explosive international situation, if neutrality not in some of its more troublesome aspects, at least in a general way.

That could be ascertained from the advance announcement that the President's words would be of major significance and would be heard not only by the American people but also by the entire world in rebroadcasts in 14 languages.

Strong Repercussions.

A matter of immediate speculation was the possibility that Mr. Roosevelt would discuss the full implications of the naval action in the North Atlantic Thursday between a German submarine and the United States destroyer Greer. While neither vessel was hit, apparently, the incident brought strong repercussions both in Germany and the United States.

Reporters relayed a summary of the communique to the President through William D. Hassett, a presidential secretary. No comment was fore, to question whether the episode forthcoming, but soon afterward would aggravate relations between Mr. Roosevelt's speaking plans were disclosed.

Some persons having close connection with the temporary White House suggested that Mr. Roosevelt's reaction to the communique might take the form of strengthening his proclaimed determination publicly lanes to Iceland must be that sea kept open, that delivery of war supplies to foes of the Axis must "more greatly safeguarded" and that "we must do everything in our power" to crush Hitlerism.

Steps May Remain Secret.

It was noted, however, that any new steps to carry out these policies probably would not be announced to the world, but would remain a military secret.

They are policies which the Chief Executive has enunciated in press conferences and in a Labor Day speech last Monday.

Mr. Roosevelt failed to mention Japan and the crisis in the Far East in his Labor Day address, and some persons thought they might command a share of attention Monday.

Conjectures on the possible range of the address went so far as to cover the chances that the President might be getting ready to ask his countrymen to take up arms against Hitler and his allies, but there was absolutely no basis for putting such a step in any category but pure speculation and guesswork.

Whether the German communique today had crystallized a presidential decision to go on the air Monday was not ascertained, although Mr Hassett indicated that Mr. Roose-

Incident Within War Zone.

Anyway, it was contended, that was beside the point in view of the assertion that the U-boat was being attacked. Besides its defense of the submarine's conduct on that score, the communique pointed out that the incident occurred in water proclaimed by the German government as a war zone and that the submarine commander properly could have presumed that the warship was British. In the Wilhelmstrasse view, therefore, it was asserted. Germany was

Administrative Bill To Boost Tax Total, George Predicts

Senator Believes House Conferees Will Accept Lower Exemptions

By J. A. O'LEARY. Chairman George of the Senate Finance Committee predicted yesterday that the $3,583,900,000 total in the tax bill now entering its final stages probably will be further boosted when administrative features of the revenue laws are revised in a separate bill this fall. At the same time, the Georgian congressional quarters that the House conferees on the pending bill will accept the lower personal income exemptions by which the Senate added $303,000,000 to the tax

Priority Requested For Homes Needed In Defense Areas

Builders' Committee Asks S. P. A. B. to Set Up Regulations at Once

Declaring that uncertainty on the whole subject of priorities is delaying construction of needed homes in defense areas, a committee of the Home Builders' Institute of America, meeting here yesterday, urged the Supplies, Priorities and Allocations Board to set up regulations immedijoined in the belief held in other ately and arrange for their administration.

In a letter to Donald M. Nelson, board director, the committee, composed of builders throughout the Nation, pointed out that construction of badly needed housing in many defense areas has come to a virtual standstill because builders are uncertain they will be able to obtain materials.

New Group Appointed.

The committee made a number of recommendations to Mr. Nelson designed to define specifically the term "defense housing" and clarify it for builders. They made suggestions on the administration of housing priorities. A committee was named which will meet here from time to time to receive or offer suggestions with respect to priorities, price controls and substitute materials.

The committee will include John McC. Mowbray, Baltimore. chair-George said it may have the effect | man; Waverly Taylor, president of the Washington Real Estate Board; Fritz Burns, Los Angeles; Edmund Kuhlman, Detroit, and E. L. Crain, Houston.

The group suggested that priorities for housing in defense areas be given on homes up to $7,500 in value, based on building costs as of September 1. with authority invested in the defense housing co-ordinator to establish maximums for comerty amendment is another potential munities in conformity with varying local costs. The Priorities Board had set $6,000 as a maximum cost for "defense housing."

The committee pointed out that the home building industry is local in character and said the administration of priorities should be decentralized as far as possible. They recommended that some existing A., be used for administration of regulations, as that organization has offices operating in-all areas.

Parity Rating Sought.

Priority ratings on a parity with that issued for defense housing should be given to any residential the next bill. He said opponents of construction already under way, the committee stated. # Leningrad Defenses Penetrated at One Point, Nazis Claim

Strong Attacks by Planes And Artillery Preceded Advance, Germans Say

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, Sunday, Sept. 7.-Germans reported today that they had penetrated the defenses of Leningrad in at least one place after attacks by strong German air force units and long-range artillery bombardment

War Correspondent Kurt Stolzenberg wrote that "We found a soft place in the defense belt around Leningrad and advanced further."

Nazi Cycle Units Nearby. While the site of the advance was not specified, the correspondent said his units approached the former Czarist capital on "forest lanes and byways." The description indicated that German motorcycle units were established in a town near Leningrad.

"Around our town resound shots fired by our batteries," wrote Stolzenberg, "and hits in the forests sound as if heavy, high gates were rumbling in a castle."

The News agency DNB said Russian field and artillery positions were subdued by powerful blows of German bombers and that the Russians "suffered exceptionally heavy losses.

More Obstacles Confronted.

Great concentrations of Soviet troops in the Leningrad area were declared to have been scattered as the German forces sought to win the city, a strategic prize on the right flank of the Russian line. Stolzenberg said that as the Germans approached Leningrad more and more obstacles were presented -highways broken by mine traps, mine fields and tree trunk and concrete fortresses.

Men, women and children, he wrote, were used in the preparation of these defenses.

Authentic Reports Meager.

Discussion of the Greer case diverted attention from developments on the east front, and although the war raged furiously over much of it, authentic reports were meager. The high command in just one sentence vesterday said the German operations were "progressing favorably. A German dispatch from the front stated that in the past few hours the Germans had made progress southeast of Gomel on the central front to a position which was beginning to menace the rear defenses of Kiev, industrialized capital of the Ukraine. It was claimed also that the GerThe City Musters Forces for Total War on Rats An army of modern Pied Pipers, equipped with pellets and traps instead of the pipes and tunes which brought Hamelin's rat charmer so much fame ... That's the dream of municipal health officials, who have hit on the idea of having every citizen help to rid Washington of one of man's most relentless and destructive enemies-the common house rat.

Now, the mighty rat is a prolific and brainy pest. It will eat almost anything-varnish, soap, chickens, glue or lead water pipes. It may spread serious diseases - plague, typhus fever, spirochetal jaundice and tularemia. And it costs the country several hundred million dollars a year.

The health officials believe everybody knows these things, but they like such facts to be repeated to promote intolerance toward the ubiquitous pests. They don't think the campaign they are planning will be successful unless the people get good and mad at the rats. Plan for War on Rats.

The war against the pests will be carried out by the health officer and his Rodent Control Committee through citizens' associations and other civic groups. Briefly, here's the plan: The president of a civic group

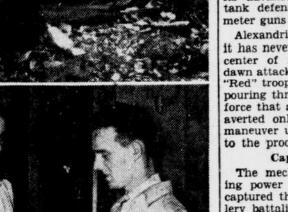

To do your part in the war on rats, you may have to resort to traps, with the aid of your block supervisor. Another step comes first, however.

tral Committee on Rodent Control. The chairman names square supervisors and block managers. who will make surveys to find the location of rat harborages and distribute bait.

That's where the little pellets come in. Probably the most successful of all rat poisons is red squill, which is derived from a perennial bulb that grows wild along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. This powdered poison is mixed with hamburger. salmon or some other bait and made into small round pellets. As a rat poison, red squill has the advantage of being relatively harmless to human beings and domestic animals. It has an acrid taste which is highly objectionable to most animals. Rats, however, usually take it readily, so that the poison approaches the status of being a poison specific to rats. Health officials who have worked on rat extermination find the pests are intelligent and full of quirks. They wrap the poison pellets in paper because they've found the rats will go after these quicker than unwrapped ones.

Cannon Boat Destroyed.

On the lower Dnieper River in the Ukraine another Russian cannon boat was reported destroyed. A dispatch declared that boats of this type, averaging 200 tons, were assigned to break up German efforts to cross the river, which is beginning to figure in the news as one of Russia's strongest defenses in the southeast.

There have been frequent clashes along the river between Germans and the Russian shore artillery. The Germans claim to have destroyed about 40 river boats since August 21. In the vicinity of Odessa, besieged Russian Black Sea port, heavy German air attacks were said to have greatly damaged port facilities and four ships totalling 17,000 tons and to have inflicted numerous casualties among Russian defense forces.

Cossacks crept up to the German for counterattacks which thrust the lines German infantry out of the village of "K" in front of Kiev, Red Star reported. Red Army infantry then drove the demoralized Germans 5 after a 6-hour battle featured by kilometers (about 3 miles) outside the village, it added. Tass, the official Russian news agency, said Kiev had smashed two major attempts at conquest within the past month.

One was begun on August 8 with three divisions of German soldiery and three and a half regiments of artillery, Tass stated. All three divisions were listed as routed.

A new onslaught came on August the German force. Again the Russians hurled it back with heavy losses, Tass said.

Rumanian troops next tried to rush Odessa, but they too were hurled back with appalling losses, it was said.

The Soviet writer Ezra Vilensky, just returned from Odessa as a war like (without expense to the Seleccorrespondent for Izvestia, the official government newspaper, said all of Odessa had become a giant fortress surrounded by outer fortifications so thick and high that neither tanks nor shells could crush them. The citizen volunteers of that old port, which sits strategically atop 150-foot bluffs, have torn up the streets to make barricades of the cobblestones, he said.

The fortifications are a series of rings so built that the city can be captured "only if no single person inside remains alive," Vilensky said. They are being built under supervision of Arkady Fyodorovich Khrenov, a veteran of the Finnish war and a hero of the Soviet Union.

Seal Sale Chairman For Arlington Named

Mrs. J. Blaine Gwin, former assistant secretary of the Texas Public Health Association, has been named seal sale chairman for the Arlington County (Va.) Tuberculo-sis Association, Dr. Charles P. Cake, president, announced yesterday. Mrs. Gwin, who also has been associated with the District Tuberculosis Association, succeeds Mrs. Norbert Melnick, who will continue to serve as treasurer of the county organization

"It is imperative that each resident of Arlington County be made acquainted with the purpose of the seal sale and be given an opportunity to participate in it." Dr Cake said. "The tuberculosis control program has to increase along with the population growth to be effective.

Mrs. Gwin has called a meeting of her committee for Tuesday at which plans for the 1941 drive will be outlined. Among officials who will meet with the committee are Miss Frances Brophy, adviser of the National Tuberculosis Association; Miss Leslie Foster, executive secretary of the Virginia Tuberculosis Association and Miss Ruth Harris, field adviser for the State Association for Northern Virginia.

Slain Hostages Reported Selected From Camp of Communist Prisoners

By the Associated Press.

VICHY, Unoccupied France, Sept. 6.-Three French hostages, reported selected from among Communist prisoners of a concentration camp, were executed by a German firing squad at Paris today in reprisal for an attack in which a German sergeant was slightly wounded three days ago.

Unofficial advices reaching Vichy reported that the three Frenchmen were removed from the Drancy camp near Paris at dawn, lined up before a wall and shot to death. They were not identified.

Warning of August 22 Cited. Gen. von Schaumberg, commander of the city of Paris, in a military announcement published in Paris newspapers called attention to his warning of August 22 that hostages would be executed if further attacks should be made on German troops in the Paris region.

"Despite this warning." the announcement said, "a member of the German Army has been the victim of a new attack September 3. Inquiry has shown the guilty party could have been none other than a French Communist. As reprisals for this dastardly action three French hostages have been shot." The wounded German sergeant, who also has not been identified. suffered only a flesh wound and was reported recovering. He was shot once in the shoulder as he walked on the street near the east station.

Camp for Communists.

The Drancy camp has been used for imprisonment of most of the French Communists arrested during demonstrations in Paris and its Of Big Liner Believed suburbs.

The French moved swiftly to set up legal machinery in an attempt to stamp out acts of terrorism which might lead to further reprisal executions.

At an inner cabinet meeting it was decided that Pierre Pucheu, who as Minister of the Interior is in charge of French police, would leave for Paris soon on an urgent mi> sion in connection with preservation of order.

Roosevelt's Son-in-Law Declares Service's Popularity Is Waning

By the Associated Press.

SEATTLE, Sept. 6 .- The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, whose publisher, John Boettiger, is President Roosevelt's son-in-law, charged in an editorial today that the Navy's popularity with newspaperman had "di-minished dangerously" as a result of Secretary of the Navy Knox's woefully misguided orders affecting the press.'

The editorial was prompted by an Incident which occurred Thursday on the arrival of a Russian military air mission. Newsmen and photographers were halted by Navy revolver shots after they had sailed their press boats within the restricted area of the naval air station. The editorial said in part:

"The firing upon American newspapermen by United States Navy men at Sand Point is about the last straw Regulations Called Stupid.

"It culminates a long series of incidents of officiousness, stupid regulations and a lack of co-operation which would seem to indicate that the United States Navy, in our knowledge at least, is trying to deliberately alienate the American press. · · ·

'There have been other incidents which are equally vexing. At least half of the 500,000 people around Seattle are wholly aware of certain facts which the United States, in concert with the British Admiralty, has asked the newspapers to withhold from their readers.

"The Post-Intelligencer under this mandate has co-operated fully, but the situation has not improved Navy-press relations. * * * Popularity Held Diminished. "The public relations of the Navy until Frank Knox became its Secretary were the highest of any branch of military service or of any department of the Government, and that is saying a great deal.

"Since Mr. Knox became Secretary and as a result of his woefully misguided orders affecting the press the popularity of the Navy has diminished dangerously.

"The War Department, on the other hand, under the able administration of Mr. Stimson, has built Its press relations to an admirable degree. There is fullest respect and co-operation between local Army officials and the press. • • • "It is ironical that Mr. Knox, a the American Navy and the American press.

patrol boat which had set out afser the press boat. O'Neil said he did not hear the first warning shots across his bow, probably because of the roar of boat and airplane motors. But the fourth one nearly hit his boat. He said the chief petty officer, whose name was not disclosed, told him afterward: "The fourth was a line shot and

It must have ricocheted off the water right near you. If it had been a little higher, it might have hit you." A young aviation mate, third

Only 15,000 Ostriches Left in African District

Only 15,000 ostriches remain in the Oudtshoorn district of South Africa, it is reported in Capetown. Once renowned because of the size of its flocks, this section of Cape Province has but one-seventh the birds possessed in the record year of 1911, when it had no fewer than 110,578 ostriches. War years saw the industry decline, the census of 1916 showing only 69,115 plumebearers

In good times $4,000 was paid for a pair of birds, and alfalfa country, providing suitable fodder, sold for more than $1,200 an acre. A slight increase in feather exports occurred just before the present war, but since then the decline has been rapd. The last available figure gives annual exports a value of about $121,000 in comparison with a value of nearly $12,000,000 in 1913.

Truck Shortage Cuts Burma Road Supplies

Free China's supplies by way of the Burma road are limited by shortage of trucks and spare parts, which are arriving slowly at Rangoon, Burma. Those in use deteriorate rapidly because of mishandling and bad roads. Moreover, "dumbbell" highway pattern holds down traffic volume between Kunming and Wantung. Bombings of the road, directed wholly at two river crossings, have not interfered seriously with traffic. Arrivals of trucks at Kunming, a big distribution center on the road, have increased greatly since last October, as has net cargo tonnage. Some types of cargo, in order of total volume, are gasoline, military supplies, cotton yarn, piece goods from the United States, iron and steel plates and bars, motor tires and automobile accessories.

Is Hailed in Japan

Japan has a new, synthetic rubber made by a process which its inventor, Tadao Shiba, an engineer of the commerce and industry ministry in Tokio, considers simpler and cheaper than any hitherto devised.

He developed a method of producing rubber from acetylene hydrogen after three years' research. The system is less complicated than the German process and is unlike the prevailing Japanese system which requires potatoes. The Shiba process yields more crude synthetic rubber in a shorter time than the present method, and the product is more durable and oil resisting than natural rubber.

Says Nazis Run True to Form. Senator Wallgren, Democrat, of Washington commented: "The Germans are running true to form. They are always putting the blame on others. First they invade a country and then claim they were attacked."

Senator Ellender, Democrat, of Louisiana: "It's silly to say that a 600, to replace the present Birney United States ship would make an attack to try and get us into war. That's just typical German propaganda.'

Senator Capper, Republican, of Kansas, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and one who has not voted consistently for administration foreign measures, directly challenged the truth of the Nazi statement.

"My opinion is that the Germans have made some misstatements in their communique," he said. "I can hardly believe that the President would order our warships to attack in an effort to incite the people into war. Beyond that, there is little that can be said until all the facts are known."

Nazis' Claim Discounted. The claim made by the Nazis that the attack took place in the blockade zone declared by them months ago, and which extended south of Iceland, did not make much im-pression here. This blockade has not been effective, it was pointed out, and therefore could not be considered a blockade.

The Greer incident served to revive again talk of amendments to the Neutrality Act, which at present forbids American ships from entering ports of belligerent nations. Pacific ports were specifically exempted from this prohibition in the act. Russia was not then at war. The shipments of materials from this country in American ships to Russia through Vladivostok were therefore not covered.

It was disclosed that several weeks ago serious discussions took place between leading administration members of Congress and high Government officials regarding the possibility and advisibility of amending the Neutrality Act. The matter was dropped for the time.

No Immediate Action Expected. Senator Connally said yesterday the proposal might again be revived, although he did not expect any immediate action along this line.

In some congressional quarters surprise was expressed that the Germans should have made an attack on an American naval vessel in view of their apparent desire not to draw this country into the conflict, certainly at this time. One Democratic member of the Senate who did not care to be quoted said he regarded the incident as "isolated," and that he did not believe it would have great effect on the situation. "Such incidents are bound to occur from time to time." he added. "in view of the situation which now exists."

Another Senator expressed the opinion that the attack might well ce Cranch and Tyler present building is again showing structural changes that in the not

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6 .- Wendell L. Willkie today called on the United States to use "determination and force" to meet Germany's challenge to its policy of freedom of the seas. Speaking on a C. B. S. radio program celebrating the 18th birthday anniversary of exiled King Peter of Yugoslavia, the 1940 Republican presidential nominee declared, "Once again, savage and bestial might has challenged the right of America to freedom of the seas."

"I know I speak the overwhelming sentiment of my fellow Americans in urging the President to meet the challenge with determination and force," Mr. Willkie said. "I hope, and I know you hope, that the President of the United States serves notice on Nazi Germany that the United States expects its ships to go unmolested in their passage the result they are entitled to.

out that gasoline could be carried in canal barges from Texas and The Plains. Baton Rouge, La., to the eastern approaches to the intracoastal canal. From this point, he added, the fuel could be transferred to a pipeline or to railroad tank cars for transportation to Jacksonville and then for delivery by barges along the Eastern seaboard.

Mr. Mansfield also pointed out in his letter to Admiral Land that WARE, MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, barge shipments easily could be ETC., ACCEPTED AS SECURITY made to the Midwes by way of the Mississippi River. The Representative also pointed out the facility with which gasoline could be transported by barge to rail heads for delivery at inland points.

Advantages Cited. "A considerable quantity of gasoline is now carried North from Baton Rouge by barges on the Mississippi River, but a great deal more could be carried on this river, on Its tributaries, and on the intracoastal waterways mentioned. I suggest that you consider building barges and towboats for our inland waterways. In many respects," he wrote, "inland waterway transportation has advantages over sea-going transportation for defense purposes and an almost unlimited number of depots could be located along our inland waterways."

While Chairman Mansfield was seeking to find means for increased deliveries of oil products to the Eastern Seaboard, the American Automobile Association announced there was a widespread disregard by gasoline retailers in this area for the fair price schedule established by Leon Henderson, price administrator, recently.

Excessive Prices Charged.

Its charge was based on a survey conducted in 18 cities, 11 of which reported excessive prices. Prices charged motorists above the fair price level reached as high as 1.6 cents in Burlington, Vt., and 1.5 cents in Philadelphia and Norfolk, the report stated.

By THOMAS R. HENRY, Star Staff Correspondent

REYKJAVIK, Iceland. - When blue-green Iceland rises out of seafog American troops, eagerly crowding troopship decks after nearly 3.000 miles at sea, look upon an almost continuous high wall of mountains with farmsteads and British camps at the foot of them.

Now and then a green valley seems to cut far into the interior. The mountain slopes are decked with silver threads-the ice-cold brooks from the glaciers which lie beyond. Across the 2,000-feet-high hills is a realm of mystery which the troops take the first opportunity to explore

From the sea the encircling mountains do not look so difficult but when parties are allowed on shore only the hardiest are able to make the crests after rather dangerous ascents

The slopes are extremely steep; above the grass line they are composed largely of loose, rotten rock which affords precarious toe and finger holds and is likely to give way at any moment. Also, where brooks spread out from their channels these rocks are slippery and as cold as ice. There is constant danger of broken ankles or legs.

Persistence Rewarded.

When, with palpitating heart, one reaches what appears to be the crest it is only to see another steep incline ahead. But the persistent are rewarded-perhaps with an expanse of sublime desolation or perhaps by the sight of a bright-green, brookwatered valley with two or three thatch-roofed farmhouses and a typical Icelandic churchyard.

Mexico's Two Largest and Most Modern Radio Stations Offer a Wide Variety of Service

Under Mexico's expansion and modernization program for cities, public utilities, agriculture, transportation systems, highways and other services for the social and economic betterment of the people, radio facilities have kept step in improvements.

Station XEW, which started in 1930 with 5,000 watts, and was increased in 1933 to 50,000 watts, is now a powerful 100,000-watt station. Its short-wave transmitter XEWW is a 10,000 watt station which supplements the parent station.

These two stations are the largest and most modern in the Republic of Mexico. They have mutual rights of rebroadcasting services; connections with the British Broadcasting Company; connections with all chains of the National Broadcasting Company and all stations in all of Latin America.

Both stations are owned by the Mexican company known as Cadena Radiodifusora Mexicana, S. A. Main studios and offices are located at Ayuntamiento 54, Mexico City, while the plant is in the suburb of Coapa, D. F. Emilio Azcarraga is general manager and Othon M. Velez is assistant general manager.

Truth That Is Stranger Than Fiction:

Asbestos Water Pipes Used For Water and Sewage Systems

Until about 1933, practically all of the piping used in the Republic of Mexico was cast iron and imported at a fairly high cost; as a result, the laying of water and sewage pipes throughout the country was limited.

That year, however, found Senor Emilio D'Acosta, the general manager of Techo Eterno Eureka, S. A., producers of asbestos cement products, traveling to Europe to see what was being done in that continent. The result of that trip was the purchase of modern pipe machinery and by 1936, this company was producing pipes, tanks and sheeting inferior to none.

Without going into the technical exposition of methods used, suffice it to say that today Techno Eterno Eureka, S. A., is the most successful asbestos-cement concern in the Western Hemisphere; more than 80 populations in Mexico have pure drinking water and efficient sewage systems installed with these pipes, and which are resistant to fire, water, earthquake (due to type of installation) and guaranteed to last indefinitely.

This firm is headed by Sr. M. Suarez, V. P., and Sr. Emilio D'Acosta is still managing director. Over 300 workers are employed in addition to a staff of 50 employees including 8 engineers.

Steel and Iron for Mexican Industry Comes From This Modern, Improved Plant

Modern, improved flont Fundidora de Pierro y Acero de Monterrey, S. A., with offices at Balderas 68, Mexico City, produces steel and iron to meet the constantly growing needs of the Republic of Mexico. It manufactures steel for springs (round and flat) for locomotives, raitroad cars, autos, etc.; square steel "Azteca" for tools; iron ingots for foundries; iron bars and balls for mining: rails and accessories from 12 to .122 lbs, per yard; screws for agricultural implements and machine, car and auto screws and nails; carbon or man-ganese electric steel; structural steel for factories, commercial buildings, residences, theaters, markets, bridges, etc. Its present blast furnace has a capacity of 350 tons daily--soon to be increased to 500 tons with a newer blast furnace. Plants are located at Monterrey, N.L., Mexico. Agencies in Guadalairas. New York, N.Y., and El Paso, Tex., U. S. A. Public may visit laboratories and technical offices.

Senor Jose Salcedo has maintained that perfume is the all-important thing a customer wishes to purchase, rather than a fancy bottle, and adheres to the practice of featuring perfumes in bulk and permitting the customer to select a container. In this way he has consistently been able to save money for thousands of customers who want the best imported French perfumes. Needless to say, most all tourists visit the 12-year-old Casa Salcedo during their visit to Mexico City to make selections from Senor Salcedo's practically unlimited range of odors . . . retail or wholesale.

"La Liga de las Canciones" ("The League of Songs")

-A New Mexican Film Now In Production!

Mexican film producers are jumping on the Pan Ameri-can solidarity band wagon too. America Films, S. A., a newly organized producing concern headed by Mauricio de La Serna, associate producer in "La Noche de los Mayas" (The Dark Night of the Mayas), Mexican prize picture, and president of the Mexican Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, and Alfonso Sanchez Tello, who made the internationally celebrated "Alla en el Rancho Grande" (Way Down on Rancho Grande), is producing a musical comedy romance intended to bring the peoples of the Americas closer together through a better knowledge of their music.

The picture, which is being jointly produced by De la Serna and Sanchez Tello under the title of "La Liga de las Canciones" (The League of Songs), will have the best popular songs from most of the Latin American republics to be sung and played by such well known Latin American singers and musicians as Mexican Ramon Armengod, who has just completed a triumphant series of radio and per-sonal appearances in New York and Hollywood, Mapy Cortes, piquant Cuban songstress, and Jorge Reyes, noted Argentine tango singer.

The production will be lavishly mounted. with many of the musical numbers staged against colorful backgrounds typical of the country which originated them. It also will have several review scenes with folk dances from diverse Latin American countries. All in all America Films, S. A.'s first effort bids fair to be one of the really big pictures of the Spanish-language screen.

It must be noted that Clifford Carr, an American actor often seen in Mexican-made films, will have the important role of a Hollywood film magnate looking for Latin American talent. Other important parts will be played by Domingo Soler and Consuelo Guerrero.

The music and songs for "La Liga de las Canciones" were ritten especially by such topnotch composers as Manuel

Some went out without attention. For this, we are sorry! Furniture salesmen are not made in a day! Certainly not the kind who can intelligently aid you with your quality furniture selections! Our regular sales force was augmented by all who could really assist you. Still, everybody did not get cared for! # Boston Station Fights Nazi Propaganda In South America

Chinese Girl Teaches Basic English Course To Latin Neighbors

By BLAIR BOLLES. Walter S. Lemmon, who came to Washington for conferences with the State Department, says his shortwave radio station WRUL, in Boston, is "hitting hard against the German lies" in broadcasts to Latin American countries as well as to Europe.

WRUL-World Radio Universityis stepping up the tempo of its battle of the airwaves against the Nazis in the Spanish and Portuguesespeaking new world, where the Germans have been actively propagandizing against the United States almost since the day Adolf Hitler rose to power.

"There are nearly 2,000,000 radio sets in Latin America capable of hearing American stations," Mr. Lemmon said. "Since the war began the Nazis have been able to export only a few German-made sets to the Western Hemisphere. The number of American-made sets is increasing.

"The Germans used to sell sets in South America manufactured in a way to make it impossible for their users to get any but Nazi stations and Nazi propaganda. That day is fast passing."

Virtues of Democracy Praised. With the help of the American Government, station WRUL gives a course to Latin Americans in the theory of aviation. It teaches the Morse telegraphic code. It conducts a travel program which acquaints Latin Americans with the beauty spots and culture of our cities. It provides Latin Americans with semiclassical dinner music.

The speakers over the shortwave radio from Boston interlard these practical programs with direct references to the virtues of the democratic system, which are subjected to ceaseless attack from the radio broadcasts out of Germany arranged by Joseph Goebbels.

The station also provides South row morning to take up questions America with a weekly summary of related to the League of Nations. the American national defense effort. He dreamed of a radio station munications and transit organizawhich could serve as a university for the whole earth, and in the middle 1930s his dream came true. WRUL was established in Boston, in order to have it near the great minds of Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. When the war began, Mr. Lemmon turned his university into a cultural weapon for the democracies. He entered the airwayes fight, directing programs against the Axis in every continent. Now he is a vice president of the International Business Machines Corp., as well as and others. president of WRUL, dividing his time among New York, Boston and Washington.

Mr. Lemmon thought that teaching the English language would go a long way toward developing an understanding of this country among the descendants of the Iberian peoples living in Latin America. Basic English has a fundamental vocabulary of 850 words, to which are added 200 words to cover the needs of any particular field.

Basic English is widely taught in the Far East and among the Asiatics who learned our language through that medium is a pretty little Chinese girl, Pin Pin Tan. She was graduated from Yenching University in China and in 1939 from Radcliffe College, Boston. Spanish Also Taught.

Pin Pin Tan organizes the WRUL English course and various persons at the station broadcast it. Instruction is given on a regular school basis. Once a year the pupils are given an examination over the air and they send in their papers for correction and marking.

The English lessons and the messages of democracy inspire many listening Latin Americans to forward suggestions to Boston about improving the usefulness of WRUL. A Venezuelan sends to Boston scripts for broadcasts aimed at acquainting Latin-American countries with each other, because there is a gulf of ignorance between, say, Colombia and Chile about the two nations and their ways.

In order to spread the good neighbor spirit two ways, Mr. Lemmon has a course teaching Spanish to North Americans, which can be heard in South America. There the wife of an American businessman has been learning Spanish by tuning in WRUL. The station can be heard by radios with short-wave facilities on band 49, 6.04 megacycles. The programs are sent out from two 50,000-watt transmitters located at Heatherly Beach, Mass., near Cape Cod.

1,250,000 Overcoats Ordered by Army

From 27 Mills The War Department is taking no chances on a possible overcoat shortage next winter and has placed orders with 27 mills for 1,250,000 wool overcoats for the Army.

The orders averaged $170.787 for lots of 50,000, that number being allotted to 24 firms. The other three firms will produce smaller lots.

In addition, contracts were awarded for large quantities of supplies for the Army's ski troopers, some of whom are now serving in Alaska and must be equipped for any emergency calls to distant northern areas. Included in the orders were 137,104 Arctic silver gray socks, 68.996 pounds of ski wax, 6,600 snow goggles, 58,008 sets of ski and snowshoe bindings and 1,277 Alaska snowshoes.

Perhaps You Remember

THIS IS NOT the first time that you have called upon Dodge automotive plants and men to meet a National Emergency. You probably remember that you called them to the colors once before; that you found their service good; that their dependability was not a catch-word, but a watch-word, in France and on the training fields at home, for the highest mechanical excellence.

Now again you have called Dodge to the National Defense. And Dodge has swiftly answered. Already many thousands of its highly trained men have been transferred from the work of building motorcars to the more urgent and crucial tasks of building army trucks, tanks, guns and airplane assemblies. Again Dodge is throwing its great industrial weight into your program of Defense. And, as you require, Dodge will again remain a defense force, with every ounce of its energy, every inch of the way.

You May Also Recall

You may clearly remember that the first time you called on Dodge for aid in National Defense, its motorcars were reaching the very peak of their first young success. Then suddenly, remember, there were fewer of them because there were fewer men to make them, and less material to make them with. Perhaps you also remember that it was these fewer Dodge cars, and the qualities inherent in them, that helped to lay the lasting foundation for a world-wide reputation for Dependability.

Later-A Quarter Century

Now again Dodge moves full speed ahead in the service of the Government of the United States. Dodge does this with full knowledge of its duty and full confidence in your own respect for the spirit that is Dodge. These cars will, of course, always remain at their finest. You may approach the purchase of your own new Dodge with complete conftdence in its enduring value, - its ability to serve you extremely well for even more years than you would normally choose to drive it. It is a firm and final fact that these are the finest cars that Dodge has ever built.

There can be no curtailment of Dodge quality ... no substitute for Dodge Dependability.

Greer Case Linked to Nazi Crisis in Atlantic

By MAJ. GEORGE FIELDING ELIOT.

The existing situation in the North Atlantic was bound to give rise to such incidents as that between the U. S. S. Greer and a German submarine. As pointed out recently in these articles, the Germans must now, faced as they appear to be with a winter campaign In Russia and with possibilities of a peace offensive fading, he giving careful consideration to the position in the Atlantic.

They must, in particular, be asking themselves whether they can find any effective means of stopping the flow of American war materials in increasing quantity to Great Britain. Unless they can do so, it seems certain that by spring there will be in Great Britain an offensive air force superior to anything Germany possesses, particularly in view of her Russian commitments, and that from Great Britain this force will be striking with ever increasing power and range at German heavy industry and internal communications.

This can hardly fail to result in serious damage to Germany's warmaking ability through mounting losses of material and loss of morale by the German people and in increasing by leaps and bounds the hopes and, therefore, the will to resist of the captive peoples of the European continent.

Convoys Arriving Regularly.

Likewise it seems certain that increased arrivals of tanks, armored cars, artillery, machine guns and ammunition will enable the British to collect a striking force with which the continent may actually be invaded, if the Russian campaign continues to drain Germany's ning perhaps with raids on a comparatively small scale, might later on be carried to more ambitious lengths-such, for example, as an Brittany with its vitally important naval and air bases, from Germany hands.

Sugar prices declined fractionally and no changes were reported during the month in the costs of dairy and bakery products and cereals.

Retail food prices throughout the country increased 1.2 per cent to reach the highest point in 10 years. They are now 12.3 per cent above the level of a year ago. Preliminary reports from 18 cities indicate the rise continued during the last half of August, the bureau said.

Only Laurel, Md., Will Delay Session, With Seven Reported III

Public health officials in areas near Washington said yesterday they saw no reason to postpone opening of schools tomorrow because of the increase in infantile paralysis cases, but in Laurel, Md., school opening was delayed two weeks because seven cases were reported there.

Current localized outbreaks do not forecast a nationwide epidemic of poliomeylitis, the Census Bureau said yesterday. Its records show the disease usually reaches its peak in August and September. If it follows the seasonal pattern of past years, the number of new cases should decrease from now on, the bureau said.

Postponement of the Laurel school opening was ordered by Prince Georges County education officials as a precautionary measure, against the advice of Dr. J. M. Byers, county health officer, who said he thought nothing would be gained by the move. The Board of Education acted, however, after a mass meeting yesterday attended by nearly 100 parents.

All other schools in Prince Georges County are to open tomorrow as scheduled.

D. C. Situation "Not Alarming."

"The situation in the District is nothing to become alarmed about." Dr. James G. Cummings, in charge of the epidemiology division of the District of Columbia Health Department, said.

There have been 36 cases reported this year, 25 in August, 6 so far in September and 5 prior to August 1, he said. The situation is not serious when one considers Washington's population growth, Dr. Cummings declared.

Dr. Byers said 17 cases of poliomyelitis have been reported in Prince Georges County, 3 since Thursday, 1 of them being in Laurel and 2 in Hyattsville.

Arlington County (Va.) schools will open tomorrow, and those in Alexandria, Va., opened Wednesday and will resume meeting tomorrow The disease has barely touched the Virginia areas.

Five Cases in Montgomery.

A conference was held in Rockville. Md., yesterday by Dr. V. L. Elicott, health officer, and School Supt. Edwin W. Broome, and it was agreed that the five cases of infantile paralysis so far reported in Montgomery County were not serious enough to delay tomorrow's school opening. Dr. Elicott said the county has the same infantile paralysis rate as the State as a whole, and opening of schools should be an advantage rather than a risk in control of the disease, because the children could be more closely supervised. This was included in the reasons Dr. Byers gave as opposing the postponement of the opening of Laurel schools, when he spoke at yesterday's mass meeting. The citizens of Laurel, however named a committee to appear before the Mayor and Town Council tomorrow night to ask for proclamation of a general quarantine for all children of 15 years of age or younger to prohibit them from congregat-

Milk Price Rise To Be Extended Tomorrow

Highland Farms and Safeway to Join in One-Cent Increase

Safeway Grocery Stores and Highland Farms Dairy tomorrow will duplicate the one-cent increase in the retail price of quarts of milk which went into effect in other large Washington dairies yesterday.

This will make general in Washington the one-cent increase, expected since the Agriculture Department raised the price dairies must pay producers supplying the Washington marketing area. The increases have been made for an indefinite period.

A similar increase was authorized in the Arlington-Alexandria area yesterday by the Virginia State Milk Commission, but only until May, 1942. The "drought situation and related increases in feed and labor costs in the Washington area" which cost the Virginia stepup are expected to be relieved by spring, permitting return to nearly normal prices

Price of Cream Raised.

Safeway Grocery Stores, supplied by the Lucerne Cream and Butter Co., will increase the price of cream 2 cents per pint.

Highland Farms' quarts of milk will advance 1 cent in cost, with advances from 19 to 23 cents per half gallon of milk and 20 to 23 cents per pint of cream.

Similar advances in milk and eream went into effect in other Washington dairies yesterday, with Chestnut Farms Dairy also raising the price of buttermilk and chocolate drink 1 cent per quart. Other dairies advancing prices yesterday were Embassy Fairfax, Model Farms, Thompson's Holbrook Farms Dairy, Richfield Dairy Corp., and Wakefield

More Pay for Farmers

Under Agriculture orders effective yesterday dairies must pay farmers 40 cents more per hundredweight for fluid milk and 20 cents more per hundred pounds for cream.

Virginia prices for 100 pounds of milk will temporarily advance from $3.17 to $3.59, dropping back in May to $3.19. The rate for cream per 100 pounds will advance from $1.90 to $2.12, dropping to $1.92 in May.

Though the 1940 figures represented a 33 per cent increase over the 1939 totals, they were far short of the all-time high of 27,363 cases and 7.130 deaths recorded in 1936. New York City alone reported 2.407 deaths that year-double the entire national total for 1940.

According to estimates of the Census Bureau, for every person fatally stricken with infantile paralysis this year, 25 will be killed in motor accidents. Ordinarily, the disease causes fewer deaths than either typhoid fever, whooping cough, diphtheria, malaria and measles.

Infantile Paralysis Won't Delay Opening Of Nearby Schools

Only Laurel, Md., With Seven Reported Stricken, To Set Term Back

Public health officials in areas hear Washington said yesterday they saw no reason to postpone opening of schools tomorrow because of the increase in infantile paralysis cases but in Laurel Md. school opening was delayed two weeks because seven cases were reported there.

Current localized outbreaks do not forecast a nationwide epidemic of poliomeylitis, the Census Bureau said yesterday. Its records show the disease usually reaches its peak in August and September. If it follows the seasonal pattern of past years, the number of new cases hould decrease from now on, the bureau said.

Postponement of the Laurel school opening was ordered by Prince Georges County education officials as a precautionary measure, against the advice of Dr. J. M. Byers, county health officer, who said he thought nothing would be gained by the move. The Board of Education acted, however, after a mass meeting yesterday attended by nearly 100 parents.

All other schools in Prince Georges County are to open tomorrow as scheduled

D. C. Situation "Not Alarming." "The situation in the District is nothing to become alarmed about," Dr. James G. Cummings, in charge of the epidemiology division of the District of Columbia Health Department, said.

There have been 36 cases reported this year, 25 in August, 6 so far in September and 5 prior to August 1, he said. The situation is not serious when one considers Washington's population growth, Dr Cummings declared.

Dr. Byers said 17 cases of poliomyelitis have been reported in Prince Georges County, 3 since Thursday, 1 of them being in Laurel and 2 in Hyattsville.

Arlington County (Va.) schools will open tomorrow, and those in Alexandria, Va., opened Wednesday and will resume meeting tomorrow. The disease has barely touched the Virginia areas.

Five Cases in Montgomery.

A conference was held in Rockville, Md., yesterday by Dr. V. L. Elicott, health officer, and School Supt. Edwin W. Broome, and it was agreed that the five cases of infantile paralysis so far reported in Montgomery County were not serious enough to delay tomorrow's school opening.

Dr. Elicott said the county has the same infantile paralysis rate as the State as a whole, and opening of schools should be an advantage rather than a risk in control ease because the children

Small Manufacturers Fear They May Have To Curtail Operations

U. S. Chamber Report Cites Shortages and Priorities Difficulties

The Nation's small manufacturers elieve they soon will be forced to curtail operations or possibly close their plants because of a lack of raw materials and equipment shortages, "the Chamber of Commerce of the United States reported yesterday after a survey of 6,000 manufacturers. The chamber gave. "fear for the immediate future" as the chief con-cern of this type of manufacturer. The Nation-wide survey of nondefense manufacturing concerns brought this typical reply: "While we are presently running along with reasonable satisfactionconsidering the times-we anticipate ever-increasing difficulties in obtaining our necessary raw materials In the case of raw materials required for non-defense items, it seems to us that the near future will bring about an almost comlete cessation of deliveries."

Tomorrow Night Though a few manufacturers have been able to develop substitutes, a majority reported that substitutes were as difficult to obtain as the original material. Defense priori-ties have caused confusion, the chamber declared, and disilusionment has come for those seeking substitutes who find the new material already is on an O. P. M priorities list.

Priorities Little Help. Companies also reported that though engaged in defense work, they were having difficulty in obtaining materials. An Ohio firm declared that "it is rapidly getting to the point where a small manufacturer, such as ourselves, will be forced to cease operations. This in spite of the fact that a minimum of 70 per cent of our sales are for defense projects. "We have applied to the Priorities Division for assistance, but we are still without any direct help. #### Wool Market Spurred By Defense Inquiries

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Sept. 6 (U. S. Dept. Agriculture) .- The tone of the wool market in Boston began to show an of the general commanding the improvement during the latter part of the last week.

The quartermaster's invitations to bid on new Government contracts for wool goods stimulated inquiries and were followed by some increase in sales of a few kinds of domestic wools.

Medium fleece wools were more active and prices showed a stiffen. ing tendency in the range 45-47 cents, in the grease, for combing three-eighths and quarter-blood bright fleece wools.

Fine delaine bright fleeces were moderately active at 41-43 cents, in the grease. Demand was slow on combing half-blood bright fleeces at 43-45 cents, in the grease.

YOU CAN AVOID CUTTING CAVITIES LIKE THIS IN YOUR TEETH BY CHANGING TO LIQUID DENTIFRICE -IT CLEANS TEETH UTTERLY WITHOUT ABRASIVES

Illustrating injury when soft part of tooth is exposed. No gum or hard enamel protects it. 8out of 10 adults examined risk this damage.

Today millions of people are unknowingly causing serious damage to their teeth—by regular brushing with denti-frices containing abrasives.

Gradually, as months go by, these abrasives cut cavities into the soft part of teeth along the gum line exposed by shrinking guins, where there is no hard teeth regularly, a very large percentage of all cavities along the gun line that require filling are probably the result of this injury. This was shown by a clin-ical study in a leading dental journal.

Gov. O'Conor Orders Idle Plant Survey In Maryland

Use of Small Factories In Defense, Jobs for Idle Workers Goal

By the Associated Press

D-t

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 6 .- Gov. O'Conor today asked the Unemployment Compensation Board to Survey idle production facilities of The Governor said operations in suspended because of lack of materials and that workers, as a result, were out of employment.

Two purposes would guide the board's study

(1) The utilization of small industrial factories in defense work. where lack of raw materials have caused their suspension.

(2) The employment of idle workers on contracts to be sublet in the interests of defense

Gov. O'Conor called attention to a announced by President policy Roosevelt, calculated to route essential defense orders to smaller manufacturing concerns, particularly where plant production facilities were not utilized in normal work.

Recent inquiries, he said, disclosed that in Caroline County and other places on the Eastern Shore, and in Allegany County as well as in Baltimore City, certain plants were idle because of their inability to get materials

"It is felt," the Governor explained, "that if these plants cannot secure priorities on the materials they need, it should be possible to utilize their facilities for defense activities. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan

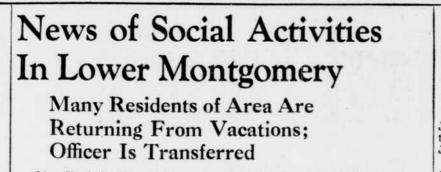

"Furthermore, the many workers who are thereby left in idleness should be given employment, particularly when labor and skilled mechanics are so much needed in the fulfillment of defense contracts."

Classes Will Be Held During Afternoons And Evenings

The Washington Preparatory School, conducted at the Central Young Men's Christian Association and offering preparatory school work for adults, will open its fall term September 15, LeRoy J. Maas, director, has announced.

Mr. Maas, recently named director of the school to succeed the late James J. King, also has been named principal of the Woodward School for Boys, where he has taught mathematics for five years.

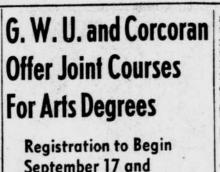

In the preparatory school, Mr. Maas emphasized, opportunity is afforded adults to obtain a preparatory school education by attending afternoon and evening classes at hours convenient for those who work during the day. Those, who earlier in life did not have the opportunity to obtain a high school education, may do so at the school, he said, without embarrassment, because they will be in classes with others of their age.

The preparatory school also has a secretarial school division in which are taught typing, shorthand, business arithmetic, economics and related subjects.

Facing the problem of the higher functions of personnel administration, the school of social sciences and public affairs of the American University is opening the door to study of the problems in a course of "Aims and Responsibilities of Administrative Officers."

With Lawrence A. Appley, director of training of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. and adviser to the Secretary of War, as the principal lecturer in the course, the co-ordination of the seminar will be in charge of Edgar B. Young, personnel officer of the Bureau of the Budget.

The course will consider various types of positions which are designated as "administrative officer" or "administrative assistant" and will analyze various elements which enter into the duties and responsibilities of such positions.

In the same field, the university is opening a second course on the "Supervision of Public Employes" under the direction of Milton Hall, chief of the training and research division, Farm Credit Administration. The problem faced in this course is in the development of an understanding of the principles, methods and techniques for effectively carrying out the supervisor's major functions.

Free Training Courses Mother's Wedding Plates Start In Defense Planned In Prince Georges

Registration Is Slated To Open Monday at Three Schools

Employes of defense industries as well as workers in independent machine shops and garages will be given free courses this year in Prince Georges County, enabling them to improve their technical skill and better their positions, it was announced yesterday by E. K. Zeller, county head of defense vocational training.

A separate series of courses in adult education will be given at county high schools in a variety of subjects. Mr. Zeller said these would be of particular interest to civil service employes to improve their civil service status. The only charge for these courses will be a registration fee of $1.

The defense training courses this year will include for the first time workers not now engaged in defense work. Mr. Zeller said it is to be hoped that those completing the course will find defense employment. Employes of the Navy Yard, Washington Institute of Technology, Engineering Research Corp. and Airtrack Manufacturing Co. will be encouraged to attend.

Two Nights Each Week.

The courses, to be known as Supplementary Defense Training Courses, will be given two nights a week for about 12 weeks. Each class will last three hours. Applicants should register Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at Hyattsville, Bladensburg or Maryland Park High Schools

Courses at Maryland Park include mechanical drawing, blueprint reading, aircraft sheet metal work and cabinet making. Those at Bladensburg will be in aircraft woodwork. machine screw engineering and drafting, tool jig and die design and machine shop. The Hyattsville High School will house courses in drawing and blueprint reading, aircraft acetelyne welding, aircraft sheet metal, radio assembly and meteorology

The defense training courses begin September 15. An enrollment of 250 is expected.

Adult education courses, an entirely separate series not to be confused with the supplementary training courses, also will begin September 15. The courses are organized and operated by the county with the approval of the State Department of Education. Applicants English porcelain with a Chinese may register Monday, Tuesday and pattern. #### Asks Lanham Act Aid.

The County School Board has applied for a $612,066 grant under the Lanham Act for a new $300,000 high school at Falls Church and additions at Fairfax, Mount Vernon, Woodlawn and Groveton Schools, including equipment.

The enrollment in county schools at the end of last session was 8,195, an increase of slightly more than 400 pupils from the previous year. One important step accomplished during the summer that will relieve overcrowding in the Falls Church area, was the agreement between county and town school officials to do away with the requirement that tuition to attend schools in the

Under the new proposal, that will not be officially concluded until the General Assembly meets in January, the town will function as a separate school district only to the extent of having a representative on the County School Board. #### The vibrant voice over the telephone sounded as if the owner had a pair of handcuffs on Hitler. "I don't see how he can miss," exulted Mr. Crown Today Rome Schwagel, who was talking about Georgetown's campaign to make an all-America tackle out of Alfred Blozis. "Every day we are receiving requests for information about him-requests from Des Moines, Keokuk, New York and Yuma. It's wonderful!"

Al Blozis, as you may know, is the well-known shotputter who holds every world record except the outdoor mark with the 16-pound ball. He unquestionably is Georgetown's most valuable athletic asset because he also plays football. When the 1940 season closed he was the best lineman on the crack Hova team, including Augostino Lio, the guard who made a few of the all-America teams. It would be to Georgetown's advantage to have another all-America star this year and to this end Mr. Schwagel, the new boy in the graduate manager of athletics chair, has dedicated his Special Dispatch to The Star.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6 .- The big battle for eighth place in the American League remains practically "as was" today as the Athletics and Washington divided the first of two double-headers in Shibe Park.

The A's took the first game, 8-3, and Dutch Leonard, getting his 16th victory of the year, defeated them, 8-4, in the second.

Pitching for the Athletics was a fairly hazardous calling as both Jack Knott, who started the first game, and Bill Beckman, the second game starter, were injured.

Knott's knee was badly wrenched in a first base collision with Buddy Lewis in the third inning and Beckman's pitching hand was split by a return throw from Hal Wagner, his catcher

A's Route Hudson in First.

Winning the first game, the A's turned loose a 12-hit attack on Sid Hudson and Bill Zuber and although Jake Early slammed his 10th home run of the year, Knott and later Newman Shirley, a rookie righthander, kept the Nats' bats from starting a run-making tattoo.

Leonard, once he got a lead in the second inning of the second game when Roberto Ortiz, just brought up from Charlotte of the Piedmont League, homered, was more than the A's master. His fast ball caught the A's on their heels and in the tight spots his knuckle ball fluttered like something possessed with evil ideas. The Macks had several chances to overtake Leonard, but each time he either turned on a little more pressure or the Macks lapsed mentally. Cecil Travis started the second inning with a double and Mickey Vernon's single plus an error by Sam hapman netted the first Washing

Redskin Attack More Potent Than Last Year's Seen in New Backfield Setup

Three Crack Groups Of Passers, Toters Rich in Promise

Filchock-Todd Combine Now Best; Baugh, Farkas Head Flashy Lot

By BILL DISMER, Jr., Star Staff Correspondent.

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Sept. 6.-Barring injury to any of their leading backs, such as that which cost them the services of Andy Farkas last year, the Redskins' 1941 attack should be even more potent than it was in 1940, when it averaged 22 points for 11 National League games. That forecast is based on the theory that the teaming of Farkas with Sammy Baugh will add 25 per cent to the Redskins' offensive punch, that the combination of Frank Filchock and Dick Todd will continue to be as devastating as it was last year and that the sophomore backs, Roy Zimmerman and Bob Sevmour, will be twice as effective together as a result of their season's experience in pro football. Lippincott Gets Lead As High Wind Mars Comet Regatta

> Many Craft Blown Over In Race at Sandusky; Covert Boat Is 11th

By MALCOLM LAMBORNE, Jr.,

Star Staff Correspondent SANDUSKY, Ohio, Sept. 6.-Robert Lippincott, 23-year-old Riverton (N. J.) skipper, and his brother, Raymond, as crew this afternoon survived the strongest winds ever to greet a national comet championship fleet to win the second race of the series and place themselves at the top on total points. The Lippincotts' Swallow, 'well known for heavy weather sailing. moved into the lead of a starting field of 33 boats competing in the seventh annual international regatta on the second hap of three this afternoon and remained there to the finish. Swallow covered the 6-mile course in the remarkable time of 59 minutes and 38 seconds.

Thirty-three boats set out on the three-lap course, but only 22 finished. Three capsizings, a broken mast on a fourth comet and parted rigging and gear on many others were grim evidence of the 25-mile wind which whipped across choppy Sandusky Bay.

Brylawskis Managed to Finish. One of the neatest bits of seamanship was turned in by Henry Brylawski and his brother Alan of Washington. Their Nimbus capsized on the last lap, throwing Alan into the bay. Henry went out on the side to right the boat, Alan clambored on board and although suffering a broken stay and gooseneck, the Nimbus managed to finish.

Another Washington entry, Ernest Covert's Scandal, was 14th today and on total points stood in 11th position. Covert and his crew, Ken Brown, also of Washington, found the wind too much for their light weather craft. Hard luck befell the winner of Friday's opening race, Alton O'Brien from Perth Amboy, N. J., and he finished eighth. Second to Lippincott today was Phil Somervell of Edgewater Park, N. J., defending champion. His Double Scotch was No. 2 comet in the series. Tied for third place honors were Warner Willcox, 1937 title-holder from Great Kills, N. Y., and William Stuempfig of Ocean City, N. J.

Index the 1941 Yankees as one of the great baseball teams of all time, advises Prevy Clark Griffith of the Nats, who snorts a denial that the other seven clubs in the American League have deteriorated, as New York's prohibitive pennant-clinching margin seemingly would indicate. "The league is stronger," says

Griffith, "and the proof of it lies in our own club. We've played better baseball this year than we did last year, but the teams ahead of us-Philadelphia and St. Louis -also have improved. Give St. Louis the White Sox pitching staff and the Browns would have won the pennant.

"New York's greatness is in its balance-dependable pitching, a brilliant defense and fellows who know when to swing for that long hit and then can deliver it often enough to make it hurt. The Yankees know when to swing for homers-they don't bunt like we do when we're four runs behind in the ninth inning. That's not paseball.

"Figures are misleading in a lot of cases," continued Griffith. #### Lentz's Carefully Kept Records Show Freshmen Quickest to Heal

Have you had your vitamins today? Any old bones to be mended, joints oiled or backs scratched? Just step this way into the infirmary-laboratoryworkshop of George (Doc) Lentz. George Washington trainer, and he'll have you running in applepie order again in less time than it takes to read this yarn.

No M. D., but everything but one in his vocation, Lentz can cure just about anything that afflicts a college athlete but lame brain and falling hair. He'll do anything for them but mind the kid sister and perform an appendectomy, and the Colonial huskies swear by him-not at him.

Up on the bulletin board this week will go Lentz's chart of calories and vitamins to guide growing boys and keep them strong and healthy. Every incoming football player will peruse the list, note the number of carrots, pounds of spinach and about 2,500 calories to keep going, but the average athlete needs about 6,000. This, of course, means they put a horse to shame at the feeding trough, and here, warns Lentz, is where the trouble arises. Eating any old thing passed around puts on weight-but in the wrong places and doesn't help the muscles. Lentz would guard against this by supplying his boys pocket menus which can be pasted in their hats for ready reference when dining out, in addition to sundry warnings posted throughout the university. And the trainer has pounds of evidence to prove his market basket holds the proper vitamins. All youngsters put on weight during spring training, and to prove the thing works both ways, one took off 5 pounds. That was Ernie Brodbec who dropped from 215 to 210 on a restricted diet without losing any energy. The

Last year, for example, Frank August and Matt Mauriello had sacroiliac injuries. Mauriello was ready to go again in four days after infra-red treatment while August was on the shelf nine and required two brands of treatment. Similar differences were noted in at least a dozen other cases.

Lentz, of course, wants to eliminate injuries entirely but that virtualy is beyond the realm of

Munhall Slated to Fill Virginia Fullback Post

Coach Frank Murray of Virginia may have to call on two sophomores to team with Capt. Bill Dudley and Eddie (Flash) Bryant in the backfield Edward Kreick, 180-pounder, is a leading candidate for the quarterback berth, while Herb Munhall, 190, Washington, D. C., is slated to step into Leroy Neustedter's shoes at fullback.

Dudley, who advanced the ball same 1.900 yards for the Cavaliers last season, is in tiptop condition.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Sept. 6. -Chairman Walter R. Okeson of the Football Rules Committee today called upon "football officials everywhere" to enforce strictly the new unlimited substitution rule so that the collegiate contests they officiate this fall "won't result in fiascos, as did the recent exhibition games in Chicago and

New York. Okeson told 175 leading gridiron officials at the Eastern Intercollegiate Football Association clinic that "two to three times as much time was given to substitutions" in the pro all-star games as is allowed under the new rule. Okeson said the rule clearly stipulates that the ball must be put in play within 25 seconds after the referee places it ready for play, whether the defensive team is ready or not.

Argument Over Importance of Putt vs. Drive as Scoring Weapon Is Standoff

Big Tee Shot Sets Up Hole for Bird, Agree Barnett, Hogan

B - 14

But It's Nullified When Player Is Erratic on Green, Is Answer

By WALTER MYCALLUM. Which is the most potent weapon in the scoring armament of the top golfer, the driver or the putter?

Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase pro, never forgets. Some 15 years ago we were discussing with Bob and Monro Hunter, the longest hitter who ever held down a pro berth here, the real reason for low scoring. Monro, still located in Washington but out of competitive golf, said the putter is the real scoring weapon. "You cannot score well unless you bowl in a few long putts," he said.

Barnett took the opposite tack. "The driver is the key to the whole thing," said Bob. "Unless you hit your tee shot in a spot which opens up the hole for the next one, you don't get in position to putt for a birdie, and frequently for a par."

Bob Jones then was the top man of the golf pack, wielding an unerring driver and a potent putter with equal ease. Along came Lawson Little, a guy with the punch of a Joe Louis and an equally deft touch on the greens. Now comes Benny Hogan, 138 pounds of golf dynamite, winning big tournaments by big margins, driving the ball a mile and putting a la Jones.

Ben and Bob Agree. "You get a good tee shot, it sets up the iron shot, which in turn sets up that putt," says Belting Ben "See what Hogan says?" quoted

Bob. "Didn't I tell you, around 15 years ago? That tee shot is the big number in low scoring?"

The argument probably started away back when the first Caledonian shepherd twosome stepped out on a Scottish hillside, and when one of them cuffed a 40-footer into the shallow hole that was the cup of those days. "Lucky stiff," said the gent who had bunted out the good tee shot. "Lucky, h ----." said the good putter . "That's skill. More with your driver. Learn to putt, big boy, and you might lick me some day.

No one, of course, is going to win pro and son of the famed trick shot that argument. To win in good manipulator, and Otto F. Archibald's Luck Here Puts Wright on Spot In Fight Wednesday

Joey Never Has Dropped D. C. Bout; Bound to Get $8,000 for This One

Joey Archibald's featherweight fight with Chalky Wright holds the fistic spotlight this week. They are scheduled for the 15-round distance at Griffith Stadium Wednesday

The colored boy virtually is tossing his future out the back window by boxing Joey here, for it now is a well-grounded superstition that Archibald can't lose in Washington. He doesn't lose even when he seems to-if you get the idea. And there's nothing fixed or phony about it. Call it the luck of the Irish if you will, but Joev has a fistful of four-leaf clovers when they pass out the decisions in the #### Capital. $8,000 Guarantee Odd Angle.

There are some curious angles to the scrap, not the least of which is Archibald's $8,000 guarantee. Guarantees, or the lack of them, were responsible for a fissure in the featherweight crown a couple of years ago when Al Weill, Joev's astute agent, refused to sign to box Harry Jeffra for a nickel less than 10 grand. Nobody had that kind of dough then, not for featherweight

But Weill had good cause and ample precedent to modestly ask that wage for his man. Hadn't Pete Sarron guaranteed Freddy Miller $10,000 for their title fight in which Miller lost the belt? Weill argued Archibald had as much chance of losing as Miller and wanted the same fee for the risk involved. He didn't get it, but succeeded in stirring up the placid waters of the 126-pound pond. Archibald later boxed Jeffra for considerably less than his $10,000, not once, but three times. He retained, lost and regained his title claims in those battles, scoring both victories, mind you, in Washington. Wright Is on Spot.

Pete Scalzo, meanwhile, was wearing the National Boxing Association mantle as a consequence of his t.k.o. over a poorly trained Frankie Covelli. Another new star had risen on the coast, however, in the person of Richey Lemos and eventually both Scalzo and Archibald bowed to him Scalzo surrendered his title claims, but Archibald fought overthe-weight.

Archibald has come down in his price for the title by accepting an $8,000 guarantee, but there are some fans who incline toward the belief Weill is canny enough to steer his boy by Wright without extreme damage to pocket the eight grand and keep his title claims. On the evidence in the record it's possible and Wright is the person on the spot

Some Contradictions.

Hey, Bob, how about that round of golf that Ralph Guldahl played at the Miami Biltmore a few years back, when he hit three greens in par figures, and scored a subpar of 68? He couldn't have been driving very well that day. And how about that round of 74 by Wilfred Cox at Congressional the other day, when he hit 16 greens in par figures or better and putted like a butcher? And how about yourself, Bob? is scheduled. Tommy Doerer, jr., Have you ever scored a par 69 at Chevy Chase with 36 putts, which is putting par for any round of 18 holes? I don't think so. But you could hit half a dozen tee shots in the high grass, you could blast from a dozen bunkers, and if you happened to be putting very well you four each will qualify from Rock

The answer is the balanced game, which Jones had, and which the top golfers of today all have. They can drive and they can putt, too. Chick Evans couldn't putt, which is the only reason he didn't win half a dozen amateur championships, and possibly that many open tournaments But from tee to green he was the straightest man of his time, and he was long enough, too.

Who's Second Best to Henson Is Big Question as Horseshoe Play-Offs Start

D. C., Maryland, Virginia Experts Swing Into Action Tomorrow

Comes now the time to determine who is the second-best horseshoe flipper in the Washington Metropolitan Area. Clayton C. (Boo) Henson of Arlington indisputably is the tops; has been for nearly a decade. This week the stocky, curlyhaired young Virginian will defend his title as Metropolitan Washington champion. Who will be the runner-up is the big question to be settled in the 13th annual Evening Star championships, the qualification round of which will be finished today on the public park courts opposite the Commerce Building

But before the twirlers come to Henson they will settle three important titles. Competition for the championships of Northern Virginia. Southern Maryland and Washington will open tomorrow night at 7 o'clock with the field in each section limited to 16 players. Henson is ineligible for the Northern Virginia crown

Carlberg Gritty Competitor.

Rated as Washington's best prospect to finish second to the redoubtable Boo is Irwin C. Carlberg, a quiet, slender young man who would toss more ringers, no doubt, if his physical make-up were as steely as his nerves. Carlberg for several years held the Washington title, losing it last year to Clair Lacey, a fellow Government clerk since transferred to Philadelphia. Irwin's game steadily has improved and some think eventually he will put the bug on Henson. Maryland's best bet is husky Levi Fleshman, winner of the Southern Maryland title so many times, offhand he can't give the number. In fact, the Rogers Heights star thought, for the good of the sport, he'd put the crown in circulation this season, but was dissauded by the argument there would be no Capital-Owned Bill K. point in wearing it with him around. Best prospect to dethrone Fleshman, but not this season, is his young son, Lee, jr., 11 years old Sets Pace All Way young son, Lee, jr., 11 years old already no pushover for most of the better pitchers, his pop and his better pitchers, his pop and his granddad. # New Attorney General Must Cope With Hysteria Infringing on Rights By Marquis W. Childs

Items Backed by Powerful Political Groups Found to Offer Most Fertile Field for Economy Operations

Spending Reductions Analyzed

Opportunities for Non-Defense

By Arthur Whipple Crawford.

With prospective defense costs con- | average rate of interest has decreased stantly mounting, it is inevitable that Congress eventually must give more serious attention to the demands for a sharp slashing of non-essential items in lieu of an equivalent amount of taxation or borrowing.

The trend in this direction is indicated in recent action at the Capitol and by various declarations of economy-minded groups.

The Senate Finance Committee, in connection with consideration of the new tax bill, approved two proposals by Senator Byrd of Virginia looking toward a reduction in non-defense expenditures. One requests the director of the budget to furnish estimates of possible alternative savings of $1.000.000.000. $1.500.-000,000 and $2,000,000,000. The other, approved by the Senate, proposes creation of a committee composed of representatives of the spending and financing committees of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury and the director of the budget to inquire into methods of saving. Specific proposals for a reduction in non-defense expenditures were offered before the Senate Finance Committee and earlier before the House Ways and Means Committee, although jurisdiction over spending lies properly in the Approbriations Committees of the two Houses Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau asserted that costs of non-defense items might properly be reduced by $1,000,000 -000 annually. The National Economy League offered a detailed plan for cuts amounting to more than $1.600,000,000 from budget estimates for the fiscal year 1942. The Finance Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States asserted that reductions of at least $2,000,000.000 should be made. An Arkansas college president placed before the two committees an itemized scheme for slashes totaling about $2,000.000,000. A newly formed body known as the Citizens' Emergency Committee on Nondefense Expenditures, headed by Dr. Henry M. Wriston, president of Brown University and composed of college presidents, economists and others, is preparing to offer detailed proposals.

Cannot Be Done Painlessly. An examination of the budget situa-

Undoubtedly there are many opportunities for savings in the costs of civil departments of the Government but the aggregate would be relatively small. Thus, if an arbitrary cut of 10 per cent were made in the total of $1,030,000,000 for departments and agencies and for the legislative and judicial branches the saving would be only a little more than $100,000,000. A 20 per cent cut would mean only a little more than $200,000,000. Neither of these amounts would go far toward a goal of $1,500,000,000 or $2,000,-000,000. Current appropriations under this heading are more than double actual expenditures in the fiscal year 1934 and about 50 per cent greater than in 1937 and 1938. The increased costs are due to the creation of new independent agencies and an expansion of activities of old departments, for most of which there is statutory authority outside the appropriation bills. Charles Evans Hughes and the new chief.

Farm Appropriations.

Harlan Fiske Stone. The item of aids to agrigulture offers probably the most fertile field for a substantial cut. Most of the proposals of economy groups are for a reduction of the $1.100,000.000 by about one-half. This would put the agricultural adjustment program on about the basis of 1936 and 1937. It would give the farmers 50 per cent more aid than they had in 1938 and almost twice what they had in 1934, which was the first year of a subsidy to this element of the population. Aid to agriculture reached a billion-dollar total in the fiscal year 1940. Secretary Morgenthau is on record for a reduction in aids to agriculture, but Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, is opposed to it. The agricultural officials of the Government a major character. The work relief item is another which is highly controversial. While some would like to shift the bulk of this burden to the States, it might be suicidal politically for any administration to repudiate responsibility for relief which the Federal Government first assumed in 1933. If actual expenditures for work

relief are held to the $885,000,000 appropriated the total will be smaller by

On his department will converge the demands that inevitably will rise as the crisis deepens. Advocates of the stern hand and equally impassioned disciples of tolerance will besiege him. Difficult decisions are certain to haunt his days. For this reason, perhaps, his predecessor in office, Robert H. Jackson, was genuinely relieved when he was appointed to the Supreme Court. Leaving the Department of Justice, Jackson worked to get the post for Biddle, who had been Solicitor General during his term, believing that Biddle, as Attorney General, would be strong enough to resist the pressure to convert the office into witch-hunting headquarters, as happened toward the close of the first World War. Biddle, Jackson predicted, would not become a second A. Mitchell Palmer whose so-called Red raids were denounced by the chief legal lights of the time, including retired Chief Justice

Trotzkyites Indicted.

Already Biddle faces what may become a major controversy. As Acting Attorney General after Jackson's resignation he ordered a Federal grand jury investigation of Vincent Ray Dunn and Grant Dunn, brothers who head Local 544 of the General Drivers, Helpers and Inside Workers' Union in Minneapolis and St. Paul. The Dunn brothers are also leaders of the Socialist Workers' party, a Trotzkyist faction of the Communist

As a result of Biddle's action a grand jury in Minneapolis indicted the Dunns on eight counts. They were charged with engaging in a seditious conspiracy; with attempting to gain control of key utility and industrial positions for their men in order to bring about a general paralysis of industry; with attempting to get their men into key union positions; with inciting rebellion among the military forces, and, last and most important, with accumulating arms and explosives to carry out a revolution on the Russian pattern. Along with the Dunns, 27 of their associates were also indicted. Behind the action ordered by Biddle was widespread local antagonism to the Dunns and their union. Another factor with President Roosevelt, his background should have made him a conservative. The Biddle name is synonymous with ultra-conservative Philadelphia society. The new Attorney General is directly descended from Edmund Randolph, the first Attorney General. At exclusive Groton School, where only the sons of the rich or the socially elect are admitted, Biddle prepared for Harvard.

Biddles Won the Prizes.

In one respect, however, he differed from the pattern of his class. His family was not rich. In fact, he and his brothers did tutoring and other intellectual jobs at Harvard to eke out the small allowance they received from home. People commonly assume that spite the protest of some Republicans, to be the impartial counsel of the Senate committee named to investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority. This was a job requiring, as the Labor Board assignment had, finesse and firmness. Arthur Morgan, ousted T. V. A. chairman, had thrown up a cloud of charges, casting doubt on the whole T. V. A. experiment. The job also called for hard, slogging effort. Weeks on end, night and day, Biddle labored through a mass of material, preparing for the public hearings. Carefully winnowing anything that might even remotely be considered evidence, the committee disproved most of the charges and Biddle came out with honors

He was rewarded by President Roosevelt a year later by appointment to a judgeship on the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, which sits at Philadelphia. Being a judge, Biddle discovered, was very dull business. Essentially an extrovert, always active, he could scarcely tolerate the cloistered judicial life. To many men such an appointment would have seemed the ultimate and wholly satisfying goal. Fifty-three at the time of his nominatirement of the bench.

Lacking the congressional sanction, members of the British Commonwealth which seemingly will not be requested, it is going to be difficult for future historians to name the date on which the present administration finally drifted across the line which separates peace from war. But it is apparent from the President's brief Labor Day address that he regards the decision as having, somehow or other, already been made.

This is indicated not so much by Mr. Roosevelt's assurance that: "We shall do everything in our power to crush Hitler and his Nazi forces." The President has previously promised as much without bringing an expeditionary force perceptibly closer.

More to the point was the dismissal in unequivocal language of the last lingering possibility that the United States, under the present administration, will endeavor to bring about a negotiated peace. Having turned his back on neutrality, and having excoriated the role of peacemaker, it is clear that no course other than backing Great Britain to the limit now remains open to President Roosevelt. What is not so clear is that this developing Anglo-American alliance, indicated by the Churchill-Roosevelt joint declaration of August 14 and brought a stage further by the Labor Day address from Hyde Park, cannot with any safety be limited to wartime collaboration only.

Implications Are Concealed.

The chief danger in the President's highly personal and somewhat devious direction of foreign policy is that its implications are concealed from public notice. People are so confused whether we are or are not actually at war that they can scarcely be blamed for failing to see contingent issues. Yet contingent in any tacit alliance with Great Britain is the absolute necessity of following through in close co-operation with that nation during an inevitably chaotic and dangerous post-war period.

The important items offering the best opportunities for reductions are sponsored by politically powerful groups, notably agricultural aid, work relief, public works and aids to youth. The proponents of these various funds insist that no substantial reductions should be made. Furthermore, liberal expenditures for various social purposes and for public works accord with fundamental theories of the New Deal.

The following are approximate totals of all appropriations for the current fiscal year, 1942, for non-defense purposes, exclusive of transfers to trust accounts and statutory debt retirements: Interest on the public debt $1,275,000,000 Departmental, legislative

Decreases Noted.

In the aggregate these items, which follow the official classifications, show a net decrease of about $120,000,000 from budget estimates for 1942, a net decrease of about $145,000,000 from actual expenditures in 1941 and a net decrease of about $400.000,000 from appropriations for 1941. The greatest decrease in each instance is for work relief, the entire net saving being jeopardized if the customary supplemental appropriation is made for this purpose in the closing months of the fiscal year.

Taking the items in order of size, it is obvious that no decrease can be made in the $1.275,000,000 for interest on the public debt. Instead, the amount will increase as the public debt advances in the course of the defense program. In 1932, the last full fiscal year of the Hoover administration, the interest total was about $600,000,000. It has more than doubled in eight years although the seen.

about 50 per cent than any previous outlay for this purpose. Although the defense program has greatly increased employment, the funds for work relief now available are declared by administrative officers to be inadequate for existing needs. Hence, no further reduction is likely without stiff opposition. The item of veterans' pensions and benefits is not susceptible of much re-

The item of general public works includes highways, the Tennessee Valley Authority, reclamation projects improvement of rivers and harbors, flood control, public buildings and grants to public bodies. In view of the fact that many of these are interwoven with the defense program, difficulties will be encountered in any attempt to cut the total below the $530,000,000 appropriated for the present year. Most of the economy proposals, however, include the slashing of the item by about one half. The $470,000,000 appropriated for social security cannot be reduced much without a revision of the present Social Security Act. The greater part of the total is for grants to the States.

The item of aids to youth will provide much controversy. This includes the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration, both activties which had their origin in depression conditions. Congress appropriated $247,-000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps as against actual expenditures in the last fiscal year of $257,000,000 and appropriated $92,000,000 for the National Youth Administration as against actual expenditures last year of $136,000,000.

The remaining item of $80,000,000 for refunds of taxes and other Government charges in compliance with court and administrative rulings cannot be reduced.

Reductions of $1,000,000,000, $1,500,000.-000 or $2,000,000,000 in non-defense expenditures are theoretically possible. Whether public opinion will become sufficiently aroused to force the administration and Congress to join in a drastic economy movement remains to be

J. Tobin, head of the powerful A. F L. Teamsters' Union and a strong administration supporter, looks on the Minneapolis union as the beginning of an effort to split his ranks. Tobin had good reason to be pleased that the Department of Justice acted against the Dunns. Liberal Friends Disturbed.

Many of Biddle's liberal friends have been disturbed by the Minneapolis indictments. Roger Baldwin and Arthur Garfield Hayes of the American Civil Liberties Union came down to Washington the other day to protest that this was actually indicting men for their opinions. If the Dunns and their associates had accumulated any weapons. these liberal friends argued, it was either to defend themselves in the course of industrial warfare or to resist their "Fascist enemies." When the Dunns go to trial the pressure on Biddle is likely to increase. Some of the young men whom he and Jackson brought into the department are apprehensive that his new responsibility may inevitably make him conservative in his judgments. Certainly his liberal philosophy will undergo a severe test.

It was from one of the chief prophets of American liberalism that Biddle acquired his convictions. Just out of Harvard law school as an honor graduate, he came to Washington to be law clerk to the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. He was deeply impressed, as were so many young men before and after him, by the great justice's wise outlook on life. Aristocratic Philadelphia Family.

This experience was superimposed on his relationship at Harvard with Prof.

Felix Frankfurter, who was to become one of Biddle's closest friends. It is thanks in no small part to Frankfurter's backing that this Philadelphia aristocrat has a place in the New Deal cabinet. Biddle is, of course, in the Roosevelt tradition. He was a follower of T. R. long before he enlisted with F. D. R. As he is wealthy and Biddle painstakingly explains that the money is in another branch of the family which is allied with the Drexels, Philadelphia bankers, At Groton he came under the influence of the headmaster, Dr. Endicott Peabody, who retired last spring after presiding over the spiritual wellbeing of three generations of adolescents. Francis was, on the whole, a good pupil who wanted, like his brother, George, to excel and to be liked.

Frequently President Theodore Roosevelt, whose sons were in school, turned up for prize day. On one occasion George got the prize for the best debate, the second form prize and the Greek prize, while Francis won the prize for the best two-minute speech. "It isn't fair!" said T. R., shaking

Francis' hand vigorously. "You Biddle boys winning all the prizes!"

Active for T. R.

They were together at Harvard law school, both destined to follow in the Edmund Randolph tradition. George turned painter instead but Francis went on with a career in law. Back in Philadelphia he found time for politics, too. Joining Teddy Roosevelt's rebellion against old line Republicanism, he was made chairman of a Progressive speakers committee in Philadelphia and his intense activity had not a little to do with the seldom remembered fact that T. R. carried Pennsylvania in 1912 by a margin of 50,000 votes. In 1914 Biddle ran for the State Senate on a Progressive ticket and was roundly trounced.

Two years later he was a delegate to the ill-fated convention that marked the end of the Progressive movement in national politics.

Coming out of a training camp, where he had been on the way to being a field artilleryman, Biddle decided at the close of the other war that it was high time he built up a law practice. As a member of the firm of Barnes, Biddle & Myers, he was soon absorbed in a variety of cases. Among the firm's clients were rich

Having once named a man to such a life position, however, the President naturally tends to put him out of mind. In helping to restore him to an active career, Biddle's friend Frankfurter performed a delicate rescue operation, bringing him again to the notice of the White House. In January of 1940, the President named Biddle solicitor general. This is the officer, next in rank to the Attorney General, who actually conducts the legal business of the United States.

In this office, too, Biddle followed Jackson, which was something of a handicap, since the latter was regarded by many as the most distinguished Solicitor General in the Nation's history. Biddle, by temperament and inclination, leans more toward the administrative side of the law and in his new job he will have ample outlet for his abilities. The Department of Justice is a far-flung institution with thousands of employes.

A variety of administrative problems are constantly arising. Most of his predecessors have found it difficult to cope with the zeal of J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. That question was raised during the hearings on Biddle's nomination, with leftists charging that Hoover tapped the telephone wires of Harry Bridges, head of the International Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union.

Man of Strong Loyalties.

The new Attorney General is a man of strong loyalties. Throughout his career in the New Deal he has been close to Thomas G. Corcoran, the brain truster who resigned his Government post to make large fees in private practice in Washington. Thereby Corcoran has brought down on himself criticism from his former collaborators, including, it is said, Frankfurter himself. Nevertheless. Biddle remains loval to Tommy the Cork and possibly would even like to see him of Hitler, and his effort to unify Europe by brute force, natural if not inevitable. Now we are again entering the lists "to crush" a German effort which, considering the precedent conditions, is by no means a wholly "insane" outburst. If this second intervention is followed by a second withdrawal, the natural anticipation will be a third and even more disastrous European war.

After the previous war France and Italy, to say nothing of Great Britain and a score of small nations, were hopefully and reasonably expecting that American economic and political cooperation which the Harding administration summarily refused. Situation Differs Now.

which made the rise

The present situation is very different. Italy voluntarily, France as the involuntary result of shattering defeat, are both aligned on the side of Hitler's "new order." And the tremendous influence attributed to "fifth columns" itself attests belief that there is strong support for the Nazi program in many other European countries. As Mr. Roosevelt emphasized in his Labor Day address, the winning of the war, let alone the securing of the peace which he proposes to underwrite, is likely to be a "long and arduous" task.

This grim prospect, however, makes it more and not less desirable that American collaboration with Great Britain should be viewed as much more than a wartime enterprise. In the event of victory his collaboration must be continued as permanent policy, otherwise the victory will be meaningless and of short duration. And in the event of relative or absolute defeat, which wise statesmanship must always consider even though it is impolitic to mention the thought, such permanent Anglo-American collaboration would be, if possible, even more imperative. The foundations of enduring Anglo-American collaboration are now being laid along two wholly different but perhaps mutually complementary lines. The less realistic of these efforts is the popular movement for political union, whose

Room for Improvment.

This does not mean that the continuous executive co-operation now functioning between the United States and Great Britain has as yet reached either maximum efficiency or final development On the British side the organization both in Washington and New Yor. seems fairly well stabilized. But on the American side there has been much more confusion and muddling.

It is hoped that this situation will be improved, and that British-American technical co-operation will become steadily more efficient, as a result of the new Supply Priorities and Allocation Board, created by executive order on August 28. As one reporter significantly said, this new controlling agency will be "roughly comparable to the British Ministry of Supply." The more exact the comparison the more routine will be that continuous executive co-operation with Great Britain which has now become a major policy of the administration.

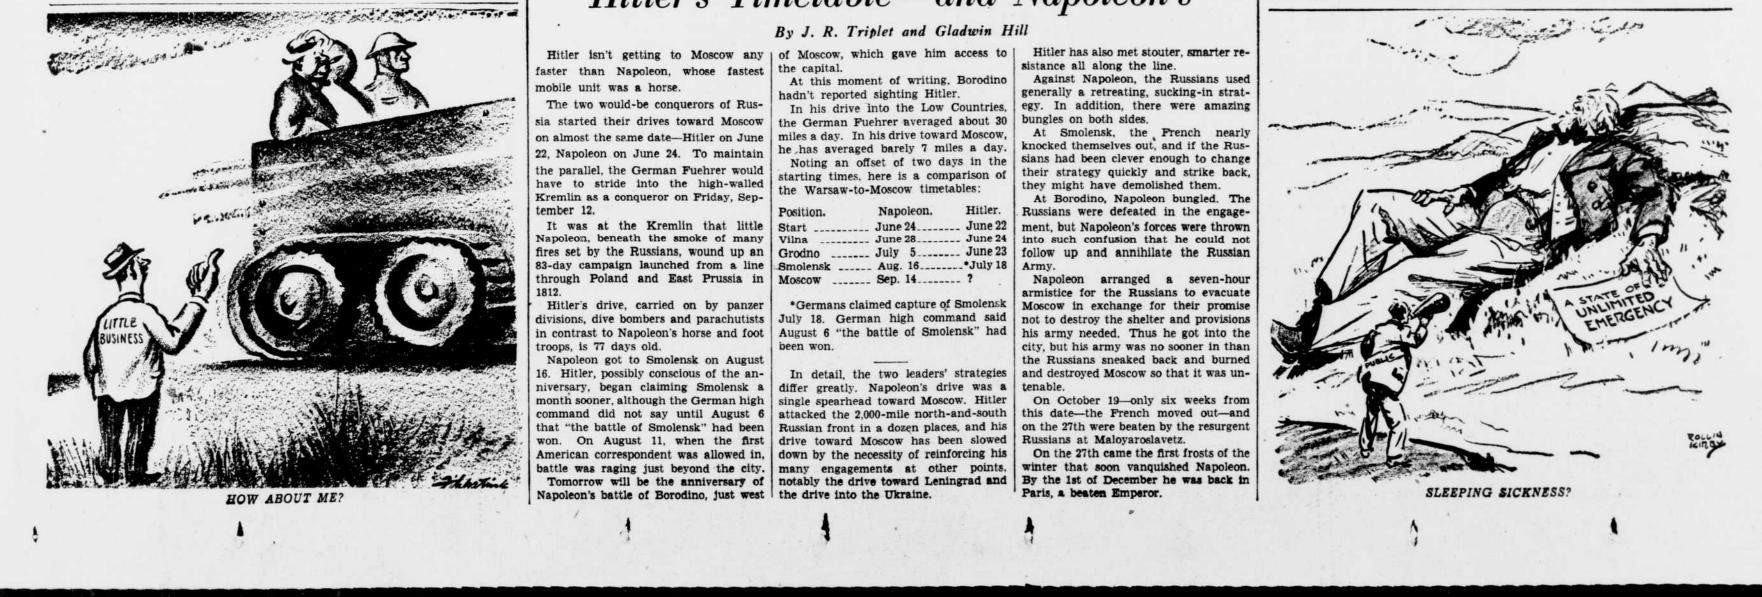

Daily developments, such as the naming of John D. Biggers, president of Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co., as another Minister to London for technical purposes, attest the energy and speed with which the program of continuous executive co-operation with Great Britain is being pushed. There is no question of the political significance of the development. The only question is whether all this is to be merely "for the duration."

It is important, in that connection, to realize that the genius of British statesmanship has always centered in the severely practical solution of specific problems, maintaining improvisations which work well and discarding those which fail to meet the test.

The British Commonwealth of Nations has no written constitution, no common Parliament, no formally unified direction of foreign policy. But the Commonwealth is unquestionably united and its unity is made effective primarily through a well-established network of technical executive contacts.

It is certainly suggestive that this identical type of co-operation should now be developing so rapidly between Great adherents advocate a precise and for- Britain, the self-governing Dominions mal merger of the United States and the | and the United States.

Higher Milk Prices

The one-cent increase in the retail price of milk, which has been put into effect by most local dairies to absorb the higher rate which the Department of Agriculture has required them to pay the producers, is a matter of serious concern to the District.

Past efforts of those interested in the plight of the producers, who had surplus milk on their hands, were devoted largely to stimulating increased consumption of milk. One of these attempts was represented by the so-called penny milk projecta plan for selling milk to underprivileged children in the schools and elsewhere for one cent a half pint.

But this project seems to have collapsed because the stipulated increase in consumption could not be guaranteed under the rather arbitrary conditions laid down by the Surplus Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture. And now, on top of the failure-and possibly needless failure-of this subsidized effort to stimulate milk consumption, there comes a price increase. Obviously, this means that undernourished children henceforth will get even less milk than they had in the past.

This, surely, is a situation which should be made the subject of a careful investigation. Are the producers no longer interested in disposing of their surplus at a less-than-market price, or does a surplus no longer exist because of wartime demands? Even before the increase, the price paid farmers for their milk in the Washington milk shed was considerably in excess of that paid in other comparable areas. This is accounted for by the fact that District standards are higher and more expensive to meet than those prescribed by the United States Public Health Service, and it would seem that this in particular is one phase of the milk question which might be investigated with a view to a reduction instead of an increase in milk prices. It is undoubtedly true that the local milk situation is one which has been complicated by many abnormal factors, but that is no reason why the Commissioners should hesitate to seek a corrective formula, particularly at a time when needy and undernourished District children are threatened with a curtailment of their already inadequate supply.

trical machinery. To keep pace with the increasing industrial and transport demands, electric power facilities have been expanded. In 1934 the output of current in the four Ural Provinces was over 2,000,000,000 kilowatt hours. Today power production is estimated at twice that amount.

That the Soviet government has taken steps to remove to the Urals the machinery in some of the munitions plants in the combat zone seems a reasonable assumption. Because of its geographical location near the approaches to Siberia, the Ural area, at present, lies beyond the effective range of the Luftwaffe. Even if the Nazis capture Leningrad. conquer the Ukraine and move nearer Moscow, the Russians still will have available large facilities in the Urals. Many of these plants could no doubt be quickly converted for defense production.

Black Sea Strategy

The German conquest of the Western Ukraine with attendant capture of the great naval base at Nikolaiev gives the Reich a firm foothold on the Russian shore of the Black Sea, that vast salt-water lake connected with the Mediterranean and the outer world solely through the Turkish-held Straits of the Bosporus and Dardanelles. Despite those losses and the current siege of Odessa, the Black Sea is still commanded by the Russian fleet, with nothing to oppose it except the miniature Bulgarian and Rumanian navies, plus a few small submarines which the Germans are reported to have sent by rail in sections for reassemblage at Rumanian and Bulgarian shipyards. It is inconceivable that these naval units, together with attacks by Stuka bombers, could destroy Russia's relatively large Black Sea fleet or so reduce it in effectiveness as to render it a negligible factor.

But, so long as Russia commands the Black Sea, Germany will be compelled to conduct a costly and arduous overland campaign across nearly as we possess ample land-based air a thousand miles of Russian territory power.' before it reaches the eastern end of the Caucasus Mountains, within striking distance of the main Russian oil fields at Baku on the Caspian Sea, which are assumed to be one of the Reich's chief objectives in its war with the Soviet Union. If control of the Black Sea could pass to the Reich and its Axis allies, troops could be transported by water and flanking landings made at many points along Russia's Black Sea coasts, including the port city of Batum, the terminus of the pipe line for Baku oil.

Such control cannot feasibly be political system that is thoroughly repugnant to them. This is not the first time that the Germans have used such methods. But it is significant that they have now begun to employ them in France. The Vichy government, or powerful elements in it, has endeavored strenuously to bring the people of France into the Nazi orbit. But the French people have had no taste for the collaboration decreed by their masters, and there has been abundant evidence of a strong undercurrent of sullen resentment throughout the whole of France.

Whether the Nazi system can be imposed by terrorism, now that other methods evidently have failed, remains to be seen, but history argues against it. Hitler is not the first conqueror who has resorted to pillage and murder in a vain effort to break the spirit of his victims, and these past failures even now cast an ominous shadow across the projected new European order which has been conceived in the warped minds of men who do not hesitate to order the indiscriminate execution of innocents.

Coast Defenses

In view of the extensive improvements being made to our coast defense system under a $92,000,000 appropriation, the assertion by a member of the General Staff Corps, writing in the current issue of Army Ordnance, that air power has revolutionized, and in some important respects superseded, traditional coast defense works is interesting indeed. According to Lieutenant Colonel Thomas R. Phillips, author of the article, the United States would be impregnable to sea-borne invasion even if there were no coast defenses -providing our land-based bomber forces were adequate and functioning efficiently. "The presence or absence of harbor defenses along the American coast," he declares in the semi-official publication of the Army Ordnance Association, "would be of no importance whatsover against a sea-borne invasion, as long

Colonel Phillips bases his opinions -some of which obviously are at variance with those of other Army experts-largely on the fate of the British expedition to Norway. Prime Minister Churchill, it is recalled, attributed the failure of Britain's counterinvasion of Norway to "intense, continuous bombings of the bases, which prevented the landing of any large reinforcements and even of artillery for the infantry already

Wallace Given Chance To Demonstrate Talents

By Owen L. Scott.

There is every prospect that Vice President Henry Wallace will now bring order and progress into this country's defense effort. Mr. Wallace is chosen by President Roosevelt to see that the barriers in policy and attitude that have been a defense drag during the past year are removed.

This is the Nation's No. 2 job. It is a job that normally would be filled by the President himself. Yet Mr. Roosevelt, faced with a multitude of tasks in the field of diplomacy and strategy, is without time to tackle it. By turning to the Vice President, he finds an elected official, with prestige of office, who can make decisions and assume responsibility that appointed officials might not get away with.

Mr. Wallace, at the President's request, now holds two very significant positions. He is charged with shaping policies in the field of economic warfare. This means that the Vice President is to plan the economic relationships of the United States with other nations, and in that process to have an important hand in shaping post-war policy. He also is charged with serving as chairman of the Priorities Board that will become the heart of the domestic defense machinery. This means that Mr. Wallace is to have a deciding voice in the economic policies that will underlie this vast program. Not that the Vice President is to run either of these defense efforts as an executive He isn't. His job is to make decisions in the event of conflict. It is to see that policies are co-ordinated and fit into a pattern instead of being diverse and contradictory as they often have been during the year past. In a word, the Vice President will do what a President normally would do if he had the time. He is the answer to the demand for a single defense head.

Like anybody confronted with a task of this size, Mr. Wallace faces both an opportunity and a danger. If the result of his efforts is success in the public's estimation, then the reward can be great. If the result isn't judged to be success, then any chance of political preferment may be lost.

The outlook, in this case, is for success. Reasons why are several.

In the first place, nearly $10,000.000.000 in a $50,000,000,000 defense program has been spent. It is true that there isn't a great deal to show for these first billions and it is true that the defense program to date, like Topsy, has "just growed." Yet the base now is laid and results soon are going to show in terms of large numbers of weapons of all kinds.

In the second place, the country learned before Mr. Wallace took hold. that the period just ahead is going to be one of intense pain, as the shift-over from a peacetime to an armament econlanded." # FOUND, BUT NOT IDENTIFIED

By the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

Long familiarity is no proof of understanding or identification. It is quite possible to enjoy companionship with one whom we regard as friend and yet fail to realize the true worth of his character. Frequently an incident or an experience reveals qualities in one we have long known and in an instant we see him in the full strength and nobility of his stature. "Never understood." is a sad comment often heard and too late to be of value to the one of whom it is spoken.

There is a striking example of this in the Gospel narrative. The Master was coming to the close of His great ministry and He was talking intimately with His chosen followers. Presently, one of them, Philip, asked Him a question that betrayed his ignorance of the deep significance of His life or understanding of His real character. In response Jesus said: "Have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?" It was both a challenge and a rebuke. The close companionship Philip had enjoyed with the Master had failed to reveal to him the true character of Jesus. Later He said to him: "Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in Me, or else believe me for the works that I have done." He seemed to say: "If what I claim Myself to be has not identified My real character and the purpose of My ministry then witness what I have done for those whom I have served." Known but not identified-this is tragically true of Him who came to men to give them a new and larger vision of life and its lofty purpose. Through 19 centuries of time He has been known and acknowledged by men as the "Great Teacher," the highest exemplar of the noblest and truest. "Higher has human thought not reached," says one, but His identification as the Son of God, the Saviour of mankind has not been adequately recognized. He has been known of men the world over. He has been revered and worshipped and to His name cathedrals and countless churches have been reared. More than any other who has trod the earth His teachings have been cherished and held as incomparable among the sayings of the great and the good. Our form of civilization takes His name to characterize its aims and yet who would venture to assume that it is governed in accordance with

His expressed will? "Why call ye Me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" He said on one occasion. Our generation has persistently acknowledged His power and the beauty of His divine personality; it has found Him but it has not identified Him with its ways and practices.

"If any man willeth to do My will, he shall know of My teaching." The proof of knowing Him is in the regulation of life, in all its purposes and acts by an obedient following of His standards and precepts. Is He identified with the life of the world as we know it today? Has He a place in our social and economic order? Have we in our domestic our family life given Him the place of reverent acknowledgment? Does a warring and distracted world with its bitter hates and cruelties reflect His spirit? It is in a life regulated and controlled by His principles that He is fittingly recognized and identified. There is little or no dispute as to His supreme greatness, but there are wide differences between our worship of Him and our common habits and practices. There are those who cynically ask: "Can we longer claim that our civilization is to continue Christian, Christianity in civilization as we have known it?" There is and always has been a saving remnant that preserves to each succeeding generation a vital faith and a Christian way of life. He is not without witnesses, be they few and lacking in strength, nor will He ever be.

A crisis such as the world faces today must make it sober and reflective. Life cannot go on as it has these recent years: there must come a situation in which the sanctions and guarantees of the Christian way of life are made more evident. The way of life Christ prescribed has to do with its every concern. political, social and economic, its right relations between men of every sort and class. To know Him means to identify Him with our life, to give Him the place that He demands. To worship Him is not enough, to build cathedrals and churches is not enough. He must be brought back again into the life of our time, be identified with it.

Railroad Ownership in Australia

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Public ownership of railways and of nearly all other public utilities is the established and almost unanimously indorsed policy of Australia. So definite is the sentiment of the people in this connection that no political party would dare suggest a change to private control.

During pioneer times private enerprise made many efforts to build railways, but with few exceptions failed, mainly because the population was too small to provide adequate finances. As a consequence, state governments were compelled to take over lines wholly or partially completed, and thus began the system of state and national government ownership, which developed successfully until today the railways constitute the greatest industrial enterprise in Australia both in regard to capital outlay and employment of labor. There are now 27,251 miles of government railways and only 721 miles owned privately.

In the earlier days of government ownership, there was much political interference with the management of the railways, but this has about disappeared owing to the setting up of commissions with wide statutory powers. The various governments still make the general policy of operation and decide for or against the building of new lines, but actual management is in the hands of experts Railways in Australia are maintained for public benefit, and earning of profits is not a primary consideration, although the commissioners are expected to pay working expenses and as far as possible meet interest on invested capital. In normal years this may not be difficult. but in hard times so many concessions are made to primary producers that avoiding a deficit is a difficult problem. All Australian governments are disposed to spoon-feed the man on the land, and the appetite of the farmer for spoonfeeding is not unlike that of his American cousin.

In opening virgin country the government railways of Australia have played an important part. Having no dividendhungry shareholders to consider, governments have followed the policy of constructing lines far into comparatively undeveloped sections, aware that losses must be sustained until new settlers arrive and land along the route is put under cultivation or stocked with cattle or sheep. With this policy Australia has become the greatest wool-producing area in the world, taken its place as one of the four principal wheat-growing countries, and has established extensive industries in dairying, fruit and sugarcane growing, mining and manufacturing.

The first railway to be operated in Australia was a short line from Sandridge, now Port Melbourne, to the then infant city of Melbourne, which now has a population of more than 1,000,000 The first train was hauled by a stationary engine mounted on a truck, with belt drive to an axle. The engine was of 30 horsepower, capable of drawing a load

Ural Industries

Though many of Russia's industries are threatened by the advance of the Nazi armies, the Soviet has several industrial areas far removed from the war zone. One of these lies in the Ural Mountains area, more than a thousand miles east of Moscow. In the current issue of Foreign Commerce Weekly, E. C. Ropes points out that this region is rich in deposits of many metals, including iron, copper and platinum, and that in recent years it has become a leading center of industrial production. Between 1928 and 1938, 200 new factories were built in the Urals. If Russian resistance continues, and Hitler's plans for a quick knockout victory over the Soviet armies are frustrated, the Ural area would become an increasingly important supplier of war materials.

Constructed in territory previously uninhabited, the Magnitogorsk steel plant is the largest new development in the Ural district. Nearby are vast deposits of magnetic iron. A fully integrated iron and steel plant is now in operation, equipped to produce 4,300,000 metric tons of pig iron annually. Magnitogorsk is an entirely new city, planned and built around the steel plant. In 1939 it had a population of 146,000.

The junction of seven railroads, Sverdlovsk, with a population of nearly 500,000 is the industrial capital of the Urals. In addition to the large Uralmarsh plant, built in 1933. which manufactures large quantities of heavy machinery for Soviet industry, this city has several other factories. To the southeast lies Chelyabinsk, the center of another industrial area, containing nickel and copper mines, and a new aluminum plant. At Chelyabinsk are located a tractor factory, a zinc smelter, and a machine-tool plant. With the discovery of oil some years ago, the Ural Mountains region has become an important petroleum producer, containing several large

An effort had been made to avoid large-scale expansion in the steel industry, the electric power industry, the shipbuilding industry and many other industries. The argument advanced was that there would be enough of most everything. When actual shortages became acute, as they have become acute, this argument was lost by the group of dollar-a-year men beyond any possibility of questioning.

Also, an effort was made to avoid over-all planning for industry through a carefully devised system of priorities. Machinery for imposing priorities is machinery for industrial planning. Businessmen who were chosen to plan for defense wanted to avoid a broad entrance by Government into a type of planning that would be far more detailed than that ever conceived during N. R. A. davs.

He pioneered with his father in reclaiming a stump-studded logged-off tract; was in the saw-mill business; later served as a telegraph operator in the railway mail service and progressed to trainman and conductor; subsequently engaged in the agricultural and lumbering business; finally became manager of several mining properties. He points out that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has described it as the "best practical technical library in the country." One nationally famous engineer established his residence in Denver just so that he might have access to this library, and engineers from all parts of the United States go there for intensive research study. Established as a result of co-operative efforts by 14 engineering and scientific societies, it is a basis for study of many national defense problems. An outstanding aeronautical collection from England recently was acquired. It consists of 1,400 items in seven languages, dating from the year 1600. It is used extensively by soldiers from Lowry Field, one of the Army's largest Air Corps technical schools.

of 130 tons at a speed of 25 miles an hour. Other lines were constructed, but generally met with financial difficulties and were taken over by governments of the states in which they attempted to operate, which recognized that without railways progress would be impossible. The outstanding railroad of Australia is the Transcontinental line, owned by the Commonwealth government and connecting the state systems of South Australia and Westren Australia. It is standard gauge, traverses 1.051 miles of country in which there is no permanent water stream, and for great distances no population other than nomadic aborigines. One feature of the line is the straight run of 300 miles across the Nullarbor Plain.

The longest train journey in Australia is from Neekatharra, Western Australia, to Dejarra, Queensland, a distance of

5,500 miles. Five breaks of gauge are involved in this trip. Diversity of gauges is the bugbear of the Australian railways. In the old days politicians failed to envisage the time when railways would extend far out from the cities to the boundaries of adjoining states and the necessity would arise for interstate transportation. Inconvenience to passengers is not serious, usually involving nothing more than crossing from one side of a platform to another. This lack of standard gauge, however, does impede the progress of freight shipments because of the necessity of reloading. But since each state or region in Australia is not so dependent upon another, not many freight shipments go for great distances. The finest train in Australia is the "Spirit of Progress," built in the Victorian railway workshops under the direction of Sir Harold Clapp, who, following 24 years of experience in the United States, did much to improve the standard of railroading in Australia. The train is steel-constructed luvuriously furnished, air-conditioned, accommodates 305 passengers, and has about everything found in the American streamliner.

Among the features of the American system that have been avoided are the separate ownership of Pullman cars and the private handling of parcels by privately owned express companies Australian railways have features which are probably not found in any other country. One line has a train which periodically runs into various sections of the state in which it operates, and occasionally into other states, for the purpose of showing to city businessmen the possibilities of rural development. A line in New South Wales operates a train with farm experts aboard who instruct passenger farmers in the most modern methods applicable to their problems. # Review of 105th Week of the War

By Blair Bolles.

The Germans tried all last week to do what they tried vainly to do the previous week and the week before that-capture Leningrad and Odessa. The blitzkrieg, for the time being at least, is history. It has disappeared from immediate view in the vast reaches of Russia. The Nazis have taken from Russia more territory than is contained in all of what Berlin calls Greater Germany, and still the Nazis are but on the Russian fringes. The Russians greet every German attack with derisive contempt, and last week the Soviet Armies began a counterattack which pushed against the exasperated Nazis from the Black Sea to the Arctic.

On the western front September brings "invasion weather" and the memory of the fierce German attempt a year ago to seize England. Be the weather ever so good, invasion would be difficult now, because Germany is occupied with Russia. Nazi troops from the countries facing England, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, have been transferred to the eastern front.

Out on the wide Atlantic the United States made a brief entrance into the warfare. A submarine sent torpedoes at the U.S.S. destroyer Greer, and the Greer retorted by dropping depth charges. * * * * city.

Eastern Front

When the week began, the Germans were pressing toward Leningrad. In the Russian center, the forces of Gen. Semeon Timoshenko counterattacked against the Nazis on the road toward Moscow. In the Ukraine, Russians under Gen. Semeon Budyenny blocked an attempt of the Germans to bridge the Dnieper, which is the front in that region, and the Germans, allied there with Hungarians, Rumanians and Slovakians, kept the Russians from crossing the Dnieper in an effort to retake some of the ground west of the river lost to the Germans. Rumanians besieged the great Black Sea port of Odessa and cut off the water supply of the besieged Russians. In the north, above Leningrad, Finnish soldiers pressed back the Russians on the Karelian peninsula, three times a Finnish-Russian battleground in 25 years.

man units in the Leningrad drive reached the edges of Krasnogvardeisk, 20 miles southwest of Leningrad, a railway junction. On the sea front, the Axis reported, Leningrad's only protection was afforded by the remnants of the Red Baltic fleet and the fortress of Kronstadt, on the Gulf of Finland, 20 miles west of the city.

All day Monday the Luftwaffe kept Russian troops and artillery positions ground Leningrad under constant bombardment. Wednesday brought reports of a smashing German victory at Luga, 70 miles southwest of Leningrad, eliminating one of the major obstacles in the path of German troops trying to close a ring about the big city. But the same day brought a repulse for the Germans. The Russians defending Leningrad under Marshal Klementi Voroshilov forced the Germans who had reached Krasnogvardeisk to withdraw 3 miles. The marshal himself led his troops in this success.

The defense of Leningrad was proceeding so well on Thursday that the Russians taunted the Germans, through Spokesman Soloman A. Lozovsky, who said Axis reports that Leningrad was encircled and on the verge of falling were "propaganda which belongs in the realm of fantasy." With the German land offensive against Leningrad reported checked, the Nazi and Russian air forces were locked in a bitter struggle for control of the air over the threatened in a furious dogfight. Soviet bombers were said meanwhile to be blasting away at German ground forces. These Russian air attacks, carried out at low altitude, raised havoc with German supply lines and disrupted preparations for a new push against the city, the Russians declared.

Russian soldiers who must have gone through something similar to Dunkerque arrived at Leningrad Friday to aid in the city's defense. They were troops evacuated from Tallinn, Estonian capital, which had been surrounded for weeks before the Germans captured it a week ago Friday. The only place for troops in Tallinn to retreat to was the sea, the Baltic and the Gulf of Finland. Wait-have been vague in reporting as to how close the Nazis have come to Moscow. But whatever the mileage, seemingly the Germans are less near the Russian capital today than they were two weeks ago. The troops of Timoshenko have been conducting a vigorous counteroffensive. To cope with this, the Germans transferred their garrison at Toul, Occupied France, to Russia. Among the troops moved from the west to the east was the 161st Division, and an infantry regiment in the division was routed by the central Russian army in the vicinity of Smolensk, which is part of the Moscowaimed front.

On Wednesday, Pravda, the Communist party newspaper in Moscow, said that Timoshenko's troops had retaken 22 villages in Drive on Moscow 10 days of battle. Losovsky said German losses were piling up at such a rate that Hitler had asked Mussolini for Italian soldiers to fill in the gap. In the Ukraine, the Dnieper River front continues at a stalemate. Except in one spot-and that valueless-the Germans have been unable to cross the river and pursue their advantage, which has brought them practically all of the Ukraine west of the river, nor have the Russians been able to recover a foot of what they lost in the Western Ukraine. For the present, the central points of Ukrainian warfare are Odessa and Kiev, the district's two richest cities, the first already besieged, the second about to be besieged.

The cry of the citizens in both Odessa and Kiev was that they would defend their strongholds to "the last drop of blood." The move against Kiev, on a hill, began Wednesday,

Thursday night Russian bombers, according to Moscow, dropped explosives and incendiaries on military and industrial targets in Berlin, touching off fires and explosions. According to Berlin, anti-aircraft defenses of Berlin thwarted an attempt by the Russians Thursday night to attack Berlin and brought down one of two planes which approached the capital. The previous night British bombers attacked Berlin and, according to London, set a large fire near one of the main railway stations. Last night the German-Russian war was 11 weeks old. Some estimate of the human cost of that war was made by Yemelyan Yaroslavsky, Communist publicist, who wrote in Pravda that the Germans had lost 2,930,000 men since the European war began, two years ago, and 2,000,000 of them since the Russian war began.

A variation on these statistics came from London, where an authoritative cording to London, have the incredible British source said that German losses

British planes during the week bombed German centers in the coastal captive countries and attacked Essen and Cologne, while the Germans attacked the North Sea port of Hull. The British also found out that last month their planes bombed the German pocket battleship Luetzow, formerly the Deutschland. But the British war effort last week, at least as it was reflected here, was centered chiefly on an attempt to get the United States to enter it outright as a belligerent.

First, London newspapers called out to the United States to do more than the United States is doing now in the way of helping More Aid England. Then Winston Desired

Churchill, Prime Minister of Great Britain, and Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, spoke at a Lord Mayor's luncheon in London. Said King:

"Your declaration, Mr. Prime Minister, that in the Far East Britain would stand at the side of the United States is a sure sign of the deepening interdependence of the world. (Churchil] made that observation in a broadcast two weeks ago today.)

"A similar declaration on the part | not go.

Germany would, I believe, serve to shorten this perilous conflict. Such a declaration would be full of meaning for the German people. At the same time it would constitute a realistic recognition that Britain is the one obstacle in the way of a Nazi attack upon the New World."

Churchill called King's observation "a momentous declaration," but there are no signs that the Canadian Prime Minister's hopes will be realized. * * * *

Far Eastern Front

One crisis passed last week, and the course of Japan is still foggy. The first oil ship bearing aviation gasoline for Russia landed on Thursday at Vladivostok, 18 days after it left the United States. For days America wondered whether Japan would try to halt it. Japan did not. Soon a new Far Eastern crisis may be upon us. For Japan the times still are criticalthe most critical in her history, Prince Konove, Prime Minister, said on Wednesday. Japan Oil to Russia frets about her "encirclement." The Diplomatic Review of Tokio, backed by the Foreign Office, said British-American intention to dominate the world became clear after the Atlantic meeting of Roosevelt and Churchill. Itsadded:

"The intention of the British and Americans is to burn up and exhaust Japan's natural resources and to threaten Japan by both economic and military pressure. The United States and Great Britain are strengthening aid to the Soviet, are putting pressure on Thailand and are urging the Netherlands East Indies and Australia to tighten the encirclement of Japan."

There is nothing new in the Japanese attempt to reach some understanding with Washington.

Home Front

On Tuesday, September 4, the U.S.S. Greer, flagship of Destroyer Division 61, Lt. Comdr. Laurence Hugh Frost, commanding, was somewhere in the North Atlantic. A German submarine sent torpedoes at it, which missed. The destroyer loosed a depth charge, and the men aboard her thought they had sent the sub to the bottom.

It was a historic occasion, because it marked the first involvement of an American warship in actual two-way fighting since the war's beginning. President Roosevelt said that the destroyer had orders to "eliminate" the sub. Much beyond that in comment he would

AXIS OR ALLIES: JAPANESE MUST CHOOSE

Future of Nipponese Empire Rests on Answer to Dilemma

dilemma as track fans who have to bick the winner in a race in which they have staked everything they possess. Within the next few weeks Tokio must make up its mind about who is going to win this war-the Axis or the Allies.

The problem before the rulers of Japan is the gravest that has ever faced any government. If they back the Nazi horse they stand to lose everythingin the event of Hitler's defeat-and see Japan relegated to the rank of a third class power. If they abandon the Axis, the Nipponese Empire will remain a great power. But the Tanaka plan providing for the domination of the Asiatic continent and the Western Pacific must be abandoned. For 10 years the Japanese people have made unbelievable sacrifices In the belief that their military rulers were right and that Japan would become the Roman Empire of the East.

Last week the Japanese Ambassador at Washington, Annapolis-trained Admiral Nomura, called on President Roosevelt with a personal mesage from Japan's Prime Minister, Prince Konoye. What the message contained is naturally a matter which is known by only a few in the President's circle. But it is fair to assume, from certain hints dropped here and there, that the Japanese are trying to gain time before they make up their minds definitely on which horse they are going to bet. Reports from Tokio indicate that many Japanese naval men are beginning to doubt that the fast Nazi horse can stand a long race. Like turf experts, Japan's policy framers are looking at the pedigree and the past performances of the racers. And while It is obvious that the Axis had a good chance to win the race which began at such a terrific pace, it has become increasingly doubtful whether it will be anywhere near the winning post in the long race which the Allies have forced their opponents to accept.

Democracies Aided Expansion.

The Tokio government still hopes to take advantage of the dallying methods of the democracies. For the last 10 years-since the invasion of Manchuria on September 4, 1931-Tokio has been admonished, cajoled and occasionally threatened by the Western powers. But nothing has happened. Within 10 years the Japanese have gone farther than Tanaka ever dreamed they would go in such a short space of time. Dissension among the Westerners, fear of war, wishful thinking and many other considerations have favored Japan's expansion on the Asiatic mainland.

Now, however, Great Britain and the United States have made up their minds that Japan cannot interfere with their plans to defeat Hitler. The conference between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill was conclusive in this respect. They formally agreed that Japan must not be a stumbling block any longer. She must either abandon the Axis bandwagon or else. . .

immediately reinforced its light naval forces in the Southern Pacific. An undisclosed number of cruisers, destroyers and submarines, together with bombers, were rushed to the Philippines and the area around Singapore, Borneo and the Celebes Islands. Tokio realized this was no longer a "gesture" and that Britain and the United States meant business.

In the meantime, the State Department decided on a realistic policy-which many consider aggressive. Ambassador Grew in Tokio and Ambassador Nomura in Washington were both instructed to inform the Japanese government, that our patience had come to an end and that we were willing to face the "direct consequence" if the Japanese continued their aggressive policy. Prince Konoye was presented with an olive branch and a dagger. He has now to make his choice.

The olive branch took the form of concrete suggestions regarding the future. Japan was told that the United States did not wish to see the Japanese Empire crumble. It indorsed Tokio's cherished theory that Japan could be an element of order in Asia-provided that it abandoned its warlike policies and accepted its logical place in the sun.

Concrete Suggestions Made. The Tokio government was told by the State Department that it must make a choice between the Axis and the democracies. In the event it decided to live in peace with the United States and Great Britain, both countries would recognize the established Manchukuo Empire. As to the rest of the Japanese conquests, extending from Peiping to Thailand, London and Washington declared they favored a status quo. The complete liquidation of all problems would take place after the end of the war by all interested parties in a spirit of fairness to the rights of the chief protagonists-the Chinese and the Japanese.

If Japan were willing to accept these proposals of the United States which were indorsed by Great Britain, all trade restrictions imposed on Japan would be lifted. The Japanese people would have free access to the markets of Great Britain and the whole Western Hemisphere. The crisis which the Japanese leaders fear from economic depression caused by abandoning further military ventures could easily be overcome by Japanese factories working at full speed to produce for Britain and even for this country. The Japanese government would be able under these conditions to obtain loans in the United States and prepare itself slowly-while the democracies were fighting the Axis-for a post-war readjustment.

In exchange, the Tokio government would be required to abandon its political agreements with the Axis. And this would not be mere lip service. The Japanese would prove their good faith by reducing the army of occupation in Indo-China to a mere police force, and by bringing their navy back to peace Americans into Asiatic waters, where The crux of the situation came about and Formosa, the latter being only 600 their ships could be attacked by landwhen the Japanese armed forces took strength. Moreover, the British and American governments are quite willing to help Japan to save its face and do not intend to give the appearance of dictating terms to that proud nationalistic country.

Japanese Fear Coalition.

Should, however, Tokio reject these offers as a basis for negotiations, both the United States and Great Britain are determined to take steps to eliminate Japan from the present conflict. It may be a long and tedious process, but even the most optimistic Japanese doubt that they can win a war against a coalition formed by the circumstances in the Far East. It is not an empty phrase to say that Japan is encircled today. In the South Pacific, America, Great Britain and the Dutch have strong naval and air forces. Despite the fact that the Japanese have a first class navy with excellent bases from Formosa to the Gulf of Siam, their navy can do nothing about the fast mobile forces of the three democratic nations. In China, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek will soon be reinforced with war materials which are already arriving via the Burma Road. The Chinese leader is a permanent menace to Japan and important forces must be maintained to prevent him from taking the offensive. The day the generalissimo obtains an adequate number of planes and small tanks, the Japanese must figure on substantially increasing their forces on the Chinese mainland. Finally-and this is no mean threat to Japan-the Siberian army is in better. shape than any other of the Soviet forces and its air fleet is capable of raiding Japanese cities. Brave as the Japanese are, it would be suicidal for them, in the opinion of American military experts, even to attempt to resist such a combination of enemies. The Japanese are isolated. The Germans cannot come to their rescue, irrespective of what happens to Russia and of further victories the Nazis may win in Europe or in Africa. People Want Victories Only.

Japan, like the Reich, has been fed on victories. Its population has patriotically tightened its belt in order to make the military operations of its leaders possible. But if these victories become defeats; if official communiques can no longer boast about new conquests and the news of serious damage to the fleet gest back home, it would be difficult for any political leader to stem the wave of discontent from a nation whch would see in a defeat the runnation of all its hopes. Emperor Hirohito and Prince Premier Konoye know this full well. A showdown in American, British and Japanese relations may come sooner than is believed.

we used to send them to Japan when that country was fighting our friends, the Chinese. If the Japanese want to interfere with our shipments to any part of the Pacific, there are enough American battleships available to protect them against any power. And we mean this time to oppose violence with violence. It is up to Tokio to choose now which road it intends to take, whether it is determined to remain on the side of the Axis and suffer incalculable consequences, or put new life into its muchweakened economic system by not interfering with the nations now fighting the Axis and all that it stands for.

The answer will soon be known. It is quite conceivable that the Tokio rulers did what many racing fans do. They may have decided to bet on the Axis horse when they saw it in the paddock. But they may change their minds when they reach the mutuel window.

A critical battle between these nations. -two of the greatest maritime powers of history-could be a land engagement in which the United States had little part, if any. It is not improbable that the battle would take place in the Malay States, Indo-China or Thailand.

The three vital factors which would be involved in a Japanese-American war make such an event possible:

1. Japan's mighty fleet is irreplacable. When a ship was sunk, no new one could be built to take its place, for in wartime Japan would not have access to materials essential to shipbuilding. The United States, on the other hand, can build anew, and is building faster and faster. It can afford to risk a critical test of naval arms and, in fact, would welcome it.

2. Naval bases would be as important as fleets in a Pacific war, because of the vast distances involved. Large detachments of warships cannot operate far from bases. Smaller vessels which must accompany capital ships can go for no more than a week or two without replenishing their supplies; and even the largest ships would be taking a great risk to venture far from repair docks. Without Asiatic bases, the American Fleet could hardly operate in Asiatic waters. 3. Japan is extremely vulnerable from the economic standpoint. She has to import about 60 per cent of her raw materials, some of them indispensable in a war: Rubber, nickel, wool, cotton, timber, tin, lead, chemicals, leather, oil, pig iron. An effective blockade not only would deprive her of these vital supplies, but also would play havoc with her highly industrialized economic sys-

Blockade First Step.

Military experts, trying to envisage the shape of a Japanese-American conflict, predict that a blockade of Japan by this country would be the first step. This would be comparatively simple, they believe, for Japan's shipping facilities already are tight, and there would be few of the world's ports at which she could call for cargoes. There is no doubt that the Dutch and British would ally themselves with the United States and cut off Japanese commerce with the East Indies, while the United States could bring pressure on South American countries to curtail exports to Japan.

From Hawaii and other United States and British islands in the Pacific, meanwhile, air and submarine patrols would watch for the few Japanese ships which had managed to obtain cargoes.

For a long time after a declaration of war, probably, this is all that would happen, except for sporadic sinkings of United States ships by Japanese submarines and airplanes operating from bases on the hundreds of Japanese mandate islands in the Central and Western Pacific; and for night bombing of Manila. Medium bombers could easily make the trip from Hainan, Camranh

A war between the United States and | pines have been strengthened consider- | out. But it is not likely the American Japan would be a naval war, yet it ably in the past year or two. But in a fleet would bite. Cavite provides powermight be fought to a finish without one | Far Eastern war this country would be | ful defenses, and the land forces, regreatly outnumbered in the air, at least, while operating in the vicinity of Japan. What warplanes could be spared from the American mainland would face the entire might of Japanese planes, all concentrated in the Japanese islands.

Co-ordination Essential.

For air defense or attack, the United States would depend heavily on the Navy's air arm, for only a limited number of land bases for Army planes would be available. For this reason, Navy officials view with extreme concern the agitation in some quarters for creation of a separate air force. The success of any operations in the Far East might hinge on perfect co-ordination of forces in the air and on the sea. Any disorganization or time lag in the co-operation between the two forces might be fatal. And the officials contend that if the airmen were not naval officers, schooled as naval men and directly under naval control, such difficulties would result. Japan's first major stroke, the experts say, would be the seizure of Guam. Unfortified and with no installations except half completed airplane and submarine bases, the island would be an easy prey. Flanked by multitudes of Japanese islands, many of them reported to harbor submarines and air bases, naval vessels could not risk attempting to defend it. It could be bombed into submission in a matter of days or, perhaps, hours.

The Navy Department for 22 years has asked Congress for funds to fortify Guam. Congress relented last March to the extent of providing $12,800,000 for facilities at Samoa and Guam. But that sum is too little, and if any more were appropriated now, it probably would be too late.

With Guam lost, this country's only large base in the Orient, Cavite, in Manila Bay, would be isolated. Communications lines could be maintained only with extreme difficulty in the face of air and undersea attack from Japanese units on their many small bases. Any attempt to retake Guam would be a major undertaking, entailing the dangerous and arduous task of first mopping up the Japanese bases. The immediate hombing of Tokio in case of war is advised by some military experts. The flimsy structures which compose the city would prove a tinderbox under an incendiary attack. The heart of the Japanese Empire would be disorganized; and the effect on morale might be tremendous. Japanese, in mortal fear of losing face, might not bear up psychologically under such a disaster. Continuous attacks, furthermore, would serve to keep the Japanese air force at home for defense purposes.

Sea Battle Improbable. The two fleets, meanwhile, based on

Japan and at Hawaii, would be glaring at each other across 4.000 miles of ocean. The Japanese would like to tempt the cently put under United States control. would stand off forces which might make temporary landings elsewhere on Luzon Island. Manila could withstand a long siege.

A Japanese attack on Hawaii is regarded as the most unlikely thing in the world, with one chance in a million of being successful. Besides having more powerful defenses than any other post under the American flag, it is protected by distance. The Japanese fleet would have no bases from which to operate It would have so far to come that American patrols would spot it long before it arrived. In any case, American naval men would like nothing better than to see the Japanese fleet outside of Pearl Harbor where they could take it on.

Distances also make impracticable any attack on the United States mainland, as long as Hawaii is in American hands and the fleet is afloat. A lone raider might get through and shell a West Coast city, but that would be of no strategic importance.

Japanese Hold Camranh.

Aside from the fleet, the strategic prizes in the war would be the four great naval bases which still are in Occidental hands-Cavite, Singapore, Hong Kong and Surabaya, in the Netherlands East Indies. The only other fine base already has fallen to the Japanese -Camranh, in Indo-China. Heavily fortified by the French and situated about halfway between Singapore and Hong Kong, it was a rich plum which the Japanese seized from the French on July 29, while Britain and the United States did nothing.

Singapore is one of the most powerful fortresses in the world. A sea attack against land defense, always a desperate undertaking, would provide the United States fleet with its opportunity to engage the Japanese on the open sea. An advance by land forces, through Thailand and down the Malay Peninsula, therefore, would seem to be the logical approach. The first move would be a swift thrust through southern Thailand, fast enough to prevent the British army in Burma, to the west, from coming to the assistance of British troops in the peninsula. On this narrow strip of land, or in Thailand or Indo-China

if the British choose to take the initiative, a decisive battle might be waged. It is at least doubtful, however, that Japan will attempt a southern move at this time. With Russia engaged in a life-and-death struggle against Germany, she has her historic opportunity to try to take Siberia. And she is not expected to attempt new campaigns both in Siberia and the East Indies-5,000 miles apart-at one time.

Meanwhile, the American blockade would be strangling the empire, and experts estimate Japan's 'stores would be used up within a year or, at most, two years. Aid to China and Russia would increase, and the war of attrition would be taking its toll. And possibly pressure from the American public would force naval and military authorities to take a more direct hand in the

Prince and Nephews

"Quite a number of superior officers had obtained permission to witness the review and received invitations to join the staff of the general in chief.

"Amid these uniforms without embroidery, but severely military, three horsemen in civil dress naturally drew to themselves the attention of all. These three privileged citizens, whose names were asked, were Prince de Joinville and his two nephews, the Comte de Paris and Duke de Chatres, scions of a dethroned royalty. The young princes came to offer their services to the Federal Government and to follow in a republican army and career of arms which had already led one of them to the field of battle in Italy.

"At this review, where I saw for the first time the young prince, there was seen a very simple open carriage mingling on terms of democratic equality with other carriages loaded with spectators. And yet it carried Mr. Lincoln and his family. It was to be observed that the eyes of the people were not upon the President of the Republic. The man upon whom more than upon any other depended the safety or ruin of the country at the hour of supreme peril, upon whom weighed the highest responsibility, remained unnoticed in the crowd, except by those in his immediate vicinity, without guard or without attendants.'

Review on Grand Scale

However, the Baileys Cross Roads review was undoubtedly arranged upon the grandest scale of all except, or course, the final grand review which took place here in Washington at the close of the war.

Regarding this great event, the first edition of The Star of November 20, 1864, has this to say:

"Up to noon today the crowd passing the Long Bridge to attend this review was immense. Perhaps 20,000 citizens and others went over from Washington. No business to speak of was transacted in either executive department this He is trampling out the vintage where forenoon, nearly all being away at the orders to Baileys, to have a grand review of the whole Army. Very few had any confidence in the part of the order announcing the purpose-a review. All believed it was to take Fairfax, and then perhaps to move forward on Centreville and Manassas; but all were disappointed. It was a 'Grand Review,' a very grand one, such as I doubt whether this continent ever witnessed before. It may never witness the like again. There were about 100,000 men in battle array; not in one long line stretching far beyond the reach of vision, and leaving the imagination to picture what we could not see, but all in sight at once, on an immense plane, in squares and columns, marching and counter marching, charg-

"The President was there; Gen. Mc-Clellan and the Prince de Joinville were there: and all the elite were there. But to the poor soldiers it was a very hard day. They marched heavy, with knapsacks and all the equipment of a soldier. They started early, marched 10 miles, were then several hours under review. and then marched back to eamp. Many gave out and were left by the wayside. to come up when they can; the rest of us are back in camp tonight, worn out and heartily tired of grand reviews. I hope the crowding of my hospital is not to be one of the results of the overwork." One of the incidents connected with this particular review at Baileys well worth mentioning was the visit made there upon this occasion by Julia Ward Howe and the writing at the old Willard Hotel, early on the following morning, of her immortal poem, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Competent writers have declared this hymn to be the best of the many beautiful and sentimental songs written during the Civil War period; indeed, none has quite reached the heights of excellence of Mrs. Howe's lines, the first verse of which you the grapes of wrath are stored.

"Mine eves have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;

"It would be impossible for me to say how many times I have been called upon to rehearse the circumstances under which I wrote 'The Battle Hymn of the Republic.' I have also had occasion more than once to state the simple story in writing. As this oft-told tale has no unimportant part in the story of my life, I will briefly add it to these records. "I distinctly remember that a feeling of discouragement came over me as I drew near the city of Washington at the time already mentioned. I thought of the women of my acquaintance whose sons or husbands were fighting our great battle; the women themselves serving in the hospitals or busying themselves with the work of the Sanitary Commission. "My husband, as already said, was beyond the age of military service; my eldest son but a stripling; my youngest was a child of not more than 2 years. I could not leave my nursery to follow the march of our armies, neither had I the practical deftness which the preparing and packing of sanitary stores demanded. Something seemed to say to me, 'You would be glad to serve, but you cannot help any one; you have nothing to give and there is nothing for you to do.' Yet, because of my sincere desire, a word was given me to say that which did strengthen the hearts of those who fought in the field and of those who languished in the prison.

Songs Inspire Soldiers

"We were invited one day to attend a review of troops at some distance from the town. While we were engaged in watching the maneuvers a sudden movement of the enemy necessitated immediate action. The review was discontinued, and we saw a detachment of soldiers gallop to the assistance of a small body of our men who were in imminent danger of being surrounded and cut off from retreat. The regiments remaining on the field were ordered to march to their cantonments. We returned to the city very slowly of necessity, for the troops nearly filled the road. My dear minister was in the carriage with me, as were several other friends. To

Mrs. Howe's own version of how she was inspired to write this soul-stirring Song follows: Shopping in Paris

A woman who wants a pair of shoes in occupied France today must go to her local mayor, who examines the condition of her footwear personally and decides whether or not she really needs them. If his decision is favorable he gives her a bon d'achat, a form of ticket authorizing some one to sell her a pair.

Nine months ago silk stockings were problem No. 1 for women shoppers. Today it is shoes.

Investigators Feared

Many a woman prefers patronizing the cobbler to having investigators in her home because tales are told about inspectors who carry away foodstuffs they regard as surplus or anything else that looks a little extra. In one instance a man's suit was confiscated because it was thought he had one more than neces-

Cobblers are rushed to death. Many, have stopped taking new work and put up signs to say so. The work they do is good enough, but their materials are poor. There is no more genuine sole leather to be had. What is used for soles now is about as resistant as tough cardboard. Far more satisfactory is the latest wrinkle-rubber. Pieces of old tires cut to shape are nailed to shoe bottoms, making for quick repair and easy tread.

The silk stocking shortage remains acute, but women have found substitutes in home-knit hosiery and, so far as weather permits, in bare legs. Two firms in Paris, one American, one French, advertise a suntan liquid to be brushed over the legs, with a streak of darker color to be painted down the back to simulate the stocking seam.

Stocking qualities are far from serviceable, though prices have jumped. Stockings that were 25 francs before the occupation are now 75 to 100 francs. The franc is now valued at 43.50 to the dollar. Silk stocks are low and there are no replacements, as the bulk of the raw supply came from Japan. Italian silk imports to France are negligible.

Germans Buy Hose

Hot cakes are slow selling, compared to the way German officers and men are gobbling up the silk stocking supply that women had done without for a long time and now they were going to be as smartly dressed as French women. The saleswoman remarked that silk stockings are no longer chic as French women are now wearing wool.

Women shoppers find silk lingerie keeping step with stockings in scarcity now 425. The elaborate French lace trimmed and hand embroidered styles have correspondingly skyrocketed.

Leather goods have gone up in leaps and bounds. Handbags formerly 200 to 300 francs are now 1.000. Thousandfranc crocodile bags have jumped to 3.000. These appear to be legimate increases as leather stocks cannot be replaced now, and the Germans have corralled all leathers their army could use. Many substitutes for leather are being employed in women's wear. It goes against the grain to get the mayor's permission to buy linen sheets. damask tablecloths and household linens of any sort. Turkish towelings are restricted, as are blankets and woolen carpets and rugs.

The Germans have cracked down particularly on wools. Woolen things of all kinds, and particularly clothing, are tremendously important to harassed people looking backward and forward to winters in heatless homes. Knitting wools are under the ban of the bon and daily diminishing. The least wanted colors are all that are left, and brilliant results can be noted in red stockings, green bloomers and orange gloves.

Bootleg Trade Active

While the poor are hamstrung by the restrictions, the monied gentry can have recourse to the black market. This bootleg organization is noted principally for its operations in money exchange man used it to get material for a new pear too new to pass muster at the Mairie. This fellow paid in the black market a thousand francs a vard for wool suiting of a quality that would have cost no more than 200 francs with a bon if

The free sale sign is a white disk while a red disk indicates restricted merchandise. This saves the woman shopper a lot of wear and tear, and saves the shopkeeper's breath.

Wartime Duties Keep Lady Halifax Busy

By Ruth Cowan.

There's a lonesome dachshund out at the British Embassy and a pile of letters getting larger every day since Lady Fairfax flew to England recently for a visit with her 21-year-old son on his first leave from military duty.

The wife of the British Ambassador had the "flu" right after she and Lord Halifax first arrived in the United States little more than seven months ago. To cheer her up Lord Halifax suggested she get a dog. From a nearby kennel she selected a sleek brown, soft-eyed puppy. It so happened that the dog had been born on January 20, the day Franklin D. Roosevelt took office as President for the third time. Lady Halifax named her new pet Franklin-and now every one calls him Frankie for short.

But Frankie has the mopes. Perhaps he worries about the other dogs Lady Halifax will see back home. Before the war Lady Halifax, who is very fond of dogs, bred dachshunds and elk hounds. and was the organizer of the English Elk Hound Society.

But Frankie is not all that claims Lady Halifax's attention. There's the mail. Since she has been in this country she has received from 300 to 400 letters a month from persons in many parts of the Nation.

Long Letters to Write

Lady Halifax has tried to answer each letter in longhand even if she had time to write only a few lines. Keeping up with the postman has kept her busy. Also there were long letters to write to her four children and to friends back home-impressions of the Halifaxes' first visit to the United States.

She and Lord Halifax came over last January aboard the latest in British battleships, the King George V. It anchored at Annapolis, and the new British emmisary and his wife were greeted by President Roosevelt, who had driven from Washington in a cold rain to welcome them-and also to see the warship, for ships are one of his hobbies.

Lady Halifax is a grandmother of three, but life certainly hasn't slowed down for her in the last year. Instead, it has challenged her with new experiences, new adventures and new duties. Not many women make a trans-

Atlantic voyage aboard a battleship in time of war. Her trip back home was likewise novel. She flew from Canada early this month and, it is rumored, in a bomber.

About two weeks later Lord Halifax flew to London to make a personal report to his government. They plan to return together. In the meantime, as letters to friends here relate, she is very busy seeing what damage the bombs have done, trading experiences with her countryfolk, visiting the grandchildren.

as one result of the European war.

Today, as a result, the United States is using native ingenuity as never before to solve one pre-war problem after another that threatened to "bottleneck" production of vital military equipment. The methods are threefold: First, development of new facilities for the creation of such materials here at home: second, rigid conservation of stocks on hand in co-operation with the newlyorganized conservation unit of the Office of Production Management; and, third, plain hard work to make the recovery of long-neglected domestic mineral deposits worthwhile.

Bird's-Eye View

by a survey conducted to determine just where the Nation stands today after 18 months of national effort to avoid shortages of materials which threatened to cripple large sections of American industry in the defense program.

A bird's-eye view of where that effort is heading is gained by checking the steps being taken to create, produce and accumulate more of the materials listed by the Army and Navy Munitions Board as being absolutely essential to national defense. These include tin, rubber, chrome, tungsten, quinine, camphor and magnesium, without which the Nation would face a breakdown in both the production and maintenance of defense equipment.

Procurement of these materials has taken precedence in national planning, so by checking progress made in creating, producing and accumulating more of these substances, it is possible to gauge the progress of the entire defense effort.

A survey of the field reveals some spectacular and reassuring results. Some have already made headlines, but others have been overlooked in the hurlyburly of war news. Each, however, is a tribute to the ability of American creative genius to meet pressing demands in short order.

Rubber Is Question Mark

From the standpoint of indispensability, as well as from tonnage and dollar volume, rubber is a major strategic material. With the Nation dependent on the Singapore region for 97 per cent of its supplies for tires for trucks, planes, cars and for use on tanks and almost every other wheeled defense vehicle, rubber has been a continual question mark in defense planning.

But two notable triumphs in rubber research have been brought about by the intensified defense effort. The latest to be announced is the development of duramin, a combination of chemical age-resisters discovered in the B. F. Goodrich laboratories and described by John L. Collyer, president, "as acting on rubber to prolong its service life much as vitamins react on the human system." Now being used in tires for increased mileage, the combination is said to be effective in quantities ranging from a quarter of 1 per cent to 2 per cent of the amount of rubber used in the tires.

The development of duramin extends the program aimed at forestalling, the possibility of rationing of rubber in this country which the same company launched in June of last year when it began the manufacture for the public of the first synthetic rubber passenger car tires. The basis of these tires is ameripol, a synthetic rubber compounded from ingredients found in petroleum, natural gas, soap and air.

of what loomed as a shortage. Tungsten is now being produced domestically, but stocks are being built up with purchases from China. According to Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, nurchases now total 34,000 tons.

Since the principal source of tin is the Malaya zone, where tension is high, the government has taken further steps to bolster reserves. Some 92,896 tons of the metal have been purchased, and These are the results brought to light 9.045 tons are now in shipment. Furthermore, a $3.500,000 Government-owned tin smelting plant designed to produce quickly 18,000 tons of fine tin from lowgrade Bolivian ore is to be built at Texas City, Tex.

Costs Are Slashed

At the same time, intensive efforts are being made to develop equipment and methods which will make profitable the working of low-grade domestic deposits of other vital minerals, and many notable results have been achieved. Mining costs have been slashed with Le Tourneau earth-moving equipment which is used in open-pit operations to scrape off the overburden of soil from deposits of lowgrade minerals and expose them quickly for large-scale extraction.

An ingenious flotation process, whereby ground particles of manganese, the "starch of steel," are made to float to the top of an oily solution while waste material remains at the bottom, has enabled the Cuban-American Manganese Corp. to develop low-grade deposits of this ore, 14 pounds of which must be used in making a ton of steel.

In the face of the growing need for steel in the national defense program, this development substantially increases the Nation's assured future supply of this top strategic material. The company's plant has been stepped up 33 per cent to 133.000 tons a year as a result, while the great Anaconda Copper Mining Co. is to use the process in a new 100,000-ton plant scheduled to go into operation in the early summer. Incidentally, deposits of manganese have been found in 37 States.

Getting right down to the question of shells and explosives, the survey finds to believe, officials indicate, that production of many of these materials will continue after the war, and that American trade will then be in a position to dominate many international avenues heretofore closed to it.

States, however, she quickly found that the public-especially women-wanted to know about the Ambassador's wife. Right after her arrival invitations began coming to Lady Halifax to attend this and that benefit for British relief.

Boy Flies to Clipper

By Frances Ireland Foltz.

MADRID .- For one trip, at least, the Europe-bound trans-Atlantic clipper lost its wartime aura of mystery.

Some 38 passengers and this weary mother found that a normally inquisitive and normally loquacious American boy "'tween 5 and 6" is just too much for the clipper's East-bound hush-hush atmosphere.

Chip, who was born in Paris and already has crossed the Atlantic three times by ship, was fortunately tonguetied with awe when he saw the big clipper and remained so until he got aboard at La Guardia Airport. We had left Switzerland with my husband, Charles S. Foltz, correspondent of the Associated Press there, a few months before and we were on our way back to Europe to join him at his new post in Madrid. A newspaper reporter who knew my husband told us before the take-off that there was no one "terribly interesting" on the passenger list-mainly British observers and businessmen going home and American Navy and Army observers going to England, with a few Bermudabound passengers. I managed to keep Chip quiet and still until we reached Bermuda at 9:30 that same evening.

Through the whole trip from New York to Bermuda the passengers were discreetly quiet and properly silent. We were going to a continent at war; none of us knew who the others were: all of us had been fully saturated with spy talk in America before we left. Silence was natural, and mystery still more natural. At Bermuda we filed up a path past tam-o'-shantered Scottish guards in shorts, wool socks and cleated boots, to the hangars where we were waved to several rows of camp chairs face to face with an enormous British bomber.

All of us were impressed and many embarrassed. The passengers talked little and then only in whispers. But not Chip.

"Oh Mummy-look at the bomber, the great big bomber. Is that the kind the British fight the Germans with? Where do the bombs come out? Does it carry soldiers . . . and tanks and if the Germans would come, what would it do?"

All this in a little-boy, excited, shrill pipe. I tried motherly "hush-hushes" and even firmer treatment, but it was like trying to dam Niagara in midfall. On the theory that if I talked he couldn't. I began to explain that we were waiting for passport inspection and that he must be quiet.

"Passport 'spektion-that's to catch spies, isn't it? 'Member when we came here on the boat before they 'spekted passports, too, and even 'spekted some cabins?"

At the word "spies" two or three of the passengers snickered while the rest maintained a stony, embarrassed silence. I wondered what the modern childtraining books would say about this situation and was considering a gag when he proclaimed in a loud voice, dancing with excitement, to the passengers near us:

"They're trying to catch spies, that's why we're here. Spies, real spies!" A grinning British inspector tried to assure him that the search for spies was not the culy reason we stopped at Bermuda, and his presence, while he looked over our papers, silenced Chip Chip, said the steward, was the first American child to take the Europebound clipper in months. And by the time we reached Lisbon at 7 that evening there was one mother aboard who has plenty of sympathy for any other mother who tries air travel with a son 'tween 5 and 6."

America's Winston Churchill

By Frank Carey.

CORNISH, N. H., Sept. 6 .- While Britain's Winston Churchill was engaged in historic conference on the high seas recently, and perhaps molding the pattern of the world to come, America's Winston Churchill sat before an artist's easel in the New Hampshire hills, painting a scene of sylvan peace.

Thus is illustrated how a prophecy made in the London Daily Sketch in 1905 turned out 50 per cent correct. At that time, the sketch remarked that England's Winston, then a stripling of 31, had electrified the empire with his speech on the Transvaal constitution; that America's Winston had just stirred his Nation with a new novel, "The Crisis," besides campaigning (unsuccessfully) for Governor of New Hampshire.

Then, in a burst of clairvoyant fervor, the sketch offered this slate for the future:

For Prime Minister of Great Britain: Winston Churchill.

Finds Peace

And yet, the Winston Churchill whose historical romances and political novels were the "Gone With the Winds" of the early part of the 20th century-before he suddenly stopped writing themwould perhaps not change places today with the President of the United States. On a hilltop looking down on the Connecticut River and outward to the rimming peaks of New Hampshire's Cornish hills and Vermont's Green Mountains, the 70-year-old author of "Richard Carvel," "Coniston" and "The Inside of the Cup" watches sheep grazing on the sloping pastures and says he has found what few men can claim-peace.

The man who once loved to write of "action and atmosphere, blood and bone," divides his time between painting and wood-carving, walking in his lovely garden and delving into philosophy as he watches the clouds march over the distant hills, like white battalions.

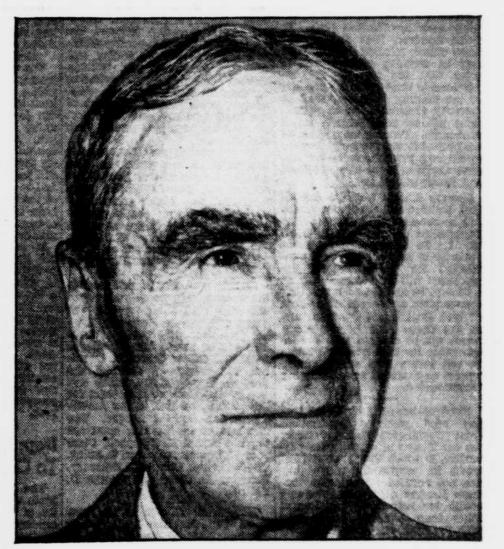

Whether he would change places with the hard-fisted Prime Minister will perhaps never be known, because a stipulation he made in granting one of the few interviews he has given in recent years was: "You may come if you don't interview me about Winston Churchill of Great Britain."

Striking Parallels

His feelings are understandable. There is no blood relationship between the two men. The identity of their names is coincidence. And, while astrologists might make something out of the striking parallels in their early years (both went to Government service schools, both became writers, both entered politics)-the American says it was just one of those things, and he thinks it's rather odd that interviewers always ask him about the other Winston.

If he were downright sore about it, no through the years, there were a few things that must have hurt.

Had Name First

Friends of the American say that the name business was a headache to the Englishman, too. The story goes that the Briton wrote a letter to the American suggesting that they do something about their names to clear up the confusion in the literary world. The American is supposed to have answered something like this:

"I had the name first because I'm the older. But you have a middle name anyway, whereas I haven't. Please use it."

The Briton used the initial "S" subsequently, but there wasn't much need for it, because the American stopped writing novels in 1917, and, in fact, he didn't write a line for publication again until last year-when he came out tional, conservative position and seeks with a philosophical treatise entitled "The Uncharted Way."

There was minor confusion in the bookstalls once more. Because it was shortly began to write the second type. Finally, thereafter that the Prime Minister's "Blood, Sweat and Tears" began to get quite a play.

last June for temporary grade of colonel, and through temporary promotion of Regular Army majors colonel the War Department is initiating steps to give majors and lieutenant colonels of the Regular Army their mobilization rank. In order, however, that the Regular Army officers selected for promotion may be carefully selected, and in order that the manner of performance of duty under the pressure of the existing emergency may be carefully scrutinized, these promotions will be made over a period of months. Pending completion of the project it was thought necessary to suspend promotions in the Reserve Corps to the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel.

Reserve officers who are considered qualified and are recommended will be reported to reach the War Department not later than October 1. To preserve the present seniority in grade of officers recommended for promotion, all acceptances will be accomplished on a date to be announced later. Unit commanders and heads of sections of War Department Overhead and of the Corps Area Service Command will be charged with the resposibility for initiating such action as will insure that only qualified officers on extended active duty are recommended.

Headquarters of the 3d Corps Area has been receiving applications from Washington Reserve officers for certificates of capacity for promotion, in which they have claimed credit for service for which they are not entitled. It appears that these Reserve officers are claiming credit for active duty performed other than extended active duty with the Army of the United States prior to January 1, 1940. Fourteen, 21 or 28 days' active duty training periods may not be computed.

Applications for certificates of capacity for promotion should not be forwarded to corps area headquarters in Baltimore unless the Reserve officer has completed one year of extended active duty with the Army of the United States subsequent to January 1, 1940.

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies Police Force of 1,800 Needed Here; War on Rats Is Announced

By JESSE C. SUTER.

The voteless and unrepresented District of Columbia was treated to a sensational civic surprise during the past week. On Wednesday it was announced that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had decided to withhold from the public the budget estimates for 1943 of the several departments and other branches of the District government

A storm of protest immediately arose at this proposed departure from a custom established in 1925. In deference to the demands of the press and the citizen groups the order was rescinded at a special meeting of the Commissioners early Thursday morning. Among the protestants against withholding the estimates from the taxpayers was Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Com-

Unless the time is extended, September 28 will be the deadline for some of the larger illuminated liquor signs. How much of the confused glare, of these multi-color lights, will be reduced time alone will tell. Visitors to Washington have been heard to complain that these illuminated signs gave the city the appearance of being the wettest place on the map. It is understood to be the intention of the A. B. C. Board to enforce the sign regulation strictly.

Among other evidences of the resumption of the organized civic activities is the meeting of the Executive Board of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, called for Thursday night. It is expected that consideration of the attitude of the Federation at the Commissioners' budget hearing and District taxation will be among the matters taken up.

The Board of Trade committees are in good shape for an early start. A number of the committees continue to function actively through the summer. The efficient office staff is busy throughout the year in the well-organized routine work. An informative monthly bulletin goes to the membership and makes available much valuable information and statistics covering taxation, assessment and the various activities of the organization. The August bulletin reports that the membership committee brought in 175 new members during the summer.

The Southeast Council of Citizens' Associations and the Arkansas Avenue Citizens' Association met last week.

* * * * Police Force of 1,800 Men Needed

Because of the increasing population of the District, the many visitors, important functions and other special occasions the annual report of the Metropolitan Police Department urges that the strength of the force be increased, within the next year or two, to not less than 1,800 men. The present authorized strength is 280 below that number.

The civic groups have for years supported actively all recommendations of the department for increases in personnel. Citizens in the outlying sections of the District have been complaining for years at the poor police protection afforded them because of the heavy duties imposed on an under-manned force. It is expected that these groups will immediately support this latest plea for more men

Whether there is any further immediate increase of personnel or not the Commissioners and Congress are expected to bring about reforms through regulations and law which will greatly strengthen the hands of the police. The Commissioners' committee of District officials has submitted a series of practical recommendations calculated to give the District a well-trained and efficient force.

With the passage by the Senate of the crime bill and the amendments to the vagrancy law, already passed by the House, a number of the problems confronting the Police Department and the community will be solved to a degree.

The pending court merger bill is believed by many citizens to possess qualities which will materially aid in the administration of criminal justice. Prompt and effective criminal justice is absolutely required if a community is to have a good police job. What the District needs is for Washington to get a deserved reputation for being a most unhealthy place for the criminal or even the idler or near criminal.

tion that wrestling bouts be brought under control of the District Boxing Commission. These brutal exhibitions are at present without supervision or control. Conditions are reported to be very bad and requiring legislation. It is of interest, in this connection, that Commissioner Guy Mason has expressed himself as not favoring the professional commercialized boxing matches which are now permitted under the very liberal local boxing law. It is understood that many citizens, organized and unorganized, are ready to join forces with the Commissioner and have the law amended so as to prevent these matches which draw so many undesirables to the District. Some of these citizens have been heard to remark that Washington gets its full share of undesirables in the regular run without offering special inducements. It is thought that now when, because of crowded conditions, conventions of desirable citizens are being encouraged to meet elsewhere, it is a good time to get rid of some of the special attractions for the undesirables. The movement for a boxing law was claimed to be in the interest of inter-collegiate non-professional matches. It was claimed that without the authority to charge admission fees for such contests they would be impossible. Based on such assurances the idea was sold to many a citizen who had no thought that the outcome would be legalized prize fights in the National Capital. The legislation became much amplified on Capitol Hill with the existing law as the result. The bill became a law in April, 1934, when there was a very evident desire among some people to make Washington a "wide open town."

Civic Leaders Prepare Plans For Milk and Budget Hearings

Federation and Board of Trade Get Set for Sessions Called By Commissioners This Month

By JOHN W. THOMPSON, Jr.

Needs of the city in its 1943 budget and whether or not cream should be imported from beyond the District milkshed are now under study by civic leaders in preparation for public hearings called by the Commissioners on these topics.

Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, has called a meeting of the Executive Board Thursday at 8 p.m. at which decision will be reached on the Federation plans for both hearings.

At the same time, committees of the Board of Trade are closely following both issues, with a view of recommending board policy when the hearing date arrives. In the more recent milk squabbles, neither the ... Federation nor the Board of Trade

The problem of the revolting and brutal wrestling bouts could be handled at the same time. The opinion prevails that the good eitizens of the District would gladly part with both the prize fights and the wrestling bouts.

* * * * A War in Which All Should Fight

Polls on the question of the United States entering the European War indicate that a substantial majority favor keeping out. It is believed that the war recently declared on rats by the Health Department, aided and abetted by Dr. Lyman J. Kebler, would bring a unanimous vote for the immediate entry and enrollment of every citizen.

The rat problem is one of long standing which has never been attacked in one systematic general organized movement. It is regarded by the Outdoor Cleanliness Association as a part of its job. As a matter of fact the careless handling of garbage and unclean yards and outbuildings are responsible for the growth of the rat population.

Rates are destructive of property, wasteful of food and bearers of disease. They are costly enemies of the human race and must be exterminated

It will be no solution of the problem simply to drive them out of a neighborhood and into another. Many of these creatures were left homeless when the old Center Market and the commission houses were destroyed. Numbers were slaughtered at the time but many escaped north of Pennsylvania avenue and elsewhere. Many had to seek other haunts when the automobile-supplanted the horse-drawn vehicles. This further scattered the rats.

The problem new confronting the community is how to organize and enlist every good citizen in an all-out-war against these dangerous pests. There can be no question of appeasement, no truce and no quarter, for victory can only be achieved through complete extermination.

The Federation of Citizens' Associations has been asked to take the lead in this campaign and in this undertaking it should have the active support of every one. It is said that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. But as a matter of fact the campaign against the rats is everybody's business. No one is immune from the deadly diseases of which they are the carriers.

The other day a prominent civic worker visited the civic affairs offices of The Star and expressed his great regret that as yet he had been given no task for the National Defense. This same leader can immediately be classified as "1-A," as they say in the selective service, and begin an intensive training course in warfare on the rats. On completion of that job, well done, he will just be ripe for a fine and responsible assignment for the National Defense. The rat job is really a part of the National Defense for they are seriously threatening the health and comfort of the Nation's Capital which is the center of the defense program.

How to Get Rid of Littered Sidewalks and Highways?

The badly littered sidewalks, streets, parks and highways continue to mar the beauty of the District and baffle those who strive to solve the problem. The Outdoor Cleanliness Association has tried to arouse a feeling of pride in the National Capital so that the people would try to keep it clean and attractive. Among the general run of people there seems to be utter indifference as to the appearance of the city.

The highways and parkings continue to be littered with beer cans, liquor bottles, cartons of every description, paper handkerchiefs (probably containing disease germs) and everything for which

Rio de Janeiro Church To Hold Two-Month Celebration

Our Lady of the Cliff More Picturesque in September and October

RIO DE JANIERO, Sept. 6.-Most churches of Brazil are content with one great annual celebration in honor of their patron saint, but not so the Church of Nossa Senhora da Penha, where the residents of Rio de Janeiro have two full months of rejoicing and jubilation every year.

The celebrations at Penha start with the first Sunday of September. Every week end thereafter pilgrims stream up the cliff to the church to pay homage. By October the celeorations are really under way and they do not end in their final glory until that month has run its course and the last Sunday come.

Other Claims to Fame.

Because it stands on a prominent rock or cliff, Nossa Senhora da Penha, or Our Lady of the Cliff, has long been a landmark of Rio de Janeiro.

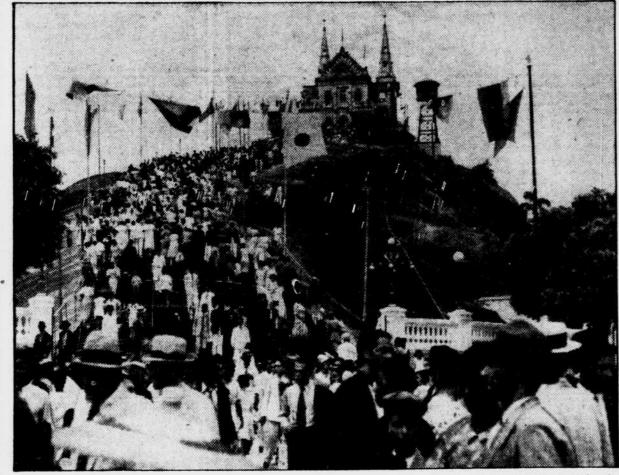

Besides its location, the Church of Nossa Senhora da Penha has three other claims to fame-it is reached by a flight of 365 steps, one for each day of the year; many of the devout still follow the religious custom of climbing the entire length of this stair on their knees, and, the church festivals of September and October are made an occasion also for placid family enjoyment, for instead of going home after the services, many families stay near the church the rest of the day. They bring large picnic lunches, spread these out near-by and so make the occasion a festive as well as a religious one.

Booths Sell Fireworks.

Travelers who visit Nossa Senhora da Penha during these holidays will find many small booths erected near it and at the foot of the hill, where of these sell medals of the saint, candles and other religious objects. often observed with a fireworks display. Nossa Senhora da Penha is a comparatively small church but is one of the historic ones of Rio de Janeiro. According to legend, it was founded by a hunter who was surprised by a large serpent. The to Our Lady of the Cliff, a gigantic lizard appeared and the serpent was frightened away. To commemorate this event, the hunter built a shrine, which eventually became a church. As a memorial of this story, the church today has a relief on its wall, and North American visitors always enjoy studying it.

Diplomatic Corps Greets New Arrivals

Son of Dominican Republic President Here With Family

By MARGARET HART, Society Edit

Washington, accustomed as it is to arrivals and departures of interesting personalities, still retains its interest in the ever-changing scene. With the constant appearance of new faces in the town it would be no great wonder if residents of the Capital were blase in their attitude toward newcomers. But each new presence here always calls forth warm welcomes from their colleagues in the diplomatic and official contingent of the city.

His Diplomatic Career Has Been Brilliant.

The son of the President of the Dominican Republic is among the latest additions to the diplomatic corps here. Senor J. M. Troncoso, jr., whose father became President of the West Indian republic last year, arrived in the city during the past week to replace the popular Senor Don Andres Pastoriza as Minister. Senor Troncoso, who is the oldest son of the President and Senora de Troncoso, has had a brilliant career. He has served as undersecretary of foreign affairs of his country and prior to this was undersecretary of the presidency. He was onetime first secretary of his country's mission in Chile. He is a linguist, speaking English and French fluently, besides his native Spanish. The diplomat's father formerly was Vice President of the republic and succeeded the late Smor Jacinto Peynado as President.

Wife and Four Children Arrive in Washington.

The new Minister was accompanied to Washington by Senora de Troncoso and their two sons, Manuel, 14, and Francisco. 12, and two daughters. Clara, 9, and Josephine, 7. The new diplomatic family is already in the Legation's quarters at 2101 Connecticut avenue.

Plans for the possible building of a Legation for the Dominican Republic on the Massachusetts avenue property owned by that country are still in nebulous form. But the Embassy staff still has hopes that they will have "a home of their own" on the land which is located near the Venezuelan Embassy.

Two new second secretaries-tak-

Pastoriza, jr., and of Senor Don Sebastian E. Valverde-have reported for duty at the Legation. They are Senor Don H. Vicioso and Senor Don P. Baez.

Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in Collington, Md., was the scene of an exceptionally picturesque wedding yesterday afternoon at the candlelight hour, when Miss Margaret Lillington Boyden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hanson Boyden of Prince Georges County, became the bride of Capt. Leon Adolf Von Escher Krebs, U. S. A., son of Mrs. Adolf Krebs of Baltimore.

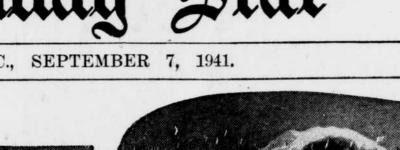

Southern smilax and white gladioluses gave additional beauty to the quaint old Colonial church, which is situated in a grove of century oaks. Tapers in cathedral candelabra cast their gentle beams over the scene as the bridal procession entered the church for the 4:30 o'clock ceremony. The Rev. Edward B. Harris, pastor of the church, officiated, and the two traditional wedding marches were played by the church organist.

Preceded by her bridesmaids and her maid of honor, the bride walked with her father to the altar, where the bridegroom with his attendants, clad in the full-dress uniform of the United States Coact Artillery, waited to receive her.

Heirloom Brooch Worn by Bride.

A face veil and a full-length veil in deep ivory, held by a coronet of heirloom rose point lace, were worn by the bride over a gown of deep ivory satin, which was brocaded in calla lilies and lilies of the valley and was fashioned with a long basque, long sleeves extending to points over the hands and had a square neckline. The basque ended in a deep point at the back, from which the long circular train of the full skirt extended. A large topaz surrounded by yellow diamonds, an antique brooch that has been worn by members of the Hanson family through a period of 150 years, adorned the neck edge of the bride's costume, and she carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids and bouvardia.

Miss Mary McRea Boyden was maid of honor for her sister, and he was costumed in dubonnet taffeta made with a deep, square neck, elbow sleeves and a full skirt. A cording of the same material outlined the neck and sleeves and formed hoops on the skirt. She carried a cascade bouquet of rubrum lies and wore a headdress fashioned from two of the same flowers. The other attendants were Miss Mary Lillington Bailey of Leesburg. Va., and Miss Marilyn Parker of Cleveland, Ohio, cousins of the bride; Miss Lucy Gough Wright of Bethesda, Md., and Mrs. John B (See KREBS, Page D-4.)

Interest of Washington Society And That of Several States Centers on Ceremonies

Wedding bells that rang yesterday in two communities not far from the Nation's Capital attracted the attention of society in many sections of the country and re-echoed the peals that last Saturday resounded for two brides in the Army-Navy set and proclaimed the advent of the early fall bridal season.

For yesterday's brides society's spotlight in Virginia, West Virginia, Texas, Massachusetts and New York centered on Miss Mary Leslie Emer- daughter, Miss Eileen Erwin, who son of Alexandria, Va., whose marriage to Lt. Thomas Bennett Mechling of Charleston, W. Va., took place at Fort Myer, while in New York, Maryland and Pennsylvania the wedding at Blue Ridge Summit of Miss Angela Scoville Dunham of New York and Mr. William Francis Rogers, 3d, of Baltimore held the social spotlight. Both brides are prominently identified with Washington society and have a wide circle of friends in this city.

Miss Dunham Married Before Outdoor Altar.

The marriage of Miss Dunham to Mr. Rogers took place at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon before an improvised altar made of late summer mixed flowers and placed under the beautiful shade trees on the grounds of Monterey Inn at Blue Ridge Summit. The Rev. Joseph Dickson officiated at the ceremony, and an elaborate program of organ music was played preceding the marriage processional, the organ being placed in a natural "loft" of shrubs and trees near the improvised altar.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Dunham, 3d, of New York, and the granddaughter of Mrs. Carroll Dunham of Chappaqua, N. Y., and the late Mr. and Mrs. James C. Pilling, who were socially prominent in Washington during

London Evacuates Distinguished Group of Sculpture; Artists Help With Defense Posters

By ROBERT CRAWFORD.

A recent number of the illustrated London News has a picture of a little company of distinguished evacuees who are resting peacefully somewhere in a quiet English country-side which so far has escaped the blitz.

Standing there against a background of trees and hedge rows included in this immortal company is Rodin's famous group, "The Burghers of Calais"; a statue of George III, William III and Sir Garnet Wolseley. These invaluable works of art were removed from London galleries in the hope that they might be preserved for future generations of art lovers and that they might not meet the fate of many of the great works of art in France and other countries which have been bombed by the Nazis.

In Malvine Hoffman's delightful book, "A Sculptor's Odyssey," she tells the story about her master, the great Auguste Rodin, and how the British government came into possession of the Rodin sculptures in the South Kensington Museum. It seems that, Rodin when in England during the World War, was watching the British troops leaving for Paris in 1914, and was very much affected at the thought of so many English youths going over the Channel to help his beloved country. To show his gratitude he wrote out a deed of gifts to the British government of every piece of his sculpture which hads been exhibited at Dorchester House tablish an anthropology hall, hop--the collection which was later in ing to make it the most complete the South Kensington Museum.

In Capital Letters

My dear:

Did you know that Muriel Maddux is back from Hawaii? I saw her out at the club Thursday night, and she says that Charlie is back, too, but he will be off for Princeton soon. She was looking awfully well, as usual, and loved the islands

In fact, Thursday was "Old Home Week" at the club, with so many of the vacationers back again and making us jealous with their stories. Bob Parsons, for instance, is back in town after visiting in Stockbridge and Ogonquitt for several weeks, which is good news to all his feminine admirers.

Ed Tierney is another back in town, but he soon will have to be off again to the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. Dave Acheson went to Manchester with his family and then on down to visit Grant Wilmer, but he, too, is back again. Dave and Grant are both Yale boys-so, when the time comes, they'll head for New Haven.

Others at the club Thursday night were Pat Prochnik, Billie West, Tony Walker, Al Baer, Charlie Thomas, Louise and Randall Hagner, Jane and George Wheeler and most of the "regulars." The boys are noticeably absent these days since their exams are coming up next week and they are staying home to cram.

Last night was the Parrys' party-the one I wrote you about where all the guests were to come as reproductions of famous paintings. We had just about decided that it was unfair to organized guests, because none of us could think of what paintings to represent, and we were all nearly frantic. And the weather looked so uncertain all day that we didn't know whether we had a dinner engagement that night or notsince the party was to be postponed in case of rain. Finally, somehow, we all got together-and what an evening! Cricket Hill has such a beautiful location and the moon came up through the trees while we all stood around and drank beer. Then a delicious hot supper appeared and we sat around at tables and benches on the lawn and ate and ate, and every one tried to figure out what paintings the others were going to represent. After our dessert the couples with the lower numbers (drawn by lot as we entered) went into the house to get ready to put on their acts, and suddenly the rains came! Every one scurried inside and sat around and sang very happily until the thunder and lightning and rain disappeared again.

Then the show began. Ed Parry had rigged up a stage on the porch, with a huge frame in the center, curtains (sheets to you) around it, and even wire electric light bulbs to make a perfect setting

There were about 40 tableaux-serious, modern and humorous. Mrs. Downs, Mrs. Goodwin and Lt. Thorne were the three judges, and all of us (there must have been a hundred persons) were a most appreciative audience, watching the others, except during our own turn on the boards. The prizes were given out at the end to the loveliest, the most humorous, most exact reproductions, most original, and since there were four sets of the "American Gothic," they even gave a prize for the best of the "American Gothics," which went to the Lawrence Proctors.

The most humorous was "The Birth of Venus" of Botticelli-you can visualize that portrayed by the Shands and the Colemans. Dick Sands was Venus, while the others huffed and puffed as the winds-it was hilarious. Another good one was put on by Sue and Lee Boatwright and Hannah and Charlie Howze, depicting the "Garden of Eden," which called for encores. Mrs. Robert Lamont had "Still Life," imported directly from Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Lennig Sweet won a prize for their clever and amusing reproduction of a print entitled "Marriage." Peyton Williams got a prize for the closest shave. The Jack Howrys were very good as "The Family Portrait." "Whistler's Mother," "The Wyndham Sisters," Van Gogh's "Sunflowers," "The Angelus," "The Man With a Hoe," Picasso's "Portrait of a Woman," "The End of the Trail" and lots more-some very good and some exceedingly funny. It was a very successful party, cleverly planned and well executed.

The next thing on the calendar is a party in honor of Mickey Stirling which her aunt, Mrs. Kondrup, is giving this afternoon. We are invited out for a dip in their swimming pool and for a picnic supper afterward. Anne Heard is going, and Mary Brookings, Pat Baker, Elene Essary, the three Colquitts and a lot more, I guess. Nancy Mayo and Bobby Werlich, who are both up in Bar Harbor now, expect to come down to Washington in time to be on hand for the party, too.

On the docket for Thursday is a luncheon which Patsy Kyle is giving for some of the debutantes. And Mary Brookings' tea on the 13th, and Jane Acheson's wedding on the 27th. You can tell summer is over when the calendar is marked so far ahead, for, despite the summer's activities, a month's stay at Ventnor, N. J.

Sales of Defense Sharp Rebound Is Predicted Bonds Mount in Fifth District

Nearly $50,000,000 Invested in D. C. and Nearby States

By EDWARD C. STONE.

In their desire to back up national defense efforts in a practical way, residents of Washington and nearby States have recently invested nearly $50,000,000 in defense bonds, it was learned yesterday from the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond.

Sales of United States Savings Bonds in the Fifth Federal Reserve District for the four-month period from May 1 to September 1, totaled 155,566 bonds, an aggregate issue price of $48,850,871 and having a maturity value of $56,487,500, First Vice President J. S. Walden, jr., reported.

Series E bonds were the most popular in the number sold, 135,-Resources to Get 816 at the issue price of $16,488,225 and a maturity value of $21,984,300. Series F bonds totaled 3,905 in the number sold, at the issue price of $6,092,346, with a maturity value of $8,232,900. Series G bonds numbered 15,849, aggregated $26,270,300 issue price and $26.270,300 at maturity, the current yield on these bonds being the attractive feature.

Of the number of pieces of Series E bonds sold, 52.388 were of the $25 denomination, 22,146 of the $50 denomination, and 41,008 of the $100 denomination. About 10.000 bonds of each of the $500 and $1,000 denominations were sold.

The Series G bond was much more popular than the Series F bond. With respect to each of these two series, the $1,000 denomination bond accounted for 40 per cent of Walden said. The figures do not include the sales of bonds by post now promises to be the best answer offices, which are not reported to to the question of how the little man the reserve bank, he added.

By PAUL GESNER and JOHN BECKLEY,

The Star's Special News Service NEW YORK, Sept. 6 .- A defenseminded Nation-vacations behindbuckled down in earnest this week to the biggest peacetime arming job ever tackled.

By this week end, financial observers estimated, close to 55,000,000 persons were gainfully employed in defense and peacetime jobs throughout the country, the largest number of workers on record.

The job before the Nation: Building of arms, airplanes and other ordnance, and the building up of a huge Army-all to the tune of around $55,000,000,000. The defense program eventually may cost even more.

Appointment by President Roosevelt of the new Supply, Priorities and Allocations Board, with the Vice President in charge, was regarded in financial quarters as one of the outstanding defense developments of the week from the industrial standpoint for it placed the major divisions of the defense-building effort under a central authority. But regarded of prime importance, also, was the naming of Floyd Odlum investment trust builder, as head of a division of the O. P. M. to see that small businesses get defense work to do.

Regarded as Vital.

Defense officials persistently have pointed out that to get the speed desired in arms building, small tool shops would have to be ferreted out and put on defense work.

Many industrial concerns making peacetime consumer goods are being forced to curtail production schedules because strategic metals and other materials are needed in defense. Through Odlum's organization, it is anticipated that such concerns will get defense orders to keep their men busy, thus forestalling the closing of plants with accompanying unemployment that might develop in cities with factories hard hit by priorities.

Agricultural Marketing Service, De-partment of Agriculture, G. Byron Fundis, local representative. There was considerable increase in marketing of grassfed steers over just recently but this was, in point of total receipts, partially offset by moderate to light receipts of other classes. Largest supply for a single day of the current season was on hand Thursday, when around 40 carloads were available. Grassers consisted largely of medium grade offerings with a sprinkling of good grade and some common kinds scattered through most consign-ments. Demand held up well under the strain of increased steer receipts and grassers sold mostly steady to 25 lower than last week. The rela-tively small number of grainfeds and she-stock and bulls went at mostly fully steady prices. Vealers finished strong to 50 higher, the ad-vance coming Thursday and was TOLEDO .- Emphasis on durable goods purchasing before installment curbs were effective and interest in fall lines jumped sales of department stores 20 per cent higher in the week and about 40 per cent above 1940. Other business indicators also trended upward. Bank debits increased and were 81 per cent above 1940. Employment in 51 local plants reached 26,146, as against 25,900 last week and 18,367 last year.

YOUNGSTOWN.-Consumer purchasing expanded substantially in the week, with durable goods-especially those subject to installment credit curbs-and back-to-school wear especially active. Volume maintained a large gain over 1940. Wholesale activity was steady in the week and well above a year ago. Unemployment has reached the lowest level in several years. Steel mill production held at about 97 per cent of capacity, as only one mill shut down over Labor Day.

Benton Harbor Sells Large Peach Crop

By the Associated Press.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., Sept. 6.-Benton Harbor's fruit market was on the verge of its third millionbushel peach year in history today. The market reported that total sales had reached 958,541 bushels, with week-end shipments certain to bring in more than enough to carry above the 1,000,000 mark. In 1937 and 1939 sales totaled slightly above 1.000.000 bushels.

Prices this year, although higher than anticipated, have been below the $1.25 average for the half-million bushel offering of 1940.

Dividends Declared By Ritter Dental

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK. The 1941-2 theatrical season now is officially open. It has had its first first night—Frank Craven in "Village Green," by Carl Allensworth.

If the season goes on the way it's started, nobody is going to get mad at it. For Mr. Allensworth's play, while rather quiet, a little on the plain side and very much manufactured, has the virtue of amiability and is in a good cause. # It's Easy to Make $100,000 With the Proper Help

There's That Scenario, for Instance, Which Katharine Hepburn Sold, For Top Hollywood Price

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD. If you have an idea for a movie kicking around, put it on paper and then....

A main item of conversation hereabouts is the story sale Ring Lardner, ir., and Michael Kanin made for $100,000. That is the most the movies ever paid for an original story. The next highest was $75,000, paid by R-K-O to Norman Krasna for "Mr. and Mrs. Smith."

books. But to that must be added . the costs, sometimes as much as scenarists was $250 a week-some $50,000, to turn those books or plays into scenarios. So $100,000 is not high for a scenario, but it is high for a story that never has been tried out on an audience.

Were Lardner and Kanin lucky? house. Slightly perhaps, but their story had to be very good, in fact much better than average. Lardner, 26, and Kanin, 31, have been writing in good as "The Woman of the Year." Hollywood for four or five years, doing so-so. Maybe it is.

An Immediate Hearing.

Kanin's only superstition is asking too little for a scenario. Lard-(son of the late humorist) is not one to ignore a friend's superstition. Hepburn knew a stiff asking price would command more attention.

Her recommendation got the piece an immediaté reading. Spencer Tracy read it and liked it, too. That helped. Lardner and Kanin now confess they wrote the male lead with Tracy in mind.

These Other Items About Errol May Be News, Too

HOLLYWOOD. A few things about Errol Flynn

you may not know. Several of Errol Flynn's friends call him "Junior." There is no reason for this, except that it started with a rough, tough pal named Bud Ernst, who is some three inches taller than Flynn and 40 pounds heavier, and having caught on, it sticks.

Flynn's fingernails are generally cracked and chipped. This comes from many week ends of practical sailoring aboard his fast 76-foot ketch, the Sirocco. Soft hands would never get that Genoa up. And a 110 horsepower marine motor requires a bit of tinkering.

He's a tea drinker. Ten or 15 cups a day. Max Carmel brews it on a tiny electric plate. Max is Flynn's valet, only he never calls Max that. Max is an ex-United States Marine.

His current picture for Warner Bros., "They Died With Their Boots On," is his eighth with Olivia de Haviland in the opposite lead. He calls her Livvy and she calls him Flynn. They get along together as old friends should and when Olivia says that playing opposite Flynn is her annual penance-a state-ment she delights to make in front of him-she is only kidding. And he kids back.

He likes game fishing, dislikes to hunt unless the game has a chance to fight back and there is a little risk. Wild boar hunting with bow and arrow. That's his idea of how hunting should be done.

When he first came to the Warner Bros. studio six years ago, he always ate in the main commissary with clerks, wardrobe men, extras, musicians, press agents, assistant directors and such lesser folk. He eats there still, and generally is joined by a group of young stock actresses. who find him fascinating, and amuse him very much.

He worries much about his mother, father, and married sister, all active in war work in Belfast, Ireland, the family home. But he never discusses the war, except to make known that if the United States became actively involved, he'd be in there, doing what he could.

His ambitions to be a good writer are serious. He writes, slowly and painstakingly, in long hand. Max types out the transcriptions. More slowly and more laboriously. As a typist Max is still a Marine more interesting performance than Duryea gives in the latter film as the weakling son who embezzles at the suggestion of his corrupt father. Duryea, no newcomer to malfeasance, played a gangster on the New York stage, taking over the leading role of "Dead End" during the closing weeks of that show's run on Broadway.

It was during his engagement as Leo Hubbard in the stage version of "The Little Foxes" that Goldwyn saw him and signed him to play the same role in the screen version. After graduating from high school in White Plains, N. Y., Duryea matriculated at Cornell University, succeeding Franchot Tone there as president of the university dramatic society.

Three Gainsboroughs Among Items in Clark Collection Presented to Corcoran

By Leila Mechlin.

Attention having been focused quite properly on the great paintings by British artists in the National Gallery of Art, the fact may be overlooked that in other public collections in Washington this same school is by no means ill represented. "For example, in the Corcoran Gallery of Art, among the works bequeathed by Senator Clark, are a Lawrence, three Gainsboroughs, a Reynolds, a Raeburn, a Hogarth and a Turner of fine quality, all of which, with the exception of Gainsborough's "Market Cart" and Turner's "Boats Carrying Out Anchors to the Dutch Men-of-War," are portraits, and, as Royal Cortissoz once said, induct us into the evolution of the English school.

"Hogarth," he continued, naming the several examples by each artist, "served it with a racy, forthright simplicity; Reynolds revives the tradition of Van Dyck, fusing brilliant painting with academic serenity, and Gainsborough turns the courtly convention of his epoch into the path of technical virtuosity. In the distinguished canvas by Raeburn, technique is again raised to a higher power-the pure maestria of the English Valasquez, and Lawrence, with his neat polish, marks the transition into the lustrous but still accomplished school of the 19th century. Thus, together, they give a brief but illuminating glimpse into the history of British painting."

To which, by way of postscript, may be added the fact that each of these paintings was selected by the donor because of intrinsic beauty and individual appeal, being in the truest sense works with which he literally fell in love.

The majority of these paintings now hang in the large center gallery opening off the landing of the grand staircase into the Clark wing. Here, since recent rearrangement, has been placed, with other portraits of noted schools, the three-quarter-length portrait of Lady Castlereagh, painted by Lawrence, in a white dress, blue sash and hair ribbon, against a clouded sky, not stormy but picturesque, patches of blue appearing here and there. Across the lower portion of the canvas is seen an extensive landscape, suggestive rather than meticulously realistic, as observed from a considerable height, typically English. It is a charming composition, rendered with a full sense of both characterization and decorative effect.

At the time this portrait was painted, Lady Castlereagh, while not so young as she seems, retained her youthful expression and vitality, and appears as a woman of grace and distinction. Few of those who sat for Lawrence played a more conspicuous part in the social and political life of the time than she. The daughter of the second Earl of Buckinghamshire, Lady Amelia Anne (Emily) Hobart, in 1794, when 23, married Henry Robert, Viscount Castlereagh, the brilliant but hated Irish statesman, who, because of his betrayal of his compatriots, was regarded by them as an arch-traitor and by the English as a hero, hence given high place in governmental ranks. Donn Byrne, in his historical novel, "The Field of Honor," tells vividly of Castlereagh's cleverness and lack of honor, his unfortunate handling of British affairs, of the assistance in intrigue for which he turned to his equally unscrupulous wife. Castlereagh represented England at the Congress of Vienna in 1814, and seven years later inherited the title Marquis of Londonderry. The following year he took his own life. # New Stamps May Honor Philharmonic

Walker Studies Centennial Issue For Orchestra

There has been some speculation in connection with the 1942 centennial of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society as to whether the Post Office Department's division of stamps will include a special issue to mark the 100th anniversary of America's oldest orchestra. Albert Goldman, New York postmaster, has recommended such an issue to Postmaster General Frank C. Walker, who is favorably inclined toward it, judging by a letter addressed to Dr. Walter Damrosch, one of the former conductors of the organization.

In recommending the issue, Postmaster Goldman called his chief's attention to the fact that the United States, now recognized as the world center of musical activity, has once before honored the musical profession in an issue of stamps. This was as part of the Famous American Series, which included heads of Nevin, McDowell, Foster, Sousa and Herbert.

Many Nations Honor Masters.

Other countries have long made a custom of commemorating musical events. Italy printed stamps for the Stradivarius and Bellini centennaries. In like manner Germany celebrated the 50th anniversary of Wagner's death and Czecho-Slovakia the 50th anniversary of Smetana's death. Austria has, issued stamps to honor many musicians including Bach and Handel. France honored Debussy in this way; Po-land, Paderewski; Hungary, Liszt, and Brazil, Gomes.

The Philharmonic's centennial is an event of national importance. The history of America's oldest orchestra is synchronous with the rise of the United States from a culturally barren outpost to the acknowledged center of music that it is to-

When acquired it was a single figure, the child by the lady's side emerging when the portrait was cleaned, after the Clark Collection passed into the possession of the Corcoran. Why the child had been painted out and by whom probably none will ever know. The finding was a great surprise to those to whom the painting long had been familiar. This painting and one of an equally straight-laced lady which is in the Ralph Cross Johnson collection, in the National Museum, place Hogarth, who is best known by his satirical paintings done in condemnation of social evils, on a par with the really great painters of portraits. His dates were 1697-1764, and some still regard him as one of the greatest British painters of all time-an individualist, following the dictates of his own convictions. Chronological Form Given to Huge Volume of Evidence Against the Comrades

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

The Red Decade

By Eugene Lyons. Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis.

Considering the Dies Committee and its enormous report, there might seem to be no reason for another expose of Communist activity in our country. But the present book by Eugene Lyons has a good deal to commend it, even so. For one thing, it gives a chronological form to the huge volume of evidence against the comrades, though Mr. Lyons disclaims credit for having done a complete history of American Communism. For another thing, it consistently relates the activity of the Reds in our country to the policy of the government of Russia, showing with what undeviating obedience they formed their policies on Moscow's commands. And finally it is, with two ominous exceptions, a richly comic work. To be funny on the subject of treason may seem impossible, but the fact remains that the late cocktail Communism of America, was, in its outward manifestations at least, more absurd than anything else. There is, of course, much unavoidable comedy in the official records, but the tone of these reports is essentially grave. Mr. Lyons has worked under no such limitation. He has let himself go in a gaudy manner, and even when his ridiculing is frankly cruel, one feels that he has given to the Red decade the treatment which it really deserves.

The "decade" of his title is the years between 1929 and 1939, which he divides into two periods. Up to 1935, he says, the Communists preached "revolutionary upsurge" to the workers and peasants of the United States. After that, at the fiat of Moscow, they preached united-frontwith-democracy, or, in their own parlance, Trojan horsemanship. In the first era they called upon our masses to rise and rend their capitalist masters. In the second, they proclaimed a torrid affection for the Constitution and saw the United States and Russia standing side by side against the Fascist dictatorships. In neither period, says Mr. Lyons, did they get the slightest recognition from the American "workers and peasants" to whom they addressed their stirring appeals. As he puts it, the workers and peasants "didn't spurn the command to revolt-they never heard it." But a response there was, just the same. It came, says Mr. Lyons, from "professors and financiers and clergymen * * fellow travelers spare-time insurgents, frightened liberals and masochistic capitalists. * *" In other words, the late Red fever which flamed in our midst was almost entirely an upper middle-class disease and never a working class movement. It is this aspect of the would-be revolution which the present book emphasizes and on which it pours its violent contempt and mockery.

Inconsistency of Reasoning Is Stunning.

It follows the hysteria through the years as it manifested itself in arious groups of the population. It takes up the innumerable false front rganizations-the leagues for this and that, the idealistically named ocieties for freedom, culture and what have you-the councils, congresses, clubs, unions, associations, committees, and so on-and describes their activities in the various Red crises which successively wrought the emotions of the American comrades to the point of frenzy, such crises, for example, as the famine ordered by Stalin in 1934 for the mass liquidation of the kulaks, the show trials of the old Bolsheviks, and the always incandescent issue of Leon Trotsky. The fury with which our intellectuals swarmed to the defense of these distant outrages and the frankly orgiastic quality of the emotion which they loosed in their pronunciamentoes are smazing when set down in print today, while the sublime inconsistency of their reasoning is downright stunning. There could hardly be a better refutation of Communism. The record simply reeks of mania and only one conclusion is possible concerning it-that it was a quest for excitement above all things, the reaction of emotional bankrupts to a violent drug which had for its prescription that it be taken without question and swallowed submissively.

But the practical result of the late lunacy is another kind of thing. The reviewer mentioned above two exceptions to the prevailing comicality of Mr. Lyons' text. One of these is to be found in his statement about the Communist lobby

The comrades, as he points out, never represented the American workers, but, by the vociferousness of the following which they did acquire, they were able to exert strong political influence-and to build up a highly efficient political machine. "It added up," he says, most potent and ubiquitous influence in Washington, a half-clandestine government-within-the-government, arrogantly open in some spots on ome occasions, but conspiratorial in essence. * * * The leaders of this sub rosa power were, for the most part, not in office themselves, but worked through hundreds of big and little officials deployed through the length and breadth of the mushrooming New Deal bureaucracy * * * a superlobby, bigger than all other lobbies rolled together."

When the Nation's Capital Was a Country Town Washington of Civil War Days Described Brilliantly in Entertaining Volume

Reveille in Washington

By Margaret Leech. Harper & Bros., New York. Washington was a country town. The Capitol was impressive but, as yet, uncapped by its great dome. The President's Mansion had its admirers, but it was built-no one could understand why-in malarial swampland. There were big new marble buildings at Seventh and F streets N.W. for the Patent Office and the General Post Office. The Treasury Building near the President's House and the new red brick Smithsonian Institution completed the list of "sights." Otherwise, the city was a sorry conglomeration of shabby wooden shacks, formless brick business structures on muddy ill-lighted streets. Policing was at a low ebb and crime was rampant. From a military standpoint, the city was virtually unprotected. There were a few militia companies, but they were dependent on the whims of their volunteer memberships. Old Fort Washington, down the Potomac, was theoretically a military outpost, but it was said it could be taken with a bottle of whisky for the lone, bibulous old guard This was Washington in 1860, Capital of a Nation plainly and rapidly approaching a civil war. And this is the Capital that Margaret Leech describes brilliantly in "Reveille in Washington," an informal but complete story of the city as the most important point in the great fight to save the Union. It is, naturally, of intense interest here, where the scenery is familiar. The great new city which has grown here is most thrilling even to its constant residents during those seasons of the year when it is filled with tourists admiring its beauty and appreciating its significance. It must have been ever more thrilling in the days of the Civil War, when all the tourists were blue-clad soldiers passing through en route to give their lives, if necessary, to protect the things of which this city was a symbol ### Defects of Youth, Energy and Inexperience.

For it was only as a symbol that Washington had value in those days, A border town of "sedition and dismay," it was confused, divided, ineffectual. "It was a mere ambitious beginner," Miss Leech writes, "a baby among capitals. Its defects were those of youth and energy and inexperience

Old Gen. Winfield Scott was in military command, and he was ineffective. Gen. McClellan was called in after it became apparent that the volunteer militia and the hastily called Northern troops would not be sufficient to hold the city. He was the first of a long line of Northern generals to rise and fall as politics constantly interfered with military administration. The North was to wait until 1864 before a man-U. S Grant-appeared who was strong enough to hold the command of its troops. The Capital was to wait longer before it was entirely free of the danger of seizures by the Confederates. The Rebels could have taken the city after Bull Run had they realized the extent of their victory there. Gen. Early could have marched in from Silver Spring if he had not delayed the few hours that enabled Grant's men to arrive from Virginia.

Picture of City Is Rich and Full.

The Capital under its shadow went about its way, a city divided, as was the Nation. Its streets swarmed with soldiers going into battle and wounded fighters coming back. Confederate sympathizers were everywhere and were not even noticed. There were beautiful women spies, hordes of camp-followers and angels of mercy like Clara Barton. There Appleton-Century)-Novel of Civil were all kinds of men, from the lowest thief who came to prey on the booming Capital to the noblest man in the Union, who happened also to be its President

It is a rich, full picture of the city that Miss Leech presents. In its herbe Hillman (Crowell)-Novel of broad outlines, it has special significance now as a picture of the Capital of a modern family touching on college a democracy under the stress of war. It is packed with items of less moment, but of no less interest, for anybody who would try to feel what it meant to live in a Washington of only 80 years ago in time, but one of centuries ago in progress.

Miss Leech has drawn upon many sources for her material: Contemporary newspapers (mainly The Star), magazines, old and new books, and original documents. She lists them all in a bibliography, and there are, as well, short biographical sketches of the leaders of the period, a chronology of the war and numerous pictures and maps. ### Alliance With Germany Taken in Stride.

And this lobby, the book continues, remains today. For, though the supporting false front organizations to a considerable degree collapsed the signing of the Russo-German pact, the comrades who had something more than emotional exaltation to gain from the party-those who owed their place on the pay roll to party backing-did not blanch when the bright new "eternal friendship" of the brother dictators was announced. They-real Communists-took it all in their stride, with, at most, a temporary grogginess. And says Mr. Lyons, they are still in office in our country today.

The other sinister circumstance which he describes is in relation to the C. I. O. There also, he says, is a controlling lobby. He absolves John L. Lewis from personal sympathy with the party, but says that, in his pioneer period as a union builder, Mr. Lewis allied himself with Communist muscle men, meaning to edge them out later. Unhappily, it worked the other way, in Mr. Lyons' view. It was the comrades, he says, It who did the edging. And the result is that, today, a number of unions vital to our defense program are entirely under Communist control. The strikes of the past year, he insists, are wholly due to Moscow's directions. He describes the tactics used to influence the workers who, themselves, are not Communists and often do not realize that they are being manipulated as stooges for Communist objectives.

It would seem that these two circumstances taken in conjunctionthe existence within our Government of a strong Communist lobby and the control of vital defense industries by Communist organizers-may well be considered serious. And these circumstances are the lasting results of the frothy revolution which, for 10 years, raged untrammeled on the cocktail and penthouse front. The erstwhile parlor Bolshevik has crept away to lick his wounds; already, says Mr. Lyons, he is finding new to absorb his reformist passion. But the result of his folly "fronts" "Eternal vigilance," remarked George Washington, "is the price remains. of liberty.

What it does bring out is that Edward's foreign policy was based al-most entirely on a revolt against the Germanism of his father. By their failure as parents toward their child, they also doomed their policies as monarchs, and set the world (at least, in Mr. Dangerfield's interpretation) on its fateful way toward 1914. It is a nice, quiet little piece of irony, as he set it down. It may, however, be something of a test of an harrassed modern citizen of the world's fortitude to regard it impartially as such.

By Joseph C. Harsch. Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc., New York, Correspondent Harsch's appraisal of Germany at war makes worrisome reading for Americans. By the same token, it should serve as another lusty prod in the somewhat unresponsive ribs of American consciousness

The Germany Mr. Harsch depicts is a nation at present unstarved, of good morale and with a real do-or-die will to win. That there are weak plates in the Nazi armor, however, Mr. Harsch is convinced. He feels that German strength rests on the purely temporary basis of the ability of Nazi armed forces and economists to extract and distribute the food of conquered Europe among civilian Germans; the power of the army and air force both to win hearteningly decisive victories on remote fronts and to prevent the enemy from carrying the war to their own doorsteps, and, finally, it is based on the memories in most German minds of the bitter consequences of defeat as experienced in World War I.

To break through those protective barriers, the weight of the United States must be exerted. But the job calls for a diligent, sacrificing United States-a Nation that will overhaul its outmoded military concepts and put forth an aggressive industrial effort. He tells of the special "tours" arranged for all newly arrived newsmen, whereby the novices are piloted carefully beyond sight of bomb damages, into hotels where only the best (precious best) food is served, among informants sure to pass on the proper facts and rumors. The author explains the Reich's highly workable financial structure (supported by the bayonets of the army), the success of the rationing system (through the courtesy of those same bayonets). He describes the hypodermic effect on the populace of the barbed tongue of Der Fuchrer, of the widespread dissipation of moral fiber throughout the land. And, finally, Mr. Harsch adds his warning to the chorus that the sky is the limit to Nazi ambitions. The regime is out to gain world domination, he says, whether the task requires force of arms or economic J. W. STEPP.

A Kentucky friend and I, packing on our backs the barest of necessities and food, found this out when the famous Applachian Trail that winds along the top of "the mountains that are always free" led us into Harpers Ferry.

Practically every little nook and cranny in the peaceful little town has some historical significance connected with the Civil War or some other equally important happening. But few more than two people can tell a tourist where these are located and exactly what that significance is. One of these is the old colored porter at the sooty red-brick railway station. The other is the present owner of the aged Harper House, the building of which was begun by Robert Harper, founder of Harpers Ferry Comparatively few people know this sleepy little town. When we arrived, it made us think of a town at the turn of the century. Only the tourist camp there has electricity. The rest of the town is lighted by a few flickering kerosene lamps. Tensleep is a very small place-a few houses, a gas station, the tourist camp and the general store comprising most of the buildings. In the general-store we found pointed at a star is like aiming a everything from horse collars to rifle at a silver dollar rolling down shoestrings.

Wings for Youth

By I. R. HEGEL.

STORY OF PAULINE GOWER. In 1936, the English aviatrix, Pauline Gower, wrote a book entitled "Women With Wings," in which she stressed the importance of women pilots and the work they are capable of doing in military emergencies, like communications and ferrying. Pauline Gower was then earning her living by flying. She ferried passengers. She played a leading role in air derbies and air meets. All the while she was taking the advice she had given others in her book. She was trying to organize a unit of women pilots. Her chance came.

Appointed commandant of the air "Dear God, I'd like to thank you, wing of the Women's Legion, she promptly announced an instruction For skies above which are very blue, camp for air-minded women to be Thank you for the rains you send, held in the autumn of 1939. Then These things and more, dear God, England declared war.

Again Pauline Gower had a mansize problem to wrestle with. This time she had to convince the British government that women were capa ble of doing the work she had been advocating since 1936, the ferrying of new planes from manufacturers plants to the airfields. At last the British government, handicapped by lack of manpower, accepted her Pauline Gower, together with offer. a unit of eight woman pilots, began ferrying planes and acquitting themselves with high honors.

Pauline Gower is, at this writing, Capt. Gower of the Air Transport Auxiliary and her band has swelled now to 28 women flyers. They are called the "Ata Girls," hard-won wings perched proudly on their dark blue uniforms Courage, persistence, real abilitythe qualities that made Pauline Gower an outstanding British flyer, are qualities that may well be emulated by any air-minded American girl. Will you be our American Pauline Gower?

> Prizes Totaling $5 Offered for Best Contributions

Boys and girls of all ages up to and including high school age are invited to write and draw for The awarded for the best five contributions published each week. The following rules must be observed:

1. All contributions must be original

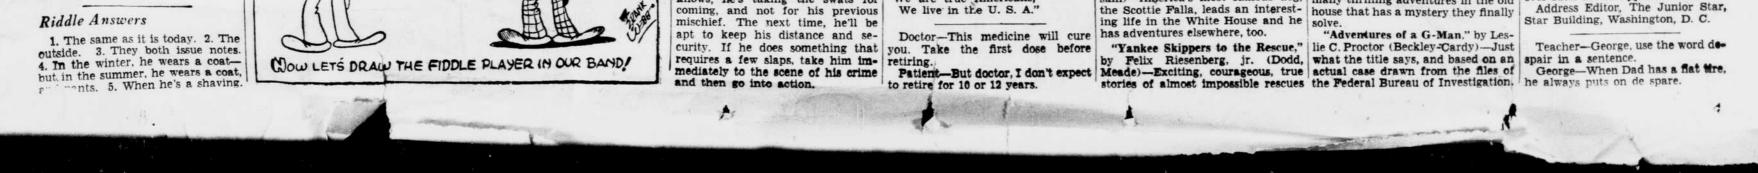

2. Name, age, address, telephone number (if any) and school of the author must appear at the top of the first page of every written contribution and on the back of every drawing

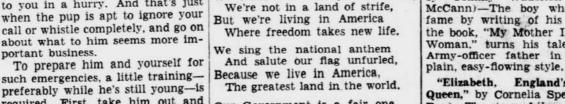

3. Stories, articles, poems, etc. must be written on one side of paper; if typewritten, they must be double spaced. Drawings must be in black and white and must be mailed flat, not rolled or folded.

4. The editor's decision as to the winners will be final, and The Star reserves the right to publish any contribution received in whatever form he may deem advisable, regardless of whether it is awarded a prize. Checks will be mailed to the winners during the week following publication of their contributions.

5. Contributions will not be returned.

Boys and girls who wish to act as news correspondents of The Junior Star may qualify by submitting at least one feature story (the prin-"Stories My School Children cipal stories on this page today are good examples of what is wanted) together with the information called with a moral designed to help build given cards identifying them as reporters for The Junior Star. Song Hit

NEWS. For the first time in history the government owns a song hit.

The Treasury Department of the United States Government is the publisher. Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., is the owner of the copyright. And Irving Berlin is its composer.

Its title is "Any Bonds Today?" and if you listen to music, you've probably heard Eddie Cantor sing it or Kay Kyser play it or listened to the Barry Wood recording that is being played over 600 U. S. radio stations.

IRVING BERLIN, the writer of "God Bless America," is now almost officially recognized as the American patriotic composer. One day last May he got a letter from the Treasury Department. Mr. Morgenthau wondered if Mr. Berlin would like to write a song which could be used to help sell Defense Bonds.

Berlin wasn't sure he could do it. But he told Mr. Morgenthau he'd love to try. It's tough, he says, to tell people about something as important as a Defense Bond with words and music. He wrote three versions. Three versions went into the wastebasket. But then he got the words which go: "The tall man with the high hat and the whiskers on his chin will soon be knocking at your door — and you ought to be in."

Composer Berlin with Barry Wood

That was the idea he wanted. The picture of Uncle Sam — Uncle Sam, American, the Freedom Man.

DELIGHTED. Two or three days later Berlin was in Washington with the finished manuscript. He played "Any Bonds Today?" for the Secretary. Mr. Morgenthau was delighted. Then the composer, without payment, of course, turned over the complete rights to his latest creation to the Treasury. Berlin — writer of hundreds of smash hits — had just written a theme song for the government.

Berlin says "the Treasury has done a better job of popularizing it than we in the music business could have done." Already, thousands of requests have come in for it. (If you want your own copy, just write and ask for it.) Barry Wood has been singing it each week on the Treasury's radio hour. More records are being sold each day. "Any Bonds Today?" is a hit. "It could only happen here," says Berlin. — JERRY MASON

TRY PLANTING ONE Yourself

by Homer Croy

CAN still see that walnut-framed motto we had on the wall in the country' school in Missouri where I went. The motto was on a perforated card, with the words worked in yarn:

GREAT OAKS FROM LITTLE ACORNS GROW I can remember sitting there and trying to figure out what the Sam Hill the thing meant. Of course oaks came from acorns, but why under the sun should anybody go to the trouble to work it into a motto? Now and then the hired man would come after school and scrub the floor and dust the motto. It was strange he didn't throw the silly thing into the coal box.

But now that I am many years older, alas, I realize why that motto was there, and I hope that it, or some form of it, is on a wall of every schoolhouse in the land. For it is a most valuable idea. The idea that important things can come from a humble beginning. And that we, each and every one, can be a part of that beginning.

In this connection I think of a "pea soup" fog in 1909 that made London the inside of a bag. On this night a businessman from Chicago started down the street, but it was not long until the fog was too thick. His steps grew slower and slower. As he hesitated, a boy stepped up to him. "Can I be of help, sir?"

"Yes," said the American. The boy put his hand on the man's arm and guided him across the street. The man drew thruppence from his pocket.

"Thank you, sir, but I am a Scout and we do not accept tips."

"I think I should like to know more about these Scouts," said the American.

T<sub>HE</sub> boy took him to the late Lord Baden-Powell, who told him of his work with boys. The American was William D. Boyce, a Chicago publisher who had had boys selling his papers and had become interested in them and their problems. When he returned home, he got some other influential persons enthusiastic about the Scout idea, and helped sponsor the initial movement on this side of the ocean. The acorn sprouted, and now it is a fine oak called "The Boy Scouts of America."

One day, some years ago, another man in England, named Francis Galton, happened to pick up a magazine and, thumbing through it, came to an article on fingerprints. When he finished he took a magnifying glass and looked at his own fingertips more closely than he had ever done in his life. The more he looked, the more he was intrigued. work, in which he said two things that shook England: that no two fingerprints in the world were alike; that fingerprints could be used to detect and identify criminals. Scientists started in to skin him alive; but when they studied the subject they weren't quite so sure. The British Government appointed a committee to investigate. It ended up with a knighthood for Francis Galton.

Just another acorn that has sprouted all over the world.

August 14, 1906, was a hot, sultry day — the worst day in the year for planting an acorn. you'd say. But listen to this. A group of young fellows and girls at Cambridge, Wisconsin, decided to cool off by going on a picnic: they rowed to an island on the lake, and when they got there, one girl in the party said she wanted some ice cream. This meant that some poor soul would have to row back to shore to buy it. But one of the boys was in love with the ice-cream-hungry girl, and you know what love will do.

As he was perspiring his way across the lake, an idea trickled down his brow. He would invent some kind of contraption that would push a rowboat. He did. That was Ole Evinrude. He invented the outboard motor. Happiness note: he married the ice-cream-hungry girl.

The thrilling thing is that we may, at any time, plant such an acorn and, someday, have it make a shade for us and for those who follow us.

I think of another hot summer's day this time in 1903. The newspapers splashed headlines about the heat. A young worker at the Buffalo Forge Company sat down to mop his forehead — and noticed something interesting: drops of water were gathering on a cold pipe that ran along the factory ceiling. He asked himself, "Why does the water cling to that pipe?" Millions of people had seen water collect on glasses and jugs; millions had wondered about it; he was the first one really to think about it.

There must be some way, he reasoned, to use that principle to cool the air. There was! He didn't get it done in a jiffy; oaks aren't jiffy-conscious. Nineteen years later he made the first machine to cool air in restaurants and theaters. Who was that Boy from Buffalo? Willis H. Carrier, the "father of air-conditioning."

There are many many other acorne

Sidelines

He's right on the beam

LOVE. According to Professor C. L. Fluke, University of Wisconsin entomologist, a boy and girl mosquito share a miniature radio system. The wings of the female equal a sending station. Two little broomlike feelers on the male's head are the receiving set.

The wings of the female send out something like 350 vibrations a second. As soon as he hears the first soprano note, the male turns around until the signals are equally strong on both aerials. Then he's off on the beam! He keeps going until he meets his future wife. He doesn't stop on the way for a bite, either. The lady of the family takes care of that department.

NOT HARD. A little British tramp steamer, wallowing off the English coast recently, was sighted by a squadron of Messerschmitts. The Nazi flight commander immediately ordered a bomber to go after the ship.

The vessel had only one gun — a tiny pompom on her bow. The flier zoomed down. The old Scots skipper fired one shot, winged the plane and watched it crash into the ocean.

The German commander, infuriated, ordered another plane to do the job. But the aviator dived too close, fouled his undercarriage in the tramp's masts — and crashed! Score: two down — and the Nazis gave it up as a bad job.

To the crowd which had heard the good news and was waiting on the quay the old Scotsman modestly explained: "It was nae hard. The first one I brought down with my wee pompom. But I had to r-r-r-am the second!"

LETTER. Recently, Channing Pollock received a letter which he forwarded to us. We think you might like to hear about it, too.

"Being a minister," the letter reads, "I am called upon to marry a number of couples. I try to have a short talk with each couple before the wedding to get them to see what marriage means - the give and take of it that is so necessary in order to achieve real happiness. I have never said it so realistically as you say it in your article, 'Eighty Per Cent Happy [which appeared in a recent issue of THIS WEEK Magazine]. Would you give me permission to have that article reprinted so that I could hand it out to every couple who comes to me to be married?' You have that permission, Pastor Wright. M.

Fingerprints became his hobby. He collected them, studied them, classified them. He published a book, after ten years of There are many, many other acorns being planted every day. And what fine oaks some of them will grow to be! And how much I realize now the utter truth of that walnut-framed, yarn-worked motto which used to puzzle me so sorely. I wouldn't have the hired man throw it into the coal box for anything.

To THE envious eyes of the outsider the United States is the most blessed country on earth. We have cotton, oil, fats, iron, coal and wheat to spare. But there are big gaps in our national inventory. We lack many vital metals and essential drugs.

War is cutting us off from our supplies. We shall all feel the shock with varying degrees of severity. The malaria sufferer's life may hang on imported quinine. The machineshop worker's job may depend on his company's ability to get tool steels. Elsewhere shortages may not affect the average man at all. Most of us can survive comfortably without clarinet reeds from France, harmonicas from Czechoslovakia, rug wool from China and castor oil from South America.

But the point is this: in the next few months it may be necessary for us to learn to live without many things we now accept as a matter of course. In an effort to make this painless, and to cause as few disruptions as possible, one of the greatest scientific pushes of all time is taking place. America is going in for substitutes — but in a very special kind of way.

We won't, like Germany, be eating chocolates that look — and sometimes taste — like yellow laundry soap. We won't be wearing shoes with wooden soles or eating butter made from coal. It isn't likely that our government will tell us that we can't have iron for frying pans or bird cages, as the Nazi government has told its people. Yet we are in for some big changes. Many things will disappear from our homes. A host of new things will replace them. Fortunately for all of us, our substitute experts are shooting at a high goal. They aren't looking for makeshift products. Substitutes, they have decided, must be as good and as cheap as the things which they replace. Many times we won't be aware that subtle changes have been made. We won't note that plastic gears have replaced aluminum in the distributors in our cars. Or that synthetic substances have replaced tung oil in paints; or that cigarette papers are being made of North Carolina straw instead of French linen.

FROM HER TO HIM She is giving up silk – for national defense. Soon we'll all be giving – many things. But it won't be sacrifice, for American science has new substitutes sacrifice, for American science and ready... And here's the amazing story of what those substitutes are — and how we'll all be using them by J. D. Ratcliff coffee and cocoa will come in fiber instead of tin containers. Rubber aprons, bathing slippers and other such items will be replaced by waterproofed cotton.

When we have colds, we'll relieve congestion in our noses with ephedrine made synthetically instead of from plants imported from China. People with bad hearts will get relief from digitalis derived from foxglove grown in this country instead of Germany. Fly sprays, once made from flowers grown in the Orient, will be made from coal tar in Wilmington. And quinine may come from a chemist's retort instead of from plantations in Java.

Ways to Combat Shortages As THIS is written, there are over 200 "critiWhat about the thousand and one minor ways in which we are going to make the acquaintance of other substitute products?

Even before the recent shutdown on silk imports from Japan, American women had started to buy nylon stockings in considerable quantity. Now they will have to rely on them more than ever. Meanwhile chemists have been producing other nylon-like yarns; and have found better and stronger rayons for stockings. This change over to synthetics shouldn't be too painful. But it will make a lot of conversation.

The huge wool requirements for military purposes may cause a shortage here. Normally, we import about a quarter of the wool we consume. Here again, the scientists are ready with substitutes. They have beautiful drapery fabrics made of spun glass. And they know how to make artificial wools out of milk or cotton! They have produced a thin, electrically heated blanket which does the work of a pile can't be economically expanded. We can make all you need from petroleum, say the chemists. In a few months' time they built a plant which doubled the United States' production.

Chemists have been busy on many byways. They are having to replace the essential oils derived from flowers and used in French perfumes. They are finding violets, roses and lilacs in coal. Curiously enough, the ingredients for many cosmetics are also needed for munitions. The cellulose acetate in nail polish, for example, is an ingredient in many explosives. Confronted with many situations like this, our cosmetic chemists are having to find materials for which there is less defense demand.

War is giving the beauty industry many hard kicks. It can't get aluminum for portable hair dryers and permanent-wave machines — so it has been turning to fine-spun steel. And the high-grade wire required for hairpins is needed elsewhere, so maybe next year's hairpins will be made of plastics, or even toothpick wood! One threatened short-

HIRA defense. Soon But it won't be new substitutes new substitutes

Substitutes to Come

O<sub>THER</sub> times, the changes will be more apparent. Soon metal foil will have disappeared entirely from tobacco and chewing gums. Aluminum trays for iceboxes will be replaced by ones made of copper, plastic or specially treated paper. Hoods on vacuum cleaners, agitators for washing machines and cartridges for lipsticks will be made of plastic instead of brass or aluminum. Motor oil, cal" items posted by Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., the priorities director of the O.P.M. Each month the list grows longer. All are items which we either haven't got, or are having difficulty getting. There are some surprises — things like insignia for uniforms, magnifying mirrors, water purifiers and plotting tables.

Our newspapers have been telling us about looming shortages of critical materials: rubber, tin, magnesium, aluminum. And we know how we are combating them. A synthetic-rubber industry is sprouting. To save tin we have been warned to expect beer and many foods in glass instead of cans. And we know of the huge plants that have been built to extract magnesium for planes from sea water.

Right now, the national-defense program is consuming all the aluminum produced — including reclaimed scrap. Aluminum articles in the home must be replaced by something else. Pots and pans will be made of enameled ironware. Fruit juicers, electric-fan blades and thermostat housings will be made of plastics. If these savings appear negligible behold a striking fact: from refrigerator trays alone the General Electric Company will save enough aluminum in a year's time to make 2,000 planes! of bedding.

In nearly all the problems posed by substitute products the chemist is the key man. Problems have been dumped helter-skelter into his lap and he is working day and night to solve them.

What of graphite, imported from Korea and Ceylon, needed for "lead" pencils, paints and lubricants? Give us coke and electric furnaces and we will make all you need, say the chemists. What of toluol from which TNT is made? Ordinarily this is derived from coal tar and coke over gases — sources which

BE USING

We are short of many essential metals-chrome, manganese, zinc, for instance. Garbage-pail makers have already been ordered to dip pails three instead of five times in zinc galvanizing solutions. During World War I the shortage of manganese became so acute that for a while it looked like the steel industry might have to shut down! Fourteen pounds of manganese — "the starch of steel" — is required for every ton of steel made. Mining towns are booming at a dozen spots in the country where small manganese deposits are located.

Shortages of many of these things will touch the average person only indirectly. Next year's cars will be quite different from this year's — but differences won't be readily detected. Plastics will replace chromium trim and fittings. Cylinder heads and pistons

ELIZABETH stood at her hotel room window, drawing trembling breaths, watching but not seeing the repeated tableau below in the Zocalo as each party of tourists arrived, listened to its guide's lecture, and turned a slow circle as he pointed out the Palacio Municipal, the Palacio Nacional, and the Cathedral. Elizabeth turned, biting her lip, to the phone. There was just one thing to do.

"Bueno." It was the clerk's voice.

"Hello; do you speak English?"

"Si, Senorita. What do you wish?" "You remember the Melton party who checked out this morning — "

"Si; Mr, and Mrs. Melton, and the son. You wish to catch the bus perhaps and follow bus perhaps and follow them?" Elizabeth cringed. The details and the obvious outcome - were known to everyone. But that was her own fault. It was she who had given way in the crowded lobby this morning. Something had snapped, and she'd made a scene; so the Meltons had left her to cool off while they went for a week to Lake Patzcuaro. And everybody, even the hotel clerk, knew she'd have to chase them and make apology.

1 Per

"Bueno? Bueno?" the clerk was asking.

"I'm sorry — What I would like is for you to telephone the Hotel San Carlos at Toluca. The Meltons have reserved a table there for lunch at twelve sharp. I should like Fred Melton — young Mr. Melton, that is — to telephone me here as soon as he arrives at Toluca. Could you, please, arrange it?"

"Indeed, Senorita." "Thanks a lot. You haven't any news of Rags yet, I suppose?"

"Rags? Oh, the dog which is lost! I am sorry, Senorita, but we have heard nothing."

AT THE dressing table, Elizabeth did what she could about the redness of her eyes. She might handle Fred, alone, but making abject apologies to Papa and Mama Melton wouldn't be easy, and probably wouldn't do any good.

There was no reason why she'd exploded. Yes. Papa and Mama Melton were stuffy, but she'd known and accepted that for two years. And Papa Melton had been perfectly right in pointing out that to remain in Mexico City wouldn't help to find the lost dog, and that in case he were found the hotel would take good care of him until the return from Lake Patzcuaro. Mama Melton had been right in saying it was a silly idea in the first place, bringing a dog on a trip to Mexico. Perhaps that was it, Elizabeth decided, putting on her hat with a vicious tug. Perhaps it was the eternal unvarying rightness of the Meltons, their everlasting policy of doing exactly the right and the sane and sober thing. It could nag at you until you simply exploded, especially when you'd once been married to happy-go-lucky Bill Barrow. She went out into the soft tropic sunlight. intending to walk it off until Fred should call from Toluca. But she quickly found that Papa Melton had been right about Mexico City being no place for a girl to be alone, and she compromised on a turn around the Zocalo. The admiring glances and whistles of the caballeros were bad enough, but when an elegant fifi actually gave her a pinch as she paused before the Cathedral - well!

spite of herself. Of course this tall fellow didn't mean a word of it, but that was something she could appreciate after Fred's eternal weighing of each word.

Then, entering the hotel, she saw a minor miracle -a small white dog curled in the lap of a man sitting in a leather chair.

"Rags! Oh, Rags!" She rushed to the dog, taking it in her arms. She was fond of this funny dog, but it was more than that. The finding of the dog gave her an out. its finding would save her face when Fred phoned from Toluca. "Rags, you naughty dog! Why did you run away?"

Then she said, "Oh," in a small voice as she noted the listless eyes and dry nose, the very feebly wagging tail.

"The lettle dog, he is ver' sick," the man who had returned the dog said.

He was very tall, and the first glance as she looked up at his face took her breath away as if a sudden hand had closed inside her. For an instant it seemed she was looking again at Bill Barrow. Then the impression was gone, and seemed absurd. Bill had been of medium height, not tall; his hair had been yellow, not deep brown; eyes blue, not deep gray.

"I have call the veterinario," the man was saying, with a flash of white teeth; "the w'at you call him — animal doctor." He was light for a Mexican; no doubt from Villa de Santiago, she reflected, remembering the blond youngsters who had swarmed about the limousine when they had passed through.

"Thank you so much for everything. The dog means a lot to me."

A SHRUG and a grin, and again Elizabeth saw the resemblance to Bill. This time she placed it. It wasn't in the actual features, but came rather from a certain intangible "What-the-hell?" expression. "It is nothing. The dog, I find heem this morning, and I see the newspaper where it is to return heem."

He wryly examined his right forefinger, around which he'd wrapped his handkerchief. "You 'ave, Senorita, the one-man dog, no? But of course would I gladly be chewed to ribbons, for the opportunity for to make the acquaintance of so lovely a senorita."

"And such a long trip from here to the Blarney stone," Elizabeth said, smiling in Arts, yes? — the Museum, Sanborn's, Chapultepec Park, Maximilian's Castle?"

"Of course. Why?"

A nod indicated the hotel desk. "You 'ave register from San Francisco, Caleefornia, to which ciudad once I make the visit. I see Market Street, Chinatown, Embarcadero, the hill of the Telegraph — but mebbe I no see San Francisco after all, no?"

"Oh," Elizabeth said, unreasonably nettled. He was just trying to sell her a tour of the city. And she remembered the reward offered for the dog's return, and Papa Melton saying that the dog had unquestionably been stolen in expectation of a reward.

She quickly opened her purse and handed the tall young man a ten-peso note. "Thank you so much. Goodby."

For an instant, his gray eyes narrowed. Angry, no doubt, that he hadn't received more. Then teeth flashed in the bronzed face.

"Gracias, Senorita! And now, I show you the trick! No? Watch so close, senorita! This trick, she is so clever. I bet you one peso you no see him! Watch close!"

Rapidly he tore the bill to small pieces and blew the bits from his palm. "W'at did I do? I bet you no see the trick!"

THE WRONG PLACE TO THINGS HIDE

It's your telephone book...and here are some reasons why

by Mark Osborne

R. AND MRS. AMERICAN PUBLIC hide their valuables in many unusual places, but perhaps the telephone directory is the strangest.

Folks in the metropolitan centers evidently look upon these books as dandy safetydeposit boxes or vaults. There are many more suitable - and safer - places, as is very definitely proved by the many apprehensive calls that phone-book publishers receive following the collection of old directories and delivery of the new ones. Some are funny; others, sad; most have happy endings.

One of the more humorous came from a provoked young fellow who couldn't keep a date with his lady friend that evening because he was without a necktie. It was his misfortune to forget to remove his five ties from the old directory in which he kept them pressed.

Another came from a lady who reported. rather falteringly, that she had overlooked a "very important" letter. She was extremely anxious to recover it until she was told the old directories are ground up at the paper mills. Then her worries seemed to vanish and the letter lost its importance.

A New Filing System

AN EXCITED businessman reported the combination to his safe was "filed" at the heading of "SAFES" in the classified directory. He was quite insistent some crook would find it and loot his valuables. When it was explained the cost to search for it, would probably be greater than the fee of a safe-expert to change the combination, he decided on the latter.

Approximately 35,000,000 directories are distributed each year to 24,000,000 telephone subscribers in the United States. In the cities of New York, Los Angeles and Chicago, each phone user receives two books - an alphabetical, listing all phones: a classified, with business and professional listings according to the type of business or service rendered.

Old directories are collected at the same time new ones are delivered. Truck-loads of old books are transferred to freight cars for shipment direct to paper mills, where the salvage is treated with acids to remove the ink. Then it is ground up and made over into new paper stock.

If a call for a missing valuable reaches the publisher the same day the old book is collected, the truck from that district is unloaded into an empty boxcar. There, the person asking for the search can do the work himself or pay the publisher to have his employees look for whatever is reported missing. And it is surprising how often the needle in the haystack is found.

Money seems to be sought most often. Amounts ranging from $1 to as high as $200 have been located. One day twenty $10 bills fluttered from a directory when the collector

tossed it up on a truck. The distraught owner reached the scene just in time to help the collector as he was picking up the bills from the street. With a gasping thanks, she turned on her heel and dashed back to her housework.

A thoughtful husband had bought a diamond dinner ring to surprise his wife on her birthday and hid it in the phone book. Unsuspecting Wifey gave the old directory to the deliveryman when she received the new one. Hubby was frantic when he reached home that evening. Two of the publisher's employees and Hubby himself spent most of the night searching the truck's cargo. No luck. The following day Hubby reported that the ring was found resting snugly in his alphabetical directory - only the classified had been picked up.

Finding Pictures

PHOTOGRAPHS have been traced. One subscriber agreed to pay for a searcher's time to locate a treasured picture his heartbroken daughter had left in the directory. It was found - a cheap print of Shirley Temple which could easily have been duplicated. Another really had value to its owner - even though just sentimentally. It was the only photograph a widow had of her recently departed husband. She refused to trust hired searchers and started the task of checking 9,000 directories. The boxcar was held over a second day. She emerged from the car the second afternoon - after looking through some 6,000 books - tired and dusty, but happy in her reward.

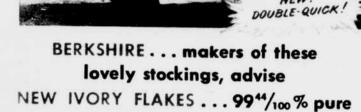

A bulge in one directory picked up from an office building turned out to be a $5,000 life-insurance policy. The widow of two months never knew her husband had purchased it until the policy was presented to her by one of the publisher's representatives.

A telephone book is the best possible place to find phone numbers. But it is a complete flop as a hiding place for securities, diamond shirt studs, marriage licenses, love letters and what-have-you.

Ruffle the pages of your old directory before you hand it over to the collector the next time he delivers a new one.

C<sup>ORINNE'S</sup> dress was golden yellow. Her hat matched the dress and her eyes were turquoise blue, so the commuters tossed her more than a glance as they came down the elevated platform of the 6.15 from New York.

She was sure that it was her car that drew the glances. It had been, once, long and rakish. It was now merely long. To Corinne this meant luffing and yawing when she had to park it, and the need of a turntable when she wanted to go in the opposite direction. It was a convertible cabriolet with a rumble and all the other implications. It had acres of bright-work, dominated by a lean grayhound of solid silver on the radiator cap, two tire wells on the fenders with spares, and nickelplated mirrors strapped to the spares to annoy one at puncture time.

Corinne had found her usual parking slot pre-empted, so when Ted, her husband, came down the stairs and looked for her there, she pressed the horn button lightly with her little finger. The result was a cross between a bellow and a moan that froze every commuter into temporary catalepsy — all but Ted, who waved his hand to her from the stairway.

Corinne opened the door for him. He kissed her and slid his long legs under the wheel. "Somebody steal your stall?" he asked.

"I was — late," she replied. "It was that carburetor again." When in doubt always blame it on the carburetor.

Ted kicked the starter with his foot. The engine leaped into life with an obliging roar. "It's your Aladdin's touch," she said bitterly. He eased the clutch in and the big car slid forward contentedly at having its gears meshed by its master.

It was hopeless, she decided. The minute Ted got under the wheel the old engine rolled over and purred. If it hadn't been for the weight and dignity that goes with two and a half tons on the hoof, it would probably have turned on its back, all four wheels in the air, to have its crank case scratched.

"Have a good day?" she asked, rubbing her face against his rough sleeve.

He was listening to the engine, his gray eyes slitted with concentration.

"Sounds okay. Couldn't have been the car-be enough left over for hash for tomorrow's dinner. I knew you wouldn't mind," she added sweetly. "I had to tip a man fifty cents to get me started. To push the car, I mean."

Calf's liver and bacon was Ted's favorite dish. "Of course I don't mind, Sweetheart," he replied, but she felt his arm stiffen under the rough sleeve. "Who was the crook charged you half a dollar?"

"Somebody's delivery truck. He had to push me a whole block."

"When he must have known it was only a flooded carburetor," Ted commented, as he swung the big car up their driveway and into the garage with one hand and brought it to an expert stop within three inches of the rear wall which she had shredded to pulp with the front bumper.

She changed into a gaily figured house dress. While she harpooned the corned beef for tenderness, she listened for Ted singing in his bath, but all she heard was the hissing of the shower. He didn't even sniff the air as he came down the stairs — merely slipped silently into his seat.

"When is this Budget coming to talk Blodgett?" he asked.

"At eight. After your seven-thirty news commentator."

He ate in silence.

MISS BLODGETT arrived on the dot. She was a large, motherly woman with a bass voice and a sinister black brief case, from which she drew sheafs of typewritten foolscap.

"Your problem as I see it," she said, peering at Ted through a pair of rimless pince-nez, "is too elastic an overhead for a fixed and — er — stationary salary."

"I've spoken to the boss about it, time and again," said Ted.

"You mean that you expect a raise?"

"Who doesn't?" said Ted.

Miss Blodgett essayed a smile which dislodged her pince-nez. She adjusted them, unfolded a sheaf of foolscap and addressed herself to Corinne.

"I have jotted down, here, the items you enumerated the other day, Mrs. Norworth. Everything seems to be in harmony with the findings of our research engineers. Twentyfive per cent for rent, twenty-five per cent for food. Clothes, ten per cent." She glanced severely at Ted, who was keeping track on his fingers. "Carfare and lunches another ten per cent — permissible since your place of business is in the downtown financial district, Mr. Norworth. Steins are definitely committed to the need of something hot and nourishing for the midday meal."

- unless you flooded it - again."

That was the last straw, but she held her peace. "Miss Blodgett is coming over after dinner," she said. "You hadn't planned anything, had you?"

"You mean the budget woman from Steins?"

"Yes."

"No I hadn't planned anything — except a quiet evening with my wife."

"Don't be like that, Ted. I'm trying so hard to save a little for a rainy day."

"I know you are. Am I kicking? You're going swell."

SHE felt like a heel. He was inordinately attached to the old car — the only thing salvaged from his father's estate after the '29 debacle. It had been new that year. It was the only car he'd ever owned or driven — the only thing besides herself that he was sentimental about. But after one whole year of marriage, she had been unable to fit it into her budget; so she had called in Miss Blodgett.

When she didn't reply, Ted said jocularly:

"It's our calf's-liver-and-bacon night, isn't it?"

"Calf's liver was sixty cents a pound today. I couldn't fit it into our budget, so we're having corned beef and cabbage. There will "Nice of Steins," said Ted.

Miss Blodgett gave him an uncertain look. "Gas and light, ten dollars a month. Amusements, incidentals and life insurance, another fifteen, which brings us the grand total of one-hundred-and-sixty-five dollars a month in round numbers. Since your salary is two hundred, this seems to leave thirty-five dollars for savings and possible emergencies such as illness — dental work. A satisfactory margin for a young couple."

"That's what I've been telling Corinne."

"But you're not saving anywhere near that sum, Mr. Norworth."

"No? Well, don't be too hard on Corinne. We've been married only a year, you know. Live and let 'em learn, is my motto. You'll find that there are a lot of things to buy when you're first married, Miss Blodgett."

Miss Blodgett blushed at the mere thought. Even the lenses of her pince-nez glowed a faint rosy pink. "But you're saving only ten dollars per month," she said severely. Corinne looked unhappy. She flung her damp arms about him. "Can I manage? Oh, Ted, isn't it marvelous?"

"Don't let it worry you, honey," Ted told her. "When I get my raise — "

"That isn't the point, Mr. Norworth," Miss Blodgett interposed sternly. "Suppose your wife were to tell you that she — well that something was going to happen?"

"Something's always happening," said Ted. His eyes widened. "Is that what all this is about. You've been holding out on me?"

"Oh, Ted, won't you be serious?" Corinne begged. "Of course I'd have told you — first."

"Those things do happen, Mr. Norworth," Miss Blodgett intoned sepulchrally, looking down her nose — which was slightly bulbous. "What would you suggest?" Ted asked. "I'd suggest your getting rid of the Swinton — trading it in on something more economical to operate."

"I see. Ganging up on me?"

"Oh, but we're not, Ted!" Corinne wailed as Miss Blodgett stiffened like jelly with an overdose of pectin. "I'm just trying to show you that if anything happens to us we've nothing to meet it with. I've kept careful track ever since we were married. It's the car. Only ten miles to the gallon — "

"Not to mention depreciation," Miss Blodgett supplemented.

WATER GIRL

That was how Gene Tierney got her start on the stage — just carrying a pail of water. Then they found out she could talk...

by Donald Hough

Any story about Miss Gene Tierney should begin with the story of her father, which is, in a manner of speaking, a tragic one.

The best way to meet Mr. Tierney is to go back two years and picture him and his daughter walking up a side street in the Broadway theatrical district. He is plainly no Broadwayite. He wears an iron-gray mustache and an air of distinguished authority, and no nonsense about it. He has the appearance of a broker, a rather angry broker, strayed from Wall Street. In fact, he is one. He looks around at the neighborhood with disapproval.

They turn into a building, mount a flight of stairs, and enter the reception room of a theatrical agency. A number of large photographs, with names scrawled upon them, plaster the walls. Several people, in attitudes of hopeless boredom, are sitting around, plainly waiting to see the man in the private office, just beyond.

Mr. Tierney frowns at everything and everybody.

Gene starts to sit down on a leather-upholstered bench, but her father has no time to waste sitting down on anything. He marches her up to the door of the office and kicks it — or anyway pushes it — open. The man behind the cigar at the desk looks up in pardonable surprise. Mr. Tierney looks at him with disapproval.

"This is my daughter," he says crisply, getting it over with. "Have you a job for her on the stage?"

"Any experience?" the stunned agent asks, from habit.

"Of course not!" Mr. Tierney glares at him. "Nobody in my family, young fellow, ever has been on the stage!"

"Then what the -?" The agent waves his arms. "Nothing doing!"

Mr. Tierney beams, smiling broadly. "Thank you," he says politely; "pardon the interruption." He pulls Gene out of the office and they go downstairs, and out. Mr. Tierney now may be observed pulling out his handkerchief and mopping his brow. "Well," he says jovially, looking pleased as Punch, "we didn't get a job there. That makes six turndowns this morning. A record; our most successful day to date. The whole thing is hopeless, Gene. Let's go over and have an icecream soda. On me." only one ever to do it to applause. But Gene's face was so red by this time that she didn't mind it. She kept on carrying the water, putting everything she had into it and not spilling any. Just as she was about to give up, the play

Just as she was about to give up, the play saved her the trouble: it closed. Well, thought Gene, that was that. Now for the social whirl. But Mr. George Abbott, producer of the play, had another idea. He liked the way Gene walked across the stage. He was about to produce another play, called "Mrs. O'Brien Entertains." How would Gene like to be an actress?

"I can't act," Gene said.

"We'll teach you," said Mr. Abbott.

They did teach her. They gave her a script and told her she was to have the part of Molly O'Day, which was the ingenue lead. Gene was frightened stiff. But she rehearsed with the new company, everybody helping her; and she was given an intensive short course in acting on the side. Here was a chance to show her family and her friends that she could do more than carry a bucket of water across the stage. She practiced endlessly, all but broke her health, but the recollection of the bucket spurred her on, and she made it. She did a fairly good job.

Mrs. O'Brien Didn't

POOR "Mrs. O'Brien" entertained, alas, for a matter of only four weeks. Not much of a run, surely, but still it represented just four weeks more of a stage career than Miss Tierney, by all the rules of the game, was entitled to. Her next Broadway chance was in "Ring Two." The title was prophetic: it rang just two nights. Then came "The Male Animal," and fame for our heroine. She got the ingenue lead in this, did a fine job, attracting wide notice to her performance, and the play was a tremendous success. It still is playing on the road, but without Miss Tierney.

Which brings us to the second man in her career.

The first was her father; the second was Darryl Zanuck.

As most executives in Hollywood do, Mr. Zanuck, one of the larger big shots at the Twentieth Century-Fox studios, likes to take busman's holidays. His idea of a vacation is ten days spent in New York in feverish search of new players, new stories, and other appurtenances.

He was in New York when "The Male Animal" was approaching the end of its Broadway run. Taking along a henchman to whom he could give orders, Mr. Zanuck — who had been told about Miss Tierney — went to see the play. He was impressed with the young lady, told his companion that she was a natural ingenue for the movies, directed that she be signed up at once.

After the show they went to the Stork Club. There Mr. Zanuck saw, dancing upon the floor of the club, such a vision of feminine loveliness as never before had met his professional eye.

Seeing Double

"THERE'S the girl we're really looking for," he said. "Sign her up in the morning."

"Miss Tierney, too?"

"No: just this one. Never mind Miss Tierney."

Now Comes the Explanation

ALL of which is nuts and calls for an explanation. In the first place, I made up the actual dialogue out of my head, based on Miss Tierney's general description with the words roughed in. But the situation itself — the events leading up to the tragedy, which we have not come to yet — goes back a few months before this.

• Miss Tierney was a deb, which is another way of saying that she was young, pretty, and had some fifteen or so dresses, all of them paid for. She lately had been graduated from an exclusive New England school and was ready for what is popularly termed a "whirl at society." She was formally launched, but the whirl itself didn't materialize. She would, she told her family, have none of it; and she announced her intention of going on the stage. Aghast, they pointed out that she had no training or experience of any kind. That, Gene told them in effect, was just too bad. She'd learn. She was going to be an actress. This brought on an old-fashioned family tear session. Here they had planned a nice,

"You can't act," said her father. "Let's have a soda"

conservative social career for Gene, and she wanted to be a — show girl! The huddle ended in a compromise: Gene was given three months in which to get a stage job. Her father would accompany her, every Wednesday, on a tour of the theatrical agents. He was going along partly to protect her, and partly, he declared, to help her in her interviews.

And so we have seen him, valiantly carrying out his end of the bargain: taking her around and "helping" her with all his might and main.

Now we come to the tragedy. One morning just before the three months was up, and Mr. Tierney had victory within his grasp, an agent from whose office he was making a triumphant exit with Gene said, "Wait a minute."

Mr. Tierney tried to make a quick getaway, but Gene held back. The agent looked her over, asked a few perfunctory questions, and told her she was hired for a part in "What a Life," a play then current on Broadway.

"But she can't act!" Mr. Tierney wailed. It is his last wail. Good-by, Mr. Tierney; you may bow out of our story. We'll go along with Gene from here.

Gene couldn't find out much about her part, but they told her to report in time for the second act next night. She did so. Soon after the start of the second act somebody gave her a bucket of water and told her to walk across the stage with it. She did. That was all. Come back tomorrow night, they said.

Gene came back the next night, and so did a lot of her friends, for the news of her tremendous histrionic effort had spread. Poor Gene. Some actress. She carried the bucket of water across the stage for weeks: probably the most beautiful person to perform this act on any stage in the world, and certainly the -------

"But you liked the Tierney girl."

"I must have been insane. She can't act." "But she can act some. We don't know that this girl can act at all."

"She can act, all right," Mr. Zanuck said. "I can tell by watching her on the floor. Wait until you've been in this business as long as I have. There's something about them."

Mr. Zanuck's Man Friday had the Stork Club girl at the office in the morning. As you may have guessed, her name was Gene Tierney. She had removed her heavy stage make-up and gone dancing with a friend.

Her first assignment in Hollywood was to play opposite Henry Fonda in "The Return of Frank James." She was nominally the leading woman in the play, but in fact it wasn't much of a part. She did very well, though, for her first time before a camera, and was signed to a long-term contract by the studio. After this came a more difficult and bigger leading part, that of Lady Barbara in "Hudson's Bay." She got excellent reviews, and her status as an aspirant to real stardom was confirmed.

The next job she was assigned to was calculated to show whether or not Miss Tierney, in crashing both Broadway and Hollywood without benefit of either experience or schoolman offered me sixty bucks for it last year.'

Miss Blodgett began gathering up her sheafs of foolscap.

"I had hoped to help you, Mrs. Norworth," she said. "Perhaps - some other time --

Ted held out his hand. "It's been nice hearing both your sides of my case," he said. "Won't you stay for Gracie Allen?"

'I'm not a radio fan, thanks."

When she had gone, Ted followed Corinne into the kitchen and made a tentative pass at the dish towel.

"I think you were horrid to her," she said. "After all she was trying to help us.'

He put his arms about her and laid his lean cheek against her hair. "I didn't play fair - Remember the letter I wrote to the Home Office two weeks ago?"

"You mean the one about the superintendency of the assembling plant here in Roxburg?"

He nodded. "The letter must have clicked, because I got a reply from Mr. Cockrell, the big noise himself. He'll be in New York tomorrow. He wants to have a talk with me - suggested that he come out here, so I'm asking him out for dinner. Can you manage?"

She flung her damp arms about him. 'Can I manage? Oh, Ted, isn't that marvelous! It'll mean a raise in salary !"

"Thirty-six hundred a year to start." He kissed her. "I've been planning it for two weeks. Saved on my lunches. Here's five bucks. Do yourself proud."

"WATCH me!" she cried, her blue eyes shining. "I'll get Milly to help me serve." Milly came in once a week to clean house. "How about porterhouse steak - or is he a vegetarian?"

"And if you get the job you'll be only a few miles from home. I won't haye to meet you at the station."

He let his hands fall to his side and his face dropped with his hands. She turned her face away. "Ted," she said in a low voice, "I did a dreadful thing this afternoon - only I was so furious when I couldn't get the old car started and the delivery man had to push me

"What?" he demanded.

"I stopped in at the Dornley Agency and looked at their new twodoor sedan. It's a beauty, Ted. It handles so easy. I parked it the first time I tried. And it's robin's egg blue."

"I know. Matches your eyes," he said hollowly.

"The salesman said he'd allow us two hundred on the Swinton and give us eighteen months to pay the balance at twenty-five dollars a month. We'd have it paid for in no time and you get eighteen miles to the gallon instead of ten. Think of the saving in operating expenses. I think it's an awfully good deal. You told Miss Blodgett yourself, that all they'll give you for the old car is sixty dollars as junk. Besides what would Mr. Cockrell think if we met him at the

While she aired the house for the last faint traces of cabbage odor from the night before, she kept watching for the robin's-egg-blue two-door sedan, but there was no sign of it. It was getting time to go and fetch Milly, so she decided she might as well take the Swinton to the agency and make the exchange. She put on her hat and went to the garage.

Still nothing happened - except a cloud of black smoke from the rear as the engine bit briefly, coughed, and went back to sleep.

SHE got out, lifted the hood and peered. When in doubt always lift the hood and peer, the theory being that a car having its intimates exposed to public gaze will flush with modesty, and the flush will generate enough heat to ignite the gasoline. It has been known to work.

It didn't. Corinne wiped the spark plugs with her best linen handkerchief for invisible traces of dampness. She sounded the gas tank, then remembered that she had bought twenty gallons less than a hundred miles back. She decided to resort to heroic measures.

From the garage to the street was a slight incline. She disengaged the clutch, released the emergency brake and essayed to push the car out backward. It backed at first slowly and reluctantly, but gathered momentum as it hit the down grade. Corinne leaped into the seat, slipped the clutch in reverse, keeping it disengaged until the car gathered momentum, then let go with her foot.

The car hit the gutter with a slam and rocked to rest there. In the excitement she had forgotten to turn the ignition back on. In chagrin she kicked the starter viciously. The car sputtered: "You had your chance and muffed it."

She watched the empty road for the promised Dornley. Neither it nor anything else was in sight. She decided to go back to the house and phone the agency. But when she picked up the (Continued on page 19)

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

A FIRST Jerry didn't believe his ears. His checks lost some of their color, and his eyes, blue as steel, probed the glance of the man behind the desk. Kerman would hardly be fooling — not "Big Ed," the shrewdest manager in the industry — but he had to make sure. "In full charge, you mean?"

"That's right," Kerman nodded. "You'll be responsible for all research, both on the defense stuff and on our regular line. Fifteen thousand to start, and regular increases if you produce."

"What happens to Dave Macintosh?"

"He'll be retired. He was sixty last month." Jerry was silent a while, and then he shook his head. "I'm sorry, but I guess that lets me out."

Kerman's eyes narrowed. "What's on your mind?"

"When my father died, Dave lent me the money to finish at Tech. I don't see myself taking his job."

"You needn't worry. Dave's well off."

"That isn't the point. After the years he's put in here, it would kill him to be thrown on the junk pile."

"I doubt it," Kerman grunted. "Dave's a tough old coot." He looked at his watch. "Well, there's our offer, Blake. Come around in the morning and give me an answer. If you don't want it, we'll try Sorrett. That oil pump of his has saved us money."

Jerry thought he was working on the test of a supercharger for an armored car. But it turned out to be the test of two men — and a girl

"Sorrett, ye mean?" the other inquired. "Yes."

Macintosh put a hand on his arm. "Hugh Sorrett's none o' my choosin'. But his father's a stockholder, remember, and Kerman put him into the laboratory." talked about a vague future that would include both of them. But he had let the subject drop after his father's death.

They walked to the far end of the veranda.

pups a thing or two," Lorna said doubtfully. "How does Dave take it?"

"Pretty well, most of the time. Once in a while he bristles, and then Hugh stops."

Sorrett's game was clear, Jerry realized. If he could keep Dave worrying about his age and his fitness, the old man would dig his own grave. That little project had to be stopped. Jerry leaned forward. "Don't let it worry you, Lorn'. He'll turn into a ball of fire one of these days. You watch!"

"I hope you're right. Anyway, you've made me feel a lot better. You're always so darned sane and levelheaded!"

Her fingers were warm on the back of his hand; for the moment he was willing to forget Sorrett and shop politics.

"Any other troubles that we can mend?" he asked.

She smiled. "None you would understand, I'm afraid."

For the next hour they talked of pleasant, inconsequential things. Jerry sometimes lost the thread of their conversation while he watched a shaft of light from the street play along Lorna's cheek and throat and finally disappear among the soft waves of her hair. If he had some money ...

WHEN he finally left, she walked to the steps with him, and in the darkness there she put her hand on his sleeve. "Thanks for everything, Jerry. It seems I can always count on you." She was disturbingly close to him closer, even, than on the night he had first kissed her. He wished he could skip everything else and hold her in his arms as he had done that night. But he couldn't skip Sorrett, or Sorrett's money.

As Jerry walked out of the office, the first person he met was Hugh Sorrett, who had apparently been waiting to go in.

"Apples for the teacher, Blake?" he said.

"That's how I keep my job," Jerry answered. "I'm too dumb to get along otherwise."

"The chaps in the lab don't care much for apple polishers."

"Thanks," Jerry nodded. "I'll remember that." He walked on past, keeping his glance away from the spot on Sorrett's jaw where he had always wanted to hang one.

He came on Dave Macintosh just inside the laboratory door. The old man was looking into an electric furnace. He turned at the sound of Jerry's footstep, and smiled. "Ah, lad! So ye been hobnobbin' wi' the great!"

"Just a pep talk," Jerry lied. "Kerman likes the piston strut."

"A nice design, lad. I been meanin' to tell ye." He cleared his throat. "Why don't we see ye at the house any more, Jerry? Lorna's wonderin' if anything's the matter."

Jerry felt his ears begin to redden.

"I've wanted to come, Dave, but — well it's pretty crowded over there." "I just want you to know why I've stayed away," Jerry said hastily. "Sorrett's got the money to take Lorna around, which is nice for her. With Mother to look after, I can't compete."

The old man frowned at the floor. "I liked it better when the two o' ye were kids and didn't know a dollar from breakfast," he said. He raised his eyes. "Won't ye come over tonight? It would seem like the old days. I'm sure Lorna wants to see ye."

"Did she say that?"

"She's been hintin'."

"Well - I'll be over."

LORNA herself answered his ring that evening. He studied her face for any difference of expression that would indicate an altered relationship between them. But she was the Lorna he had always known — same clear forehead and frank gray eyes, same smile, same shy lips he had kissed the night of their graduation dance. She held out her hand. "It was nice of you to come, Jerry. Shall we sit out here on the veranda?"

He nodded. It was where they had always sat when they had things to talk over — Lorna's algebra, his own French, plans for a class day picnic. At one time they had even Lorna curled up in a wicker chair by the railing, and Jerry took the chair nearest her. "How's your mother?" he asked.

"She's worried about Dad, and so am I. That's why I sent them to the movies tonight -I wanted to talk to you alone. What's wrong at the plant, Jerry?"

"You mean — about your father?"

"Yes. Is he really finished? Should he retire, do you think?" Even in the dusk he could feel the intensity of her glance.

"No, I wouldn't say he's washed up," he said after a pause, "but he's in a first-class slump. He seems to have something on his mind that gets in the way of new ideas. It'll pass, though. These dry spells come to everybody."

"I'm glad you feel that way. I thought maybe you were impatient with him, too."

"With Dave? Who's impatient with him?"

"The whole research staff, according to Hugh. They think he should step aside for a younger man."

Jerry checked the retort that came to his lips. Sorrett's statement was an outright lie, but he couldn't tell Lorna so. When a fellow is dating the girl you love, there are certain things you don't say about him.

"Has Sorrett mentioned this to Dave?"

"Only as a joke. He calls him Methuselah and tells him he ought to show the young He touched her fingers lightly. "Let me know if anything goes wrong."

He went in to see Kerman the next morning. The big man was at his desk. "Made up your mind?" he asked.

"In a way. I want to make a proposition. I think Dave Macintosh is still the best research man in the business. You don't agree. Well, let's pay off on the basis of Dave's next blueprints. If I'm right, Dave keeps his job. If I'm wrong, I quit, and you can give the job to Sorrett."

"Has Dave got something?"

"You'll see. Give him two weeks."

Kerman walked to the window and looked out into the yard. At last he turned. "Two weeks, Blake. That's the absolute limit."

"Thank you, sir."

At the laboratory, Jerry found Dave again working beside the electric furnace. The old man looked up. "I'm gettin' it, lad. We'll have softer springs on the passenger models."

"Uh-huh." Jerry showed no enthusiasm. "Not worth doin', ye think?" - sharply.

"I suppose it is, but I thought you'd be fixing up that supercharger assembly - the one for the X-41. The army wants speed out of that job."

'Well, they're gettin' speed! No supercharger's going to make a racing car out of a machine carrying ten tons of armor. Eighty miles an hour is good."

"But suppose the Crescent people show ninety. Then who gets that hundred-milliondollar contract we've been hearing about?"

"Are ye talkin' about armored cars or airplanes?" the old man snapped. "If it's airplanes ye mean, I'll build ye a supercharger that will do something. But I don't see the use of them on land equipment. X-41 is a good engine as it stands. Tut, tut, boy! Don't let a visit to Kerman turn your head. I'm still decidin' what's needed around here.'

He stalked towards his office, leaving Jerry half angry and half perplexed. Dave had never been an easy man to handle, and now, with his nerves on edge from Sorrett's prodding, he was more likely than ever to blow up. Nevertheless, it had to be risked. He followed the old man across the room.

"About that supercharger, Dave. I -- "

"Supercharger! Supercharger!" Macintosh cried. "Can ye think of nothin' else?"

"Well, maybe supercharger's the wrong word, but that's what I thought you meant when you were talking about the fuel supply for the X-41. You said that with a screw-type impeller and equalizing valves in the manifold, you could step up the combustion charge and keep it uniform in all cylinders. It sounded like a sweet idea."

The old man was listening with knit brows. "Ye're talkin' like a lunatic! I never spoke such nonsense in my life! Humph! Equalizing valves in the manifold — Humph — Humph - Daly valves, I should think - '

"You mentioned Daly valves." Jerry nodded. "The impeller, you said, could be mounted right below the intake ports."

"Aye, of course," Dave murmured. "That would be the place for it - Ye say I told ye this? I mean - well - it's queer I don't remember."

'We were rushed with a lot of stuff just then. You had too much on your mind."

"My mind! My sieve, ye mean!" The old man was silent a moment, frowning; then he chuckled, clapped Jerry on the shoulder. "I need ye for a keeper, lad! Would ye come over to the house tonight and talk about this?"

"Sure."

the old man's design with his own. He folded came home early today, and he's been like a crazy man ever since. He wants to see you right away."

"I'll go up," Jerry said. "How's Lorna?" "Fine. She's going to a dance at the country club."

"I see. Well, I'd better get to Dave."

He found Macintosh in his study, leaning over a tremendous drafting table. Its surface was covered with squares of drawing paper; other sheets, which had been used and discarded, littered the floor. As Jerry walked in, the old man said, "Come over here, lad, and I'll show ye something."

ERRY was astonished at Dave's progress. In addition to blocking out the main features of the assembly, Dave had perfected a number of details it had taken Jerry weeks to get right. The impeller layout was especially neat. From drive-shaft to housing, it was the most compact draftsmanship he had seen in years. "It's grand, Dave! The army's going to thank you for this," he exclaimed. "I hope they like it." The other nodded. "But do you know the best thing, lad? It's started me thinkin' again. My head's just boilin' with new stuff. As soon as this job's done, I'm going to straighten out the Diesel 500. I got a hunch on it at dinner."

Just then Mrs. Macintosh's voice came up from below. "Telephone, David." While the old man was gone, Jerry brought out his own drawings and compared the valve sketches with those on the table. The diagrams were practically identical.

He was so fascinated by the comparison that he nearly missed hearing the old man come up the stairs again. When footsteps reached him, he tried to fold his drawings quickly, but they slipped out of his fingers and dropped to the floor among a pile of Dave's discards. He made a hasty grab and stuffed the whole handful into his pocket just a second before Dave came in through the door.

They talked for an hour more, and then Jerry went home. He shoved his drawings into the desk without sorting them. With Dave off to such a fine start, they wouldn't be needed again.

Next morning the word was out that Dave was designing a supercharger for the X-41. The staff sent curious glances toward the office where the old man was working.

Just before noon Sorrett stopped beside Jerry's bench. "Have you seen any of the chief's drawings?"

"A couple," Jerry answered. "Has he got anything?" "Decidedly."

Sorrett frowned.

"Why doesn't the old buzzard give up?

Research is a young man's job. They ought to retire him," he said.

"Listen, Sorrett," Jerry said. "Dave Macintosh is a better engineer right now than either of us is ever going to be."

Sorrett's pale eyes narrowed slightly. "We'll see about that," he said.

Macintosh finished his blueprints six days later, and the staff began fabricating the parts. Everybody took a hand, since Kerman wanted a road test the following Saturday. Jerry had charge of the impeller housing. As he glanced down the specifications, he suddenly paused. Then he crossed the room to Macintosh's office. "Dave, did you order this change in the side plate?"

The old man nodded. "Chrome's too expensive, Jerry. Cast iron'll hold."

"At that pressure?"

"Sorrett tested it."

"Sorrett, eh? Was this his idea?"

"Well, yes. I know he's cheap with materials, lad, but this time he's right. I don't want to fight Kerman about costs."

"Why take a chance, Dave? The stuff's risky here."

"A test's a test, and Sorrett's good at figuring stresses. His pump showed that."

Jerry went to the forge, cast the plate according to specifications, then carried it to one of the testing machines. Wedging the ends in, he ran the tension up until the metal pulled apart. He looked at the scale-beam. The reading was twenty per cent below the safety line. He retested. Same result. One thing seemed sure; the figures Sorrett had reported were not the figures he had got on his test - if he ever made one.

For a minute Jerry thought of trying to convince Dave of this, but changed his mind. Instead, he cast a third plate and marked it for assembly, then went to a lathe at the end of the room, where he spent the next two hours. At the end of that time he had a shining chrome duplicate of the cast-iron plate.

about that," he said

This he wrapped in a cloth and put under some blueprints in his desk.

By Friday noon the dynamometer tests had been completed, and the test car that was to make the next day's run was brought into the laboratory. Macintosh supervised the installation of the supercharger. He was more nervous than Jerry had ever seen him. It was past six o'clock before the job was done, but even then the old man remained, with Jerry at his side, checking and rechecking. At last he appeared satisfied.

'Well, there she is, lad. She'd better be tough, because Kerman's going to be there."

"He'll see something," Jerry said. He thought again of mentioning the side-plate, decided not to. His first plan was better.

A little after eleven o'clock that night Jerry came back to the plant alone. Paddy Hume, the night watchman, was sitting at the gate. "Evenin', Mr. Blake," he said. "It's a bunch of owls ye are."

JERRY was thoughtful as he walked across the yard. It wasn't unusual for the research men to come back in the evening to check on the progress of an experiment, but as far as he knew, Sorrett had nothing on the fire.

He unlocked the door of the laboratory, and went to the test car. He ran his fingers over the installation, but everything was tight as he and Dave had left it. Perhaps Sorrett had only been making sure that the cast iron was still part of the assembly.

Jerry opened his desk and unwrapped the strip of chrome he had shaped earlier in the week. Unscrewing the bolts that held the side plate, he lifted it out and replaced it with the chrome. He screwed the bolts tight again, tested the connections, and started to put his tools away. The door opened.

"Improving the job, Blake?" Sorrett asked, walking towards him. He stepped close and reached for the hood lever.

KID was in here last night who had just got drafted. "I like the U.S. okay," said the boy, "but there's sure a whole lot of guys in the U.S. that I wouldn't lift a little finger to save from gettin' blown plumb over the Rocky Mountains."

"Such as who?" I asks him. "Well," he says, "I worked for a big stuffed shirt last summer who fired me to give my job to one of his half-witted relations. That's one. Another one is my high-school chemistry teacher who flunked me because one of his pets copied my examination paper an' I got blamed for havin' the same answers."

"One night the other guy tries to go around Bumps, cut in on him an' run him into the ditch. But something happened to his own steerin' gear an' he skidded an' turned over an' his truck caught fire.

'Bumps never hesitated a minute. He grabbed a crowbar out of his tool-box, rushed straight into that blazin' truck, broke open the door, dragged his 'enemy' out, rolled him in the sand-an' then spent a month in the same hospital with him while they both got over their burns.

"After Bumps was out, I asked him why he didn't let the guy fry. 'Shucks,' says Bumps, 'you can't let a brother truck driver down."

"So don't worry, Wally, that youngster has just enough fight in his make-up so he won't see anything unusual in not lettin' us 'fellow truck drivers' down, either."

Then came 'Belle Starr.' The producers had been at a loss to find the right girl to play the title role. It was hard. ### TEST RUN

"Get out of there!" Jerry said. "Are you talking to me, you bounder?"

"The word is 'bouncer'," Jerry answered softly. "This car's ready for test, and I'm going to bounce one off the chin of the first guy who touches it!"

Sorrett looked at him a moment, then curved his fingers around a Stillson wrench that was lying on the bench beside him. Jerry watched his eyes, hoping for the flicker that would mean action. But nothing happened. Sorrett laid the wrench aside.

"This is absurd," he said. "The matter can be settled in other ways." He turned abruptly and walked out through the door.

Jerry stood thinking. With Sorrett nosing around, he dared not leave the car unguarded, especially now that the side-plate was changed. He could sleep there...

- Jerry was awakened by the sun. His watch said six-thirty, which meant he would have to hurry. The test was scheduled for eight o'clock, and the crew would soon arrive to take the car to the track. He hurried home. An hour later, after a quick bath and a shave, he reached the testing ground. The armored car, looking like a huge silver beetle in the morning sunlight, was already on the track, and gathered around it were Kerman, Macintosh, and the laboratory crowd. Sorrett had not arrived.

JERRY was heading towards the group when he heard a voice behind him. "Hi, Jerry! Didn't the alarm go off?"

He turned around and saw Lorna smiling at him from her father's roadster. "Could I go over to the track?" she asked.

"Sure, come on. This is the big day, and you ought to be in on it."

He guided her out onto the bricks of the track. People spoke to them as they passed, but when they approached her father, Dave turned his back on them. Jerry glanced at Lorna, but her eyes were as puzzled as his own. He touched the old man on the arm. "What's up, Dave?"

Macintosh faced around. He put his hand in his pocket and brought out a strip of chrome steel. "Recognize this?"

Jerry recognized it, all right. "I bolted it onto the supercharger last night," he said. "If you're wise, you'll put it back."

"It's stayin' off!" Macintosh growled. "Sorrett phoned me this morning and told me to check the sideplate. This is what I found! I'd fire anybody else, Jerry!"

"Go ahead and fire me, but put that chrome back while there's time. Dave, I tell you — "

"You tell me nothing! We settled that!" He strode away.

Meanwhile Kerman had been talking to Howdy Wilson, the test driver. "Warm her up slowly," he said, "then run off five laps at eighty. After that, rolling up the straightaway towards the near turn. Jerry and Lorna walked back to the rail, and as they took their places there, Sorrett passed them and stationed himself at the rail on the other side of Kerman.

The car droned past twice before Wilson opened it up. Then the exhaust deepened to a roar, and the huge machine leaped forward.

"Nice pickup," Kerman murmured. The others nodded silently, watching the car streak around the turn. The engine had settled to a steady beat with plenty of power in reserve. Wilson was holding it at eighty.

He kept it there for five laps. Then, as the car zoomed towards them down the straightaway, he gave it the gun. The roar of the engine changed pitch again, mounting to an angry whine. Jerry was biting his lips; Lorna's fingers were tight on his arm. Everybody was leaning forward, eyes on the speeding car. It thundered around the curve and into the back stretch, gaining momentum with every foot, then slammed into the far turn. Wilson now took it high on the bank, apparently meaning to hit the straightaway with everything he had.

He was almost around when smoke burst out — dark brown clouds of it that billowed out from the hood and were whipped back through the driving slits in front. The front wheels wavered for a moment, then straightened out as the smoke cleared and Wilson found the middle of the track. The big car coasted to a stop and Wilson clambered out.

UERRY heard Lorna stifle a sob as they hurried across the track. Her father, he noticed, was walking slowly. Sorrett alone seemed unperturbed. As he approached the car, his eyebrows were lifted in an expression of polite interest, nothing more.

Somebody laughed, and the rest looked at Sorrett. His face was mottled with patches of dull red. He stood quite still for a moment, and then he advanced on Jerry. "Some more of your tampering, Blake? I should have known you'd go for my pump!"

Kerman glanced at Jerry. "What's this?"

"I went to the lab last night," Jerry told him, "but I didn't touch his pump. The thing's no good, that's all. Put another one in, and you'll see."

"Fair enough," Kerman nodded. He beckoned to the head mechanic. "Give us a new pump of the same model."

While the crew were working on the car, Jerry spoke to Macintosh under his breath. "Dave," he begged, "won't you change that plate?"

The old man looked at him, and then at the car. His eyes were stubborn. "No," he said. "I won't!"

The mechanics signaled that everything was ready, and Kerman gave Wilson his orders. "Run it up fast," he told him, "but watch yourself. I don't want you killed by a shoddy pump, if that's what's the trouble."

Wilson gunned it from the start. Within a lap he had the motor humming like a swarm of wasps. Jerry held his breath as the wheels slanted into the fatal turn. There was a flash of silver around the bend, then the car roared down into the straightaway. The brown smoke flooded out again. Holding the wheels true this time, Wilson brought the car to a stop in front of Kerman and climbed out. "That pump won't take it," he declared.

Kerman did not look at Sorrett. "Put in one of last year's pumps," he told the mechanics. "Maybe we can get a line on this supercharger."

Wilson nodded and climbed in. The car moved away with a gentle purr, to drive back and pick you up? I'm glad you feel better, dear. Papa fancied you'd phone us here. Mama said it was just a case of nerves and you'd be yourself after a good cry. I'll drive back for you as soon as we have lunch, while Papa and Mama prowl through the market. Friday's market here at Toluca, you know. That way, we won't lose any time. We're having dinner at Morelia, you know."

Something caught in Elizabeth's throat. She was to be forgiven theneven though the outbreak wouldn't soon be forgotten. If Fred drove back for her now, while Papa and Mama Melton prowled their scheduled two hours in the market, the precious down-to-the-minute program wouldn't be upset.

"No, Fred - don't drive back for me," she found herself saying. "I - I just wanted to tell you I was all right and not to worry. Don't come back for me. I'll stay here until you get back from Lake Patzcuaro next Wednesday. I - I want to see the bullfight Sunday - Yes, the bullfight," she repeated, at his incredulous question. It was the only thing she could think of, even while realizing Papa Melton's views on such barbaric exhibitions.

"See you Wednesday. Goodby!" she cried, and hung up quickly. She definitely was in the soup now, having spurned the offer of forgiveness, and she tried not to remember Papa Melton's blank surprise when she'd blown up. Papa Melton was a great one to do mouth service to independence and initiative, as long as he had his own way.

Elizabeth turned from the phone trying to think what to do. It would have done no good to have told Fred about Rags and possible rabies. Fred would have pointed out with solid Melton logic that she couldn't do anything about it one way or another.

But Elizabeth knew she couldn't leave Mexico City until the tall young man with gray eyes had been found and warned. With a shudder she remembered the handkerchief wrapped around his right forefinger.

THE police were polite and charming. "A tall man, per'aps twenty-five, who dresses well, yes? But, Senorita, Mexico City is full of the tall young men who dress so fine."

"But, Senorita - We do our best, ves?"

She arranged with a newspaper to print a notice. The radio station agreed to broadcast a warning. Then she spent the remainder of the day touring about, watching the streets for the tall stranger with gray eyes.

He did not present himself to any doctor in the city for treatment that day, nor the next, nor the morning of the next.

It was the hotel clerk who suggested the bullfight. Everyone went to the corrida de loros. That was exactly the trouble, she decided when surveying the sea of faces in the Plaza. The arena crowd poured out the exits she tried to be everywhere at once. It was like trying to find somebody at the big game in Berkeley.

"Mister! Hey, Senor! Mister!" The sea of people opened briefly and she saw him - the tall stranger getting into a taxi fifty yards away. Then the sea closed, rolling and swirling. She fought through it to the street. "Follow that taxi!" she cried, hailing a free one.

"Si, Senorita. Five pesos."

"W'ich wan, Senorita?"

"That - that yellow one there! Don't let it get away!"

The taxi jumped as if kicked, and lunged at a solid wall of traffic. Lurching, careening, it somehow bored a hole, keeping on the tail of the yellow car ahead. A dodging route brought it with a two-wheeled turn into the Paseo de la Reforma, after which the chase was comparatively easy. The cab ahead stopped, and Elizabeth-saw she was back in front of her own hotel.

Out of the cab they had been following stepped, not the tall stranger, but a very fat Mexican dressed in a checkered suit of cream and blue, a big cigar in his mouth. The taxi driver looked at the man in the checkered suit and then at the slim beauty of Elizabeth, and shook his head with sad reproof.

"We followed the wrong car," she explained.

"Ah!" The driver beamed. "Then for but so short a trip, I charge only two peso!"

Elizabeth entered the lobby wearily. It was one thing to be silly, and quite another to be incompetent.

And then she saw him. He was seated in the same leather chair as he'd been in when he returned Rags. Arising, he was even taller than she remembered, more handsome, his teeth making a whiter contrast to his bronzed face. He was positively lovely!

"Oh, Mister!" she cried, rushing to him. "Oh, Mister, Mister! Am I glad to see you!"

"Senovita/" He bowed. "I am overwhelmed with such news from one so beautiful!"

Elizabeth found herself laughing, even as she explained to him the necessity of being inoculated.

"But you 'ave worry for me? For why?" he asked. "Lo siento mucho, Senorita. I am desolate with sorrow that I cause you the worry - I have receive the information on radio, about the dog. Also in newspaper."

"You knew all the time? Then why in the world didn't you report for inoculation?

"But the bite, she was so little. And why worry until we are sure? Mebbe dog has rabies - mebbe not. That is the reason why now I am here, to find out."

"Well, I certainly wouldn't be taking any chances, Mister."

"The doctor I call for you," he said, and leaned to her ear confiden-

Shadows make the portrait. There are no harsh ones here

DAYLIGHT FLASHLIGHTS

They will help you get good portraits — but here's an easier trick

COOD many people these days are surprised and puzzled at the sight of press photographers making flash-bulb shots in broad daylight — even with the sun shining. By the same token, visitors to Hollywood are often amazed to see cameramen there shooting out in the open with powerful lights, fed by portable generators.

The Easterner's first thought is that "this California sun ain't what it's cracked up to be." But that isn't the point with either the movie cameramen or the press photographers, who are equipped with the fastest lenses and hypersensitized film capable of getting pictures in light so dim that it would hardly fog ordinary amateur film.

No, these fellows aren't after adequate illumination: they're after balanced illumination. Or, to put it another way, they don't want black shadows. And, unfortunately, the brighter the sun, the blacker the shadow it casts. Hence this professional use of artificial light in the daytime — to brighten up the shadows.

Failure to appreciate this fact ruins more amateur daylight portraits than almost any other factor. Either you snap Uncle Ezra with his hat on, getting a shadow from the brim which comes out in the print like a mask across his face, or you have him remove the hat to avoid this and achieve a "sun squint" in his eyes.

Improving Quality

OUTDOOR portraits do not have to be made this way. For if you will only take a little pains to brighten up the shadows the way the professionals do, you'll be delighted with the improved quality of your outdoor shots — and even shots taken indoors by daylight.

The only accessory you need is a large reflector of some kind. The most rudimentary type is a folded white bed sheet with some sort of a stand, frame or support to hold it in position. Lacking a stand, you can bully your wife into holding it — maybe.

With this equipment on hand, stand or seat your subject with his back to the sun or, preferably, with the sun coming at an angle over one shoulder.

THIS WEEK MAGAZINE

Now tilt your reflector slightly away from the subject (so as to throw the light up at him) and move it in gradually until you suddenly see the subject's face brighten up in this reflected glow. At this point, move the reflector back and forth, up and down and sideways, watching the results on the face and selecting the position which gives the most pleasing general illumination. After estimating your exposure, make the shot, remembering to allow at least twice as much time as you would if the subject were facing the sun.

The result will be a well-balanced, pleasing picture with all the sparkle and zip of a back-lighted shot. You'll have shadows, of course, but they'll be delicate and transparent.

The Better Bet

You can accomplish much the same idea by using a flash-bulb. But the reflector is still the better bet because you can see exactly what sort of illumination you're getting from it. For that reason it would pay you, rol that reason it would pay you, if you do many portrait snaps, to supplant the bed sheet with something easier to handle — say a four-footsquare sheet of builder's composition board painted with white or aluminum paint. The latter, giving a softer reflection, is usually better. Or, if you have a projection screen for your home movies, that will do nicely, provided it isn't too small.

Naturally, it isn't mandatory to go out in the yard in order to operate in this fashion: the same procedure applies in daylight snapshots made near a window. Here, again, you can use your flash or photo-flood bulbs on the shadow side of the subject if you care to. But the reflector is just as convenient and usually more satisfactory — especially if you're using color film and do not want to mix your lighting.

What it all adds up to is that daylight portraits can be lovely and pleasing with even the cheapest kind of a camera. Most snapshooters want too much light, forgetting about the shadows which result. But in portraits, as in eating, "enough is as good as a feast." — FULTON WILLIAMS

GET THE OTHER FELLOW'S ANGLE

by Emily Post Author of "Etiquette: The Blue Book of Social Usage"

UST now, at the end of the long summer holiday, when boys and girls are leaving for college, or taking their places at desks, drafting tables, assembly lines, or entraining for Army camp or training ship, it is a good time, it seems to me, to write about a few of the problems which such situations present. Few experiences test social amenities as much as those which bring strangers into close relationships. It is difficult, for instance, to learn to share the same room or tent, or other sleeping quarters in college, camp, or training ship. The daily contacts of fellow workers, in an office or plant are less close than this, but possibly quite as exacting.

The ability of workers to get on well together means more than merely having an adaptable temperament, and a good disposition. Getting on with one's fellow workers is also dependent on reliability and skill. A person who delays the work of another, or fails to do his, or her, full share, or is not always fair in what he, or she, gives, or tries to get out of things and thereby forces extra work on others, is not likely to be popular.

Beyond this, it is of greatest importance in winning the good opinion, possibly the deep affection of your associates, to be willing to do a little more than your share sometimes; to be generous with extra help when it is needed. This does not mean taking over a slacker's job, or making up for an incurable incompetent's shortcomings, or being otherwise imposed upon. But it does mean a sympathetic perception of the occasion when a little extra time spent in helping - or substituting for - another will be only kind and decent. And this sort of perceptiveness is characteristic of almost all who are held in affection. It might be added that a thoroughbred not only refrains afterwards from mentioning such kindness as he has done - but does not even remember it. The curry-favors, the clock-watchers, and all the other "what'll you-do-for me?" persons who always come back with an, "I stayed overtime for you that Saturday," or "I did all of your work when," - these people do not wear well!

One point to emphasize is that it takes time for those who are brought into close relationships to test one another, and that only the final appraisal is accurate. For example, a girl who at first is unpopular with the others in her dormitory at college, or must have a temperament which is thoroughly weatherproof. One rule for you who would win the affection of those with whom you are brought into contact is to begin by liking them; having a friendly attitude toward them, and making an effort to understand their point of view.

We Mean Well, But -

It sounds easy enough! Most of us mean to be friendly, kind and polite. It does not seem possible that we could walk roughshod over the sensibilities of others, and never have even an inkling that we have been anything less than charming! And yet, how many of us can get through our discussions with people at business meetings, club meetings, class reunions even a family reunion - without tramping on sensibility? If we were driving an automobile and the gears wouldn't mesh, we'd know they weren't working. Yet we hurt someone's pride, or feelings or rights, and never know it!

And that brings us to that contradictory word "sensitiveness." One with her fellow workers in the office, may find that in time the disadvantage which was hers, and the advantage which was another's may have changed places. Her unpopularity may not be due to any lack in her character or any unlovableness, but simply to the fact that she did not know how to make a fair presentation of herself.

The most usual reason for initial unpopularity is shyness. Shyness takes on contradictory manifestations: It makes one girl shrink into herself, unable to talk, unable to take the first step forward, always having to wait until the other person has come toward her at least three-quarters of the way. Yet, in another, the same sense of inferiority, which produces shyness, camouflages itself behind flagrant boasting. Neither attitude makes a favorable first impression.

Both of these shy people, however, reap great advantage in being thrown into close contact with roommates, or fellow workers, who cannot help becoming aware of hitherto unrealized admirableness of character.

Don't Oversell Yourself

kind of sensitiveness foredooms failure. If our sensitiveness is focussed on our own feelings, and we use our perceptions merely to notice whether other people are appreciative of us, then the sooner we cure this sort of sensitiveness, the better. But if it makes us understand the point of view, and perceive the feelings, of others, then it is a quality of value.

There is no greater evidence of lack of talent for getting along with people, than a chronic habit of thinking about ourselves, and what others may be thinking about us. There is no surer way of making ourselves disliked, than by too consciously "standing on our dignity," or being afraid of being asked to do something which is not our own job! In other words, sensitiveness which, like a spotlight, throws its full beams inward upon ourselves, and leaves other people unseen in the darkness, is not the way to win the sympathetic understanding of others.

ON THE other hand a person, who becomes popular quickly, may be found to have oversold his or her wares purely by means of a charming smile, or a habit of saving an enthusiastic "yes!" When put to a real test, however, this readiness to be the devoted friend of all may, little by little, prove to be an incapacity for real friendship with any.

In the social world, a girl or a man may win instant popularity by traits which are no more than tricks; there is the trick of a brilliant smile, the trick of concentrated attention, even the trick of Madame Recamier, who habitually exclaimed to an arriving visitor, "At last!" and to a departing one, "So soon?"

Often, of course, these characteristics are not tricks, but spontaneous and genuine gestures and phrases.

If so, daily close association will reveal our real qualities. That is just the difference between making and keeping friends socially, and making and keeping the devotion and loyalty of roommates and daily fellow workers. Society requires only an attractive and pleasing personality: A girl may be amusing or sympathetic, or lovely to look at, or all three; or she may have a great talent which also attracts. But one who works with others barracks or in a tent with men of different backgrounds, tastes, and points of view. The situation is made somewhat easier than it otherwise would be, of course, because all are doing the same thing, in the same way, and all are trying to reach the same goal together!

All the same, living in such unavoidably close quarters, as in the Army barracks, requires ability to endure annoyances and to try not to resent them. At close quarters, all small annoyances become exaggerated. Noise-makers get on the nerves of nearly everybody. A person who incessantly hums or whistles the same tune, who practices on an instrument, who keeps a radio going, or even cracks his knuckles, or twirls a key ring, or slams the door every time he goes in or out, is likely to produce the effect of the drop-of-water torture!

The best advice in this kind and every kind of every human contact, is still that of the Golden Rule, with the additional requirement of being able to put yourself so completely in the place of another, as to see with his eyes, to feel as he feels, and then show him the same treatment you would want him to show you if you were in his place!

will be made of iron rather than aluminum. One motor-maker plans to reduce his car's content of zinc by fifty per cent and of nickel by eighty per cent.

The drug cabinet will be hit. Iodine from Chile may become scarce, so plans are being laid to extract it in large quantities from brines found in Michigan and California. Opium, base from which morphine and codeine are extracted, is an example of a product which we don't have and can't produce on short notice. Hence we are relying on a stock supply.

Supplies In Vaults

THE subtreasury vaults in New York - once filled with the gold now buried at Fort Knox - contain a three years' supply of this drug. We also have a two-year stock pile of cocaine, grown on plantations in Java. In case of a dangerous shortage here we could turn to native plants in Chile and Peru.

Quinine may be a troublemaker. Necessary to protect four and a half million Americans who have malaria parasites in their blood, this drug is scarce and may become scarcer. Malaria, bottled up south of the Ohio River, may once again spread to all states east of the Rockies. Today's stock pile - from Java - will carry us about three years. Meanwhile, several groups of research men are seeking substitutes to add to the two already on hand. By a curious coincidence, one group - at the National Institute of Health in Washington - began the search for synthetics the day war started, September 1, 1939.

It is used by the ton as a stiffening agent for felt hats, as a binder for phonograph records and as a covering for the windings of electric motors. General Electric chemists working on this problem produced a synthetic substitute.

Company engineers also discovered that they could replace aluminum rotors on washing-machine motors with ones made of plastics. Plastics, likewise, figured in a hundred other situations - with the result that the company's plastic plants are working twentyfour hours a day. The company started quarrying mica formerly from British India - in New Hampshire; and mining tungsten (for lamp filaments) in Idaho.

Making a New World

WITH the country's heroic effort to rearm in the shortest possible time, we are all going to have ringside seats to see a new world in the making. It is going to be filled with oddities. Without thinking too much about it, we may find ourselves wearing shoes with plastic soles, and clothes made of completely new synthetic fabrics.

We'll see plywood substituted for sheet metal, and glass come into its own as a building material. Call it a substitute world, if you will. But if that word has no appeal, look at the situation in another light. Pressed by necessity we are turning to new materials. In many cases they will be better than the ones we have always known. In any case they represent a change.

And a change can be refreshing. The End

Duet

THE late Admiral Dewey had a favorite parrot story concerning an elderly relative whose bird embarrassed the family by continually repeating, "I wish the old lady would die!" Thinking to teach the bird manners by example, they sent him to visit the parrot of a local minister. Returning a few days later to get him, they were greeted with this duet: Dewey parrot: "I wish the old lady would die!" Minister's parrot: "Lord, hear our prayer."

M. New York City

He Spoke Their Language

LOUIS AGASSIZ FUERTES, who was famous for his paintings of birds, could talk their language skillfully enough to deceive the wisest of them. One day, as he entered the Parrot Hall of the Bird House at the Bronx Zoo in New York, the drowsy complacency of the birds challenged him, and he uttered the parrot cry of terror. As the screech rang out, every bird in the place tumbled from its perch in shocked dismay.

South Glastonbury, Conn.

One On the House

A YOUNG man who was about to be married owned a talking crow, and when his prospective mother-in-law visited him, he proudly showed off the bird. "Blackie says anything he has heard repeated often enough," he told the lady, who was a teetotaler and a member of the W.C.T.U. Just then the crow fixed his eye on the woman and inquired in a raucous voice, "Have a drink on the house?" (P.S. — He married the girl anyway.)

> Herb Gold Lakewood, Ohio

A Mouthful

WHEN he was fourteen years old, a friend of mine was given a parrot by his uncle. One of the bird's milder phrases was, "You said a mouthful." Studying at home one night, the boy ran into an algebra problem that stumped him. After an hour's efforts, he suddenly saw the answer and, surprised at his own dullness, exclaimed, "Am I a dunce!" Guess what the parrot said!

Ladies' Aid

My MOTHER had a parrot with the knack of saying the right thing at the right time. One afternoon the Ladies Missionary Society was meeting at our home, and there was a lively discussion about where the organization's funds should be banked. The argument became hotter and hotter until, into the midst of it all, Polly shouted, "Let us pray!"

Mrs. Max Parker Gibson, Tenn.

THEY TALKED BACK

Some surprising true stories about parrots

Some time ago THIS WEEK Magazine printed two good parrol stories and asked its readers if they knew any more good yarns about old parrot, to which we addressed the customary silly greetings: "Hello, Polly. Nice old Polly. Pretty Polly." Whereupon the bird ruffled her feathers, fixed beady eyes upon us with the haughty stare of a grande dame, and calmly said: "I am the Blue Funnel parrot. Who in hell are you?"

told us to go on, and to be more careful. Polly had saved two Arkansas travelers from a ticket.

talking birds. Little did we realize how many articulate feathered creatures exist, or how apt their remarks can be. But we found out. Scarcely had the issue been published when the flood set in. More than 2,000 replies were received.

On this page we print a few of the best of these stories. We are sorry that we cannot use more. But we want our readers to know that we appreciate all of them. Thanks for the bird words. — THE EDITOR

Getting There First

EVERY visitor to our home was attracted to our colorful parrot, and always wanted to know if she could talk. One day a new neighbor was in. She walked over to the bird's cage and seemed about to ask the usual question, when Polly, glaring at her with disdainful eye. demanded, "Can she talk?"

Grande Dame

CAPTAIN CLARK, of the Blue Funnel Line steamer Patroclus, loved to invite afterdinner guests to his cabin for coffee and liqueur. Always, when the group reached the door, he would find some excuse to send them in alone, saying, "I'll join you in a jiffy." I once was a victim of his joke. As the group of us entered the cabin, we found a serious Helen W. Bromfield San Francisco, California

Travelers' Aid

DRIVING from our home in Massachusetts to the Mexican border last fall, my wife and I took our yellow-head Mexican parrot, George Archer, along in the station wagon. At Little Rock, Arkansas, my wife inadvertently drove through a red light. We were immediately greeted by the familiar whistle as the traffic cop directed us to the curb. He stalked over, ready to give the usual tirade. But before he could get started, from the rear of the car came the words, "Well, what's the matter, eh?" The cop glared wrathfully toward the rear seat — and observed George Archer. He couldn't help laughing — and when a traffic cop loses his dignity, it's all over. He

Fooled

THE first parrot I ever saw belonged to my uncle, who lived in a small Siberian town. The bird had been given to him by a banished revolutionist, and its favorite expression was "Durack mujick!" which means, roughly, "You are a fool, peasant!" Once a villager called at our house on business. He had never met my uncle before, and had no idea at all about parrots. Ushered into the reception room, he sat down to wait. Across from him was the big yellow bird, which eyed him fiercely and then exclaimed, "Durack mujick!" Amazed, the peasant leaped to his feet and cried, "Excuse me, sir — I did not know you were a bird!"

All Right — But!

MY AUNT owned a parrot named Cora, whose favorite perch was on a trellis in the front yard. One day my aunt was sitting on the porch while two workmen were digging in front of the house. Finally, one said to the other, "I'll go down in the hole, and when I say 'All right,' you turn on the water." In a few moments the words "All right!" rang out;

Off Key!

THE late Ignace Paderewski once owned a parrot with very marked preferences in music. Soft, rhythmic passages delighted the bird; he would half-close his eyes and intone, "Bee-yootiful! So bee-yootiful!" Sometimes the great pianist would tease his sensitive listener by switching to some powerful Liszt composition with crashing chords. Polly would ruffle his feathers angrily and rush up and down in a fury, screeching, "Go to hell!" Cora Warburton Hussa

Envoy Extraordinary

ANTONIO was from Rio — we brought him along when my father came to Washington as Brazil's representative. He was a talkative bird, and often made his phrases fit the occasion. At one time Father was dressing to attend a diplomatic reception at the White House. He had donned his gold-embroidered green coat and walked over to a mirror beside Antonio's cage to put on his ostrichplumed hat. As he did so, the bird cocked his head on one side and in a shrill voice cried out, "Oh — another parrot!"

phone, there was no friendly buzzing. Out of order! She dropped on the couch and burst into tears of nervousness and frustration.

After a few moments Corinne lifted her head, and a glance at the clock showed her that it was nearly fivethirty. She couldn't muff the first big chance that had come Ted's way! She wiped her eyes and ran panting down the drive to where the Swinton was sitting, heavy and complacent, at the entrance to the road. She slipped in the clutch and pressed the starter.

The engine leapt into life. Corinne cussed it silently and turned its nose toward town, five miles away.

When she pulled up in front of the Dornley Agency, she was all set for a bitter commentary on people who do not keep their promises, but the salesman got there first.

"I'm awfully sorry, Mrs. Norworth," he apologised, "but they had already promised the two-door sedan to another customer — forgot to tell me. We're away behind on delivery because of the government's defense program. It may be thirty days before we can deliver you a two-door sedan. I tried to call you, but your phone was out of order."

"Thirty days!" Corinne gasped. "Why — why, I simply must have it tonight — or never!"

The salesman was apologetic but firm.

She finally left him and turned frantically into Maih Street. There were just ten minutes to train time. No time to go for Milly. She'd have to handle things herself.

When she brought the car to a stop in front of the one and only market, she found it closed! "During the summer, this store closes at 6 o'clock." She could have shrieked. Instead she drove to the station her blue eyes swimming with tears of rage.

No meat! No Milly! No whipped cream! The hoarse hoot of the train whistle in Dingman's Cut reminded her that she must be a sight. She dived for the dressing room and made hurried repairs. By the time the train pulled to a wheezing stop she was back in the car trying to give an improvised version of the demure little wife meeting her husband and his important guest at the 6.15.

Important or not — he'd eat corned beef hash and like it — even if poor Ted's entire future was incorporated in the hash!

MR. WARREN COCKRELL was not the tycoon type. True, he was large in the sense that a Saint Bernard is large. But he was not at all florid. His color was not even ruddy. In fact it was almost indecently healthy-looking. His dark eyes were shrewd and wary.

At Ted's introduction he did not say: "So this is the little woman I've been hearing so much about?" He merely held out his hand and said: "Good evening, Mrs. Norworth," and she replied, inanely: "How d'you do, Mr. Cockrell."

She moved to the center of the car seat and opened the far door for him. He looked the Swinton up and down — mostly down — and said: "I'll

T<sub>HEY</sub> drove the rest of the way in silence.

As she ran up the steps she saw Mr. Cockrell get out of the rumble and stand looking at the little house critically. She heard Ted escort him upstairs as she yanked her apron from its hook behind the door.

The onions added to her tears of mortification. The heat of the frying pan seared her soul. She was making hard sauce for the apple crunch in lieu of whipped cream when Ted came in to get ice for the Martinis.

"Just act as if nothing's happened," he said as he measured the gin and the vermouth. "I'm not so sure about the job, anyway. He's considering two other men."

"And this will finish us! All because you refused to get rid of that — old crate!"

He stirred the mixture in the shaker and poured it into three glasses. "Take your apron off and wipe your nose," he said.

She dabbed her face with powder and followed him into the living room.

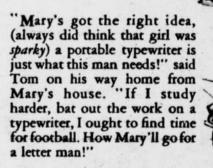

"I remember you ordered your Martini dry at lunch, sir," Ted said to their guest.

"I'm sick and tired of writing everything out in longhand, besides, I make such a mess of it!" exclaimed Mary to her father a week before school opening. "This year, I want a portable typewriter like our Class President's. That's how the frill gets things done, finds time to run the show, star in dramatics and still get all A's and B's."

Mary's father bought a Corona . . . a Speedline Silent Corona with Floating Shift and many other exclusive typing aids. There are 3 Speedline models: Silent-$69.50, Sterling-$59.50, Standard-$54.50.*

THURSDAY-NIGHT SPECIALS

Here are some of Merle Oberon's pet recipes

by Grace Turner

"T'WE ALWAYS kept house," Merle Oberon says, "for I was never one to live in hotels. When I was only twenty and very poor, I took a little flat in London and even did my own cooking. I had my first Hollywood house in 1936, and then I bought a house in London, and about a yearand-a-half ago I bought the Hollywood house we now live in. And I think I run it not badly."

One sure proof that Miss Oberon is good at this housekeeping business is the verdict of "Mother Selznick," as old Mrs. Selznick is called by everyone in Hollywood, where she keeps a veteran eye on the whole colony. She comes to visit and goes mooching around, as Merle affectionately puts it, in the nooks and corners of the little English-style house Merle has out there, and when she has seen everything, she announces approvingly: "Now I know you are a good housekeeper." And that is high praise from this matriarch of the motion picture city.

Since her marriage to the famous producer, Alexander Korda, Merle Oberon has been ambitious to learn to cook some of their favorite dishes. Not that she has much time to spend in the kitchen, but she wants to prepare meals for herself and her husband on Thursdays, when the servants are off, and the two of them eat cozily at a small table set at one end of the big dining room. They are both mad about tiny, tender hamburgers, made by a special recipe which she gave us - the diminutive star admits that she can eat about a dozen all by herself. Another Thursday-night specialty are cheese blintzes, a rather complicated but not difficult delicacy, far superior to crepes Suzette, in the Oberon-Korda opinion.

Hard-working and deeply in love, both of them, Miss Oberon and Mr. Korda prize the times when they are alone in their house with its Eighteenth-Century furniture, brought over to this country from his house and her house in London. But they are also hospitable people and do a great deal of entertaining. Some of it is obligatory for business reasons, of course, but mostly it is a matter of sheer friendliness, as with one of this past summer's most successful parties.

Charlie Holds the Floor

"THAT party began at dinner time," Miss Oberon says, "and didn't break up until morning, because Charlie Chaplin held the floor hilariously for hours with exploits from his early slap-stick days in the movies. Among other people, we had invited Mrs. Fairbanks, senior, and Mr. and Mrs. William Powell, and Lady Queensberry, the portrait painter who works under the name of Kathleen Mann.

You can eat a dozen hamburgers like these with clear essence of chicken soup. The fish course was a filet of sole, cooked in white wine with tiny white grapes, and served with cucumbers done by a "Mother Selznick" recipe. You cut them in oblong strips, about half the length of the cucumber and fairly thick. Then they are mixed with a dressing made of mayonnaise and piccalilli, quite tart and very delicious. For the meat we had roast duck with wild rice and hot apple sauce, and with it a platter of vegetables: cauliflower, pureed peas and pureed carrots. The dessert was only partly made at home, for we bought the large meringue shell. For the filling we used fresh peaches, sweetened and soaked in brandy for a couple of hours and then mixed with sweetened whipped cream."

That was the last party before Miss Oberon left for a visit to New York and Canada after she had finished her last picture "Lydia." She seems a serious-minded person these days, and says that she has been feeling useless since the War began, and she has to be coared to buy even a hat, though inother years New York's milliners and modistes and jewelers would have been turning her hotel rooms into a mart of rare and beautiful things, for she loves clothes and jewels. But she does not want to spend money now: she wants to give it away to various war activities on behalf of American and English soldiers and sailors.

Invited To Canada

"I HAVE been on the radio night

ican broadcast, and that's wonderful money. I still keep feeling that I ought to be in England, but I know that I could not be nearly as useful over there. And this way I've at least found something I can do to help. My husband, however, is going back as soon as he has finished the picture he has been making of Kipling's Jungle Books - but I will stay here and earn what I can for the cause.

"Today," she goes on, "I had lunch with the committee of the U.S.O. that has organized a house on Park Avenue for the use of men in the Service. The house was given by the Vanderbilt family and I was offered an opportunity to furnish it. It will be a place for the men to lounge in, if they have to wait around New York; and there will be free theater tickets for them -so many allotted to each camp; and arrangements will be made for them to meet nice girls. I think that will be possible, don't you? There must be lots of girls in a city like this who don't have much opportunity to meet boys, and would like to get to know some nice ones in a safe way."

Cheese Blintzes

11/2 cups sifted flour 1/2 teaspoon salt 11/2 cups milk (about) 2 eggs, slightly beaten 1 lb. strained cottage cheese 1 egg

1 tablespoon sugar

Mix and sift flour and salt. Combine milk and beaten eggs and add gradually to the flour mixture. Add more milk if necessary, as the batter should be almost as thin as evaporated milk. Strain to remove any lumps. Pour enough batter into a small, hot, greased frying pan to make a paperthin pancake which covers the bottom of the frying pan. As soon as the pancake starts to recede from the sides of the pan, remove it to a plate. Stack pancakes on the plate as they are finished (the first one or two may not be successful, but use them as a base to pile the others on, to prevent the good ones from sticking to the plate). Combine cottage cheese, unbeaten egg and sugar. Put spoonful of mixture on each pancake and fold over; press edges together. Chill until ready to cook. Fry in hot, shallow fat 11/2 inches deep until well-browned. Drain on unglazed paper. Serve at once, with sour cream and strawberry jam. Approximate yield: 24 blintzes.

Hamburger Patties Oberon

- 3 slices stale bread, without crusts
- 1 cup milk (about)
- 1 lb. lean top round of beef,
- ground 1 small Spanish onion, minced
- Salt and pepper
- 11/2 tablespoons melted butter

Soak bread in milk about 15 minutes; stir until no lumps remain; add to meat with onion, salt, pepper and butter (Add more milk if necessary to make mixture very soft). Form into tiny, thin patties. Broil 5 minutes in

THEIR NAMES BECAME LANGUAGE

ONE day in November, 1739, a squadron of six English ships lay off Porto Bello, not far from what is now the Panama Canal. Up and down the quarter-deck of the flagship Burford paced Vice-Admiral Edward Vernon, enveloped in his heavy cloak of grogram (the name once used to describe a rough-surfaced cloth of silk and wool).

Soon Vernon gave the order to attack and in a furious two-day engagement he captured the Spanish port, two Spanish battleships and a treasure in munitions - an accomplishment that went far toward breaking up Spain's power in the Caribbean.

Ironically, Vernon is remembered today less for his naval victories than for his grogram cloak. The viceadmiral regularly served his crew with a mixture of rum and water, and the tars, who had nicknamed their commander "Old Grog," after his well-known cloak, were quick to trans-

A CERTAIN Civil War general, commander of the Army of the Potomac, was a prominent national figure most of his life. After the war he became governor of Rhode Island and later was twice elected to the U.S. Senate. But despite his great achievements, he is remembered today chiefly for the magnificent whiskers that grew down the sides of his face.

The monument in our language to General A. E. Burnside will probably outlast any other that may have been erected to him. For every time we speak of "sideburns" we are paying our respects to the man whose hairy adornments lingered longer in the memory of the nation than his military and public accomplishments.

THE Flemish trader and the French diplomat who bargained so vigorously over a handful of seeds almost four centuries ago did not know they were helping to make language. The seeds, which had just come to Europe from that strange new land across the Atlantic, were of more interest to many than all the gold and treasure that America was reputed to contain.

Bizarre rumors circulated about these exotic tobacco seeds. One said they possessed miraculous healing powers. The ambassador was eager to purchase them - sure he could impress Queen Catherine de 'Medici with them (for his intention was to send them to her).

Ambassador Jean Nicot was only one man among the many who helped popularize smoking in Europe. But it was his name that stuck when it came to finding a word for the active principle of tobacco -- "nicotine." -NORMAN LEWIS

LITTLE STREETS OF LONDON by James Hilton

The great streets of Europe Have names that history brings Of victories and battles, Heroes, wars and kings (Sieges Allee, Rue Royale, The Viennese Rings) But the little streets of London Are named for simpler things. Pudding Lane, Poultry, Fish Street Hill When the great have fallen, let these be there still.

The capitals of Europe Have many a splendid street Named after queens and consorts And all the high élite (Wilhelmstrasse, Quai d'Orsai, Avenue de la Reine Marguérite) — But the little lanes of London Are named for things to eat. Bread Street, Milk Street, Mincing Lane. Whate'er befall the great, let these remain.

The great streets of Europe Are like a world's Who's Who — Soldier, Dictator, Statesman, · Prince and Parvenu, With all their high-flown titles Plastered on Platz or rue, But the little streets of London Give other things their due. Love Lane, Air Street, Paternoster Row — Things that will stay after all the others go.

civilized," Mr. Cockrell replied. He sipped his drink. "What model is your Swinton, Norworth?" he asked out of a clear sky.

Corinne closed her eyes. "Why late '29," she heard Ted say. "How is it on gas?"

"Well — better than ten miles on long trips. But there's no depreciation any more, and it was in dead She'd call his bluff, load his plate to the gunwales.

He never batted an eye as she put it down before him. Just went to work and called her bluff. His plate was empty when she took it away and brought on the dessert.

When she poured the coffee, he said: "Brown Betty with black walnuts. I'll have to remember that." but fainted. She had forgotten the fifty-cent cigars in the excitement! "They're Black Label," he was saying to Ted. "Anything more than ten cents for a cigar is paying for advertising overhead. I get these fresh from the factory every week. I like 'em a little green."

WHEN they had risen Corinne said to Ted: "Perhaps Mr. Cockrell would like to go into your studio and talk while I clear the table."

"On the contrary, Mrs. Norworth," their guest replied, "what I have to say concerns you as much as your husband. We'll smoke in the living room until you're free to join us."

She cleared the table with trembling hands. She knew what was coming. He was going to let them down easy probably with a small increase in salary as a sop. While she poured the liqueur, she downed a hooker to deaden the pain, then carried the tray into the living room and offered it to Mr. Cockrell. He shook his head.

"I prefer not to spoil an excellent dinner with a sweet drink — if you don't mind."

She put the tray down and took a chair.

"You've been married a little over a year?" he said looking at the two of them.

"Yes," said Ted.

"You worked on the assembly line less than two years before you were taken into the New York office?"

"Yes, sir, but I learned a lot —" Mr. Cockrell held up his hand. "I've gone into your record thoroughly. You realize, of course, that Sanderson has had over four years in assembly and that Lingle is older than you by five years, with two years at Home Office."

Corinne's eyes narrowed. So he was working up an alibi on office politics.

Ted said: "I took a chance and wrote that letter. I know that you'd have to jump me over the heads of older men, Mr. Cockrell. I know it might be bad for discipline."

"That's what I'm coming to. Frankly, I liked your letter. It showed initiative — salesmanship. My first impression was favorable. But in a business such as ours one cannot afford to rely on first impressions."

"No, of course not, Mr. Cockrell," said Ted.

Corinne could have wept for him.

"As I said, I went into your case thoroughly. Your record is good excellent in fact. So is Sanderson's. Lingle has the advantage of fifteen years with us against your eight." He paused. "I visited them both at their homes as I am now visiting you. It is understood that anything I tell you tonight is in strictest confidence?" "Of course, Mr. Cockrell."

"And that my motive for telling you is that you and your wife may profit by it — that I'm more than interested in you both."

"There are many things I like about you two. You didn't - like Sanderson - try to impress me with expensive liquor and fifty-cent cigars; nor like Lingle take me to the most expensive night club in town. You gave me a simple, well-cooked meal, served without ostentation or the help of a servant. That's the sort of people I like to have working for me." He paused. "When important promotions are coming up, I always make it a point to visit the men under consideration at their homes. If they show imagination and prudence in running their own affairs, I know that they'll be good for mine. Sanderson and Lingle are both good men, but Sanderson lives beyond his means and Lingle has trouble at home that will result sooner or later in a divorce. "I'm not opposed to divorce, but a man going through the divorce mill is not a good bet for a responsible position. Neither is a man who has not learned to live within his income. Certainly not with all of our resources being geared to our country's defense. "Sanderson and Lingle both sat down and waited for my choice to fall. You, Norworth, had imagination and initiative enough to write me a letter - to take a chance on my having imagination and initiative enough to look into your case. You get the job." The silence that followed was broken by what sounded suspiciously like a sob from Corinne's lips. Mr. Cockrell looked up. His dark, wary eyes showed surprise.

"I'm a garrulous old fool," he said. "I shouldn't have kept you on tenterhooks. Guess I've forgotten how much a promotion can mean to a couple of kids."

"It does mean just about everything," Corinne admitted.

Mr. Cockrell glanced at his watch. "Since the hash is all gone, suppose you take me to the station, Norworth. We can just make the 9.10 if you step on the gas. You're coming with us, aren't you?" he asked Corinne expectantly.

His dark eyes twinkled.

"You might want to go for a ride afterwards," he said. "I seem to remember that I took Mrs. Cockrell for a long ride the time I got my first important promotion. It was a twocylinder, chain drive, late 1902 model. We were still driving it when Wilson was elected in 1912. They put stuff in those old cars." He smiled. "I like a man who appreciates a good car and takes care of it. Especially in these days when our country needs priority. I suppose that sounds funny coming from a man who makes his living out of manufacturing accessories, but that's the way I feel about it. Shall we go?"

When he waved goodby to them from the elevated train platform, Ted asked Corinne:

"Where to, Sweetheart?"

"Home — to the garden and eat worms."

storage for over two years waiting for my father's estate to be settled, so you might call it a late '31 — I mean as far as actual wear and tear is concerned."

"I see," said Mr. Cockrell. There was a calculating gleam in his dark, wary eyes.

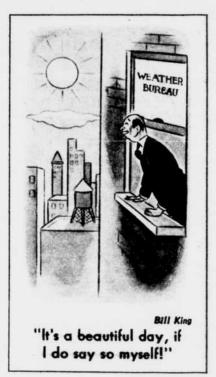

Corinne gulped down the remainder of her Martini and fled. "You'll excuse me," she gasped. "I have to go back to the kitchen."

While she divided her time between the kitchen and the setting of the dining room table, she felt Mr. Cockrell's dark eyes following her appraisingly. By the time she had the food on the table and they were seated, she could have thrown the hash at him.

Out of the tail of her eye she watched their guest furtively as he ate, and he and Ted discussed assembly lines. Mr. Cockrell's face was noncommittal but his dark eyes were getting more and more thoughtful. When she saw that his plate was empty, she asked a little maliciously: "Won't you have a second helping, Mr. Cockrell?"

"Why, yes — I will," he replied. "I don't get corned beef hash very often at home. This is very superior hash." She stumbled off with both their plates — staggering as from a blow. "It's called apple crunch. Would you like the recipe?"

"I shall insist on it," he replied, hauling out his cigar case, passing it across the table to Ted. Corinne all ther's death you've been the one man I looked up to. I can't stand here and watch you boot this chance. That plate -

"Softly, lad," the old man warned, but his look was less severe. "Did ye test?"

"I did, and cast iron's a cinch to blow out at maximum pressure. You're lucky it hasn't let go already." Lorna put her hand on her father's arm. "Please, Daddy!"

He looked from one face to the other. At last he shrugged and walked over to Kerman. "I want to make an adjustment on the supercharger," he said.

"Go ahead, but hurry it up."

THE old man gave the chrome plate to one of the mechanics and told him what to do. When the change had been made, he came back to Lorna and Jerry. He had the cast-iron strip in his hand, and he held it out to Lorna. She studied it closely. "Look !" she said, pointing to a hairline crack that ran from one corner to the other. Her father nodded. "I saw that." he said. "It's good I have friends."

Wilson, meanwhile, had got back into the car and the big machine started up the track. It picked up speed on the near turn, and by the time it swung out of the back stretch, the engine was singing with the whine they had heard earlier. Coming onto the straightaway, the car shot past in a silver blur, and Kerman glanced at the reading on the automatic timer. "Ninety already."

"She's got more," said Jerry.

The sound of the motor kept rising, until it was like a monstrous drill. Each time the car slanted down out of the far curve, the whine grew sharper. It was a brutal test, but Kerman seemed to enjoy it. The big man was muttering aloud.

"Ninety-five, and still going up-Gad, she's rolling - Twist her tail, Wilson - Give her the works -Ninety-eight - Watch those turns,

THIS WEEK MAGAZINE

The car blazed around the track five times more before Kerman sent out the checkered flag. Then, as the roar of the big engine dwindled, he turned and grasped Macintosh's hand. "It's a beauty, Dave! Best thing you've ever given us!"

The old man tried to answer, but he could only shake his head. Lorna threw her arms around him, and the laboratory staff shouted their congratulations-all, that is, except Sorrett, who had slipped away quietly during the last lap of the trial.

Kerman's voice rose above the clamor. "I've some news for all of you. Yesterday afternoon the Board of Directors accepted my recommendation that on the successful completion of these tests Dave Macintosh be appointed Vice-President in Charge of Technical Development. It's a promotion I'm very happy about, since Dave has been largely responsible for the position our company holds today." He paused, glancing at Jerry. "Dave's successor as Chief Research Engineer will be Blake. I congratulate you both."

JERRY's head spun as he tried to find the right answers to the good wishes that were showered on him. When it was all over and he had shaken the last hand, he saw Lorna standing off at the side, smiling.

"It's absolutely swell, Jerry, and you deserve it," she said. "Will you come over to the car with me? There's something I want to show you."

"Why, sure," he answered, wondering at her odd expression.

When they got to the car, she took a folded sheet of paper out of her bag and opened it. "I found this in daddy's study the night after you were there," she explained. "It was on the floor, mixed up with some drawings he had thrown away."

Jerry looked at the paper and felt his ears begin to redden. In neat lettering across the middle of the page stood the title: "SUPERCHARGED FUEL-FEED ASSEMBLY FOR ENGINE TYPE X-41, designed by J. Blake." He must have lost the sheet when he dropped his stuff that night.

"Your father hasn't seen this, has he?"

"No, and I won't show it to him. But Jerry - how does anybody learn to do things as nice as that?" He looked at her. "If it was nice, as you call it," he said quietly, "it must have come from knowing you." He realized his ears were beyond scarlet by this time, but it didn't make much difference. "Listen," he said, "if you're not busy tonight, could I come around?"

"I'd love it," she answered.

"And do you think your father and mother might go to the movies?"

"I'm sure they will," she said. "I arranged it this morning."

now." Returning from the phone booth, the tall fellow was grinning. "The dog all better now. No have rabies. Somet'ing he have eat, the veterinario say."

Elizabeth passed a hand over her forehead. The reaction had left her limp. Rags was all right. Everything was all right. Everything had been all right-except that she'd gone off the handle and ruined two hard years of working Fred Melton up to the point where he might ask her to marry him. This trip was, she knew, a test run - a shakedown cruise, so to speak, on which Papa and Mama Melton would base their decision. And she'd gone to pieces.

"Mister," she said, "is there a place in this town where a girl can forget her troubles for just a little while?"

"You wish - w'at you call him go to hell?" The tall stranger made a deep bow. "Senorita, for that purpose, than Arturo Rojas there is no better guide in all of Mexico!"

"Arturo? Okay, Art. And you can call me Liz.' "That's what Bill had called her, back when it was no disgrace to be silly. Back? - not too far back. The past had reached to now, and it would last this night. Tomorrow I'll crawl on hands and knees to Papa and Mama Melton, and I'll never, never, never be silly again. But give me tonight for strength. I want to remember just one more time. She didn't know Arturo Rojas from Adam's ox, and it was mad to pick up with him; but that's why she liked it. Just for tonight. The tropic warmth and scent was in the air as they went out. Cars and people moving, living, laughing. It was fun being silly again.

"For the start," Arturo was saying, "across the street is one small - w'at you call him - joint."

Then as she stepped from the curb he jerked her quickly back to safety as a taxi zoomed from nowhere, the fender brushing the hem of her dress. "Where d'you think you're going, you dumb fathead!" Arturo yelled at the driver, his accent gone. He held Liz close, protectingly. "Did that chump hurt you? Are you okay, Liz?"

She looked slyly sidewise up at his face. "T'ank you, Señor Rojas. You 'ave the ver' brave - w'at you call heem - heart."

The tall young man returned the grin, a bit sheepishly, and an eyelid dropped over a gray eye in an American wink. "Art Jones of Los Angeles," he said. "Keep it dark."

THEY had cabrito in a tiny tiled courtvard while the fat innkeeper and his wife hovered over them as if life depended on the verdict of each mouthful. They danced to subtle Latin rhythms in places tourists never find. A turn of a dark street brought them to a street fair, where flares lighted up the big tents, the side shows, the concession stands. They saw a puppet show and Liz laughed

Art Jones chuckled. "That's just the way Dad said it. He wants me to come home and go to work. Now, don't read me a lecture, Liz. You were silly once, yourself."

As THEY returned to the hotel, Liz sighed. "I needed this night, and thanks, Art Jones. I was like an overtrained prizefighter. But I've broken training for a night, and now I'm in shape for the fight."

"Atta girl, Liz. And good luck." She knew he was going to kiss her good night, and she wanted to kiss Art Jones and all the silly things of life goodby.

"Elizabeth!"

The sleepy clerk started, his head appearing above the edge of the dimly lighted desk. Fred Melton was coming from among the furnishings shoved

"They're getting things ready. I left them in Morelia. Of course there's a million things to do. We want things right."

"Yes, of course." She pushed away the memory of marrying Bill before a justice of the peace. "We want things right."

"They're arranging for one of the old churches. I never saw Papa so happy. He likes people with spunk independence and initiative. That is," he added, smiling, "after he cools off He says you'll make a good Melton."

"That ought to make it official," she said. Then she laughed, to make it a joke. She felt like laughing, anyhow. Of course it was all so simple, once you saw it. Fred had been dominated until he required domination. Her rebellion had been the one thing to bring him to her feet.

"Or, maybe," Fred said, timid about suggesting such a drastic step, "we might drive all night and get there by morning. It would be fun,

All she had to do was utter the word "Yes," or merely nod her head. Security and wealth were to be had with a gesture.

Then she heard Rags. Arturo Rojas was coming from the dim rear with the clerk. carrying under his arm the dirty mop of the dog. Rags had seen her, and was whining eagerly. Arturo's teeth flashed. "The Senorita she say she no want the dog no more," he explained to Fred. 'She say it is the silly thing, to bring the dog to Mexico. And she is not silly no more." And with a bow he went out.

"Odd chap," Fred said. "Well, perhaps you're too tired to make the drive tonight -Elizabeth !" he cried. "Elizabeth!"

But she was running like the wind. "Art! Art!" she called.

The tall figure turned in the night street. "The Senorita desires to keep the little dog, after all?" A shrug. "But it is bad to remember silly things."

George Greet

"No; I don't want Rags - I mean, I do want him, but I - I want more." It had been only a short run, but she was breathing hard, and it was difficult to speak. "Art Jones of Los Angeles, I-I want to be silly. I guess I'm just the foolish type." And she looked up at his face anxiously.

He shook his head slowly. "No; you don't have to be a fool all your life, Elizabeth. Remember was with Bill? All fun but no silk stockings."

"Hello, Fred." He was so solid and strong and good and practical. "Fred, this is Arturo Rojas, a guide. He's been showing me the city.

"Hello - Have you paid him?" "Si, Senor, handsomely," Arturo said with a bow. "You wish for me tomorrow? No? Then adios."

"Goodby," Elizabeth said, and the past slid away. "Goodby, Art --Arturo." And she turned resolutely to Fred.

"I suppose that's right; I hadn't thought of it that way."

"You're sensible, Elizabeth."

She vaguely disliked this label. The Meltons placed great store on being sensible.

"Not to be curious, Art Jones, but just why are you passing for a Mexican?"

He grinned. "Well, I could be a spy, or I could be a fugitive from justice. But my motive is pretty prosaic. I pass as a Mexican so I can hold down my job. I'm a licensed guide. No future in it, but I meet some funny people and one day I'm going to write a book about 'em. Being a Mexican saves a lot of trouble if you try to work down here. My dad found that out. He worked for an oil company in Tampico, before the fuss. I don't have any trouble passing. Rojas was my mother's name. She was Spanish."

"Books don't make money," Liz said, irritated. Why was it that impractical men were the ones who attracted her?

"Married?" This was what she'd worked for. "But - what about Papa and Mama?"

"Okay, Liz." Setting the dog down, he took her in his arms with grave possession.

Fred had come out of the hotel. For a long moment he looked at the couple in the night street, and then he turned back inside.

"If that's the way you feel," Art Jones was saying, "I guess I can hold out. But my dad is putting on the heat to have me come home and go to work."

"Well, if your family needs your help, Art-" Liz sighed. "We could go back for a little while."

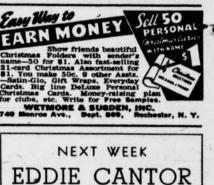

"Oh, Dad's eating three meals a day and all that. You see, he's a vice-president of the oil company. He's got a career mapped out for me."

"Oh. Well, now you listen to me, Art Jones! You've got that book to write, understand? And if we don't have anything else, we'll have a lot of fun.'

Frequently you will find that if you borrow enough to pay in full every cent you owe - including monthly instalment contracts - it will take less each month to repay the Bank than you are now paying out.

"Here's what I mean. Suppose, for example, this is your situation:

YOU OWE		000000	1.051	110010	100	SUPPOSED
$ 270.00 or	your automobile					$ 30.00
80.00 or	doctors' bills .					10.00
45.00 or	electric refrigerat	or				5.00
104.50 or	miscellaneous bil	ls			•	20.00
$ 499.50						$ 65.00

That's a total of $65 each month you are supposed to be paying on your obligations now.

"But if you made, for example, a 15 months' loan from the Morris Plan Bank to pay off the entire $499.50 which you owe, it would take only $36 a month to repay the Bank.

"In addition to cutting your monthly outlay almost in half, it also strengthens your credit standing in the community. Then, too, you'll like meeting your obligations in this businesslike way.

"This, of course, is just one of the many ways in which this Bank, specializing in serving Individuals, can help you."

The airport is Washington's most popular show place today. On the observation terrace outside the main waiting room, thousands of air-minded people gather daily to watch airliners come and go. More than 800,000 people have paid visits since the terminal was opened in June.

Air conditioning a la carte. Planes use their own air-conditioning systems in the air, but on the ground the job is done by means of a hose from an underground pit.

The control tower is a structure with walls of green, heat-resisting glass, placed at angles to prevent reflection by day or night. This glass also blanks out the actinic rays which cause sunburn.

On the field, the loading area is kept free from the clutter of trucks and surface vehicles. From small pits come starting battery cables, telephone lines and air-conditioning hose to service the ships. At present, fuel is pumped in from surface trucks, but fuel hose will be installed in the pits soon. The airport area totals about 750 acres, of which 450 acres is landing area. One of the four runways is more than a mile and a quarter long, and is equipped for instrument landing. A new visual "stop and go" system of lights on the ground indicates the runway to be used by outlining it in two rows of lights. A string of blue lights, seen only on the ground, leads the pilot in taxi-ing to his proper berth along the loading ramp. At each of the 12 loading stations is a 6-foot turntable on which the pilot pivots his plane to bring it into position.

HOW the automotive genius of America has turned its powers, potentially matchless, to the defense production of vehicles, weapons and aircraft, a vast supplement to the output of Government-owned munitions plants, is shown in these pictures as the tide of production rises to flood. Above is a view in the assembly plant of the General Motors diesel engine division at Detroit, showing two-cycle diesel engines being turned out for use in tanks, tractors and trucks. Defense contracts are being filled for the United States, Canada and England.

Smart Styles Easily Made

Filmdom's Dorothy Lovett presents a California style success in a classic shirtwaist dress with many charming qualities. It's easy fitting, with the amply full bodice and skirt which is pleated all across the front. It also has a smart highclosing neckline, simple neat collar, smartly shaped pockets and carefully detailed cuffs for the short sleeves. Pattern No. H-3021 is designed in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires, with short sleeves, 45's yards of 36inch material.

Here's a smart two-button combination for the price of one pattern—an all-purpose suit with a matching "boxy" topcoat. It's the kind of outfit you can wear all fall, straight through the winter, and the long-jacket suit will be handy again next spring. It's really easy to make, because both the suit and coat are entirely simple in line and detail. Perfect for monotone or mixed tweeds, for gabardine, or for heavy flannel. The suit pattern, No. 1424, is designed in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires  $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards of 54-inch fabric for jacket and skirt,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards of 35-inch material for lining jacket. The coat pattern, No. 1428, is designed for sizes 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42 (30 to 42 bust). Size 13 reequires  $2\frac{5}{8}$  yards of 54-inch material,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards of 36-inch material for lining.

PROCTER & GAMBLE . TRADEMARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

For youthful style this fall you can't go wrong with this casual two-piece frock, so attractive with its high-neck cardigan top carrying its two rows of patch packets, and the slim graceful skirt. Make it now in that beautiful smooth gabardine, in wool crepe, soft flannel or a homespun-type rayon. Send for Pattern No. H-3017, designed in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires  $3\frac{3}{8}$  yards of 54inch material or  $4\frac{1}{2}$  yards of 35-inch material for skirt and blouse with threequarter length sleeves.
