social statistics

Less Than Average.

Per capita from public funds, Washington received $26.87, which was about $2 less than the average of the cities in the study. Federal funds spent here amounted to $13.74 per capita, local funds, $13.13, and from voluntary contributions, $4.37 per capita.

Exclusive of income from endowments and all others in the voluntary contribution field, private contributions in the District amounted to 10 per cent of all money spent. a much higher percentage than the average among the cities-7.1 per

The total per capita expenditures for Washington, from all funds, was listed at $31.24-55 cents under the general average.

The several cities showed a wide variance in amounts received by different types of services, however. In the District, less than the average was spent for relief and family welfare, but higher than average for hospital-in-patient care.

Miss Rita Beuchert, research secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, said Washington long has had a high rate of mental breakdowns. She said authorities attributed this fact to the "attraction which the seat of the Federal Government holds for people with various types of delusions."

Selection Slated To End Impasse on Successor to Bondy

By DON S. WARREN. Solution of the impasse between the Commissioners and the Board of Public Welfare over selection of a new welfare director, to succeed Robert E. Bondy, who has returned to work with the American Red Cross, appeared near yesterday. It is probable that Conrad Van Hyning, acting welfare director for nearly three months, will be the new director.

District officials indicated yesterday there was as yet no final commitment, but action in some direction is expected in the near future.

If the suggested solution is adopted, both the Commissioners and the Board of Public Welfare would be permitted to "save face" on the issue. Annapolis Ferries Resume Service After 6-Hour Strike

Demands of Crewmen To Be Considered

- At Meeting Tuesday

By the Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS, Aug. 23 .- Full servlee on the State-owned Chesapeake Bay ferry was resumed this afternoon when striking employes terminated a six-hour work stoppage at the conclusion of a meeting between union representatives and State officials.

A temporary agreement was reached during a meeting which lasted 1 hour and 10 minutes in the pilot house of the ferry boat Harry W. Nice.

Attending were Ezra B. Whitman, chairman of the State Roads Comnission; W. Frank Thomas, a member of the commission; Harry C. Jones, State employment commisioner, and Richard A. Bowie and losiah Cox, representatives of the nternational Longshoremen's Association (A. F. of L.).

conclusion of today's meeting. He added that every effort was made added that every effort was made to clarify the situation and that the commission would be given as much commission would be given as much time as needed in settling the issue. About 125 ferry employes were involved in the strike, which tied up the three boats on the Annapolis line that carry thousands of Washington and Baltimore motorists to and from the Eastern Shore resorts every week end.

Strike Began in Morning.

The strike started this morning when crewmen refused to board the boats for the first scheduled trip at 7:45 o'clock. At that time more than 100 automobiles were lined up awaiting transportation across the bay.

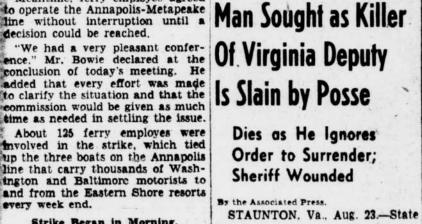

When employes finally manned the boats at 1:10 p.m. approximately 50 cars were parked near the Annapolis pier.

"It was a completely satisfactory meeting," Mr. Whitman declared. "The men are going back to work and the problems presented are to be taken up next week."

Mr. Whitman said it was recognized that it would take some weeks to get matters adjusted but that a free and frank discussion of the whole subject will be had with the

In another home nearby were two wounded. The children of the

Ballet Russe Opens Series of Programs At Water Gate

have adjusted themselves to the small off-stage space so that they can make entrances and exits under full flying power. Minor points, these, of course, but noticeable. The National Symphony's floating bandshell, to be sure, does make a better stage than that shallow platform at Constitution Hall, where Washington has been seeing its ballet of late.

The comparative spaciousness of this stage was appreciated most last night in "Les Presages," Leonide Massine's choreographic interpretation of Tschaikowsky's "Fifth Symphony." Massine is something of the Cecil B. de Mille of the ballet when it comes to a love for crowds, for masses of people going some place in a hurry, and when he sets to work on an interpretation of something massive like a symphony, his dancers need room.

Highly Interesting Effects.

He has been up to the old Massine tricks here, too, sometimes gaining highly interesting effects with his architectural groupings, sometimes falling into confusion (at least the dancers did last night) and occasionally working out moments of true beauty, when he has diverted his attention from old Grecian (or maybe Egyptian) frieze patterns.

You may, of course, prefer to have your Tschaikowsky interpreted by Walt Disney or you may prefer to do it yourself. Still you would have been forced to admit that some of the dancing was excellent, especially the duet of Nana Gollner and Paul Petroff and several interludes of Tatiana Riabouchinska's.

Opening Number Relaxing.

Last night's program was opened with the traditional ballet curtainraiser, "Les Sylphides." If there were some way to say it as a compliment, we would report that this classic Fokine-Chopin affair always makes us drowsy. It's just so nice and pretty and relaxing. Or maybe that old habit we formed of mentally counting ballet dancers instead of sheep to cure insomnia has something to do with it. Anyhow Miss Riabcuchinska, Anna Volkova, Marina Svetlova, Roman Jasinsky and the others performed it with considerable grace.

My apartment had the look of an overstuffed florist shop when, shortly before 5 o'clock, Jeff and I returned to it. The living room was filled with roses-white roses, yellow roses, red roses. The butterfly table was spread with my Venetian cloth and my best silver sparkled in the light of two tall candles. At two of the places were corsages, each boasting an orchid, one brown, one purple. A cake, snowy white and pyramid, topped everything.

Carol came out of the kitchen wearing a soft, woolly dress that I had bought early in the fall. It had a high neck and leg-of-mutton that made her eyes seem a violet C'mon. Plans for organization here of a | Washington district to enlist have new division or two of young men been increased, and there is a probof the United States Naval Reserve who are preparing to take the comtion. The actual organization will be effected and the drills started next week, it was learned at the headquarters of local Naval Reserve activities in the Washington Navy Yard, where they will carry out their drill and instructional schedule during the coming year.

Lt. H. Arthur Lamar. a former officer of the local Organized Reserve Battalion, has been ordered to take command of the activities in connection with the formation of the new outfit. Since he was called to active duty Lt. Lamar has been serving in the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, and, it was reported, that he will continue on that assignment. The work of training the local Naval Academy candidates, it was said, will be in addition to his regular duties during the day. All of the drill work of the divisions will be held at night. It is not known at this time just from the training stations as to the available number of men who have been inability that enough men will be found here to fill this quota. However. it is quite definite that most petitive tests next spring for ap-pointment to the United States with engineering degrees as desired Naval Academy are nearing comple- by the Navy Department. So great has been the demand in all branches of the Government, including the combatant branches, for young engineers, that the field has been practically scraped clean, it was said. Therefore, as another means of getting the necessary men, those who have bachelor of arts degrees are being taken in greater numbers, 🛥 it is shown in their credits that they have a sufficient background of chemistry, physics and mathematics. Competition Is Cut. It is understood that the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department has stepped in to cut down some of the keen competition among the various bureaus for engineering-trained men. For a long time these bureaus have been competing with each other for this class of personnel, and it was said that the Navigation Bureau has set up an allocation schedule so that each how many divisions there will be, bureau will get only a promotion of as no information has been received certain personnel as it becomes

The Army, Morale and Sports

NORFOLK, Va., Aug. 23 .- In this little matter of morale in the new United States Army it is pointed out that a single selectee of note, like Ballplayer Hank Greenberg or Movie Actor Jimmy Stewart, can do more than the fist-pounding politicians and, in some instances, even the high command. This is a high-ranking officer of Camp Pendleton, Va., talking:

"There is no use pretending that all of the draftees shrugged their shoulders and said. 'So what?' when they learned that instead of having to serve a year they will spend 30 months in the Army. A lot of them didn't. They grumbled and are grumbling still. If Greenberg wants to get out of the Army that is his privilege. He is over 28 years old and is entitled to an honorable discharge. We appreciate the fact that he has only a few years of baseball left. But, if Greenberg would stay in the Army for six months, or until it was time to leave for spring training, he would do the morale a lot of good."

Most of the 28 and 30-year-old selectees have no $40,000-year jobs waiting for them when Uncle Sam says it is all right for them to go home. Some have only movie usher chores or elevator operator jobs but, whatever, they are cinches to make more than $21 a month and, all things being relative, freedom of civilian life is just as important in their world as that of Corp. Henry Greenberg, Anti-tank Company, 2d Infantry Regiment, Fort Custer, Mich. That's why it is almost certain that most officers are hoping that Hank sticks to the khaki for a little longer. It makes the little soldiers think that Army life can't be so bad if an affluent, famous baseball star voluntarily stretches his term of service.

Entertainment Is a Major Consideration

Not all of the Army camps are models of modern living. Pendleton and nearby Fort Story have been tossed up quickly on some stretches of sand and mud. There appear to be problems concerning esprit de corps although if they are minor or major it is not for an innocent by-stander to say

"District of Columbia." he said. "Washington." He spat on the fender as the car drove past.

What has this got to do with sports? Well, sports could do plenty for Uncle Sam, according to officers. Big league ball teams could set the style now. A team like Washington, say, could volunteer to come down to an Army camp in this section and play, for instance, the freshly make life miserable for the Griffs. selected Piedmont League All-Star team. Ten individual matches tomorrow will complete the series.

Jones, competing with the Nation's foremost professionals in match play for the first time, paired with Gene Sarazen, but the veterans were no match for Byron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, who won, 8 and 6. The fabulous Bobby, coming out of retirement for the charity match expected to raise $25,000 for the United Service Organizations, appeared far off his game and he and Sarazen went 10 over par for 30 holes. As service teams go, it is a good club, good enough to have won 23 or 24 games in a row. The catcher and the shortstop are good Class B ball players. "It's pretty well organized here," said Lt. Rudio. "In a few weeks we'll start football. It makes a good league and it's a good game. Still," he sighed wistfully, "it wouldn't make anybody mad down here if a big league ball club came down and played an all-star team selected from the Army and Navy posts. Our service boys wouldn't be any pushovers and we'd pack the stadium."

The Norfolk operating base has a brick stadium built especially for baseball. The field is better than the average Florida training field. We hereby humbly suggest the Yankees drop down and play that game, pitching Lefty Gomez.

Gomez would like it at the operating base. El Goof is an airplane watcher. What if there are two Cubs or Giants on the bases in a World Series game where an airliner passes over? Gomez simply disregards them and looks upward. Here El Goof would have a lot of fun. At the biggest airplane base in the world, fighters, bombers, pursuit ships, reconnaisance planes and amphibians are taking off and landing every few seconds, right near the ball field. For Tommy Henrich it might be a trying afternoon, for the planes come down in deep right field, but for Gomez it would be heaven on earth. Even if Lefty was too absorbed to pitch it would make an interesting spectacle. He is the best plane watcher there is.

Walter Hagen, non-playing captain of the cup team, declared. "It's in the bag" when the two-ball foursome matches were completed, but there was much to be said for the chances of the challengers. Wood, Little, Hogan and Demaret all were hitting the ball well today and constituted a real threat.

four holes all day. Then with the lead widening as they made the turn in the afternoon round, Nelson mercifully put an end to the match by dropping putts of 10 and 12 feet on the twenty-eighth and thirtieth greens.

Wood and Little, gaining an early 3-hole lead, came back with a 3under-par 32 on the first nine after lunch and closed out the match on No. 30 with a birdie. Little belted a tremendous tee shot on the 432yard hole and Wood placed his approach four feet from the cup.

OMAHA, Aug. 23. - Marvin (Bud) Ward of Spokane, Wash., the most impressive figure to swing a club over the Field Club course this week, shot his first practice round for the national amateur golf championship today and promptly was installed as favorite in the tournament that starts on Monday.

It wasn'p so much the score he posted—a one-over-par 73 as the manner in which he belted out booming, in-the-groove wood shots and spanked out cleancut iron shots that either rolled up dead to the pin or bit neatly into the heavy turf and sat down. There was, too, his confident but by no means cock-sure reaction to the course,

"This looks like my meat," said the 1939 champion.

Revised Yank Line-up -By JIM BERRYMAN Snaps Losing Streak At Tribe's Expense

Few Hits by Makeshift Team Tell Heavily in Its 7-2 Triumph

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 23 .- The New York Yankees changed about everything but the color of their uniforms today, and ended their three-game losing streak with their revamped line-up by knocking off the Indians, Backed by the makeshift team, Lefty Gomez handcuffed the Tribe with six hits, although he had to call on Johnny Murphy for help in the ninth inning to save his 12th win of the year.

The victory left the Yanks 15 games in front of the second-place Chicago White Sox in the American League standings.

Make Few Hits Count.

Although the Yanks, who had scored a total of only four runs in their last 27 innings before today, collected only nine hits off three Indian elbowers, they bunched six of these for rallies of three runs each in the fourth and fifth frames to put the game on ice.

Manager Joe McCarthy, shifting his line-up, had Jerry Priddy, the rookie second sacker, on first; Frank Crosetti, ex-varsity shortstop, on third; Frenchy Bordagaray, once of the Cardinals, in right field, and Ken Silvestri catching.

These four newcomers to the varsity collected five of the nine hits and drove in four of the seven runs. Priddy led the way with three runs

The Indians took the lead with a run in the third without getting a hit, but the Yanks came right back in the fourth when an error, a walk and singles by Joe Gordon and Priddy produced three markers. Priddy's hit sent two across. Charley Keller's two-bagger drove two runs across in the fifth, and, after Clint Brown replaced Chubby Dean on the mound, Priddy's single sent another home

Silvestri's double and two infield outs produced the last Yankee marker in the eighth, while the Tribe closed out the scoring in the ninth with a run on Ossie Grimes' triple

Candidates for End, Tackle Posts Seem Especially Strong

Center Squad Has Class; Leen Holdovers Will Fill Guard Berths

By BILL DISMER, Jr. Star Staff Corresponde

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Aug. 23 .-From the looks of things at this early stage of "the game, approximately the same number of new faces as were added to the Redskins' roster last year will be found on the 1941 squad. Retirement of seven veterans has left vacancies for that many rookies and the doubtful status of two more members of last year's squad offers opportunities to another pair of new candidates.

But whereas half of last year's eight rookies were backs and the other half linemen, all but one or two of the new crop of Redskins figure to be ends, tackles and centers. horsepower, there has been no one strictly people's car, designed to furnish dependable transportation at lowest cost.

Now the pendulum has swung the other way. Under present defense-time conditions, people with ordinary incomes don't want to pay for unnecessary "show-off" features.

And they don't have to. For, to meet these extreme conditions, there is once again a strictly people's car-a low-price, full-family-size quality car that those who make $20, $30, $40 a week and even more can really afford to own and drive.

It's a smartly styled car, with a new, luxuriously equipped and tailored interior. It performs like a dream and already holds amazing world's records in fuel economy and durability.

It will give you fast, comfortable, dependable transportation at the lowest cost of any full-family-size car. Even if defense-time needs cause taxes, price of gas and oil, and living expenses to go higher and higher, you can still afford to drive it.

There's something about down to bedrock competition that either steels a man and makes him good, or convinces him that he isn't a winner. But we doubt if the boys would go for the steady stream of tournaments nowadays as they did 15 years Mrs. Mann Conquers ago. They don't have time, for one thing. Bill Expected to Score Plenty in Early Going Of Wednesday Bout

Eddie Blunt, giant Negro heavyweight, may beat young Bill Poland in their 25-round scuffle at the ball park Wednesday night, but doesn't figure to off their workouts at

Turner's Arena. Today will be their fifth at Uncle Joe's academy of arts and sciences and thus far Blunt has not stirred the gallery to any wild outbursts of enthusiasm. Good and tough, yes, and big enough to stand up under the hammering of a 16-milimeter field gun, but slow, too. He can hit, but has got to have a stationary target to be dangerous. That's why Poland should be fined for loitering if Blunt so much as lays a glove on him. That's the difference between their speed. Of course, Willie will be tagged-and often. He isn't exactly a phantom defensively, but Blunt shouldn't touch him after they shake hands if Poland slips into high gear and boxes smartly.

Palond Must Be Wary.

Blunt will have a sizeable advantage in weight. Poundage is important in heavyweight fights if used properly. After Joe Louis' fight with Bill Conn, Trainer Jack Blackburn pointed out that part of Joe's poor performance partially was due to the fact that he didn't take advantage of his heft. He should have

Blunt. Poland isn't as slow afoot as they would have you believe. but prefers to stand his ground and punch it out with the enemy rather than dance around and be cute. Such tactics make him look slower than he actually is. Against

Blunt, discretion will be the greater part of valor because if Eddie ever gets inside with his rib-cracking left Poland will feel it down to his heels

In the meantime ringer action is heating up on another front. Finals of the Interdepartmental Horseshoe Pitchers Association competition, which has been in progress for weeks, will be played next Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Saturday afternoon on the Commerce Building courts. A half hour of Saturday's battling, from 3:30 to 4 o'clock, will be broadcast by Station WJSV.

Twenty-six are eligible for the Government workers' play-offs and 14 will receive trophies, with three to be awarded in each of four classes for men and two in the one for women, attesting to the enterprize of Kermit Goodger, Civil Service Commission, who is president of the Interdepartmental Horseshoe Pitchers Association.

Is he willing to continue an "all-out" war or will he turn his coat once more at the first indication that Hitler is willing to call it a day after the Ukraine has been occupied? How will the democratic ideology of America and Britain reconcile itself with the Communistic doctrines of the U.S. S. R.? For the time being it is only natural that victims of Nazi aggression should adopt the Oriental slogan: "Become the devil's brother until you cross the bridge.

These are questions which many a responsible leader asks now that we are getting ready to support the U.S.S.R. with everything we have at our disposal. The answers cannot be given yet. But there is a strong feeling in many responsible quarters that we must be careful in our dealings with the Soviets.

Imposing American and British missions are getting ready to go to Moscow. Their objective will be to find out from Stalin personally the best means of cooperation between the western democracies and the Soviet dictatorship. At the request of the hermit of the Kremlin top-notchers will lead these large delegations. The dignity of his office, Stalin has let us know, does not allow him to deal with minor figures. Vice President Henry Wallace is mentioned as the likely head of the American delegation. Should his duties compel him to remain in the United States a man with cabinet rank will be sent to Moscow to represent President Roosevelt. The same thing applies to the British delegation; whether it will be Prime Minister Churchill, Anthony Eden or Bevin who will lead the British to Moscow was still uncertain at the time of this writing. But Stalin has made it very clear that only "the highest in the land" will be welcomed in Moscow this time.

Realists Fear Opportunism.

The Russians have put'up a splendid and gallant show. Their armies are fighting bravely and whatever is thought of the doctrine of their leaders there is no question that the stand of the U.S. S R. armies is the first ray of sunshine in the camp of the enemies of the Axis.

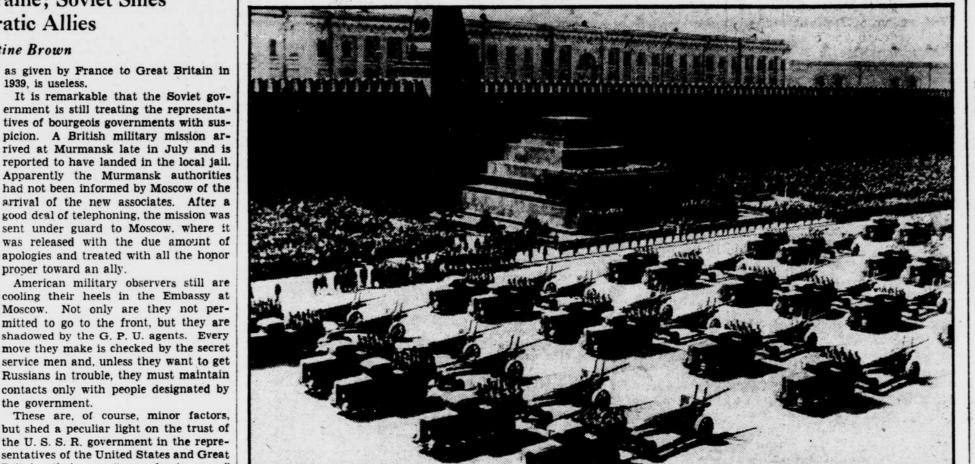

But there are many realists in Wash-

As if foreseeing the armored force tactics which the Germans were first to use in Poland, the Russians developed as main combat unit a rifle corps, consisting of three divisions of about 60,000 men, with tanks and artillery in addition to infantrymen, with motor transport and all sorts of auxiliary services. The corps was designed for independent and self-contained action. If encircled by a loop of enemy mechanized forces, it would be able to stand siege for a period or even fight its way out. Soviet communiques have been filled with alleged examples of successful resistance to German mechanized tactics. Without accepting the accounts as gospel, it is possible to draw from them some idea of the strategic principles by means of which the Russian generals hope to prolong the campaign at least until winter. They combine scientific innovations with an ingenious adaptation of the Russian peasant's traditional skill as a sniper and franc-tireur.

The German device of darting a long, swift stiletto of armored cars into the enemy's vitals has the weakness of exposing extensive flanks to counterattack. and of advancing with such lightning speed that a gap may be left between the dagger and its supporting forces. The Russians appear to have attempted, weapons principally used appear to have been tanks and automotive artillery. An instance is related of a Nazi armored division which exhausted its gasoline. The tanks were buried, with only the turrets emerging as individual fortresses. Russian artillerymen blasted them, the story is, one by one.

Declaration of Atlantic Seen As Mold for Unified Policy

As Peace Feeler, Roosevelt-Churchill Statement Also Tends to Take Wind From Sails of ForthcomingOffensive.

By Felix Morley.

It was a Stockholm newspaper which most graphically summed up the general reaction to the Churchill-Roosevelt declaration by comparing it to an iceberg, which floats with only one-eighth of its substance visible above the surface. The invisible part, concluded the anonymous Swedish editor, is in both cases the more important.

So the "Declaration of the Atlantic" is not to be judged merely by what it says, but also in connection with the background and circumstances of its enunciation. And thus analyzed it may be regarded in part as an Anglo-American peace feeler, the more clearly so because of President Roosevelt's subsequent denial that the historic meeting has brought the United States any closer to active participation in the war.

The primary reason for viewing the declaration in this light is the anticipation that Hitler will open another, and tempting, peace offensive as soon as Germany has established unmistakable military dominance over the Soviet Union.

German control of a substantial part of Russia's vast resources, plus widespread reluctance to confront a third winter of hostilities, would give much influence to any seductive overtures emanating from Berlin. The Churchill-Roosevelt statement of war aims was admirably calculated to offset this potential Nazi advantage and to place German diplomacy in an inferior negotiating position in advance.

The importance of the diplomatic aspect of the statement has been amply attested by the rapid deterioration of Russia's military position since the accord was made public on the morning of August 14.

On that very day Berlin officially announced occupation of the vital ironmining region of Krivoi Rog and the intervening period has seen further sericus attrition of the industrial strength of the Soviet Union. Presumably this outcome was expected as a result of information gathered by Harry Hopkins in Moscow. There is strong circumstantial evidence to indicate that his report on this visit governed the timing of the dramatic meeting in the ciation of nations, except perhaps by inference, and indicates that it will be a joint Anglo-American responsibility to disarm, and then effectively police, the nations which London and Washington agree to define as aggressors.

One further, and very important, difference is of setting rather than of character. On January 8, 1918, the Central Powers were nearing the end of their tether, Congress had formally declared war and President Wilson's wholly objective statement of American war aims was therefore triply effective as a dissolvent of German morale.

On August 14, 1941, the political and military positions were far from identical and the personal pledge of the Chief Executive of a non-belligerent power to disarm aggressors therefore seems somewhat premature, to say the least.

But if the declaration of the Atlantic is unimpressive as a statement of either war aims or peace objectives, its importance in developing and consolidating a unified Anglo-American position must not be minimized.

It is this consolidation of policy, likely to endure whatever the outcome of the war, which emerges as the most significant aspect of the Roosevelt-Churchill conversations.

"Merger" Has Advocates.

As indicated by the popularity of the "Union Now" movement there are many, in the United States as well as in Great Britain and the self-governing dominions, who definitely favor a merger of national independence in order to create a federalized Anglo-American state.

For some of the advocates of "Union Now" this end is perhaps primarily a war objective-to speed active American participation and thereby lessen the risk that Great Britain may have to accept an unfavorable peace.

In developing their program the Federal Unionists have somewhat naively patterned their thinking on past developments. Because the American colonies were successfully united after achieving independence, through the medium of a Federal Constitution, it is assumed that the English-speaking naions should follow the san Thus, Anglo-American Union would be launched with the establishment of a super-Congress, with so many representatives from the United States, so many from Great Britain, Canada, Australia and so on, all nicely proportioned according to population. The objective may be admirable, but the procedure is highly unrealistic. Its oversimplified thinking is based on the very questionable assumption that because a certain political technique served admirably in 1789 it will be equally appropriate for wholly different circumstances in 1941. One of the most important aspects of the recent North Atlantic conference was the dramatic emphasis it gave to the method of direct executive contact, intentionally ignoring not merely the inherited prestige, but indeed the actual existence of elected legislative bodies. The chief executive of Great Britain presumably came to as yet undisclosed agreements with his opposite number in the United States. But beyond that there was intimate and very important collaboration between the ranking officers of the two nations charged with the conduct of land, naval, air and economic warfare. The meeting of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill is the most striking instance yet of the technique of direct executive contact. But it is by no means the only illustration. For instance, Sir Arthur Salter, representing the British Ministry of Shipping, has for some months now been in Washington working out shipping supply problems in continuous consultation with the Maritime Commission. Whether or not the United States actively enters the war, a measure of union with Great Britain is already here. It is not recognized as such only because it has come in a form unexpected by those who have been foremost in its advocacy.

ington and in London who, without belonging to the reactionary sets, are wondering what will happen if these armies are defeated and compelled to withdraw beyond Eussia's industrial belt.

President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill have promised the fighting Russians unrestricted assistance. They are not quibbling about it, either. In their desire to help the only remaining fighting army in Europe they are asking Stalin only one thing in return, the continuation of the struggle. Will he do this if his armies are compelled to retreat farther or will he at a given moment listen to some peace proposal from the Reich? The past record of the Soviets' diplomacy is a long chain of actions dictated exclusively by opportunism.

So far the British, in their eagerness to find a fighting ally, have changed many of their long-standing policies in the Middle East. For generations Great Britain has refused to collaborate with Russia in Iran. The rivalry between the two countries in regard to the key to the road to India is well known. Now London has agreed to share its influence with the Soviets in that Middle East kingdom. Premier Stalin has been informed by Washington and London that whatever he needs, whatever he thinks his armies want, can be obtained from this country. For the time being transactions will be strictly on a cash basis. But the amount of Soviet money in the country is barely sufficient for three months if we start shipping airplanes, tanks and ammunition across the Pacific in all seriousness.

Omit Fighting Pledge.

The Soviets' part of the bargain is to fight. How long and how has not been stipulated. The missions which are going to Moscow will not indulge in any political conversations. It is not considered politic, for the time being, to ask Stalin to subscribe to a pledge not to make a separate peace. This, in fact, would be superfluous, because no government can keep such a pledge in the event of a military defeat. We hope that the Russians are not going to lose but in such an eventuality a pledge, such are being badly hammered.

Reich has coveted since 1918. Many responsible officials would not be surprised to hear the Germans offer an armistice to Stalin after the whole of the Ukraine has been occupied and the Soviet military power drastically curtailed.

It is true that Hitler has launched a crusade against Communism. But he had done the same thing in the past for a period of six years. It was not difficult for him to switch in July, 1939, and call Stalin his dear friend. When the situation suited the Fuehrer he called him a traitor again and a menace to civilization. If Hitler and the German high command are satisfied a few weeks hence that the striking power of the Soviet Army has been annihilated and a peace, with the Ukraine as a prize, can be obtained from the Russian dictator without the unpleasant thought of a winter campaign, there is no saying what he may do and how Stalin may react to a peace proposal. Those who judge the situation in cold blood maintain that if the Russian Premier can see a possibility to maintain himself in office and also preserving the Communist doctrines, he may not reject eventual peace proposals from Germany Lone Rescue Line.

The resistance of the Soviet armies is predicated on the amount of war material it can obtain from the United States. Nobody questions our willingness to provide the Russians with everything they need to fight the Axis. But it will take some time before we can overcome the physical difficulties of sending help to Russia. There is only one route open at the present time-the route across the Pacific, by way of Vladivostok, thence by the only existing railwav-the Transsiberian - to the Urals. The second route, by way of Murmansk, is exposed to the attack of German submarines and airplanes pased on the Nor-the amusing and ironic fact that the Soviet government, through professing abhorrence of capitalism and all its works, was the only one to enter the war with a balanced budget and even a surplus on the credit side. According to the latest report of A. G. Zverev, People's Commisar of Finance, revenues for 1940 were 178,100,000,000 rubles, while expenditures were 173,300,000,000.

Started War Without Debt. In addition, Hopkins no doubt learned

When the Red Army began fighting, it was backed by a treasury without a kopeck of foreign debt, which obtained 91 per cent of its income through taxes and only 9 per cent through domestic borrowing. Incidentally, the 1941 budget for defense amounted to 71,000,000,000 rubles. At the ruble's official value of 20 cents, this sum is equivalent to $14,-200,000,000. It has probably been multiplied since the outbreak of war. The Red Army was also supported by the industrial expansion of two completed five-year plans and the first three years of a third such program. Between 1939 and 1941, Comrade Zverev stated, more than 450,000,000,000 rubles, or $90,-000,000,000, were disbursed for state construction. Factory output was said to have increased 44 per cent, while 2,900 new industrial enterprises began operation and fresh capital totaling 108,000,-000,000 rubles was invested in the national economy.

With the prospect of German attack in view, a feature of this expansion from the outset was a drastic decentralization of manufacturing plants. Reports differ as to the extent to which the process has been consummated. It is generally accepted as true that the Far East armies have been made largely self-sufficient in regard to munitions and implements of war. The Soviet Embassy in Washington maintains that national industry would be able to carry on even if the army were driven back to the Ural Mountains. Last February the Red Army celebated its 23d birthday anniversary. During this period, universal military service was in effect. Figures as to manpower can only be approximated. An unofficial estimate is that 23,000,000 men at least have received two years of army training. If, as the Germans calculate, there are now 5.000,000 Russian soldiers in the field, then there would remain some

The anti-tank and tank guns. Self-propelling mounts for cannon were developed in great numbers for attacking armored vehicles.

Flying Force Strengthened.

The air force was reorganized by reducing the proportion of light bombers and doubling that of long-range bombers and fighting planes. Between 1934 and 1939, according to latest figures available. the flying force increased 130 per cent in number of plans, 138 per cent in personnel, 213 per cent in horsepower and 208 per cent in one-flight bomb-load. Motorization of the army as a whole increased 260 per cent. There have no doubt been further large increases since the invasion of Poland.

As a unique factor in morale-building, the Russian staff boasts that its soldiers, unlike those of "bourgeois" countries, are encouraged, instead of forbidden, to take part in political activities. A private in uniform may vote or be elected to office. For his edification as a citizen soldier. the government has developed what is known as the "cadre system." To each regiment is assigned a group of picked specialists, trained both in military science and politics, which are considered of equal importance.

They teach not merely combat technique, but the Marx-Lenin-Stalin ideology. The purpose is to create a "monolithic" army, homogeneous in political spirit and faith. Whether the doctrine be true or false, it seems, on the present record, to have provided the Russian soldier with a cause which he believes worth fighting for to the death. The function of the Soviet's famous "political commissars" is partly that of morale officers in the American Army.

The supply of officers has been cultivated for many years. In 1939 the Red Army had 14 military academies and six military faculties in civil universities for training higher officers and technical experts. It had 63 schools for graduating lieutenants in the various ground arms, with thousands of students; 32 flying and aeronautical engineering schools, with more than 20.000 students annually; and regimental schools for non-commissioned officers, with a capacity of several hundred thousand each year. Social and political branches were required courses at all these institutions.

Exploit Accomplished.

Heavy reverses suffered by the Russians during the last few days must not conceal the fact, it is declared, that their troops have accomplish an exploit which probably no other army on the globe could have equaled. The Germans struck by surprise, with a maximum of strength and desperate ferocity. They possessed advantages which can never again be repeated. Eight weeks of monumental fighting

Battle On, Encircled.

German spokesmen have accused the Russians of fighting unfairly, because they continued to give battle when enveloped by whorls of tank armies instead of surrendering at once, as the French did. Soviet officers and men were particularly trained to "keep their heads" when they found themselves thus encircled and to make full use of the self-sufficient equipment supplied them, either for effecting a break-through or for standing siege. There is a story of one Russian unit which maintained itself for 32 days behind the German lines and then rejoined the main army.

The Russian peasant for centuries has been adept at guerrilla warfare, and Napoleon himself could bear witness to the destructive genius of predatory bands of Muscovite irregulars. The Soviet staff appears to have adapted this national instinct by training divisions of regulars for partisan activity, in the way of sharpshooting, hit-and-run raids and the like. The Russian also has had centuries of practice in the "scorched-earth" policy proclaimed at the start of the war by Dictator Stalin. He feels little of the Western European's scruples against destroying his own bridges, highways, cities and homes.

Champions of the new Russian Army declare that previous to the current war. its mettle was written into the record for all to read. The first was an engagement on the Siberian border which the Japanese call Changkufeng Hill and the Russians Lake Hassan. It was a small operation, with tens of thousands of men instead of millions. But the Japanese had rehearsed it for months, had the advantage of surprise and sent in their best in the way of specially trained troops and modern weapons. Units of the 1st Detached Red Banner Army stormed the Japanese positions on August 6, 1938, and swept them clear between 5 p.m. and nightfall. Since then the emperor's army has refrained from stirring a finger against Soviet troops in the Far East.

Differ From Wilson Program.

As a peace program, however, the Churchill-Roosevelt statement is less impresside than as a peace feeler. Not withstanding the parallels drawn between it and the famous 14 points laid down by President Wilson in the last war, the differences and not the similarities are most arresting.

In the first place, the 14 points composed a definite though sketchy program of post-war settlement. As announced by Mr. Wilson to a joint session of Congress on January 8, 1918, they called for no punitive action against the German government of that day. It is true that they foreshadowed the acquisition of Alsace-Lorraine by France and perhaps the loss of certain German territory to an independent Poland. But they were nevertheless outlined as the basis of a negotiated peace, which, if followed up, might well have averted the present war.

For instance, point 4, dealing with disarmament, avoided any intimation of dictation in this fundamental attribute of sovereignty and merely called for: "Adequate guarantees, given and taken, that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety." In sharp contrast, the eight points of the Churchill-Roosevelt declaration assume a dictated rather than a negotiated settlement. The sixth point here speaks of the "hope" of a universally beneficial peace "after the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny." The eighth point, on disarmament, asserts that the unilateral disarmament of aggressive nations-presumably Germany, Italy and Japan-"is essential." President Wilson, in his fourteenth point, envisaged the League of Nations as the organization which should achieve reciprocal disarmament by mutual agreement. But the Churchill-Roosevelt statement anticipates no revived asso-

A Sound Position

The position taken by the District Commissioners in opposition to union activity on the part of District employes which would interfere in any way with vital municipal functions is eminently sound.

As enunciated by Commissioner Guy Mason, the official position is somewhat obscure in certain respects. For example, it is not clear what he means when he says that the Commissioners are opposed to the organization of any local union chapters in certain essential municipal institutions but that there would be no objection to the workers joining a national union. The purpose of any union organization is to give its members sufficient collective strength to enforce specific demands. For practical purposes, it makes no difference whether this is accomplished through a national or a local union, and it is difficult, therefore, to comprehend the distinction which Commissioner Mason draws in this respect.

There is no room for misunderstanding, however, with regard to the essential part of his statement. "It should be borne in mind," he declared, "that the Commissioners, as stewards of the public's interest, cannot and will not tolerate interference in any way by any others than lawfully constituted authorities in the operation, maintenance and management of such strictly governmental instrumentalities as the jail, workhouse, reformatory, police, fire and health departments."

In taking that position the Com-suffered no special hurt from the experience. During a similar period they spent Sunday evenings at their own firesides and were benefited by their serenity. Times have changed for the worse in some respects. Is it conceivable that now, despite suggestions to the contrary, they are altering for the better in others?

The Defense Record

In the light of the Fresident's reply to Senator Byrd's charge that we have failed "miserably" in the production of mechanized military equipment, it seems that the Senator was substantially correct in some of his complaints-notably that with reference to the lag in the aircraft program—but was beside the mark in other important categories. The significant thing about this difference of opinion, however, is not the fact that Senator Byrd seems to have been in error in some respects, but rather that, taking the President's own figures for produc-Nazi dictation.

tion, it is evident that our showing has been anything but satisfactory. And in this respect it is gratifying to note that the President himself says that our armament production never has been satisfactory to him.

This country, with its vast production facilities, has been specifically cast in the role of the arsenal of those nations resisting the Axis. And in this role it is only to be expected that the demands upon us will continue to increase as the war spreads from one battlefield to another. Obviously, a production measured in terms of a few hundred tanks, sixty-one modern anti-aircraft guns a month and two or three or four hundred anti-tank guns a month is going to be woefully inadequate.

In his reply to Senator Byrd, the President again alludes to the great increase in production which may be expected in the future, nor is 'could not but influence the dethere any doubt that the increase will be forthcoming. But it has been long on the way.

Time still remains the vital factor in this struggle for world control. And American industry, whatever the reasons, is not running its best race. If the pace is to be stepped up-and-it can be stepped up-Mr. Roosevelt will have to supply the driving force, for he has retained in his own hands the general direction of the defense program. It has been said before that most military failures can be summed up in the words: "Too little and too late." But that is a truism which cannot be emphasized too often.

the activity of their followers from "underground."

All this denotes the seriousness of the situation with which the German occupational authorities and the Vichy regime jointly is faced. As Berlin demands increasing "cooperation" from France, and as autumn brings cold combined with more stringent food shortages, the rebellious temper of the French population should grow to more dangerous proportions. Ruthless repression may allay, but cannot destroy, a militant unrest which has such deep and vital roots.

Mexico Talks Back

The action of Mexican authorities in ordering the closing of all German consulates in Mexico, following the exclusion of Mexican consular representatives from German-occupied Paris, confirms previous indications that our southern neighbor is in no mood to accept

This latest incident traces back to the denunciation by the Mexican government several weeks ago of a German note virtually demanding that Mexico protest against the United States' blacklist of pro-Axis firms in that country and warning of unpleasant consequences if this were not done.

Condemning the American blacklist in strong terms, the German Minister asserted that it violated 'the liberty of commerce and even the sovereignty of Mexico." He thereupon attempted to throw the burden of combating the blacklist upon the Mexican government by stating that it was its duty to protect the blacklisted firms by diplomatic action. As so often happens in German diplomacy, a demand was coupled with a thinly veiled threat, when the Minister concluded that "resigned acceptance" of the blacklist by Mexico cisions of the German government upon renewing commercial relations after the war." If Berlin thought it could eajole or coerce Mexico into opposing Washington's blacklist policy, it quickly discovered its mistake. The Mexican government, speaking through its Minister of Foreign Affairs, answered curtly that it alone was the judge of what constituted an injury to its rights or an infringement of its sovereignty, and that it could not "permit" a foreign diplomat to advise on such matters.

Going further, the Mexican reply affirmed the principle of inter-American co-operation as the basis

A New Conception of Production Problem

By Owen L. Scott.

The American people remain only dimly aware of the size of the job cut out for them. They are told that their role in defeating Hitler is to serve as the "arsenal of democracy." This sounds easy enough, and yet safe enough, to please everybody.

However, Lord Beaverbrook, Britain's Minister of Supply, is reported to have been shocked to discover the size of the American arsenal. He thought it was going to be much bigger. American defense officials, on the other hand, were shocked to learn how large was the conception the British have of an arsenal big enough to deal with Hitler. These officials were doubly shocked when they received a bill of particulars concerning Russian arms needs, if they are to be supplied from democracy's arsenal. Nobody, except a few New Dealers, apparently ever imagined that the task of supplying armies to fight the Germans, Italians and Japanese would be a task large enough to stagger the imagination of American industrialists.

Yet such is the size of the job. One look around the world will show why.

First, there are the British. The British literally need everything. They want airplanes not only for service in England. but in Egypt and Syria and Singapore. They need tanks for British armies at home and in Africa and the Near East and the Far East. They require guns and ammunition and foodstuffs in the same scattered places. Britain will supply the men to fight with the weapons that are provided, but weapons must come in vast quantities instead of present trickles.

Next, there are the Dutch. The Dutch in the South Pacific, who supply this country with rubber and tin, among other things, are talking back to the Japanese, who want to take them over. Yet if the Dutch are to back up their talk with the fighting they are prepared to engage in if attacked, they must have airplanes and tanks and guns and ammunition from the United States. This country is making only the barest beginning in meeting the Dutch needs.

Third, there are the Chinese. The Chinese have been fighting the Japanese for four years. They have taken and are taking terrible punishment because they lack airplanes with which to resist Japanese bombers, and they lack artillery for every purpose. They even lack metals for their own modest arsenals. China has many men ready and willing to use weapons if the United States can put those weapons in their hands. Once supplied, they can deal with Japan, without any necessity for sending American boys to fight in foreign lands.

* * * * Fourth, there are the Russians. Russia today is occupying Hitler's armies. Yet Russia, with millions of fighting men, of its present and future policy. As is losing the industrial area that does for the German warning, it was stig- most of the supplying of those men. Also, Russia maintains an army of nearly 1.000,000 men in Siberia, and this army now is cut off from the source of many of its supplies. Here again are the men to do the fighting if only they can be supplied with the weapons. To supply Russia is an undertaking of vast size in itself. Finally, there is the United States itself. This country is trying to build an Army and Air Force. It has the men in these forces ready to learn how to be soldiers and flyers and to use the modern weapons, but it doesn't have the weapons, except in meager quantities. These men have been promised that they will not have to fight in areas outside this hemisphere and there are plenty of men elsewhere who are fighting and ready to continue fighting. But unless American industry can supply the weapons that are needed by other than American soldiers and flyers, then the Americans themselves might find themselves faced with the need to fight. So it all comes down to a job for American industry, a job of serving as a real arsenal that turns out weapons on a scale big enough to supply forces around the world who are fighting Hitler and Japan and who are willing to continue the fight if they have supplies. What appears to have shocked Britain's Lord Beaverbrook is the discovery that American industry has only the foggiest notion of the size of the effort it must make to do what these other nations expect it to do. Lord Beaverbrook also discovered that very many defense officials of the highest sort have the same foggy idea about the size of the job they are supposed to perform. And what is the size of that job? In dollar terms, as informed officials see it, the job is to increase the present $1,000,000,000 a month spent on defense to a minimum of $3,000,000.000 a month and probably to $4,000,000,000 a month. This means, instead of $12,000.000.000 a year on arms and armies, the United States, as quickly as possible, must strive to turn out $48,000,000.000 a year. That sounds fantastic, and it is. Yet Hitler has Europe geared up to a war production that makes an effort of this rather fantastic magnitude necessary if he is to be defeated by the British and Russians and others who are trying to do that job. And the United States promised to be the arsenal that would supply the weapons if the other nations would just do the fighting. Now the question is whether this country is to deliver on that promise. The answer is: Certainly not in 1941 and probably not in 1942. It may begin to deliver on a really impressive scale by 1943, if the others can just hold out until that time. The reason why delivery dates steadily are being pushed farther and farther into the future is that those who were given charge of the defense program had no conception of its size and balked at taking the steps necessary to speed it up.

A NORMAL HABIT

By the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

The ways of a religious life are as common to man as the ether he breathes. They are as common in practice with the savage and uncivilized as with the refined and cultivated. True, there may be periods when their practice is less frequent if not abandoned, but sconer or later the devotional habit is resumed and reassuring. Efforts repeatedly have been made to ban religious practices and to close religious institutions, but such efforts have proved wholly futile. "If you destroy the people's God today, they will invent a new god tomorrow," said Robespierre. Russia under the Soviet gives no encouragement to religion and religious practices, yet the people refuse to be denied a way of life that is renewing and stimulating. It may be difficult to define in what way the practices of the devotional life bring satisfaction and peace, but the testimony of the ages affirms the universality of the religious habit. It may be said with confidence that in times of great emergency this habit asserts itself and grows strong despite adversity and the tragedies of life.

An English paper that comes to us weekly, broadly representative of the religious life of Britain and European countries, tells in stirring and eloquent language of the revival of religious practices, such as these countries have not experienced for a generation. Great misfortunes but accelerate the faith of these peoples. They are finding, even in the face of disaster and dire perils, a new consciousness and realization of the value of the devotional life. A recent statement expresses this in striking phrase. The writer says: "Above all, Britain has learned to pray. That wefrain sounds again and again. In the presence of adversity, she is learning to walk with the Lord. Her dross is being purged away that her gold may shine the brighter. She has lost much, but it is the loss of the smelting furnace. The Britain of grinding slums is rubble; but the Britain of Stephen Langton and Magna Carta is imperishable. The Britain of insular pride is no more. Britain has learned to pray and she stands today a greater nation than in all her great history. What though the Hood be lost while the spirit of Nelson destroyed while the spirit of Wren lives? What though Big Ben be silenced while there is a voice in Parliament to be heard around the world? What though men die if. their spirit lives?"

Are people thus minded to be defeated and their age-old work to suffer impairment? Does their resort to prayer betray weakness or is it the evidence of their affords a peace which is satisfying and strength? Will the cynic suggest that a nation that prays is lacking in the strong qualities that make for stability and endurance? Even so, it is such a people that can wait and wait in patience and confidence for the day of deliverance. We of America need to relearn the lessons that were taught us in days when we were less opulent and less prosperous. We, with our gonius and skill, can make ourselves the arsenal of our Allies, but is this all we are called upon, individually and collectively, to do? Are there no weak spots in our great state?

> in moral and spiritual strength? It is consistent at such a time as the present to make a just appraisal of the real values that must serve us if misfortune or adversity be our lot. To any casual observer of modern world trends it must be evident that something is lacking in our life. Must the tragedies of war or the misfortunes that now and again seriously affect our chosen way of life come before we shall be moved to recognize that righteousness is the strength and stay of the Nation. It was written of Christ tnat, "being in an agony, He prayed more earnestly," and in the Garden of Gethsemane on the night of His betraval He resorted with growing intensity to prayer until at length He was fortified for His great ordeal. A praving individual, a home sanctified by prayer, a nation that has found and followed the ways of a devotional practice, are armed with a power that all the conspiring forces of life cannot overthrow or defeat.

Making Paper From World's Tallest Trees

By Frederic J. Haskin.

The tallest, toughest forests in the world, the Tasmanian hardwood eucalypts, are being feiled to make newsprint. Until only a few months ago no one had ever made commercial paper from these hardwood trees, and with the conquest of this new material to meet man's insatiable and ever-increasing demand for the printed page another frontier vields to science and commerce.

Tasmania, the island south of Australia which is one of the six Australian states, contains the world's largest virgin forests of eucalyptus. When the first settlers pushed their way deeper into the great Australian bush there were millions of these huge tough trees, some more than 400 feet high.

Settlers, however, were not interested in forestry. They wanted cleared land, and when the trees were too large to fell, they ring-barked them, so that the towering giants died, leaving bleached Have these latter years seen us growing white skeletons to mark their folly. It was not until some of the best forests had been ring-barked or burned that a hardwood lumber industry grew up around the eucalypt. Now, a new industry, hardwood paper-milling, is turning out newsprint for Australian newspapers, and cellulose for war industry. It is the latest chapter in the intriguing story of paper that runs through the centuries from papyrus, grasses, silk, linen, cotton, straw and rags to the longrib red North American spruce.

It was only about 75 years ago that wood supplemented rags and straw as the source of pulp for newsprint. Merriton, now Interlaken, Mass., was the founding place, chemists using a European formula that had not yet won acceptance abroad. From that stemmed the vast wood-pulp and paper-making industry of this continent. Long-fibered, easily worked conifers were in such abundance throughout the Northern Hemisphere that it seemed they were inexhaustible for centuries to come, illusory as that idea has proved.

* * * *

But Europeans found the Australian bush a stranger to that abundance. Conifers are not native there. Instead, there abounds in all places some one or another of the nearly 500 types of eucalypt hardwood that shed their bark instead of leaf. These trees captivated scientists, none of whom has yet satisfactorily traced the history of the eucalypt. Saplings that shoot to 6 feet high in 18 or 24 months, the tallest-growing tree renewing its life in 40 years, upset all European forest traditions. California, Spain, France, Portugal, Madagascar. Brazil all now boast sizable growths of these gums, but of all their eucalypts the Australian is the mother.

Thirty-five years ago Auguste de Bavay, a Belgian industrial chemist in Australia and founder of the electro-New York building, killing more than lytic process of extracting zinc, proved in his laboratory that these hardway would make black paper. It has taken 35 years to learn how to turn it white. Paper technicians were too well satisfied with the abundant conifer to show much interest. Application of their regular chemical practices to eucalypt pulp gave poor results. In United States and Canadian mills Australian logs, treated the conifer way, yielded pulp too costly to bleach, and a paper bluishgray instead of white. Their newsprint had a blue-black stain akin to that which marks a steel axe or saw that cuts a green gum. Iron and tannin that make the tree tough puzzled the paper experts. The skepticism that developed around the use of hardwood pulp in the United States had several origins: The abundance of softwoods that produced a technical self-sufficiency, the difficulty of working the pulp by accepted methods and the poor yield from it in paper, and finally the fact that the Australian promoters of the idea had no real knowledge of the paper industry. But lack of knowledge of the paper industry left for them a field for exploration. So they continued to experiment. The Forests Products Laboratory, Madison, Wis., in the early 1920s, heard of the formula worked out for hardwood pulp by L. R. Benjamin of Australia. The laboratory brought eucalypts from Brazil and put them through tests in 1927, with encouraging results. The following year, co-operating with the New Zealand Forest Service, it utilized Ne-Zealand woods. American industrialists have since made some improvements on the Benjamin formula, adding the latest semi-chemical process and the use of the wood mill in beating pulp. This confirmed the tremendous discovery of the new source of pulp, the hitherto little-known hardwood, and opened for the whole world a new vista in cellulose reserves. Co-operatively, by trial and error, the peoples of the four Pacific nations, Australia, the United States, Canada and New Zealand, have had a hand in this technical exploration. * * * *

Sundays at Home

With a gasoline famine seemingly a reality, some thousands of Washington families are faced with the prospect of spending a series of Sundays at home. Such a change in the pattern of life which they customarily have followed may be regarded as a particularly offensive example of the horror of war, yet, considering the indubitable fact that the essential by-product of the petroleum industry no longer is permitted to be wasted, there is little to be gained by complaining.

The unexpected hardship, indeed, at last may come to be accepted as a blessing of a sort. A home, perhaps, is not an altogether intolerable place in which to rest during a weekend vacation from ordinary routine. The members of one's own family, possibly, may be worthy of closer acquaintance. Books which patiently have waited to be noticed are apt to justify the courtesy of reading. Pianos not touched in years may yield a music the sweeter for having been neglected. Old gardens, old games, old recreations of a dozen varieties, old friends, talk about old times, the revival of old memoriesmight not these "frozen assets" of an average life be helpful in a time when what is current is tragic and sad?

Of course, it was congenial in the times before Hitler to fill up the tank with liquid energy and speed away to Nowhere at sixty miles an hour. Months may pass before the public learns to appreciate exemption from the habit of tearing over hill and dale at a breakneck pace. Not to be obliged to negotiate the classic tortures of Sunday afternoon and evening traffic on the boulevards of Maryland and Virginia doubtless will be a species of agony to all those motorists who have educated themselves to the endurance of such selfinflicted pain. Noise, dust, irritated tempers, arguments, brushes with unsympathetic police-add to the listed aggravations together and the result is a savage sort of pleasure.

But the shortage of gasoline, more soberly considered, may decrease the toll of injury and sudden death which has characterized the highways of the Eastern States on Sun-

The vicious circle of revoit and repression which has made some of history's grimmest pages has clearly begun in France. Stirring from the paralysis of defeat, the French people are commencing to strike back at their oppressors, both foreign and native, by widespread sabotage, demonstrations, riots and, finally, assassination. The recent stabbing of a high German officer in the Paris subway was clearly a political murder. Others may follow. To combat this rising tide of unrest and incipient revolt, the German occupational authorities and the Vichy government are taking ruthless countermeasures. Wholesale arrests have occurred in both German-occupied and unoccupied France. The most drastic action occurred in Paris, where the French despite the Nazi attack upon Soviet police, under German direction, blocked off the entire Eleventh Arrondissement, a municipal subdivision corresponding to our city ward, and winnowed the whole population to catch suspects. This section is inhabited largely by radical-minded workingmen, and under the Third Republic was a Communist stronghold. Several thousand arrests were made in this gigantic police dragnet. The arrested persons are described officially as being native Communists or Jews mostly of foreign origin. This last accusation smacks of propaganda, because the Eleventh Arrondissement has never contained a large Jewish element. That the militant opposition is much more than Communist is shown by the fact that one of the men just executed under the new regulations was condemned for De Gaullist recruiting activity. The De Gaulle movement is essentially patriotic and conservative, with no Communist affiliations. Sensational charges are being made in the German-controlled Paris press. One paper reports the alleged uncovering of a world-wide revolutionary plot with American financial backing. The story implicates the Du Pont and Ford interests. The idea that those conservative industrial groups are financing a revolutionary conspiracy of world-wide scope certainly would amuse American readers. Equally fantastic is the charge that our imperturbable Ambassador to Vichy, Admiral Leahy, mixed "excitedly" in the affair. Those Paris journalists should brush up on their local color. They really could cook up something better than that. The German authorities have taken the extreme step of holding the arrested suspects as hostages, with the threat of random executions in numbers proportionate to the rank and importance of any Germans henceforth assassinated. Vichy has matized as "pressure, imperious and unjustifiable," which would not be tolerated.

Nothing could better attest the sincerity of President Camacho in his policy of Western Hemisphere solidarity against external dangers than this resolute squelching of a German attempt to make trouble between Mexico and the United States. It is doubly gratifying because pro-Axis and anti-American elements in Mexico continue to agitate. These elements are grouped mostly on the extreme right and the extreme left. Reactionary conservatives tend to be responsive to Nazi and Franco propaganda, while the Communistic wing of Mexican labor, headed by ultra-radical leaders. still assails "Yankee imperialism"

Russia. However, such agitations cannot get far under the most stable and popular administration which Mexico has had in many years. The friendship of the Camacho regime is, for the United States, a major asset in the Latin American situation. It certainly has shown itself to be proof against Axis intrigue.

Stretching a Point

Gilbert and Sullivan said, or rather sang, long ago that the policeman's lot was not a happy one. He must be tough enough, when he stops a soul-shattering blond weeping in an effort to avoid a traffic ticket, to go right ahead and pass it out. He must also be prepared at any time to absorb a bullet or a blow from a blackjack, and ask for more.

Usually he need absorb no blows prior to joining the force, but not always. The other day a would-be policeman, a trifle too short for the physical requirements, tried to make up for his lack of stature by an excess of brain power. As an approach to the problem, he allowed bees to sting him on the head to raise the bumps necessary to increase his height the required amount. These proving insufficient, he tried having a friend hit his head with a mallet. Sad to say, he missed by a millimeter. after acquiring a set of bumps which took no phrenologist to classify as denoting dogged determination. It does seem that even if he failed to stretch his height quite enough, the authorities might stretch a point and let him in.

Goering, having erred in his statement that not a single bomb would ever fall on the Reich, has reluctantly given up the notion of claiming that the present daily British donations are ping-pong balls.

Today, months later, the "arsenal" that was to be created is continuing to function in far lower than high gear. But that isn't the sad part of it. The "Grand Old Man" of the Senate-Senator George W. Norris of Nebraskanow in his thirty-ninth consecutive year of service in Congress, recently was 80 years of age. Attention of his colleagues was called to this fact by Representative John E. Rankin of Mississippi, who, on account of his single-track devotion to hydroelectrical development, is familiarly referred to as "Dynamo," "Kilowatt" or "Sparkplug." For years he has been a disciple of Senator Norris. Mr. Rankin said: "I have fought with him on the greatest economic issue confronting the American people-the power question. In his devotion to the masses of the American people, to the cause of the common man, he has been as consistent as the North Star, of whose true fixed quality there is no fellow in the firmament. His name will go down through the centuries for the service he has rendered to the power consumers of America." Senator Norris has served in House and Senate combined longer than any living member-since March 4 1902. He was the eleventh in a family of 12 children. His father died when he was a small child and his only brother was killed in the Civil War. He worked as a farmhand to earn his way through school and graduated from law school 58 years ago. He served 10 years in the House before coming to the Senate.

A saga of the Far Northwest was written into the Congressional Record by Representative Homer D. Angell of Oregon, a descendant of covered - wagon pioneers, who describes "the return of the musk oxen to Alaska" after an absence of more than 100 years. More than 11 years ago Congress appropriated $40,000 for work along this line. The musk ox is one of the most interesting mammals of the bleak Arctic, and in one of the most dramatic undertakings in big-game conservation, Mr. Angell points out, this herd was transplanted by boat and railroad more than 14,000 miles to become re-established in Alaska-the longest and most hazardous journey in the history of transplanting any mammals for restocking purposes.

It is this failure to train industry to wartime requirement, and it is this effort to center armament production in a few huge industries superimposed on regular industry, that gave the British supply minister his shock. The same failure will probably be found to lie back of the ing upon it.

Earlier in the summer Lt. Peary aboard the steamship Kite, had set sail from New York for Green-Greenland land on an exploring ex-Expedition pedition. With no radio in those days, nothing had been heard of him for some time, until the Kite returned, bearing bad news. The Star of August 24, 1891, reports: "The Arctic steamer Kite arrived (at St. John's, Newfoundland) vesterday with reports of interesting experiences in Greenland, which include a struggle of three weeks with bergs and floe ice in Melville Bay, during which period she made only 100 miles. Lt. Peary, his wife and five associates were landed in Mc-Cormick Bay, Murchison Sound. Whale Sound, his original destination, was frozen over and inaccessible by reason of ice islands and bergs.

"While in Melville Bay Peary broke his leg below the knee and he was landed from the Kite on a stretcher." The account explained that while the lieutenant was standing near the tiller, the ship hit an ice cake, causing the wheel to spin wildly and break one leg. Dr. Frederick Cook, who later was involved in a bitter controversy with Peary, set the break and announced that in three months Peary would be as well as ever.

Depletion of the timber reserves on the North American continent through expanding demands of industry has been an endless source of worry to the governments. Taking a lesson from this experience, smaller, more centralized countries have prohibited the destruction of a tree without permission and without the planting of a new tree in its place. Australia, New Zealand, Brazil, the Baltic countries, Russia, Canada and the United States still have the most limited silvicultural controls merely because abundance makes them unalert. Mainspring of movements for care of the woods, strangely enough, is found not in those who exploit timber reserves but in those who retain the feeling for the natural wonders of the forest.

Exploitation of softwoods in the United States is about four times their annual growth. In Canada it is at a rate not much less. Australia's largescale industrial conversion of the hardest woods into pulp for paper and other uses may set that country, too, upon a galloping consumption of reserves. The German strength pushed slowly but successfully against the Russian resistance last week, and today half of the Ukraine, about which Hitler has made hungry speeches in years past, belongs to the Nazis. Leningrad is menaced. Odessa is ready for besieging. The Germans and their allies have carried their invasion about 300 miles, with the Russian campaign now in its third month. The hyperbolic claims of the bombastic enemies put the German and the Russian losses during the first eight weeks of the war at 7,000,000 men-about the population of London. Yet the Russians give no sign of relaxing their resistance. This is a black hour for Russia, but Solomon A. Lovosky, the Soviet spokesman in Moscow, said:

"There is no alarm or pessimism in our ranks. Even Hitler and his advisers understand that the war in the east has only begun."

South of Russia the British made diplomatic demands on Iran, whose Shah was told that he must rid his country of the Germans there. The Iranian Minister in Washington announced that Iran would fight if invaded, after England was reported preparing a military march across Iran. President Roosevelt announced that the United States would inaugurate a South Atlantic ferry service to West Africa to get American supplies to the Middle East. Iran is the bridge between the Middle East and Russia. Leningrad, the Ukraine and Gomel are the key words in the Russian war last Fascist Junkers. In several days the week. From three directions the Finns anti-aircraft battery of Lt, Maleev deand the Germans moved toward Leningrad, the second city of Russia, whose defender, Gen. Klementi Voroshilov, exhorted the civilians to rise to their city's defense, as the citizens did in an earlier day in Madrid and Warsaw. South of Smolensk the Germans drove toward Gomel and captured it. Almost all the Ukraine west of the Dnieper River fell to the Nazis, including the naval base of Nikolaev on the Bug River. But | Odessa and Kiev, the two greatest Ukrainian cities, and several other "islands of population" are yet Russian. In the meantime Gen. Semeon Budyenny is conducting a difficult operation in getting his troops across the Dnieper to its eastern side. It is a river of few bridges -five or six between Kiev and the Black Bea.

The Germans captured Nikolaev a week ago today. It is their biggest prize of the war so far. Along with the base

Nikolaev Biggest Prize the Germans claimed the capture there of a battleship and other naval vessels, but Moscow said those ships had been destroyed, along with the floating docks. As part of the Russian strategy of keeping the armies cohesive and orderly, Gen. Budyenny began after the fall of Nikolaev to withdraw his troops across the Dnieper River. Near Nikolaev speedy German panzer units operating under Gen. stage, the Nazis took the three towns of Novgorod, Kingisepp and Narva. Narva has been regarded as an important Russian defense center on the land bridge between the Gulf of Finland and Lake Peipus. It is in Estonia. Kingisepp is in Russia proper. Those two towns were in the advance of the army from the west. Novgorod, where the Russians put up particularly stubborn resistance, is on the southern rim of the Red Armys' defense arc near Lake Ilmen, about 100 miles from Leningrad.

From the north last week the Finns drove down the Karelian Isthmus and succeeded in smashing, was Finland's own Mannerheim Line. The Finns have occupied the entire upper shore of the river Vuoksi on the Karelian Isthmus and claimed that five Soviet divisions had been routed. The Finns said the Russian divisions they had thrown back were the 115th, 142d, 168th, 198th and 265th.

On Thursday the Soviets threw reinforcements against the German drives on Leningrad. And within the city Gen. Voroshilov called on the people with an eloquent summons. "The enemy will never set foot in our city" (which Stalin himself defended in 1919), Gen. Voroshilov said. He sought in these words to arouse the citizens to work for Leningrad's defense:

Below the wide mouth of the Volga, sandwiched between the Black and Caspian Seas, lies Russia's Caucasus, homeland of Josef Stalin and one of the world's richest oil regions.

To feed Germany's great military juggernaut the 400,900 tons of oil a month it requires. Adolf Hitler has pointed one of his mightiest offensives at these three objectives. Should the Nazi war machine conquer the Caucasus alone, it would hold fields spouting close to 30 000,000 tons of oil a year, about 70 per cent of Russia's entire production.

ECCLES - THE DUAL - PERSONALITY SPENDER

Open-Handed in Depression, He Now Pinches Pennies

By Clarke Beach

Marriner S. Eccles, the man who is crying to discourage you from buying an automobile or refrigerator on an easyinstallment plan, is a thrifty Scotch banker, an advocate of high taxes and "hard money," and chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

He also has been the New Deal's archpump-primer, preacher of "deficit spend-Ing" doctrines, ardent "easy money" fan and foe of high taxes.

If that sounds paradoxical, it probably is no less astonishing to a lot of legislators on Capitol Hill, where diatribes against "Eccles-the-spendthrift" were almost a daily routine during the 305

Even the two Senators from Virginia have nothing to say these days against Eccles-the-pennypincher. Yet Carter Glass, father of the Federal Reserve System, has been outraged for years by Mr. Eccles' unorthodox banking principles; Harry F. Byrd, a Democratic leader of the economy bloc, used to launch his bitterest attacks against Mr. Eccles.

Denies Inconsistency.

Mr. Eccles, nevertheless, has not been converted, and he insists that he is not being inconsistent. It is simply in the creed of a deficit spender to sing the gay, lending-spending tune in a depression, and then to strike a somber note when everybody else is going delirious over a business boom.

Mr. Eccles for months has been urging ■ curb on the $10,000,000,000 consumer credit business, so it was no surprise when President Roosevelt decreed that it must be regulated and gave the job to the Federal Reserve Board, which, for all practical purposes, is Eccles. The other members could outvote him, but men on the inside say this seldom has happeneg.

The job of the credit czar is to say how large a down payment you must make, how long you can take to pay up and what terms you arrange with the seller. It applies mostly to "durable goods," such as automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines and vacuum cleaners.

The purpose is both to save for defense uses the materials which go into these products and to help prevent inflation.

The main cause of general price rises is the diminution of the supply of consumer goods at a time when the supply of purchasing power increases, the increase being caused by re-employment and rising wages curbing installment buying will ease the pressure of purchasing power by slowing down the rate at which money circulates and by preventing the creation of new money, which, in effect, is what happens whenever a bank makes a loan.

Not Glad-Hander Type. Mr. Eccles has been a spectacular figure in a spectacular decade; yet, as a personality, he would fade into the mixer. For the glad-handing that must be done around the office he depends heavily on Lawrence Clayton, his bulky, amiable chief assistant. But he has many close friends among administration leaders. They like his Maynard Keynes of England and Stuart Chase. But what he knows of their democratic, unassuming manner, and even some of his enemies say they admire his sincerity and his intense, tireless devotion to his cause.

He makes no effort to be a mystery man, like most central bankers. The travels of Birtain's Montagu Norman, for example, often were made incognito. and he shunned the common touch. Central bankers usually seem to find silence, austerity and aloofness a neces-

What he proposed was practically a blueprint for the New Deal. It startled Utah that Summer, when zard. Stuart Chase had been scheduled to lecture in Ogden and had been delayed because of the storm. Mr. Eccles filled in, and Mr. Chase arrived just in time to hear the closing portion of his speech. He was so impressed he insisted on giving Mr. Eccles a letter introducing him to Rexford Guy Tugwell, who was then in Washington helping to supply the administration with ideas and a staff.

About a month later a Senate committee was investigating the depression and Mr. Eccles volunteered to contribute his opinions. He expounded his deficitspending theory, which envisages the Government becoming a compensating agent in economic cycles, spending and lending heavily in bad times to create employment and expand credit, and in good times taxing and reducing expenditures to reduce Government debt and prevent excessive piling up of private income.

Nobody paid much attention to the nervous, dark-eyed, bettle-browed stranger. But he did go to see Mr. Tugwell and present his letter from Mr. Chase. Before long Mr. Eccles' star rose like a rocket.

In December, 1933, he was put in charge of the Civil Works Administration for Utah; in January, 1934, when he was 43, he was made assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau; in November, 1934, the President appointed him chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, remarking:

lobbies of the House of Commons are "They tell me he has had a string of banks for a long time and none of them has failed."

Eastern bankers, who had never heard of him, rushed to the newspaper files and to the record of the Senate hearing to learn what manner of man it was declare. who was to preside in the very temple of Government banking. What they read gave them a shock from which they didn't recover for years. leader.

Mr. Eccles became the administration's most articulate and outspoken champion of Government spending on public works. He sided with Harry Hopkins, Tom Corcoran, Harold Ickes and Henry Wallace to urge the President to spend more, when Mr. Morgenthau and Jesse Jones were saying that the budget should be balanced.

When he took over the spacious quarters in the rambling brownstone building that houses the Foreign Office, Britain had been humbled diplomatically, the Turks were wavering, Spain definitely was hostile, a move to organize the Balkans against Germany had failed in Rumania, Hungary and Bulgaria.

Eden resigned after 26 months in office because Prime Minister Chamberlain, who succeeded Baldwin, wished to open Anglo-Italian talks pointing toward a new agreement with Italy. Eden differed, as he had on many other points of foreign policy, and resigned.

Between that day and September 3. 1939, when Chamberlain brought him back to the cabinet as Dominions Secretary, Eden preached his gospel of collective security to Britain and the rest of Europe.

Saw War Coming.

He wrote a book. He spoke at political meetings in obscure north country towns. He was gloomy about the state of the world and said so.

"The world at best now enjoys no more than an easy respite between successive acts of violence," he said. This pessimism contrasted strangely with the sunny atmosphere in which Downing Street bathed.

Eden urged friendship with Russia and a military alliance. He discovered he had been in the trenches opposite Hitler during the World War, when he won a military cross, but he kept his further thoughts on this beguiling subject to himself.

Firmly convinced that war was coming, he rejoined his old formation, the King's Royal Rifle Corps, as a major. He was serving again as a soldier, going back to war which he had tried to prevent, when Chamberlain called him back to Whitehall.

When War Department Had 18 Employes

By John Clagett Proctor. Since the War Department has been given so much publicity recently, in connection with its proposed mammoth building to house 40,000 Federal workers, it might be interesting to know that when this department was moved to Washington in 1800 its entire force comprised only 18 employes, not including the Secretary. At this time the only avaffable building for this department resign their commissions was Col. Robert was a private dwelling that stood on E. Lee, who was sent for by Gen. Scott the south side of Pennsylvania avenue between Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets, which Secretary Dexter rented from Joseph Hodgson. It was a large, handsome, three-story brick dwelling, and was destroyed by fire on Saturday evening, November 8, 1800, having caught from the adjoining house . occupied by Jonathan Jackson, who it seems had died that very day, but whose body was removed to a place of safety. The loss, which included many valuable papers, relics and evidences of the Revolutionary War, was practically a complete one, only a few of the public records being saved, while the blackened walls were visible for many years thereafter, and frequently formed a point of direction, being referred to as "the Burned War Office."

From the beginning, the bulk of the records of this department was first stored in Lear's warehouse, a stone structure near the foot of Twenty-first street west, which was owned by Col. Tobias Lear, at one time private secretary to to wrestle with the haunting shadows Gen. Washington.

"Among the officers of the Army to and asked point-blank whether he intended to resign with those officers who proposed to take part with their respective States or to remain in the servfce of the Union. Col. Lee made no reply, whereupon 'Old Chapultepec' came directly to the point, saying. 'I suppose you will go with the rest. If you propose to resign, it is proper you should do so at once. Your present attitude is an equivocal one.' 'General.' Col. Lee then answered, 'the property belonging to my children, all that they possess, lies in Virginia. Lee, with a respectful bow, withdrew, and the next morning tendered his resignation, form its decision accordingly. which was accepted five days afterward."

News Important.

According to Hay and Nicolay: "From Scott's presence Lee seems to have retired to his home and family at Arlington of duty. Pregnant news came to him, New Style in Hats thick and fast. The secession of Virginia was verified in Washington that same evening. The next evening the 6th Massachusetts marched in mingled pride and sorrow to the Capitol, having made an immortal record of service to their country. Washington threatened, Sumter lost, the border States defiant, the Confederate States arming and uttering a half-official threat that the rebel flag should float over the Capitol by the 1st of May. "If the walls of Arlington heard secret or open conferences with conspirators from Washington or conspirators from Richmond, no record of them has come to light. But Saturday, April 20, Lee wrote to his old commander: 'General: Since my interview with you on the 18th instant I have felt that I sught not longer to retain my commission in the Army. I therefore tender my resignation, which I request you will recommend for acceptance. It would have been presented at once but for the struggle it has cost me to separate myself from a service to which I have devoted all the best years of my life and all the ability I possess. • • • Save in defense of my native State, I never desire again to draw my sword."" Many great men occupied the office of Secretary of War during the existence of the old War Department Building. These included, in order: John C. Calhoun, James Barbour, P. B. Porter, John H. Andrew T. McCormick, rector of Washington Parish, conducted divine services in the corridor of this building.

The War Department remained in this building until it was destroyed by the British in 1814, when it took up temporary quarters on the north side of F street near the corner of Fifteenth street.

The Rev. Mr. McCormick referred to died in this city on April 27, 1841, and the National Intelligencer carried an interesting and eulogistic item about him. the biographical part of which says:

"Mr. A. T. McCormick was a native of Ireland and came to this city in the year 1795-96. He was among the first to open a classical school and the very first to establish an Episcopal church in Washington. The building had been a barn on the land of Mr. D. Carroll, one of the original proprietors of the city, and by the individual and unaided exertions of this worthy and pious man it was converted into a humble but decent temple of Christian worship.

Jefferson at Church.

"The illustrious Jefferson was wont to attend divine service in the lowly chapel. He usually rode alone on horseback: his pew was handsomely cushioned and his prayer book was a French translation. Mr. Jefferson was much pleased with Mr. McCormick's reading, which he thought excellent. In this humble church he officiated till a larger and more commodious one of brick was erected near the Navy Nard in 1807, and continued its pastor till 1823, when he retired from its pastoral duties.

"Though unambitious of distinction. he endeavored to render himself useful to his fellow beings and to society. He was appointed several years ago by the board of trustees of the Easter Free School, established by the corporation of Washington, their president, and acted in that capacity till the period of his death to the satisfaction of the trustees and the corporation."

The permanent home of the War Department for many years stood on the southeast corner of Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue. It was begun in 1818 and removed in 1879 to make way for the present State, War and Navy Building. During the Mexican War it was naturally a very busy place, and during the Civil War was a 24-houra-day establishment.

Lincoln as Visitor.

Here President Lincoln was a frequent visitor upon tense occasions, when he would go there to be close to the telegraph office or to confer with Simon Cameron, his Secretary of War, and later, Edwin M. Stanton, who succeeded to this office. Upon a number of the President's visits to the War Department he was accompanied by his son Thomas, or "Tad." as he was affectionately called, a boy full of life and filled with boyish tricks just the same as any other boy.

Upon one occasion Tad amused himself dipping his fingers in the inkwells and smearing the telegraphers' desks. One telegrapher, upon reaching the limit of his patience, picked up Tad and carried him to the President, expecting that he would at least censure or chas-

Regarding this deplorable incident "An Old Stager," has this to say:

"On the arrival of the vessel at New York, Lt. Gansevoort, her executive officer, was dispatched to Washington, bearing a sealed report to the Secretary of the Navy. He reached there on Sunday, and his awful intelligence was not made public until the following day. The city was filled with startling rumors, and President Tyler, without mentioning the nature of the affair, intimated that something terrible would soon be revealed. A Consolidated official reported an Eastern designer already had scouted the aircraft headgear for possible new ideas. The bomber-builders wear an assortment of hats for safety's sake, not for style. The head-pieces are dramatic, however, and therefore probably acceptable for a prominent role in the spring style parade.

from Ontonagon, Lake, Superior. Its history, as told by Father Charlevoir. a Jesuit missionary, is interesting and thrilling. He says:

"In my first voyage to the country 1 had heard of the Manitou of the savages. which was of pure copper and used as a place of sacrifice. * * * I listened with horror to the circumstances that attended the sacrifice of a young female who had been taken prisoner during an excursion of a war party of the natives.

Fabricated Story.

"An expedition had been resolved upon, and they thus thought to insure success and the favor of their powerful Manitou. The young maiden was only 15 years old. After having a lodge appointed for her use, attendants to meet her every wish, carried wood to the rock on the preceding that surrounded her, and the great chief day, which she had helped gather in the forest

"Believing she was to be elevated to a high rank, her ideas being of the most pleasing character, the poor girl advanced to the altar with rapturous feelings of joy and timidity, which would naturally be raised in the bosom of a young female of her age. As the procession proceeded, which occupied some time, savage music accompanied them and chants invoking the intervention of their Manitou, that the Great Spirit would prosper their enterprise, so that, 'being excited by the music and dancing. the deceitful delusion under which she had been kept remained till the last moment. But as soon as they had reached the place of sacrifice, where nothing was to be seen but fires, torches and instruments of torture, her eyes shot an arrow into her heart, which was followed by the spears and arrows of his followers, which, after being turned and twisted in the wounds, were torn from her body in such a manner that it presented but one shapeless mass of human flesh, and the blood poured down the glistening sides of the rock in streams.

When the blood had ceased to flow. the high priest approached the body of the victim, and, to crown the horrible deed, tore out her heart, and after invoking the blessing of the bloody Manitou, devoured the bleeding flesh, amid the acclamations of the whole tribe. The mangled remains were then left to be destroyed by wild beasts. Their weapons were sprinkled with her blood to render them invincible, and all retired to their cabins, cheered and encouraged with the hope of a glorious victory."

Hawaiian School Grows Famous

By William H. Doherty.

With the end of summer vacation in written form. Other missionaries came. sight, the oldest American school west of the Rocky Mountains is getting ready to enter its second hundred years. Imagination probably pictures an institution in California to which the doughty Forty-Niners sent their sons and daughters. But not so. This school, which celebrated its centennial at the last commencement is Punahou and the location Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii. Started in 1841 as a one-story, thatchroofed building of adobe brick made on the grounds, with half a dozen students and three instructors, it now comprises a score of handsome buildings, with more than 1.200 students and 100 faculty members.

The school takes its name from the site, "Ka Puna Hou," which in the ancient Hawaiian tongue means "The New Spring." It is located in beautiful Manoa Valley amid stately palms and semitropic verdure. The 70-acre grounds are all but surrounded by one of nature's most extravagant floral displays, a great hedge of night-blooming cereus, one of the show spots of this mid-Pacific capital of beauty. Banyan, algaroba, monkeypod, poinciana, kamani and other trees shade the lawns kept green by

Doubtless some private schools launched by rich endowments have thrived from their opening day. But most have had to struggle hard, and owe their success to the unquenchable self-denial, courage and vision of a small group of leaders. Punahou is a good example of the latter type. More than once during the century it seemed the little institution would be forced to give up, but always a way was found to keep it going, first under the Hawaiian monarchy, then the republic, and for the last 40 years, since Hawaii came under

New England hymns to the children of the Pacific. Sons and daughters were born to the missionaries, who, steeped make the long voyage home by whaling vessels to enter school. Years frequently separated the missionary children and their parents, bringing great distress to both, and preventing that succession of missionary work by those who had devoted their lives to the effort.

> Chiefs and royalty of the islands were eager for instruction of their own children. So it came that the first petition by the missionaries to the Board of Foreign Missionaries in Boston begged for an appropriation to launch a school. By 1839 nothing had been done, principally because of the financial panic in America, but then the project received consideration, and the school was founded two years later with an initial appropriation of $2,000. The land had been given to the Rev. Hiram Bingham by the Hawalian chief Boki for school

They washed and mended their clothes when the field work was done, although early accounts state this was only "when seven stars appeared in the sky." Athletics Developed.

Athletics in all forms have displaced gardening and sewing as extra-curricular activities. Dancing of both ancient and modern hulas, in ti-leaf skirts and flower leis, is a unique side of Punahou life, which otherwise varies hardly at all from that of preparatory schools on the mainland United States,

Punahou's graduates are scattered far and wide. Prominent in Washington are Hiram Bingham, III, former United States Senator from Connecticut, and William R. Castle, jr., former Under-Secretary of State. Other "Pun" boys are Joseph R. Farrington, former Washington correspondent for the Philadelphia Public Ledger and now owner of the Honolulu Star Bulletin; Lorrin Thurston, owner of the Honolulu Advertiser, both well known here, and who. like the Castles and Binghams, are of families long resident in Hawaii. Most Punahou graduates enter college. Of last year's class, 113 entered 35 schools and colleges in 16 States, many of them attending the University of Hawaii. Notable, too, is the list of instructors and school presidents. Among these were the Rev. Cyrus T. Mills, who with his wife had been among missionaries in Ceylon before the Civil War. After serving as president of Punahou from 1860 to 1864, the Rev. Mr. Mills went to California to direct Benicia Seminary, the forerunner of Mills College. He was succeeded by the first graduate to head the school, William De Witt Alexander. Arthur F. Griffiths, 1902-22 and Arthur A. Hauck, 1922-29 were other noted heads. The present president is Dr. O. F. Shepard. Messages of congratulation to the school on its centennial were sent from leaders in many fields, including President Roosevelt and the Duke of Windsor, now Governor of the Bahamas, Punahou's history properly begins with the small band of New England missionaries who sailed around Cape Horn to Hawaii in the 1820s. By a curious coincidence, the Hawaiian Kings had given up their primitive religions, and led their people to break the tabus and leave their false gods, only a few years before the missionaries came. The people were ripe for religious instruction, purposes, and private donations built a small fund to operate it. First Faculty.

The sudden public interest in his rifle

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 23 .-John Garand's first notable experience with a rifle came when he and his brothers as young boys used to shoot pennies from between each other's fingers at 30 feet with a .22.

"That was tricky," he acknowledges with modest scientific detachment. "With such a small target, a little bit of air or variation in the powder could throw you off . . ."

In later years ne amazed spectators at Coney Island shooting galleries by hitting the bell on the swinging pendulum seven times on one swing-shooting from the hip! He got that skill by much practice: He vouchsafes casually that he once spent $100 in Coney Island shooting galleries in one day.

Obviously Garand, the man behind the U.S. Army's new rifle, is far from being, durable through unusually long and as he has been depicted on occasion, a plodding mechanic at the Springfield armory who suddenly came through with a bright idea.

Physically, he might fit the picture. He is of average build and average appearance, with the quiet shyness of the absorbed technician. Of French-Canadian birth, he has a shock of wavy black having to stop after every shot and click hair and the rugged high cheekbones and long jaw of the down-Easter. But "plodding mechanics" don't spend C-notes in shooting galleries, and behind Garand's neat, rimless glasses his eyes harbor a whimsical sparkle and his large, mobile mouth spreads into a happy grin when he talks of the unconventional items in his career. He once diverted himself with professional motorcycle racing and is probably the only man in the world who ever built an iceskating rink in his living room.

When Garand was 12, he went to work sweeping the floors in a cotton thread mill in Jewett City, Conn., where his family, farmers, had moved from near Montreal.

One day he saw 'a log-splitting machine at work, and, fascinated, determined to learn its principles so he could build one. The factory shop foreman was taking a correspondence course. so Garand followed suit, tackling steam engineering. He got into the factory machine shop and spent seven years there, learning forging, welding and plumbing.

Two of his brothers were running shooting galleries in nearby amusement parks and Garand spent most of his spare time popping away at the ducks and clay pipes.

When he moved on to machine shops in Providence, R. I., he took up motor cycle racing for relaxation, became a local champion and developed a newprinciple internal combustion engine which achieved the remarkable rate of 7.000 revolutions a minute. He still hopes to do something with it.

While he was working in tool and gauge shops in New York as the World War came on, his vocation and his hobby of guns merged. He sent to the Naval Board in Washington a design for a new light machine gun. The experts were so about the size of the Arizona meteor. Government-owned forest.

But, after all, why the balanced ration? Mother can tell you. It is to make the children strong and tough, and as she naively puts it, to "build up their resistance."

Why in the world she wants it built up no man can understand. From a purely commonsense masculine viewpoint it is the last thing they need. D. C. Maps Works Program For Post-War Period

Projects Costing $18,000,000 Planned As Defense Backlog to Take Up Slack; Many Schools Included

By JOHN H. CASSADY, Jr.

A huge "post emergency" public works program, contemplating the expenditure of millions of dollars in the District for projects such as highway construction, schools, hospital additions, water and sewage expansion and others, has been drawn up by District government officials as a backlog of jobs to be undertaken after defense activities decline.

Although only tentative in form, the list of projects included in the District's reserve program calls for expenditure of about $18,000,000, it was learned yesterday. Many improvements sought by civic groups would be made possible under the program. 🔅 more than a score of the projects included in the original plan for building up a backlog were recommended by the District to be carried out under the Lanham Act, which appropriated $150,000,000 to the Federal Works Agency for public works projects deemed important to the defense effort. These local projects would cost about $6.000,000.

Since the District is prohibited by law from incurring any indebtedness, city officials had to request Congress to be allowed to participate in the works program provided by the Lanham Act. Congress has not yet authorized this.

Board of Trade Speeds Plans For Active Winter Season

Committees to Start Work Month Earlier Than Usual, Beginning After Labor Day

The Washington Board of Trade, anticipating its busiest winter season in many years as a result of the city's rapid expansion under the impetus of the defense program, is making preparations to tackle an unprecedented number of important civic problems.

With every phase of local activity striving to find its proper place in the defense effort, officers of the board are planning to start the season's committee work shortly after Labor Day. This will be a full month earlier than is usual in normal times.

The annual "activities conference," in which all officers, directors and committee chairmen participate, already has been held, and President Fred A. Smith expects to 4 meet with his six committee supervisors within the next two weeks. The supervisors, in turn, soon will confer with the committee chairmen serving under their direction to out-line a detailed program for the year. For several weeks, the administrative staff of the board has been perfecting details necessary for the smooth functioning of the organization's 28 committees. William H. Press, executive secretary, is directing the job of overhauling the mato carry the nearly 4,000 chinery members through a busy season. The task involves the collecting and digesting of statistical data needed for prompt and intelligent action. Before the end of the year the board expects to have the largest membership in its 52-year history. It has established something of a record among similar organizations by having more than 2,200 of its members actively particiating in committee functions. Thornton W. Owen heads the Membership Com-

Mr. Xanten, who is chairman of the Street Cleaning Committee of the American Public Works Association, said he thought the refuse division work "is one of the biggest headaches in any municipal job." But Mr. Xanten, who has been with the division for 18 years, appears to enjoy the "headache."

"I am very interested in the work," he declared. "and the morale of the division is fine." The City of Washington; he pointed out, has a number of special problems. There is, for instance, the problem of trying to clean or plow the snow off streets

As a military and naval base, it is the first line of defense for Singapore. But it must be reiterated that this colony is no mere outpost whose object is to carry out a delaying action. The British mean to make a major stand here. If any enemy attacks Hong Kong he will have to pay a stiff price.

intelligence services undoubtedly know that there are units stationed here bearing the names of some of Britain's most renowned regiments. The Nipponese run the risk, however, of completely misunderstanding the British determination to resist attack. If Tokio could understand the spirit of Hong Kong, from the Governor down to the humble young men and women in the A. R. P., it might save Japan a costly blunder.

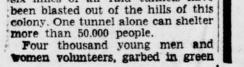

secret to report that the British are doing everything possible to make this colony impregnable. The defenders have the advantage of being able to plan their defense minutely. Every foot of ground has been carefully surveyed by military engineers. Every conceivable method of attack has been studied and means have been devised to meet it All the experience in coast defense of the British Isles is at the disposal of the Hong Kong authorities. This island, which boasts the classic beauty of Italy and Greece has the rugged terrain of Scotland Its granite mountains are a powerful asset to the defenders. Artillery emplacements and air raid shelters extend deep into solid rock. In some respects the fortifications here have the natural strength of Gibraltar.

a beach. There were barbed wire entanglements along the water's edge. But again the writer failed to perceive the serious military preparations. It was not until he was led into a camouflaged fortifications system that he saw the alert, tough fighting men from India who are guarding this sector day and night.

Everywhere the writer turned he found patroled by watchful men from various parts of Britain's far-flung empire. Heavy artillery, antiaircraft batteries, pillboxes, traps for invaders, mine fields, navy and air patrols, the volunteer corps, antisabotage contingents. anti-fifth column workers and the A. R. P .all these are parts of the powerful defense system which John Bull has built here to protect his lifeline. But just as important, perhaps as the physical means of defense is the strong morale of the garrison, the authorities and the civilian population. Nothing could have demonstrated civilian morale more clearly than the blackout last night In this hot, humid weather it is an elmost insuperable task to enforce strict blackout regulations, especially in the crowded native quarters of the city and on the hundreds of junks and sampans along the water front Yet it was done.

Present System of Control Established By Congress in 1916

The National Parks Service will observe the 25th anniversary of passage of legislation which created it as a bureau of the Department of the Interior, in a Nation-wide celebration which begins comorrow and will continue through the week.

In 1916 there were 37 parks and monuments but no Federal agency responsible for their administration. A lot of folks did not like this and said so.

Included in the objectors was Stephen Tyng Mather, a wealthy lover of nature from California. He wrote to his friend Franklin K. Lane, then Secretary of the Interior under President Wilson, complaining about the lack of attention given the parks.

"Dear Steve." Secretary Lane wrote back: "If you don't like the way the parks are being run, come down and run them yourself."

Mr. Mather did just that and when Congress created the National Park Service, he became its first director. Silver jubilee ceremonies will be observed in the parks and reservations throughout the Nation this week. The climax will be held at a birthday party during the weekly campfire program of the National Capital Parks in Rock Creek Park Friday night. Newton B. Drury, director of the service, will be the speaker.

The national parks idea originated on September 19, 1870, when a party of explorers in the Washburn - Langford - Doane expedition were gathered around a campfire in Northwest Wyoming. Impressed with the vast commercial wealth they had seen, they conjured visions in the smouldering embers when one of their number advanced the idea, which by all good judgment of their times, should have been received with ridicule.

This man, Cornelius Hedges, a Montana lawyer, proposed that the expedition members waive all personel claim to the natural treasurers they had seen, and seek to set them apart for the enjoyment of all the people. The idea was not ridiculed and the area was set aside as Yellowstone National Park. From that day until this, during which time the National Parks Service was created, the number of areas has increased to 164.

Outdoor Concerts Mark Waning Season as Gayest In Capital in Recent Years

Colombian Embassy Statf To Entertain Senor Ramirez After Recital September 5

By KATHARINE BROOKS.

The rapidly waning summer season, which has been quite the gayest in the Nation's Capital since the years before this country's entry into the World War, will be marked in history as a summer of outstanding music events. Since there have been public parks and service bands there have been concerts in the open several times a week through the summer, and these concerts continue indoors at the various service posts through the winter. This year the season at the Water Gate has been extended and more elaborate than in other years with opera and ballet following the customary Sunset Symphony concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the orchestra, is eredited with the vision of the value of music at the Water Gate, a vision which became a reality at the first concert. The most recent addition to the series of summer music events were the chamber music programs given in Meridian Hill Park, used for this purpose for the first time this year.

Pan-American Union Pioneers In Outdoor Concerts

Another pioneer in outdoor concerts for summer residents in the Capital is the Pan-American Union. Through the untiring efforts of the late Dr. Franklin P. Adams, for some year counselor of the Union, a series of concerts was arranged each year of music of the Americas presented by the service bands with prominent artists from our sister republics as soloists. These concerts, for which the Director General and

Season's First Debut Set Miss Mary McIntosh Brookings To Make Bow September 13

Probably the first debutante of the fall season will be Miss Mary McIntosh Brookings. Her parents, Maj. and Mrs. Walter Du Bois Brookings, have set Saturday, September 13, as the date on which they will give where Mrs. Biddle went after a few the tea to introduce their daughter to society. The party will be held days' stay in New York, and Mr. from 4 to 7 o'clock at Menokin, the Brookings' home on Seminary Hill, in Biddle joined her after a brief trip Alexandria, Va.

Menokin is a pleasant setting for such a party. It was built by Cassius Lee, a cousin of Gen. Robert E. Lee, in 1850 as a summer home. The debut tea will be held both indoors, where the lovely drawing room will be used for dancing, and out in the garden, where much of the entertainment will take place.

Miss Brookings, who was graduated from Madeira School last year, will leave the day after her debut for South Hadley, Mass., where she will enter Mount Holyoke College. On the basis of her college board entrance examinations, she has been awarded the Southern regional competitive

Miss Gertrude L. Mann Becomes the Bride of Mr. George Lee Millikan

Debutante Here Last Year Wed in Colorful Rite on University Campus

Weddings-in the Capital and in distant parts-are more numerous this summer than for many a long year, and again this week end there are many of interest to residents of Washington and nearby sections. One, in the chapel of the University of Vermont, holds much of society's attention here. Evergreens and pale pink gladioluses decorated the chapel at Burlington for the wedding yesterday of Miss Gertrude Louise Mann, one of Washington's debutantes of last winter, and Mr. George Lee Millikan of Burlington.

An elaborate program of organ music by Grieg, Tschaikowsky, Schubert and Bach, and also selections sung by Mr. T. K. Malone, jr., of Burlington, preceded the marriage processional for the 4 o'clock ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. P. C. Ladd, pastor of the College Street Congregational Church of Burlington.

The bride is the daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. James B. Mann, formerly of Washington and now stationed at La Garde Hospital in New Orleans, and was presented to society by her parents at a lovely tea dance last December 21, which was given in the Army Medical Center.

Bride's Gown Is Shade Of Dusty Pink Silk.

Col. Mann escorted his daughter to the altar yesterday and gave her in marriage. She wore a gown of dusty pink silk organza appliqued with self-motifs and made with a draped bodice, long, full sleeves and bouffant skirt. Her three-quarter * length veil was of dusty pink tulle held by a crown of natural pink flowers and she carried a shower bouquet of rubrum lilies and orchids. Miss Anne Hale Bottomley of Burlington was maid of honor for the bride, and she was gowned in pale pink mousseline de soie with inserts of lace at the waist and on the skirt. She carried a bouquet of lavendar asters and wore a small cap made of the same flowers.

The bridesmaids were Miss Audrey Mann and Miss Barbara Mann, sisters of the bride; Miss Frances Scott Simmons of Washington and Miss Elaine Murray of New York. They were costumed in pink mousseline de soie made like the dress of the maid of honor and their caps and bouquets were of pastel shades of pink, rose and lavender asters. The bridegroom, who is the son of Mr. E. C. Millikan of Huntington Park, Calif., and the late Mrs. Milli-

Young British War Worker Here Marvels at Abundance of Food in America

By ROBERT CRAWFORD.

A spot of tea and a beautiful 6-foot English girl in her teens, over here helping with British war work, were forceful reminders of the courage and optimism of the youth of England. She was asked what impressed her most when she landed in America a few months ago and she said it was the enormous amount of food she saw everywhere and many dishes that she had forgotten ever existed. But the poor people and the working people of England, she said, still have their tea. She goes to her office at half after 9 and works until 8 or half after in the evening-but says she is always sure of a jolly good dinner when she is through table during the past few monthsthanks to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina-is a copy of Fowler's Modern English Usage, which Prime Minister Churchill, speaking in Parliament, described as a book "which every one should study." A comment made at the time was that it was a piece of advice which, to judge from the high quality of his own literary style, he has not neglected to take himself. One might almost say Mr. Churchill is a self-educated man, as he did not go through the university; Latin was a stumbling block to him, and Greek was just out of the question. Yet his prose is almost perfect, often with a certain rhythmic quality which fascinates one.

Two beautifully illustrated books, "This Realm. This England," and Alice Durer Miller's "I Have Loved England," for years to come will be living memories to thousands of Americans who loved the peaceful English countryside, the glory of the great cathedrals, the historic cas-tles and the quaint old streets of London and the buildings once frequented by the great of London, including Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Samuel Johnson, the pompous Mr. Pepys and the gay royalties and macaronies of the earlier centuries.

While "This Realm, This England" is illustrated by more than 200 etchings, dry points and some photographs, Mrs. Miller's book, illusenriched by lines from the English noets.

But there are several recent acquisitions of which the gallery is very proud-a bowl of 14th Century Kashan pottery painted in gold luster; a gift or honorable piece with appropriate inscription; a globular hand warmer consisting of two hemispheres with a fire pot hanging in gimbals-quite unlike those in use in the later centuries. A particularly beautiful thing is this brass "chafing ball," marvelously cut and inlaid with silver in minute designs. There are also several small articles in iron and brass showing the wonderful crafsmanship used by Persians and Egyptians in decorating the homeliest household kitchen utensils.

In Capital Letters My Dear:

As it nears the end of August, the exodus continues here in Washington. This week Frances and Metcalf Walling and their little boy left for a visit in Sakonnet to get a whiff of salt air. All the same, it must have been hard for them to tear themselves away from Washington now that their house is actually being built. They have been hovering over it and taking pictures of its progress up until now.

Ted Dominick, who is the architect for their house, is also getting some vacation. He and Betty are visiting Ted's sister and some other friends up in Connecticut. They will be back in about 10 days, though, and so will the Wallings.

I bet you will find a lot of Washingtonians on Long Island over the Labor Day week end. I know that Serita and Creighton Peet will be there, over in Oyster Bay. Serita used to live there, you know.

Boston's famous old "North Shore" will have its share of Washington representatives, too. Eleanor Reilly is up there in Swampscott with her baby and her parents. Gerry hopes to get up there for awhile, but his job as solicitor general of the Labor Department keeps him pretty busy.

Jane, Mary and Dave Acheson will also be on the North Shore for their vacation. They will be in Manchester with their parents, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Acheson.

But, anyhow, for us homebodies there still is a lot going on. Happy and Julian Colquitt had a party Thursday, taking a group of us to the Roadside Theater and then on to the club afterward. It was a lot of fun. Anne Heard is back in town after her peregrinations and was among the guests of the Colquitts. She says she had a marvelous time-and it is nice to have her back here again.

Then last night (Friday) there was the spinsters' dance in Leesburg. That is quite an institution now; do you know about it? Some of the most attractive and un-spinster-y girls you can imagine get together each year to give this dance. It draws young people from Washington and most of Northern Virginia, Middleburg, etc. This year it was patterned on the Sadie Hawkins day of the funny papers, which allowed plenty of scope for an imaginative and gay affair. The invitations were in poetry (?) and decorated by the most artistic (?) drawings of the characters we were to portray! Following directions the boys dressed like Little Abner and the girls looked fetching (though rather informal, shall we say?) in their Sadie Hawkins attire. The Pickens girls were there and the three Rusts, Eleanor, Jane and Mary. Lalla Harrison was one of the hostesses, who comes to Washington parties especially often. Letitia Knox was another hostess. She is, as you know, Dr. Brown's niece and one of Washington's most popular girls. The Little Abners were much more fortunate in their selections of girls than those portrayed on the invitations or in the comic strip!

Tonight Larry Ludkins and Harry Smith are having a party. They are taking a few of us to dinner at L'Escargot. We'll probably poke out noses into Chevy sooner or later-just from sheer force of habit, if nothing else."

Next week looks quiet here, with so many people away over Labor Day, but parties are already being planned for the following week end. Ed and Ellen Parry are planning a most unusual occasion for Friday evening, September 5, at their place, Cricket Hill, on the Donald Downs property in nearby Virginia. Even their invitations are unusual, coming in the form of printed announcements from the "Cricket Hill Art Gal-Mr. Samuel Riggs, 4th, left early leries" of a "special exhibit of living reproductions of famous paintings in in the week to join Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hyde of Sandy Spring at the serious, modernistic, futuristic, or just plain humorous style ... New Girls' Club Attracts 100 as Charter Members

Sponsors of Georgetown Branch Optimistic Over Response And Financial Program

About 100 charter members already are registered with the Georgetown Branch of the new Girls' Club of Washington and a number of these always are on hand when the doors are open in the afternoon and evening

That is the response of the girls themselves to the move of a group of civic-minded men and women to provide a girls' recreation center similar to the program offered by the Boys' Club of Washington.

Financially, too, the outlook is encouraging. Roy Klomparens, president of the Board of Directors, estimates that the first money-raising project of the sponsors-a moonlight cruise on the Botomac last Tuesdayprobably would net about $300 for the organization.

All in all, sponsors of the club, which opened its doors less than four weeks ago, have reason to feel optimistic over their venture in establishing what seems to be something unique in the field of recreation for girls. So far as the director, Mrs. Victor Rotnem, can learn, nothing like the club has been undertaken anywhere, though many organizations have special programs for girls.

Attractive Furnishings Needed for Quarters.

Each step in the establishment of the club is being taken with caution, but one of the plans under consideration is the provision of attractive furnishings for the quarters which are located in an annex to the Curtis School.

A piano has been donated but another could be used, and the room needs lounge chairs, sofas, lamps and other pieces. A radio and phonograph also have been obtained and art students at Western High School will decorate the room, which is 46 by 24 feet, as a project this fall

With a ping pong table and other games now available, the girls so far have not felt the need of more elaborate equipment. Such neighborhood facilities as the tennis courts in Montrose Park and the Georgetown swimming pool are being utilized in the summer program and craft classes, square dances, music and dramatic groups, tumbling classes and the like offer a schedule designed to suit many tastes.

Mrs. Rotnem has the assistance of Mrs. Camille Craig and Miss Mary Pence in supervising general activities, while those directing special activities include Miss Josephine Fulcher, in charge of a music group, and Caleb O'Conner, in charge of dramatics

The clubs will have their own officers and will plan activities of their own choosing under the direction of club leaders. Supper Party Planned For Georgetown Lions.

A supper party for the Georgetown Lions' Club-one of the sponsoring groups—is planned for Sep-tember 9, with the girls already working on a dramatic skit and musical feature. Members of the Elks Club Boys' Band also will be entertained soon in return for their courtesy in furnishing music for the recent cruise.

The Georgetown Neighborhood Council, as well as the Lions' Club, is sponsoring the club, while the Board of Education and the Community Center and playground department also are co-operating. The hope is that similar clubs will be established in other sections.

Practically all the banks in Washington have handled small personal loans for several years. Auto Loans Reasonable.

Officials said yesterday that they considered a third as a down payment on automobiles, with 18 months as the life of the loan, as reasonable. This is about what Washington banks handling such loans have been doing, longer terms for such loans not being considered very good banking practice.

The barks do not make direct loans on furniture, but loan a good deal of money to furniture dealers for the conduct of their business. Should furniture sales be considerably curtailed, these merchants naturally would not borrow nearly as much money from the banks, one official pointed out. Just what the oredit restrictions will mean to the banks cannot be forecast, he added.

Officials said the rules should be

Drive to Spread Defense Work Intensified

Outcome to Determine Business Trends in Next Few Months

By FRANK MACMILLEN,

Associated Press Business Writer NEW YORK, Aug. 23 .- The trend of business for the next several months, a number of industrial analysts agree, will depend in considerable measure upon the success obtained in spreading defense work. With enormous sectors of heavy industry, such as steel, already working at capacity, and other large sectors, such as automobiles and consumers' durable goods, generally threatened with shortages of materials, further gains in aggregate production and employment, these experts say, require a wider distribution of defense contracts.

It appears, therefore, that the work of O. P. M.'s defense contract service, fortified with new procedure recently worked out with the Army and Navy, will be vitally important in successfully keeping the wheels of industry whirling Plans Close Co-operation.

As this procedure is expected to develop, the contract service will work closely with the Army and Navy and will know of all important contracts in the negotiation stage, instead of after they have been awarded. Also, the service will be empowered to recommend a whole series of steps designed to facilitate spreading the work, such as elimination of clauses from contracts which would be onerous to small manufacturers and reimbursement of big contractors for higher costs incurred in sub-contracting. In the early phases of the defense effort, with concentration on quick results and known performance, the Army and the Navy supply work went primarily to big concerns that had facilities and experience. A survey of all defense supply contracts let up to May 31 showed three-quarters had gone to only 56 concerns. Now not only are big concerns swamped with more business than they can handle but many areas are threatened with shutdowns and layoffs because materials will not be available for production of Incidentally, it was predicted here vesterday that there may be a lively demand for small loans during the next six business days, after which the new rules go into effect. Institute Chairman Named.

By the Associated Press NEW YORK. Aug. 23 .- Copper circles today reported their market working smoothly under complete priority control after a week of adjustment

These sources said producers felt that under priorities, the Office of Production Management bore the responsibility when defense customers failed to get the metal they wanted. Early in the week it became apparent that August copper was fully the allocated, leaving some certified consumers short. Metals Reserve Corp. was reported to have released some tonnage. Copper scrap price worried some custom smelters, who were afraid their supplies might dwindle. Other than that, the price picture was unchanged, with domestic copper at 12 cents a pound and some export business at 11 cents, F. A. S. New York. Lead and zinc prices, more or less fixed by Federal order, were unchanged. Prime Western zinc was 7.25 cents a pound at East St. Louis.

Lead was 5.85 to 5.90 cents a pound, July lead statistics placed stocks Spot middling, 16.94 16.9 New York, and 5.70 cents, St. Louis. at the end of the month at under 20,000 tons, lowest since the defense program started. Domestic shipments for July were 54,067 tons, the American Bureau of Metal Statistics reported. The trade estimated another 22.000 tons went to consumers, mostly from Metals Reserve Corp. Stockpiles demand for lead continued to outrun supply.

In steel, a pinch also was felt. Railroads with an "A-3" priority rating for freight car and locomotive material, complained they notes, weren't getting enough for rolling stock or for rails

The very pressure for speed militated against it. The big concerns to rally. At the same time, the trade activity, which was on a re- small concerns were reluctant to duced scale compared with a week take sub-contract jobs and incur the expense of adapting their plants to them without assurance that there would be substantial repeat orders.

Under the new procedure of the defense contract service, it may actually bring sharp pressure upon big concerns henceforth to bring about sub-contracting. It may recommend withholding of priority orders permitting the big concerns to get machinery and equipment unless these concerns can establish the fact they cannot get along by dividing up their work with other

Traders said failure of the mea-Spreading the work seems likely sure to become law would mean that of course, to increase the cost to the Government stocks acquired as Government and the taxpaver but result of default on 1940 loans, which it also should, from now on, speed were made on a basis of about 34 up the defense effort and avoid a cents below 1941 loan rates and 30 cents below current spot market big intangible social cost to the country by preventing unemployprices, could be disposed of whenever officials considered it necessary to ment in areas where normal activity meet demand or to restrain poswill be curtailed.

It appears now, say a number of business men, that in the beginning few of the country's 185,000 manufacturers had any idea of how to get defense contracts and Washington did not have much idea of how to get the business to them. Little consideration was given to the fact that many of these concerns might be closed down if they did not get defense business and much work went into getting big, well-known concerns to build new plants, to build and tool up a brand-new defense industry.

Defense Clinics Tried.

You can get a host of stories among small business men of their totaled unsatisfactory experiences in trying to get defense business. Some say they traveled thousands of miles and got a "run-around." Others employed agents and go-betweens who either produced nothing or demanded large commissions. Now things are really moving in bringing big and little manufacturers together. Defense "clinics" have been tried in some cities. The recent one in New York brought together 55 prime contractors and more than 1,000 representatives of concerns seeking contracts.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23 -- Some corporate bonds worked unevenly higher today in quiet trading. The close found some issues notably among industrials, as much as a point ahead, but fractional declines in the less popular classifications held averages generally to an unchanged level.

Transactions totaled $2,207,600. face value, compared with $1,751,200 last Saturday, the smallest short ression trade in almost three months. United States Governments attracted few customers, either in the stock exchange or over the counter. In the dealer market, prices were unchanged and quotations on the stock exchange varied only enough to come into line.

Among the more active gainers were Abitibi Power 5s at 55%, Commercial Mackay incomes with warrant at 5814. Southern Pacific 41/2s of '69 at 5134, Western Union 5s at 851/4, International Telephone 5s at 441/2 and Republic Steel 41/2s of '61 at 1041/2.

On the downside were such issues as New York Central 5s at 591/2. Nickel Plate 412s at 6134. Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s at 5334 and American & Foreign Power 5s at 61. In the foreign government dollar loan list, gains were marked up for issues of Argentina, Australia, Cuba and Uruguay. Losses were recorded for bonds of Germany, Norway and Poland.

Some young Leghorns reached the market that were of a quality com-manding a slight premium over the other stock in this class. Young Rocks, crosses and Reds, old Rocks, mixed colors and Leghorns, roosters and ducks are on about the same level as last week's close. Most young Rocks brought 20a22, but a few sold a little above this price. Crosses continued 19a21 with a few larger birds commanding a little more. Young Reds brought 19a21, with very large selling 22. Although most young Leghorns moved out at 17a18, few were noted bringing 19.

few were noted bringing 19. In fowl, Rocks sold mostly 22 with few bringing 23, and mixed colors brought 20a22. A few heavy old Leghorns sold 18 but most stock moved out at 15a17. Illinois Iowa, with principal offices at Decatur, Ill., is an operating company and a sub-holding company in the billion-dollar North American Co. system. Its subsidiaries cited in the order are Des Moines Electric Light Co., and Iowa Power and Light Co., both with headquarters at Des Moines, and Central Terminal Co., and Illinois Terminal Railroad of St. Louis.

Illinois Iowa is a subsidiary of Illinois Traction Co., a subsidiary of North American Light and Power Co., a subsidiary of North American. The holding company act prohibits, through the so-called "greatgrandfather clause," the imposition of more than two parents on top of an operating company. The order was the first corporate simplification proceeding instituted against a subholding company in the North American system, against which a geographic integration proceeding is pending before the commission.

A PLAY IN THE MAKING-Herewith are several scenes having to do with the production details of "The Wookey," the new play by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, which opens the National's season tomorrow night. The play's director, Robert Sinclair, and Scenic Designer Jo Meilziner (left) inspect one of the sets, a bit of London bomb wreckage; Edmund Gwenn, the star, and Heather Angel discuss the script with Producer Edgar Selwyn (center); Henry Mowbray and Olive Reeves-Smith rehearse a scene (below). HOLLYWOOD. Going to seem rather strange this fall, especially to fans of 40 and over, to look up at theater marguees and see the name of Gloria Swanson flashing on and off in the bright bulbs.

But Gloria, the one-time great, is back in the celluloid limelight agai the top-billed star of a modern picture. And, what's more, the svelte Swanson is only the forerunner of a veritable parade of old-timers headed toward fall and winter screens. Not in background or bit roles, either These come-backers at last are to be given a real chance to show their stuff.

Junior Star—Art—Books

Dogs

By Jay Carmody.

Every writer has his favorite trick to avoid or delay starting the next sentence. Or of stopping in the middle of the one he is writing. One gets up for a drink of water. Another likes to listen to mocking birds on the theory it is fine for the soul. A third thinks the thing that is keeping him from being great is the height of his chair and spends 23-24ths of his time seeking the hairline adjustment.

Talking to him a few minutes, you would guess that Frederick Hazlitt Brennan's device is trying to keep a cigar stub lighted. Maybe it isn't, but you would be crazy to guess otherwise.

Brennan, a latently rotund man who looks no more like a playwright than any other playwright (who started the cockeyed idea that a playwright should?) is the author of "The Wookey," which opens the National's, season, and its own career, tomorrow night. When he talks, he keeps the cigar in his mouth or his right hand and a book of matches in his left. He acts as if it were the last-and most recalcitrant-cigar in the world. He gives it a fine battle down to the last match. Then he throws it away, reaches for a fresh one and lights that.

Still the Author Manages To Write in Many Forms.

The system obviously has infinite possibilities, much greater than the drink-of-water method, but Mr. Brennan manages to get a lot of thoughts on paper. They take various forms, articles, criticism, essays, books, short stories, plays and screen dramas. He does not believe in becoming grooved. It might be more profitable to type yourself as a writer but he is the type who thinks of money not in terms of dollars and cents but in amounts that are "modest" or "obscene." That makes him a free man. He likes to be free.

As a playwright-he hopes "The Wookey" will make him an ex-Are Cinema unsuccessful one-he is just an old newspaperman trying a new medium. The principle is the same. He has a story to tell, as dramatically as possible, nothing more.

"The Wookey," which looks positively mammoth in backstage view at Actresses the National, is only huge in a production way. It is about little people. Mr. Brennan likes little people and the plain ones. The fancy ones give him an unmentionable anatomical pain. In writing it, Mr. Brennan showed himself to be a fellow with a nice indifference to current theories of play writing. One is that you must be comic. He got as much comedy as possible, without straining, into his drama. Its theme, however, is that of the little people of London and their resistance to German barbarity. It is essentially tragic and the playwright makes no pretense to the contrary.

The other theory is that plays should not be topical, that the war theme should be avoided

Mr. Brennan just thought nuts to that and went ahead with his writing. Although Its Locale Is War

"The Wookey" Began Long Ago.

He thinks other playwrights, new and old, should do the same thing, If you have a good enough story to tell, tell it in the story's own way. It sounds like good sense.

"The Wookey," in case you would like to know how plays called "The At first he found the place very Wookey" start, or how a dramatist like Mr. Brennan works, is a composite exciting, with all its glitter and gloss. of many things. It is about the war, as we seem to keep on saying from He was only a would-be actor, but paragraph to paragraph, but it began many years ago. Playwright Hopes His Drama Is Worthy of People In It.

Mr. Brennan hopes the play is worthy of its people; hopes it with he also is the only one who can't aters regardless of worry over the that sincere humility which only writers, of all persons, ever seem to draw, twirl and fire in the bat of rising cost of living and the depressachieve in the theater. an eye

When he is not in the East watching his play produced, or gathering material, or seeing publishers or editors, the playwright lives on a ranch in California. Why the old-timers should so suddenly become popular with picture makers hasn't been disclosed. But our guess is that stiff requirements of the consent decree have had something to do with it. Exhibitors, backed by their paying customers, are putting on a Nation-wide drive for new faces on the screen. The old-timers may prove a compromise. They're not new-but at least they're a change. Any port in a storm is Hollywood's motto.

Older, mellower, maybe a bit stouter, but still with an enormous hold on the imagination of the public, former favorites are seen everywhere on the lots today. All told, there are perhaps two score of them on the pay rolls of picures now before the cameras. Of this number, maybe a dozen are playing parts important enough to warrant featured billing.

Pola Negri Returns With Good Roles in View.

They are bringing back Pola Negri, the blue-black haired siren who symbolized an era just as much as Calvin Coolidge did, and they are bringing her back to test her for one of the finest dramatic roles the screen has to offer-that of Pilar, the woman with a heart of oak, in the picturization of Ernest Heiningway's "For Whom the Bell Tolls." There's no certainty as yet that Pola will land this fat assignment but Paramount is gambling on bringing her all the way out here from New York to make the test.

Pola is coming back, literally, after an absence of a decade (she last made "A Woman Commands" for R-K-O in 1931) and studio executives who still entertain warm memories of the Polish actress' long stay on the lot following her American success in the German-made "Passion" truly hope she clicks on the stern requirements. They know that the name of Pola Negri at the box office can still mean much to a generation which now has slowed down but which still remembers the torrid siren of the middle 20s.

R-K-O is enthused about Gloria Swanson's debut in "Father Takes a Wife," for, although the picture has not yet been generally released, a few advanced showings have won such enthusiastic receptions that Gloria has been signed for three more features. So, Swanson, the chic, svelte lady who started with the Mack Sennett bathing beauties and emerged finally as the epitome of swank, will apparently be with us in a starring way for some time to come.

Exotic, sad-eyed Nazimova has come back, too. You saw her in an important and moving role in "The Mortal Storm" and you see her in "Blood and Sand" as Tyrone Power's mother. Twenty years ago to suggest that the great, glamorous Nazimova would play somebody's mother in the movies would have gotten you the horse laugh-and maybe a mental test

Irene Bordoni's Director HOLLYWOOD. Says She's Back to Stay.

Irene Bordoni, who last saw Hollywood in 1929 in an epic titled "Paris," is back again in the film capital doing "Louisiana Purchase," picturization of the Broadway hit. And attractive Miss Bordoni is still nostalgically remembered by a generation who saw her youthful, lovely and lovable. Irving Cummings, directing her comeback picture, says there's no question in his mind about Bordoni staying around Hollywood. in important parts for some time to come.

"She's still a beautiful woman," said Cummings, "and this color film is likely to do big things for her. Just watch Bordoni, that's all."

Nils Asther, one of the great leading men (remember him co-starred with Garbo in "Black Orchids"?) is also back. His debut picture, "Unfinished Business," with Robert Montgomery and Irene Dunne, is not yet out, but the account Asther gave was good enough to land offers that will keep him busy nearly a year. At present he's working in "Sweater

Norma Talmadge, one of the screen's greatest silent stars, who gave a final farewell appearance in United Artists' "Du Barry-Woman of Eassion" is planning a return because hundreds of fans who remembered her wrote both her and Paramount asking that she be tested for one of the character roles in "For Whom the Bell Tolls." Even if she isn't successful in this. Miss Talmadge says she definitely will attempt to come back in some other film.

James Kirkwood, not so very long ago a handsome leading man who made the little ladies' hearts do Gable nip-ups when they gazed upon his profile, is back in "No Hands on the Clock." He's no longer a handsome hero, but he's remembered. And he still can act all around plenty of today's stars.

Even the Keystone Kops Turn Up Once Again.

The Duncan Sisters are talking of returning. So is Lillian Gish, who is here getting tests. And those four gentlemen who made the old Keystone Kops practically immortal-Snub Pollard, Chester Conklin, Heinie Conklin, Hank Mann-will return to the theatrical wars with their wellremembered routines at a Hollywood night club-in preparation for a re-entry into films via Warner Bros.

For instance, on a single set last week-"Reap the Wild Wind"there appeared as dancers and sitters in a ballroom sequence-a dozen familiar faces who symbolized an era that is no more. If Cecil B. De Mille wanted to assemble such a cast 20 years ago it would have cost him $50,000 instead of $50.

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 24, 1941-PART FIVE.

There Seems No Escape, Except on Broadway

Even Out on a Sand Bar Off Land's End. At Provincetown, Theater Intrudes On a Critic Trying Only to Rest

By Ira Wolfert.

NEW YORK. Going down Cape Cod, the woods, roads, farms and beaches echoed to the theater resting

We were resting, too, and so tried not to listen. A girl in Banstable told us about Moss Hart's new mustache, the one now frightening Broadway. Big, she said, and scraggly and looking like a clump of beach grass uprooted and lying sidewise. We didn't listen. A man in Sandwich began telling us of Max Gordon's vexations in raising money for the new Romberg operatta.

So we went on to Yarmouth, where they have the most beautiful trees lining the main street. A girl was walking her dog among them and a man was at her side, "I hear it's going to be all comedy this year," she said, "comedy, comedy, nothing but comedy." "That's a tough break," he said. "A tragedy," she said. "I don't know what's more tragic-to have begun a career in 1930 or to begin a career as a tragedian in 1941." "Well," he said, "maybe there'll be a place for you. Don't comedies have to have a little tragic relief?"

We caught the last words as we were hightailing down the road to Dennis. There the talk was of Gertrude Lawrence and "Lady in the Dark," and John Van Druten's "Behold, We Live!" (seems it lives at great length) and of Richard Aldrich's big new house. Next stop, Truro-where Max Eastman, the late Leon Trotsky's right hand, and Robert Minor, the Stalinist Communist, have homes across the way from each other and can hear each other breathing hotly at each other.

Just News and Arguments. Even that seemed too much drama for a vacation from the drama, and we were driven on to Land's End, which is called Provincetown. The house we rented had Josephine Herbst in the garden. She had just had another novel published and was turning back to short stories, and at the moment of our entrance seemed to be looking for them flat on her back, eyes closed and face lifted to the sun

"I find it hard to go back," she said. "I'd like to do a play." We began to tiptoe away. "Short stories," she shouted after us, "seem so light after a novel and so constricted." Why not another novel? Oh, no, novels are not doing well. Nobody is buying them. The war and so forth. No one wants to read any more-just the newspapers and radio and arguments, interminable arguments

Of course, she said, up here at the end of the land of the world, one feels out of things and the war seems so distant, everything awhile ago and called up my pub- the house of Mother Gin Sling.

lisher, Max Perkins. Do you know him? 'Max,' I said, 'what's going on?' Meaning, of course, with my book. Well, Max knew I was just up from Provincetown and he said in that benevolent voice of his, "Well, Jo, there's a war going on.' So you see what people think of people who are in Provincetown." No Escape at Sea.

Thus reassured, we stayed awhile -for lunch, anyway. We went to the hardest restaurant to get to there is and arrived exhausted and sat on a platform or quarterdeck built out over the water. The waiter had a pair of field glasses. He was sweeping the sea with them. "Why," he said suddenly and lowered his glasses and looked at us. He was trembling. "There's the Potomac, sir," he said and offered us the glasses. We took them and saw a small ship bobbing on a glassy sea. It was too dramatic for us and we left hastily to go swimming

A long way out, further than we had a right to try to go, was a sand bar and we swam to it slowly, floating a great deal and wishing a lot that we had remained among the drama on the shore. When we got there, we were done in. We pulled ourself slowly out of the water and crawled a step of two and lay flat. A man at the far end of the sand bar was scowling at us. A girl, hunched over a book, had her back to us and never turned around. They seemed to be kindred souls, eagereven at the risk of their lives-to get away from it all and we decided we did not mind their company and lay still breathing heavily. Ultimately our breathing became less noisy and we could hear what the couple was talking about. He was reciting a part from a play and she was cuing him from the book. We swam back at once and did not wait to dry off before returning to New York, where all you have to do to get away from the drama is stay on Broadway.

Mary Martin, the "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" girl, was first to crack Hollywood's stubborn defense 75 years of buying, selling and against look-alikes. Front view and lending on diamonds, jewelry, etc. profile, Mary could pass for Claudette Colbert on a cloudy day. It was this "handicap" that kept her out of pictures when she sang torch songs in a Hollywood night club. That was two years before her Broadway fame. Even with her accumulated success and publicity in mind, there were many skeptics at Paramount who still believed that likeness to Colbert would be fatal. They've long since changed their minds. Columbia buried Glen Ford in westerns for nearly three years and every attempt on the part of the ambitious young man to extricate himself met with this rebuff: "You look like Henry Fonda. You even act like him. There isn't room for two Henry Fondas in A pictures." Nevertheless, Ford fought over that handicap. An independent producer gambled by casting him in "So Ends Our Night," with an assignment of equal importance to that handed Fredric March. The latest development of the world's most notably popular hobby is the collecting of wartime covers which have passed through the hands of military and naval censors. But it happens that envelopes whose contents have not been examined also are interesting. The cachet, "Not Opened by Censor," applied to the cover here reproduced is the first of its kind to be seen in Washington. It came to Robert V Fleming, treasurer of the National Geographic Society, on an envelope franked with portrait stamps of Australia-1d, Queen Elizabeth; 2d, King George VI. -Star Staff Photo.

Marblehead Offers Many Attractions to Artists

Endless Variety of Pictorial Subjects Is Provided by Massachusetts Town

By Leila Mechlin, The Star's Art Critic

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., Aug. 23 .- Marblehead has, it is said, no summer art colony, but there is no place on the New England Coast which offers more attractions to artists. It is, in the first place, a most picturesque old town, providing endless and varied material for pictorial transcription; it has its own group of earnest, and in some instances, very accomplished artists, and a live and ambitious art association, the influence of which extends far beyond the town boundaries.

It was back in 1629 that Marblehead was settled by hardy fisherfolk from the English Channel Islands, Jersey and Guernsey, and the descendants of some of these settlers are still residing here, proud of their heritage and of the conspicuous part the town has played in the making of America

Sixteen miles northeast of Boston, Marblehead is a peninsula about 4 miles long and a mile and a half wide. It is protected from the violence of the sea by a narrow neck of land running northeast by southwest,

Budapest Quartet to Broadcast

Programs Begin Next Sunday

Beginning next Sunday morning, August 31, the Budapest String Quartet will inaugurate a notable series of chamber music broadcasts over the network of Columbia Broadcasting System. This world famous organization will play 10 programs of the chamber music of Ludwig van Bee-thoven, from 11:05 a.m. to 12 noon (Eastern daylight saving time as long as that is in effect then Eastern standard time) on the following dates: August 31, September 7, 14, 21, 28, October 5, 12, 19, 26, and November 2.

All of these concerts will originate in the Whittall Pavilion of the Library of Congress and be given under the auspices of the Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation. They undoubtedly mark the most ambitious attempt so far in the history of American radio to present Beethoven's chamber music in an extended series of concerts especially

Harper Prize Novel Deals With Modern Marriage

Story by Judith Kelly Fails to Equal High Standards Set By Previous Winners

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Marriage Is a Private Affair

By Judith Kelly. Harper & Bros., New York.

The important thing about this book is that it has won one of the most respected fiction awards which currently exists in this country-that is, it has won the Harper Novel Prize. And the Harper Novel Prize is respected with reason. It has been awarded now 10 times-every other year since 1923-and the books on which it has been bestowed have almost always been distinguished works. The considerations which all too obviously influence the judges in most contests sponsored by American publishers-that is, salability and popular appeal-seem not to have clouded the thinking of those who have presided over this competition. The Harper winner has been one to wait for with interest where most prize novels must be received with, at best, patient resignation.

This having been the case for so long, it is with genuine sorrow that the reviewer reports that the present winner is no better than it should be. Perhaps the most succinct description of it lies in one single fact-it was serialized in a large popular woman's magazine. That will be eloquence to some. To others, who may feel that it is unfair to bring an objective circumstance into criticism, the reviewer will state that, even If the work had not been thus serialized, it reads as if it might have been.

Shows Understanding of Marriage Among Depression Generation.

As its name indicates, it is a study of marriage. And it is done with the utmost seriousness, without irony, without satire and, most markedly, without a vestige of humor. It intends to deal with the aspects of marriage which are peculiarly modern, with marriage among the depression generation, and it does show an understanding of those aspects. It lays them out for the reader to see. But Mrs. Kelly herself apparently has not noticed that, while many excellent novels have been written about the particular problems of a particular period, any work of fiction which is also a work of literature must inevitably cast its contemporary aspects against the unchanging, timeless verities of human nature. Novels which do not do this are merely accounts of imaginary events and depend for their value as fiction on the entertaining quality of the events, as such. Now, the events in "Marriage Is a Private Affair" are not particularly entertaining. It is a sad thing to say so, but it is also the plain truth

The story is of one Theo, a young woman of no particular talents or abilities, who marries one Tom, whom she greatly loves. She has had a comfortable life in superior surroundings and Tom is able to give her a comparable environment. She has congenial friends and adoring parents. Everything is, by all the rules of pre-depression fiction, to a young bride's heart's desire. Then come two babies, in close succession, and the picture utterly changes

Love for Husband Ceases With Startling Suddenness.

The young mother finds herself lowered and degraded by a "nursemaid's existence" where the animal needs of her children interfere with that symbol of civilization, the cocktail hour. With a suddenness which cannot but startle the reader, she ceases to love her husband. We are told then that she longs for intellectual companionship and freedom to live her own life, though up to the moment of the announcement there has been no evidence that she has an intellect of any capacity whatsovever for life beyond domesticity. Nor, up to this moment, has Mrs. Theo been job in a carpet mill. He stayed on of experts is provided in "Our Natpresented as selfish, silly, or egotistic. Theo thinks it simply grand. Theo believes it to be "mature love," beside which the husband and babies have been too, too materialistic. Had this development in Theo's character been duly prepared for Lord Tenavson in the narrative, and had it been presented with the irony which it deserves, it could have been an episode of significance. But Mrs. Kelly plays it perfectly straight. On one page Theo is a nice, conventional girl. On the next she is simply a nasty little cheat. Nothing whatsoever is done to bridge the hiatus. You have to accept it and, if you are like the reviewer, you find the necessary effort entirely out of proportion to gles to learn the writing craft. He general readers: "Soil Conservathe rewards.

U. S. Defense Efforts Are Detailed in New Study

All Phases of Preparedness Program Are Covered in Up-to-Date Encylopedia

America Prepares for Tomorrow

By William Dow Boutwell, B. P. Brodinsky, Pauline Frederick, Joseph Harris, Glenn Nixon and Archie Robertson. Harper & Bros. New York.

This is, to date, an encyclopedia of our country's defense effort. Taking up, one after another, the phases of our national life which have been organized for participation in the defense plan, it tells of each what is expected of it and what has been accomplished so far. It also presents, by means of text, diagrams and tables, a picture of the governmental structure of special agencies which has been built up to administer the defense program, describes the duties of the different bodies, names their directing officers, shows how they are correlated and compares their present records with a chart of intended progress. The information thus vouchsafed is enormous in volume and intensely important. The defense effort, since it was initiated, has occupied most of our thoughts most of the time, but what has been written about it has been fragmentary. Here, at last, is the whole related scheme.

The phases of American life which are affected by the defense scheme are so numerous as to make one wonder if there is any which is

It may seem strange that a work stuffed with facts-with complicated facts of a highly technical nature, too-could be slanted in such a way as to become a popular appeal to prideful patriotism, but this book meets the description. It has the quality of the old World War I posters which used to show Uncle Sam rolling up his sleeves and smiling in supreme confidence, a quality which is the more arresting today in that the public, while it accepts the war program docilely, has not yet shown any positive war enthusiasm. An example is the picturesque manner of giving statistical information, as-

The background of this affecting drama is a good deal better than the drama itself. Most importantly, it has an author who, putting on a period piece, goes at her work in period style, without a ghost of the villagers, however, are not sufficiently developed to adjudge the apology to the modernists. attempt successful.

It is the story of one Matthew Flood, who, in the 1760s, inherits the vast fortune of his English shipping family and decides to go into the slave trade to add yet more pounds to his bulging pocket. He is a handsome devil, and the chief lady abolitionist of his town, the beautiful Pallas Bermester, has fallen for him very hard. So the story gets under way with Matthew and Pallas quareling over the slave question and able to manage every one with whom he associates, is particularly well breaking off their engagement in a very dramatic manner.

Then Matthew goes to the Gold Coast and gathers his cargo. He acquires a beautiful black mistress to whom he gives Pallas' ring. In Cuba, he scandalizes good society for a while by living in open and extremely luxurious sin with his sable Venus. Then he returns to Africa, and nemesis puts in a hand by causing Moorish pirates to capture him and sell him, the erstwhile slaver, into slavery himself. This, told with the greatest vividness, takes you over to page 538.

Matthew then disappears for a matter of some 35 years. In the meantime, his mulatto daughter grows up a great beauty and elopes from the convent to which she has been entrusted with a handsome Cuban of great wealth and family. She, in turn, has a daughter, another dashing beauty. Bullfights, slave riots, attempts at assassination and abduction, and a murder or two enliven this period, while the daughter is growing up. The climax comes when she, a young lady, goes to England to find her English relatives and, though as accomplished and proud as a heroine of a period novel ought to be, still finds that quadroons are not welcomed as cousins in aristocratic Anglo-Saxon circles. Attempts at abduction, seduction and murder dog poor Maria's footsteps until at last, she finds as a friend-guess who? Nobody but Matthew's old sweetheart, the lady abolitionist, still a spinster and still equally true to abolition and Matthew's memory.

With the reunion thus shaping up, Matthew at last returns, insar and aged, to be shut in a charity asylum, where Pallas, in indefatigable pursuit of good works, discovers him. He makes a neat recovery and, though aged 70, informs Pallas, aged 66, that he still loves her, and they plan their nuptials. The granddaughter, rescued from her perils, goes back to Cuba and marries somebody who has been wanting her all the time. Abolition is finally achieved in England, largely through Pallas' efforts, and so the curtain falls. Believe it or not, this hardened reviewer read most of Miss Steen's 10-pound work sitting right on the edge of her chair.

Planning for America

By Geo: ye B. Galloway et al. Henry Holt & Co., New York.

This is a thorough and thought-provoking consensus on modern economics, sociology and government. Into it has gone a great deal of work and study, much of it done by residents of Washington. The first three This is the story of an incident characterizations of the village min- and last three chapters, by George B. Galloway of Chevy Chase, Md., former field representative of the National Economic and Social Planning Association, are of a generalizing nature. The intervening chapters are written by 27 experts, each concentrating on some particular phase.

Unity is given to the book by the fact that all of its authors are agreed upon a series of definite hypotheses. They include: (1) That any return to the laissez faire form of capitalism seems impossible; (2) that the present economic and political tendency in America, as elsewhere, is centripetal; (3) that only by intelligent planning can the United States survive without resorting, as did certain European nations, to the violent means of dictatorship. Thus the necessity of increasing governmental control over economics is generally conceded.

The most pressing problem discussed is that of unemployment.' This is covered in a particularly clear-sighted essay by Gustav Peck of the Labor Depar.ment, as well as in an entire chapter by Mr. Galloway. The exhaustive study that has been made by the Department of Agriculture on the subject of the American farmer and the American consumer is reflected in a chapter by M. L. Wilson and assistants, on "Nutrition."

Others who have contributed to the volume include Frank Lorimer professor of population problems at the American University graduate school: Gilbert F. White: Charles H. Judd, who wrote a particularly interesting essay on "Science Resources": Mordecai Ezekiel and Orvis V. Wells of the Agriculture Department; Harold J. Tobin of Dartmouth College and Caroline F. Ware, who contributed timely articles on national defense: Earle S. Draper of the F. H. A.; Charles E. Merriam, vice chairman of the National Resources Planning Board; J. K. Galbraith, professor of mics at Princeton University: Ewan Clague of the Social Security Board: Ernest Minor Patterson of the University of Pennsylvania, who wrote on "International Economic Relations," and numerous others.

succeeded in making the trek. It took more than 10.000 United States soldiers to capture and kill the other half. A fight for freedom is the author's keynote, in which the ideal of freedom is put forward from a new angle. Mr. Fast has told his enormously affecting tale with restraint, compactness and real sincerity. a very small episode in the history of a great Nation. But the author makes this incident an unforgettable one in a dramatic and finely Praises Congress for Obedience to Presidential Wishes.

To offset such an idea, the authors have given chapters to the executive and legislative branches of our Government as these branches have worked on the defense program. Of Congress, it finds reason for praise on account of the "discipline" with which it has enacted presidentially approved bills. Of the President, after remarking that "the Executive has gained more power duirng the last 10 years than during the first 140 years of our national life,' it says that he is fighting to preserve the traditional rule of public opinion in America and succeeding. Elsewhere it quotes Alexander Hamilton in praise of a strong executive and calls the Jeffersonian doctrine, that the best government is that which governs least, a "declining philosophy." The reviewer may be obtuse, but it does seem to her that there is a non-sequitur concealed in this verbiage somewhere. It is impossible to read the book without being aware of such tendencies on the parts of the authors. The facts, of course, are not subject to personal interpretations, and it is the facts which give the book its first importance. The interpretations merely raise questions. To know what the airplane production really is, to see illustrated our chances of offsetting the submarine war on merchant shipping, to read in plain black and white what essential materials we have and what ones we lack, and the rate at which the deficits are being made up-these pieces of information, for the sake of mental calm, are worth the questions, which are going to answer themselves, anyway. Pulitzer Prize Poems, 1922-1941

Random House, New York.

This is a collection of poems taken from every book of poetry which has won the Pulitzer award from 1922 to 1941. The reviewer recommends the selections from the work of Robert P. Tristram Coffin. Robert Frost. Amy Lowell, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Edwin Arlington Robinson and of some 300-odd Cheyenne Indians Mark Van Doren. She would say that the finest poem in the book is Frost's "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening.

At the end of the volume, there is a brief biography of each poet and a list of his works. There are also, in some cases, the poet's comment on his craft. Mr. Coffin says that poetry "can be a public function." John Gould Fletcher says the "chief function of literature (is) to be the tried to conform to the white man's transposition of life into the medlum of language." Mr. Robinson says, "Poetry is a language that tells us, through a more or less emotional reaction, something that cannot be said." And Mark Van Doren disposes of the matter of writing. "The only conception of the poet is that he is a person who writes poetry."

Liberators and Heroes of South America

By Maricn Lansing. L. C. Page & Co., Boston.

Here are 16 terse, dramatic blographies of Americans who freed the South American republics and made it possible for liberty and democracy to spread throughout the New World. In these days, when all liberty and democracy are threatened, it is good to review again the struggles of the great-souled patriots who gave all Americans, on both sides of the Equator, the freedom and privileges they enjoy.

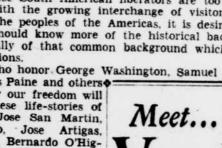

Many of these South American liberators are too little known in this country. With the growing interchange of visitors, interests and cultures among the peoples of the Americas, it is desirable that we of North America should know more of the historical background of our neighbors, especially of that common background which links together the American nations.

Americans who honor George Washington, Samuel Adams, Thomas

Jefferson, Thomas Paine and others

Such figures, presented in such a way, cannot but act to deflate the fear, commonly heard voiced, that our participation in Europe's war will impoverish us. There is a hearty jingoism about the method which undoubtedly catches national pride-"We've got the men. and we've got the ships and we've got the money, too." On another point, however, the authors do not make themselves so reassuring, though they try quite as hard. That is on the fear felt by the observant everywhere that under the guise, or the necessity, of war effort, we are drifting toward totalitarianism almost as fast as the Europe which we would save.

It is natural that a large part of any such book as this should consist of untested and debatable theory. But, as Mr. Galloway says, the old orthodox economics is today sterile and a series of new axioms must be formulated. It is no overstatement to say that "Planning for America" is one of the most commendable attempts so far made to organize and HUGH WALPOLE, to explain the intricate and broad problems of modern bureaucracy. Helping with the chores on her father's farm in Prince Georges County, Md., is the interesting and profitable hobby of Florence Elvis Gates, 12, of Oxon Hill High School "In the spring," Florence writes 'I pick strawberries at 3 cents a quart, thus earning about $7. With this money. I help to buy my lothes, school supplies and lunches. Florence's chores also include picking vegetables and hoeing some of the young plants." She enjoys her duties, she says, not only because she is paid for them, but because they are giving her experience that will be of value in later years.

"I am happy to know that I can help my father." she declares, "because he helps me by giving me an education and my spending money for the work I do on the farm."

Every girl and boy should have some means of earning money for themselves, Florence believes, because it gives them "an independent feeling." She concludes her interesting letter with this surprisingly mature statement for one so voung "I'll never forget the happy days

Thoughtful Attitude.

The reason I consider that statement "mature" is that so many boys and girls seem to lack proper appreciation of their childhood. Apparently, they do not realize that youth is the happiest period of human life. They act as if they are anxious-even impatient-to become men and women. But Florence's statement reveals a different attitude-a more thoughtful attitude. It shows an awareness that the carefree days of childhood will pass all too quickly that the responsibilities of adulthood to follow will continue a long time. It shows, too, that Florence is doing her best to prepare herself to assume those responsibilities by learning things that will be of practical use to her. I like to see that kind of spirit in a girl or boy. And I wish it were

To the moon on a rocket!

This announcement was treated as a general joke in those predefense days when the American Rocket Society offered Agnes Hermansen, the little blond air hostess and aviatrix, a chance to handle the controls of a sizzling rocket ship that was then being drawn upon their draftsman's board. Miss Hermansen accepted, too! Yet, aside from the still visionary lunar goal, rockets are a definite part of modern air experimentation. In 1933, Gerhard Zucker transported letters by rocket over the Harz Mountains, using a powder fuel for propulsion. Schmiedl, the Austrian, actually had rocket postal service between Shockel and Radegund, Austria. The letters reached their destination in a few minutes, while the route of the postman consumed many hours. It takes a big stretch of the imag-Ination to leap from the small mail rockets to nuge ships for interplanetary travel, yet there are those who say that some day it will be done. Alfred Africano of the American Rocket Society once declared: "Rockets are the coming form of transportation. In 1900 some men 'proved' that airplanes were an impossible dream. Rockets are having the same trouble with scoffers." If you are interested in rockets, read Dr. Robert Goddard's "A Method of Reaching Extreme Altitudes," David Lasser's "The Conquest of Space" and Herbert Chatley's "Principles of Rocket Propulsion." all of which will give you a clearer picture of the rocket and its future

Big-time dance promoters could take a lesson from Sophie Skrzypek of 82 Oak street. New Britain, Conn. Sophie made 1900 per cent profit on horse. The horse dashed through a dance she held, taking in $5 and spending only 25 cents.

EARL BLACKWELL reached over and picked up the phone.

"Hello — Blackwell? This is Billy Rose. I'm doing a new show. I want to know where I can get hold of five gals who were headliners in silent pictures. Can you help me?"

A few hours later, the phone of the Mighty Mite rang.

"Hello — Mr. Rose? This is Blackwell. We've found thirty silent-screen stars who live near New York. We can reach them in five minutes. How do these sound to you? — Nita Naldi, Mae Murray, Lila Lee"

That's just one of the daily incidents in the lives of Blackwell and his partner, Ted Strong. The young men own and operate a business which they call "Celebrity Service." They are two small-town boys who came to New York four years ago and made good with a small-town technique. They've made a career of being interested in other people.

RESULT: Today they act as an information bureau for film companies, advertising agencies, radio networks, gossip columnists and anybody else interested in the momentary whereabouts of Ginger Rogers or Albert Einstein. And/or any of 30,000 other actors, scientists, writers, politicians.

Recently a long-distance call came in from Philadelphia. A large jewelry show was being staged there. Could Celebrity Service supply a list of all

One department store was planning a Mother-In-Laws' Day. A few hours after the call, Earl and Ted gave the store a complete file on famous peoples' mother-in-laws. Another request came in for all celebrities whose last name was Jones. Their collection began with Movie Star Allan Jones. Ended with Tad Jones, ex-Yale football coach.

ONE THING NOT TO FEAR

by Channing Pollock

WOMAN of my acquaintance has an absolute horror of heights. Her son was amused at her inability to look into the Grand Canyon, and at her stubborn refusal to travel by air. Not long ago, this lad was taken into our army and, from a remote training camp, sent his mother an honest confession that he was "afraid of being afraid." "I don't know whether I'm a brave man or a coward," he wrote, "and the doubt worries me all the time."

On receipt of the letter, his mother climbed into a plane and flew to her son. "I thought you were afraid to fly," the boy said.

"I am," the mother replied, "but I flew to show you that fear can be conquered, if the reason is good enough. A brave man is not a man who isn't afraid, but one whose will is stronger than his fear."

Hers was a wise and courageous example, and a wise and courageous speech. Most of us, I think, are afraid of being afraid, and generally without cause. Someone advised: "Don't fret about being crazy, because if you were crazy you wouldn't fret about it." I suspect it's much the same with cowardice the genuine coward is fearful of everything bwt fear. A famous Indian fighter, who also had served with Roosevelt's Rough Riders, told me that he had never gone into action without shaking in his boots. Afterward, he often was astonished at his own deeds.

"Once," he told me, "half a dozen of us barricaded ourselves in a log cabin on a hill to hold off a greatly superior force of savages. We were without water, and I hurried to a neighboring brook with a five-gallon can. As I filled it, shots began pattering around me. That five gallons of water was the heaviest load I ever carried. Every step of the way I was tempted to drop it and run. When the Indians had been driven off, we rushed for a drink, and found the tin empty. The first shots had punctured it in several places, the precious liquid had escaped within a few feet of the brook, and the unbearable weight with which I had struggled uphill had been only a little metal. Boy, was I scared to death!"

ALMOST any intelligent man would have been equally frightened under the circumstances, but only a brave man — a man whose character and sense of responsibility were stronger than his natural instincts would have finished the job. Any number of people "scared to death" have died for their faith, or for freedom, or humanity, and they were true heroes; others who never knew fear have walked jauntily into the prize ring, or the bull ring, but failed of the everyday courage involved in everyday tasks.

My own idea of superlative heroism is that of a farmer who lived near an uncle of mine in Michigan. Regularly, he went smiling to plow or plant or reap or feed the stock, and so feed and clothe a considerable family. When this man died, it was disclosed that, for years, he had suffered from an incurable and excruciatingly painful malady. "How he walked behind that plow, day after day, is more than I can understand," the doctor said — but now I understand. It wasn't that the farmer didn't feel pain. In that case, there would have been no need of courage. It wasn't that he didn't hate and dread pain, or that he wouldn't have done most things to avoid it. Only one thing he dreaded more than pain, one thing he wouldn't do to avoid pain, and that was what seemed to him more important than fear or pain — lying down on his job.

CHIEFLY, we fear that to which we are not accustomed. Gold and precious stones could not persuade me to stand on a lofty girder, but steelworkers do it every day. Gold and precious stones probably couldn't persuade them to face an audience of a thousand people, but I do that almost every day. There is no courage involved in their working at dizzy heights, or in my facing audiences. But it would take much courage for either of us to do the other thing. Both of us might be scared to death, but I like to believe that the riveter would face any audience to plead for what he thought right, and that I would climb out on that girder to save a fellow creature. Both of us would be "scared to death" because we were doing an unaccustomed thing. When I asked Edgar Beecher Bronson, the big-game hunter, how he could stand with only a camera in hand while lions approached, he answered, "What's the fastest you ever drove a car?"

"Oh, ninety or a hundred miles an hour, I suppose."

Bronson grinned.

"Nothing on earth could induce me to do that," he said. "Which means that you're used to motor cars, and I'm used to lions."

I know men who, in the last World War, dozed peacefully beneath big guns in action. They weren't heroic at the moment; they were tired, and, after months of it, accustomed to guns in action. I know a pugilist who went on fighting after he'd broken his wrist, but he had felt no pain - was not even aware of the injury. George Bernard Shaw said, "The courage to rage and kill is cheap. I have an English bull terrier who is full of that brand of courage, but he lets my groom thrash him all the same." Real courage, in battle or out of it, is the brand that doesn't let the groom thrash you - or Life - or what you believe to be unworthy or evil. Real courage is the subordination of everything else to a faith that seems of greater urgence than anything else - fear or favor or comfort or security or even survival.

The valor we praise in song and story is largely the bunk. It isn't the six-footer with the broad shoulders and the mighty punch who is always first "over the top." A lot of Victoria Crosses and Congressional and Carnegie medals have gone to nervous little chaps who just "got by" the doctor. Many a lad in military training today, hating it and wondering what he'll do if the test comes, is going to surprise himself and his comrades.

Lady Abingdon — organizer

STAMPS. We've just learned that old postage stamps are helping to feed, clothe and shelter more than 150,000 refugees who, fleeing their own warwrecked countries, have made their way to England. The "Refugees of England, Inc." was organized in America by the Countess of Abingdon to help them.

An American woman — Miss Miriam Oliver — watched the incoming foreign mail being sorted at organization headquarters in New York one day. "Suddenly, I wondered if we couldn't turn cancelled stamps into money."

Next day, letters went out to consulates, stores, individuals. The request: "Please send us your cancelled stamps — any country, any date." Cartons, boxes, crates of stamps and envelopes began to flood in. Huge quantities from every South American country, all parts of the United States, Europe. From attics and cellars, from vaults and treasured memory boxes. Each one sold to dealers has meant pennies for milk, clothes, medicine.

Got any old stamps today?

SECRET. "Aunty" — just "Aunty" a colored woman who lives eight miles from Selma, Alabama, is in her nineties. When asked what she believed to be the secret of her long life, she thought a while and said: "When I sets, I sets loose."

ENEMIES. The dog's name was Tippy. The goose was Honker. They never did get along. Tippy continually tried to choke Honker. Honker eternally attempted to remove Tippy's tail and ears from the rest of him. Enemies, sworn.

Then a car hit Tippy. The doctor said: "He'll live but be blind."

He could walk again, finally. Terrified, he shivered his way out to the lawn. He stood there, lost. Honker saw him and whirled, ready to attack. But then she saw his vacant brown eyes. She stared, poised in bewilderment. She came back, gently this time, and honked. Honked persistently until Tippy followed her over to the water. From that day on, the goose became the dog's eyes — guiding him over holes and obstacles, chasing away belligerent stray dogs.

phoned to ask the age of little Joan Carroll, the tot who is already a movie and stage star. The girl at Celebrity Service thought she said Jane Cowl. Leafing rapidly through the files, she came back with the answer:

"Why, she was born in 1884." The woman gasped: "Good heavens - she's a midget!" - JERRY MASON

Because there's no cowardice in being afraid; courage consists in what one does when the test comes — and why.

We think there's a whole sermon here. M.

Marines swarm ashore to storm an objective. Their barges also carry ks, guns and trucks commandant of the Marine Corps, knows from long experience what the job of the Marine Corps is. He has been in the Marine Corps since 1900, has served in the Philippinese in China, in France, and he knows that if trouble comes it will almost certainly be the Marines, as always, who will be first on the spot. And he has studied modern warfare in all its phases; he means to get them there by whatever means will best serve the purpose, and to have them equipped and trained to do the job.

He is no hard-boiled, fire-eating leatherneck, this head man of today's Marines. Sitting with him in his office in Washington, with its trophies and plaques and banners won by the Marines through the years, you get the impression of a genial, kindly-eyed, pipe-smoking man, slightly rotund, informal and friendly. But you also sense a quick, understanding mind. It is his nature to be pleasant and tactful, but that does not mean that he is easily swayed from his course. And so when his colleagues of the Navy were reluctant, he created no rumpus, stirred up none of the bitter arguments which make men loathe to back down-but kept on pressing for the sort of equipment which would make the Marines a modern fighting unit.

The Navy Is Proud

"WE'VE lived with the Navy so long," he told me, the other day, "that we understand each other, we know how to get along together."

Certainly he knew how to get along. For today the Navy's transports have their special accommodations for the war machines which will set the Marines ashore ready for anything. And the whole Navy is as proud of them as are the Marines themselves.

"But with all the mechanization," the General warned me, "don't overlook the man with the rifle. He is still the backbone of the outfit. After the tanks take a position, he has to hold it."

The General himself would not be likely to overlook the rifleman. He was a chief factor in making the Marines the crack riflemen of the country. Back in 1901, as a young second lieutenant, he led the first Marine team that ever shot in a national rifle-shooting match. Up to that time, little attention had been paid to marksmanship in any of our military services. The general idea had been that there wasn't time in war for a man to do any fancy shooting: all you had to do was to give him a rifle and let him keep it firing. A few officers had begun to question that theory, and the young second lieutenant was heartily with them. Whatever other advantage a trained marksman might have, he reasoned out, he would at least have more confidence in his weapon - and that would give him more confidence in himself and make him a better soldier. (That still holds today, he thinks, and rifle marksmanship is still a major part of a Marine's training, even if he may later be detailed to handle machine guns, mortars or tanks.) From that start in 1901, the Marines went on to become the outstanding riflemen of the country. Holcomb himself was at one time the world's champion long-distance rifle-shot; and many of the trophies in his office today bear witness to the

WN through the air came the parachutists, swarms of them, assembling quickly as they picked themselves up from the ground. The officer beside me, observing, grunted approvingly as the last man fluttered safely to earth. The maneuver had gone off without a hitch, and he was obviously relieved. He turned to me with a grin. "The Marines have landed," he said, "and have the situation well in hand."

It was the first time I had ever heard those old, familiar words in connection with parachute troops. But the United States Marines today are no longer just seagoing foot soldiers, but fighting men of the modern, mechanized school. These parachutists were in training - the latest of many batches which have been learning this new fighting trick for nearly a year now. And that's not the half of it.

Let's imagine, for a moment, that these parachutists are not merely making a practice jump on a training field, but are landing in enemy territory - an enemy installed, say, on an island threatening our coast. What else happens?

Well, other things have already happened. Planes have scouted the territory, spotting the enemy's positions. The whole terrain has been charted, and every characteristic of it studied. These parachutists have been dropped in the interior, where they can disrupt enemy communications and supply lines. And out at sea, the fleet is moving in - with the streamlined units of the Fleet Marine Force in transports.

The fleet lays down a barrage on the enemy front-line positions. Naval and Marine planes fly to the attack. And then, at the propitious moment - perhaps under cover of fog, or early-morning darkness, or a smoke screen the Marines shove off for land.

They Come in Invasion Waves

"SHOVE OFF" is the old nautical expression, but it hardly fits today. For what really happens is that huge, amphibious tanks are hoisted overboard for the first invasion wave. "Alligators," the Marines called them down at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, when they were getting their first tests. But they are big alligators. On land they can knock trees over. And they move in through the water at ten miles an hour, then clamber onto the beach and pick up to twenty-five miles an hour. Fearsome machines, these seagoing tanks of our Marines.

Behind them come more waves of attacking Marines, in armored invasion launches strange-looking craft that carry land tanks and armored cars, machine guns, mortars and light artillery. Powered by their own engines, these barges of war crowd in. Their snubnosed bows let down to make ramps, and the tanks and cars and guns roll off, ready to move in, shooting.

And so the battle is on. And that is not just imagination. It is the way, with variations in details, the Marines have "invaded" many an "enemy" territory in the maneuvers by which they have been learning to make realistic use of their new mechanized equipment.

They haven't done much talking about it. That new amphibious tank, for instance, has had almost the status of a secret weapon; and how many of them the Marines now have was still a well-guarded secret when I last inquired. That they have other new plans and devices, still undisclosed, is almost certain. But this much is absolutely certain: The Marines are all set to maintain their old traditions in many new ways.

It has taken some doing. The Marines are our one amphibious service. Nothing is any good to them which they can't take aboard ship with them. And tanks and barges won't fold up in an out-of-the-way hatch. Many a Naval officer - the Marines, of course, being an adjunct of the Navy - has looked upon the mechanizing program as a plot to clutter up the Navy's ships with a lot of heavy, ungainly equipment. They had to be convinced. But Major General Thomas Holcomb,

Just as he thought he was deciphering Kitty, his own mouse, Dan decided to find a wife for Uncle Dennis. And did Dan learn fast about women!

by Matt Taylor

Illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

"What a way to talk to your poor mother's only brother," chides Uncle Dennis sadly

HIS little mouse Kitty is not one of these optimists that can see the bright side of a burnt piece of toast. No matter what song writers say, she figures heaven isn't opening for business the day she marries Dan McGarry, the big plain-clothes cop she has got herself engaged to. Sure, she says to herself, there will be a lot of little things go wrong after she is married. But why, she wants to know, do they have to go wrong before she is married?

myself like a grade-A screwball I'd like to know who it was that was with me."

Dan gives Kitty one of his fishy stares that means panic, and she hands him back one that says, "This is serious, but I can handle it." She says to Uncle Dennis, "We figured on a small apartment for just the two of us to start with. Uncle dear.'

and then come back for me." He looks at Kitty helplessly. "I would not hurt his feelings for the world. He has done a lot for me."

"I don't want to hurt his feelings, either," says Kitty. "Maybe if we wait long enough to get married we can outsit him and he will make some other plans."

"That is an idea I don't think so much of," says Dan.

"Well, we won't worry. Maybe it won't be so bad having him live with us.'

She has a good chance to check on this during the next few months. Kitty's mother likes company, and Uncle Dennis is over to dinner at Kitty's house about four times a week. Most of the time he spends the evening, and he asks some other retired cops in for a little game because his own place is sort of small. The main difference between retired cops playing pinochle and a cheering section at a football game, Kitty finds out, is that the cops have a pension and don't have to get up in the morning.

"Well, Inspector," she says to Dan one Sunday morning, after a couple of hours sleep, "I have finally decided on our wedding day. It will be the first Saturday in June about thirty years from now, when your Uncle Dennis has quieted down a little."

"Weren't you ever interested in any woman?" he asks.

"Indeed I was. There was a dame named Hiccups Hattie that worked a swindle racket and I sure was interested in her.'

"Ah-ha!" says Dan, rubbing his hands. "Do you ever wonder what became of her?"

"I wonder about that practically constantly," says Uncle Dennis. "How she gives me the slip that day I will never know.'

"Were you very much in love with her?" "Oh, you mean was I interested that way?"

says Uncle Dennis. "Well, I can't say I am in love with this Hattie, because I never see her. She pulls a fadeout on me just as I am closing in to make the pinch, and the nearest I come to her is a set of fingerprints that she leaves on a bureau drawer."

Dan sighs. "Kitty wants you to come to dinner tomorrow. Miss Witherspoon, my old fifth grade teacher, will be there."

"That doesn't matter," says Uncle Dennis. "I will come anyway."

"I have told Miss Witherspoon all about you," says Dan. "She will make some man a wonderful wife."

"If I think of a guy who wants a wife I will let you know," says Uncle Dennis.

The trouble that burns her in particular is in-law trouble. In-law trouble, she always says, goes along with marriage like bicarbonate goes with a party. But here she is, not even married yet, and she has Dan's Uncle Dennis to give her a headache.

Uncle Dennis is a cop all his life, and he is plenty smart. So he is a lieutenant when he clicks off his twenty-fifth year of service and they hand him a pension. He is so smart that he is still a bachelor. And he has his health and his strength, so altogether you would say he is a lucky copper indeed. Naturally, Dan and Kitty think he will do the usual and go off and open up a tavern somewhere, or get a soft berth as a private dick in a bank, or buy a place in the country and raise asparagus.

So it is a sock between the eyes when Uncle Dennis says one day, "I wish you kids would hurry up and get married. I do not mind living all by myself when I am working on the force, but now I am sitting around all day, and this morning if I wasn't talking to Uncle Dennis has the kind of blue eyes that can look so hurt you are ashamed to ask him to take his feet off the living-room table. "I never thought you'd be putting an old man out into the street, Kitty darling," he says.

"But you are only forty-eight," Dan crashes in with, "and we ain't exactly putting you out. We just ain't letting you in."

"WHAT a way to talk to your poor mother's only brother," says Uncle Dennis. "And all I'm asking is a room and bath and maybe an upstairs porch for summer evenings, and space in the icebox for a few bottles of beer, and the use of the dining-room table when some of the boys drop in for pinochle. . . But there must be an Old People's Home somewhere," he adds sadly. "We will say no more about it.'

And they don't. But Dan does a lot of worrying and Kitty does a lot of figuring, because they have both seen Uncle Dennis when he gets his heart set on something. "If I know him," says Kitty, "he will be on deck to help you carry me across the threshold."

"You only think you know him," sighs Dan. "He will carry you across personally

Dan pales down to a mild pink. "I will figure something," he says. "I will speak to Uncle Dennis."

"What good will that do?" says Kitty. "He'll give you one look and you'll feel like a heel. You will probably end up by inviting him along on the honeymoon."

Suddenly Dan's face lights up. "I've got it!" he shouts. "It is all very simple. We will just find a wife for Uncle Dennis. I'm surprised you didn't think of it instead of me."

"I thought of it long ago," says Kitty. "But I don't know anyone I'd want to do a thing like that to."

But when Dan gets an idea that sounds good, he doesn't let it go without a struggle. That evening he takes Uncle Dennis out to dinner, and when they get around to coffee and a good cigar he says, "Uncle Dennis, did you ever stop to think it ain't good for a man to live alone?"

Uncle Dennis puffs and beams. "That is mighty nice of you, Danny boy," he says.

"What is nice of me?" says Dan.

"To be worrying about me living alone. And as long as you are so upset about it, I will move in with you and Kitty the day you are married."

Dan waits for another cup of coffee to get his strength back. Then he tries again.

MISS WITHERSPOON is no grand prize at any bingo party, but then neither is Uncle Dennis, and they would go very nice together, Dan figures. But Uncle Dennis doesn't pay any attention to her at all. He isn't exactly a woman-hater; he is just a woman-ignorer. He has been a cop for so long he doesn't think of people any more as male or female; he just divides them into crooks and non-crooks. The first time he speaks to Miss Witherspoon during dinner is when she says she really shouldn't eat dessert.

Uncle Dennis reaches over and takes it from in front of her and says, "Then I will remove temptation, because it is well known that women are poor weak creatures."

After dinner it is the same way. He doesn't give her a sidewise look until she tells how Dan is so thick in arithmetic back in fifth grade she often feels like killing him. Then Uncle Dennis says, "How'd you figure on doing the job?"

Miss Witherspoon gapes and then giggles. "Oh, with an axe, maybe," she says playfully.

"You would never have got away with it,' says Uncle Dennis solemnly. "I remember a guy that tries it with an axe back in 1923 when I am on the Homicide Squad."

He discusses this axe guy until Miss With-

Foolish boy — nobody meant any harm to an old lady. "Besides," Gram thought, "I may be eighty-two, but I still got all my faculties."

Gram put the paper aside and picked up her knitting. Her gnarled old fingers handled the yarn and needles with painstaking care. She concentrated her faded eyes on her work and counted to herself, "Knit one — purl one." She forgot all about Lem's warning and the news article.

Gram went out to the kitchen and peeled the potatoes for supper. She hummed as she worked, and thought about the church supper the Ladies Aid was going to have in the schoolhouse on Friday.

She didn't see the black sedan skid into the drive, hide itself among the hackberries north of the house. When she came back to the living room, still humming, two men were on the porch. Gram stood stock-still, holding the knitting she had just reached for. "Who'd that be?" she wondered.

"MAYBE I'd better phone somebody," she thought. She walked to the old-fashioned telephone fastened on the wall. She took down the receiver — then realized that the men would hear her if she spoke. "Besides," she thought, "they couldn't be them robbers. I'm getting as silly as Lem. Just some of the neighbors probably." Gram went to the door.

Her wavering voice fitted her tiny, wasted figure. "How do you do?" she said with friendliness. "I reckon I didn't hear you when you knocked. Come right in."

Two heavy, swarthy men, their hats pulled low over their eyes, walked in. Each had a hand in a bulging coat pocket. "All right, Grandma," one of the men said, "but you hear us now. Get us the key to your corral."

"Eh? What's that?" said Gram, holding her hand to her ear. "Did you ask for Lem? He ain't to home. Gone for the school kids. I'm all alone. I ain't so young as I once was, and I don't hear so good any more, so you'll have to speak louder 'n that. Sit a bit, won't you?" She motioned toward the old Morris chair and the best rocker.

The men didn't move, but looked at each other quickly, with irritated disgust. "Listen!" The impatient one raised his voice to a shout. "We want the key to that corral of yours that blocks your road to the hills."

"Oh — the key? I hear you now," Gram said. "You're from the church sociable committee. Lem's got the key to the schoolhouse with him. He'll be along, though, soon. Just sit down, won't you, and wait."

"No — not the schoolhouse key! The key to your corral. We want to get through to the mountains on your road," the man yelled.

"Oh, I heard you fine," said Gram, smiling. "I'll just get you that key. I reckon you're from the Browns' place. Some of their hogs been straying over on our south forty."

"Yeh — " the man shouted. "That's right — give us the key to the corral."

Gram still held her knitting in her hands. "Just wait till I pick up this stitch I dropped. I figure on finishing this sweater today. Pretty, don't you think? I'm fixing to send it to them poor young ones in Europe."

"Listen here, old lady!" There was threat in the man's raised voice. "Give us that key!"

"Yes — yes — excuse me," Gram said. She got up, hobbled slowly to the kitchen, and reached up behind the stove where the keys hung. The hard eyes of the men followed her while she fumbled with them.

"Now, this is the one for the barn," Gram said. "No — that's wrong. This belongs to the shed, and this one — yes, this is the barn key. And this — "

One of the men grabbed the keys. "So long, Grandma." They ran.

Their car screamed into gear and headed for the corral gate. Gram sat back limply in her chair. Then: "Better phone — just in case — "

She got up and walked to the telephone. Once more she took the receiver in her hand and clicked the bar up and down. Almost immediately the voices along the line came through.

"You all right, Gram?"

"Yes, I'm fine," said Gram. "Did somebody call the sheriff?"

"Sure did. Gram," came the answer. "They-'re heading them off through the Browns' place. They'll get them."

"Good," said Gram.

"Smart of you to take the receiver off the hook and to stall them off long enough to give the sheriff a start — but how'd they ever happen to talk so loud?"

"I told 'em I was deaf," said Gram. and laughed. "I, who never missed a word in my life!"

superiority of the Marines in rifleshooting through the years since his second lieutenancy.

When he was sent to China in 1905, as a first lieutenant on duty with the Legation Guard at Peking, it gave him a chance to use his marksmanship in another way — on hunting trips into the interior. It also gave him a chance to be in on the beginning of another of today's Marine Corps accomplishments.

We hear a great deal today about the way the more militaristic nations have been preparing for all contingencies, right down to the smallest details. Does it surprise you that one of the things the Marine Corps has been doing for years, to be prepared for situations that might arise, is to detail young officers to learn the difficult Chinese and Japanese languages? It is a fact, and the first one assigned to study Chinese was Thomas Holcomb, then (in 1910) a captain. He mastered a vocabulary of 4,500 words, approximately five times that of the average Chinese coolie and not much smaller than that of a well-educated Chinese.

Engineered an Escape

WHEN the First World War came, he was a major and aide to the commandant in Washington. Then, as now, the commandant's office was a busy place. But down at Quantico, Virginia, the first regiments of Marines were getting ready to sail for France. The legend is that the commandant never quite knew how it happened that one day Major Holcomb was his aide, and the next day somebody else was — and Holcomb was in command of a battalion about to leave for France. But Holcomb knew. He had engineered it. And so when the famous Sixth Regiment moved up to the Western Front, Holcomb was with it, first as a battalion commander, later as second in command of the regiment. He fought at Château-Thierry, Soissons, Marbache, St. Mihiel, Champagne, the Argonne Forest.

Those were telling days in the war, for American Marines were disabusing the Germans of the haughty idea that the Americans would be no match for them. The German Intelligence was changing its rating of our Marines from a low one to its highest rating: "Shock units." And when it was all over, Holcomb himself came home with enough decorations to satisfy a Goering: the French Cross of the Legion of Honor, three Croix de Guerre, with Palm, the Navy Cross, the Silver Star with three Oak Leaf Clusters, the Purple Heart, a Meritorious Service Citation by the Commander in Chief of the A.E.F., and three Citations in General Orders.

It was in December, 1936, that Holcomb was appointed Major General Commandant. He had only been a brigadier general a little more than a year, and several others were senior to him. There had been times in Marine Corps history when that sort of thing had caused bitter explosions and dramatic retirements. There were none when General Holcomb was chosen. Even those who would have liked the honor for themselves applauded. As one of his fellow generals put it to me recently: "Tommy Holcomb is a grand person, a fine officer - and all Marine."

Growing Fast

WHEN he took command, there were about 17,000 enlisted men under his command. Today there are nearly 50,000, and the President has been authorized to increase the strength to 60,000 if the emergency requires - the peak strength in World War I was 75,000. Every week the ranks are increasing, with enlistments both in the regular service and in the reserve - all going at once to active duty. A new base, the biggest ever to be built for the Marines, is under construction in North Carolina. It was picked partly because of its miles of beaches for battle practice - beaches with a rolling surf where landing is not easy, even with amphibious tanks and snubnosed boats. It means duckings and the ensuing discomfort of drenched clothes, weary muscles and lame bodies

But says General Holcomb: "The Marine Corps has never been an easy service for soft men. It may be that we today face more trying times than Marines have ever faced. Fashions in warfare change like everything human changes. But the principles of warfare never change, and the old soldierly virtues are the same that they have always been: courage, and discipline, and loyalty."

The same old Devil-dogs — with new tricks.

A Short Story Complete on This Page

COR half an hour Kay's dark head had been bent over her diary. Finally, with a sigh. she closed the book and locked it with its little key. Then she sat, chin on cupped hands, gazing out of the window.

After a few minutes she turned to Bob Connell Junior who was sprawled on the floor, tinkering with an airplane model. "Bob," she said, dropping her voice, "have you noticed how Father and Mother are drifting apart?"

"Huh?" said Bob. Then the surprising import of her question cut through his absorption. He put down the model. "What do you mean? They seem all right to me."

"Well, of course," said Kay, "you probably wouldn't notice it anyhow. You're a year vounger than I am, and fourteen isn't a noticing age. But you know how every evening Dad reads his paper and takes a nap behind it; and Mother knits, and when he wakes up, she turns on the radio. They never talk to each other - only about business and us, and the war. And how often do they go out together - except when they take us? Bob, it's true! They're drifting apart."

"Well," said Bob, turning it over slowly in his mind. "Well, what of it? I can't see it concerns us."

"Not concern us?" Kay was dramatic. "Bob Connell, you are their son."

"I'm not denyin' it. But, well - what can anybody do?"

The phone rang and Kay flew to answer it. She hadn't a notion of what to do, herself.

But after dinner, as she and Bob worked on their lessons in the den across from the living room, she began again. "Bob, have you looked in the living room - at Mother and Father?"

"Uh. uh.'

"Well, isn't it just as I said?"

Bob nodded. When he had peeped in, his father had been napping behind the paper. while his mother, a faraway look in her eyes. was mending the heel of a gray sock.

"Well, what're you going to do about it?"

"Huh, what am I going to do? Gee. Kay. I can't do anything about a thing like that."

"Bob Connell, I'm ashamed of you. The flame of love must be fed. What feeds love? Care and attention. Does Father ever admire Mother's clothes or hair? No. Does he come home with gifts, candy and flowers? No. Does he plan to take her to a special movie she would just love? No. Does he suggest a bridge party or going out to call on the neighbors? Hardly ever. Now your part is to make him see that. You've got to talk to him - man to man."

"Oh, my gosh, Kay, I can't!"

"You've got to. And I'll talk to Mother. I'll make her dress up more. I'll make her get up some new recipes, for desserts especially. I'll get her to the beauty parlor and have her hair done a new way. Now, Bob, you've got to do your part. The first chance you get, remind Father that Mother likes flowers and movies and candy. Promise?"

Reluctantly Bob promised. He hadn't the faintest idea how to go about a job like that, but he supposed it was a fellow's duty to try.

Mornings at the Connells' were always rushed. Robert Senior drove to his office, dropping Rob Junior and Kay at school on the way. Grace usually got breakfast. But before her mother was up the next morning. Kay called through the bedroom door:

"Mother, stay in bed. I'm getting breakfast."

"Thank you, dear." Grace turned over for a final nap. Kay, she thought with a wave of happy pride, was growing up.

"Mother hasn't been herself lately," said Kay as she poured coffee. "Has she, Bob?" Robert Senior raised his head in alarm.

"You don't mean anything's the matter?"

"Oh, no," said Kay. "She just could stand more rest and attention."

"KNITTIN' and knittin' every night," blurted Bob. "Stands to reason she gets tired." He got up and hustled to the coat closet. When Robert Senior arrived at the closet, his son was holding his overcoat.

'Why, thanks, son.'

Bob's red face was hidden by the dusk of the back hall. "Mother," he blurted, "likes red roses.'

Robert Senior started. "So she does," he agreed.

The drive to school was silent. Robert Senior was wondering about his wife. It was true that she was subdued: they did lead monotonous lives, and hers at home was far more monotonous than his. Enough to get even a woman like Grace down. Automatically he said goodby to Bob and Kay. "I'll bring some roses tonight," he thought. "No I won't. I'll go to the florist's and have them sent out."

When Kay came in from school, her mother was placidly knitting. The room was fragrant with the scent of roses. Kay's sparkling eyes wandered from the vase on the mantel to the bowl on the table. "Gee, Mother, roses."

'Your father sent them. He must have thought I was ill because I didn't come down to breakfast.'

"Mother, I'm ashamed of you. Just because a man sends his wife roses, must she be ill?"

"I'm ashamed of myself, Kay. That wasn't a nice remark. Robert will know how much I appreciate them when he eats that new iceox cake I made. Where did you get that recipe you left out on the kitchen table, Kay? It's fine."

Kay leaned against the door frame. So -it was as easy as that. "'Mother - oh, I got it out of the evening paper. It has good recipes. Now let me help with dinner and you get upstairs before Dad comes, and get yourself into your pink dress."

"That's a summer frock."

"Well, the house is warm. And it goes so well with the roses. And I'm putting away your knitting - for tonight."

Grace smiled. It was wonderful to have Kay grown up into such a thoughtful, responsible girl. When Robert Senior came in, his wife was standing idle, her eyes on the roses. "Grace, how are you?"

"Fine. Oh, Rob, the roses are so lovely. I've been enjoying them all day. Rob, Kay says I'm old-fashioned. She wants me to have a new hair-do, all puffs. Do you think you could stand it?"

"Sure. I'd love it. Miss Walters - you know, our new stenographer -- has them. I think they're cute.'

So he did notice what women did with their hair. Strange thoughts flitted across Grace's mind, but before she could get them arranged, Bob Junior stood in the doorway.

Bob was fidgety. He raised one foot and rubbed it down the other leg. His face got red and he gulped twice. Then in a husky voice he fairly shouted at his wondering parents: "Dad, Mother likes movies!" Then he turned and fled.

Grace got up to shut the door he had left open behind him. "Rob," she said, "did Bob tell you I like roses?"

"Yes, Grace, this morning."

They burst into laughter.

"And Kay got breakfast and left that recipe out, and got me to put on this dress and promise the new hair-do." The laughter died. "Robert, what do you suppose they are thinking?"

THERE was a long silence. In that silence, by the alchemy which makes married people who love each other telepathic, both were going over and over the same thing:

What - what if there were truth in this idea of our children? What if we have taken love - and each other - too much for granted? What if we are losing some of that fine flame that made all our days radiant?

So he did notice what women did with their hair. Strange thoughts now flitted across Grace's mind Must we lose it? Can't we hold on to it?

'We can try. I mean we can keep our love the flaming thing it's always been," said Robert Senior aloud. In a flash Grace was on his lap, arms around his neck.

"Of course we can, Rob darling. We've really never lost the flame, don't you see? You spoke to my unspoken thought, Rob. You couldn't do that if - the rest was smothered."

"We'll show 'em. The movies tonight -- "

"Not tonight, Rob - we have the roses. Tomorrow when I get my hair-do." Again the room was silent.

Kay, who had been listening outside, removed her ear from the door frame. "You see," she whispered as she and Bob fled across the hall to the den. "It worked."

"Yeah, you're a wonder, Kay. Say, do I have to say Mother likes candy, now?"

"Not now; maybe never. Bob. I think it's done. I want to hurry and put it in my diary."

Unlocking the book with the little secret key, she wrote: "Father and Mother." Then she wrote and erased, in succession, "reunited," "rejoined," "reconciled."

At this point she heard them coming into the den, probably to say that dinner was ready. Hastily she erased the "and" and put it in capital letters: "Father AND Mother."

WRONG-WAY STREET

That was where Red started — and here's the vivid story of what he ran into

by Paul W. Kearney

IN THE Court House hall two San Francisco newspapermen and a cop leaned idly against the doorjamb waiting for Part V to convene.

"The Desk tossed this at me as I came out," said the Chronicle man, unfolding a sheet of paper. "A press release on the 35th Anniversary of the National Organization of Boys' Clubs of America.

"'The clubs were organized in 1906,' he read in a bored tone, 'with Jacob Riis as the first president. There are now 352 clubs in thirtyeight states with nearly 400,000 members. Even in the toughest neighborhoods they've cut juvenile delinquency 80 per cent' - and so on and so on. Why don't they give this stuff to one of the sob sisters?"

"You guys," observed the cop in sort of a kid-gloved voice, "certainly work hard at being cynical, don't you?

"I'll give you a Boys' Club story that even you won't think is sissy and it's not out of any press agent's drawer, either."

He jerked his head over his shoulder toward the courtroom. "I'm appearing as the arresting officer in this burglary case," he said. "But that's the end of the story - let's go back to the beginning.

Four Tough Kids

"TwENTY years ago four tough kids used to hang out around 19th and Mission Streets. And one November night when they met after supper, Eddie, the ringleader, was all pepped up about knocking over an old lady who lived alone in a flat nearby and was supposed to have a lot of dough hidden away.

"Two of the other kids, Joe and Red, didn't go for the idea of pushing old ladies around. And the evening's prospects seemed kind of blank until Jimmie comes up with the idea of going down to the lockers at the playground and frisking the clothes of the guys playing basketball.

"That thought went over big because they'd gotten a nice little haul that way a few months before, so off they started.

'While the other three went to work in the locker room, Jimmie stood lookout outside. And they'd no more than started going through the pants' pockets when he burst in on them yelling, 'Scram, the director!'

"They ducked, with the director after them, and outside they knew enough to scatter in all directions, leaving the director with only one he could follow. That one was Red because his hair made him too conspicuous to lose.

"But Red was no dope, either; he cut around the corner and across the street through the traffic. Then he layout to Joe and Eddie and Jimmie when they finally went to work.

"However, the director spotted him again and took him under his wing, not knowing what a snake he was cuddling. This time he sold Red on trying his hand at some basketball, and the kid had such a swell time that night that he forgot why he had come. In fact, he kept coming back for more and pretty soon he was playing forward on the ninety-pound team and giving the high-scoring man a run for his money.

"During the next few months Red tried to sell his other three pals on joining the club, but they'd have none of that sissy stuff, so he busted away from them, much to their contempt.

They went their way; he went his, taking calisthenics in the gym class, moving up to the 110-pound basketball team, then to the 120-pounders who copped the state title.

"For nine years he stuck with the Boys' Club, starring on the baseball team, going to camp for several summers, finally coaching the younger basketball teams after he outgrew them. Then, when he was about twenty-three, he dropped out and they didn't see much of him after that.'

The cop paused, glancing from one newspaperman to the other. They didn't say anything.

"Not much of a story in that, is there?" he observed. "Just routine stuff. Well, here's the payoff:

"Jimmie, the youngest of that Mission Street mob, died in San Quentin. Joe was killed in a stickup three years ago. And Eddie - " He nodded toward the door marked Part V. "Eddie is the kid who wanted-to knock over the old lady - he's the guy that's coming up on this burglary indictment.

"I got the story straight because I made the pinch myself. And I'm here to tell you that I'd have forfeited a month's pay to have gotten out of it.

"You see," he added as sort of an afterthought, lifting his uniform cap and bending his carrot-top down for them to see, "I'm Red!" The End

"Scrooching down in a chair while he got his wind back, he was startled a few minutes later when the Boys' Club director, spotting a strange face, comes over and says, 'Hullo.' At first Red just looks at him.

On the Spot

"HE ASKS Red if he came in to inquire about joining up. And, of course, Red, being on the spot, says yes. So the director shows him around the place, pointing out the pool tables, the ping-pong, the basketball court and so forth, and gives him an application to fill out.

erspoon says she'd better be going. She thanks Kitty and says that up to now she has enjoyed her dinner very much.

"Well," says Kitty, when Uncle Dennis toddles along two hours later, "can't you find a nice hatchet-woman for your Uncle Dennis?"

"I do not want to tie him up with any wrong dame," says Dan. "But just you wait — I will find someone."

Well, Kitty waits a week and nothing happens. Dan tries out a Mrs. Weincoops, who runs the delicatessen around the corner, and a Miss Mellissa O'Shaughnessy, a matron down at the city jail, but Uncle Dennis just doesn't see them. Finding a bride for Uncle Dennis begins to get on Dan's mind like a bad dream. He goes around looking over all the forty-yearold dames that pass him on the street, until one day a cop raises his eyebrows and says, "I read about it once. They call it a mother complex."

"Oh, I am just looking them over for a friend of mine," Dan says. "But I guess it is hopeless."

And then, one day, she falls right into Dan's arms — or rather, faints into them. Dan is on his way with a warrant to pick up a guy supposed to be pulling off some loft jobs. He is turning into the rooming house where this guy lives, when a roly-poly dame comes out. Just as she is passing him on the porch steps, she puts her hand on her forehead, lets out a squeak, and keels over.

At first Dan is very much annoyed; he does not like fainting dames. But then he looks down at this one, as he holds her, and he thinks he has never seen a dame with a sweeter mug. She is fortyish, with a small round face and smooth white skin, and one very nice chin with another in the bud. She has a plain little hat on top of her brown hair and she is simply dressed. Altogether she is a most motherly little mouse, and she should have at least a dozen calling her "Mom."

Her eyelids flutter. "Where am 1?" Her eyes break Dan down worse than an Irish tenor. They are soft blue eyes, and so kind and sort of sad. "You are right on the porch steps where you live," he tells her, "and everything is all right."

She gives him a feeble little smile. "I do not live here any more. I cannot pay my rent and they are giving me the boot."

"That is a lousy trick," says Dan hotly. "If you will sit here on the steps while I finish a bit of business, I will come back and see what I can do." She grabs hold of his arm. "Don't leave me alone! Oh, don't leave me!" "I will only be a minute," says Dan.

She smiles up at him like she is sort of dazed. "My little boy!" she whispers. "My baby! If he had lived he would have grown up to be a big redfaced turkey just like you."

"Oh, gosh!" Dan says, and his stomach does a slow somersault. He looks at her again and says, "When did you eat last?"

"Three days ago," says the motherly mouse.

That settles it. Dan calls a cab and they go to the nearest restaurant. "A double sirloin and French frieds and apple pie and coffee," Dan says to the waiter.

She gives Dan a dreamy stare across the table. "He had just your color eyes. He would have been good and kind too, if -"

"Try not to think about it," says Dan, feeling awful. "Ain't you got a husband?"

She dabs the corner of her eye with a handkerchief. "My first meets with an accident eight years ago, and my second gives me quite a turn only last year when he takes a dive out of a tenth-floor window." She gives him a game little smile. "It is a hard world for a poor widow woman."

Dan reaches across the table and pats her hand. He can just see her married to his Uncle Dennis. "I want to talk to you," he says. "Do you mind if I go finish my business now and come back?"

She looks at her watch. "Why, no. It is all right for you to go now."

Dan hops a taxi back to the rooming house, runs up to the fifth floor and pounds on the door of the guy he has the warrant for. There is no answer, so he crashes in. The guy is gone. So is all the loot that Headquarters expects to find scattered around.

Dan has to call up and report that ably receive a ten-day suspension. Ordinarily this is the sort of bad break that sinks Dan. But now he is so excited about the motherly mouse he has found for his Uncle Dennis that he just shrugs it off and gets back to the restaurant — quick. The dame is dawdling with her apple pie. She looks up at Dan. "Did you finish your business?"

"I was a little late for that."

The dame pouts. "That is a very great pity. I'm afraid it is all my fault."

"Think nothing of it," says Dan. He sits down opposite her. "I hope you won't think me a fast-cracking guy," he says. "But did you ever consider getting married again?"

Her blue eyes pop open. "Well, blow me down, as my late husband Mr. Macgregor used to say! Are you asking me — "

"Not me. For a friend of mine."

"Well, a widow woman can live with her memories, but it is pretty lean pickings. I don't mind bringing a spot of cheer into some lonely guy's life if I can."

"My Uncle Dennis is a lonely guy," says Dan, "but a little hard to understand."

"That all depends," says Mrs. Macgregor. "No guy is really hard to understand if a dame has a warm heart and can dish out a little of the old oil. I will be glad to look over this Uncle Dennis sometime."

"But first I got to tell you," says Dan. "Uncle Dennis is a retired cop and he talks all the time about crooks and police work."

WIND whips your hair into an awful snarl. Leaves it dry, dusty, so tangled you can't even comb it. A little Kreml after you golf, and you won't look like the Wild Man of Borneo to your girl.

WATER washes away the natural oils. Leaves your hair wild, unruly, your scalp dry. Looks worse than ever. A Kreml rub after you swim and your girl won't think your hair is hopeless.

SUN bakes hair dry. Leaves it brittle. This is often followed by dandruff scales. Itching scalp. After lots of sun, use Kreml on your hair. Then your girl won't think she's "going steady" with a mop.

Whose Fault when Lovely Skins look "Layer-caked"?

How many times do you put powder on top of powder in an afternoon or an evening?

WHEN you put powder on the first thing in the morning, you put it on a nice fresh skin. And so it looks wonderfully soft and smooth-gives an appealing glamor to the skin.

But when you powder again a little later, you put fresh powder on stale powder. You add a new layer to the old—innocently giving yourself a streaky, "layer-caked" skin. powder is blown and re-blown to almost unbelievably fine, soft texture-finer by far than any powder made the ordinary way.

That's why my powder goes on so smoothly-clings so long and so well. It's no traitor that dissolves on contact with your skin-fading, streaking, caking-turning different colors! Lady Esther Face Powder stays with you-4 long hours or more! Thousands tell me it's more

That's why the clinging quality of the face powder you use is so important. Use a powder that stays with you—and you won't need to re-powder even once during an afternoon or evening! You'll keep that lovely, radiant look—that fresh, uncoated look—for 4 long hours.

My powder is made a new way ... the first really different way in generations ... by my new, exclusive Twin-Hurricane method. The loyal and flattering than any powder they've ever known!

LADY WITH A PAST

"Blow me down a second time!" says Mrs. Macgregor. "That is a great coincidence."

"What is?" asks Dan.

"Why, as a matter of fact, my dear papa was a flatfoot in his day. There ain't much I don't know about cops and crooks.'

Dan pounds the table. "Then you and Uncle Dennis would get along fine! Can I bring him around to have dinner with you tonight at some nice restaurant?"

"I do not mind at all," says Mrs. Macgregor. "After all, I do not meet up with many guys like your Uncle, running around with a pension."

Uncle Dennis is always set whenever someone says "dinner," and he is on the dot. Dan introduces him to Mrs. Macgregor and Uncle Dennis does his usual - he looks at her without seeing her and goes over to the counter and buys himself a cigar. When he comes back to the table Mrs. Macgregor says, "That guy at the counter short-changed you a buck. I could see it from here.'

Uncle Dennis is surprised. "No one can short-change me!"

"Count it," says Mrs. Macgregor.

So UNCLE DENNIS starts counting and he chuckles until he comes to the last bill and sees he is short a buck. He gapes at Mrs. Macgregor. "Sister," he says - so respectful you would think he is talking to the Commissioner - "you know what goes on." "And how," says Mrs. Macgregor pleasantly. Dan jumps up. "I guess I got to make a phone call," he says.

Uncle Dennis can't take his eyes off Mrs. Macgregor. "Don't hurry back, Danny boy," he says. "Mrs. Macgregor and me will get along fine."

The next morning Dan spends a half hour on the carpet he will never forget. The police have sent out an alarm for the guy Dan lets get away. They've had no luck, and all the newspapers that don't like the Administion are saving things. "If we do not pick up that mug," says the Commissioner, "I am not going to like your face for a long time, McGarry. In fact, you had better get out the old uniform and see if it still fits, because you are liable to be out in the sticks pounding the meanest beat we have." This is considerable worry to Dan, because if he slips back to a patrolman's salary Kitty will want to postpone the wedding, besides being very discouraged with him again. But to balance off this worry, there is the matter of Uncle Dennis, who goes overboard for Mrs. Macgregor from the start. "You would never think it," says Uncle Dennis, "but that mousey dame knows all the rackets. Her old man, who was a copper, tells her plenty. She is a swell dame.'

in, and taken downstairs to answer a few questions.

In about half an hour the Inspector comes up from downstairs. "You are a lucky egg, McGarry," he says. "That guy downstairs spills everything and saves your skin with the Commissioner. Now all we have to do is pick up the dame he is working with." Dan whips out his notebook. "A dame, eh? Any description?" "Plenty. She is a bad baby. Of course we will book her on this burglary charge, although it is a wellknown fact that two of her husbands have funny accidents right after she makes them take out insurance."

"A killer!" says Dan, scribbling in his book. "Well, what do you know?"

"She is about forty, five-feet-two, a hundred and forty pounds, blue eyes and brown hair." Dan gets it all down. "Names?"

"HALF a dozen," says the Inspector. "Hazel Schultz, alias Tusenelda Newberry, alias Stella Dunks, alias Madame Zellza - "

"Slow up," says Dan. "Dunks — Zellza - '

"Alias Mrs. Macgregor," says the Inspector.

"Mrs. Macgregor," says Dan. He gets it half written down before it hits him. Then his face gets pasty. His mouth opens and closes like a sea lion catching fish. He stands there rocking on his heels, his hands clawing the air at his sides, going into a complete mental blackout.

The Inspector glares at him. "What is the matter with you now?" he says. "Never did I see a cop that changes color so fast."

"E-e-erk!" says Dan, stiffening up like someone hands him an electric shock. Before the Inspector can say another word, he is off. He tips over two chairs, gets out on the street, and jumps into a taxi.

Uncle Dennis's landlady is sweeping the front steps, and she gives Dan a cold eye as he comes running at her. "Now what?" she says. "You look as excited as your Uncle Dennis, only (Continued on page 15)

Dan has to chuckle. "It sounds to me, Uncle Dennis," he says, "like I can hear wedding bells."

"I ain't saying you don't. It is nice to have a dame you can talk to."

It goes on like this for a week. Uncle Dennis gets closer and closer to being hooked. All Dan needs to make everything perfect is to have that loft crook picked up so the Commissioner won't be so sore. Then, one day when Dan is sitting around the squad room, the guy is brought

FOR A YOUNG WAISTLINE ...

Here are expert ways to keep it looking so

by Sylvia Blythe

The world measures a woman's age by her waistline. When that can be spanned by two hands or looks tiny enough to be — her figure is young, no matter what the vital statistics say.

Yet as birthdays pile up, lithe muscles have a way of yielding to flesh, and the woman whose waist is still a temptation to span is either clever at camouflage or whittles down inches the exercise-way.

If your waistline is your particular worry, it's well to know about both methods of attack. Then, you can take your pick. The best plan, of course, is to use the camouflaging devices of corseting and dress and also work away at your exercises to take an actual reef in your belt.

If you want your girdle to give you a more nipped-in look, says one corsetiere who knows, you must compress flesh at the waist, and ease your hips out. You can't gird both hips and waist without getting a bulge at the top of your corset. So control the waistline, which gives you your figure, she says, and indulge hips in their wayward curves, which you can conceal with a flaring skirt.

Major Felt

look through the middle, wear a hightopped girdle. Then, keep an eye on that top to see that it continues to hug your body. Most corsets cling like a second skin for the first few times they are worn, and after that, they have a habit of giving way to the strain. So, if you want to keep stretchy fabric and supporting bones at work on the job, here are some things to do: Take up surplus flare with seamings as fast as fullness appears - or have your corsetiere do that for you. Have your slide-fastener taken out from time to time and sewed back in again for snugger fit. If upand-down bonings, which hold a girdle up from the waist to the diaphragm, develop curves of their own, rip or slide them out, and sew in new ones on the diagonal. This improvised slanting line keeps a high girdle up without warping these braces as you bend or sit.

Some Unusual Tricks

As FOR the camouflage of dress, you know all of the obvious tricks, such as stressing the up-and-down lines, thus avoiding the horizontals that widen your figure; avoiding any attentiongetting accents at the waist; and introducing fullness above and below the waist to make its dimensions look smaller. But to give you some little, out-of-the-ordinary tricks that you may not know, I turned to a designer. noted for her adroitness in idealizing figures with fabrics. She is Madame Valentina, who dresses such famous stars as Gladys Swarthout, Rosalind Russell, Ina Claire, Norma Shearer, Lily Pons, Lynn Fontanne and others equally well known to you.

If you want to minimize your waist the least obvious way, says our designer, hang your clothes from your shoulders, have plenty of freedom at the armholes and keep a good margin for movement through the waist. Any tight fit at the waist defeats your aims to make it look smaller. Omitting a belt is a helpful plan, but most daytime dresses call for a belt. So here are ways to have your belt and your waistline, too. Look for a belt that is narrower at the sides than it is in front and in the back. Or hoist your all-of-a-width belt higher in front than in the back to give you a slanting line — not a straight horizontal. Wear a dark belt on a light dress. Use the Grecian-girdling device for formal clothes — a decorative cord wrapped high under the bust, criss-crossed in the middle, and wrapped around your body again just above the hips. The assumption will be that the hidden waist is small.

Avoid bulk at the waist with underbeltings, doubling bands or sidefastening zippers. A zipper at the back or at the front will give you a much slimmer look than a fastener at the side. Don't give in entirely to sloping shoulders. Look for a discreet bit of padding to widen your figure at the top, thus making your waist look smaller by comparison.

An Easy-to-Take Routine

THAT'S that for deception. Now for a little honest work to unsheathe a once-slim waist from any superfluous paddings of flesh. That calls for exercise, but there is an easy-to-take routine, prescribed by a leading physical education expert. He is Harold J. Reilly, who gives you exercise the passive way with practically no fatigue-effects. What's more, these exercises build a tight muscular girdle that stays with you long after you reach your desired notch on the tape.

For the first two, you lie flat on your back on the floor or on a mat.

For the first, hold your arms outstretched and raised about as high as your head. Now straighten your legs, and hold them up at a 45 degree angle to your body. To the slow count of ten, gradually lower your legs to the floor. But with each count, relax and contract the muscles of the abdomen.

For the second exercise, lie in the same position as for the first, straighten out your legs, and raise them the same distance from the floor, as described above. But swing them first to the right side of your body and lower them to the floor to the slow count of five. Then swing your legs, raised at the same 45-degree angle, to the left of your body, and lower them to the slow count of five.

For the third exercise, turn over on your tummy, and stretch out your arms. But keep them on the floor or mat for support. Straighten your legs, and raise them as high as you can behind you without bending at the knees. To the count of ten, lower your legs as in the other exercises, relaxing and contracting muscles with each single count.

The Rule Worked

JUST tonight there was a fat guy in here with a vest that looked like a tent. He was the kind of a fellow who ought to get some exercise by shovin' himself away from the counter.

Tonight, however, he didn't eat. Just had a cup of coffee. He bought a bum a double order of stew an' half an apple pie. I found out later that the fat guy, lovin' food as much as he does, went home hungry because he had spent all his supper money on the bum.

I also found out that the bum wasn't such a bum after all. He was a longshoreman who had just spent three months in a hospital with a broken leg an' was on his way to a job he was promised, truckin' freight in a warehouse down in the railroad yards.

So I sit around tryin' to make sense out of all this.

I guess it is kind of out of place to bring up the subject in a world full of killin' and hate, but if everybody in the United States could have seen the Golden Rule workin' in my hashjoint tonight, it might have helped some.

Sooner or later all of us ought to get back to doin' unto others like we want to be done by. An' the sooner we do get back, the quicker the haters an' the killers will have to shut up shop.

Yes, sir, while fat men with big appetites can send themselves to bed hungry so hungrier guys can go to bed nourished, civilization ain't dead. It ain't even very sick. most of his life in underground tunnels which he himself has excavated, can run backwards as fast as he can forward.

ENRY ALDRICH, the typical American boy whose enterprises, escapades and havoccreating good intentions have entertained millions of radio listeners every week, goes in real life by the name of Ezra Stone. He is twenty-two years old, not very tall, has a live, browneyed, handsome face, a friendly, natural manner and an astonishing list of achievements.

When I saw him last, just before Uncle Sam called him into the army, he was hatless, wore his shirt open at the neck, and toted his hobby moviecamera, slung halterwise across his chest. For all his brilliant accomplishments, there was something genuinely "Henryish" about him - not least, his love of eating.

Long before the public had identified him forever and ever with Henry, Ezra Stone had proved himself a first-rate actor. He began acting at ten, when he got himself a place in a Philadelphia radio show. At twelve he went on tour with the National Junior Theater playing in those boyish pieces "Treasure Island" and "Tom Sawyer." School was distinctly and wholly an interruption to Ezra's preferred pursuits.

First Broadway Part

THEN Ezra went to the American Academy of Dramatic Art. There his great ability and his likable personality made friends and boosters of his erstwhile enemies, the teachers. One of them, Phillip Loeb, got him a part on Broadway in the Theater Guild's revue, "Parade." Next he was cast for the bad-boy part of the maddening but utterly well-meaning Mistol in "Brother Rat."

Meanwhile Ezra had become a

A "Henry" look comes into his face. "Oh," he says disgustedly, "maybe not, but it's good and I'll bet your readers would like it - the boys would, anyhow."

We agree. They would - and so would the men and so would the women. Here, therefore, are Ezra Stone's, alias Henry Aldrich's, favorite dishes.

What Ezra is m however, is directing and, perhaps, some day producing plays. "That is the fullest expression of dramatic art, for then you are responsible for the whole show and everyone in it, but as an actor you are only responsible for the shaping of one performance your own," Ezra says

His interest in this other aspect of dramatic work is one reason why Ezra today is teaching at the American Academy. "It keeps me from getting rusty," he explains, "and George Abbott lets me work right along with him.

"That's the sort of thing I like," he adds, "but you asked me about food. And food is an important factor in my life. You can tell that by looking at me, of course. But I can't get the kind of things I like when I eat at home with my mother in Brooklyn. Mother supplies me with lettuce and tomatoes and cottage cheese — the things she thinks would be good for my weight. But I like Chinese egg rolls, and barbecued spareribs, the way you can get them at Benny Goodman's brother's restaurant here in New York, or on the West Coast, or at a place in Birmingham, Alabama. I like Southern food, too, and I have an actor friend who has what we call a "kitchen club." We go up there to his kitchen and he

2 cups milk 1 unbaked pie shell

Combine sweet potatoes, butter and brown sugar. Beat egg yolks; add with salt, cinnamon and mace; mix thoroughly. Add walnuts and milk. Beat egg whites stiff; fold in. Pour into pie shell. Bake in a hot oven (425° F.) 15 minutes. Reduce heat to moderately hot (375° F.) and bake 25 minutes longer, or until firm. Cool. Top with whipped cream if desired. Yield: one 9-inch pie.

Chinese Egg Rolls

11/2 cups ground roast pork 1 medium onion, minced 4 teaspoons soy sauce 1 tablespoon salad oil 7 eggs, beaten 1/4 cup water 11/2 teaspoons sugar

Combine pork, onion and 1 teaspoon soy sauce; mix well. Heat salad oil in frying pan. Pour in a large spoonful of beaten eggs, as for pancakes. When set, place about 2 tablespoons of the meat mixture on onehalf of the egg "pancake" and fold over, like an omelet. Remove from pan. Repeat until eggs and meat are used. Combine water, sugar and remaining soy sauce; pour over rolls. Cover tightly and simmer 10 minutes. Approximate yield: 12 rolls.

not so happy — what is wrong, Dan?" "Where is he?" blurts Dan.

"Gone," says the landlady. "About an hour ago."

"Was he alone?"

"He was not," says the landlady. "He was with that dumpy little dame he runs around with, and he has her by the arm like he is real fond of her. He takes her in his car and says he is going to Mayville with her and won't be back for a few days."

Dan groans. Mayville is the county seat of the next county, and it is the most famous eloping spot for miles around, having a mayor and a town clerk and a marrying parson that are a regular Tinkers-to-Evers-to-Chance combination for teamwork.

"If you ask me," says the landlady, "she has got him hooked, and how she does it I will never know, because I get nowhere at all in the past ten years, and the Lord knows I tried!" Dan can't think what to do next.

So he leaves to tell his Kitty. She gives him a worried look when she opens the door for him. She sees the big guy is in a jam again. "Come in and tell me all about it, Inspector," she sighs. "It's Uncle Dennis. He's eloped." "How wonderful!" cried Kitty. "The way you look, I thought it was bad news."

"Yeah. But - "

"I congratulate you! I never thought you could ever marry that frostbite off. You are a lot smarter than I figured, Inspector!"

"I married him off, all right," moans Dan. "I married him off to a baby-faced female Bluebeard that rubs 'em out, one after another, just to grab a bit of insurance. Think what she'll do for a steady thing like a pension!"

KITTY sees it is serious. She doesn't even stop for her hat. Her car is parked at the curb. He jumps in with her, and they squirm through the city traffic and get out in the country. Mayville is thirty miles away, and they knock off twenty-five of them in half an hour without saying a word. Then Dan lets out a yell. "Stop! I think that is Uncle Dennis's car back there parked at the side of the road!" The tires scream, and in another minute they are back with the parked coupe. There are Uncle Dennis and Mrs. Macgregor in the car, and Uncle Dennis is waving and shouting happily. "Danny boy!" he says. "You're a sight for sore eyes! My rear axle's snapped and I'm stranded for sure." "Thank Heaven for that!"

"Mrs. Macgregor and me got to get to Mayville," says Uncle Dennis, "so we will just step into your car."

"You can step into our car," says Dan, "but you are not going to Mayville. I'm taking Mrs. Macgregor back to town."

"You can't do that, Danny!" Uncle Dennis cries out. "She's mine!"

"She's wanted at Headquarters," says Dan. "She's been working with a guy pulling some loft jobs."

"I don't care what she's done," says Uncle Dennis, looking like he is going to cry. "You can't take her away from me now!"

"You don't get it at all," says Dan sadly, feeling like a worm for breaking poor Uncle Dennis's heart like this. "Mrs. Macgregor is a bad egg and she fools me completely. The tip is out that she even rubs out two husbands already. She is alias Hazel Schultz, alias Tusenelda Newberry, alias Stella Dunks, and alias Madame Zellza."

Uncle Dennis looks at him calmly. "You missed one," he says. "She is also alias Hiccups Hattie and she is the dame who gives me the slip five years ago."

"Hiccups Hattie!" cries Dan. "And still you want to marry her!"

"Who wants to marry her?" says Uncle Dennis. "I'm taking her to Mayville to book her. It is the Mayville cops that are looking for her five years ago when she gives me the slip back in town." He leans over toward Dan. She has to lean too, because Uncle Dennis has bracelets on her.

"Don't take her away from me Danny boy!" he begs: "She puts the one black mark on my record, and I cannot rest till I rub it out. I work hard to get the dope on her. I do not suspect she is Hiccups Hattie until a week ago, when I buy her a drink. You remember how I find Hattie's fingerprints that she leaves on a bureau drawer? I keep a copy of those prints all the time in my private file. So when I take her out for a walk in the park the other night, I wear one of my old celluloid collars. We sit on a bench for a bit and get a little friendly, and that night when I go home I have some prints on my collar. That is how I know she is the real McCov."

"You are not so dumb, for a copper," growls Mrs. Macgregor, and she doesn't sound so motherly any more.

Uncle Dennis looks anxiously at Dan. "I know she is wanted back in town, Danny boy, but if you take her away from me you'll really ruin my whole life. When this Hattie gives me the slip five years ago, I am so sore at the whole female race I make a vow I will never look at one of them until I catch up with this Hattie and book her in Mayville on that fraud charge. And if I can't keep my vow, tell me how can I ever marry my landlady?" "Marry?" gasps Kitty. "You?"

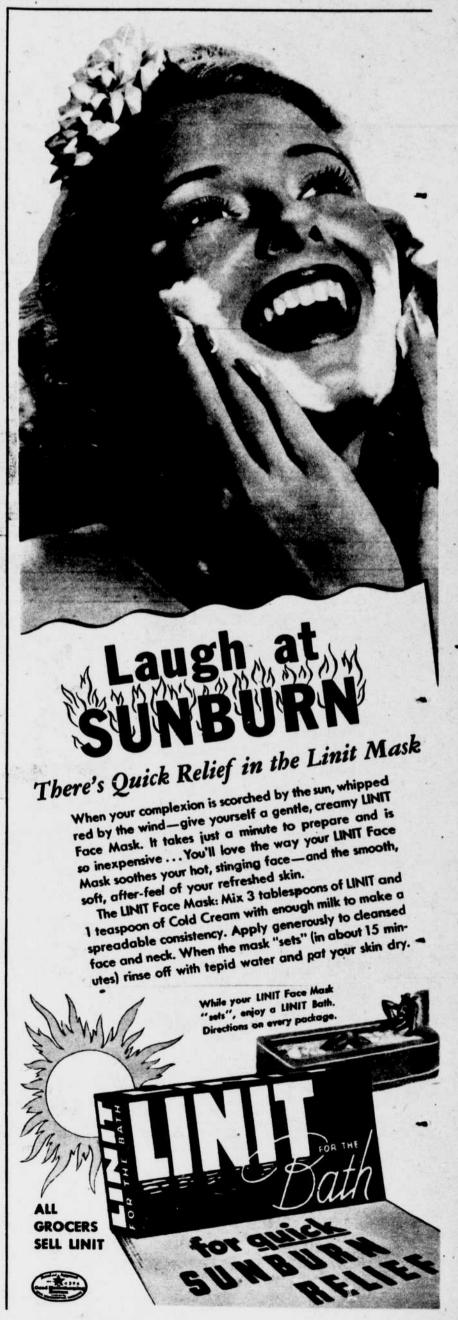

"I have been wanting to ask my landlady to marry me for the past five years, but I can't do it with a clear conscience with this Hattie on the loose. Now I catch up with her at last, but I got to get her indicted in Mayville before tomorrow night, because it is almost exactly five years since she pulls her job, and the first thing you know she will find a smart lawyer who will pull the statute of limitations out of a hat and she will go scot free!" Kitty is back in her car, and she has the motor running before he finishes talking. "What are you waiting for?" she calls.

Uncle Dennis climbs in the back seat with his Hattie. "I will never forget this, Kitty darling," he says. "Now maybe we can have a double wedding. And I tell you what we will do. We'll all four of us go off on a honeymoon together and — "

Kitty doesn't listen to the rest. She groans softly. "In-law trouble!" she whispers to Dan. "You can't escape." "I will think of something." Dan whispers back. "I'll fix everything." "Don't you dare!" says Kitty.

"I'd rather the trouble than that."" The End

As leaders of the world's great democracies, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill, met at sea for their solemn agreement to rid the world of tyrannical force and secure the future of free democracy. They are shown aboard H. M. S. Prince of Wales just after attending religious services. Behind them are, left to right, Harry Hopkins, W. The Fighting 29th . . . 1918-1941

This is what it meant to be a soldier of the fightin' 29th during the last war. The division lost 5,500 men, killed and wounded, mostly on the Meuse-Argonne front. Through a smoky hell these men advanced with their 37 mm. gun.

Today, at 61, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord commands the 29th Division with the agility of a deer and the force of a rhinoceros. After striding through a Fort Meade forest he questions Pvt. Daniel Firley about the aim of his howitzer. During the World War he was colonel of the division's 115th Infantry.

VETERANS of the 29th World War Division, the Blue and Gray, will meet in national reunion here for four days beginning Friday, at the Willard Hotel. On the right side of this page are presented five of their war memories. The outfit was thrown into battle after a period of training that was cut short, but Gen. Pershing declared at the time that "your fighting record is one of which all may be proud."

At the left is a glimpse of today's 29th, made up of about 11 selectees to 7 National Guardsmen. With basic training of both groups completed, the division soon will maneuver in big tactical problems to be worked out in the South.

Patience as well as heroism were demanded when the 29th ran into World War traffic tangles. Lacking were the fast Army convoy trucks of the present.

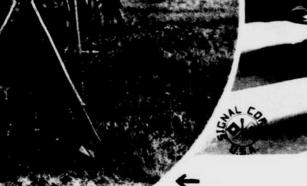

During recent maneuvers in Caroline County, Va., Col. D. John Markey, commander of the 115th, plots his strategy while sitting on a keg. In 1918 he was a division major.
