Submarines Fired At Kearny, Hitler Finally Admits

(Text of Hitler's statement on

By the Associated Press. BERLIN, Nov. 1 .- The German government formally declared today that the United States "attacked Germany" in incidents involving the American destroyers Greer and Kearny.

The official statement was issued from Adolf Hitler's headquarters to counter President Roosevelt's assertion that Germany had started the Kearny Attack Admitted. For the first time, it was admitted that German submarines fired torpedoes at the Kearny, which the Navy Department in Washington has announced was ripped open, but not sunk, with a loss of 11 lives and 10 injured on the night of October 16-17 southwest of Iceland.

Previously German spokesmen had sought to cast doubt on the Navy Department's announcement of the torpedoing of the Kearny, indicating their belief it was a trumped-up story to boost the President's Neutrality Act revisions through Congress.

(The Navy Department's version October 29 said the Kearny went to the aid of another convoy which was under attack and dropped depth bombs. Three torpedoes then were fired, the Navy said, and the third struck the

The Navy Department's account said the Greer, shot at by torpedoes but not hit on October 4, was informed of the sub-marine's position by a British plane which then dropped four depth charges in the U-boat's vicinity and flew away. While the destroyer was following the submarine, the latter turned and fired its torpedoes. Map and Document Assailed. Another statement, also released from Hitler's headquarters, assailed as "forgeries of the clumsiest, grossest type" the map and document referred to by President Roosevelt in his Navy Day speech.

"There exists neither a map prepared in Germany by the Reich's government regarding the dividing up of Central South America, nor a document pronounced by the Reich's government regarding the dissolution of the religions of the world," the statement declared.

Despite the strong wording of these statements, however, it was said by spokesmen that they did not intimate any change in relations with the United States.

No Mention of Reuben James. The statement made no mention of the United States destroyer Reuben-James, a third United States destroyer which the Navy Cut Off in Ethiopia Department has announced was sunk October 31 with only 44 of its 120 officers and men so far reported Authorized quarters, however, referred to President Roosevelt's statement yesterday that the incident had not changed United States-Germany relations, and said he was "suffering from an upset political stomach.

"It is noteworthy how cautious he has become," these quarters added. "Apparently he has the feeling that he bit off more in recent days than he could digest.

Price Bill Fixes Higher Food Top, Exempts Wages

TEN CENTS

House Committee Approves Measure By 18-to-5 Vote

BACKGROUND-

As a check to inflation, commodity price control bill was offered in House. Proposals were made for ceilings on wages and rents but met with little approval. Big question was what parity would be allowed farm prices. Parity, as term is used by Government, is a price which gives a farm product the same purchasing power, in terms of non-farm products, that it had during base period 1909-14. Thus it rises and falls with increases and decreases in prices of nonfarm products.

By the Associated Press. The House Banking Committee approved a commodity price control bill last night after refusing to include wages. It voted ceilings on farm commodities which Government experts said might increase food costs 20 per Chairman Steagall said the com-With the farm bloc in full control, the committee accepted the formula for farm price ceilings which would permit food prices to rise as much as 20 per cent above the 110 per cent of parity level contained in the administration's original bill.

The members struck out of the measure a system of licensing which sponsors had said was necessary to enforce any price control program. The committee met for more than seven hours yesterday before taking action on the bill

"Satisfactory Control."

Chairman Steagall, telling newspapermen of the decisions, said: "I don't think the bill as proposed or the one we adopted will control inflation completely, but I hope that it will provide a satisfactory control." But Representative Kean, Republican, of New Jersey called it "inept ineffectual." and Representative Monroney, Democrat, of Oklahoma declared it would give Leon Henderson, price administrator, right to regulate everything except inflation." Mr. Steagall proposed to control wages, offering an amendment which would have permitted wage or increases only when they would not they were necessary to maintain a worker's standard of living. This suggestion was turned down 16 to 7. By a vote of 12 to 11, the committee stipulated that farm price yet made for the administration's ceilings could not be set below the highest of these three levels: 110 per cent of parity, the average price from 1919 to 1929, the prevailing level last October 1

Average Higher Than Parity. Government farm experts said that if the 10-year average was the highest-and they said it would be meet at 11 a.m. tomorrow, an hour in the case of most commoditiesthe ceilings would be 20 per cent higher than under the provision in the original bill putting the ceiling at not less than 110 per cent

Farm experts said the House committee's formula would, for example, forbid a ceiling on raw sugar lower than 5.84 cents a pound This compares with the present ceiling of 3.5 cents imposed by Mr. Henderson.

Cruiser Cleveland Launched 7 Months Ahead of Schedule

Ship Leaves Ways so Quickly Mrs. Burton Almost Misses Naming

By the Associated Press. CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 1.-Another warship in the Nation's drive toward a two-ocean navy surpassed by none, the 10,000-ton cruiser Cleveland was launched today in a somber atmosphere under leaden skies.

Completed seven months ahead of schedule, the fast fighting ship is the first of a new class of 32 cruisers for which the Navy has contracted. With a light rain drenching a handful of spectators, Mrs. Selma Florence Smith Burton, wife of Senator Burton, former Mayor of Cleveland, Ohio, christened the vessel as she slid into the Delaware River at the New York Shipbuilding Corp.

The Navy's newest warship was hailed by Senator Burton as a symbol of America's preparedness with which "it is conceivable we may even win the war without fighting it."

Slid Away Quickly. There was a 42-minute delay in the launching, but when the ship started to slide down the ways she

Wickard to Speak in Forum

Secretary to Tell of Agriculture And Its Part in Defense

"Agriculture Will Do Its Part in Defense" will be the topic discussed by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard in the National Radio Forum at 9 p.m. tomorrow. The National Radio Forum is arranged by The Star and is broadcast over a network of the National Broadcasting Co., being heard here over Station WMAL.

Secretary Wickard, who succeeded Henry Wallace, now Vice President, in his cabinet post, has been guiding the country's farmers into co-operation with the new agricultural economy that the war has brought. Formerly, we had a prob-lem of too much. Now it is a problem of too little, as we provide food

Mr. Wickard will offer some solace for the city consumer of the country products, whose prices are rising. He intends to explain why the increase is justified, especially in view of the fact that food prices during past years have been exceptionally low. 50,000 Are Needed To Man 1,200 Ships In 1943 Program

Maritime Commission Selecting 1,000 Youths For Training Schools

By WILLIAM J. WHEATLEY. With 1,200 new ships scheduled to e commissioned for the American Merchant Marine by the end of 1943, Maritime Commission officials yesterday estimated that 10,000 new officers and 40,000 seamen will be needed within the next year. The commission is selecting 1,000 ouths through competitive examinations for induction during the next 12 months into its three cadet training schools in New York, San Francisco and New Orleans.

Commission officials have predicted that post-war trade will be so great that many of the new seamen will be kept on the merchant ships after the emergency if they desire. Graduates automatically receive commissions in the United States Naval Reserve, and while they are students they are exempt from selective service training.

Applications Pour In. While applications are said to be pouring into the commission's headquarters here, the requirements as to education and physical condition are rather strict-in fact it was said that they are as stringent as those for entrance into the United States Naval Academy, except in the upper age limit.

Applicants must be unmarried, citizens of the United States between the ages of 18 and 25. They must possess 16 units from an accredited school, eight of which may be elective and the others, mandatory, as follows: Three in English, one in algebra, one in plane geometry, two from any of the following: general science, biology, chemistry, physics or workshop subjects and one in a foreign language. However, an applicant for cadet engineer may substitute a mechanical art subject for a foreign language. It was pointed out that in the event that a ship on which a cadet is taking his training is taken over by the Navy he is appointed a midshipman in the Naval Reserve. More than 50 such cadets already are on active duty in that rating. For the first eight weeks in the service a cadet is sent to one of the three schools, where he becomes acquainted with the fundamentals of seamanship and learns merchant marine tradition by example from his instructors. He must, it was added, be more than an engineer or a navigator-he must be an expert in seamanship, a good executive and Study Courses at Sea.

After completing the tour of duty ashore, he is sent to sea for a year and 10 months, being assigned to various merchant vessels plying the trade routes throughout the world. Aboard ship he lives in close association with the officers. The uniform the cadet wears on duty is similar to that of midshipmen. While at sea he learns in actual practice and by study courses mapped out by the commission's officers covering a wide variety of subjects he must master to win his stripes. A deck officer must learn cargo handling, commerce regulations, communications, naval science, maritime law, ship construction, meteorology and other subjects.

The third year of the training is spent ashore in the cadet schools for advanced training. Then the cadet advanced training. Then the cadet takes such subjects as gyro and is even assigned to various stevedor-

After Page A-20 graduation he is qualified to take examinations for third officer or third assistant engineer, for which the minimum pay is $150 a month. Talmadge Permits Regents to 'Correct' Wrongs to Colleges

Georgia Governor Acts As Rival Candidate Raises Freedom Issue

ATLANTA, Nov. 1.—While a political foe announced for the governorship, Gov. Eugene Talmadge opened the way today for the Georgia Board of Regents to undo some of his actions which have caused educational groups to withdraw recognition of Georgia's State colleges.

A few hours before Attorney General Ellis Arnall announced his candidacy for the gubernatorial nomination in next September's Democratic primary, Gov. Talmadge told the regents:

"I hereby commission and direct you to use your best judgment and offices to correct this whole unfortunate situation-correct any wrongs that might have been done.

The regents then named five of their number to appear here Monday before a special investigating committee of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in an effort to keep that group from dropping from its accredited list any or all of the 16 units of the State university system. Denies Recanting.

Talking with reporters after the meeting. Gov. Talmadge denied emphatically that he had recanted from policies that led him to obtain dismissal of Dean Walter Cocking of the University of Georgia education school on the ground that Dean Cocking advocated racial co-educa-

Asked if he was willing for the regents committee to rehire Dean Cocking, now employed in a Federal position at Washington, he cried, certainly am not." He added, however, that under action taken by the regents today, the board alone has authority to hire and fire faculty members.

Meantime, the regents themselves differed as to whether the committee could do anything about Dean Cocking's case, although the full board voted to back it in anything it did in its negotiations with the accrediting body Voted With Governor.

Three of the five men named voted with Gov. Hyde Park Conferees Ignore Berlin Charges Of U. S. Aggression

By JOHN C. HENRY.

Star Staff Correspond HYDE PARK, N. Y., Nov. 1 .-Implementation of Canadian-American plans for a fighting defense of this continent and of the North Atlantic supply lanes was discussed here today by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie

Although joint economic problems were to be covered in the two-day meeting between the two government heads, military and naval matters were believed to have taken precedence. This emphasis came simultaneously, and almost as an answer, to Berlin charges today that involvement of American destroyers in combat incidents in recent weeks had demonstrated that the United States is taking the initiative in a "shooting war" with the Axis.

Otherwise, no reply was being made here immediately to the Berlin accusations. Expects "Understanding."

Mr. King, who arrived here by train this morning, is scheduled to make an official government statement at the opening of the Canadian Parliament Monday. He expects, he told reporters here, to take back to the Canadian legislators a report of "complete understanding" with Mr. Roosevelt on wartime and defense problems affecting the two countries.

Presumably, the operation of

was a principal subject of today's discussion. Reports have persisted that important units of the United States Atlantic fleet are currently using Halifax as an operating base serving the double purpose of strengthening the defense of this ocean terminal and of being at the most strategic point for undertaking convoy and patrol assignments.

Turkish Mediation Move Gets Chilly British Reception

Refusal to Make Peace With Hitler Continues To Be English Policy

Nevertheless, Inonu's remarks ere known to be under close scrutiny here by British who think they may have been related to a recent conference of leading Turkish generals with Adolf Hitler in Russia. The British must reckon, too, with their own peace movement. Only today Britain's pacifist Duke of Bedford said in an article in "Peace Pledge Union." that it was neither 'sensible nor right" to fight Hitler without first trying to be friendly

Hitler, Bedford said, was "an untested man of mixed attributes with whom it is neither sensible nor right to quarrel until he has been tested by the one test which to me is worth anything-that of wise, practical, genuine friendship."

Hitler's faults, Bedford added, "are completely understandable and cause me no surprise whatever although their results may in some A statue of the duke's grand-

British sources indicated the Inonu speech was being studied also in the light of Turkey's military situation before a German war machine creeping toward the Caucasus. Some of these sources thought Turkey saw herself menaced by Germany but predicted she would stoutly oppose any invasion. "In our foreign relations," the Inonu broadcast said, "we shall announce our policy proudly and openly. We shall adhere strictly to our commitments and under no conditions will we accept concessions." Turkey, which has pledged the neutrality of the strategic Darda-nelles Straits, is believed here to be lacking in some military equipment but likely to be strengthened during the winter by war supplies from Britain and the United States. Usually informed quarters pointed out that Turkey was worried over the German drive toward the Caucasus because if continued it would catch the Turks between German forces in the northwest and British on the south and southwest.

Bombs and Torpedoes Are Rained on Axis Vessels in Raids

By the Associated Press. LONDON, Nov. 1.-R. A. F. pilots, ranging up and down Britain's blockade front from Norway to the Bay of Biscay last night and today, rained bombs and torpedoes into 11 or 12 Axis ships and left fire and wreckage in France and Germany, Air Ministry reports said.

In one frenzied attack on a convoy, an R. A. F. squadron leader swept down the middle of a row of ships to pick out the heaviest loaded one and dump his bombs on its deck, it was said. Text of Hitler's Reply to Roosevelt Speech statement today:

The Reich's government makes the following official announcement: The President of the United States of America made the following statements in a speech October 27: 1. The Government of the United States is in possession of a secret map which was prepared in Germany by the Reich's government. It is a map of Middle South America as the Fuehrer wants to reorganize it in that he wants to make five subject states out of 14 countries in this area and thereby bring the entire South American continent under his control One of these five states allegedly should include the Republic of Panama as well as the Panama Canal. 2. The American Government is in possession of a second document which was composed by the Reich's government. This document contains a plan eliminating all existing religions in the world after the war is won by Germany. Catholic, Protestant, Mohammedan, Hindu, Buddhist and Jewish religions are to be removed in the same way, property confiscated, the crucifix and all other religious sym-

In place of the churches an international socialist church is to be established in which the speakers sent out by the National Socialist government would perform offices. In place of the Bible, words out of the Fuehrer's book "Mein Kampf" would be imposed by force and ento be replaced by the swastika and the naked sword and finally the Fuehrer is to take the place of God.

Answer on Both Points.

1. There exists neither map prepared in Germany by the Reichs government regarding the dividing up of Central South America nor document pronounced by the Reich government regarding the dissolution of religions in the world. Therefore both are forgeries of the clumsiest, grossest type. 2. Assertions of the conquest of South America by Germany and The destroyer Greer pursued a Gerelimination of the religions of the surd that it is superfluous for the The Reichs government has noti-

The mayoralty election has assumed large proportions in this "offyear" of political campaigns. It has three aspects at least, which all help to complicate the situation. First, there is the strictly municipal issue-that of good government versus machine government, with La Guardia on the good government end. Second, there is the national aspect, with President Roosevelt arrayed on the side of the Mayor against his good friends, Mr. Flynn leader of the Bronx, and Gov. D. C. Retail Food Costs Steadied in October

Prices of retail foods showed little net change during the last half of October, according to a check of 18 staple foods in Washington and 18 other cities, Secretary Perkins announced yesterday.

Prices of pork chops in the District dropped 5.8 per cent, as compared with an average decline of 3.4 per cent for the 19 cities. Round steak, chuck roasts, roasting chickens, salmon, cabbage and lard were also cheaper in the District than during the first half of the month.

Prices of navy beans and oranges in the District advanced respectively 3.7 and 3.2 per cent. Price rises were also reported for eggs and canned tomatoes. There was no change in the cost of white flour, bread, bacon, milk, coffee and sugar.

Prices

ommodities as the occasion arose. Ceilings would be fixed on the basis of prices on October 1—instead of July 29 carried in the original bill—and the authority would ex-tend until June 30, 1943, or a shorter period, depending on the length of the emergency.

At the request of Representative Patman, Democrat, of Texas, the committee provided for creation of advisory committees—without power to act other than to make suggestions—to aid the price administrator. The final draft, Mr. Steagail said, contained authority for the ad-ministrator to control rents in defense areas, using April 1, 1940, as a base. Stricken out were such proposed yardsticks as a $15-a-monthper-room maximum.

Mr. Steagall said that one amendment adopted provided that no ceiling could be placed on a processed farm commodity if it would have the effect of lowering the price of the raw product.

Members said Representative Rolph, Republican, of California proposed to exempt fish from the act but was defeated, as was Representative Boggs, Democrat, of Louisiana who tried to put fish in the same category as the farm

Before the committee acts on the measure, Senator McCarran said he intended to confer with members of the District bar and others interested in the court merger plan. One of these conferences was held yesterday with William E. Leahy, prominent attorney, who is said to have made several suggestions for improving the set-up of the consolidated court. "I have a strong inclination to place in the bill a provision that would give the new municipal court jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to domestic relations, with the exception perhaps of those in which minors are concerned." declared Senator McCarran. "Such a plan would relieve judges of the other courts of a great volume of work and give them time to devote

Hyattsville Robbery Witness Freed When Judge Reverses Self

McGuire Admits Court Lacks Power to Hold · Marilyn Wilson

Reversing his own ruling, Justice Matthew McGuire in District Court yesterday afternoon released Miss Zinc Co. at Canon City, Colo. Marilyn Wilson on a habeas corpus petition on the ground the court had no authority to hold her as a 000 Hyattsville (Md.) bank robbery.

Hilliard Sanders, a suspect in the robbery, with whom Miss Wilson was arrested a week ago in Charlotte, N. C., will have a habeas corpus hearing tomorrow before Justice David A. Pine. Both Sanders and Miss Wilson are represented by Attorney James J. Laughlin.

Earlier Ruling Explained. Justice McGuire explained from the bench yesterday afternoon that he denied the petition in behalf of Miss Wilson yesterday morning because he had been informed she was being held in default of bond for a hearing Tuesday to determine her status as a witness. Justice McGuire said he understood Justice James W. Morris had ordered the woman held, but was informed later Lee funeral home, Fourth street and by Justice Morris that Miss Wilson was in jail by her own consent and no bond had been set for her. On being informed that Miss Wilson could go free, Assistant United States Attorney Margolius asked for a bench warrant to insure her appearance Tuesday. The justice overruled the request. was not known last night if she would appear in court Tuesday.

Mr. Margolius said, however, Miss Wilson is under subpoena to appear before a grand jury in Baltimore which is investigating the robbery Miss Wilson admitted to the court that while she knew nothing of the robbery she was with Sanders when he was arrested. Two other Government witnesses have been put under bond in the case. Two Justice Department agents were present at yesterday afternoon's hearing on the Wilson petition.

Mr. Laughlin applied to the Court of Appeals for a habeas corpus writ yesterday shortly after Justice McGuire rejected his plea. The jurist explained later he reopened the case on his own volition, as soon as he realized Miss Wilson was

Capital Canary Show To Open Its Annual Exhibition Friday

89 Classes Expected To Compete for Prizes; Many Colors Entered

The National Capital Canary Club will stage its seventh annual open show next Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Odd Fellows Temple, 419 Seventh street N.W., offering an exhibition calculated to give any lurking rainbows an inferiority com-

It may come as a surprise to the canary novice to learn that no less than 89 classes will be exhibited at the show-in almost every color known to man. Besides the familiar plain yellow canary, there will be birds of white, green, blue, cinnamon, buff, fawn, silver and even fancier colors like red copper, frosted orange and apricot.

Club officials expect the show to get a bird from every State. Cages get a bird from every State. Cages of them are being shipped by individual bird lovers who hope to win one of the 30-odd cups to be awarded, or at least a ribbon.

One of the most unusual entries will be that of the club's president, Mrs. Maude M. Anderson. She has On Oil Seizure three patriotic red-white-and-blue canaries. The late P. T. Barnum would have smiled politely and thought of dyes, but he would have been wrong. There is no fake; the colors are bred in the canaries, just as they are in that familiar wild bird, the red-white-and-blue wood-

It seems that it is the ambition to have representative types. The National Capital Canary Club has selected a bird with a white body and dark or black head and wingsthe Washington type. Some of these will be on exhibit.

Most of the birds will keep silent or stick to standard canary tunes, but not all. One bird is capable of whistling Yankee Doodle. Another sings the Marseillaise.

Other entertainment will be provided at the show. Every night at 8:30 o'clock there will be a floor show and on Saturday Dr. Malcolm Davis of the bird sanctuary at the National Zoological Park, will give Lindsay Lomax, the writer of the Civil War Journal. Her nature was so strong, simple and courageous, with such loyalty and love for those near and dear to her that I fear to add my word to hers-for fear of blurring the picture of her personality.

However, it can do no harm to write a few words of her back-

Elizabeth Lindsay was born in Norfolk, Va., many years before the Civil War. Her father, Col. William Lindsay, was appointed a cornet of the Virginia Horse Dragoons, June 14, 1776. -Was promoted to a captain in Lee's Legion in April, 1778. He was severely wounded in his bridle hand while defending a place in New Jersey called the White House from the British Dragoons. For his courage and gallantry in this engagement he was awarded a bounty land of 4,000 acres by the State of Virginia.

A description of this engagement and praise of "the presence of mind and determined courage" of Capt. Lindsay is to be found in Marshall's "Life of Washington." Capt. Lindsay, by the wound in his hand, was disabled as a cavalry officer but continued in the Army throughout the Revolution.

Col. Lindsay was a direct descendent of the Lindsay's of Scotland. His father, Sir William Lindsay, came to Virginia in 1700 and settled at Port Royal. In 1751 he married Miss Taliaferro of Gloucester County, Va

Elizabeth Lindsay married at the early age of 16-Mann Page Lomax of Port Tobago-a plantation near Fredericksburg, Va., which was a crown grant to his ancesters. Maj. Lomax was educated at William and Mary College in Williamsburg. He graduated with high honors and in 1811 became a lieutenant in the 3d Artillery, U. S. A. During the years 1835-1838, he served in the war against the Creeks and Seminole Indians. He was then transferred to the Ordnance Corps and put in command of Watertown Arsenal, where he died a few years later from the effects of the wounds received in the Indian warfare leaving his wife, Elizabeth Lindsay, a widow with six small children and almost no income, but with splendid courage and a dauntless spirit and her great talent for music, she made a new life for herself and children-not only a useful life LINDSAY LOMAX WOOD. but a happy life.

Property Worth $900,000 Placed On Tax Rolls

Georgetown Hospital Ordered Removed From Exempt List

District officials yesterday continued their drive to return to the municipal real estate tax rolls properties deemed beyond the meaning and wording of the tax exemption statutes, ordering holdings valued at more than $900,000 placed on the tax rolls.

Of outstanding importance was the property of the Georgetown Hospital, nurses home, laundry and morgue, owned by Georgetown College, which has been exempt for more than a half century and now having an assessed value of more than $529,000, but which was found by the District Commissioners as not being a "purely public charity."

In action on 45 cases, the Commissioners approved reports from their Real Estate Tax Exemption Board, headed by Walter L. Fowler. District budget director and former assistant corporation counsel, calling for assessments against 22 properties and approving exemption for

dered taxed were church holdings and in about half of these cases the reason was that the church organizations were holding "excess" land beyond requirements of their institutions

In addition to the Georgetown Hospital case, the city heads ordered whole or part levies against others, including the District Tuberculosis Association, the Walsh mansion used by the Red Cross and the Civic Theater, Friendship House and one piece of property held by the Sal-

"It is apparent that a great deal of charitable work is being done by purely public charity within the meaning of the existing statute. The city heads decided it was not a "school" where general subjects were taught, and that though its work was laudable, the property should be taxed. The Walsh home at 2020 Massachusetts avenue, having an assessed value of nearly a quarter million dollars, and used jointly by the Red Cross and the Washington Civic Theater, will be subject to an annual tax bill of $3.924

Otto S. Lund of the District Chapter of the Red Cross advised the exemption board there was no agreement between the chapter and Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean for the payment of taxes and that the building was occupied free, the expenses of heat, light and janitor service being shared by the two organizations using the premises.

At least seven important issues will be considered by the Public Utilities Commission when it has this very splendid organization, but been provided with a legal majority we cannot conclude that this is a of at least two of three members it is supposed to have. Some of these issues have been deferred for months for lack of a quorum. Engineer Commissioner Charles W.

Kutz now is the only member of the commission. The Senate District Committee has recommended the confirmation of Gregory Hankin, a Federal Power Commission attorney, originally nominated months ago by President Roosevelt as a successor to Richmond B. Case Involves Arrest For 'Investigation' Without Warrant

The United States Court of Appeals tomorrow will be asked to pass on the right of police to arrest persons without a warrant and hold them for "investigation. The case is being brought up by Attorney James J. Laughlin, under a building, his organization on the contention that Judge trial in which the question was involved, committed error when he instructed the jury that they might consider whether police were justified in refusing to exhibit to the lawyer a copy of a warrant

James F ("Buzz") Donovan, arested in August, 1939, without a warrant and held for "investigation," filed suit for $500 against the superintendent of police, Ernest W. Brown: Bernard W. Thompson then chief of detectives, and Capt S. J. Marks, who was then commanding officer of No. 12 police precinct, where Donovan was detained.

Attorney Laughlin had filed demand on the police for a socalled six-hour writ, under which the authorities are to file a definite accusation against the prisoner or release him. Mr. Laughlin contends that the police failed to furnish him with a copy of the warrent, setting forth an offense charged, and that under the law, he is entitled to collect $500 from the police. House to Debate Rent Control for D. C. Tomorrow

Provision for All Defense Areas Also In Price Measure

With rent legislation for the District already scheduled to come up in the House tomorrow as the special order of business, another measure that would put a ceiling on rents here was started on the way to House consideration yesterday when the House Banking Committee reported out the price control bill with provision for rent regulation in defense areas, including the National

Consideration of rent legislation tomorrow was arranged two weeks ago at a conference between House Leader McCormack and Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee. The bill to be taken up would freeze rents as of January 1, this year, and would put administration of the law under a $7.500 administrator to be appointed by the District Commissioners. It would apply to all types of rental property-hotels, apartment houses, private homes, boarding and rooming houses. In fixing a fair rental, however, the control authority would take into consideration any improvements made on the property as well as any increase in taxes. It defines a boarding or rooming house as any dwelling in which there are two or more roomers or boarders.

Would Apply to Defense Areas. The House Banking Committee bill would apply to defense areas all over the country, and would use rents as of April 1, 1940, as the basis for fixing fair standards. Chairman Steagall said there was no antagonism in his committee toward the bill already proposed for the District, nor was there any disposition to create a conflict over the measures. Members of the committee, he explained, felt that so long as no rent control legislation had been enacted here that it was advisable to make provision for regulation in this measure covering defense areas generally. Future developments, he continued, would determine the form the legislation finally would take.

Chairman Tolan of the special committee which has been investigating migration of defense workers, announced yesterday that his comcommittee laid before the Banking The rooms, renovated to spotless Committee all the testimony it has

Public Garages To Be Studied By Senate Group

Type Proposed Could Be Used as Bomb Shelter in Emergency

By JAMES E. CHINN.

The special Senate subcommittee studying the District's traffic problems will turn its attention this week to a plan for erection of a series of oval-shaped public garages that would serve as bombproof shelters in event the city is ever attacked from

The dual purpose garages are the idea of Michael Rosenhauer, an architect, who has been called by the subcommittee as the first witness Tuesday when it resumes hearings on bills authorizing establishment of municipally owned parking lots on the fringe of the central business area, and providing for an increase from 2 to 4 cents in the local gasoline tax.

Mr. Rosenhauer is a fellow of the Royal Academy of Architects and practiced in London, Paris, Vienna and other European cities before coming to the United States. Aside from reviewing Mr. Rosenhauer's plans, the subcommittee, it was announced, will consider contributions that the mass transportation companies can make toward Committee personnel of the relief of traffic congestion. Gracie Fields' Songs Show How Britons Can Laugh at Blitz

Audience of 2,000 Pays $6,500 to War Relief to See Variety Show

Washington saw Gracie Fields last night and learned why London and the British Empire can still laugh through a German blitz.

A Constitution Hall audience of 2.000 that paid $6.500 to the British War Relief Society found English wit to their liking in the famous British comedienne's impressions in song, which reached a climax in the line, "We're going to hang Hitler from the highest limb of the biggest aspidistra in the world."

Miss Fields, chief attraction in a variety show, was introduced by Senator Connally of Texas, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He declared that the audience, which included high officials of the United States Government and Great Britain's diplomats here, demonstrated the common determination of the two countries to see to it that "democracy shall not perish from the earth.'

Walter Pidgeon, Hollywood actor and an artilleryman in the Canadian Army during the World War, was master of ceremonies for the fast-moving show, which opened with a group of songs of the sea by the Capitolians, an all-male chorus.

John Buckmaster another English wit, drew laughter only a shade less hearty than Miss Fields with his impersonations of radio news analysts and a demonstration of how the radio is one of his pet annoyances. Ruth Harrison and Alec Fisher gave modern dance impersonations and Harriet Hoctor, fa-mous ballerina, did two numbers Cherrie Frost Wins entitled "L'Amour Coquette" and "The Raven."

Miss Fields sang one number by Noel Coward, "London Pride," and another entitled "It's the Same Old London," in which she reported that G. W. Homecoming there are still plenty of laughs left there are still plenty of laughs left in England yet. In a few words after the performance, she said she had just returned from England and had found the people with their thumbs still up. Mrs. Robert Low Bacon and Thomas P. Morgan. jr., co-chairmen of the society's Washington committee, were introduced by Mr. Pidgeon from their box. The Variety Club sponsored the show

Pontiac Torpedoes being bought by former owners of high-priced cars and lowest-priced cars is greater than ever. Expensive car owners are finding that the 1942 Pontiac enables them to reduce their motoring costs and still enjoy the ownership of a car that is big, impressive, comfortable and of the finest quality. Lowest-priced car owners are switching to Pontiac because the difference in price is so slight that they say it's hardly noticeable—and Pontiac gives them finer performance, a better ride, greater handling ease and increased safety plus record, all-around economy. Naturally, it is gratifying to have the new Pontiacs enjoy such a reception from these two important buying groupsespecially in view of the fact that Pontiac engineers were able to achieve such quality without interference with critical materials essential to national defense.

Your present car may cover part or perhaps all of the down payment on a 1942 Pontiac. The balance may be paid in monthly installments.

The American Party maintains that the future welfare and happiness of our people will not be determined by the defeat or victory of any other nation anywhere on earth, but by what we-we in America-do to protect and extend freedom and security of our people here." Mr. LaFollette lashed at "the President and the War Party" for involving this country abroad. Recalls Barrage of Pledges.

"In spite of the barrage of pledges of peace, we are today in a shooting warfare-armed hostilities concerning which neither the people nor the Congress has been consulted," he asserted.

"It was one man and one man alone who changed the map of the world and pushed the boundaries of the Western Hemisphere more than 2,000 miles out into the North Atlantic," he continued

Sin of War Party. "Last Monday night," the speaker said, "this man rushed to the radio to announce that shooting had begun, that we had been attacked and that our ships had been fired upon. With a burst of generosity he assured us that they were our ships, that they belonged to you and to me and to every other man, woman and child in this country. Yet, when this man ordered those ships into the war zone, he treated them as if they were his ships and not ours. Certainly no one, not even Congress, was consulted, let alone asked for approval."

However, Mr. La Follette said, "the sin of the war party is not that they advocate war. The sin is that their only answer to the menace of Hitlerism in Europe is step by step to create Hitlerism in the United States. Every step taken in the past two years has been put over on us by the same fraudulent methods practiced by the European dictators. Defeat on the issue of the Neutrality Act, the former Governor said, does not mean that "the fight for freedom" is lost.

"That fight must and is going on until it is won," he declared. Mr. La Follette was introduced by John T. Flynn of New York. Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, a leader of the Senate isolationist bloc, was introduced to the 1313 You St. N.W. NO. 3343 gathering, but did not speak.

Roosevelt's Navy Day Address Clarifies U. S. Combatant Role

Neutrality Act Amendment of Historic Importance in That It, in Effect, Gives President Mandate to Make War

By Felix Morley.

much sharper definition to the anomthe flat statements, both well to the fore in the speech, that "the shooting has started" and "America has been at-

From the attitude assumed with these assertions by the Chief Executive it would be difficult, though not yet impossible, for the Nation to withdraw, The President now in effect has issued a declaration of war on Germany, in retaliation for what he regards as intolerable acts of aggression against this country. But such a declaration, under our system of government, must obtain congressional sanction in order to pos-

Mr. Roosevelt himself tacitly admits his incomplete authority in the matter by continuing to maintain formal diplomatic relations with Hitler. If the Navy Day address had itself altered the legal position, the staff of the German Embassy would by this time have been requested to leave Washington.

The situation is therefore one in which the President has indirectly asked for. but has not yet directly received, authority to attack Germany in response to the attacks, committed or anticipated, against this country. It is that situation which makes the present congressional debate on amendment of the Neutrality Act of such historic importance.

For the first time in the evolving war issue, executive declaration and legislative confirmation have been adequately synchronized. Since the Navy Day speech almost everybody realizes that Congress is now debating, and shortly will vote on, what is in effect a mandate to the President to make war.

Not of President's Choosing.

This situation, it must be noted, is not of the President's choosing. The administration had of its own volition requested from Congress repeal of only one part of the remaining sections of the Neutrality Act-that which prohibits the arming of American merchant ships. It is due to Republican intervention, engineered by Wendell L. Willkie, that the issue in the Senate has now been broadened to include repeal of the remainder

That Republican action clarifies the issue and in so doing makes it more controversial. The mere authorization for the arming of merchant ships, which the House approved on October 17 by a vote of 259 to 138, could not be and was not debated as a congressional sanction for war. But the substitute bill now before the Senate can and should be regarded as precisely that.

The cold fact is illuminated by the official title of the statute for which complete repeal is now asked. "Neutrality Act" is only the colloquial and inaccurate name for the law which at passage was formally designated as the "Keep America Out of War Act."

The administration now has accepted the sharper definition of the issue which Republican intervention brought about. In his Navy Day speech the President praised the action of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in reporting out a bill going far beyond the measure passed by the House. "That," said Mr. Roosevelt with admirable candor, "is the

Not Due to White House Planning. It seems largely accidental that executive direction and legislative approval in the field of foreign policy are now at last being brought in line. Certainly it was not due to White House planning that the bill now before the Senate was broadened to be an explicit repeal of the "Keep America Out of War Act." But those who favor and those who oppose outright American belligerency will alike be disposed to welcome the development.

The situation is complicated, however, by the fact that the character of the war envisaged remains much more obscure than the willingness of the administration to meet the Axis challenge with military force. "We Americans," said Mr. Roosevelt last Monday night," have cleared our decks and taken our battle stations." But it is not at all clear just where the fighting is to take place.

The President himself has not yet countability by the electorate.

Two short sentences in President | indicated that he plans anything more Roosevelt's Navy Day address brought a than naval operations. And he has said much to indicate that he is opposed to alous position of the United States in sponsoring an American expeditionary regard to the present war. They were force It was only 10 months ago, after his election to a third term of office and months after the German conquest of France, that Mr. Roosevelt told his radio listeners: "You can nail any talk of sending armies to Europe as a deliberate untruth.' However, Senator Pepper of Florida, who often serves as advance guard for the administration in the field of foreign policy, has admitted in the present debate that he would favor the sending of an expeditionary force if necessary to defeat Hitler. And there can be little doubt that public sentiment for such action is stronger than was the case last

Might Not Improve Situation.

Moreover, it does not appear likely that mere elimination of the "hamstringing provisions" of the Neutrality Act would of itself materially improve an adverse military situation. If repeal is accomplished, Great Britain will more easily obtain the munitions, but will still lack the men necessary for victory. Russia will have the men, but in view of transport difficulties and 'ndustrial centers lost or damaged, probably will continue to lack the munitions. British leaders now continually intimate that outright victory over Germany depends on an offensive punch which only the United States will be able to contribute.

In his Navy Day speech the President drew an analogy with the German collapse in the fall of 1918. That, he said, is "proof that a mighty German army and a tired German people can crumble rapidly and go to pieces when they are faced with successful resistance.'

For those who vividly recall the closing days of the last war the analogy is not quite satisfying. It was not successful resistance but successful attack which brought disintegration to the Kaiser's Germany. And in that attack a large American expeditionary force played a prominent part.

If the American people really mean to defeat Germany, measures going far beyond any now openly contemplated will be necessary. It will not be enough to amplify condemnations of Hitler and all his works, nor even to adopt the symbolic "V" as a base for feminine headgear. The task will be to change the whole psychology of the country from that of defense to that of attack.

Signs Indicate Change is Not Near.

There are many signs that this change is not yet at hand. The continuing prevalence of very serious strikes in war industries indicates that the trade unions involved are still relatively indifferent about the defeat of Germany. The same conclusion is forced by the persistence of the "business as usual" motif. It has been confirmed by the seeming unwillingness of the President to give unequivocal indorsement to war legislation clearly necessary to implement his public

The spread between what national leadership demands and what the public seems ready to perform is causing grave anxiety. If the Nation is to exercise its tremendous strength effectively, for any desired end, that spread must be narrowed. This can be accomplished either by increasing the public performance, or by lessening the demands of leadership, or by both. But nothing is gained by pretending that there is no gulf to be

For that reason, if for no other, the hard-hitting debate now under way in Congress is overdue. The issue which has too long been dodged is now coming in forthright form, and democratic manner, before the elected representatives of the people. The vote on repeal of the Neutrality Act will not of itself decide the outcome of the war. But it will for the first time provide a popular mandate on the issue of outright and formidable

American participation in the struggle. It is high time that this issue should be taken out of the hands of the unofficial analysts and placed frankly before that organ of our Government in which every member can be held to strict ac-of some bill of this character. The ad-

THE high importance of finding a solution of the strike problem has nowhere been better set out than in President Roosevelt's recent message to the American Federation of Labor Convention at Seattle.

"This is not the time for idle promises. This is not the time to take chances with the national safety through any stoppage of defense work or defense production. * * *

"In this hour when civilization itself is in the balance, organizational rivalries and jurisdictional conflicts should be discarded. Only by united action can we turn back the Nazi threat. The establishment of peace between labor organizations would be a patriotic step forward of incalculable value in the creation of true national unity."

O. P. M. Follows Suit.

This is not a crack-down on labor for which the more aggressive advocates of anti-labor legislation had been hoping. but from a President of Mr. Roosevelt's demonstrated friendship for labor it is strong language.

The President's message was followed in a few days, on October 22, by a similar statement from the Office of Production Management, drawn up as a result of conversations between the President and William S. Knudsen, director general of the Office of Production Management. Unquestionably, the action of the O. P. M. was inspired by growing concern over the loss of man-hours through strikes in defense industries. If there is any single valid generalizazation about a problem whose complexities become more apparent the more it is studied, that generalization is this: The root of the trouble is the immaturity of the collective bargaining relationship between management and workers. Because of the newness of the collective bargaining principle and its application to defense industries, we are still beset with difficulties in this country which England, through long habituation to the principle, has been able in its time of crisis to surmount with comparative ease.

Analysis of the Issue. A penetrating analysis of the fundamentals of the strike problem appears in the November issue of the Survey Graphic magazine, in an article by William H. Davis, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board, Mr. Davis, a successful lawyer, was chairman of the New York State Mediation Board mainspring of the board from the beginning, he was the logical successor of Clarence A. Dykstra as its chairman. By many he is regarded as the ablest mediator of labor disputes in the country. Incidentally, the issue in which his article appears is encyclopedic in its treatment of present-day labor relations; it deserves reading by anybody who is trying to grope his way to an understanding of the subject.

Mr. Davis makes the point that the defense crisis came upon the United States when collective bargaining between workers and management was "at various stages of immaturity, running all the way from early infancy to the confusions of adolescence."

"The industry which is basic to the whole defense program—steel—still is in, or is just passing out of, the organizing stage of unionization," he writes. "In no significant section of the steel industry is there sufficient experience with collective bargaining to have accumulated precedents, developed traditions, acquired habits of procedure—until the practice of conference, the values of the collective agreement and mutual respect and confidence have fully replaced the unstable status of conflict. The great mass production industriesautomobiles, rubber, chemicals, for example-similarly are in a state of lusty immaturity in labor relations.

"Coming up at this period of development, the emergency has done about everything that could be done to upset a growing youth." The Contributing Factors.

Mr. Davis lists the factors that have contributed to this upset. First, there was the tremendous expansion of production with the accompanying treriendous demand for labor This is a condition that always gives rise to industrial disputes. Second, there has been an increase in living costs, with a growing threat of inflation. Third, there has been "the less clearly understood, but tremendously disturbing fact of job shifts. A man who has been working in X plant for 10 years enjoys a favorable position of seniority. Move him into some other plant and immediately his seniority rights become a thorny issue." The fourth complication is the split of the labor movement into two factions. And finally, says Mr. Davis, all these disturbing factors are present in a period when Congress has declared that it is the national policy to encourage collective bargaining. "It is hard to conceive of a situation more fraught with difficulties for bringing to maturity the complex, unevenly developed labor relations of American industry."

The basic question presented by the succession of strikes in essential defense industries is whether or not labor has been allowed to grow too tall; whether or not the time has come to reverse the building-up process. The whole controversy over restrictive labor measures revolves about this question.

There is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Roosevelt can get restrictive legislation from Congress by asking for it. If there was any doubt, it was removed by the defiant attitude of John L. Lewis in the captive coal mines strike. The temper of a large section of Congress-a section that easily could, under provocation, be made into a majorityis revealed in various measures which have been proposed for the curbing of strikes. To begin at the end of the list. there is the measure which has just been | privileged status by the Rules Commit- | these guerrilla areas to the hospitals. At introduced by Senator Bailey, Demo- | tee of the House and can be brought up | the present time, more than 10,000 sick crat, of North Carolina to make the for debate whenever the House leaders casualties are being treated in these stoppage of work on defense goods an see fit. perhaps in the President as well-a state of mind conducive to the curbing of labor?

Lewis' Action Paramount. Part of the answer to this question can be found in the action of Mr. Lewis. head of the United Mine Workers and the former president of the C. I. O., calling out the 63,000 captive coal miners at this critical time-action taken in defiance of the direct request of the President that the men be kept at work "in the interest of defense of our country."

Nothing has so hurt the cause of organized labor in Congress as this ac-

Generally speaking, the answer can be found in the daily headlines telling of strikes in the defense industries.

Now it is true that figures on the manhours lost through strikes in the defense industries are likely to give a distorted and unfair picture of the strike situation. It is true that they are but a very small percentage of the time worked on defense; that they fail to tell the story of notable instances of co-operation by labor; that the time lost through industrial accidents, many of them preventable, is infinitely greater than the time lost through strikes; that the quibbling of employers to get favorable contracts with the Government has likewise set back the defense effort; that an incalculable amount of time, far greater than the time loss attributable to strikes, has been wasted by the Government's fartoo-long application of the "business-asusual" policy to the national economy

What Average Man Sees.

All these things are true; yet what tence: "Let me finish this neutrality bill before I take care of the fourth sees—is the fact that there are strikes "in this hour when civilization itself is in, the balance"; that these strikes, however small may be the resultant loss of time in proportion to the time worked, do cut into the defense effort: that some of these strikes, by the average man's Co. at Inglewood, Calif., Senator Constandard of measurement, are inexcusable; that among the labor leaders of unquestioned integrity are racketeerplants in which defense production had ing leaders; that among them are men more animated by greed for personal labor dispute. Offered as an amendpower than by devotion to the rank and ment to the pending bill to defer men file they misrepresent.

This is the other side of the strike pic ture, the side that arouses the resentment of the public and provokes in Congress the demand for restrictive action. That action has been held in abevance Whether or not it will come depends on labor itself. If it does come, it may be action produced by a wave of emotionalism more calculated to hurt than to help the national interest

If the writer, as one who has watched the development of the strike problem here at Washington and seen it in concrete form in a number of important recent strikes, may venture a personal opinion, it is this: That once the rank and file of labor come to appreciate the gravity of the national crisis, the strike trouble will be largely cured. That Is the Task Now.

It is the purpose of the President and the O. P. M. to arouse labor to a realization of the danger with which it would be faced through a Nazi victory. British labor has shown its awareness of the danger. The effort to drive home to American labor the full meaning of the Nazi threat has been only partly successful. (Labor, of course, is not unique in this respect.) Whether it can be wholly successful short of an all-out war effort by this country I do not presume to know. It is only certain that the patriotism of labor is as good as that of any group, and that once labor is convinced of the danger to the democratic institutions of this country and the world, labor, while not getting rid of its growing pains overnight, will make short shrift of those leaders who would seek to retard the defense effort by unjustifiable strikes or to aggrandize themselves at its expense. Once labor sees clearly the need for a supreme effort, all occasion for restrictive legislation in Congress will vanish.

Need for Trained Doctors Is Now Acute in China

Disease and hunger destroy a people as ruthlessly as bombs do. Thousands of wounded soldiers have died in China for lack of simple medical supplies. The shortage of trained doctors and nurses is so acute that the Medical Relief Corps of the Chinese Red Cross has been forced to give three months' courses to young men, teaching them basic medical technique, and to turn them out as "doctor-mechanics" to care for the wounded and sick with only the meager knowledge these courses can give.

Twenty guerrilla hospitals, spread out in huts and villages throughout the Committee a month later, under the countryside to escape detection and possible bombardment, are now function-Vinson, Democrat, of Georgia, reported ing in the area defended by the 4th Route Army. U. S.-Japanese War Reportedly Delayed on Advice of Britain

America Ready Two Weeks Ago to End Tokio Threat, but Word Is Churchill Fears Diffusion of Effort

By Constantine Brown.

From the avalanche of "confidential", liquidate the Japanese without impairreports which are poured into the ears of Washington reporters daily, it seems likely that we shall be physically engaged in a conflict with the Axis powers some time within the next few months. Where and how is one of the deep mysteries, the answer to which must be sought in London rather than in the Capital of the United States. At one time, two weeks ago-after the fall of the Konove cabinet and the admovement have come out vigorously vent to power of the pro-Nazi Gen. Tojo against an enforced cooling-off period. -everything pointed to an early conflict What are the conditions which have with Japan. But Prime Minister Churchmade and produced in Congress-and ill reportedly managed to dissuade President Roosevelt from such action. Naval strategists point out that we are at the peak of our preparedness in the Pacific, while the Japanese still have some way to go. While our two-ocean Navy is not yet completed, the Pacific Fleet-to which the Washington and the North Carolina (considered the strongest battleships in the world) could be added-is more than able to cope with the Japanese. Without going into any details, it can be said that the American Fleet is superior to the Nipponese in every category except aircraft carriers. The Japanese have more aircraft carriers, but our vessels have a 5-to-3 superiority in the number of planes carried aboard this type of craft.

Question of Morale.

It can be said without exaggeration that the American personnel is superior to both the British and the Japanese. It is itching to get into a scrap with an enemy. But morale, it is pointed out, is a delicate thing. Concern is expressed confidentially in some naval quarters that if our men are kept on the Pacific vigil without coming to grips with an enemy their morale may suffer. In some quarters the thought is being expressed that what the long inactivity in the Maginot line did to the French Army may be repeated on the high seas if there is little but war-time routine duty without actual fighting. While this point of view is not shared by the highest ranking naval officers, nevertheless this thought was in the minds of many responsible policy framers in Washington when it was believed that President Roosevelt was ready to give the Pacific Fleet the green light for action.

does not dovetail with that of our friends in Great Britain. The argument that the Axis is a chain, and that if we could manage to weaken it by breaking a link somewhere it would be to our mutual advantage, is not accepted by the British

According to reports which are impossible to check but which from circumstantial evidence seem reliable. Prime Minister Churchill became alarmed when it was stated the United States intended to brook no further interference on the part of Japan in the Far East and would retaliate at the first opportunity. He is said to have communicated personally with President Roosevelt and urged him to do nothing rash. He believes that an American action in the Pacific would divert so much of the war material which is immediately essential to Britain and to Russia that America might sacrifice the Atlantic and Europe-including Russiafor the sake of a comparatively inconsequential victory in Japan.

Key to Victory.

London and Moscow are convinced that the key to victory is in Europe: they believe that the trend in Europe wouldn't be changed by whatever successes we might achieve in the Far East. It is Hitler and Mussolini, they say, who must be crushed to obtain peace in the world and not the Japanese military cliquea pale imitation of European dictators.

Our naval and military experts are open-minded about this theory. But they wonder where we could hit the Axis in Europe in the near future. They are convinced that Britain and Russia will do well if they can maintain themselves for the time being in their present defensive positions. Should they succeed in doing this, now that the winter has set in-and there seems to be no reason time before they can take the offensive. In the meantime, it is believed we could our hands.

ing activity of the Atlantic fleet. That fleet has a definite task: To convoy ships carrying war material and food to Britain and Russia. To do this it must be on the watch for submarines and surface raiders.

Watchful Waiting for Japan.

Admiral Ernest J. King's force is engaged in a difficult task. Fortunately, our navy yards are turning out destroyers and submarine chasers at greater speed than was anticipated a year ago. Thus, even if losses in the Atlantic fleet turn out to be greater than anticipated, Admiral King can count on quick replacements. But since the English-who are playing first fiddle in the present American-Russian. British concert-insist that a diffusion of forces would be fatal to the outcome of the war, there is nothing else to do but adopt a policy of watchful waiting toward Japan-painful as such a course may be. It is possible that things may change within the next few weeks. Washington is inclined to leave the next move up to the Japanese. What is evidently worrying the British government is a German drive toward the Mosul oil fields-expected during the course of the winter. Britain would prefer not to face Hitler's legions at a time when we might be engaged in a conflict in the Pacific. However optimistically we may wish to look at the Russian situation, there is no question that the offensive power of the Soviet armies has been brokento say the least. Even if we could rush all the needed supplies at once it wouldn't be until some time next summer that we could hope for a Russian offensive. In the meantime, Hitler is expected to leave at least 100 divisions of mixed troops on whatever line he may have to defend and rush the balance of his might to the Middle East.

There is no question in the minds of military observers that, unless Germany can obtain oil, all her efforts-including those of the last two years-are likely to prove futile.

Britain and the United States know that the Nazis won't be skimpish when they start a move in the Middle East Hitler will have to throw at least 1.000. 000 fully-equipped men into the battle will attempt to reach Iraq by way of Turkey or through Syria or by some other route. But that he will try to get there is beyond any doubt.

Britain Making Ready.

The British have been preparing f the shock since last summer. Impor ant convoys of troops and war material have been sent to Egypt, Syria and Iraq through the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean. Large dumps of ammunition have been organized throughout the area and they have taken full advantage of the lull on that front to organize strong defensive positions. The strength of the British forces in Egypt and the Middle East is a military secret which only a handful of Americans know. The general belief is that it is a strong and homogeneous army, but not large enough to be sure of victory against the invading Nazis.

The British Army's most serious problem is the replacement of war material and the filling in of inevitable gaps in the fighting divisions. The Nazi problem is easier, since the Germans have lines of communication close by in the Balkans. The British must bring everything from England and the United States-a long stretch of water exposed to enemy submarines and aircraft.

It is probably this situation that Prime Minister Churchill had in mind when he attempted to dissuade Washington from embarking on the venture in the Pacific. The time may come, he is said to believe, when Britain may have to appeal to our fleet in the Pacific for help in convoying reinforcements to the armies fighting in the Middle East and in Africa. It may be that he will be compelled to appeal to the United States for some fighting units as well. And if this country were involved in a shooting war in the Pacific, we might find it why they should not-it will be some | difficult to comply with the British requests if we had a war with Japan on

Then—and Now

There are striking parallels between the realities of this country's position as they exist today and as they existed on April 2, 1917, when President Wilson asked a special session of Congress to "declare the recent course of the imperial German government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States."

In 1917, as President Wilson pointed out, the German government had announced that its submarines would sink every vessel that "sought to approach either the ports of Great Britain and Ireland or the western coasts of Europe or any of the ports controlled by the enemies of Germany within the Mediterranean." The government of Adolf Hitler has announced that any vessel coming before the torpedo tubes of its submarines will be sunk if it is engaged on a mission useful to Germany's enemies, and this edict is being enforced not merely along the coasts of Europe, but across a vast expanse of the Atlantic which the Nazis have arbitrarily defined as a war zone. The destroyer Reuben James was sunk while defying this edict. Two merchant ships flying the American flag have been sent to the bottom while outside this zone. Two other American warships have narrowly escaped the fate of the Reuben James.

On April 2, 1917, President Wilson pointed out that American ships had been sunk and that American lives had been lost, as well as those of other neutrals. "It is a war against all nations," he said. "The challenge is to all mankind." And what is the case today? Once again American ships and American lives, as well as those of other neutrals, are being sacrificed. And Hitler himself is authority for the statement that there is not room in the world for his totalitarian concepts and the democratic way of life-that the latter must go. Is this not more, rather than less, of a challenge to all mankind?

Of neutrality, President Wilson said: "Neutrality is no longer feasible or desirable where the peace of the world is involved and the freedom of its peoples. * * * We have seen the last of neutrality in such circumstances." Neutrality is no less dead today, but here the parallel ends.

The Congress of 1917 moved speedily to comply with the President's request that it formally acknowledge the existence of a state of war with Germany, that it "formally accept the status of a belligerent which has thus been forced upon it." But the Congress of today is engaged seriously in a discussion of the "merits" of our legislated neutrality and the extent to which it should be modified, if, indeed, it should be modified

Out on the Atlantic the guns of the Navy are in action and men are laying down their lives for their country. Every American — every member of Congress-knows in his heart that this is war, yet the congressional debate deals only with the dead issue of neutrality, with the foolish question of whether we shall deceive ourselves a little more or a little less.

This, it seems, is the tragic price that we must pay for a long period of self-deception-a strange interlude that began when we scrapped our Navy in exchange for a nonexistent security based on solemn treaties, and which finds what we may hope is its final expression today in a blind effort to escape the consequences of war by clinging to the tattered remnants of a law which says we are neutral. The debate, no doubt, will go on. But whatever the outcome, however the final vote turns, the result will be the same. Congress cannot preserve or abandon neutrality in any realistic sense, for neutrality is gone. This is a fact. There may be those who wish to persist in denying it, but their denials soon will be lost in the war which already has engulfed us.

Forgotten City

During the first World War the late John Galsworthy brought his genius to the task of writing what he called "The Skin Game: A Tragi-Comedy," in which, symbolically, he dealt with the great forces involved in the titanic struggle then raging. The little countries-Serbia and Belgium -were represented as the Jackmans, an elderly couple of humble status and condition who apply to Hillcrist, many as Germany then was-something not vastly different from Germany as Germany now is. But be that as it may, a dreadful strife develops between Hillcrist and his dependents and Hornblower and his allies. Cruel things are done and innocent bystanders get hurt during three acts of bitter struggle. Then, at the end, the Jackmans return to the stage, still humble, inoffensive, apologetic people who have no wish but to express their thanks to their friends. It seems incredible, yet it is true: Hillcrist had forgotten their existence! The battle, in its cataclysmic progress, had swept passed them. Both sides had lost contact with the 'cause" of the quarrel.

History metaphorically repeats Galsworthy's fable today. When World War No. 2 began in the autumn of 1939, its focal point was a city currently forgotten, an ancient city of many fine traditions, a city which once was the outpost of civilization on the Baltic shore, a selfrespecting, self-sufficient city belonging to the Hanseatic League and setting an example for neighboring communities to east, west and south, a city which now has vanished from the news the while other towns-so many of them!-are spotlighted by bombardment from the skies.

It was for Danzig that Hitler marched at the beginning of the latest clash between the tribe of Hillcrist and the tribe of Hornblower, but who remembers that in 1941?

. Tokio's Two Voices

Official utterances from Tokio are strangely at variance these days. The contrast is exemplified by two statements made within twenty-four hours of each other, yet strikingly different in tenor.

The first of these is an address made by Premier General Tojo, reiterating the government's determination to press forward unswervingly with Japan's plans for its East Asian "Co-prosperity Sphere"—a euphemism for Japanese domination of the entire Far East. Stating that Japan unquestionably stands at the cross-roads between an expanding empire and the status of a secondrate power, General Tojo assured a select audience of high officials that there would be no retreat, but that the path would be trodden by the and all difficulties that may be in our way." Although he did not

It must indicates that Japan is preparing for | be remembered, also, that in the aggressive action in the near future.

Nevertheless, the very next day after the Premier's forthright address, an "appeasement" note was sounded by the Japan Times Advertiser, known to be the Englishlanguage mouthpiece of the Foreign Office. Editorially, this newspaper suggested that Japan is ready to undertake mediation of the Russo-German war, and that the United States would be wise in supporting such a move as a prelude for general mediation of the world conflict. whose continuation spells general ruin. Japan and the United States, argued the editorial, are now the strongest of the non-belligerent powers, but both of them are threatened with involvement in the conflict, and in their own selfish interest, each nation would be wise to join an effort to bring about peace.

These contrasting voices can mean only one of two things: Either a difference of opinion within the Japanese government or a diplomatic maneuver lacking in sincerity. So long as the middle-of-the-road cabinet of Prince Konoye was in office, the first hypothesis was tenable. Indeed, the Foreign Office was known to contain elements favorable to an understanding with the Englishspeaking powers. But the present government, composed almost exclusively of militarists and imperialists, has no such division within its ranks. Its aggressive aims are clear. The only question is when it will proceed from words and preparations to action. Therefore, any trial balloons floated from semi-official sources to indicate pacific intentions should be discounted. To vary the simile, the stream can rise no higher than its source.

In the new credit plan recently announced by the Export-Import Bank, the administration has taken another important step to facilitate export of goods of vital importance to Latin America. These shipments now face two major obstacles arising from the lack of banking facilities. One is the insistence of United States manufacturers, most of whom are engaged on war contracts, that private export orders from Latin America be accompanied by letters of credit payable at their plants. The other is the lack of sufficient dollar resources in Latin American banks, as a result of which it is difficult, if not impossible, for importers to obtain longterm letters of credit.

In order to overcome these barriers, the Export-Import Bank will establish special lines of credit for banks in Latin America. These will be handled by commercial banks in this country, the Export-Import Bank assuming responsibility for any losses that these banks may incur through a country gentleman personifying the failure of purchasers in Latin Britain, for help against Hornblower, America to pay for goods delivered. an individual who "didn't care for | So far, the Export-Import Bank has | Germans are said to be practicing anything so long as he has his im- either paid out, or underwritten, for the invasion of Britain. that are "holding the bag." Through the proposed credits United States manufacturers will be able to collect payments at their plants, instead of waiting until their goods actually have been exported. The program will be of equal value to Latin American importers by making available to them long-term credits as favorable as those granted by European nations.

Credits will be limited to the financing of United States agricultural or industrial products which are essential to the economy of Latin American countries. Goods thus imported must not be re-exported or sold to any other country-a requirement designed to prevent any possible leak to the Axis.

By making it easier for the American republics to secure the goods they need-many of which are now obtainable only in the United States-the new credit program should contribute much to strengthen the economic defenses of the Western Hemisphere.

Tank Production

President Roosevelt's decision to ask Congress for funds to double tank production as the first step in a comprehensive expansion of the defense effort, based on the military lessons of the past two years, indicates that we are about to embark in earnest upon a race for supremacy in mechanized armament.

To many Americans who have checked off one by one the hapless victims of Nazi superiority in tanks and airplanes, the wonder has been that we have waited so long before seeming to give full recognition to the effectiveness of mechanized armies. It is a hopeful sign that we are at last on the threshold of the great industrial output of which this country is capable, once its industry is fully geared for the task.

By way of emphasizing the magnitude of the test that confronts us, the President might well have prefaced his statement by a cursory comparison of our own pitifully small armored force with the appalling size of these Nazi mechanized armies. Lord Beaverbrook, quoting Russian sources, said that the Germans had entire nation united "firmly together | 30,000 tanks and were using 14,000 in with an iron resolve to overcome any the assaults on the Eastern front. These figures are borne out by our own official estimates that Hitler is using at least thirty armored di-German as in the American armored division, the tanks actually represent only about 20 per cent of the total armored vehicles used by the combined arms that make up such a division.

Against this vast array, our own armored force consists of only five divisions and fifteen separate tank battalions. Of the divisions, only two have anywhere near their full quota of about 400 tanks each. But in actual battle performance in North Africa, American tanks have demonstrated their worth and especially their durability. In this fashion much useful knowledge has been gained for future guidance.

It is ironical but true that the United States, which surpasses all other nations in automobile production, should lag so far behind European powers in mass tank production. Before the start of the rearmament program, eighteen months ago, our Army was fortunate if it received thirty tanks in a year. The best tank "brains" were admittedly in Germany, and our own designers and men experienced in production were lamentably few. We had to start producing almost from scratch.

Fortunately, however, our production is beginning to get into full swing. Estimates place the output of medium, twenty-eight-ton models, at about 240 a month. Yet the program is being stepped up so rapidly that soon we will reach a scheduled 1,000 mediums a month, without taking into account the light tanks. The number is to be raised to 2,000 a month and before long the new heavy tanks will begin rolling off the line. Even so, our production then would be considerably below the combined German effort at present. To exceed it calls for superhuman efforts on the part of American industry. Given the time, the incentive and the opportunity, the task is not too great for accomplishment.

Announcement is made from Italy that the Nazi and Fascist economic systems are virtually merged and 'are henceforward to be considered as one unit." Ever see a bass swallow a perch? That also is a merger.

The attitude of the administration toward labor is something like that of the doting grandmother who declared, "I will make that child behave if it takes every lump of sugar in

Defense Will Change American Habits

By Owen L. Scott.

This country seems about to undergo the unique experience of enjoying deep depression in the midst of an unprecedented boom. That prenomenon will grow from what now looks like a decision to become serious in an effort to produce armament.

The past year was devoted to loud talk about turning the United States into an arsenal. Actually, the year was spent turning out an avalanche of peacetime gadgets such as the world never dreamed of seeing. The production of guns was in a trickle so small as to be scarcely recognized when measured against the promises made.

Signs, however, suddenly are appearing that suggest that this Government is in earnest in its announced intention to set world's records in the production of

One such sign was found in the order denying priority for materials used in construction of homes and factories and public buildings not necessary to defense. Another was found in the order shutting off the use of copper by many nondefense industries after January 1. A third such sign may be discovered in plans to requisition hoards of scarce metals held by companies not doing armament work. Still another is seen in an effort to find ways to give armament orders to others than the 56 big companies which now hold about 75 per

can people. In that case there will be next to no automobiles produced for civilian use. Production schedules now approved will be revised drastically downward. The few new cars that are made will be rationed carefully. The same will be true of refrigerators, washing machines, radios, air-conditioning equipment, houses and all of those things that use metal and have become virtual necessities for Americans. At the same time industry will be booming. There will be jobs for everybody able and willing to work. Strikes will be a luxury. Instead of an avalanche of automobiles and washing machines, industry will be turning out an avalanche of warships, airplanes, tanks, guns and ammunition. Those are things that the public cannot enjoy and cannot add to its living standard. This means that if President Roosevelt now is serious about armament, Hitler is going to have something to worry about two years from now, or even one year from now, and the American public is going to sacrifice many of the gadgets for the ownership of which To understand why the President probably is serious and why the job shead is so big, it is necessary to have some facts.

One of those facts is that Germany started to do in 1933 what the United States is starting to do only today. In all of the years since 1933 Germany has been devoting her industry to the one big job of producing arms. Right now between 60 and 80 per cent of the entire energy of the German nation is directed to the war effort. Furthermore, the Germans have conquered vast stores of munitions in other nations and have conquered industries that are working

Second of the facts to know is that Japan, with vast American help, has been preparing for war since 1931. More than 60 per cent of her industry is devoted to war. She has a puny plant, but the scrap iron, machinery, copper and other products that she has stored in quantity come largely from the United States, where shortages now are acute. By using American-supplied materials. Japan has a Navy that temporarily is stronger than the American fleet in the Pacific.

Third of the facts to know is that Great Britain is devoting more than one-half of all her industry to armament production. The trouble is that British industry compared with American industry or even with German industry is very small. It has been devoted to armament production in earnest for only 18 months. The result is that British forces, other than the air force at home and the navy, are pitifully supplied as compared with German forces.

The other big fact to understand is that the United States, after talking for one year about becoming the arsenal of democracy, is devoting scarcely 15 per cent of her industrial strength to armament production. The other 85 per cent is devoted to peacetime purposes.

Yet: Officials who have studied such things say that the United States will need to devote 50 per cent of her entire energy for one full year to the production of arms before the British-American effort can even catch up to Germany. To turn a 15 per cent effort into a 50 per cent effort is going to force some drastic changes in the habits of American industry and in the habits of American individuals. If the industrial machine that is grinding out armament is going to be kept in repair, there won't be many things left over to sell to the

As matters now stand, the choice confronting the United States appears to

Either the country can go along as in the past enjoying itself and hoping that a victorious Germany will make few demands that cannot be met out of a

Or, it now is to be necessary to buckle down in earnest to turn out war goods in a volume that eventually will inundate even the Germans with all the equipment that they and their conguered countries can turn out.

The second alternative is the only one now open, unless the United States is ready to accept the status in the world of a secondary power, operating on rules made in Germany. Until now, there had been a widespread notion that the German war machine would bog down because it ran out of oil or rubber or copper or steel or some other commodity. The comfortable assumption was held that a blockade could defeat Hitler and that there would be little need for any great effort to bring his downfall. past year, so far as armament goes. What now has happened in Russia represents to all intents and purposes a breaking of the blockade.

AN UNREGISTERED OPINION

By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

The setting of the following incident was exceedingly simple and homely. It was in a little village far up in the State of Maine. The occasion had brought together a majority of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. They were met to pay their last tribute of affection to one of its members. In a little country church set amid the pines the burial office had just been read, and the distinguished mourners, Governors, Senators and justices were met in the rector's study awaiting the train that was to take them to a distant city for the interment of their friend.

It was a silent group, evidently occupied with the characteristics and virtues of their distinguished colleague's life. After a long period where no word was spoken one of the company ventured to break the silence with this observation: "I am wondering what you men are thinking about." There was a momentary pause when one of the justices, namely the late Mr. Justice Holmes, responded in a subdued and quiet voice: 'I cannot speak for the rest of my colleagues, but I have been thinking of the deep significance and utter majesty of St. Paul's great chapter on immortality which has just been read in the service, namely, the 15th of First Corinthians." Continuing he said: "There is nothing. so far as I know in the world's religious literature, comparable to it."

The justice had posed a question to which every man in the room responded. For a half hour this remarkable and widely familiar chapter became the subject of reverent discussion. It disclosed a wide knowledge of both philosophy and the most famed of the world's religious books. From this particular chapter the distinguished company turned to other of St. Paul's epistles and the conclusion reached was that the three greatest of St. Paul's chapters were the 13th of First Corinthians on charity, the 15th chapter of the same letter on immortality and the 8th chapter of Ro-

They were overpowered, however, and soon the victorious miners had entered the field and driven the guards to their quarters." Two days later the same tactics were repeated at Oliver Springs, 200 convicts being released and the stockade burned.

battle is nothing new in the world's long chapter of wars, but it focuses attention on what women of Russia have been experiencing for a quarter century. That experience, or more aptly put, a renaissance for Russian women, is one of the finest chanters of Russia's progress under Thus in a memorable survey did great its present regime. Women doing battle at the front is only an outward revelation of what has been accomplished in the short space of 25 years. Women of Russia, like women in all other lands, have not always enjoyed what they do today. Their task was hard enough before the end of the first World War. At that time millions of Russia's young men had been slaughtered in the marshes of East Prussia, in the Galician hills and elsewhere. The

New Day for Russian

Women

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Report from Russia of women going to 1917 Bolshevist revolution had been followed by disastrous foreign invasion and civil strife. Russia's credit was gone and her capitalist neighbors looked on her with great suspicion and fear. Her leaders realized that, at whatever cost, it was vital for Russia to transform her bankrupt agricultural economy into that of a modern industrial state. To carry on an unprecedented program of work and more work was the order of the day. Turning furrows in a field or operating a machine in a factory became more important than raising a family, so domestic life began to be looked upon as a sort of privilege to be taken on or discarded at will. Divorces became increasingly common, one court handling 5,000 in one year. And divorce was quite a simple matter, for all a bored citizen had to do was to visit the Bureau of Vital Statistics and request papers of freedom. Three rubles was the charge, and on payment of the fee a post card was sent notifying his erstwhile mate that a divorce had been granted. Whether the card arrived or not was of no concern, for its recording as having been sent could not be contested.

This loose and unorthodox handling of divorces was looked upon in many instances as a means of freeing many men for state labor activities, for it was found that a worker without dependents made a higher average in production. What Russia needed was more man power for the state; let the home fare the best it could

But while all this was going on Russia was brought face to face with the fact that a nation's home life is the nation's life, and without the first the second i. of little value. In the case of Russia. family life had to be given a first consideration because it had no stream of immigration to draw upon as did the United States between 1865 and 1915. So, abruptly, the post card divorce procedure was abolished. The influential Soviet press began to speak of the responsibilities of marriage, of the need for family life, of the mutual duties of parents and offspring. A new code of ethics had been put into operation. was the beginning of the building of a new womanhood in Russia. Moreover officials began to check the number of dependents who had been forced upon the state for support as a result of loose divorce laws, for practically no penalty for failure to support minor children was involved in the dissolution of a marriage. Divorce, of course, still remains a privilege of the dissatisfied, but it is not to be undertaken casually. A document of separation must be signed by both husband and wife, and where there is desertion, the plaintiff must wait at lear six months before the official parting And, above all, any children affected must be considered. No alimony 1 granted except in cases where there ar minor children, and if an alimony dodge is caught, and usually he is, he goes to prison for two years. So, when Russia decreed that a man could not marry for mere convenience and leave a wife at will, Russian women came in for new respect. At this time too, Stalin began to ask that more attention be given the individual, that the man as well as the machine be guarded. and that everywhere woman be given due respect and opportunity to rise in the role of respected motherhood. And it is here that woman, as a child bearer and rearer, steps into the breach. Give her a stabilized family and the soil will

Within 10 years after this new awakening over the proper treatment of Russian women nearly 3,000,000 were enrolled in the National Air and Chemical Defense Society. Hundreds became pilots, and one group of women designed a sport plane capable of making 250 miles an hour. In 10 years, too, Russia had enrolled 100,000 crack markswomen and half a million more were in training for sharpshooters' medals.

lightened and socially-minded popula-

This new day for Russian women ushered in other things for them. A survey, for instance, was conducted throughout Russia to see that women received the places they merit in industry and the professions along with men, with equal compensation and with equal opportunity. Party groups got busy ferreting out negligent application of the laws that guarantee women a chance to advance in any field. As a result, there is no profession or occupation in Russia in which women do not hold important posts. In industry they hold approximately 10 per cent of the key jobs, about 5 per cent in transportation and commercial organizations, and among scientific workers 30 per cent are women.

This new emphasis on womanhood and family life in Russia received a symbolic and official approval a little more than six years ago when Josef Stalin was photographed for the first time with his family. Until then 170,-000,000 Russians did not know that their leader had a chubby 10-year-old girl and a sturdy 14-year-old son. Prior to that time if any one had made inquiry about the Stalin children, the chill reply from some Kremlin guard would have been that Comrade Stalin's family life was his

Review of 113th Week of War

By Blair Bolles.

For the United States the central spot of the war last week was a point on the Atlantic Ocean in the neighborhood of Iceland. There a torpedo between Thursday night and Friday morning hit and sent to the bottom the U.S. S. Reuben James, American destroyer, the first American warship lost in action in World War II. Approximately 120 men and officers were aboard, and at least 44 men were saved. The vessel was convoying, and a Berlin spokesman said: "A convoy is an English affair, and whoever participates in it becomes part of an English formation." President Roosevelt said there would be no change in American policy, which is one of "shoot first" on the seas. Who fired the torpedo? None has said.

Far from the Atlantic, a man of Iran told an Associated Press correspondent last week he expected the Nazis late this winter or early next spring would be heading for his capital, Tehran. That the Iranian would make this guess meant that he expected the Germans would be successful in their drive against the Caucasus, which now becomes intense. Axis troops are in Crimea. Axis troops are at the edge of Rostov. Both positions, in the hands of an enemy, are a severe threat to Russia. Should the Germans get through the mountains of the Caucasus, they will be confronted with English troops in Iran. Should the Germans take all of Crimea, including the naval base of Sevastopol, they will control the Black Sea and make the lot of Turkey, with a long Black Sea shore, difficult. German pressure against Turkey to take an active part in the Axis battle now appears strong.

Russian Front

Rostov, Crimea, Leningrad and Moscow are the four principal points in the military picture of Russia last week. The Germans moved closer to Moscow, and they brought new vigor to bear on the problem of capturing the long-besieged city of Leningrad. But Moscow, Leningrad, Rostov and most of Crimea are still Russian.

German troops on Wednesday broke through the Isthmus of Perekop, joining the Crimean Peninsula with the Ukrainlan mainland. One hundred miles south Black Sea naval base of the Russiansthe last naval base on the broad Euxine left to the Russians, who have lost Nikolaev and Odessa. A bulletin from Adolf Hitler's field headquarters said three German divisions, about 60,000 men, succeeded in breaking through Red Army defense into the Perekop after 10 days of hard fighting. The Perekop is just 4 miles wide.

German dispatches said the Russians on the peninsula were in considerable force, but Berlin commentators thought the Reds of Crimea were trapped. They envisioned another enemy pushed into the sea, as the English were pushed at Dunkerque into the North Sea and in Greece into the Aegean and as the Russians were pushed earlier at Tallinn into the Baltic. The communique from Hitler's headquarters claimed the usual statistical triumph: \15,700 Soviet prisoners, 13 tanks and 109 cannon taken by the Germans in their successful storming of the isthmus.

The next day brought further sanguine German reports. Nazi forces were enemy" in Crimea. The Russians had guarded the marshy Perekop with an elaborate trench and casemate system more than 5 miles long, with excavations 40 feet deep in some places and sheer concrete walls in others. This is what I tinued."

the Nazis have penetrated. Aside from the Sevastopol base, the Crimea is strategically important for two reasons: 1. Its eastern extremity guards the narrow strait into the Sea of Azov. 2. Troops crossing the strait would have a shortcut into the Caucasus. If the Germans put troops across the Strait of Kerch, which connects the shallow Azov Sea with the Black, they would enter the North Caucasian area in a position making it possible for them to co-operate with German troops at the north in a pincers movement.

The troops at the north now are hammering toward Rostov, which is the of the isthmus is Sevastopol, the great | corner where one approaching from the west would turn south into the Caucasus. The Rostov operation is closely linked with the Crimean undertaking. The Russian government on Monday indicated its expectation of an Axis push on Rostov. Next day Russia admitted the Germans were Rostov Periled within 15 to 10 miles of Rostov, a great industrial city on the Don River. London sources, in anticipation of this drive, have been predicting that if the Germans capture Rostov, the green light would be flashed to Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell's imperial forces to march through Iran and establish a new British fighting front in the Caucasus. He is said to command from 500,000 to 1,000,000 troops. This prospect is the most interesting future possibility of the Russian war.

Military advices reaching London said the Germans already by Tuesday had succeeded in knocking most of the Donets Basin-near Rostov-war foundries out of operation, with several key points actually in Nazi hands and others isolated by crippled communications lines. The Crimea, heavily fortified appendix dangling into the sea, is a vital cog in Nazi plans for two reasons. First, if captured, it opens the way for the now-familiar pincers operation, this time directed against the Caucasus. Second, the great Russian base at Sevastopol dominates Black Sea trade lanes and must be eliminated before Germany could cash in on its contemplated capture of the Caucasus.

There are only two land approaches to the Crimea—the Perekop Isthmus, 3 to 4 miles wide, and a neck of land and swamp, even narrower, across which the rail line runs.

The next day Soviet dispatches said Red Army engineers were planting death-trap land mines in Rostov and preparing to leave the city of 500,000, if they had to leave it, in a smoking ruins. Nazi military commentators said that once Rostov has fallen, the way would be open for swift armored divisions to strike south toward the nerve center of the oil region, Maikop, 175 miles below Rostov. In other words, Rostov in Russian hands is an impediment to the German plans. And despite the preparations to quit

Well north of Rostov, the Germans hammered their way past the industrial city of Kharkov, in the Upper Donets region. The Nazis claimed this city's capture a week ago Friday, but the Russians would not admit the loss until last Thursday. From Rostov to Kharkov, the Russian armies are moving at the command of Marshal Semeon Timoshenko, and he is fighting desperately to keep the Axis from turning around the Rostov corner.

German legions smashed almost due south from Berislav, and found in the Perekop Isthmus the heaviest fortifications Russian military engineers could devise.

A natural line of advance eastward would fit into any plan for attack on Caucasian oilfields. Once across the Kerch Channel, German forces would have a choice of several routes. They could swing north to become the southern jaw of pincers converging on Rostov. They could swing south along the Caucasian coast.

In the midst of these variegated activities on the Russia front, Hitler received some interesting visitors, two Turkish generals, Ali Faud Erden and Hueseyn Erkilet. Turkey is bound ultimately to figure largely in any German plans for conduct of the fight after the prospective move into the Caucasus. Some envision Strategy a struggle by the Axis this winter with the British on a front stretching from Iran to Libya. For the present, according to one unnamed British military informant, the Germans have three present aims before an Iran-Libyan front would materialize:

1. To cut off Sevastopol with the hope of making it possible for German armies to operate along the eastern shore of the Black Sea during the winter.

2. To seize the Russian oil fields near Krasnodar, which are about equal in production to Rumania's better known Ploesti area.

3. To cut the supply lines for American and British materials from Iran through the Caucasus to Russia. As yet, no deliveries of military equipment have been made to the Red armies by this route, although some non-military supplies have gone over it.

The Germans, in the British estimation, depend on Japan to close Vladi. vostok (the Russian Pacific port) to American supplies for the U.S.S.R. Goods for Russia supposedly enter that country via Vladivostok, Iran and Archangel or Murmansk. Ice soon will hamper trade with Archangel, and a German bomb last week tore up part of the railroad connecting Moscow with Japan, according to unconfirmed news reaching England, engaged in a border fight with Russian troops in Siberia last week. The Wavers story said the Japanese withdrew, leaving some guns behind them. The Japanese policy has become one of smokescreen, as the government issues contradictory statements of aims and desires. It is a striking fact that a statement frequently indicates wish for amicable relations with the United States. When the Germans get past Rostov, Japan might give some sign of belligerency.

One country already is satisfied with the Russian war-Rumania. According to an Associated Press correspondent with the Rumanian Army in Tiraspol, Occupied Russia, the Rumanians regard their territorial ambitions satisfied with an advance to the Bug River, from 50 to 100 miles beyond their 1939 frontier at the Dniester. AIR EXPANSION SLOWS AUTONOMY DRIVE cent in the air forces announced recently by Secretary of War Stimson will make this branch the second largest in the Army, but at the same time probably will end whatever immediate hopes are still held by proponents of a separate, independent air arm.

War Developments Ease Demands for Independent Air Force

Expanding the present 54-group air program to 84 groups means raising the Air Force strength from about 200,000 to 400,000 men by next June, and possibly to 500,000 after that time. While this latter figure would still be less than half the size of the German air force, estimated at more than 1,000,000, it would bring it within hailing distance of the infantry, "backbone" of the Army.

The breakdown of the various arms and branches of the Army is no longer being given out by the War Department, but in a report as of July 1, Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, announced that the four field armies in the continental United States had a strength of 456,000 men, exclusive of the armored force, artillery, engineers and other supporting troops, harbor defense units, men assigned to posts, supply depots and ports of embarkation and selectees in training. Add to that about 120,000 men in overseas garrisons to get a rough estimate of the size of the Army's largest single arm.

Pending Legislation.

This sudden expansion, however, may well react unfavorably for proponents of more than half a dozen bills pending in the House and Senate to set up a separate and independent air force. While there seems little prospect now that hearings will be held on any of the proposals this year, Air Force officers are quietly assembling data in the event they should be, and sponsors of the bills have lined up an impressive list of aviation "names" to support their thesis that a separate air force is vital to our national defense. After all is said and done, however, the decision is likely to hinge on the testimony of the officer who is bound to be the star witness in the case, Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces and deputy chief of staff. If proponents of a separate air force are counting him on their side, they may be destined for somewhat

None of the Air Force officers, least of all those in policy-making circles, speaks for Gen. Arnold on the touchy subject of a separate air force, and Gen. Arnold steadfastly has refused to make any comment whatsoever. If the separate air force proponents, who have announced they intend to place him on the witness stand at hearings on their bills, expect him to declare or admit under questioning that he favors such a step, they doubtless are basing their hopes on statements in "Winged Warfare," the book he wrote last year with curred in if he did not actually write, "Winged Warfare," in which the authors, | Force is not only going to get the planes, | power into being.

corps setup. But that was more than a year ago, and a year under practically wartime conditions, so far as the need for speed in organization and production is concerned, is a long time. In this interval certain inescapable factors have arisen, many high-ranking officers believe, which make any further radical changes inadvisable at the present time, no matter what the ultimate organization of the Air Forces may be. Organizational Problem.

Before anything else come practical considerations. If a bill to create an independent air force became law today, something approaching chaos would result. The air unit, being part of the Army, has no Signal Corps, Quartermaster Corps or ordnance departments of its own and would have to establish them and other necessary branches before it would be a going organization.

It is acquiring these offices gradually. It has an air staff, corresponding to the general staff which serves the Army as a whole, and an air adjutant general to handle its own records and "paper work." Only last month, the post of air surgeon was set up, indicating perhaps that it is to have more jurisdiction over its own medical department. Heretofore, the Medical Corps has served the air forces in the same way that it has the other branches. Even the flight surgeons, specialists in aviation medicine, were Medical Corps officers assigned to duty with the air forces.

Other divisions, such as those for inspection, personal, legal, fiscal, training and procurement of strictly aviation equipment, even a recruiting service, exist in miniature within the air forces' organization. They can be expanded one by one, as the need grows, without any difficulty. But by expanding them all at the same time, breaking off suddenly connections and procedure of many years' standing, the dislocation would be far Gradual Approach Advised.

When Brig. Gen. "Billy" Mitchell was assistant chief of the Air Corps and the entire arm consisted of a few thousand officers and men, such a change might have been effected rather easily. Even as late as a year or two ago, when its personnel did not exceed about 50,000 officers and men, the step might have been accomplished without too much disorganization, although Gen. Mitchell himself pointed out that in peacetime, at least, creating a separate air force would be a task "so complicated and so difficult to put into effect that it could only be brought to a state of efficiency after years of trial, hundreds of mistakes and the wasting of many lives and millions of dollars in money."

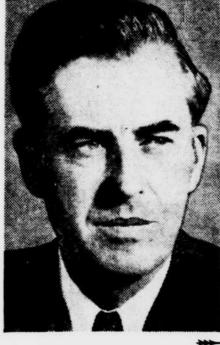

The increase of from 100 to 150 per | seemed to favor an independent air | discussing the "Air Force for Us," state: "The separate air force idea must not be approached with the state of mind that everything now in existence or which has been done is wrong. . . . This long step should be taken, if it is taken at all, only after careful planning and mature thought and not with a zest for radical reform. There should be a stage of gradual evolution as against an overnight cutting of binding ties."

Aside from purely physical considerations, however, such as the problems arising from a new form of organization and sudden, large-scale increase in the size of the air forces, certain factors of a military nature are equally important. One is that in any military organization an order is an order. The order to reorganize the Army's air component in a prescribed manner has been issued. It s going to be carried out without any ifs, ands or buts. One of Gen. Arnold's salient characteristics is his loyalty. He expects and gets wholehearted support from his subordinates, regardless of any personal opinions they may hold, once a policy has been decided upon. He gives the same sort of support to those above him. One observer illustrated this point with an incident told of Gen. Tecumseh Sherman, who disapproved so strongly of Gen. Grant's plan for the capture of Vicksburg during the Civil War that he wrote a letter "for the record" predicting it would be a failure. When his superior decided to go ahead, however, Gen. Sherman performed the part assigned him in the rather difficult operation, crossing the Mississippi above the city, moving his army downstream and recrossing below to attack from the south, in such an energetic and skillful way that Gen. Grant later gave him a large share of the credit for the success of the campaign.

Recognition Is Goal.

Without saying so, the inference was that co-operation in the present situation would be of the same variety and regardless of any personal opinions heretofore held. What air officers, including Gen. Mitchell, have been driving at these many years is adequate recognition for the air arm; the separate air force was only a means to an end, not the end itself. And on the recognition side, there is much to be said. As late as three years ago, our goal was the 2,320plane recommendation of the Baker Board of 1933: today it is limited only by productive capacity of our airplane plants. There were some qualms during the early stages of the expansion program that not enough stress was being laid on long range planes suitable for independent action and too much on short range planes designed strictly for been corrected. What matters it if the wanted. Advocates of the independent air force plan have described the June reorganization as a sop to public opinion, designed to forestall congressional action on the pending bills. There probably is a good deal of truth in the claim, although in the opinion of many highranking officers "sop" is not the word to describe the increased autonomy which they feel undeniably has been granted. Just what degree of autonomy ultimately is to be allowed, of course, remains to be seen. As a matter of fact, the lines of demarcation between the tled and probably will not be settled without some fundamental differences of opinion being revealed. However, these are differences to be expected in any such radical organization as the new air force setup. There is no evidence to date that they cannot be worked out. Until there is, it is not the part of wisdom, and certainly not in the interest of national defense, to proclaim in advance, these officers point out, that the whole plan is unworkable and complete autonomy is the only solution.

One more phase of the question should be mentioned, although it probably never would be in any hearings that might be held. In some quarters, the motives inspiring some of the proponents are the cause of some concern, particularly those who have long been anxious to "vindicate" Gen. Mitchell. Some of Gen. Mitchell's most devoted followers are inclined to feel he has been sufficiently vindicated at the present time without creating a separate and independent air force dedicated, so to speak, to his memory. That might reopen old wounds and have the effect of creating dissension co-ordination is recognized as the prime which Gen. MR. WALLACE IS BUSIEST VICE PRESIDENT

With Three Large Jobs, He Has Anything but a Sinecure Now

By W. B. Ragsdale.

Worry tries to hide in his bright blue eves. A thin sprinkle of gray is edging his dark hair. He is the only overworked Vice President in American his-

Time was when the outer office of the vice presidential suite in the Senate Office Building held just one desk with a telephone, a typewriter and a secretary, plus several chairs for visitors. It was really a reception room, not an office in which a great deal of work was done. Now, the chairs are still there for visitors and they come in through the same door but there are three desks and three secretaries and all sorts of telephones with gadgets and work heaped up on the

More secretaries fill the next room Telephones ring. Typewriters clatter. Through a second door, in the corner room of the vice presidential suite, Wallace works at a desk with his back to the wall. A bookcase filled with volumes, mostly on economic subjects, stands back of him, against the wall, within easy reach. The view from his desk is of the wall on the other side of the room. If he sees the Capitol and Capitol Plaza, he must get up and walk over to the window. There are no easy distractions; if he gets his mind off his work, he himself has to pry it off.

Parade of Problems.

To that desk comes a regular parade of problems-prickly, messy problems that can't be handled bare-handed but require good thick gloves. Senators and House members get squawks from constituents who need metal to keep plants running, who want things of all kinds from O. P. M. and S. P. A. B. With the chairman of S. P. A. B. on Capitol Hill, why should they trot downtown to O. Senators and congressional delegations

If any is left, it goes to House members, although there are so many of these that the Vice President tries to do what he can with their problems over the telephone.

That is one of the chief reasons why Wallace has never established an office in O. P. M., where S. P. A. B. operates, or in the Q street building, which houses the Economic Defense Board, which he also heads. He feels that ex-efficio he is part of Congress and that Senators might not like it if they called on their presiding officer and found that he was n an office in some other section of

"In Warm Springs, yes," he replied. "It was raining—not raining, just a drizzle. I had just come in from a walk with Ray Moley."

And there it was; the rush-backed rockers on the wide porch; rain dripping slowly from the eaves; the mist glistening in the light, and a man from Iowa who had just been picked as Secretary of Agriculture and was finding it hard to talk about himself.

Heavy Schedule.

Wallace has no average day. His routine varies widely. Certain fixed landmarks stand out upon the horizon of his week, however, to fix the general direction of his course.

On Mondays, he goes to the White House with legislative leaders for a talk about the week's program in Congress. Wednesdays bring a conference of members of the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board-S. P. A. B. for short. Thursdays or Fridays brings a cabinet

Ever so often, there is a meeting of the Economic Board, of which he is chairman. Its job is to co-ordinate the efforts of departments doing economic defense work. It used to meet once a week, but now that a pattern has been worked out most of its problems are settled by conferences of its subcommittees and the full board meets only on call.

Along with these tasks comes the duty of presiding over the Senate and of lending a hand where he might be of help to congressional leaders. Still Plays Tennis.

All of this adds up to a very full day.

Wallace still gets in as much tennis as he can in the early mornings, and at 53 he thinks he can run as fast as any man of 30 on Capitol Hill. But his workday begins at 9 a.m. and carries through until 5 or 6 with his meals often turned into conferences and business frequently following him home at night.

Moreover, the social season is about to arrive upon the Washington scene. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt have wiped social events off the White House calendar for the winter because of the emergency. But this may give the Vice President an even bigger load, although he hopes his dining out and formal social affairs can be held to two nights a | Wallace, himself, doesn't think of it that reek-Thursday and Sunday nights.

Vice President Garner made a clean break with this practice. Neither he nor Mrs. Garner cared for social affairs and they flatly refused to fall in line with the dining-out custom. This left the new Vice President and Mrs. Wallace free to make their own choice. They adhered last winter to a schedule of two nights out a week.

So far as the future of the vice presidency is concerned, Wallace feels that what man does in that job depends entirely upon the man, upon what his background, his experience and aptitudes fit him for. This largely has been true throughout American history.

During his early years in the vice presidency Garner served as a legislative general for the President. Many of the New Deal laws were placed upon the statutes as a result of his work. His long experience, his many friendships on Capitol Hill fitted him especially for this work. He could portray the mind of Congress to the President.

Knows Cabinet Problems.

Wallace comes from the cabinet. His long association with its members, his present attendance at its meetings, his close official link with the President, put him in an excellent position to act as a mediator. He is of the cabinet and not in it, just as he is of the Senate and not

History holds three chief instances of particularly close association between Presidents and their Vice Presidents. The first was that of Andrew Jackson and Martin Van Buren whom Jackson elevated into the succession. Next came James K. Polk and George M. Dallas.

President Polk gave Dallas some of the Pennsylvania patronage. He also consulted him on his message, on the Oregon boundary question, on many other problems. First "Assistant President."

Closest of all, perhaps, was the association of President McKinley and Vice President Hobart. They met first during the campaign. Hobart lived near the White House, visited there often. His wife helped Mrs. McKinley, a woman of frail health, entertain. Vice President Hobart kept President McKinley in close touch with the Senate, did all sorts of Their relationship was so close that Hobart was often referred to as the assistant President, a phrase which has crept out again with reference to Wallace and his new layer of responsibilities.

Independence avenue-or what was for & Ohio Railroad Co. proffering every many years, and until recently, B street southwest-is fast changing its appearance, and what was once the northern boundary of the "Island" will not be accompanied by his aide, Lt. Stuart, recognized soon by the early Washingtonians who knew it during its best residential period, when some of the city's foremost families resided here, and by some who may even recall the days when there were but few houses in sections of this thoroughfare, in ante-bellum days. But things have changed, and now Independence avenue is to be widened throughout and perhaps extended to the Potomac River and become one of the Capital's finest boulevards, though to the former residents of old B street it will never look like home again.

All of the early structures east of Seventh street on the south side of Independence avenue have already been removed, and those remaining between Seventh and Eleventh streets will be removed as soon as the development plans progress.

About the most historic landmark on this thoroughfare is the old Columbian. or National Army, Building, at the northwest corner of Sixth street, and this building will probably not be removed for some time to come. It was erected in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1855, and when the Civil War came on it was taken possession of by the Government and became a part of the Armory Square Hospital.

Foreign Exhibits

After it was vacated by the War Department it remained unoccupied for some years. Toward the close of the Centennial Exhibition of 1876 a number of foreign governments gave to the United States an enormous amount of exhibits for the National Museum, this building not being occupied until 1881.

Knowing that space must be secured immediately in which to store these vast collections, Congress, upon the request of the Smithsonian Institution, turned over the armory for this purpose. Later it became the headquarters of the Fish Commission and of its successor, the Bureau of Fisheries, which remained in this building until the Department of Commerce Building was recently completed, when it was moved into that fine struc-

The old armory first came into particular notice at the time of the John Brown raid, which began on Sunday night, October 16, 1859, more than 82 years ago, and regarding what happened there on this date and on the following day, The Star of October 18,

"A Night of Alarm.—The Harpers Ferry Insurrection.-Movements in This City.—Upon receipt of the intelligence in this city, yesterday, of the insurrection at Harpers Ferry, the President issued orders to Col. Harris of the United States Marine Corps to dispatch all the available force of the barracks (per special train) to the scene of the difficulties. In one hour from the receipt of the order, a detachment of marines and non-commissioned officers of the corps, under Capt. Green, arrived at the railroad depot. The detachment consisted of 81 privates, 11 sergeants, 13 corporals and one bugler.

"They took with them seven guns, Dahlgreen howitzers (three from the Navy Yard and four from the barracks), ington was then famous. 300 shells and a large quantity of ammunition. They also had ample supplies for several days' service. Quite a number of gentlemen volunteered to go up with the troops, but they could not be received. The marines were received by the Secretaries of War and Navy, who communicated to Capt. Green his instructions as to his course of action when he should arrive at the spot.

"Maj. Russell of the naval staff accompanied the marines, under instructions from the Secretary of War. When it became known that an anonymous letter had been received by the Secretary of War some two months ago, giving warning of an organized attack to be made simultaneously upon the armory works at Harpers Ferry, Wheeling and Washington, considerable apprehension was felt by the Government and municipal authorities, and measures were instantly taken to the end of extinguishing any possible disturbance that might take place at this point."

Another item appearing in The Star under the same date says:

possible facility to the Government their road would afford. The consultation not ending until 4 p.m., Col. Lee, U. S. A., immediately afterwards, on a special train, set out to overtake the detachment of the United States

While the Government was thus acting to crush the insurrection at Harpers Ferry the Mayor of Washington, not wishing to be caught unprepared, called for Federal aid, and The Star tells us of this in the following item:

"Maj. Brent dispatched a requisition to the Secretary of War, who, upon receipt thereof, issued an order for him to draw on the United States Arsenal for 200 stand of arms and 5,000 rounds of ball and buckshot cartridge. The arms were received at the office of Capt. Goddard, chief of police, where they were all loaded with cartridge and bayonets fixed. The entire police force was on duty, one-half on parade and the other 50 under arms at the City Hall, for action at a moment's warning. Police mounted on horseback were station at every outgive instant warning of any hostile demonstrations from outside the city."

At the time no one knew to what extent the Harpers Ferry trouble would reach, and President Buchanan was about as much alarmed as any one else, hence he called out, through the Mayor,

John Brown, as he appeared

It did not take the militia long to assemble at the armory and to assume a real warlike air. Nor did it take The Star reporter long to reach there and find out what the soldiers were doing, even if he did get mired in the mud for which Wash-

The force assembled at the armory on the occasion of the John Brown raid did not leave the quarters, and as soon as all danger had passed members were permitted to return to their homes.

Locally, at the beginning of the Civil War, the Columbian Armory proved of much importance, for it was here that the three-months District troops-the first volunteers to answer the call of April 15. 1861-received their arms and

It was shortly after the opening of this hospital that Walt Whitman came to Washington, and as an Army nurse made frequent visits to the Army hospitals, particularly to Armory Square. "I saw him, time and again," says an early account, "in the Washington hospitals, or wending his way there with basket or haversack on his arm, and the strength of beneficence suffusing his face. As a nurse, Walt Whitman may be forgotten, but as a poet he will long be remembered, especially for his "When Lilacs Last in the Doorvard Bloomed' and his "O, Captain, My Captain," inspired by the death of President Lincoln. The last of these follows:

"Oh. captain! My captain! Our fearful trip is done,

In Christian Hines' "Early Recollections of Washington City," that author says that: "Among the earliest settlers of Washington was a Mr. Jacobs. a stone-cutter, who lived on the east side of Seventh street between B street south and Maryland avenue, on what is now called the Island. He was the proprietor of a large plot of groundperhaps the greater part of a square. This piece of ground was known by the name of Spring Garden. "Here Mr. Jacobs kept a house of entertainment something similar to the numerous restaurants which now abound in our city. I recollect there were, on the opposite side of the street, at that time (1802 or 1803), several large oak trees, on which were suspended two or three swings intended for the amusement of young people. Assailed By Abolitionists

At a later date in this block were located the most noted slave pens in the city. They were owned by W. Robey and conducted by J. W. Neal & Co. During the period of 1836 they were brought considerably in the limelight by ardent abolitionists, and the comments, even of foreigners visiting the city, should have been sufficient to have caused Congress to put an end to the slave trade in Washington long before it did.

Of this particular pen, an English writer, who came here in 1835, said: "One day I went to see the 'slave pen'- hovel right against the Capitol, from which it is distant about half a mile, with no house intervening. The outside alone is accessible to the eye of the visitor, what passes within being reserved for the exclusive observation of its owner, a man by the name of Robey, and his unfortunate victims. It is surrounded by a wooden paling 14 or 15 feet in height, with the posts outside to prevent escape, and separated from the building by a space too narrow to permit of a free circulation of air. . . . At the southeast corner of Eighth and B streets was another slave pen, of which Walter C. Clephane writes:

"The slave pen in this city best remembered by our old residents was kept by one Williams, and was located on the southeast corner of Eighth and B streets southwest just south of the Smithsonian Grounds."

Today, Independence avenue from Seventh to Eleventh street contains the old residences of a number of early Southwest families. At 814 was the home of R. A. Golden, and at the southeast corner of Ninth street once lived Arsenius Harvey, and at the southwest corner was the home of James J. Cooper. At 906 was the home and office of Dr. Louis J. Brothers. W. A. H. Church was at No. 912, while Dr. Harrison D. Crook lived at 920.

Women Brave Perils of Gunpowder Plant

see the American pioneer spirit at its pioneering best, one should take a look at women working for defense side by side with the men of the Nation in its factories and plants. Women are doing the most dangerous of tasks with a nonchalance (and a carefulness, too) that betokens long practice and dexterity.

"It's not so different from making jell or canning or putting up summer chickens for winter use," they tell me. "It all takes a steady hand, if nothing is to be wasted and you don't want a scalded hand or foot. Powder's easy enough to handle if you just remember that that's all there is to it."

All! Just explosive black powder, susceptible to sparks, abrasion, friction, bad weather and on contact with most metals.

In the Charlestown black powder plant, no worker may have any tiny piece of metal on her clothing. Even the steel shank in her shoe must be replaced by wood. The ordnance plants provide these shoes. Not a hairpin, not a garter with a metal clasp.

All defense workers in these branches have to pass a very rigid physical examination, blood test, X-ray, nerves, general physical condition, nerve reactions—the works, in other words. There is no place for the ailing in munitions

Search at Gate

On arrival at the plant each worker in the explosives area may be searched for matches, either regularly or at unstated intervals. Search may be made at the gate or elsewhere and may include all clothing, baskets, lunchboxes and all personal property.

The day I was at the plant, admission to the clerical office was easy, but before we went over to the explosives area we were asked to look carefully in our pocketbooks and leave any matches in our guiding officer's desk drawer. And we were only going to drive about the grounds and go to the outer courts.

Women of Nation Rally for Defense

By Ruth Cowan.

If Herr Hitler should read this he probably would sputter the Nazi equivalent of "so what"? But that is because he has never met the American clubwoman en masse and in action.

If he had, he might do a bit of worrying that an army of tens of thousands of women, organized in small town sewing bees, big city study clubs and rural canning contests, was falling in line in the national defense program of the General Federation of Women's clubs.

The world's largest organization of women is moving up to strengthen weak spots in Uncle Sam's armor. Their way of doing this may be by baking cookies for soldiers, training as nurses' aides, raising defense stamp money, or as mothers and housewives becoming alarmed that one-half of their men folks have been found under physical par to tote a rifle.

Each day letters are received at the general federation headquarters here from federation clubs throughout the Nation reporting on what the members are actually doing-not just planning to do.

From the day she took office as general federation president, Mrs. John L. Whitehurst of Baltimore has been all note of her three-year term, and she is building the general federation's program around it and is asking State and local federations to do the same,

She promptly set up a new division in the general federation—the department of national defense—and she selected Mrs. Harold V. Mulligan of New York as chairman. Fourteen committees were appointed and Mrs. Whitehurst called on their leaders to get busy. "There is no time to lose" is her motto.

A large, handsome woman, she has some of the same tireless energy that has made Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt a national wonder. In addition to the leadership of 2,000,000 women in the general federation. Mrs. Whitehurst is women's director of the Maryland State National Defense

From the first, Mrs. Whitehurst has been outspoken in the need for national defense. To an organization more used to gentle talk on womanly subjects. Mrs. Whitehurst issued a challenge to her fellow club women to follow her in "a crusade to prepare our country and our people to defend themselves."

She coined a new term, "sixth column," to include women apathetic to the need for national defense and who

out for national defense. It is the key- believe or contend that there is no reason for such a program-and she declared war on it.

To test the temper of her fellow clubwomen and to see first hand how they were responding to the general federation's program, Mrs. Whitehurst recently made a seven-State Midwestern tour which she described as "a fighting crusade to go after the isolationists."

She said her audiences were sometimes "a bit chilly." But she said she was encouraged by the interest the general federation's defense program was getting and the pledges of co-operation by State and local clubs as well as the instances she saw in strongly isolationist territory of women at work in phases of national defense.

That some women may be apathetic or unbelieving regarding the danger she envisages to democracy seems plausible to her. "Women have worked for peace and prayed for peace for so long that they are reluctant to give up the idea of peace and to settle down and prepare for defense, which in their minds means war," she said.

Mrs. Whitehurst is not afraid of the word war and what it might mean. In speeches from State federation platforms cizing and belittling those in power and without stirring up racial and religious hatreds," she asked:

"When will we awaken to the fact that in order to sell democracy we must praise it-not criticize it, appreciate it-not denounce it, and then bestir ourselves in order to fight for it, yes, die for it if

That women are bestirring themselves to build stronger democracy's defenses is evidenced, in Mrs. Whitehurst's opinion, in reports coming to her desk.

The South Dakota federation's national defense chairman has written in that clubwomen in that State are out to break all records in the sale of stamps and bonds for national defense. They are organizing volunteers to staff defense savings information booths.

This federation, as well as other State federations and local clubs, Starkville (Miss.) Woman's Club, for example, have reported that they are giving defense bonds as prizes in contests they conduct which vary from awards for the best canned peaches to reports on taxes. The general federation has invested its limit for one year, $50,000 in defense bonds, Mrs. Whitehurst said. The Allentown (Pa.) Woman's Club has raised enough money to buy a mobile kitchen, which it sent with 22 surgical kits to England. The Princeton (Ill.) Woman's Club has sent 500 comfort kits to English women.

Nazis Pay Bonuses for Babies

By Edwin A. Shanks.

BERLIN.-The Nazis plan to spend a billion reichsmarks ($40,000,000) this year to subsidize marriages and babies. As part of the program to increase population, the German government long has been granting "marriage loans" to encourage poor couples to wed. To encourage births, part of the loan is written off as a sort of bonus for each child born to a loan family.

At present, two motives are given for the steady Nazi campaign to increase the birth rate:

War takes its toll among the healthiest and best men of the nation, it destroys potential fathers.

The expanding Germany of today needs more sons and daughters to fill the newly conquered territories.

"We need more of our best, and only mothers will be able to supply these best," said Das Schwarze Korps, publication of Heinrich Himmler's S. S. Elite Troops. It declares that every German woman should bear a war child because "Greater Germany has become larger" and "in the east wide spaces are waiting to be filled with German life.

"Colonies which we are wresting from British moneybags call for youthful pioneer spirit." the publication adds.

Nazi authorities are keeping an anxlous eye on "disturbing influences" of war on marriage and birth figures. War. on the basis of statistics for Greater Germany, brought an abrupt drop in marriages and subsequently slowed down the birth rate, which was virtually at a standstill in 1940. This was attributed to the vast disposition of troops on both the west and east lines of battle throughout the year.

Before the war, under the prodding of a steady Nazi campaign there were early marriages and more babies. The rise was steady: in 1932 (before Hitler) there were 517,000 marriages and 971,000 births; while in 1939 there were 772,000 marriages and 1.407.000 births for the same "old Germany" areas. When analyzed, this shows that in 1932 the average number of births per 1,000 people was 14.7, but in 1939 this rose to 20.3 per thousand. However, statistics from D.N.B., the German official news agency, disclosed quite a drop in the year 1940.

Population Policies

This same trend occurred in Germany during the World War. There were 1,100,000 fewer babies born in 1914-1919 than in the five years previous.

However, the Reich statistical office has reported a picking up in marriages and birth rates for the first half of 1941. This upward trend is credited to the Nazi population policies, statistical office reports said, and shows that "the vigor of the German nation hasn't been broken in any way by present conditions and later healing of the inevitable war damage is certainly to be expected."

Whether children are born in or out of wedlock is not considered important by Nazi officials. The important thing, they say, is that the children are racially purer Rudolph Hess, now interned in England, and Heinrich Himmler put the official Nazi stamp of approval on illegitimacy, and it is an open secret that a number of the cloisters and monasteries confiscated by the Gestapo are now used to house unwed mothers.

Das Schwarz Korps praised the Mayor of Wattenscheid, in Prussia, when he set up a program in his city to induce unmarried women over 29 years of age to bear children as "a sacrifice for the nation." It also expressed disapproval of "the moral sniffing of stuffy, narrowminded persons and nationally hostile chatter of the churchly guardians of the confessional, who wanted to condemn a whole generation of German women to unproductivity." Das Schwarze Korps expressed hope this city's plan would spread throughout Germany.

For Working Class

The centerpiece of the German policy in increasing marriages and births is the marriage loan. It is designed to set up in housekeeping young couples who normally couldn't afford it. The working class principally takes advantage of these loans, which are financed by an extra income tax imposed on bachelors and spinsters. This extra tax for not being married averages about 600 marks ($240) a year.

Conditions for this loan are that the couple must be healthy and "politically unobjectionable." For eligibility, the annual income of the father may not exceed 8,000 marks ($3,200).

The average loan is 600 marks ($240) made in the form of certificates to buy household furnishings, linens, cooking utensils and the like. For each child born, the couple's debt is reduced one fourth. Ten marks are paid out monthly for each third and fourth child and 20 marks for each fifth and every additional to human problems in a basement work-child thereafter. These marriage loans have very easy terms. They bear no interest, and are mechanism to solve the annoying probpaid off at the rate of 1 per cent lem of the telephone that rings when one monthly, which is deducted from pay is in the bathtub, and the dilemma of checks.

When this marriage loan originally with her purse in a restaurant. was introduced in August, 1932, the stated purpose was not only to encourage marriages and boost the birthrate, but also to reduce unemployment, which was prevalent at that time. In order to open up new jobs, therefore, the prime condition of the loan was that the future wife was a worker who promised not to work after the wedding. By 1938, however, the swing was the other way. There was a shortage of labor. The law, therefore, was changed to permit the granting of marriage loans in cases where the wife continued work after marriage.

German statisticians argue that couples subsidized by the state—those receiving marriage loans-have "greater will" to raise big families than those not so aided. The latest available figures

A Soldier's Story of Army Life

By Pvt. Harlan Althen.

(Of the 175th Infantry.)

FORT BRAGG, N. C .- You wake up to six days, and increasing in length and for what sleep can be obtained before suddenly from your sleep as you hear a plercing shout: "Everybody up; we're pulling out in a few minutes."

By the light of the stars and sometimes a providential moon, you hurriedly roll up your dew-saturated blankets, extricate from your pack your aluminum mess gear and make for the "chow line." You don't see what you're eating or drinking, but it's good and stimulating in the nocturnal dampness. What's more, it may be the only warm meal you'll have until the next nightfall. And in a few minutes you've got your pack on your back, a gas mask and carrier over your 100 shower spouts. left shoulder and a rifle slung over your right shoulder, and you're moving.

You're in the Army now, and you're on maneuvers, taking part in the extensive war games of the 1st Army in the Caro-

A few months ago you and I would have been getting up at 5:15 a.m. in warm, clean barracks in the Middle Atlantic area. Before we got out in formation for reveille we were shaved and slicked up as trim as any commuter.

Look at us now! Perhaps with a few days' growth of beard, and clothes a bit smelly and sticky because we've worn them 24 hours a day for quite a few days. When we do bathe, brush our teeth and shave, we do it with cold water and we have to do it all on one canteen (a quart) of water a day. And the "bath" depends upon how much of the allotment we want to keep for drinking pur-

Scarcity of Water

After several hours of trudging or riding along the dusty backreads in drougth-afflicted Dixie, some of the soldiers remark wistfully, "Gee, for the good old days back at camp." Another says he wrote home for water, while every soldier has come to the conclusion that it is easier to buy beer than water. Maneuvers prove to be a good deal tougher than you first expected. Grumbling is rampant for the first few days, but after a while you come to understand why it is necessary for the Army to move at the most outlandish times, and why water is scarce, and why meals are seemingly never on time. Buttonholed, the great majority of us will admit that maneuvers, with all their rigors, have it all over life at camp.

But there are times when you can luxuriate in the warm Carolina sunshine for a day or two with nothing to do but relax, sleep and eat. That is when your regiment or division is in "reserve." You have an opprtunity to get that longawaited shave, catch up on your correspondence, give your body a bath if the company kitchen can spare a pail of water or if you can get it from a neighboring farmer. If it isn't too far away from last payday, you may see a good deal of card playing and "rolling bones." Just before retiring there is the inevitable group singing to the accompaniment of a guitar-brought along by a buddy who loves the instrument enough not to be worried about the added burden. There is time to recount the funny incidents of the past few days, for instance, when one of the boys fell into the garbage pit during the blackout supper the night before.

Not a Lazy Lot

But when your outfit is in "combat." it is quite a different matter. Because troops march or convoys move as often as possible under the protection of darkness, the soldier in a combat unit can never be sure of an unbroken night's sleep. The soldier must get his sleep where he finds it, and soldiers are not necessarily the lazy lot an uninformed observer might think them to be as he sees scores of olive drab clad men sold out. Some of the natives are resprawled out in slumber under a noonday sun.

While the maneuver period for the 1st Army in the South covers two months, it games" consist of a series of individual scope as the program progresses. When a "problem" is completed, the grimy soldiers return to their base field camp, where they are quartered in pyramidal tents, each accommodating six men. In order to accustom themselves to field conditions, cots have been dispensed with, and for bedding the men use straw-filled mattress bags. When the soldier returns to base camp ne can get a shower bath, but he must be content with cold shower in the open air. rattlesnakes and copperheads and blace When thousands of men move into a rural area with no large-scale water facilities, the engineering units must pump water from nearby streams into canvassinclosed areas containing as many as the creatures, as far as sleeping out in again we realize that the medical detachments must chlorinate all the drinking water obtained from springs or streams.

Gratitude Won

to base camp because it offers him an opportunity to avail himself of the famed Southern hospitality, which we know by now is no myth. The kindness with which the folk down here-rich and Army is able to transport all troops by poor alike-have received us has won our truck on larger marches, but when an everlasting gratitude.

To get out of camp to any nearby city, there is only one way, unless a recreation convoy has been arranged, and that is by "thumb." Officers as well as enlisted men are forced to use such means to get places. But the Southern motorist seldom seems to ignore an appealing thumb if he has room. In cities like Cheraw, Florence, Darlington and Sumter in South Carolina, and in Monroe, Wadesboro and in Charlotte and vicinity in North Carolina, all you have to do to get a soft bed and fine Southern cooking in a private home is to visit a registration point. But most of the time that isn't even necessary. If 'you're standing on the sidewalk, likely as not a motorist will drive up and invite you to spend the week end at his home. And Southern cooking is as good as Southern hospitality, we have found. After a week end rest, the soldier pulls out of bed before dawn Monday morning to return to the "field." If his unit is in the thick of combat, he may not eat until late that night, for his company's kitchen, travelling in trucks, has never had an opportunity to set up and serve a meal. Anticipating such eventualities, the soldier usually puts a stock of candy bars and other appetite appeasers in his

With the approach of more extended problems, the men are being issued emergency or "iron rations"-so-called because they are packed in cans for eating in the event a soldier or group may become detached from his unit. It is here that goodies sent from home are most welcome. Occasionally a convoy of hungry soldiers will stop near a cross-roads store, and it will not be long before the unprepared storekeeper finds almost his entire candy and food stocks sourceful enough to fill their cars with candies and sandwiches to sell the soldier along the roadsides.

At night, when a suitable bivouac gas sentries have been posted, units problems" lasting anywhere from four lose no time in rolling out their blankets troops are thrown into action.

the next order to move is received. The soldier carries two blankets rolled neatly into'a canvas shelter half. If it rains he can button his shelter half to that of a buddy and pitch a pup tent. Otherwise the shelter half is used as a base for the blankets. The men seem to welcome the opportunity to sleep under

At first the soldiers were a bit panicky over stories that the area abounded with widow spiders. While many have beet, found, there have been few cases of men being bitten, and we have come to take a more fatalistic attitude toward the open is concerned.

When the soldier goes into the "field" he carries a pack on his back which is his wardrobe for anywhere from four to 15 days. There is a premium on every cubic inch, for into it must go his raincoat, field tacket, change of winter underwear, extra handkerchiefs. socks, toilet articles. Living out of a pack makes compactness a requisite, and to those of you who are wondering what gift to buy for a friend in the Army, I hasten to recommend such things a small, compact leather cases for toils articles, or small waterproof bags which to keep handkerchiefs or to

Chance to Write

A writing kit narrow enough to into a pack will give the doughboy chance to write a letter now and the ... when he is in "reserve" or when a tactical stalemate gives him an hour or so The soldier looks forward to returning to kill. The same goes for reading material. Pocket-sized magazines, novels, or anthologies are godsends in those moments when a tie-up comes.

Through the "shuttle" method the area has to be evacuated quickly infantry companies are often forced to walk as far as 10 or 12 miles along dusty roads to a new assembly point. In the standard infantry regiment, the service, headquarters, anti-tank companies and the three heavy weapons companies have enough trucks to carry all their personnel, but the remaining nine "rifle" companies must depend upon transportation from these companies and artillery and quartermaster units, when it can

Like most of my buddies, this sojourn to Dixie is being enjoyed because we never realized that the region could be so different from our homeland in the North. We "Yankees" are amazed to find such mild weather in late October. We are amused by little animals we have never seen before, such as chameleons, which change their colors under our very eyes. We have visited

"Is that gun loaded?"

"gin mills" where you can't buy a drink, but you can see a machine that in one sweep sucks cotton off wagons and trucks of growers, seeds the cotton and packs it in bales for shipment to all corners

For many of us Stephen Foster melodies in the years to come will bring an unexpected nostalgia. When our regiment arrived at its allotted base camp a few miles above the South Carolina boundary, we found the area to be a cotton field. Before we could pitch a tent we (most of us never having seen cotton before except in pictures) had to pick all the cotton in the field. While we picked, our regimental band, knee deep in cotton, played some torrid modern interpretations of Foster melodies.

When we first arrived, some of the colored folk who don't read the newspapers were taken aback by the infiltration of soldiers, trucks, armored cars and other military vehicles, and many meekly asked us, "Is that gun loaded?" is not one "continuous war." The "war area has been reached and security and We hesitate to contemplate their dismay when the tanks and parachute

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies

D. C. Residents for Court Posts: Chest Drive to Begin Soon

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Scanning the record of the past week discloses a number of important civic problems undergoing careful study with a promise of early definite action. The traffic hearing by Senator Burton on the setting up of a local parking authority and the financing of the elaborate highway plan through an increased tax on motor vehicle fuel aroused the greatest interest. The hearing will be resumed Tuesday morning.

A hearing was also held by a House subcommittee on the proposal to reduce the pay roll tax in the District for unemploy-

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported (avorably the House bill appropriating funds for the employment of 100 additional policemen. The amount carried by the bill, as passed by the House, was reduced to cover the time lapsed before the effective date, December 1. Completion of this legislation is expected at an early date.

On Thursday the Fiscal Affairs Subcommittee of the House District Committee held a hearing on H. R. 5800 autnorizing advancements from the Federal Works Administration for the provision of certain defense public works and equipment in the District of Columbia and for other purposes. If approved it is hoped that the authorization of $6,000,000 will be a Federal grant or that a substantial portion will be a grant with the remainder as a longterm loan at a low rate of interest and easy payments on the principal

The Zoning Commission has considered the suggested amending of the regulations so as to require certain classes of new buildings to provide off-street parking for tenants and patrons. The commission finds that it is without authority to enact such regulations and asks Congress to enact the requisite enabling Tomorrow is District day in the House, when it is expected that several much-needed bills will be passed.

A Dignified Fair Hearing on Important Problems Civic leaders attending the hearings held last week by Senator

Burton, on the proposed financing of the $35,000,000 highway plan by means of a 100 per cent increase of the tax on motor vehicle fuel, were much pleased with the way the hearing is being conducted. Those appearing in the witness chair were permitted to complete their statements with only a few interruptions. Interruptions by the chairman were made solely for the purpose of making a clear record. Never was there an attempt or even a suggestion to antagonize or embarrass a witness or to engage in controversy.

Beside the financing of the highway plan by the gasoline tax the hearing was also on the so-called fringe parking lot proposal, under which a motor vehicle parking agency of seven members would be set up to handle the parking problem.

Mass transportation, parking prohibition and many kindred matters have been touched upon by the officials and citizens who have appeared. Some experts on these various features of the problem are expected to testify later in the hearings So far the Whitehurst plan, as ably explained by its author,

Capt. Whitehurst, has seemed to meet with general approval. An eminent traffic authority on Thursday told the hearing that the work included in the long-term plan is a public necessity. He regarded the necessity so great and so immediately important to the entire Nation as to warrant the Federal Government paying one-

The president of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association laid particular stress on the financing and pointed out that it is most important that the question of equitable fiscal relations between the Federal Government be settled prior to the proposed tax increase. He stated that he thinks the Federal Government is not now paying its fair share toward the support of the National Capital. He expressed the belief that when the United States does pay a fair share the District people will not object to paying their fair share. The representative of the American Automobile Association offered numerous constructive suggestions for the local branch of that organization. Opposition was raised to the boost of the gasoline tax and a substantial payment by the United States was urged because the immediate need for work is largely due to the National Defense expansion of the Federal establishment and the consequent population growth.

At the conclusion of the Thursday session citizens in attendance were heard to remark that, from certain questions asked of Mr. Cleveland by Senator Burton, they infer the Senator to be somewhat sold on the 2-cent tax boost. They also thought the amount of the tax expected from outsiders to be overestimated.

Reduced to its lowest terms the question of financing the highway plan gets right back to the old controversial question of fiscal equity between the Federal and District governments. The present national emergency adds considerable force to the argument for a fair and equitable settlement of the controversy.

In the present instance conditions indicate that a much larger percentage of the cost should be borne by the United States than would be fair for the regular operation, maintenance, expansion and beautification of the Nation's Capital City.

District Residents Wanted on New Local Courts The Society of Natives of the District of Columbia at a recent meeting adopted resolutions asking the Senate District Committee to so amend the pending court reorganization bill so as to require the appointment to the bench of both the proposed Municipal Court and the Intermediate Appellate Court only of residents of the District of Columbia who have lived in the District at least five years and are not the citizens of a State and who have practiced in the local courts for five years. This is practically the form in which the bill was approved by the House Committee, but appointments were opened to nearby residents of Maryland and Virginia by an amendment offered on the floor by Representative Sasscer of Mary-

The Society of Natives also requested confining the appointment of the entire staff of the two courts to actual residents of the

In addition the resolution asked for a hearing before the Senate District Committee on the bill. The society will oppose the provision for the retirement of the judges with pay. The judges will be appointed for a term of 10 years.

Other organizations are expected to take action similar to that of these native-born citizens.

Voteless D. C. League Puts First Things First

The fall luncheon meeting of the Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters at the Y. W. C. A. on Wednesday was a notable occasion. It was the first general meeting under the new president, Mrs. Eugene Callaghan, who declared in an address that the greatest obstacle to the work of the organization here is the impossibility to participate in government. "The right to vote and representation in the Government," she said, "are fundamental to the demo-

Congress, apparently, not being in the mood at this time to grant these rights to the District people it is proposed to continue to study the subject and carry on the work of education.

Mrs. Callaghan urged the membership to choose a few projects and "do well by them." To state this idea in a slightly modified form would produce a slogan which many organizations could adopt and follow to their benefit.

'Choose a few projects and do them well" would suggest following the "concentration" rather than the "scatter" method which is used by so many organizations that make remarkable progress in

The local league has always been an energetic and able organization but it has to fight hard, like other groups, against undertaking every kind of a reform imaginable. The very name of the local group suggests that it is enlisted in the fight for the Americanization of the Washingtonian for the duration of our political disabilities and until the word "voteless" can be dropped from its name. Getting the vote is naturally of first importance.

"This." said Mrs. Callaghan, "is a local problem, but its implications involve a nation-in fact it whacks at the roots of democracy. When an intelligent community of American citizens is denied that right the whole system of Government is endangered."

Community Chest Campaign November 13 to 27 One week from next Friday the annual campaign for the Community Chest will open and continue until Friday, November 27. All plans are complete and encouraging contributions have been obtained through some pre-campaign efforts.

The various organized groups can be very helpful if their members are urged to be generous in their gifts, for the need is great. They should get the facts about the Community Chest, what it really is and how it operates and pass them on. There are still many who have never grasped the idea.

The Chest is a financing organization. It does a wonderful job of collecting the funds for many member agencies through a single campaign. It gatners the pledges, collects the money, disburses the funds to the agencies as required and all this is done under a most careful system of audit and control. This big job is done at a much smaller percentage of cost than it could have been if handled by the agencies individually. In this way a much larger part of every dollar goes for the object for which it was contributed.

Then another advantage is you can pay your pledge in convenient installments at many convenient places. You are expected to govern the amount of your pledge by your ability to pay.

Explaining her interest in the beautification of downtown Washington, Mrs. Thompson said she believed that people who come to the city tour the historical points of interest rather than the outlying residential sections and that there was, for instance, need of fixing the parks and statues. To emphasize her point in the interview she pointed out the window of her home residential sections and that there Scope for Renewed parks and statues. All of her grandchildren want them, she explained, and some of them keep their own scrapbooks. Also in her house, tied up with a ribbon, is the top of the bottle she broke in the opening of the Thomas Circle underpass.

When she broke the bottle, which contained ginger ale, small children grams last year and that station watching the ceremony scrambled for pieces of the bottle. A child grabbed for the top of the bottle in her hand, "but I managed to keep

Win, Lose or Draw

By FRANCIS E. STAN,

Guerre a Mort at Wrigley Field

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1.—Tomorrow is the day where discretion and caution should be the general order. It might be a good idea to remove the best China from the shelves lest the rocking of the earth send it shattering upon the floor. Lock up the kidddies and take good hold! To put it in nautical language, batten down the hatches, mateys, for the storm is brewing!

The center of this singular November disturbance is located at Wrigley Field in Chicago, blustery, tough home of the tough, blustery Chicago Bears. Until ample proof is offered to the contrary, the Bears must be recognized as the greatest football team in the world. They are many and they are big, and so powerful have they become that only when they meet one or two teams do the customers expect a battle.

Guerre à mort! War to the death! If the Bears are the No. 1 team in the world then surely the Green Bay Packers are No. 2. And they meet tomorrow for the second time this year . . . the unbeaten and untied Bears and the once-beaten and grim Packers. The Bears could win and cake-walk to another Western championship. The Packers could win and conceivably finish the 11-game schedule in a tie, necessitating a play-off for the inland division title before making mince-meat of whatever Eastern challenger is sufficiently brave to ask for a game.

Team With Hutson Always Has Chance

When these monstrous men of the Midwest meet on the gridiron it is a terrifying sight to behold. They run with the speed of gazelles and hit with the force of heavy tanks. It is no feat at all for either of these elevens to run the enemy right out of the battlefield, as recall the Bears' 73-to-0 victory over the Washington Redskins last December in

The Packers fought a brilliant but losing game with the Bears back in September. The score was 25 to 17. At one point the Bears were ahead, 15-0, but the Packers charged back and forged to the front, 17-15. But back came the Bears and they haven't been beaten since.

This time, however, it's do-or-die for the Packers. They must win or concede the Western title. They must mobilize behind their great leader, Don Hutson, and stop the Big Bad Bruins. And this is not entirely impossible, either. The Bears are due for a letdown somewhere along the line. The last time the Bruins were bested was November 17 in Washington, when they were penalized for everything in the book and the following week. 31 the week after that, and 73 when they saw the Redskins again. They barnstormed without loss walloped the Chicago All-Stars, gayly romped through half a dozen more exhibitions and so far this regular National League season they have won 5 straight and scored 209 points to 52 for the opposition.

Halas of the Bears, has figured a way of stopping Hutson He led the National League in scoring last year with 57 points which is about all you can ask of an end, and this season he seems to be even better. So far he's scored 52 points putting him only 25 behind Jack Manders' alltime record of 368, and some of these points were scored against the Bears in that September game. As long as there is a Hutson and a Cecil Isbell the Packers will be a formidable team, although mere formidableness may not be enough sota's mighty mite-147-pound Bud against the Bears. This is not to say that Hutson, as an individual, is Higgins-took the concrols for one merely formidable. He is terrific, collosal and awe-inspiring. In six quick scoring drive today to send and one-half seasons of pro ball he has caught 240 passes, and reports the Golden Gopher express rolling from Green Bay suggest that he is beginning to acquire the knack. He along the Big Ten and national makes Green Bay formidable, whereas without Hutson the Packers championship roadway with a wellmight well be just another club.

The Redskins Had Better Win Tomorrow

Meanwhile there are some other games along the professional front In the East the script is familiar. It's again a two-team struggle between back streaked 41 yards for the sailed, with End Bob Motl making the Redskins and the New York Giants. For a while it began to look as if the Giants would make every post a winning one. But last week they permitted the Redskins to almost catch them by losing to the Dodgers. Tomorrow both the Giants and Redskins should win. The Giants will entertain the Chicago Cardinals, who are no relation to the Bears, and the Redskins will play the Pittsburgh Steelers. But the Skins and Steelers should put up a ball game. Up to now the Washingtons have been overworking the old horseshoe. They have won four in a row, none by a margin of more than four points, and the Steelers-one of those pened as they watched Higgins by-the-skin-of-the-teeth victims-are without a triumph. It could be

The Redskins had better win that one tomorrow for, thereafter, seeing Northwestern score on a back 20 yards. things will get tough. In succession they must face the Dodgers, Bears, second-period pass by Otto Graham, Giants and Packers, and that won't be fun. There are a couple more Minnesota took the ball at Northgames tomorrow and, for the sake of the record, Philadelphia plays western's 41 after a poor Wildcat Brooklyn and Detroit meets Cleveland. But we won't talk about those.

It was his running, off tackle and around the ends, that piled up most of Army's 120 yards rushing to 85 for Notre Dame, and above all it was his punting, for an average of 39 yards a boot, that helped keep Notre Dame from getting into position for any serious threats.

Amazing Score Prevented by Tars' Muffs

Unable to Make Grade On Majority of Their . Chances to Tally

By FRANCES E. STAN,

PHILADELPHIA. Nov. 1 .- If Navy's gridiron machine had made good on a majority of its scoring opportunities one of the most crushing upsets of a wild season would have been recorded today before 70.000 rain-soaked spectators at Franklin Field. It would have been a rout for the Middies' best team since 1926 over a Pennsylvania juggernaut, which was untied, undefeated, favored and generally ranked on a par with anything in the East But Navy could capitalize on only two scoring chances and while these were sufficient to win, 13 to 6, the score is misleading. Powerful Penn easy winner over Harvard. Yale, Princeton and Maryland, was outplayed badly from the opening kickoff and thus toppled from the ranks of the first-flight elevens. Nettled by its failure to achieve anything better than a scoreless to with Harvard a week ago. Navv' unbeaten forces set out to prove that they packed a wallop to match their defensive strength. Up to certain point this offensive ability was well illustrated but, whereas the Middies counted twice, they failed on half a dozen occasions and by distances of anywhere from 6 inches to 13 yards. Three times during the wet, raw and leaden afternoon Navy's unmatchable fieldgoal duo of Bob Leonard and Zeke Zechella trotted from the bench to attempt field goals and each time they failed, but against this singular pair were operating angles, air currents and a slippery ball.

Game Bitterly Contested.

It was a hard, bitterly-fough more Ralph Hill of Santa Fe, N. game, with Penn playing rough toward the finish and twice sending Barnacle Bill Busik, scintillating Middy back, to the bench with injuries. But even without Busik the Annapolis team clicked. Little Howie Clark was hot, as was Sammy Boothe, and, all in all, the Navy carried too many guns for the Quakers.

Navy, always out in front, wa banging away at Penn's goal in the opening minutes. With Busik ripping and tearing off tackle and speeding around the flanks, the Middles reached the 7-vard line But they were stopped and Leonard tried and missed his first field goal and switched to the air. Crain Gains Revenge As Longhorns Bag 34-to-0 Tussle

STURID.

Ace of Victors Scores On Mustangs First Time in 3 Years

By HAROLD V. RATLIFF. Associated Press Sports Writer.

DALLAS, Nov. 1.-Mighty Texas broke an eight-year football jinx and gave Pudgy Jack Crain a chance to avenge two bitter years today by flattening Southern Methodist 34

The rambling cowboy Crain never was greater as he sparked the unbeaten, untied Longhorns to their sixth straight victory, crossing the Methodist goal line twice, kicking four points after touchdowns and doing much to set up the other Texas scores.

Before this year the sensational Texas back had been unable to count a single point against S. M. U. and was humiliated last year by losing more ground than he gained. Texas hadn't defeated Southern Methodist in the five-year regime of Coach D. X. Bible until

Texas' Layden Forced Out.

The Longhorns clipped down the Mustangs with touchdowns in every period-all this despite the fact the great Pete Layden, Texas fullback and top ground gainer of the Southern Conference, was forced out of the game with an injury in the second period.

With Layden, who rolled up 69 yards on 12 tries and scored one touchdown out of the line-up, the Texas machine started to sputter. But Crain tinkered a little and before long had it hitting on all

After 30 minutes of "stand-themup-and-knock-them-down" football, the Deacons appeared to have the situation in hand. They had blanketed one Marshall scoring threat which carried to the 5-yard line and put on a touchdown drive which carried 80 yards.

But after scoring early in the final half and adding the extra point, Marshall continued on a rampage and added 9 unneeded points

Rutgers Whips Maryland in Mud, 20-0; Randolph-Macon Edges Out American U.

Despite Slippery Ball, Scarlet Completes 5 of 6 Passes

Terrapins, Wanting Dry Field, Make Only 33 Yards on Ground

By BURTON HAWKINS,

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 1. -It was excellent weather for ducks here today and Maryland's football team wasn't even resembling a decoy. The Terps displayed no relish for the treacherous footing and driving rain as Rutgers defied the elements to capture a 20-0 decision before 1,000 thoroughly soaked cus-

Performing on a field saturated by an all-night rain. Maryland and Rutgers launched the game in a steady rain, which increased to downpour proportions as the tiff progressed. It was a dreary day for a Maryland team which had hoped for a dry field to capitalize on its passing and the return to action of hard-hitting Fullback Jack Wright. Rutgers, though, unleashed a consistent sort of attack at the Terps who were bottled up to the extent of gaining only 33 yards by rushing.

The Scarlet, meanwhile, was completing five of six passes, one for a touchdown, gaining a net 159 yards and in general conducting itself in fine fashion despite the weather. Capestro Races 32 Yards.

Beaten only by Syracuse this season, the Scarlet moved to a touchdown late in the first period. Vinnie Utz climaxed a 62-yard drive when he plucked a pass from among Maryland's embarrassed John Cordyak. Tom Mont and Wright in the Rutgers started the march on its own 38 and a 32-yard sprint around left end by Steve Capestro moved the Scarlet to Maryland's 26. Utz picked up six yards before Eugene McManus drove to a first down on the Terps' 12. Capestro and Mc-Manus were stopped by Cordyack, Hal Berry and Ed Chovanes, but at that point Capestro drifted back and floated a lazy pass in the end zone to Utz as Cordycak. Mont and Wright performed an Alphonse-Gaston bit of defense labor. Capestro converted to stake the Scarlet to a 7-0 lead.

That margin soon was increased to 14-0, for early in the second period Ralph Schmidt punted 67 yards out of bounds on Maryland's 17yard line and succeeding events the crushing power of a runaway proved it to be a disastrous boot for steamroller, Tulane plowed its way

Beck also recovered for Rutgers on Maryland's 11 and the and second Scarlet touchdown thus was Capestro required only two stabs On his first attempt he cracked right tackle for 4 yards, then ripped through left tackle to score standing from 7 yards out. Again he converted and Rutgers owned a 14-0 half-time lead.

Maryland appeared destined to create considerably more trouble for Rutgers in the second half, for immediately after the third-period kickoff the Terps marched 75 yards to Rutgers' 5-yard line before the Scarlet braced to take over on

The Terps were clicking through the air on that drive. Ulman whipped a shovel pass to Rigby. who sprinted around left end for 30 yards to Rutgers' 42 and Jack Mier then rifled an 18-yard pass to Goerge Barnes to move to the 24. sizzling offensive struggle Edgar their 2-yard line. Maryland wasn't chucking in the towel, though, for Center George Jarmoska stopped McManus and Conrad checked Capestro. On the Scarlet's third effort, though, Utz located a hole at left tackle and drove for the score. Capestro's at-tempted placement was blocked.

The Maryland season starts tomorrow, with the exception of the Susquehanna Flats, where shooting Hornets Lose Hockey is restricted to Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. This exception is Debut to Capitals according to a law passed by the last Assembly at the request of Maryland wildfowlers. The hope the United States Fish and Wildlife Service would extend the shoot- night, the Capitals winning, 5-1, being through January but the plea failed. The season for all Southern States ends December 31.

Elsewhere normal regulations are in prospect. There were a few changes from those of last season. They are noted in the regulations which go with every duck stamp. These stamps must be on the back of the license of every hunter over 16 years of age after wild waterfowl. They are obtained at any first or second class post office at $1 each. Heavy Flight Predicted.

Virginia authorities are predicting heavy flights of ducks this sea-Reports of field men and wardens show more birds than usual at this time of the year. Numerous blackheads have been reported on the Potomac. The best going comes about the middle of the season. Canvasbacks, scaup, redheads and other divers are the last to arrive

In Upper Chesapeake Bay waters and on the Susequehanna Flats canvasbacks and redheads have been noted for the past several weeks. They are earlier than in other years. Chances now are better there than in the middle bay area, where, in spite of early flights of teal, pintails and blackheads, there seems to be a scarcity of fowl.

Reports from the mouth of the Patuxent show few birds coming in. With a good rice crop in the Patuxent marshes, there should be better shooting than was experienced during the early days last year, how-

The best shooting on the Chesapeake for the first four weeks of the season, unless duck weather replaces the present bluebird days, will be in the lower bay and on the Eastern Shore. Early flights in that section are promising. In Isle of Wight and Sineapuxent Bays the flights already are in midseason

On Albemarle, Currituck and Pamlico Sounds, in North Carolina, the opening day shooting promises to be better than for many years. Teal, pintails, black ducks and Canada geese literally blacken the skies when they raise from their feeding. First birds in the Chesapeake and Potomac areas are the puddlers, or surface ducks, which include bluewing and greenwing teal, pintails, baldpates and mallards. There also are many so-called black mallards. With a few early blackheads, or scaup, these will be the birds that opening day wildfowlers will be most

Forgets to Duck, Captures One

Here's a true story about a fellow who forgot to duck-and got one. Walter C. Bonebrake of Oklahoma City, intent on decreasing the duck population, stepped to the edge of a small lake early one morning, gun in hand. Before he could raise the gun a whole flock on the lake took off and flew right at him. He closed his eyes and grabbed with his free hand, and when the air had cleared he found himself clutching a nice greenhead mallard drake. And the funny part of it was, he didn't sight another duck all day. He's known as "Bring 'em Back Alive Bone-

Waterman Is Spearhead Of Margons' 65-Yard Thrust to Score

A 65-yard march down muddy Hoxton field, with Bud Waterman, sub back, sparking the drive, earned the only touchdown yesterday as Episcopal High School defeated Randolph-Macon Academy gridders, 6-0, at Alexandria. It was the Maroons' fifth victory in six games this season.

The scoring drive came midway of the first period after the two teams jockeyed for position with an exchange of punts. Waterman's plunging helped push the ball from Episcopal's 35 to within 2 yards of Randolph-Macon's line and it was Waterman who pounded over. Lucian Burnett's placement for the extra point went wide.

Another Episcopal drive was Ormand intercepted a pass, and for N.W., at 7:30 p.m. most of the remaining time the game was an even struggle near midfield. One occasion Graham Ellis broke away for a 65-yard run and a touchdown for Episcopal, but the play was called back because of an

St. Albans Conquers St. Andrews, 13 to 17; Cromelin Stars

Probably Saves Game With Interception of Pass on Last Play

Budd Cromelin, Lou Crawford and Bozie Laws sparked a fighting St. Albans eleven to a 12-7 victory over St. Andrew's School of Middleton, Del., yesterday at St. Alban's Field. Cromelin probably saved the day for the Saints. In the final seconds of the game he intercepted a heave by Noel Austin on St. Alban's goal which, if completed, would have meant a St. Andrew's victory. With Capt. Crawford passing skilfully and Cromelin being everywhere at the right time, St. Alban's earned its first tally early in the second Basket Ball Officials will hold its quarter. Crawford flipped a pass to Elliot, who scooted 55 yards for the touchdown.

Crawford-to-Cromelin Clicks. Another Episcopal drive was halted in the second period when School, 1740 Massachusetts avenue, of passes, Crawford to Cromelin, reached scoring ferritory. During the third and fourth quarters Laws gained important vardage for the Saints with line bucks and end runs. It was late in the final quarter before St. Andrew's made its touchdown. Austin, powerful left half, charged in to pick up a loose ball from a punt blocked by Mickey Ford. Austin retrieved the ball and ran 53 yards to score. He also converted. Following the kickoff after the touchdown, St. Alban's fumbled and Mylecraine of St. Andrew's recovered. Austin and Straut immediately started a bewildering passing and running attack, which reached St. Alban's 30-yard line. With only 20 seconds left. Austin shot a pass intended for Straut but saw it intercepted by Cromelin who was standing on the goal line and thus

Sparkling Record Makes Mrs. Myron Davy District's Top Linkswoman of Year

Capital Leader Stars In Tournament Golf Through Season

Mrs. Meckley, Mrs. Stokes In 'Big Three' Press For Main Laurels

By WALTER McCALLUM.

Any compilation of the links deeds of the women around Washington in one of their best years puts three feminine golfers at the top of the list. They form the big three of local golf and among them they have accounted for three championships this year.

They are: Mrs. Walter R. Stokes District champion; Mrs. Myron Davy, Middle Atlantic champion; Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, Maryland

Mrs. Davy, beaten by a single hole by Mrs. Meckley in the final round of the Maryland State championship at Chevy Chase in June, came with a fast rush toward the end of the season with two butstanding victories. If any one cared to form a ranking list of local women golfers, she should be at the top, on the basis of her accomplishments, and the class of the tournaments in which she either won or was close to a victory.

In September she won the Mary land State Golf Association medal play tourney and early this month she won the Middle Atlantic championship. Mrs. Meckley, winner of The Star cup and many other tournaments this year, annexed only one sectional title. This was the Maryland State championship. But you don't have to go farther than the record to realize her consistency. Betty was runnerup in both the District and Atlantic championships. losing each final round by a single hole. She won the gross award in so many of the little one-day affairs staged by the Women's District Golf Association that the women started calling her "Gross" Meckley.

Lone victory for Mrs. Stokes was the District championship, won by the Manor woman over her home course in June. But Mrs. Stokes did not play in all the tournaments this year. For a long stretch she didn't enter the events of the Women's District Golf Association.

Champions Well Bunched. The three women's championsapart. Single-hole victories decided all three championships. You can't draw a finer line than that, where the curl of a putt may decide a Close to the big three, but lacking titles this year, were Mrs. L. G. Pray of Manor, Mrs. Leo Walper of Indian Spring, Mrs. T. O. Bran-don of Columbia, and Mrs. T. F. Neblett of Manor.

Nats Have Ambitious Spring Training

Arrange 10 Major Tilts, With Five of Them in Each of Circuits

The most ambitious big league exhibition schedule the Washington baseball club ever arranged for Florida was announced last night by President Clark Griffith.

Capitalizing on the Yankees' decision to play other American League teams during spring training for the first time and the Red Sox's return to the custom of staging intra-league games, the Nats will meet five American and five National League teams during the last three weeks in March. All games will be played at the Nats' base in Orlando.

A late decision by the St. Louis Browns and Boston Braves to train in Florida gave them the opportunity to get on the Griffs' schedule. while other games will be played with Cleveland and Detroit of the American League and Brooklyn, St. Louis, New York and Cincinnati of the senior circuit. The Nats again will come north with the Philadelphia Phillies as exhibition opponents, the first two games with Doc Prothro's gang being played in Orlando the 4th and 5th of April. No dates of the trip north were released.

Mr. Griffith said that his pitchers and catchers would report to the Orlando camp around the 23d of February, two weeks before the first exhibition with the Yankees, on Parents' Club Stages
March 9. The rest of the squad will be ordered to camp around March 1.

Beef, handled cagily, means a lot in a fight, and more than once has been the decisive factor.

De Chard has had only one full nod over Joe Carilli. Before that, he traveled six heats with tough old the best of his meager experience. It seems hardly enough to warrant a match with a gladiator of Turner's caliber.

But the Texan is a stand-up fighter who comes in with both fists pumping and De Chard figures to hold his own against that type Jimmy has a good left jab and when the right is in working order it compares with the best in the business. It may be that he hopes to end the fight with one deadly swipe of that right early in the fight and will have it primed and cocked for the first opening he sees. Against Carilli he mixed both hands judiciously, employing a long pokerlike left to pile up points and hold off his adversary after the right was injured, so he could outpoint Turner. Some critics believe Turner may flatten De Chard if he goes after him at the first bell. This opinion is predicated on Jimmy's last fight in which he warmed up slowly and was on the losing end until after the halfway point. But it must be remembered that he had a wait of almost 10 minutes between the time he entered the ring and the beginning of the fight and, after working up a sweat in his dressing room,

As for those who still say he can't take a good belt on the jaw, you have only to check the records. Colonello blasted him with a couple of beauties and Carilli, the youngster who floored Louis in a training session, buckled his knees with a potent wallop only to have Jim come back and carry the fight to

Philly Team Bringing Many 'Name' Players For League Game

It will be two completely new hockey clubs — the Washington Ulines and the Philadelphia Rockets-which will clash in the Capital's second game of the American League campaign at Uline's Arena. The face-off is at 8:30.

The Rockets, under Coach Danny Cox, have been reorganized entirely from the 1940-1 season, during which they were the property of the New York Rangers. Now an independent club, the Philadelphians include such "name" stars as Scotty Bowman, former Black Hawk defenseman; Oscar Asmundson, ex-star man; Oscar Asmundson, ex-star Faces Busy Season Moe, an old foe of the Washington Eagles of the Eastern Amateur League.

For six or seven years Dr. B. F. Frank has been playing in the tournaments of the Kenwood Golf and Country Club, a faithful starter in all club events. He never has won a prize, although he has been a semifinalist in some tourneys and runner-up in consolation flights, a spot for which there is no prize.

Last night at the annual club dinner Frank was rewarded for his persistency. Called up to the speakers' table. Frank was advised he had won a "mystery" tournament. No one knew there had been a "mystery" tourney. The inscription on the modest

A Second Report Rubber Situation

Un August 3rd, when a wave of uncertainty about tires was sweeping the country, we published a message entitled "There's some good news in the rubber situation," in which we told you the facts as they appeared to us at that time.

Among other things, we said that we believed there would be enough tires for those who needed them, provided everybody helped.

Now three months have passed. There have been titanic changes in the world. It seems an appropriate time to come to you again with a report about conditions as we see them now.

We are glad to be able to report that definite progress has been made.

The Government, as you know, has been building up a reserve rubber supply for many months, through the Rubber Reserve Company, and is continuing to increase it.

The Government's intelligent handling of the problem has worked for the benefit of every one. In addition to large amounts for defense purposes, enough rubber has been allocated to prevent hardship to the consumer. And certain improvements in tire production and distribution are contributing to efficiency.

Add to this the great advance that has been made in the production of synthetic rubber in the past year.... Chemigum, for example, the synthetic rubber developed by Goodyear, has already been put to use in many places where it is proving superior to natural rubber.

The rubber industry can point with pride to the fact that tire prices are lower today than they were at the time the war broke out. For example, on September 1, 1939, a 6.00-16 Goodyear G-3 All-Weather Tire listed at $14.35, including Federal Excise Tax. Today that same tire, improved in quality, lists at $13.95, including Federal Excise Tax. This despite the fact that the Federal Excise Tax was $.48 then and is now $1.05.

All in all, we can still say sincerely that we believe there will be enough tires for those who need them, if everybody helps, and if something unforeseen does not develop. If you need tires, now is a good time to buy them - because tires put on in cold weather actually give up to 20 per cent more miles of tread wear than tires put on in hot weather.

But if you don't need new tires, our best advice to you is the same as it was last summer — do everything you can to make the tires you now have last longer. Several suggestions are printed below to help you do this.

To summarize - we at Goodyear will continue to make as many tires as we can, and they will all be Goodyear quality.

You can do your part by getting the longest possible service out of your tires, and by buying new tires only when the need actually arises.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, INC.

HOW TO MAKE YOUR TIRES LAST LONGER

This is a time for all of us to use rubber wisely. To help you get all of the mileage out of the tires that ure on your car now, we offer the following proved ways to make your tires last longer with safety.

Have your fires refreaded by a competent dealer. if the casings are good enough. A good retread gives you thousands of miles of additional service at low cost and lessens the danger of skidding.

When you do buy a new tire, choose only a good tire of proved quality. Good tires give more miles per dollar than cheap ones, and they use less rubber per thousand miles traveled.

A crowd of 10.000 saw the excellent week-end program conducted on the first real rainy day of the Maryland fall season. Those in the gathering who backed the chances of Contradiction collected at the rate of $13.20 for the usual deuce. The Bracket winner was clocked in a creditable (under the conditions) time of 1:4728. The Woolford Farm juvenile, son of the Dead Insco, picked up $33.910 today to add to his previous earnings of $19,865.

Chiquita Mia and Devil Diver contested for pacemaking honors for more than a half mile. Jockey Ken McCombs brought Contradiction out for racing room as the field left the Qu backstretch. The Insco colt picked up the front runners in bold fashion and, once in front, drew out seemingly without effort.

The Woolford Farm's Joe Schenck, at home in the going, raced three-quarters in 1:1325, to come from behind and land the Walbrook Handicap, secondary feature.

ond in his last three attempts and his record suggests that he should be able to master this field of non-winners. BILLS RITA has been right there in all recent tests and he should have a lot to say about the final result. EL JELIS could be in the money picture.

FOURTH RACE-ETRUSCAN, SLY TOM, BUTCHER BOY.

ETRUSCAN turned in a miserable effort in his last but he has a bit of a class edge over this sort and he can run over any kind of track. SLY TOM has excellent Laurel form to his credit and he could make the result very much in doubt. BUTCHER BOY won his last and his half-mile form was

FIFTH RACE-CHUCKATUCK. SUSSEX, NATIONAL AN-THEM.

CHUCKATUCK turned in a cracker-jack effort in his last at Laurel and he may prove hard to dispose of in this high-class jumping affair. SUSSEX licked good timber-toppers around New York and he rates a real chance. NATIONAL ANTHEM won his last attempt at Belmont Park.

SIXTH RACE-GREEDAN, JAC-STEAL, HOTZEA.

GREEDAN appears to be at top condition right now and he will take a lot of licking in this affair. A good ride could be all that is needed for brackets JACSTEAL won his last in game style and right off that effort he has a real chance. HOTZEA and WAUGH POP both have winning chances.

SEVENTH RACE - GOLDEN MOWLEE, UNKNOWN LAND, PUNCH DRUNK.

GOLDEN MOWLEE disappointed in his last try but under this light weight he may be able to return to the winners' circle. UNKNOWN LAND has brisk speed and he could be in the thick of the fight all the way. PUNCH DRUNK has worked well and she could be the one to complete the pay-off.

EIGHTH RACE-CHEER ME. LAUDERKIN, CHALLANTE. CHEER ME has brought home the bacon in his last two attempts and in his present condition he has to be given the call in the nightcap. LAUDER-KIN has been matching strides with better than these appear to be and he must be given top consideration. CHALLANTE should close fast in the stretch.

joined by Aonbarr and the pair raced almost head and head to the last eighth, where Aonbarr began to draw away slowly. The winner carried 107 pounds to the favored Red Dock's top weight of 124. Aonbarr's backers, numerous because of his local ownership, received $9.80, $4.40 and $4 across the board. The Hickman horse was timed in 1:461-5 over a slow track.

Defense Effects Stand Out in Steel Reports

FINANCIAL.

Large Part of Output Absorbed; Big Taxes Taking Profits

By FRANK MacMILLEN.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.-The steel evidence this week of the ccmfort has assumed in basic production, and interesting sidelights on the relationship of profits to output in this emergency period. United States Steel Corp. and

Bethlehem Steel, first and second in the country's production ranking and together accounting for well over half of all steel turned out, made quarterly reports which revealed such facts as these 1. Bethlehem reported 77 per cent of its order book for steel was for defense or lease-lend purposes and virtually 100 per cent of its shipbuilding-it is the largest ship constructor in the country-was also for the arms drive. 2. United States Steel credited 50 per cent of its orders to defense or lease-lend and said 30 per cent of its production in the past three months had been for that purpose. Jobs at New Peaks.

3. Both steel giants revealed they had more men at work and were handling bigger pay rolls than ever before. The two companies together for the third quarter of this year averaged approximately a half million employes who were paid about

4. United States Steel's profits for the latest three months, reporting period were but a bit better than in the same part of 1940; Bethlehem's were sharply lower; yet both were doing a record dollar and tonnage volume of business. 5. Both companies reported greatly increased Federal income and excess profits taxes, which offset the gains in profits normally expected from greatly expanded gross volume of business. 6. Directors of both concerns despite huge totals of production

Steel, $1; Bethlehem, $1.50. The attitude of directors of both outfits, which together contain some guessers in the country, appeared to emphasize how far old ways of thinking about volume and profits

Taxes Boosted Sharply. In the third quarter of this year U. S. Steel paid out $37,685,500 in Federal income and excess profits taxes, against $11,533,349 in the like period last year. Net profit for the period this year was $34,313,345. compared with $33,103,067 in the like period of 1940.

latest quarter ran this way: Net profit, $7.910.569; Federal taxes about $21.130,000; for the same part of 1940 the profit was $12,462,288. Federal taxes were not calculated on a quarterly basis at that time but for the full year 1940 the total was $23,429,170, only a little larger than for the third quarter this year. Significant appeared the statement of Eugene G. Grace. Bethlehem president, that in the third quarter, this year, his concern had billed customers for $663,000,000 of business and earned "approximately

For Bethlehem the figures for the $24,000,000, which represents 3.6 per cent profit." Also interesting in its implications was the disclosure by both concerns that new orders were running a little behind shipments of finished prod-

Backlogs Cut Slightly.

While executives of neither concern commented specifically on this phase of operations, it appeared to least, the steel companies were managainst the flood of orders pouring in as a result of the defense drive. Most steel men here agreed the especially with Washington authoriduction and with much talk of wide The industrial index showed no further expansion of production in The offset to such rising prospective demand which might be provided by a recent Washingtondecreed 10,000,000-ton lift in steelmaking capacity seemed likely to come along too late to allow the steel mills to stay, for long, ahead of their orders.

The steel expansion program is expected to take at least two years to accomplish and will in itself require several million tons of steel for buildings and machinery. Most steel men seemed reconciled to the idea that there would be further restriction in the amount of the metal available for civilian con-The cut announced this week in the number of refrigerators which Federal authorities will allow to be

Trade Reports at a Glance

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.-In its review of business today, Dun & Bradstreet. Inc., reported gains over a year ago in all four divisions of wholesale and jobbing, retail trade, manufacturing and industry and collections, in all of the 11 cities covered by the survey. Comment from the various cities follows:

BALTIMORE.—Merchants reported apparel sales somewhat improved, but lines in which anticipatory demand has been heavy were slow, especially liquors, furs and automobiles. On the whole, however, retail dollar volume compared favorably with 1940. Wholesale activity held steady, and was more active than last year at this time. Autumn Season Brings Interesting Procession Of Brides to Altar

Miss Patricia Griffin Weds Mr. Frank G. Sterrett at All Souls' Episcopal Church

Autumn colors were chosen by Miss Patricia Hemming Gri daughter of Capt. Robert Melville Griffin, U. S. N., and Mrs. Griffin f the costumes of her attendants when she was married yesterday after noon to Mr. Frank Gum Sterrett, son of Mr. William Dent Sterrett and the late Mrs. Sterrett. The wedding took place in All Souls' Memorial Episcopal Church, on Cathedral avenue, which was established by the bridegroom's grandfather, the late Rev. Dr. James MacBride Sterrett. The rector, the Rev. Dr. H. H. D. Sterrett, uncle of the bridegroom and son of the first rector, officiated at 4:30 o'clock and a reception for only a small company of relatives and intimate friends was held in the home

The bride was escorted and given in marriage by her father. She wore her mother's wedding gown of ivory satin trimmed with delicate lace about the V neckline. The long sleeves were puffed at the shoulders and finished in points over her hands. The court train was of brocade and was worn by Mrs. John F. Meigs when she was married to Capt. Meigs, U. S. N. Exquisite old lace of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. William T. McKay of Los Angeles, who was present yesterday, held her long tulle veil and she carried white orchids surrounded by Johanna Hill roses and bouvardia

Mrs. Christopher S. Sargent Is Matron of Honor.

Mrs. Christopher S. Sargent, sister of the bridegroom, was matron of honor and Miss Mimi Griffin was maid of honor for her sister. The bride's other attendants were Miss Alice Barry, Miss Louise Burke, Miss Barbara Bradley and Mrs. Dudlev Brown. Their dresses were all alike, made of velveteen with fitted bodices having square necklines and draped short sleeves. The long skirts were * slightly full and the frocks were buttoned up the back. Their hats also were of velveteen, matching their dresses, and they carried button chrysanthemums in autumn shades. Mrs. Sargent and Miss Griffin were dressed in copper color and the others in burgundy.

Mr. William Dent Sterrett, jr., was best man for his brother, and the ushers included his cousin, Mr. Elliott Johnstone Dent: Mr. Aldrich Dudley, jr., of Richmond; Mr. Richard Updyke Sherman, jr., of Utica, N. Y.; Mr. Christopher S. Sargent, Mr. George Bouditch Hunter, jr.; Mr. Swagar Sherley, jr., and Mr. Clement Conger.

Paula Laurence ture frame by an odd quirk of Miss Laurence's genius, actually resembles the subjects she wires!

Miss Lourence, who plays the styptic maid in "Junior Miss," the comedy which comes to the National Theatre tomorrow night, asserts her hobby for that's really what it is stems from the few days she spent in a hospital. "I noticed a picture on the wall that was just a bit lop sided," she says. "I told the nurse to give it to me for ad justment. I removed the wire and began tinkering with it Before I realized what was happening, I began twisting it with an eyebrow tweezer. It developed into an odd shape, in fact, resembled the head of a woman. I looked at my nurse, made a few changes and both of us were startled at the result. It actually looked like the nurse.

"I was so excited by this discovery which I thought just on occidental freak, I sent out for more wire. When my doctor come I ordered him to sit down. To my amazement and his, I wired him. Naturally, I've in proved the technique since."

Each State is contributing its quota to Washington society and national defense these days, but Massachusetts seems to be doing more tained at a Halloween bridge party than its share. Not a week goes by that another Massachusetts couple Mrs. Samuel B. Craig, Mrs. Zerelda Friday evening at their home in does not turn up in the Nation's Capital and settle down for the duration. Takoma Park, Md., in honor of Mr. One of the latest arrivals are the Russell Robbs from Concord. He came down to work for the Army in the War Department (although, as a great sailor and boat lover he would seem better fitted for the Navy). They have taken a house on Woodley road and find life in Washington very stimulating and exciting. Another Massachusetts couple are the Guido Pereiras, although she McQueary will sing is no stranger to Washington, being the daughter of the Rev. Ze Barney tertaining in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips. Then, of course, there are also the Ronald Lymans, the Jack Council By-Laws Forbid Action on Specific Issue.

By-laws of the council stipulate that as a body it can take no action on any specific matter. A discussion of legislative matters pertaining to or of interest to the District, is its principal objective, but when three or more member groups have approved or opposed a specific piece of legislation members from these groups may form a committee for joint independent action.

Monthly luncheons at the Y. W. C. A. bring council delegates together for discussions. The sessions are closed but special guests often At the November 18 meeting, R. F.

Another New Yorker Series Becomes Another Comedy

'Junior Miss,' National's Next, Is Fifth Play to Be Based on Character In Lively, Irreverent Weekly

By Jay Carmody.

As scurce material for plays, life is virtually an empty coal scuttle in comparison with the New Yorker Magazine. Or, even if that is an exaggeration-an almost passionate proneness or pre-disposition on the part of drama commentators-it may be supported with rather an

With the opening of "Junior Miss" at the National tomorrow night, a fifth set of characters will have been snatched from the pages of the lively weekly within two brief seasons. "Junior Miss," of course, will be Judy Graves, the beguiling child of Sally Benson's series of stories which preceded the 5135 Kensington group. (The one with Tootie, Agnes,

Preceding Judy onto the stage have been such standard and wonderfully dramatic characters as the Day family, "Life With Father"; the McKenney sisters, "My Sister Eileen"; the Norths, "Mr. and Mrs. North," and Pal Joey, "Pal Joey." Between them they achieved the distinction of making three straight, and highly successful, comedies and one of the most successful musicals of the decade. "Junior Miss" starts under the most favorable of auspices, as a result. The by now well-informed idea in show business is that New Yorker characters are all a playwright needs to get along in the world and become a significant fellow in the affairs of the Internal Revenue people. Most popular of the lot, obviously, has been the Day family. Adapted by Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse, Clarence Day's story of his father and incidental relatives became the most beguiling comedy of modern times. It played fabulously long engagements everywhere-except Washington, where the child labor law prohibited its presentation save the President's Birthday celebration command performance-setting records which are unlikely to be broken save by a miracle.

Judy Manages to Be Character With Universal Implications.

"My Sister Eileen," the dramatic account of the McKenney girls' conquest of New York, stands as runner-up in the series. It has broadly the same human qualities as the Day family saga, the difference being that there were fewer McKenneys than Days.

"Pal Joey" and the Norths were more metropolitan characters and joyed lesser-the kind of "lesser" that any producer, player or playwright would welcome-successes. Neither has finished its course as yet, but it is a foregone conclusion that it will not be as long or as profitable

Of "Junior Miss" no one knows anything save that Judy is the kind (See CARMODY, Page E-3.)

But Indications Are That There Is More Gloss Than Substance in The New Broadway Play

> By Mark Barron, Associated Press Staff Writer.

NEW YORK.

Rarely since the nostalgic first nights which David Belasco used to present or the florescent "Follies" premieres which Florenz Ziegfeld flaunted across Broadway has there been such a glittering opening as that of the new play by George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber, which burst into town like a new-blown orchid.

Both Belasco and Ziegfeld would have been enchanted with this drama, "The Land Is Bright," but theater audiences did not always agree with the highly successful Mr. B. and Mr. Z. Just as they may not be too enthusiastic about this latest collaboration between Mr. K. and Miss F

The idea for "The Land Is Bright" came from that poem which Prime Minister Winston Churchill quoted in his speech last April: "And not by the eastern windows only,

When daylight comes, comes in the light, In front, the sun climbs, slow, how slowly,

But westward, look, the land is bright.' What Mr. Kaufman and Miss Ferber have written here is a rather frank and sometimes roughshod criticism and picture of the American way of life over a period of three generations, from the late 90s through the early 20s to the present day. Story of a Robber Baron

And His Grandchildren. It is a story that takes the wealthy Kincald family from the time the first important Kincald became a robber baron in the West to establish a vast family fortune, to the days when the grandchildren found their new-found riches led them too easily into a life of crime or cheap thrills. Lacey Kincaid was a brusque and braggart section hand on a railroad building toward the new-found riches of the Western United States. He was aggressive, ambitious and cunning. He was alert to hidden wealth of this virgin country and from the gold and coal and copper make him one of the wealthiest men in the world.

His home, when he moved to a wealthy neighborhood in New York City, was furnished like a gaudy burlesque show, and he liked to boast that it had "56 rooms, two more than the Astors' house has." Still he (See BARRON, Page E-3.)

who also found a hit called "My Sister Eileen" in the New Yorker's pages, opens tomorrow night at the National Theater.

ANOTHER NEW PLAY ARRIVES-Barbara Robbins and Patricia Peardon play two of the important roles in "Junior Miss," new play which stems from the New Yorker stories by Sally Benson.

Why are there lyricists?

Almost any one can write lyrics about love and moon and June. There are thousands of persons who can write clever poems. If a man can compose a catchy tune, why can't he match it with words more expertly than some one else?

Ralph Rainger says it's because lyric writing is a distinct art of itself. It takes a trained expert, he says, to wed words and melody to produce a ing on 'Tales of Manhattan,' which Rainger used to write his own lyrics, but found that that was out of his field. For several years now he's been fitting melodies to Leo Robin's words, or Robin's been putting words to Rainger tunes. It may be sometimed the several years now who, on her wedding day, meets the best-man-to-be for the first time and, within the space of 12 hours, marries him instead of her fiance.

Doubling in the adaptation business are the authors of "Junior Miss." Jerome Chodorov and Joseph Fields, the playwrighting team which

It was fate, an accident, or whatever you will which put the Messrs. Chodorov and Fields into the source material of the New Yorker. They were a writing team in Hollywood the day after Christmas, 1940, and, as writing teams will along about noon in Hollywood, they met in the studio

After the usual salutations between members of a writing team, Chodorov asked his associate what he got for Christmas from Mrs. Fields.

"A two-year subscription to the New Yorker." Mr. F. replied. Mr. Chodorov got the same present, it turned out, and they leaped to the conclusion that the wives had been comparing notes, exchanging suggestions, or shopping together.

McKenney Sisters Suggested One of Year's Hit Comedies.

Whatever they may have felt at the time, which probably was good although the anecdote would be better if they felt miserable, was quickly forgotten in their common conclusion that the McKenney sisters were marvelous play material. Once they got to work on the conclusion, all else was forgotten until they had created one of the hit comedies of last season, and probably of this insofar as the road is concerned.

That was to have been the end of New Yorker adaptations by the Chodorov-Fields team, royalties or no royalties. It might have been, too, had not Miss Benson started beguiling them with the dramatic merit of Judy Graves, who, in real life, is a charming daughter of the author. The possibilities of Judy struck them as being as great as those of the McKenney girls, but they wanted nothing to do with them on the ground that lightning never strikes twice in the same place. There was the further reason for scorning Judy on the ground that putting her into a play would make the team look like adapters more than creative play-

The trouble with Judy as a heroine, however, was that Chodorov and Fields could not get her out of their minds. Try as they might to find another character and another idea, she kept popping into the conversation until they surrendered and wrote Miss Benson for the right to make

They were without a leg to stand on when she wrote back: "I don't see how any one can make a play out of 'Junior Miss' (the title of the Judy stories in book form), but if you are crazy enough to try, go ahead.'

obvious, too-obvious, show of unrestrained wealth. His wife, whom he had married out of a hash house in Montana where she was a waitress, was rarely home because with her ready money she found too many invitations to parties. His daughter was throwing away considerable money she was inheriting or about to inherit by marrying any penniless count who was washed up from European shores. His granddaughter, seeking cheap thrills, became involved with a gangster of the speakeasy era who was wanted for murder.

In the end, the third generation show a hope of reclaiming themselves, of atoning for their ancestors' many mistakes and misdeeds. The Kincaid family has left the robber baron methods of the first Maj Kincaid and seems to be interested energetically in making democracy work.

Setting Wins as Much

The settings and lighting by Jo Mielziner and the costumes by Irene Sharaff are exciting in that they are almost museum pieces of the late 90s and early 20s. But the fact that the first-night audience of celebrities applauded them as much as they did the performances indicates that there is more gloss than substance in the play.

It is perhaps that Kaufman and Miss Ferber were overly intrigued with the idea that Winston Churchill's speech was just a good idea for a play. And it would seem so because any popular trend should be a good idea for an evening in the theater. Kaufman certainly has proved this many times in the past as he did, for instance (in collaborations), when his "Of Thee I Sing" burlesqued American politics, his "Once in a Lifetime" gave Hollywood producers a kick in the pants and his "Dinner at Eight" razzed social register folk. In addition to the striking settings and costumes, "The Land Is BLUE RIDGE COAL CO., Inc.

'Katharine of Arrogance' Admits It

If the Word Means What She Thinks, That Is, Is Report Further Debunking the Old Hepburn Legend

By Mayme Ober Peak.

HOLLYWOOD. Arrogant? Rude? Upstage? the Katharine Hepburn I talked to in her portable dressing room at M.-G.-M.

I confess I went with fingers crossed to interview the unpredictable Hepburn. I came away with impressions of the most alive, delightfully challenging personality encountered in years of celebrity interviewing! As we chatted over a coup of tea and delicious Danish cookies-homemade and served on a box top-I might even say I found Katie gracious. If I did, she'd never speak to me again. The last halo she wants to wear is one of sweetness and light! However, a change has come over

Miss Hepburn. There is new feminine glow about her. She is by way of becoming a beauty. Gone is the hollow-cheeked, angular tomboy in faded, patched overalls who first startled Hollywood. She has filled out in a streamlined way. Slacks are still her habitual garb, but they are splendidly tailored now to compliment her figure.

She's Grown Up. Asked how she could keep such a figure and indulge in the frosted cookies she was cramming, her reply was: "I have such a terrific amount of energy I'd be burned up without a lot of food. I never get fat. Feel how compact I am," she invited me to thump her shoulders.

Yes, the old restless fires still keep this dynamic girl going. She can't keep still. There is the same provocative tilt to her chin. But withal this thoroughbred isn't champing so much at the bit. She is freer. She has grown up. Naturally very shy, she no longer uses her flamboyance to cover up.

Much of today's Hepburn is in a full-time job. niest business deals. This fascinating patriotic cover of World War No. 1 was addressed to Miss Lucille Jones, Rittenhouse street near Thirtythird N.W., Washington, D. C., and was mailed at a station of the United States Army Postal Service in France, January 31. 1918. The writer and mailer was also the censor, and his autograph and official seal appear in the lower left-hand corner-Lt. Joseph F. Moore, now better known as J. Francis Moore, secretary to the Home Loan Bank Board. One reason why the envelope was preserved all these many years may be traced to the fact that the recipient has been the sender's wife since June 11. 1919. The family home is at 3342 Quesada street N.W., and there are two sons-Warren and Mason-to carry on the philatelic tradition of their parents. -Star Staff Photo.

Eagerness of contract players to Holmes and Miss Martha Finn

One of the most interesting addican be gained by local fans on the tions to bridge literature that has come to this desk is a tiny bookle and regional tournaments, there is W. Frederick Stroh, the mathematicalled "Tops at Contract," in which cal wizard, shows how to use the coveted rewards of merit, and good self-teaching slide rule for determining correct bids. He entirely eliminates every confusing regulaattendance was large. The league tion and "convention" and bids first sets aside its regular Tuesday night to show the honest mathematical team-of-four matches one evening value of the hand and then to seeach month for a pair game in lect the proper playing denominawhich master points are accredited tion. Many average players "play to the winners. Non-members of by the book" and will follow a "conthe league are permitted to par- vention" if it blows out of an 11thticipate upon such occasions. Last story window. Experts are getting week's contest was a spirited one in away from the standard rules and which four pairs vied for leadership, the pattern hands and are applying the advantage being first with one simple mathematics. Any system and then with another. The finish of bidding founded on the quickwas close. In the end the tally sands of "probable values" which in showed Mrs. Frederick Eberson and turn are based upon "average dis-Charles Lyons ahead with a score tribution" is obviously a multipliof 172, while Dr. and Mrs. A. J. cation of futilities and cannot rank Steinberg amassed a total of 169 to with a procedure firmly planted

G. Churchill and Paul Neff followed suit or no-trump, has been looked upon as an artifical bid. Mr. Stroh reverses this order and bids to show the three leading pairs entered in an accurate valuation of each hand

> A delegation of local players went to Norfolk this week end to parpoint tournament which ends today. Their visit is in compliment to the Tidewater players who were well represented at the recent District championship tournament.

The bi-weekly pair game of the National Press Club will be held tomorrow night in the club audito-

Here is a hand which developed in the most recent duplicate game at the National Press Club.

Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone's Water Colors Make 'Admirable' Showing at Corcoran

ART AND MUSIC.

Thomas Handforth * Has Fine Exhibit At Arts Club

By Leila Mechlin.

The exhibition of water colors by Agnes Stone, wife of Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone, which opened in the Corcoran Gallery of Art last Tuesday, to continue through November 16, is both admirable and re-

Mrs. Stone's paintings are, in the first place, exceedingly well done, as by one who has so mastered her medium as to attain complete freedom of expression. Her touch is light, but very knowing; her method, direct and assured.

Artist's Prerogative.

Water colors have potentialities entirely their own, and this Mrs. Stone has not only recognized, but used to good advantage. Furthermore, the subjects she has selected have inherent interest and, in most instances, beauty. Figuratively, she takes the observer by the hand and points out that which, in nature, has made strong appeal to her. This is every artist's prerogative, but one not always remembered.

Many of the scenes which Mrs. Stone has chosen are of great, towering mountains lifting their jagged peaks high against the sky, these were painted in the West, in Rocky Mountain and Glacier Parks and elsewhere. Of one, the range seen from Sprague Lodge (where, it will be remembered, the Chief Justice took his oath of office last summer) she has made a triptych, which might properly and advantageously serve as the theme for a mural painting, so engaging is the composition, so impressive the feeling of form and grandeur manifested.

Dramatic Impression. From the West also come pictures of the Santa Fe Inn, the Taos Pueblo and, especially notable, a white cross on a mountain top, "The Morada," which is near Taos and conveys a dramatic impression of spaciousness and solitude. Among Justice and Mrs. Stone have their summer home, Cedar Swamp, and "Evening on the Bay." the last rendered with great subtlety. In the midst of these pictures of land and sea and sky is found a group of three water colors of the skyscrapers of New York, with their myriad window eyes looking out upon our Titan City-subjects which present extraordinarily difficult problems in drawing and composition which have been exceed-

Elephant Prints.

There are portraits in colored crayon, there are groups; glimpses are given of natives in their natural habitats, from which the visitor may turn to pictures of the white man in his unnatural Oriental resorts, to say nothing of elephant prints and one of deer-all delightful.

Saint Gaudens is quoted as having eaid that art is not what one does, but the way one does it-which, whoever the author, is particularly applicable to these works by Thomas Handforth. Subjectively, they allure, but it is the genius of the artist which sweeps the observer off his Nothing can explain this quality or its reaction, but it must be obvious to all, and to the sensitive, peculiarly thrilling.

Youthful Vigor. Strangely enough, the medium used seems to make little difference to Mr. Handforth; he is adept with all. But he suits his medium to his theme. Sometimes, he puts chief dependence on line; then, again, on surface modeling or on wash applied with a flowing brush. Among certain enthusiastic collectors, lament is heard that any of his time should be taken from etching; but, apparently, by extending his field, he has found fresh expression and been enabled to retain his youthful vigor

To point out the special merit of Alumni and Students to separate examples in the current exhibition is quite unnecessary. They speak for themselves. That Mr. Handforth is represented in almost all the leading print collections in this country gives indication of widespread recognition of achieve-

Show Work at Phillips The first exhibition to be set forth by the Phillips Memorial Gallery this season consists of oils and water colors painted during the past summer by members of last year's classes and the staff of the Phillips Gallery Art School. It opened last Sunday in one of the lower galleries, given over, as a rule, to the display of prints. In the gallery adjoining, may be seen, at the same time, a group of prints by such well-known printmakers as Goya, Daumier Braque, Picasso, Renoir, Bonnard and others who, from time to time,

Exhibit at Corcoran

Sponsored by the faculty of the Corcoran School of Art, the Corcoran Gallery will hold, from next Saturday to November 30, an exhibition of works in various media by those who have studied or are now studying in the school. This will be set forth in the gallery of special exhibitions on the second floor.

The requirements for admission are stated as follows: First, high quality; second, medium in size; third, of a kind which would enhance the charm of an ordinary living room; fourth, price to run from $5 to $50, no more or less.

Entry slips are available at the school, and works must be delivered there on Thursday. The jury will consist of two members of the faculty, two laymen and two recent students of the school.

American Academy in Rome

Owing to war conditions abroad the American Academy in Rome cannot now send students to Italy. Fellowship holders last year were given the privilege of studying in professional schools in this country or of traveling in South and Central America. English Artist Exhibits War Drawings Red Cross Nurse

Shows Works at Whyte Gallery

By Florence S. Berryman. Sketches of London's East Enders during the blitzkrieg of autumn, 1940, made by a young English artist, Jessica Stonor, will be shown at the Whyte Gallery for a week, opening to the public tomorrow. The group of 25 to 30 large drawings in crayon is the work of a sculptor temporarily turned "reporter"-and depicts the people with whom she was in close contact as a volunteer Red Cross nurse. The exnibition is appropriately entitled, Everyman in War"-men, women and children who remained in their section of the city and spent the nights in shelters or the underground. It was first shown at the American British Art Center, New York, and subsequently in Newport, Boston and Philadelphia. As mothers and children are the predominant subject matter, it is perhaps inevitable that one will find these drawings reminiscent of the work of Kathe Kollwitz, the great German graphic artist whose representations of starving, suffering women and children of the poor are ell known in this country. There no intention of implying that Miss Stonor was influenced by Frau Kollwitz's work; it is merely that this English artist's large blackand-white sketches, made under the impact of scenes vividly etched in her mind, have an immediacy about them as have the German artist's, and that they deal with much the same type of subject. Their differences are greater than their similarities, but the latter are obvious.

Present Hardships Can Be Faced With Greater Courage in Company With Finer and More Beautiful Things By Alice Eversman.

It would hardly seem necessary to remind thinking people that a special effort, exceeding any heretofore expended, should be put forth to preserve all that is fine and beautiful in our lives. Forces in the world today have compelled many to banish gentle thought and feeling in order to fight for existence. Others have deliberately chosen to extinguish everything pertaining to the spiritual side of man and to substitute the grossest materialism. We, the inhabitants of this continent, have still the right to select the way of our thinking and to embellish it with noble aspirations that history has proven give strength and firmness to mind and body.

The danger toward a sacrifice of the great stimulants to righteous living, of which music is one, is to be found in fear of the future as regards financial stability. There is also a prevalent feeling that only when the mind is at rest should such things as the cultivation of the arts be taken up. Such ideas were widespread some years ago when the country was building and men and women looked forward to a time when they could indulge themselves in things of the mind and heart and in so doing round out their

This country has passed beyond that phase and in passing has learned that when the remembrance of finer and more beautiful things is present hardships can be faced with greater courage. People have become conscious of the power of the arts, and especially of music, as fortifiers of spiritual strength, something that no amount of financial security or well-planned living can give. Adults have discovered how helpful a mind attuned to the great thoughts of great men can be in facing daily trials and have been wishful of imbuing their children with an appreciation of this part of education from their earliest years.

Beauty Should Be Stored.

The future is more threatening at present than it has ever been in the lifetime of many of us. It is necessary then that a greater preparation be made for a storing of the sort of beauty the arts give against a time when it may not be possible. Particularly is this a duty parents must not neglect toward their children. The finer the sensibilities of the coming generation the greater our chances of preserving all that we have built up and of expanding that building to a lasting memorial of our clear thinking. A great portion of the population is faced with the necessity of curtailing expenditures and of living within a restricted budget. But it is a mistake to feel that a musical education or the attendance at concerts can be among those things to be done without. They are as necessary to the life of the spirit as food is to that of the body. Music offers a means of escape, if you will from the pressure of painful thought, but it is a legitimate escape bringing renewed courage for the solving of problems.

Life and Death Drama Is Endless in Yugoslavia

Rebecca West's Latest Work Presents European History In Morality Play Spirit

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Black Lamb and Grey Falcon

In two volumes. By Rebecca West. The Viking Press, New York. By subject no less than by title, this new work of Miss West's is likely at first to be meaningless to the great majority of American readers. For it is a book about Yugoslavia, and that country has as little reality to most of us as the symbolic phrases which the author has used to give her work a name. Yet, with the genius of Rebecca West we are familiar, and we shall hardly expect that she has written a mere history or book of travels or any other conventional manner of thing.

She has not. In splendid sorrow and moral passion she has written a comment on the conflict between the two aspects of human nature which are eternally at war with each other, the healthful passion for life and peace and the dark, neurotic longing for cruelty, violence and death. She has set this comment in terms of Europe's history since the decline of Rome, and the scene on the continent where the perpetual warfare has been most perpetually waged is, she finds, that little known Balkan country

In 1936 she went to Yugoslavia for the first time. She returned the following year, and it is out of this second trip that she has made her present book. On the first journey, clearly, she had a vision and understood that she must tell of what her eyes had seen. During the six years that followed she labored to set her revelation down. The monumental work which has resulted is at once one of the most curious and most magnificent pieces of writing of the present century.

Europe's History as a Morality Play.

It is three things. It is, first, on a majestic scale and in a noble manner, a presentation of Europe's history as a morality play. It is an effort to cast the ceaseless warfare of that continent into an interpretation which will go beyond timely and immediate causes. It is a seeking for a constant explanation of a constant phenomenon, and that explanation Miss West finds in the duality of human nature, its negative love of death and its positive affirmation of life. Thus we have, as in the medieval plays, the powers of darkness and the powers of light arrayed against each other-not, to be sure, in the conventional sense of combating for possession of men's souls, but in the sense of governments which seek the conquest and enslavement of other peoples, and governments which fight for the right to be free. It is a psychological morality which Miss West produces for us, not a religious one, for she conceives of the lust for conquest and enslavement as a phychological disease and a form of infantilism, while she sees the contrary determination to be peaceful and free as the expression of the normal mind normally matured. And in that part of the Balkan peninsula which, until last spring, was Yugoslavia, these irreconcilable forces have met and fought, she reminds us, since the dawn of the Christian era and even earlier. The generally accepted historical theory that economic conditions are always responsible for the going out by one nation to conquer, plunder and enslave another does not explain this unending warfare in Europe's southeast corner to Miss West's profoundly probing mind. Economic conditions will lead a people as far as making a conquest, she says, but in the governing of the conquered people after the conquest, the economic factor gives way to the death-loving spirit, since conquest is an evil soil from which evil growths must rise. The Yugoslavs have been objects of conquest almost immemorably; until the Versailles Treaty, except for eight years under Napoleon, they have never had peace. The Romans, the Turks, the Austrians, the Russians, the Germans, the Italians have all attacked them with the aim of enslavement; and the Yugoslavs have consistently resisted and, though overcome, have not accepted slavery. Consequently, the drama of life and death has been played unendingly in their land, and to a traveler as sensitive and as wise as Miss West, every stone of that land, every city, every village, every ruin, every church, every farm—the shores, the very air—bear witness of the struggle. As for the people, they have been stripped, she finds, of all lesser qualities than their love of life; they know nothing of the amenities which dress life agreeably for favored peoples, they only know the naked life itself, a passion which is their history. They have a reality, therefore, which Miss West found unlike the reality of any other people. They are the personification of the positive part of the human spirit. There is no negation in them.

Traces Europe's Evils to Austrian Empire.

The long procession of their adversaries finds most enduring representative in Austria, she says, and from the Austrian Empire, she believes, have stemmed all the evils of the Europe of our time. "It is," she says, "as if a fountain of negativism plays in the center only friend is an elderly bawd and of Europe, killing all living things within the reach of its spray. This lethal action is not to be conceived as a Teuton reaction to the Slav. It knows no such racial limitation. Life, under any label, is the enemy." It was Austrian tyranny and ineptitude which brought about the first abandoned. World War, and it has been the Austrian heritage which has embroiled Europe again, for both Mussolini and Hitler, she asserts, learned their In it Louis Aragon demonstrates political philisophy and technique from Austrian models. They are the heirs of death; they carry on the war against life today. And it has and breadth of understanding which only been in the Balkans, she continues, bringing her case to a masterly and impassioned conclusion, that the Axis has met real opposition-in dential Quarter." and which have Greece and in Yugoslavia. Both of these countries knew that their caused him to be rated among the resistance was useless, she writes; both knew that they were certain to most talented of young French be overcome in the field. But both fought because they could not concede novelists today. to death. They died to live, whereas it is the aim of the Austrian-inspired

Axis governments today to live in order that death may flourish. This is perhaps the great concept in a work which is full of profound thought, but the book is also a great piece of historical writing. The story of the Yugoslavs is in it, from the pre-Christian era to the present. Yet that is not all that the book is, either, for it is cast not in the form of a history, but in that of a travel diary. "I was obliged to write a long and complicated history," says Miss West, "and to swell that with an account of myself and the people who went with me on my travels, since it was my aim to show the past side by side with the present it created."

Tells of Her Travels in Yugoslavia.

And so she tells of how she went from city to village, from country church to great cathedral, from modern power dams to Roman ruins; of how she talked to government officials, peasants, professors, gypsies, poets, priests, women and children; of how she sat in cafes and witnessed dances and plays, and of what she ate and bought in markets, and of where she slept and how she rested. And as she does this, she builds up on this day-by-day skeleton her great structure of comment and his-

Thus the book becomes three things-the travel diary of a brilliant artist, a material and spiritual history of conquest in Eastern Europe, and a moral interpretation. Through half a million words and more than 1,100 pages, Miss West's intensity never flags. The drive of her purpose, the inspiration of her vision and the force of her execution are mag-

But the book is perhaps even one thing more; it seemed so to the reviewer, at any rate. And that is this: Miss West has spoken as a She is one of the great prose artists of our age, and on the lofty plane on which she has worked in the past it is irrelevant to denominate workers according to sex. An artist deals in truth, and whether the artist is man or woman is of no more moment than whether the artist is tall or short. But this is a work about war, and the profoundest difference which exists between the minds of the sexes is in their respective attitudes toward war. War is the product of men. Women have always hated it. Those of ordinary minds have hated it on the practical grounds that it destroyed their families. Those of great minds have hated it more largely for its utter negation of life. Yet, ordinary or And, as the whole planet was adgreat, they have said little against it, for they have recognized that they lived in a man's world, and that the womanly part was to concede, since nothing more could be done. It is now, in this book of Rebecca West's. as if all the strong-minded, strong-hearted, loving women of history had were nice people, he says. And then suddenly spoken out and said those things which heretofore they had he found they weren't. It really was only meditated in silence, while conceding that men determine the an awfully upsetting experience and world's destiny. It is as if a wise grandmother, a shrewd-tongued spinster and a loving wife had been given the artist's powers of expression and had put them to use against the male habit of war-making, and it is a terribly impressive utterance. It is the voice of common sense and righteousness speaking on the impersonal level of truth. It will take a very peculiar mentality to turn a deaf ear to it

Whose Revolution?

Edited by Irving De Witt Talmadge. Howell, Soskin & Co., New York.

By many and various kinds of people, from members of the official National Resources and Planning Board to the man in the street, thought is being given to the post-war world. The contributors to this volume believe that totalitarianism is neither desirable nor inevitable, and seek to advance alternative suggestions. Alfred M. Bingham, now a member of the Connecticut Senate, has written an interesting section. He suggests that perhaps the greatest weakness of the traditional democratic system is that it is not designed to meet the tremendous administrative tasks now imposed upon governments. He writes that a "new constitutional structure for our economic government must be devised, based on the same principles of representation and responsibility that have proved their validity in political gov-

James Burnham, author of the recent book, "The Managerial Revolution," which has attracted considerable attention, again states his belief | ment. that "managerial society is to be characterized by state control and subsequently ownership of the principal means of production, and a ruling or dominant class made up chiefly of the managerial and administrative groups, working together with politicians and military men. * * "

Lewis Corey, who has been the editor of a number of Marxist journals, starts his contribution with the blunt statement that Marxism, as a thriller. progressive social force, is dead. Asserting, however, the need for a new social order, Mr. Corey sets forth three points: (1) The need to limit socialization of industry to monopoly; (2) the need of a form of socialization that avoids the old plan of government ownership with centralized bureaucratic power, and (3) the need for a constitutional system of division of rights and powers and for checks and balances in the socialized section of the economy.

Other contributors to the book are Hans Kohn, Granville Hicks, Eugene Lyons, Malcolm Cowley, Roger N. Baldwin, Bertram D. Wolfe and John Chamberlain.

All in all, it would appear that certain left-wingers are recovering from a bad case of intoxication by Marxism and are feeling a severe hangover. Whether one agrees with any of the conclusions in the book or not, it remains an interesting discussion of a vital topic—the future. BAINBRIDGE CRIST.

Book Tells Exciting Story Of American Government

Subject Becomes Human and Dramatic in F. J. Haskin's Greatly Enlarged Study

The American Government

By Frederic J. Haskin. Harper & Bros., New York. This is an exciting book. In the hands of Mr. Haskin the American Government becomes human and dramatic. The whole variegated activity of the Federal machine is covered as thoroughly as in an encyclopedia and as entertainingly as in an essay. In illustration, thus begins the chapter on the Patent Office: "When the British burned the Capitol in 1814 and turned a battery of guns on the Patent Office, Dr. William Thornton, incumbent of what now is the commissionership of patents, rushed before the guns and cried that if vandals would destroy the records of inventive genius valuable to men of all nations, they must shoot through his body.

"That is the legend. Whether it be true or not, it is certain that intercession in some form saved the patent records from destruction. Since then, there have been many fires which have destroyed some patent records, but after nearly a century and a half of this danger, the Patent Office at length is housed in as fireproof a structure as man can devise."

Drives Home Understanding of Growth.

Mr. Haskin, whose daily answers to all sorts of questions are familiar to readers of The Star editorial page, wrote the first edition of "The American Government" in 1911. We all know that the Government has grown, but the author drives home our understanding of the growth by his comment in the introduction:

When this volume was first issued in 1911, it contained 90,000 words in 30 chapters. Through its many revisions, it has been enlarged in size until this edition has about 225,000 words in 95 chapters."

The story of the American Government begins nine days after the signing of the preliminary articles of the Treaty of Paris, ending the Revolutionary War in 1783. At once States, cities and villages began to compete with one another for the privilege of housing the Government of the new United States, and not until July 16, 1790, did Congress pass the bill providing that the permanent capital of the Republic should be a spot on the Potomac River beginning the first Monday in December, Between May 27, 1800, and the first Monday in December the Government was moved to the Potomac from Philadelphia.

Postmaster General Missed Opening.

"The first executive department to be opened was the Post Office Department. Joseph Habersham, the Postmaster General, was absent, but Abraham Bradley, jr., Assistant Postmaster General, took charge. Only half the floors were laid in the Post Office Department building, so there was some delay, but after about a week this establishment moved in.

"The entire department, including the Postmaster General of the United States, consisted of nine persons. The city post office occupied the first floor, the department occupied the three rooms on the second. and Mr. Bradley and his family had their living quarters on the third floor." The modern Post Office Department gets five chapters in Mr. Haskin's book. The story for 1941 starts out: "Were other records unavailable, a historian of the far future could substantially reconstruct the progress of the second World War from the records of the Post Office Department. He would learn how mail-carrying ships were ever seeking new routes to old ports as eagerly as Elizabethan explorers sought the fabulous Northwest Passage. He would learn how the ambuscades of hostile submarines were dreaded just as the early mariners dreaded fabulous monsters of the deep or the edge of the world itself. The future historian would trace, month by month, the fall of once peaceful nations into the pit of war."

One-tenth of the book is devoted to the story of bureaus born since President Roosevelt took office in 1933. The great shifts in emphasis in national and political economy that have followed the course of government since 1933 are discussed by Mr. Haskin in his introduction.

Currency Should Meet Enlarged Needs.

"The money and credit system of the Nation," he recalls, "had always proceeded upon the assumption that private business should create business activity. The Federal Reserve currency system was based on the theory that as business expanded new fountains of credit and currency should flow forth to serve the enlarged needs.

This was in accordance with the old-fashioned economy. This process has been exactly reversed. Under the leadership of the Treasury. and fortified by special acts of Congress, the fountain of credit and currency was set to flowing first, to stimulate the expansion of industry

Here, then, we have the story of this new philosophy that animates the old Government. The English Are Like That

By Philip Carr. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

In the fire and hell of war, a new England is being created, an England whose whole economic, social and political structure is being streamlined to permit the maximum efficient effort in combating the gravest menace England and all the civilized world have ever had to face. This new England will be different from the old, but different because it is the product of a stimulated evolution rather than the product of a revolution. What is being created is the product of the old fused with the exigencies of the times, and to & understand what the new is likely to be, one must know the old.

This book is the description of the England that is passing, the England which will leave its stamp on the future of English people everywhere. It includes chapters on such matters as justice and Parliament in England, the social structure, women, children and home life, schools, the press, industry, commerce and finance, literature, the arts, the theater, sports and a group of pen sketches of the men who are leading England in this critical hour.

Just Between Ourselves

By Philip H. Love

What is your favorite among all the books you have ever read? Do you like it well enough to want to read it again sometime? And do you think you will continue to remember it with pleasure, say, 25 years from now?

The questions are prompted by the fact that today is the beginning of the 23d annual Children's Book Week. In an effort to write a column suitable to the occasion, I have been trying to recall some of the books I enjoyed from 15 to 25 years ago. And I have just made the rather startling discovery that only a few of my childhood favorites have retained any vividness in my memory, and of these not more than a half dozen have seemed to me to merit a second reading.

My first books were the ones I received for Christmas. They must have been pretty dull things, for though I remember finding many of them among my gifts each year, I don't recall any that I ever read. I think I must have saved them for later use as presents for some of my

The first book of which I have any real recollection was called "Peck's Bad Boy." Sister Justina, who taught me from the first grade through the fourth, used to read it to her classes as a reward for good behavior. Whenever her pupils fell down in their studies, became too boisterous or otherwise displeased her, she would frown: "All rightno 'Peck's Bad Boy' this week!" And, nearly always, the results were

Sister Justina's boys and girls also learned about "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn" from her. She read weekly installments of them after she nad taken her classes through the hilarious misadventures of Mr. Peck's young rascal. And the immortal Mark Twain was, I believe, the most effective policeman ever recruited for service in a classroom

I have read many other books since then-more than I can even begin to recall—but none that brought me quite so much pleasure swimming 150 yards in 1 minute as the Sawyer and Finn classics. In fact, only one other book stands out in my memory with anything like equal vividness, and that is Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island." And that, come to think of it, is probably because I have re-read it almost as many times as I have the Twain works.

Other favorites of my boyhood were the books of G. A. Henty, H. M. Tomlinson, Ralph Henry Barbour, H. Irving Hancock, Archibald Lee Fletcher, Daniel Carter Beard, and, of course, the inescapable Horatio Alger, jr. The Henty and Tomlinson works have not stayed in my memory, but I recall that Mr. Barbour specialized in stories of the the resort made the officials of the athletic heroes of a prep school contest wonder if the event should named Yardley Hall. coral soil. The harbor is named after a traditional character, Sheihk Barghout. This man, so the story goes, was too poor to pay for his take drinking water with him and died of thirst on the Red Sea, almost at the end of his journey. Now, when a boat manned by a Mohammedan crew puts into Port Sudan, the first mate empties a pail of fresh water into the sea for Sheihk Barghout to drink.

Forty miles east of Port Sudan is the gleaming town of Suakin, once a chief center of the African slave trade. The Red Sea mountain range lies westward. In the mountains and foothills roam wild beasts, such as leopards, tigers, ibexes, gazelles and monkeys. During the fall season millions of natives very busy catching them. There are lots of other fish in the harbor, including bayards and giant of Letter From crabs and crayfish. The crabs are very dangerous and so strong that they can tear a man to pieces. Our steamer stayed in Port Sudan just one day, but we saw many places in that short time. We went ashore after breakfast and stopped a while on the pier. There many dirty Arabs tried to get us to go for a camel ride in the desert, but we did not want to go camel riding. All along the pier and the roads leading to town were merchants selling native goods, most of them Arabs white burnous. We also saw Hindu peddlers selling silver jewelry and belts and huge knives with finely worked handles. One peddler had nothing but swords and queer curved knives that were made (he said) of genuine Damascus steel. I asked the man what the knives were for and he told me they were used by the chieftains who own caravans, not because they were beautiful knives but because they were good for killing people.

English Money.

Unlike the natives of the Far East. the Arabs do not have bazaars They are a nomad race and carry their goods in canvas cloths. They spread their wares on the canvas cloths on the hot sand, wherever they chance to be, and sit on their legs waiting for customers. The Arab peddlers sell mostly leather goods made of rhinoceros hide, including wide belts, whips, canes, bracelets that reached the elbows and sandals. All these leather goods had a strongly fishy smell—like codliver oil-and I could not wait to get away from them. We bought a pair of sandals and

I thought he had gone crazy. I asked mother if the man was asking God to change his money for him, and then, looking around, I discovered that all the other natives were also with their knees and hands on the ground. drop everything and pray to Allah. We went back on board ship for lunch. On deck were more peddlers with coral ornaments, beautiful sea shells and seed pearls. You could buy the seed pearls by the pound. After lunch we went downtown Port Sudan is a big town, the population being about 10,000, mostly Sudanese. The houses are of Moorish style with flat roofs and lots of palm and date trees outside Everything is white and the town looks like a fairy tale city.

Glass-Bottom Boat.

We asked a policeman to show us the way to the Marine Gardens, and he answered us in perfect English He was black and handsome, with thick black lips, kinky hair and very long ears. He wore just one earring, a white turban, a white uniform, thick leather sandals and no socks.

I asked him where he came from and he told me that his home was in Dongola Province. He belonged to the provincial police force. He carried a whip in the right hand and I asked him if it was to use on the camels. He laughed and said, "No. It is to use on the Sudanese."

We returned to the ship about strains. Their skin is not black, but a fine mahogany brown. Their bodies shine like oilcloth. They

Dominion Is First Democratic Nation to Attempt Pegging Wages Along With All Prices

Tax on Firm's Income

BALTIMORE, Nov. 1.—The State Tax Commission has announced that corporations doing business partly within and partly without Maryland should be taxed on the basis of that amount of business attributable to Maryland.

Ruling on an appeal by a Delaware laundry and dry cleaning corporation which has its plant at Silver Spring, Md., and conducts business in both Maryland and the District of Columbia, the commission stated that these two factors should be given equal weight.

Under the ruling, Maryland will ax approximately 75 per cent of the company's income. It stated that "this case calls for recognition of the fact that part of the business s reasonably attributable to the District of Columbia."

Tax Commissioner William D. Henderson said the ruling was made in the absence of any formula prescribed by the controller or by law to cover such a case. The entire company's income was held taxable before the appeal.

Germans Pioneered Route.

Not many foreigners have been over this airline-if you can call it an airline. It is an irregular joining He disclosed that only 154 of the of two services—one Chinese and 1st Army's 20,000 vehicles were out one Russian. The most elementary facts about it are unknown at either terminus. The route was pioneered several years ago by Germans. It flies over an ancient caravan trail, for major repairs because drivers more recently improved into a route which trucks may travel, and have traveled, bringing such Russian supplies to Chiang Kai-shek as he could wangle. Sir Stafford Cripps, the British Ambassador, went in this way last year. But mainly the air connection is to carry mail and occasionally military experts and advisers to and from Moscow and

The Chinese plane is an old Junkers tri-motor, which lumbers across the endless mountain ridges of China at 80 or 90 miles an hour. Beyond Chengtu the rich valley land peters out. There are only the deserts and the mountain ranges that rise up in them. In the middle of the desert is a dot called Hami. The Junkers set us down on a deserted piece of this desert near Hami alongside a wind sock and a two-story stone building which was Bradford College, Bradford, Mass. the outpost of the Russian airline. Several families of young Russians lived there. They were the first Russians I met, and I was interested in everything about them. I was with Archie Steele-A. T. Steele of the Chicago Daily News-with whom I was to travel to Moscow.. He spoke enough Chinese to get us along. A Mongolian kitchen boy at the airport was our interpreter.

Temperature 120, Humidity 0. It was four days before the Russian plane came in-four days we spent drying up in a temperature of 20 degrees humidity zero The life than the Russians lived did not seem strange. There was nothing communal about it that I could see. There were several chilwere devoted to them and they were a little spoiled. I showed them copies of PM. They were fascinated with some pictures of Nazi atrocities. They shook their heads over them for a long time. They were angry.

The town of Hami is an ancient caravan city of mud and dust. It is just over the flat horizon from the airport and the Russians took us there in their station wagon. It was a Russian-built imitation of a Ford. We were in the Sinkiang Province of China, about which there is a lot of talk in Asia. The talk is about whether it is a province of Chiang Kai-shek's China or of Stalin's Soviet Union. It has a dictator, named Sheng Shih-tsai, who gets his picture in all the stores either on a par with Chiang Kia-shek's or alone. Produce of Russia All the merchandise in the stores in Hami-they open up on one side of the street or the other, depending on which side is in the shade at that time of day-are of Soviet manufacture. We found wines from the Caucasus, canned fruit from the Ukraine, clothes from Moscow, everything from embroidery to hack

Hami is famous for its melons They tasted good in the heat, and Steele and I would shop the Soviet Marriage License stores for a while, stop to eat a melon, stop again and then buy Applications melons to take back to the airport Late on the fourth afternoon a Soviet plane came in out of the sky from the west, its only passengers two Polish refugees who had somehow beaten their way across the continent from Latvia. They felt they had reached civilization in

Hami. They didn't like countries at Steele and I left early the next morning. We crossed above Russian territory shortly after noon. Our arrival in Alma Ata made anecdotes. I was still under the impression that we were there to connect with another Soviet plane which was to take us to Moscow—as I had been promised in Washington. The Russian Ambassador in Chungking said representative of the Foreign Office in Alma Ata, Smirnoff, to take care of us. Mr. Smirnoff in Person. We walked 100 yards from the airplanes to a little waiting room which was equipped with armchairs and a game of checkers to play. We were surrounded immediately by five gentlemen in Russian smocks or shirtsleeves, whom we took to be the customs officials. But there was no way of communicating with them, since neither of us spoke the other's language. We sat for Little things impress you in a strange country. It seemed curious that after being met by a welcoming committee and having had our customs inspection waived with a heel-clicking salute by the border guard, our committee walked out ance of the most expressive of all and left us to follow, carrying our words in Russian-N-yet. By JESSIE FANT EVANS. Our daughters in the women's colleges and universities of this Nation are going to understand the consumer program of the United States and how it relates to America's defense program.

Miss Harriet Elliott, in charge of the Consumer Division of the Office of Price Administration, is bringing this about from the background of own academic leadership through co-operation with the faculties of the women's colleges and universities. As a special consultant in education. Miss Elliott has recently announced the appointment of Miss Mabelle B. Blake of Cambridge Mass. Miss Blake is a former member of the faculty of Wheaton, Smith and the Chicago Teachers' College and director of guidance as well as teacher of psychology at In addition she holds a doctor of education degree from Harvard University. She brings a wealth of experience in the educational world and in civic endeavor to her new position. She is the author of "Guidance for College Women," "The Significance of Mental Hygiene in College" and of various authoritative books pamphlets in her field.

Already Miss Blake has visited 38 leading women's colleges and universities in New England and the more definitely plans are being Middle West to discuss with their made by Miss Elliot's department versity girls exercise their citizenship both in the market place and units or exhibits to serve as a posin the use of social resources. > Girls Deeply Interested. As for the college and university girls in these institutions, they are deeply interested. What they like about the whole idea is its practical application to present-day living through the explanation of such problems as price fixing, informative labelling, budgeting, market values, news values, nutrition and food and other kindred subjects. In almost every instance the enthusiasm of the college girls springs from the fact that they can visualize for themselves the relation of academic theory to actual life. Its interrelation is evident in their own lives and those of their friends and their touch theirs in our national defense

La Plata Farmers Urge C. C. C. Recruiting End

LA PLATA, Md., Nov. 1 .- The

the Charles County Agricultural Defense Board to stop recruiting youths in this section for the Civilian Conservation Corps because of a shortage of farm labor. The Defense Board adopted a resolution after an announcement that 19 colored men were enrolled from the county within the last two weeks

"in spite of the fact that local farmers are unable to get labor to cut corn, disc wheat land and make preparations for the increase in food production which the Government is asking from the county.' Speaking at the meeting included Dr. S. H. Devault, head of the University of Maryland agricultural economics department; Joseph H Blandford, member of the Maryland State Agricultural Defense Board; Dudley H. Aist, A. A. A. representative, and Miss Mary Graham, home demonstration agent. Local board members expressed willingness to exert all efforts to have Charles County farmers and others plant gardens and stimulate grain, milk and egg production, but emphasized that labor shortage is the most serious obstacle.

PRICED SURPRISINGLY LOW.

To a man of prideful heritage or position who may now be seeking a worthy home establishment of dignity and prestige it is fitting that this new creation—built of artistic and enduring stone—should command his instant consideration. For let it be known that ROCKHAVEN is a true masterpiece of building art, whose zenith of grace and dignity ranks it as a classic.

Of heroic proportions—30x40, with 12x 18-ft, veranda—even a passerby is impelled to pause in admiration of the blending tones of yellows, browns and grays in the impeccable natural stone of the dwelling's exterior—slate roof, graceful doorway and flagstone plazza. Artful and artistic beyond prosaic description is the spacious interior—an imposing living room. 18x28, having a huge stone fireplace: distinctive hall stairway, cloak closet, extra lavatory, stafely dining rm. a truly sophisticated kitchen. On second floor are 3 exquistily lovely bedrms. 4 closets, decorations in the master's room being modernistic, with built-in chest of drawers; big linen closet; a truly classic bathroom having built-in tub and recessed shower, with floor and walls of artfully tinted genuine tile. Exquisitely decorated throughout; finest hardwood floors, copper screens and plumbing: weather-stripped and insulated: oil burner hot-water heat with year-around hot water; basement recreation room. 16x20-it. garage: a generous amount of land, beautifully landscaped, elim and other big trees.

Of unsurpassed quality, dignified in character and reasonable in price—under $12.000—ROCKHAVEN is an establishment worthy of the most discriminating, for which pride of possession should be very sreat. Write or phone for further information, or call at office and SEE TODAY.

Let's Sing

LUCY MONROE is blond and pretty and sings beautifully. She never thought that some day she'd be as important to our national defense as a fleet of battleships, say, or as a covey of tanks.

She is, though. First, Mayor LaGuardia put her to work for his Office of Civilian Defense. Then Secretary of War Stimson appointed her to the music subcommittee of the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation.

Her job for LaGuardia is to go to areas where civilians are doing important defense work and organize community sings. Reason: our defense chiefs know nothing brings a lot of people together so well as a song which they all sing at the same time. Also, by the end of this month she'll start active service for Mr. Stimson with a tour of 72 Army camps. She'll either hold or organize sings in all of them.

Already Lucy is known as "The Star-Spangled Banner Girl." She's earned that title: she has sung the national anthem in public at least 1,500 times—a record. Her career as a patriotic-song singer began when she was made Official Soloist of the American Legion Convention in 1937. The high in her new career came, she says, when she sang the anthem immediately after the President's Fourth of July speech.

LAST AUGUST, Lucy broke all musical records when she held her first sing in Washington. The sponsors had printed 12,000 tickets at 25c, 50c, and $1 (proceeds for the U.S.O.), hoping the crowd would be almost that big. Twenty-five thousand came. Then Lucy went to Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium. Forty-five thousand appeared to sing with her.

Most interesting discovery of her self-paid tours so far is that America's favorite songs are still old tunes like "Swanee River," "Smiles," "Sweet Adeline," "My Country Tis of Thee." Top favorite of all, though, is the newest: "God Bless America."

She has also uncovered the song favorites of U. S. defense chiefs. General Marshall — "In the Good Old Summertime." William Knudsen — "Goodnight, Sweetheart." Secretary of Navy Knox — "Anchors Aweigh." And, by an odd coincidence, Mayor LaGuardia, the Nation's No. 1 Fire-Chaser, prefers "Keep the Home Fires Burning." — JERRY MASON

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

DUST IT OFF-AND USE IT

by Robert Keith Leavitt

The back country of New England, where century-old farmhouses cling to rocky hills, they have a quaint, expressive word: "Culch."

It means that clutter of broken, outworn, obsolete and discarded things you see back under the eaves of the attic, or off in a bin built into the corner of the woodshed: old doorknobs...dressmakers' forms...rusty, bent sickles...clocks that stopped when Hayes was President...brass hub caps of long-vanished buggies...an infinite variety of utterly useless articles. Or so you would think.

But when you get to know your Yankee farmer, you discover that his culch bin is a small gold mine — a mine of raw materials for his age-old avocation of tinkering. He has a passion for storing whatever might come in handy — a sort of instinct inherited from generations of ancestors who could afford neither the money nor the time to travel miles for a handful of nails, a length of wire or a piece of brass.

He can cast an eye over a box of rusty junk, scrabble around in it awhile, extract a half-dozen pieces of perfectly unrelated metal, retire with them to his workbench—and come forth with a latch for the feedbox... or a kitchen-lamp bracket... or a parcel holder for the boy's bicycle. Last fall a man I stopped to see had just repaired a fishing reel out of the innards of an ancient alarm clock.

We smile at the farmer's culch bin, and envy him the satisfaction he gets out of rigging up things to make life a little more comfortable.

Yet most of us have culch bins with equally surprising possibilities. Ours isn't the same kind of culch. Not being farmers, we don't accumulate worn-out sickles and buggy parts; not being so handy with tools, we aren't tempted to save odd scraps "in case." But it is a rare one of us who hasn't some discarded talent or skill in his mental woodshed, waiting to be hauled out and put to a new and profitable use.

AT MAY be the relic of a youthful enthusiasm, as in the case of a plumber in a New England summer-resort town. He had wanted to be an artist, but things didn't work out that way. Lately, however, someone started one of those semi-pro theaters in his town and cast about for a scene-painter who would work for a share in the dreamed-of profits. The plumber trotted out his all-but-forgotten talent, got the job, handled it in his spare hours and is now having the time of his life—and actually making a nice piece of change as a regular member of a successful enterprise.

A man in upstate New York had almost forgotten a boyhood passion for taxidermy until the Boy Scouts rediscovered it for him. Now he is the town sage on animal-stuffing and at last reports was starting a class in another of his long-neglected talents—archery.

Some people find that accomplishments rescued from the culch bin are surprisingly effective keys to advancement in business. There was the extraordinary case of a young man who worked for years in a large Philadelphia concern without ever being noticed at all. Then one day a fellow worker found out that he had a flair for ventriloquism the remnant of a youthful ambition to go on the stage. He was persuaded to do his stuff at company entertainments, and from then on people began to notice and watch him. Result: because he was a better accountant than anybody had realized, he went ahead rapidly, eventually becoming an officer of his company.

THE business woods are full of successes founded on talents ingeniously resurrected from the culch heap. There are at least two widely distributed brands of canned goods that started in the kitchens of businessmen who were out of jobs and forced to try their hands at a skill they hadn't previously esteemed very highly. There is a big and highly successful business in industrial cements that was started by a stony-broke man who liked to fool around with chemicals.

But it is not the spectacular money successes that prove the value of looking over your culch bin with an appraising eye. Rather it is the innumerable successes of quiet satisfaction and of added richness in the experience of life which so many ordinary, everyday people have discovered. These are enough in themselves to encourage anyone to overhaul his stock of neglected abilities. When they can be combined with profit it is all to the good.

In a town near New York is a man who was partially disabled in the France of 1918. Though he had unusual gifts and a splendid engineering training, his injuries were just sufficient to keep him short of complete success. Then, a couple of years ago, he looked into his accumulation of old accomplishments and saw two things there. First, he remembered more of his formal education than most of us do. Second, he had a way with kids.

So he started a tutoring business, helping boys and girls who were finding the going hard in school; preparing older ones for college examinations. In this line of work he proved to be a "natural." His success was immediate, complete, and gladly bruited about by pleased parents, teachers and pupils. It soon went beyond mere tutoring — into the field of trusted counsel on the problems of youth and the perplexities of parent-teacher-child relations.

Now he has as much work as he can handle. But even more important, he has found the kind of work he wants to do, the kind he can do, seemingly, better than anyone else—and the kind that yields him not merely a good living but rich dividends of appreciation and gratitude. It is, if anything, a little more satisfactory for having been lifted out of the culch bin.

SPEED. Lowell Thomas invited a friend of his up to the country to play softball with him on a recent Saturday morning. "Sorry," was the friend's reply, "but I'm flying to Africa tomorrow morning — but I'll be glad to make a date with you to play next Saturday morning."

ABOUT THE COVER. That's no toy in the hands of the young man on our cover. It's a scale model of the planes used by the U. S. Army's Flying Cadets.

Models — just like the one our cover boy has — are in daily use at California's Moffett Field. Cadet instructors illustrate complicated aerial maneuvers with them. So the young flyers have a clear picture of exactly what they and their ships are supposed to do before they ever leave the ground.

fett Field demonstrate three stages in the Immelmann Turn — a maneuver used for a fast reversal of direction without losing altitude.

SOLUTION. A friend of ours who is an executive for one of the larger cosmetic-perfume manufacturers has a son who reached the "I-want-a-pony" stage. His mother, away at the stage-reaching time, returned to find a shaggy, aggressively smelly Shetland installed in the tool house, close to her kitchen windows.

Her ultimatum came quick: "Either the pony goes or I go." Despair gripped father and son. Not for long though. Junior, suddenly inspired, said Daddy didn't work for a perfume manufacturer for nothing.

Next night, Dad brought home several huge bottles containing his most popular brand of perfume. Fondly he poured the fragrant liquid on the floor, sprayed it on the tool-house walls, rubbed it into the pony's hide.

Now Mother, standing beside her kitchen windows, is happy. Junior is happy. Dad is happy. And so, as far as anybody can tell, is the pony.

NEWFANGLED. We've just heard about a corporal in the Army's 44th Division who has invented a modern version of the old-fashioned reprimand: "Chin in, chest out, soldier."

Our corporal gets results when he barks: "Shape up, Shapeless!" M.

A NAVY IN A HURRY

Twenty-five years of work in three years. That's the schedule. "And we're getting it done," says Admiral Robinson, hard-driving boss of the Navy's vast high-speed building program. This is how

by Arthur Bartlett

HAT is going to be the biggest battleship in the world," said the naval

I looked down from our point of vantage high in the scaffolding. It was big all right. From amidships, we'd have needed binoculars to make out what was going on either in the bow or in the stern. And yet the bigness, so far, was all down there on one plane. The ship was still just a vast, shallow dish. The riveters and the welders were still fitting together their plates of steel in what would eventually be the deepest, darkest innards of the man-o'-war. The ship still had to grow up within the frameworks of the scaffolding up as high as we were, and yet higher.

"How long have they been working on her?" I asked.

'About seven months," said the officer. Seven months — and the sides of the great ship had hardly started to rise!

"It's a long, intricate job," said the officer. "As a matter of fact, she's well ahead of schedule."

I saw something of the intricacy of the job that day. I saw the small scale model of the ship which had first been made, accurate right down to the last detail of armament and fittings. I saw larger, half-scale models of sections of the ship, painstakingly fashioned of wood, with wooden machinery, wooden pipe, wooden cable - models which had to be built and rebuilt until it was certain that every item would fit efficiently in its allotted space. In a wooden model of the bow of the ship, I saw two men working a wooden anchor on a wooden anchor cable, letting it down, pulling it up, studying its every turn in the process. "They've been working on that anchor for weeks," said the officer accompanying me. "Having the anchor work just right might make a lot of difference some day."

I saw other wooden sectional models which were actually full-size -- "mock-ups," the shipbuilders call them - in which men could go through the same routine that they would have to aboard the finished ship, and thus find in advance any kinks in the planning of

All this while the steelworkers proceeded with the actual building of the ship. Before they had even started, men had been drawing plans for many months-first, preliminary plans; then, detailed plans of every item going into the ship, from davits to gears and turbines. One officer estimated for me that at least 12,000 separate plans have to be drawn before a battleship is built; another told me that the paper work for one recently-built battleship added up to 150 tons.

In a shipfitting loft, an immense place that looked like an oversized ballroom, I saw the ship being laid out on the floor. As a dressmaker cuts her cloth by a carefully worked-out pattern, so is each piece of steel predestined on this huge floor. First it is cut here in paper; then the paper pattern is moved on to be cut in wood; and finally, down in the shops, it is duplicated in steel, then sent on over to be fitted into its proper place in the growing ship. And it must be exact, to the fraction of an inch.

Yes, it is a long and intricate process. Frankly, I wouldn't even pretend to understand much of what I saw going on in that one shipyard — the fiery furnaces, the huge, monstrous machines, the sputtering, white-hot metal being poured, the incessant pounding. But it was all part of the building of modern battleships. I could begin to appreciate why it took so long.

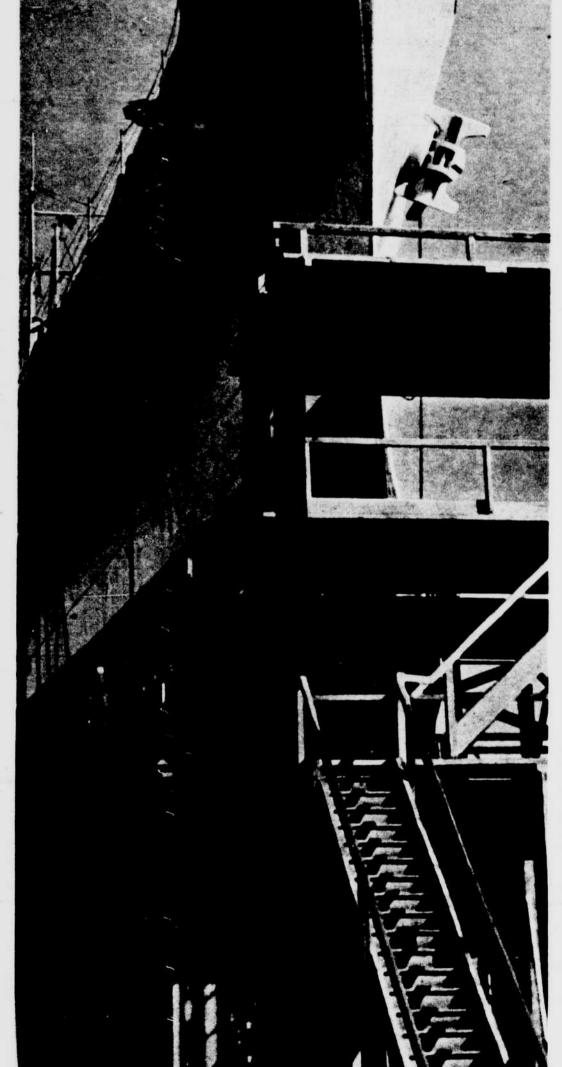

The Speed-up Is On

IN NORMAL times, Navy men figure on four and a half to five years for the building of a battleship. But it won't take any such length of time to finish the one I saw being built. On the adjoining ways was another battleship under construction, on which work had been proceeding only a little more than a year. And already she was recognizably a battleship, even to the gun turrets. Half a year had made the difference between her and the one that seemed to have so far to go.

The fact is that every vessel under construction today for the United States Navy is not only well ahead of the normal construction schedule, but well ahead of a speedup emergency schedule which, when it was laid down, was called "fantastic." One recently-launched battleship was on the ways just two years. A destroyer was built in 10

BABY BROTHER: It takes 12,000 plans and hundreds of wooden scale models to build a battleship. Each minute detail must be accurate

ON THE WAYS: Ships are sliding down them at the rate of one a day. Sometimes more. This is the heavy cruiser Atlanta

Here's the Admiral. When he says, "Do it!" things begin to hum months — about a third of the time normally taken, not much more than half of the time allowed in the "fantastic" emergency schedule. Today the two-ocean Navy which, when projected, was considered a possibility by 1947, is expected to be substantially in existence by 1944.

"We're trying to do twenty-five years' work in three years," Rear Admiral Samuel M. Robinson told me the other day. "But it is going satisfactorily. If we can avoid prolonged labor troubles, I don't see why we can't finish well ahead of schedule."

Boss of the Building Program

HE SPOKE with the crisp incisiveness of an executive, and yet there was a calm imperturbability in his voice and manner, a matter-of-fact attitude which gave no hint of the triumph of this achievement in these days when so many other defense efforts are still struggling to get out of low gear. Yet to a considerable extent, it is his personal triumph. Admiral Robinson is Chief of the Bureau of Ships, boss of the Navy's whole, vast, hectic shipbuilding program, the man personally responsible for spending a billion dollars a year of our money.

Sitting in his outer office, I had been getting an idea of what a nerve-fraying job that must be. It was a day when one of the country's major shipyards had just been tied up by a strike, and the Admiral was holding an emergency conference with the Acting Secretary of the Navy. Meanwhile the telephone rang constantly — most of the calls, I judged, coming from people with urgent requests for appointments. Already the office was crowded with men waiting for the Admiral — shipbuilders, inventors, naval officers, congressmen. A message from a congressional committee set an hour, that afternoon, for the Admiral to appear before it.

His conference over, the Admiral began seeing callers. He was past due for a luncheon appointment when my turn came. But the Admiral, tall, lean and bespectacled, settled into his chair as unflustered and intent as if I had been the first person he had seen all day. He wasted no words though, indulged in no small talk; he is the sort who cuts through immediately to the meat of whatever situation is facing him. Succinctly he summed up for me the essentials of naval shipbuilding: "Facilities, men, management." All three, he pointed out, had been lacking. "So we have had to build the facilities, train the men, spread the management."

"You make it sound as simple as two plus two," I said.

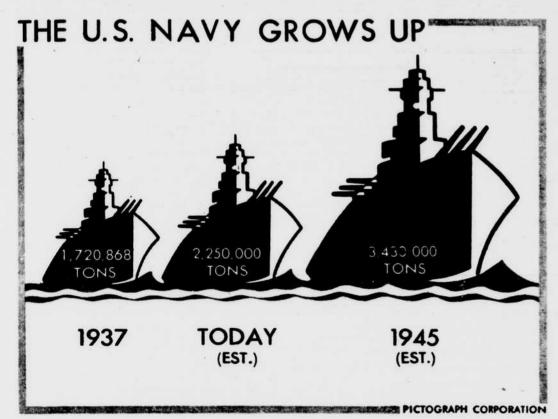

"It isn't," said the Admiral, laconically. "But we're getting it done."

It is because he is the sort of man who does get things done that Admiral Robinson has this job, second in importance only to that of the Chief of Naval Operations. It was Robinson who, as a young naval engineer, was the chief proponent of electric-drive propulsion for naval vessels. He supervised the installation of electric-drive equipment on the first United States naval vessel to adopt it, the U.S.S. Jupiter (later the aircraft carrier Langley). During the First World War, Robinson went overseas with the first American convoy to serve as a technical observer with the British Fleet, then came back to play an important part in the designing of the ships our Navy was building.

Later, as Chief of the Bureau of Engineering in a time when we were not doing much shipbuilding, he promoted and directed research into Diesel engines and other machinery, with the result that the battleships being built today have twice the power of those scrapped after the First World War, though their machinery takes up even less space than did that of the earlier vessels.

The Admiral, a Texan, is the sort of engineer to whom any new development or technical possibility is meat and drink. "I've seen him get all engrossed in a new type of propeller for a small motorboat," one of his associates told me. "But he wouldn't even

IN ACTION: The 35,000-ton battle monster North Carolina, launched ahead of schedule — now "somewhere in the Atlantic"

THE day after the State Department announced a ban on trade with Japan, a famous house of silk makers ran an interesting advertisement in the New York newspapers. The advertisement said, simply, that there would be no shortage of fine fabrics even if silk was not imported into the United States, because the entire demand for "silks" could be met with synthetic fibers.

What the advertisement did not say was that aside from a small quantity of nylon and some materials still in the laboratory stage, these synthetic fibers were all varieties of rayon. But this was understandable, for the whole silk industry has soft-pedaled rayon for years. From the day it was RAYON CRASHES HIGH SOCIETY

Invented as an "imitation" silk, rayon got started wrong. But science went to work! Now new rayons are substituting for silk, linen and wool ... and bettering all three

born, every man's hand has been against it and its path has been beset by fear and ignorance. Silk men were afraid that it would spell the end of their business, but gradually found themselves forced to use it - sometimes to meet competition, sometimes because it was better than any other yarn for certain purposes. And ignorance played its part when housewives. laundries and dry cleaners unwittingly mishandled rayon fabrics - because manufacturers neglected to label them as such.

Thus rayon, known by the inaccurate name of artificial silk, struggled along under back-breaking handicaps. Now international politics and the fortunes of war have suddenly slammed it across the front pages. After years of playing Cinderella, neglected and almost unmentionable in the polite society of fabrics, it has suddenly come into its own.

The birth of rayon dates back farther than most people would suspect - to the latter part of the 19th century. Silk had always been the cloth of the wealthy and the royal and for that reason a rich reward seemed assured to anyone who succeeded in imitating it cheaply. No one will ever know how many attempts were made before the first rayon was produced. Back in 1740 a forgotten Frenchman even went as far as to try to spin a yarn out of spider webs. He actually accomplished this useless feat - makhabit of disappearing in a puff of smoke when it came near a flame. Treated to make it less inflammable, it became so weak that as soon as it got wet the threads would break. To top that, it had a tendency to turn into a gooey mess under a hot iron.

In time, two other processes were invented, and finally another, so that there were four different kinds of rayon. The three later types were somewhat better than the first - they didn't burn any faster than other fabrics, for instance - but the inferior qualities of rayon had had plenty of time to become rooted in the public mind and they stayed there even after the defects had been remedied.

Besides, rayon had a very high luster. Now, luster was part of the appeal of silk, but rayon was altogether too shiny, and that shine kept it in the bargain basement. As late as 1926 no one could think of anything much better to do with the screamingly glossy stuff than to make it into cheap bedspreads.

But since then, chemists have mastered the problem; and now, by the addition of a pinch of titanium dioxide, rayon can be made duller than the dullest silk.

ing the yarn into fantastically expensive stockings and gloves.

Then, in the middle of the 19th century, catastrophe struck the great silk industry of France. The silkworms developed a peculiar disease that rendered their product useless. The situation became so serious that in 1865 Louis Napoleon called the great Pasteur away from all his other work to find a cure for the plague. Pasteur succeeded, and among his practical countrymen he was more famous for that than for a good many other things we now remember. But there was an unforeseen result of the affair.

Among Pasteur's assistants was a Count Hilaire de Chardonnet. The silkworm experience convinced young Hilaire that a man could do anything a worm could do.

Discovered the Trick

HE STUDIED the silkworm and found that it produced its silk by eating the leaves of the mulberry tree, digesting them and then pushing a syrupy fluid through a tiny hole in its head. This fluid turned into thread as soon as the air touched it, becoming the silk which made the cocoon. All that remained for Chardonnet was to duplicate the process chemically - a little matter which took him a number of years. He knew that mulberry leaves were made of cellulose, so he took cellulose, reduced it to a liquid, pushed it through a thimblelike spinneret with a tiny hole in it and let it emerge into a chemical bath that hardened it into thread. Presto! - he had something that vaguely resembled silk, a fiber that was the original rayon.

Unfortunately, the Count's process really made a material that was more closely related to high explosives than to silk, and consequently it had a bad in the yarn it yields much clearer and more beautiful colors when dyed. Perfect clarity of color is an advantage it can claim over any other fabric. And since the dyes used for rayon are mostly vat dyes, they're absolutely fast color - so fast that in many cases they can be boiled. Moreover, undyed rayon has a big advantage over white linen, silk or wool. Those natural yarns don't come pure white. They have to be bleached. Rayon, because it is the purest white right from scratch, doesn't need treatment and stays white even in the tropics.

Slowly, scientists began to believe that, given sufficient time, they could do almost anything they wished with rayon - and went on to prove it. They found that the composition of it could be altered and the size of the yarn itself changed. Nowadays they can produce a rayon filament so fine that it would break a silkworm's heart to try to match it. Finer filaments mean more strands in each thread and therefore greater strength.

Naturally, if you can make the filaments incredibly thin, so can you make them almost as thick as you like, so that the "horsehair" used in women's hats no longer comes from the vanishing quadruped, but from some late, unlamented spruce tree. You can even carry that one step further and make the holes in your spinneret oblong, thereby getting something that looks and acts very much like straw. As a result the "straw" hats women have been wearing for the last few years are not straw at all and hold their shape better after a thunder shower.

With luster, color and size completely under control, and having that indescribable something known to designers as "drape," rayon might have

CRISCO FOR FLAKY PIE CRUST

Red Conover spread out his elbows.

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

ASING her fingers from under a tray of hot, shining glasses, Jackie gave a pro-prietary glance about the interior of the Oak Knoll Cafe. Her pine tables were neatly set for lunch. The salt, pepper, and sugar shakers along the counter were clustered against the paper napkin stalls. Everything was in order. And there wasn't a customer in the place. What a relief, for a change!

Jackie pulled her little handbag from behind the cash register, took out her compact and set it on the counter, opened, with the mirror winking up at her. It was during this lull after the late breakfasts and before the early lunches that she made a practice of looking herself in the eye. It was then, with a smart girl's alchemy, that she did the best she could with what she considered her homely little mug of a face.

Oh, she had lovely eyes! Yes, she knew it. Good souls had said so, comfortingly, within her hearing. The condescending insolence of that faint praise!

She excavated with the puff in the concave surface of the powder pack, and applied an ivory bloom to her inadequate little triangle of a chin. She unplugged her lipstick and moved it with two cautious strokes from the center of her upper lip out, to the right, and to the left. Then with a sulking motion of both lips, transferred some of the crimson, by a sort of decalcomania trick, to the lower one.

Her mouth wasn't small, but there wasn't anything to do about it. You couldn't just , powder over the outer reaches and ignore them. She had tried that. It didn't work. All a girl could do was make the most of the face God gave her, and wonder when, when, when a guy would come along who thought it was just wonderful! By what sign, Jackie wondered, could a girl tell in advance which one he would be? Which, out of ten thousand? Surely there was some way to get an inkling. . .

For in a few minutes the ten thousand would start coming after a noon snack: those tall, straight youngsters in uniform, their officers, and carpenters from the tion gang, mechanics and student pilots from the airport. Surely out of all those, even a girl who merely had lovely eyes -

The screen door banged, and Jackie jumped as if powdering one's nose were too intimate an act to share with any man. Jackie never did make up her face in front of people; she had to work too carefully and intently at it. A pretty girl could insert some very effective business with a compact, dabbing gracefully in the direction of her face. with only a casual glance at the mirror, knowing that it was all an act... Pretty girls could do that, but not the girls of whom good souls said, "She has lovely eyes!"

It was only Red Conover who had banged the door. He lolled up to the counter, spread out his elbows and yawned. "Well," he said, "how about a little service?"

"Coffee," Jackie intoned. "Heavy on the cream!" She kept right on with what she was doing till she was good and through, because Red Conover was not a man, he was an animal. And because if there was one customer on the Pacific Coast she would rather lose than not, it was this same Red Conover.

"Come on, come on," he said. "You're just making it worse!"

Jackie snapped the compact with a vicious little snap and threw it back in her bag and put the bag behind the cash register. Then she got one of the thick-lipped mugs and filled it with coffee.

"Heavy on the cream," reminded Conover. She flooded the cup, and set it down before him with a motion calculated to slop some of the contents.

"Easy!" said Red. "Easy, girl! Now look what you did!"

Here was the trouble, Jackie supposed, with commerce. You couldn't wait on only the people you liked. You had to wait on everybody. Even such impossible characters as this. A dusty, crabby, brute of a man who thought he was lord of the earth because he was handy at the controls of what used to be called a steam shovel. Though Jackie supposed, from the dust and clamor and stench of Red Conover's particular machine, that it was probably Diesel powered.

"This is fine old coffee," Red said. "It's pre-war. But which? First or Second?"

"If you don't like it, eat somewhere else," Jackie advised. "Try Sloppy Schultz's. You'd fit in over there."

"Well, your coffee has it on his," Red conceded grudgingly. "But you used to make good coffee, Jackie. Remember? Last year, before business got good."

Last year. Before they started tearing down Oak Knoll for fill for the airport and the encampment. Last year, when the Oak Knoll Cafe was just a good truck stop.

By a few weeks from now Red Conover and his ilk would have eaten clean through Oak Knoll with the merciless steel jaws of their captive monsters. Then the sign "Oak Knoll Cafe" was going to look pretty silly, sitting out here in a flat without an oak or a knoll in sight.

Last year, she used to get coffee two pounds at a time, Jackie remembered. Now she got 100 pounds ground at once and saved $8.00 a throw. Suppose it did get a little stale toward the last? Nobody else had such a sensitive palate as Red Conover!

HE POUNCED on the newspaper and spread it out over the counter, sprawling upon it comfortably, mumbling the headlines aloud. Jackie tried to put him out of mind by thinking of all the good-looking young soldiers who would be crowding up to the counter in another hour, brave and brown and handsome, and maybe one of them for her.

"Another walkout in the shipyards," said Red. "Those fellows! It'll serve us right if Hitler has us goosestepping to the polls in 1944!"

Jackie twitched her shoulders with annoyance. "You're the one to talk! I thought the army was in a hurry for this airport. You don't seem to be moving much dirt - Only what you bring in on your feet."

"Now, Jackie - " Red deigned to explain, "machines get fagged. Just like a man, or a horse. That old shovel of mine, when it needs a rest, a little oiling up and checking over, I know it right off. I just ease down here for a cup of coffee!"

He took a sip and then went back to the paper. "The trouble with this country, we're a lot of spoiled kids. We like to ride in pretty cars, so we strike for short hours and high wages. And when the little guy with the spectacles tells us about the big bad wolf we don't want to believe him. So we won't believe him. That's what's the trouble with us, the whole damned spread!"

"Oh, yeah?" said Jackie. "You'd know, of course. You - "

She looked out the window and identified an approaching silhouette. "You'd better get back to work yourself, mister. Here comes the fellow who tells you off!"

It was Clyde Bates, the young boss on the grading job. He came in now and had a pleasant smile for Jackie, as always. He never criticized the coffee. More than once she had wondered if perhaps - But there had not been any sure sign, not yet.

"Got a cup of coffee for me, Jackie?" Clyde said. "S'matter, Red? Trouble?"

"No," Red said, "no trouble." And then: "Come to think of it, yes there is, too."

"Red can always gripe about something," Jackie commented. "You oughta know that by now, Clyde."

But Clyde only said, "Well, spill it."

"Why the hell should we risk our necks," Red burst out, "with that damn mountain hanging over us!" The bantering note was gone from his voice. There was an edge to it, a harsh, rasping edge. A bellyacher, Jackie thought. A typical sorehead. She was glad to see Clyde stand up to the challenge.

"People were artful when they made hiding places in those days," she said square acres! The whole place is ready to be turned into a market garden. We're just discussing whether to grow vegetable marrows or potatoes."

CHARMIAN said, rather abruptly, "May we really tell you all about it?" "But, of course, my dear."

"Then let's find a peaceful spot. Come on, Edward." She led the way out of the overcrowded and smoke-laden room, and they went up the stairs, to a small sitting room on the second floor.

When they were seated, Charmian began abruptly: "Well, here goes! The story starts with Uncle Mathew, uncle - or rather, great, great uncle - to both of us. He was incredibly ancient. Edward and I were his only relations. He was fond of us and always declared that when he died he would leave his money between us. Well, that part of it's all right. He died last March and left everything he had to be divided equally between Edward and myself. What I've just said sounds rather callous - I don't mean that it was right that he died - actually we were very fond of him. But he'd been ill for some time and wasn't supposed to last long, and so one got used to the idea of his dying before he died, if you know what I mean.'

Miss Marple said she knew perfectly.

"The point is that the 'everything' he left turned out to be practically nothing at all. And that, frankly, was a bit of a blow to us both, wasn't it, Edward?"

The amiable Edward agreed. "You see," he said, "we'd counted on it a bit. I mean, when you know a good bit of money is coming to you, you don't - well - buckle down and try to make it yourself. I'm in the Army not got anything to speak of outside my pay and Charmian herself hasn't got a bean. She works as a stage manager in a repertory theater - quite interesting and she enjoys it - but no money in it. We'd counted on getting married, but weren't worried about the money side of it because we both knew we'd be jolly well off some day."

"And now, you see, we're not!" said Charmian. "What's more, Ansteys - that's the family place, and Edward and I both love it will probably have to be sold. And Edward and I feel we just can't bear that! But if we don't find Uncle Mathew's money, we shall have to sell."

Edward said: "You know, Charmian, we're not telling this very well. We still haven't come to the vital point."

"Well, you talk then."

Edward turned to Miss Marple. "It's like this, you see. As Uncle Mathew grew older, he got more and more suspicious. He didn't trust anybody."

"Very wise of him," said Miss Marple. "Oh - er - do you think so?" queried

Miss Marple shook her head sadly. "The depravity of human nature is unbelievable."

"Well, you may be right. Anyway, Uncle Mathew thought so. He had a friend who lost his money in a bank, and another friend who was ruined by an absconding solicitor, and he lost some money himself in a fraudulent company. He got so that he used to hold forth at great length that the only safe and sane thing to do was to convert your money into solid bullion and bury it."

"Ah," said Miss Marple. "I begin to see." "Yes. Friends argued with him, pointed out that he'd get no interest that way, but he held that that didn't really matter. The bulk of your money, he said, should be 'kept in a box under the bed or buried in the garden.' Those were his words."

CHARMIAN went on: "And when he died, he left hardly anything at all in securities, though he was very rich. So we think that that's what he must have done."

Edward explained: "We found that he had sold securities and drawn out large sums of money from time to time, and nobody knows what he did with them. But it seems probable that he lived up to his principles, and that he did buy gold and bury it."

Charmian wailed: "And we've dug and dug all over the garden and we can't find anything!"

"He didn't say anything before he died?

Leave any paper? No letter?"

"That's the maddening part of it. He didn't. He'd been unconscious for some days, but he rallied before he died. He looked at us both and chuckled — a faint, weak little chuckle. He said, 'You'll be all right, my pretty pair of doves.' And then he tapped his eye — his right eye — and winked at us. And then - he died. . . Poor old Uncle Mathew."

"He tapped his eye," said Miss Marple thoughtfully.

Edward said eagerly: "Does that convey anything to you? It made me think of an Arsene Lupin story where there was something hidden in a man's glass eye. But Uncle Mathew didn't have a glass eye."

Miss Marple shook her head. "No - I can't think of anything at the moment."

Charmian said, disappointedly, "Jane told us you'd say at once where to dig!

Miss Marple smiled. "I'm not quite a conjurer, you know. I didn't know your uncle, or what sort of man he was, and I don't know the house or the grounds."

Charmian said: "If you did know them?" "Well, it must be quite simple really, mustn't it?" said Miss Marple.

"Simple!" said Charmian. "You come down to Ansteys and see if it's simple!"

It is possible that she did not mean the invitation to be taken seriously, but Miss Marple said briskly: "Well, really, my dear, that's very kind of you. So romantic, you know. I've always wanted to have the chance of solving a cryptogram or looking for buried treasure. And," she added, looking at them with a beaming, late Victorian smile, "with a love interest too!"

"You see!" said Charmian, gesturing dramatically.

stop to look at the rewinding of the coils in the main motor of a battleship. That's routine."

A typical incident occurred when he was manager of the Navy Yard at Puget Sound. A big ship had been brought in for extensive mechanical repairs. The officer in charge of that sort of work reported that the repairs were impossible without pulling out all the damaged machinery. Some younger engineer officers, however, evolved a plan for doing the job without removing the machinery. It involved methods that had never been tried before, and was admittedly intricate and complicated. But Robinson. his eyes lighting up, digested their plan as fast as they could tell it to him, and didn't even hesitate. "Go ahead," he told them, though the senior engineer still insisted it wouldn't work. It did.

When the Admiral goes home at night, his relaxation is reading technical treatises, then early to bed. The pomp and splendor of being an admiral leaves him cold. He ducks launchings and other ceremonies whenever he can, and hates getting dressed up in the finery of his rank. "I want one thing understood," he said, when I told him I was going to write this article. "You don't get me to have my picture taken in uniform."

One Man in Two Jobs

WHEN Robinson became Chief of the Bureau of Ships last year, he was the first man ever to hold that job. Previously it had been two jobs. Building and maintaining ships had been the province of the Bureau of Construction and Repair; machinery and all its related gear had been under the Bureau of Engineering. This had inevitably led to overlapping, bickering and jealousies. And the emergency was too great to let that situation go on. Admiral Robinson became chief of the whole works.

No man had ever faced such an assignment. It meant that he was to build a navy bigger than any other country had ever built in the world's history - and in a hurry. And the facilities, the men and the management were all lacking.

Facilities meant, first of all, shipyards. We had our navy yards, and a half a dozen private shipyards that were accustomed to building naval vessels. They would all have to be drastically expanded to the utmost, and still they wouldn't do the job. Robinson had a survey made, and found 170 smaller shipyards dotted about the country which were sound and reputable, presumably capable of building ships of one sort or another for the Navy. He called in their owners, found out what they could do and put it up to them, not only to build ships but to get the American competitive spirit into the work.

He Gets Results

TODAY, all up and down our coasts and along the Great Lakes, little shipyards are vying with each other to turn out vessels and lighters by the hundreds. And if you add in the little rescue boats, the launches and all the smaller craft, mounts into the thousands. This in addition to more than 150 big warships under construction in the bigger yards.

But besides shipyards, facilities

"Hasn't he killed it yet, Daddy?"

meant material and equipment, and plants to provide them. These, in many cases, were even more grievously lack-

So the Admiral started building these facilities, too. When a shortage of reduction gears, for instance, threatened the whole program, a plant was rushed to completion in Milwaukee to supply them. And so with other critical materials.

To supply labor, he had training centers established in all the major centers, and meantime stepped the working week up from 40 to 48 hours, and put on additional shifts. Thus many of the yards are now working 24 hours a day, six days a week. And where bottlenecks develop they also work Sundays.

With his own bureau organization, the Admiral sets the example of speed. He had contracts all drawn and arranged long before the regular annual appropriation for the fiscal year 1941 was enacted. And within one day after the measure was signed, contracts for 19 major vessels were awarded. When the second supplemental appropriation came along, contracts were being telegraphed out of his office within two hours after the money became legally available.

No Waste Motion

AND yet, though his office is just about the busiest in the country, it is never riled. "I've never seen him fly off the handle, or even get discouraged," one of his assistants told me. "He just listens to the problems before him, decides what difficulties are insurmountable and which ones are just straw, and that's the end of it." His sharpest rebuke, they say in the bureau, is to quietly answer a subordinate's query with: "That's a detail. Do it."

Actually, as an engineer, he is keenly interested in details; but of course he has little time for them. And, as one officer pointed out to me, "A man could live nine lives and still not have time to go into all the details of a battleship." Backing up the statement, the officer reached into a drawer of his desk and pulled out a printed card. "This is a list of the different specialized sections in the bureau," he said. "At least a hundred and fifty of them

He put a finger on the card. "Here, for instance," he said, "are the experts on radio and sound - nine different kinds of them. Or look down here at the technical sections - sixteen of them. Gyro compass, air conditioning, turbines and gears, welding and casting, damage control . . . "

"Damage control?" I interrupted. "What does that mean?"

"Everything that can be done to make a ship less vulnerable," he said. "It may be structural, like building in sealed compartments; it may be some technical device, like the Gauss belt to counteract mines; or it may be some simple item of equipment, or even a regulation to be enforced keeping some particular door closed, for example.

"Did you happen to notice that British officer who was just here? He was from a British ship that is being repaired in one of our yards. Well, something happened to that ship. Maybe our damage-control man will be able to figure out a way to minimize the damage if the same or similar situation should arise with one of our ships."

The officer went on pointing out others of the 150 different categories of experts, but I'm afraid my mind was wandering. I was thinking back to the big ship that I had seen under construction in the Navy Yard.

"It is an intricate job, building a battleship, isn't it?" I said.

The officer grinned. "It adds up to a lot of details, all right," he said. "But the Admiral says, 'Do it!' And we're doing it."

CHASE & SANBORN COFFEE

An Article Complete on This Page GIRL walked down lower State Street in Chicago and entered the dingy office of a building that looked like a warehouse She said she wanted to see Mr. Mangin. He was busy upstairs, they told her. Was it about a job? The girl said it was. She had heard they were looking for menders and matchers. Her landlady had They said she could go up and see Mr. Mangin if she wanted to, but they didn't think it was much use. Third floor, they said. She went up two flights of dark stairs and came to a floor which was given over to long tables piled high with quantities of secondhand army breeches, army coats, army shirts, army shoes. A hundred women and girls were busy handling these things. Our young lady found Mr. Mangin. He was harassed, busy; in one hand he carried an army shoe, absently, as though he had forgotten to put it down. She told him she was looking for a job. At first he shook his head. Then he waved the hand with the shoe in it toward the windows of merchandise. "Have you had any experience in this line of work?" he asked. "Yes," the girl said. Mr. Mangin looked at the shoe in his hand. "What size is this shoe?" he demanded. "Fifteen," the girl said desperately. He sighed. "I knew it," he said; "no experience." He rubbed his chin and looked at her, and grinned. "I'll give you a temporary job. The pay is five dollars a week. What's your name?' "Dorothy Lamour," the girl said. A forewoman took Dorothy in charge. Her job at first would be to match various garments for color and texture, to make up complete units. After a few weeks Dorothy was switched from matching to mending. This was considered a promotion, but the pay was the same. Then, just about the time she was becoming an expert mender, she quit. She explained to Mr. Mangin that when she first had come to Chicago from New Orleans, she had tried to get a job as a model at the Marshall Field & Company store, but was just too tall for the junior department and just too short for the senior. But they had promised to let her know when there was another opening.

Mr. Mangin told her to come back if it didn't work

At Marshall Field's, Dorothy was put to work as a bundle wrapper in the basement. After she had been there a while, she got a pretty good break. A rival department store had hit on the idea of using their elevator operators as advertisements for their photographing department. A portrait of each girl was posted in the elevator so the customers could compare the likeness. Naturally, the prettiest girls in

And who was among those selected by Marshall Field? Could it be a girl who later was to be chosen by most of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps as the one Hollywood star with whom they would most prefer to be cast up on a desert island?

Of course it was.

Dorothy learned how to operate an elevator.

She still knows how, but she doesn't work at it. Dorothy Lamour, whose real name is Dorothy Lamour, was born in New Orleans. It is said in Hollywood that when she was five years old she sneaked into a neighborhood theater where they were having an amateur night, sang a song and won a basket of groceries. She can't remember it, and it's probably just one of those stories. But it does seem that she was destined for the public eye from the first. After high school she went to business school for a while and worked briefly as a stenographer, but in 1931 she entered a beauty contest and won the tag of Miss New Orleans. (She just missed being named Miss Universe at the finals in Galveston.)

As a result of this she got a job as a showgirl and went on the road for about six months. She didn't like it, and quit. She and her mother decided to move to Chicago. They figured Dorothy could get a job as a model, and Mrs. Lamour could find something else

When they got there, Mrs. Lamour got a job the very first day making salads in a restaurant. Dorothy couldn't get any job until her landlady told her to go see Mr. Mangin.

After that, Marshall Field's and the elevator.

Good-by Elevator

DOROTHY worked at the department store for about a year, in all. Now then, it was customary for the night club in the Morrison Hotel to have an occasional Celebrity Night when well-known persons were asked to take a bow and do a little trick. Somebody told the publicity agent of the hotel that last year's Miss New Orleans was running an elevator over at Marshall Field's.

They invited Dorothy over and she sang them a song. Mr. Herbie Kay, a band leader, dropped in to see what was going on. He saw Dorothy. He liked her voice, which he recognized as a natural for radio work. He invited her to sing with his band. She quit the elevator job.

For three years Dorothy sang with the Kay band, and of course was on the air. Later she had her own program on a national chain.

In 1935 she came to Hollywood and was offered a part in a picture. She accepted. This picture was "The Jungle Princess," and Dorothy wore a sarong, which at the time was considered a minor touch. The sarong was swell, Dorothy looked nice and sang well, and she acted as well as she could, which wasn't very well.

Samuel Goldwyn saw the picture and borrowed her for the female lead in "Hurricane." This picture made Dorothy. She wore another sarong, looked like an especially beautiful South Sea Islander, and still, if we must face the facts, couldn't act for sour apples.

It was just before she played in "Spawn of the North," a distinctly non-sarong part, that Dorothy Lamour decided to become an actress. She began to work hard then, and she has worked hard since. She did notably well in "Chad Hanna," a circus picture. More recently, in "Caught in the Draft," an army comedy with Bob Hope, she moved definitely out of the straight eye-and-ear class.

Although the demand for Dorothy as a more or less sparsely wrapped native girl still largely dominates the parts assigned to her, she has proved that she can go on from there, and that she intends to.

This does not mean that she is a future Bette Davis, and she has no illusions about that. Sensible, levelheaded, utterly unpretentious, she wants to be a competent actress and is willing to work hard.

About a month ago she won the award of "Box Office" magazine, a trade journal, for the best performance of the month by an actress. They gave her a scroll, which she has had framed and hung up in her house.

'And that," she says, "is the closest to an Academy Award I'll ever come. The poor man's Oscar."

SHE looks upon her success as a stroke of almost weird good fortune, and her constant willingness to appear on benefits, make arduous trips for personal appearances, to step in and help whenever asked, is not based on a yearning for publicity or for the spotlight. They are part of her effort to "pay back."

"Nine years ago," she says, "I was running an elevator. Look at me now. I can't see that I deserve it. I try the best I can to square things up, but I'll never be able to. I'm not the best singer in the world, and there are better actresses. I know a dozen girls who look better in a sarong. Why am I here?"

Well, ask the Army, the Navy and the Marines. A recent survey has shown that Dorothy is their preference - on the screen, in a photograph, in personal appearance, or on that mythical desert isle. One explanation is that no Hollywood actress has even come close to her record for visiting camps, doing what she can to help entertain the boys.

But there, of course, Dorothy is on her home grounds. The General may have come from West Point, the Commander from Annapolis, but Dorothy Lamour is a straight-line graduate of an Army & Navy store on South State Street, and when she glances at the uniforms around her it's not because she's carried away by their glamor. Her glance is strictly professional.

She's looking to see if the colors match.

RAYON CRASHES HIGH SOCIETY

outgrown its past even without the aid of an embargo. In fact, contrary to popular opinion, the reason manufacturers have begun adding rayon to silk in fine fabrics is not merely to cut cost, but to obtain colors and effects that wouldn't be possible without rayon. "Transparent velvet" is the best example. It did not exist until rayon came along to give this velvet the unique quality that sets it apart from all other fabrics.

Originally conceived to replace silk, rayon is now threatening wool, too. For a long time textile experts believed that because wool grew on sheep to keep them warm there was something basically warmer about woolen yarn than any other. Then someone had the inspiration that any fiber as long as wool and spun the same way would doubtless have just as satisfactory heat-retaining qualities.

Immediately, they took the endless rayon yarn and cut it up into exactly the same lengths as the stuff that coats the world's finest Merino sheep, then spun it on regular wool-spinning machinery. Rich-looking and delightfully soft to the touch, for both appearance and "hand" the cloth seemed better than the finest cashmere. So they made up some men's suits. But much to everyone's surprise the results were a complete failure. The suits didn't hold their shape no matter how good the tailoring, and on damp days they gave one the feeling of walking around in a chilly private shower.

Final Touch

That called for more research and more head-scratching. Finally it was discovered that wool owed a large part of its heat-holding value to the fact that it was a curly fiber. This curly effect created insulating air spaces in the finished yarn. A year ago, a method was worked out for putting that same crimp into rayon—and the sound of sheeps' knees knocking together reverberated through the pastures.

This shredded wood pulp will soon be finery for milady

Women's suits of the new material are already on the market, and men's will probably follow soon. The knitted sweaters and skirts can be washed without danger of shrinking, but they may stretch and should be shaped while drying.

Experimentally, they've made rayon into good warm blankets, too. And here there's a special dividend — for even if it can fool human textile experts, no self-respecting moth will give rayon so much as a glance. Thus, mothproof and abrasion-resisting rugs are now being made by at least four rug manufacturers.

Researchers also discovered that, as well as being able to turn out yarn that was endlessly uniform, they could also vary it in thickness. Accordingly they succeeded in creating a nubby material that could pass for linen. In actual use it was superior: it didn't crush or wrinkle as easily as linen, and it remained white under all kinds of treatment. As a result, women's summer dresses and men's summer suits have rapidly been going the rayon route.

Thus silk, wool and linen bowed to this product of the laboratory, because it was not only better but cheaper as well. Cotton, though, was a different case. It cost only about a fifth as much as rayon and therefore would yield to merit alone. But on that basis rayon has had its little triumph over King Cotton.

It happened this way. Most automobiles are upholstered in mohair, which makes a long-lasting upholstery fabric. However, it has one drawback. If you try to slide over to change seats your clothes stick to it. Automobile manufacturers, in their constant struggle for improvement, have added rayon to the mohair and solved the problem. This was possible because rayon, being absolutely smooth, has virtually no sticking factor.

With that knowledge gained from motorcars, the rayon people were prepared to help Harold Vanderbilt when he came to them for an improved sail for his America's Cup yacht, Ranger. They made him a super-strength rayon sail so much smoother than canvas that it reduced wind friction considerably and thus speeded up his vessel. Of course, that was only an ingenious trick, but the same super-strength yarn has been introduced to replace cotton as a basis for automobile tires. Manufacturers who have adopted it claim that it doubles the

Besides beating the natural yarns at their own individual games, rayon can claim one advantage over all of them together: it doesn't absorb much moisture. And since most stains — ink, gravy, fruit-juice, tea, coffee and cocktail — are more than ninety per cent water, they usually roll right off the nonabsorbent rayon without sinking into the material to get a good grip. The stains, if any, tend to lie on the surface, and that makes cleaning or washing them an easy job.

Hints for Handling

For the same reason clothes made of rayon dry quickly after being washed or caught in the rain, and on damp days knitted things don't have the same tendency to sag that woolens have. Better be sure to get washing instructions, though, for the particular type of rayon in each garment. These instructions are simple but important. And check your laundry and dry cleaner, too, to be sure that they know how to handle the various fabrics. There's nothing mysterious about them as long as they are treated properly. For instance, acetate rayons should not be cleaned with fluids that contain ether, nor should they be pressed with a hot iron.

Whether rayon will work more miracles in the future or not, it can already claim credit for the revolutionary fact that the average American woman can afford to dress and decorate her home as beautifully and effectively as the style-setting duchesses and actresses. Conceived as a get-rich-quick notion, rayon has enriched almost everyone by making the luxury of fine fabrics available to beer pocketbooks. Planned as an understudy for silk, it has become a bright star in its own right. And, irony of ironies, by making the United States independent of Japan, it takes its place as one of the weapons in the arsenal of democracy.

Firm, Healthy Gums Can Help Keep Your Teeth Bright, Your Smile Sparkling!

Give your gums, as well as your teeth, the care they need. Guard against "Pink Tooth Brush" with Ipana and Massage!

BRUSHING your teeth twice a day is a splendid habit, but it's only half the job of making your smile as hright and attractive as it should be!

Your gums, too, need daily care! For gums, denied hard chewing and exercise by today's soft, creamy foods, often become tender and sensitive—frequently flash that warning tinge of "pink" on your tooth brush.

If you see "pink" on your tooth brush—see your dentist. It may not mean serious trouble, but play safe. He may say that your gums are victims of today's soft foods—that they need more work, more exercise. And, like many modern dentists these days,

THE FIRST STEP

They were all so certain that he was going to walk again! But Tucker, age seven, felt sure they were wrong. His reasons make a moving drama

by Dorothy Curnow Handley

Illustrated by John Scott

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HE ward was cool in the half-light of early morning. The other children were still asleep, but Tucker lay wide awake. This was a special day — the day that Jim was coming again, after four long months!

At the thought of seeing Jim, Tucker swallowed hard. He felt like crying, he was so glad, but a big guy, seven years old, who'd been through all he'd been through couldn't cry just because his dad was coming, could he? Well, maybe he could - if his dad was all he had, and especially when Jim was the best dad in the world.

The ward was lighter now. He looked across the aisle. That girl was still asleep. - Tucker eased himself up on his elbow and looked at her. Boy, she was pretty! Fat, yellow curls, and he could see her eyelashes clear from here. He looked at her for a long time, for he was always interested in that bed. The wooden sides of the cubicles kept him from seeing anything but the feet of the neighboring beds, for the glass didn't start until half-way up. The bed across the way was the only one he could get chummy with. Suddenly the girl opened her eves and looked straight at Tucker. He grinned at her. "Hi!"

She regarded him curiously, then said cautiously, "Hello."

"What's the matter with you?" Tucker asked. He had to know that. If it was just tonsils, she'd not be worth bothering with. Tonsils only stayed a day, but if she was an operation or a St. Vitus or something, she'd be here for a while.

She was too quiet for a St. Vitus, though.

The girl looked him over carefully before she answered. "I've had pneumonia. Up on the fourth floor. I'm better now and was lonesome, so the doctor said I should be moved down here with the others to keep me from getting - uh - out of hand."

"Oh." Tucker didn't know just what "out of hand" was, but the girl seemed to know. "What's your name, and how old are you?"

"Brenda Forsythe, and I'm seven." "So'm I!" Tucker beamed. "And I've been here two years. A horse fell on me and hurt my legs. I've had bunches of operations," he added, seeing the gratifying amazement in her eyes. "Say - my dad is coming today! I haven't seen him for four months!'

Brenda pushed her curls back loftily. "Well, my daddy would never leave me for four months, and my mother never left the hospital when I was so sick. I had three special nurses."

"Gee!" There was respect in Tucker's voice. "Well, Jim had to take care of the farm, or he wouldn't have left me, either. And" — his chin lifted bravely — "I - Inever had a mother."

There! She knew now. He'd told her. He lay back so he wouldn't see that look on her face. The lump was in his throat again, too. His cowlick waved defiantly as he burrowed into the pattern that his black head had made in the pillow. What if she did feel sorry for him? What if she did have a mother and and - well, what did he care? Jim was coming. Jim was enough for anybody!

Doctor Holden had said Tucker would be able to walk again soon and go home to the farm. At the thought of the farm, Tucker felt a warm, quivery feeling, but he refused to think about it. They were all so sure that he was going to walk, but he knew differently. He knew he never would, because well, he hadn't prayed like they told him to.

Maybe God couldn't hear little boys that lived too far from church to go on Sundays, or maybe He was just too busy, because if He could hear, why didn't He answer? Tucker had prayed ever since he could remember. and it was always the same prayer. A prayer for a mother. He'd been so sure of that prayer! For a long time he'd climbed eagerly out of bed every morning and run downstairs to see if she'd come yet. But she never had come. And he'd never told Jim about it, because Jim trusted God so much.

So when Miss Lacey said every night, "Don't forget to ask God to help you, honey," Tucker just smiled, remembering that other prayer. And he never had asked Him to help him walk. He was afraid to.

The door opened and Miss Dawson came in carrying a pitcher of hot water. "Well! Wide awake, Early Bird? And you, too, Brenda?" Miss Dawson looked tired. Tucker wondered how she managed to stay awake all night.

"Miss Dawson, my dad's coming today!"

"So I hear, Tucker. Come on, now, and get washed before breakfast." She popped a thermometer in his mouth as she sponged his hands and face. Tucker liked her, even if she wasn't as nice as Miss Lacey. But then - no one could be as nice as Miss Lacey. Miss Dawson was prettier, but Miss Lacey's gray eyes were kind and soft, and her brown hair fluffed under her white cap. He knew that taking care of little boys was fun to Miss

WHEN the nurse had gone, he cautiously moved his legs under the covers. Now that the heavy casts were gone, they felt like legs again, and not big logs tied to him. He was supposed to wiggle his toes for exercise, but he'd never had the courage to try, for fear that they really might not wriggle. But he would try sometime. Sometime . . .

He heard a quick, light step and looked up into Miss Lacey's twinkling eyes. "Two minutes past seven and three minutes until breakfast, Tucker Todd!"

"Oh, boy! It's Tuesday — and stewed apricots! Miss Lacey, what time do you s'pose Jim will come?'

"Jim? And, indeed, who may Jim be?" "My dad. You didn't forget he was coming today?" His voice was horrified until he saw the teasing laughter in her face.

She leaned over and smoothed his unruly dark curls and her voice was gentle. "No, I didn't forget, Tuck. I'll bathe you right after breakfast so you'll be all ready. Now let's prop up your pillow. Upsy - daisy!"

He liked the feel of her arms about him. and he liked the clean smell of her uniform.

HE day swept on. Miss Hemstreet, the supervisor, was going over the charts at the desk; the voices of the other children hummed beneath the wailing of the baby down at the far end. Tucker, clean and shining, lay happily between smooth sheets. He closed his eyes. It was almost ten o'clock -

"Tuck!"

Tucker's eyes flew open and for a breathless instant he looked up into the face so much like his own. Then he was clasped in strong. hungry arms, and heard himself sobbing, "Jim! Oh — Jim!"

"Tuck, you little scamp! I believe you're getting fat!" Jim's voice trembled a little.

Tucker's eyes shone. Even if Jim's brown face did look a little thinner and more tired under his black hair, there wasn't a dad in the world as good looking!

Jim's hand squeezed around the little white one he held so tightly. "How're you doing, anyway, Skipper?'

Just then Miss Lacey came out from behind Brenda's screen. She saw Jim, and smiled as Tucker said proudly, "This is my dad, Miss Lacey. This is Jim.'

The smile deepened as she looked from one face to the other. "Yes," she said, "I can see that." She came close, and Jim said:

"You weren't here the last time I came." "No. I've been here just three months." She turned to Tucker. "No wheel chair today, young man. Doctor Holden has a surprise for you!" She wouldn't tell him what it was, but went away with a bright nod to Jim and a gay little laugh for Tucker. "Wait and see, Tucker Todd!'

Jim stared after her and Tucker pulled at his hand. "Sit down, Jim! What do you 'spose my surprise will be?"

"Guess you'll have to wait and find out. fella. What's her name?"

"What's whose - oh, Miss Lacey's? Why - Miss Lacey!"

SILENCE AT THE HALF MOON

A Western tale that breaks all the rules

by Carl Conrath

Illustrated by Walter Baumhofer

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

EFF SECORD pounded into town in midafternoon, his horse kicking up small spirals of dust which rose lazily skyward and hung suspended as if overcome by the autumn's fierce heat. As he pulled up in front of Weaver's store, his quick glance caught Tom Parr and Frank Larson sauntering slowly toward him. As he swung down and tethered his sweating sorrel, Parr remarked drily:

"Quite a stir in the old town."

Jeff sent his slow look along both sides of the town's dusty street and remarked that the boarded walks held numbers of men quite out of the ordinary. Most of the big cow outfits had made a holiday of it, and were gathered in small groups, talking guardedly as if distrusting one another.

Jeff turned quickly to his two friends. "Something's up," he said. "What?"

"The trouble is getting himself meaner and uglier at the Half Moon," drawled Parr.

A shadow passed over Secord's lean face. As he moved to go into Weaver's store, Larson called after him, "We'll stick pretty close."

"Never mind, boys," said Jeff. "It won't be necessary. There'll be no trouble of my making."

ALICE WEAVER was standing behind the counter, busily sorting the dressmaking goods which had come in the last shipment. Her back was to Jeff, and she turned with a start when she finally realized someone was standing at the counter watching her.

"Jeff," she scolded, "why must you always creep around like an Indian?"

He grinned and looked down at his ample boots. "It's because of my dainty feet." She laughed — then became serious.

"I've heard the good news," she said. "But Jeff," she pleaded, "do be careful."

A smile played over his usually stern mouth. "Seems like a lot of warning is being done today. Might think I was a marked man."

Her voice was insistent: "Be careful - " He looked at her with his feelings plain that much interest, Alice, a man would be a fool not to listen. Don't worry."

He turned and walked out of the shaded store into the hot brilliance of the afternoon sun. He stood for a moment in the doorway, observing that now there were only a few people on the street, which a few minutes before had been almost crowded. He let this knowledge sink in as he slowly made his way across the dust towards the doors of the Half Moon. He felt eyes upon him all the way. He hesitated only a moment before he pushed aside the doors of the saloon. and entered.

A heavy smell of smoke and alcohol stung his nostrils as the doors swung behind him, and he stood there taking a mental picture of his surroundings. The card tables at his right were filled, but all play was stopped the instant his presence was observed. A alone, with his back to the door. That broad back, Jeff knew, belonged to Brett Sards. Jeff moved from the doorway to the bar and gave his order.

As the bartender moved away, Brett turned insolent eyes on Jeff and said, "A saloon is one place that's not particular about it's customers."

The silence hung heavily as Jeff finished his drink. He turned to the man beside him.

"Friend Brett," he said coolly, "people have different ideas about a man."

Anger flashed from Brett's hard face. "Speakin' of men," he rasped, "I've often questioned the color of some men's insides."

A FLUSH broke through the tan of Jeff's cheeks. "Brett," he answered, "I came to tell you that I want no trouble with you."

"A wise man," sneered Brett, " - even if you are a yellow one."

Jeff slammed his glass on the bar. His eyes were brightly hard as he said tightly: "Brett, you're a fool.'

He turned then and started from the saloon, but a harsh voice drew him up short. There was venom in the words Brett slammed

"Damn you, Jeff, do I have to kick you like a cur to make you fight?"

Jeff turned slowly and faced the man, knowing at last that something had come which he could not avoid. His courage was a many-times-proven thing, but there are times when a man, to be a man, must face the issues which pile up against him and push them aside with his strength - or be smothered by them. The man whom he faced was after his blood. To Jeff it seemed at that moment that he and Brett were the only two occupants of the world. The other men in the saloon were pressed close to the walls, silent and staring.

Jeff's whole attention was frozen to the other man, waiting for the move which he knew would come. It came swiftly and silently, as Brett's body bent slightly at the knees, his shoulder dipped, and his quick hand dropped to the butt of his gun. In less than a second the quiet was shattered by the

"I'll put in," Clyde said. "No reason why you should risk your neck. Wanta quit?"

"Listen," said Red. "Maybe you guys need to save the price of a few tons of powder. Besides, what's a man's life to you? You gotta carry insurance anyway. But those are my buddies running those bulldozers and carryalls. I can stand off a ways, with the shovel. It's no skin off me. But it gives me the creeps to see good guys pull up against that cliff all day long to pick up a load. Married guys, like Peewee Evans."

Clyde said, "If you want to make a complaint, put it in writing. The company'll be interested, I'm sure. As long as we can cut it, we'll cut it. When we have to blast, we'll blast. We're moving enough dirt and that's all that's your business or mine.'

"Oh, yeah? Well, I don't agree. There's such a thing as moving too much dirt, and all at once. The boys have been talking - "

"How's about you getting back to your shovel, by the way? It ought to be greased by now!"

"Why, sure," said Red. He gulped the last swallow of coffee from the mug and set it down, with a jar, on the counter. His voice returned to the old note of bantering insolence. "Forget I spoke. What the hell? A guy has to eat a peck of dirt before he dies! But he doesn't want it all at once, like the poet says!" He winked at Jackie and lounged out

Jackie washed his cup, her teeth on edge. "That man!" she said. "If there's ever a murder around here I hope you won't tell."

The boss nodded. "He's a troublemaker. I know the type." He stood up and leaned over the counter. "What color are your eyes, Jackie? Are they gray or blue?'

"Gray, I guess. Blue, sometimes, if I wear a blue shirtwaist or hairribbon."

He was a gentleman, Clyde was. He had a way with him. It made Jackie feel a faintness sometimes, when he looked her straight in the

"You have lovely eyes, Jackie," he said.

Oh! She wished he hadn't said that! But how could he know it was the one thing he mustn't ever say? And maybe after all, when he said it, it was different! Maybe for the first time she could hope the old gag was just the beginning of wonderful things he was going to say!

When a girl first comes close to a man and suspects a possibility that he might be the real one, she strains her ears listening to every word he speaks, hoping he won't make any mistakes. It's like an examination. Teacher, with teacher's pet. She's very critical, but she's on his side every minute. Fighting with him. Hoping he'll be right. Funny... Jackie was beginning to feel that way about Clyde.

HE WENT out when people started coming for lunch, and for a couple of hours she was too busy even to think of him. Francine and Clorabel rushed in and snaked into their white pinafores, and the Oak Knoll Cafe was at its busiest.

The young draftees were Jackie's favorites. Hard, brown youngsters, cuffing each other about, rough as files, but treating her with a shy, anxious deference. Always trying to make dates, but never resenting it when they got turned down.

Francine and Clorabel didn't turn them down. But Jackie did. Because never so far had it been the right one.

It was hard to choose the one best and bravest from an average so high. And it would be harder still to get him, when all you had to offer was lovely eyes. But the man she wanted would be the best and the bravest. And when she found out which one that was, then she would know ...

"Hot roast beef sandwich-Potato on the side-Make it corn beef hash-Two coffees and one buttermilk-Pineapple pie? Surely! Sorry, pineapple pie's all gone. Will you take apple? One apple pie!-Roast lamb and mint sauce for two!-Clorabel! Clorabel! Catch that man at the door! He forgot his change- Don't take all the toothpicks, pal, please!"

A madhouse, the Oak Knoll Cafe, from eleven till two. And then came the grateful sag of the siesta time, with the banging of the screen door diminishing from a sharp, machinegun chatter, to the slow, occasional thwack of sniping. At last the dining room was empty. Francine and Clorabel took their two hours off. Jackie collapsed with a sigh into a chair at one of the empty tables.

Exciting, this life, for a girl. But no place for a girl, either. A means to an end, and no more. Just a place where you could see ten thousand men, and hope to find yours, and then be transported, by the only sure magic, into a small white house with a lawn and a front stoop. That was a woman's life! Oh, golly, Jackie thought, how she wanted it!

Then the screen door slammed and she knew without looking, by the special irritating note of it, who was coming. With barely a glance over her shoulder, she went behind the counter. "Heavy on the cream," she said.

"Right," said Red. "Why, you're learning, girl! If you'd just listen to what I told you about that coffee and make it the way you used to before business got good - No kidding, Jackie, that used to be swell coffee you made. But this stuff here -Good goeh! What is this? Kitchen Bouquet?"

If the cup in Red Conover's hand had been Java's best, he would never have tasted it. For at the instant that he raised it toward his lips, in through the open door and windows came a crusty, rupturing, earthen sound, and the floor of the Oak Knoll Cafe shook underfoot.

"Blazes!" Red said. Then he was out the door and across the street, with Jackie following, running. Everybody was running.

The sliced face of Oak Knoll had parted. A mass of it had shelled out, scattering over the cleared table-garden - heavily trenched. They had been through the little woods, where every important tree had been dug round, and had gazed sadly on the pitted surface of the once smooth lawn. They had been up to the attic, where old trunks and chests had been rifled of their contents. They had been down to the cellars, where flagstones had been heaved unwillingly from their sockets. They had measured and tapped walls, and Miss Marple had been shown every antique piece of furniture that contained or could be suspected of containing a secret drawer.

On a table in the morning room there was a heap of papers — all the papers that the late Mathew Stroud had left. Not one had been destroyed, and Charmian and Edward were wont to return to them again and again, earnestly perusing bills, invitations and business correspondence in the hope of spotting a hitherto unnoticed clue.

"Can you think of anywhere we haven't looked?" demanded Charmian hopefully.

Miss Marple shook her head. "You seem to have been very thorough, my dear. Perhaps, if I may say so, just a little too thorough. I always think, you know, that one should have a plan. It's like my friend, Mrs. Eldritch; she had such a nice little maid, polished linoleum beautifully, but she was so thorough that she polished the bathroom floors too much, and as Mrs. Eldritch was stepping out of the bath the cork mat slipped from under her and she had a very nasty fall and actually broke her leg! Most awkward, because the bathroom door was locked, of course, and the gardener had to get a ladder and come in through the window - terribly distressing to Mrs. Eldritch, who had always been a very modest woman, you know."

Edward moved restlessly.

Miss Marple said quickly: "Please forgive me. So apt, I know, to fly off at a tangent. But one thing does remind one of another. And sometimes that is helpful. All I was trying to say was that perhaps if we tried to sharpen our wits and think of a likely place—"

Edward said crossly: "You think of one, Miss Marple. Charmian's brains and mine are now only beautiful blanks!"

"Dear, dear. Of course — most tiring for you. If you don't mind I'll just look through all this." She indicated the papers on the table. "That is, if there's nothing private — I don't want to appear to pry."

"Oh, that's all right. But I'm afraid you won't find anything. Still, do have a shot."

She sat down by the table and methodically worked through the sheaf of documents. As she replaced each one, she sorted them automatically into tidy little heaps. When she had finished she sat staring in front of her for some minutes.

Edward asked, not without a touch of malice: "Well, Miss Marple?"

Miss Marple came to herself with a little start. "I beg your pardon. Most helpful."

"You've found something relevant?"

"Oh no, nothing like that, but I do believe I know what sort of man your Uncle Mathew was. Rather like my own Uncle Henry, I think. Fond of rather obvious jokes. A bachelor, evidently — I wonder why — perhaps an early disappointment? Methodical up to a point, but not very fond of being tied up — so few bachelors are!"

Behind Miss Marple's back, Charmian made a sign to Edward. It said: "She's ga-ga."

MISS MARPLE was continuing happily to talk of her deceased Uncle Henry. "Very fond of puns, he was. And to some people, puns are most annoying. A mere play upon words may be very irritating. He was a suspicious man, too. Always was convinced the servants were robbing him. And sometimes, of course, they were, but not always. It grew upon him, poor man. Toward the end he suspected them of tampering with his food, and finally refused to eat anything but boiled eggs! Said nobody could tamper with the inside of a boiled egg. Dear Uncle Henry, he used to be such a merry soul at one time - very fond of his coffee after dinner. He always used to say, 'This coffee is very Moorish,' meaning, you know, that he'd like a little more.'

Edward felt that if he heard any more about Uncle Henry he'd go mad.

"Fond of young people, too," went on Miss Marple, "but inclined to tease them a little, if you know what I mean. Used to put bags of sweets where a child just couldn't reach them."

Casting politeness aside, Charmian said: "I think he sounds horrible!"

"Oh no, dear, just an old bachelor, you know, and not used to children. And he wasn't at all stupid, really. He used to keep a good deal of money in the house, and he had a safe put in. Made a great fuss about it — and how very secure it was. As a result of his talking so much, burglars broke in one night and actually cut a hole in the safe with a chemical device."

"Served him right," said Edward.
"Oh, but there was nothing in the safe," said Miss Marple. "You see, he really kept the money somewhere else — behind some volumes of sermons in the library, as a matter of fact. He said people never took a book of that kind out of the shelf!"

Edward interrupted excitedly: "I say, that's an idea. What about the library?"

But Charmian shook a scornful head. "Do you think I hadn't thought of that? I went through all the books Tuesday of last week, when you went off to Portsmouth. Took them all out, shook them. Nothing there."

Edward sighed. Then, rousing himself, he endeavored to rid himself tactfully of their disappointing guest. "It's been awfully good of you to come down as you have and try to help us. Sorry it's been all a washout. Feel we trespassed a lot on your time.

THE SOAP THAT AGREES WITH YOUR SKIN

WATCH THOSE SHADOWS!

A simple snapshooting lesson from an artist of a long century ago

FOU'RE going to have a little homework with today's lesson. The accompanying illustration is merely the portrait of a man, yet it is the best antitoxin for some of today's camera miseries yet discovered.

This portrait was made almost 100 years ago by that famous Scot, David Octavius Hill. Unhampered by any modern gadgets, ignorant of today's vital refinements, he worked with exposure times which would now be considered cruel and inhuman. Yet his portraits rank with the best ever turned out.

Your homework is to study this portrait before you take somebody's picture. Notice the absence of confusing shadows, of distracting background. Make note of the nice modeling of the features - of the character that has been captured and put on paper. Then take up your next portrait effort with the resolve to keep your lighting simple, soft and forthright.

Put your subject in the shade where you get a diffused light instead of in the glaring sun which creates intense shadows. The eye sees through those black shadows; the lens doesn't. And

unobtrusive. Your eye, focusing on Aunt Sarah, doesn't see the clothes pole behind her. But the lens sees both and your print is a woman with a stick on her head.

The same general principles apply when you come indoors and do closeups of people under artificial light. Only here you get into more trouble because your light sources are small points instead of the whole sky, and angles become vital. The farther to the side your lights go, the more you emphasize features and details, bad as well as good; the more directly in front of the sitter your lights are, the more you "flatten out" the details and subdue the modeling. With your little girl's soft, unblemished face it matters little where the lights are. But with Grandma's lines and wrinkles and nose and chin, lighting is a problem you've got to sweat over if you're ever going to have nerve enough to show her the print.

Our trouble today is that we have too much light available and we pile it on. Light bulbs give an intense illumination. We crowd them up close so we can get fast exposures: the results are stark pictures in whitewash and India ink. You gain nothing by putting two photofloods three feet from a subject and making a shot in 1/25 or 1/50 of a second. It's far better to put your lights six or nine feet away, give four or six times as much exposure, and have a nice, soft portrait that's worth looking at.

Let me suggest that you go to your local art museum and look at some of the portraits done by the old masters. Study the faces painted by Holbein, Rubens, Van Dyck, Gainsborough and others. After that you'll come home determined to keep your lights soft, diffused and simple - just as David Hill did nearly 100 years ago.

Jeff felt the bullet tear through the flesh of his left arm, as he saw Brett stand crazily motionless for a second, and then pitch on his face and roll into a heap upon the floor. Regret was in Jeff's eyes as he hitched a handkerchief around the wound in his own aching arm, tying it awkwardly by holding one end in his teeth and the other in his right hand. But knowing Brett, knowing the intense feeling of the man, Jeff realized that if this had not happened today it would have happened tomorrow, or the day after

As he wearily turned to leave, a strong voice came across the room and stopped him. It was Barton, huge owner of the Bar-Z. He said: "Well, Brett practicaly told you to come and get it. Now finish your job."

As Jeff's mind studied these words his face showed his distaste for what he knew he must do. Being a man of deep conviction and quick decision, the newly elected sheriff moved without hesitation to the bar, and bending over, removed the badge of office from the dead man's shirt.

WHEN WIVES GET PAY CHECKS

Here are answers to the critics of a bride who keeps on working

by Emily Post

KNOW that what I am going to say is likely to bring me many letters from disapproving readers, and I am sorry! But I cannot be less than frank and say that, in the majority of present-day circumstances, I definitely approve of the bride who continues to add her pay check to the one earned by her husband.

In other words, the typical situation of the young business or professional woman of today is that, if her earnings may be added to those of her future husband's, she can marry, live simply but nicely, see something of the friends they care for, and lead a normal, happy life. Managing on the husband's pay alone, on the other hand, would not only be close to bare subsistence for themselves alone, but give them no chance to set aside money for a permanent home, and for the possibly needed travelling expenses of the stork, and so offset financial emergencies which would arise in consequence.

This article, by the way, is written in answer to two stacks of letters: One from "the objectors," asking that I take a stand against the bride who continues to hold her job. The other and much higher stack is from brides-to-be, who earnestly ask whether I think it right or proper or correct - an occasional one uses the phrase "fair to my husband" - for a married woman to hold an office position.

Some of the objectors cling to the mid-Victorian idea that a wife cannot be a wage-earner without lowering her husband's standing - socially as well as financially. There is also resentment against the wife who continues with her job because she wants to "keep up with the Joneses." It is true, of course, that many women and men do care very much about having what the Joneses have, and doing what they do. Sometimes such people are social climbers; more often they are just trying to live up to the best pattern. The contrary extreme of sliding down hill into sloppiness of living and the avoidance of nice people, for fear of being thought a climber, or from a feeling of inferiority, is certainly not conducive to happiness.

A Few "Musts"

No, I don't believe in keeping up tense, and outward show, and of extravagance one can't afford. But having sufficient income to maintain some beauty of surroundings; to be able to invite friends in from time to time; and to have necessary clothes is important.

To the bride, being talked to by one of those elderly relatives who loves to hold forth on the unwillingness of the brides of this generation to start housekeeping as her mother did, I'd like to say: "Don't you believe everything you hear about yesterday - about how they started housekeeping." The truth is that they waited - two, four, eight and even more years, - while Hiram saved to build a house for Martha!

Today, Mary adds her salary to John's salary, and they get married! And I, for one, think it is much the better way!

One of the most important changes in public opinion that has taken place in the last few years, is that an American husband no longer feels it belittling to himself to let his wife earn money. Formerly a wife might pursue a career as an amateur as strenuously and exhaustingly as she pleased; but earning a salary or making a commission was the privilege of a man. Above all, the support of his family was his particular job, and his alone.

Even then, when a wife had special talents, a man received very little sympathy if he refused to let her develop them. Today we go further. A woman even when married to a successful man, may perfectly well continue a career that is not dependent on artistic talents. Yet even now it would hurt a man's standing if his wife, who has never worked and has no special aptitude, should suddenly go out and get the sort of position that any unskilled worker can fill.

In any event our bride Mary is a special case. She keeps her job because John's salary stretches very little beyond the bare necessities for one, and could not possibly take care of two. The sometimes offered idea that two cost no more than one approaches the truth only in the matter of shelter, furniture, fire and light. Food and clothing and all of the accidentals and incidentals of upkeep cost double, and if the stork comes along - or perhaps they couldn't let him come along!

These are the young people whom it was in my heart to write about. But there are others, too. Suppose at the larly those from technical schools who feel it unfair that the positions for which they have been trained are being held by married women. And yet, to almost any one of these, I'd like to say: "Just wait a while, my dear, until you fall in love with John Waytomake, and write me then!" To some of them I have said this.

Two salaries often spell happiness as well as security

Critics Often Unfair

THE most serious situation is that of the wife of a young lawyer, or architect, or doctor, who cannot make an occasional patient's or client's payment keep food coming in regularly, or even keep the roof securely overhead. It is hard for her, because the community expects her to live up to being Mrs. Doctor. She has to keep up appearances in the household. She needs the help of an extra payenvelope. And the critics should let her get it in peace.

The question that is most often asked, whenever a career-wife is mentioned, is whether a woman can do justice to two careers? No, say the opponents; very few women have the physical endurance to lead double lives! From long, personal observation it seems to me that it is not so much a question of physical endurance as of temperament. In fact, you, as well as I, can surely cite women of exceptionally fragile appearance, and of least physical strength, among the very ones who have made successes worthy of note in career and marriage. both.

When a woman delights in her work, she derives stimulation from it, and, because of this makes an es-

land; piling up at the base of the cut. And the dust was still rising like smoke - huge clouds of it, mushrooming upward, deep yellow against the hazy blue of the afternoon sky. People were scurrying forward from everywhere, drawing slowly into a little knot around the pile of debris, hurrying as if they were afraid to arrive. Clyde was there already, pushing them back, waving his arms and yelling, "Keep back! Damn it, that's only a starter! Keep back, all of you! Can't you see?"

They all looked up then, and they saw. Tons of dust and rock had fallen, and some trees, but now there really was menace in that wounded hill. It wasn't a steep wall any more. Near vertical. There actually was an overhang to it, since the slide. Hundreds of tons of impending rock and dirt and oak trees were ready to come crashing down.

Yes, some guy had been caught in the slide. Buried under it. Eddie Perdue had seen him go in. It was Peewee Evans and his bulldozer. He'd been working ahead of Eddie all day, cutting out so Eddie could pick up a load in the carryall.

"I yelled," Eddie said. "When I saw it coming I yelled. But there wasn't nothing else I could do. Peewee heard me. He looked up but he couldn't get out in time. I saw him start to jump and then crouch under the cab. Then the dozer went out of sight. Yeah, it must have been Peewee. He's been working ahead of me all day." They checked among the men then, and Peewee was missing. One caterpillar was missing, too.

Jackie heard the quick, sharp talk. And the people were all real people to her, men who had eaten out of her hand. Peewee Evans was the little puff-faced runner who had the reputation for being so smart at the controls of the huge cat. A little guy who had very neat patches in the washedout blue of his shirt and jeans. And Tackie realized, then, with that terrible sinking feeling, that he was married. He had shown her the picture of his children once. Three. A girl of seven the oldest.

It was Red who said, "Well, let's go, boys." But he went in the wrong direction. He started forward toward where his shovel sat. Clyde stopped him. "It's okay, Red. Leave it there. There's nothing to be done about Peewee, and to hell with the equip-

He was talking about Red's shovel. It was a $20,000 tool, but it didn't look like two bits under the balance of that cliff. Funny how different things looked when you took the prop out from under. And that's all the slide had been, just like taking the prop out from under, taking it out from under the whole damned hill. . .

Red said, "I'm going in. There's good steel in those cat cabs. It mightn't have got him. Maybe he's just pinned."

into the controls till his body became a part of them, urging into motion the deliberate, elephantine tracks, spreading the fanged maw of the bucket, those huge, reaching jaws of steel, operating it with the delicacy of a watchmaker, working with incredible tenderness into the chaotic mass

It was like a game of jackstraws, each piece to be cleverly juggled free without disturbing the others, without shaking down that hanging mountain. The boles of oak trees hung on with tangled, octopus roots. The massive, stubborn shapes of boulders resisted. But one by one Red swung them clear, with an unbelievable skill and speed, the motor turning quietly, lugging on the lift, but with a sure, soft strength behind each

He said, "It's funny, Jackie. I always wanted to do this to you! Why, I wonder?" And for better, for worse, Jackie knew she could believe every word of it.

"Wake me up at three o'clock and I'll let you know my decision" Clyde put both hands on his arm. 'Listen, fellow, why kid yourself? Why kid anybody?" Red never stopped. PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH TREATS . . . by Grace Turner

These are gloriously good recipes with a "foreign" U.S. flavor

LL educated gourmets know that, along with the cookery of Old New Orleans and a few other Southern points, the genius of the Pennsylvania Germans ranks high in our native regional cooking." J. George Frederick, who says this, ought to know. He comes from that part of the country and he is a leader of gourmets in the United States, and president of the Gourmet Society of New York, the dining club of food connoisseurs. He has also written a book on Pennsylvania-German cooking - or, if you prefer, "Pennsylvania Dutch," as most people would call it. The people who live in or come from that section of Pennsylvania today won't care, Mr. Frederick says, and titles his own book "The Pennsylvania Dutch and Their Cookery.' Actually, the ancestors of some of the present-day "Pennsylvania Dutch" came from Holland, but most of them from Germany and the German regions of Switzerland.

"The first dining club in the world was organized in Philadelphia in 1732 under Dutch influence," Mr. Frederick says, "and General Washington, during a good deal of the Revolution, had Dutch cooks because he liked Dutch cooking. Moreover, there is no end to the number and variety of Pennsylvania Dutch recipes, according to Mr. Frederick. You can go around to the faded blue doors of the century-and-a-half-old stone farmhouses and get "new" recipes from every other house in a section like Lancaster County - if you can get the shy "Dutch" housewives to talk.

5 eggs, separated

1/4 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon pepper 2 tablespoons butter

34 cup chopped watercress

Beat egg whites stiff. Add salt and pepper to egg yolks; beat until thick and lemon colored. Fold egg yolks into egg whites. Melt butter in frying pan; pour in egg mixture. Turn heat low; cook about 4 minutes. Fold watercress into soft part of omelet on top. Place in moderate oven (350° F.) 5 minutes, or until top is set. Fold quickly and serve at once. Approximate yield: 4 portions.

Stewed Cucumbers

1 tablespoon butter

1 tablespoon flour 1 cup rich milk

1 teaspoon grated onion

1/2 teaspoon salt

1/8 teaspoon pepper 6 slices hot buttered rye toast

Pare and quarter cucumbers; remove seeds; soak in lightly salted cold water to cover 1/2 hour; drain. Cook in a small quantity of boiling salted water until tender when pierced with a fork (about 10 minutes); drain. Meanwhile melt butter and blend in flour; add milk, onion, salt and pepper and cook over low heat, stirring constantly until thickened. Arrange cucumbers on toast and pour hot sauce over all. Yield: 6 portions.

Dutch Succotash

2 tablespoons butter 3 medium onions, chopped fine

2 green peppers, diced 11/2 cups diced potatoes

2 cups canned tomatoes

1 teaspoon brown sugar

1/2 teaspoon salt 1/8 teaspoon pepper

1 cup kernel corn 2 cups canned lima beans

Melt butter in heavy saucepan; add onions and green peppers and cook over low heat about 5 minutes. Add potatoes, tomatoes, brown sugar, salt and pepper. Simmer 1 hour. Add corn and lima beans; simmer 30 minutes longer. Yield: 6 portions. Note: (In season fresh corn and lima beans may be used, adding them with the potatoes and tomatoes.)

Grumbere Pancakes

3 medium potatoes

1 onion, grated 2 slices bread, trimmed

1/4 cup milk

1 teaspoon minced parsley

1/2 teaspoon salt 1/8 teaspoon pepper

Cook potatoes; mash; add onion. Meanwhile soak bread in milk; add to mashed potatoes with remaining ingredients; beat thoroughly. Drop by tablespoons on hot greased griddle, flattening with back of spoon. Turn to brown on both sides. Serve with apple butter, crisp bacon and scrambled eggs. Yield: 18 pancakes.

Cinnamon Cake

1 cake compressed yeast 6 cups sifted flour

1/2 teaspoon salt

% cup sugar

1 cup shortening, softened

1 egg, slightly beaten 2 tablespoons melted butter

1/2 cup brown sugar

1 teaspoon cinnamon

Scald milk; cool to lukewarm. Dissolve yeast cake in about 1/2 cup of the cooled milk; add to remaining milk. Add 31/2 cups flour; beat well. Cover and let rise in a warm place about 2 hours or until sponge is light. Mix and sift remaining flour, salt and sugar; add to sponge. Work in shortening and egg. Knead until smooth. Cover and let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk (about 1 hour). Cut down. Roll 1/2 inch thick on lightly floured board; fit into 2 greased square pans or one large pan. Cover with tea towel and let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk. Brush top with melted butter. Combine brown sugar and cinnamen and sprinkle on top. Bake in a moderately hot oven (375° F.) 25-30 minutes. Yield: 2 (9-inch) square cakes.

"I mean her first name," he added. "Gee, I don't know. Why not ask

An odd little smile tugged at Jim's mouth. "Maybe I will - someday!"

Then suddenly there was Doctor Holden, his gray head towering over Miss Lacey's. "Well, young man! And Jim! How are you?" They shook hands, and then Jim's eyes clouded anxiously as the covers were folded back from Tucker's legs. The little blanket spread over his chest and tummy made a little hill for Tucker to peer over.

" - and daily massages and exercises." Doctor Holden was saving. "until now I think we've some pretty good legs here!" He tweaked Tucker's ear. "Think you can make 'em work?"

All the laughter left Tucker's face as he looked up at them. Oh, they couldn't! They couldn't mean they wanted him to walk! And he swallowed hard as he realized that this was the big surprise. Jim's face glowed as if a light burned behind it. "Tuck!" he breathed, and Tucker, suddenly ill, turned his face away. He clenched his fists under the blanket. He couldn't walk! He knew he couldn't! He hadn't prayed like Miss Lacey told him to, so how could he? They didn't know he hadn't prayed . . .

He lived through the long hours of that day somehow, trying not to remember that this was the day that he had looked forward to for so long. Now it had come - and gone.

"I don't care!" he told himself, lying awake in the lonely night. "I don't care!" But he knew, deep down, that he did care, for he knew for sure, now, he couldn't walk. And Jim knew it, too. Jim!

Tucker had tried to tell them. "Please, Doctor Holden - I can't!"

"Sure you can, Tucker! Come on,

JIM, too. Jim's eyes burned in his white face. "Tuck! Just one step over here to me, fella - then back home - "

So Tuck, his eyes fastened on his father's face, had set out into that gulf of space between them. Just one step - but he never made it. Miss Lacey's arms caught him as he fell, and he heard her cry:

"Oh, please! Don't do this to him!" They put him very gently back into bed, and Tucker heard Jim's whisper: "Doctor!"

"Now, now, Jim! Just be patient." Doctor Holden's voice was tired. "I can't understand it. Those legs are in fine shape! Well - we'll just have to keep on -"

Tucker shuddered there in the dark, remembering. He had known it would be like that. And he had let Jim down. He turned over, and a long, quivering sigh escaped him.

He held his breath, but Brenda's whisper came again. "Don't cry,

"I'm not cry Miss Dawson?" He didn't want her to

"She went out in the other room with the baby. Don't feel bad, Tucker.

You'll walk again some day." "No I won't!" he cried out fiercely.

"I never will, 'cause - ' "'Cause why?"

Suddenly he had to tell her. He couldn't tell Jim, or the doctor, or even Miss Lacey, but he could tell Brenda. "'Cause -- 'cause I didn't pray!"

"Well - why don't you?"

"It wouldn't do any good. I've prayed for - for other things and never got 'em."

Brenda sat up in bed and stared over at him. "Maybe you prayed for the wrong things. We never get what isn't good for us."

He thought that over for a minute, then he asked fearfully, "Do you think it's wrong to pray for - a mother?"

"Oh." There was a little pause. "No, it isn't wrong, but you know you can't get a mother, Tucker. Not a real one. I asked my mama once and she said that you can have only one real mother. You can have stepmothers and adopted mothers, but only the one who has the same blood we have can be a real mother."

WALLY'S WAGON

The Goblins Will Get You, If —!

N CASE you didn't know it, Friday night was Hallowe'en. Bushy Barnes tells me that in China all the traders pay 'cumshaw' which is a sort of tip or protection money so somethin' terrible doesn't happen to Every Hallowe'en I get cumshawed an' extorted an' held up an' racketeered all over the lot. go out on the afternoon of Hallowe'en an' buy five gallons of cider which I pass out to likelylookin' ghosts, in costume or out, that might soap my windows, spread limburger cheese where all the incomin' customers will step in it, stretch wires shin-high in the dark outside the back door or otherwise act like I did when I was young an' had an active an' fertile mind.

Cider is a fine ghost-getter. It ain't profitable when served free to any young hoodlum that sticks his head in the door, but it's pretty expensive to run out of on Hallowe'en. Which we did.

We run out of our cumshaw around 11. It's about a half-hour later that Horse Neck Sholtz complains that the clams in the clam chowder is too tough. But clam chowder is our Friday special, and I been dishing it out right and left all day - with no complaints. So I just kids Horse Neck about trying to chew the clams when he ain't got no teeth to chew with anyway - and think no more about it.

Jake Bullis relieves me at midnight and I go on home, figuring that we'd got off easy for a Hallowe'en. But right after I left, it seems we had a run on clam chowder - and none of the customers would pay for it. They'd make a few passes at it, then shove it aside and bawl out Jake for serving such tripe.

Jake just grins and bears it until some 200-pound truck driver grabs him around the throat and threatens to punch his teeth in for being a bum practical joker.

So Jake is fit to be tied when I come back on the job in the morning. He tells me what has happened. The two of us go over that clam chowder with a finetooth comb. An' doggone if some of them thirsty ghosts hadn't loaded our chowder pot with chopped-up chunks of an old inner tube.

Jake says that from now on he's all for bein' 100 per cent prepared — even against ghosts.

"What's the matter with them clams?" protests Jake

When he didn't answer, she lay back down again. He pretended he was asleep, but the tears pressed tight against his eyelids and it was all he could do to hold them back. He hated Brenda! He hated her! She had shown him once and for all that praying wasn't ever going to bring him a mother. A real one - and Tucker Todd only wanted a real one. One with the same blood as his!

And he knew that he'd never say another prayer. Never . .

Everyone was very good to him after that awful morning. His days fell into their old pattern, except that Jim stayed on with him. They weren't busy at the farm, he said. He was a little late one afternoon and he smiled as he sat down.

"I found out her name."

"Whose name?"

"Miss Lacey's. It's Anne." Jim looked a little embarrassed. "I - I just happened to be at the front steps when she came out, and we walked a little way."

"Oh." Tucker's attention wandered across the aisle. "Look, Jim. Brenda's mama brought her that little doll house. Cute, huh? For a girl!" he added hastily.

"HM-M." Jim surveyed Brenda's table, piled high with a riotous array of toys. He looked back at Tucker's table, empty except for bits of grubby modeling clay and broken and stunted crayons that clearly showed long hours of hard usage."Hm-m-m," said Jim, again. He was quiet for quite a while, then he stood up. "Look, Tuck, I've got to go out for a while. I just remembered something. I won't be gone long -- " His footsteps echoed away.

Tucker lay watching Brenda play with the doll house. Her mother was knitting; his eyes were fascinated by the needles as they dipped in and out of the blue yarn, and his eyelids began to droop. The next thing he knew, Jim was back - a happy, laughing Jim. Miss Lacey was with him. "Surprise, Tucker Todd!"

"Oh, Jim! Are they - mine?" "All yours, Skipper."

"OH, man!" He reached eagerly, and Jim very carefully put the glass bowl into his waiting hands. It was a small bowl, but it was large enough for the three fish that swam distractedly about in it. There was a tiny little castle and some green moss, too. Tucker had never seen anything quite so beautiful! "All my very own!" He blinked rapidly. "I never had anything like this!"

"We'll put them on your table where you can watch them," Miss Lacey said, "and you can feed them yourself every day."

"I'm going to name them for the Wynken, and Blynken and Nod Miss Lacey sings about." Tucker looked up and he didn't know why she turned away, nor why Jim cleared his throat as he said, quite simply;

"Thank you - so much!"

After that, Tucker never was lonely. His small world centered around his goldfish, and everyone that came in the ward, doctors, nurses, visitors, all stopped to admire as Tucker, beaming with the pride of ownership, told them, "My dad gave them to me!"

From across the aisle, Brenda watched; her toys lay neglected on her table. Tucker tried to hold the fish so she could see better, but he almost spilled them and never tried it again.

"I wish I had some!" she said wistfully one night as her mother was leaving.

"For heaven's sake, Brenda!"
"Please, Mama!"

"Now listen, Brenda. You're going home tomorrow and I'm not going to bother with any smelly fish!"

Tucker's eyes blazed. Smelly! His fish?

Brenda was still crying long after the lights were out, in spite of Miss Dawson's efforts to comfort her. Tucker stood it as long as he could; then he sat up. "Hey, Brenda! Shut up, can't you?" He took a deep breath and said quickly, "You can borrow Wynken, Blynken and Nod!"

Her sobs suddenly stopped and she looked through swollen eyes. "Now?"
"Yes, now — only stop bawling!"

So a place was cleared on Brenda's table by stacking things in a pile, and the bowl was transferred across the aisle. His eyes followed them. He had a funny feeling in his tummy, but it was too late to back out. But gee—he wished that he'd let Brenda bawl her head off! He could see a flash of gold once in a while, and his gaze was still fixed on the shining bowl when he finally drifted off.

Hours later he awoke with a start, wondering what had wakened him. He listened, but he couldn't hear Miss Dawson any place. She must have gone to night lunch. The nurse from the next division would peek in occasionally, but he knew how long it was between peeks. He sat up and knew in a flash what had aroused him. The high stack of Brenda's toys had collapsed, and — oh! He stared at the overturned bowl, the moss and water on the floor, and at the three bright spots slithering on the hardwood.

A strangled cry choked him. His fish! His precious fish! He tried to call Brenda, but he couldn't utter a sound. Terror held his voice.

THEN he felt words on his lips; new words formed soundlessly, words that were dragged from his heart where he had kept them hidden. "Please, God! Oh, please, God —" He pushed back the covers and was out of bed. "Please, God! I've got to! Help me, please!"

His head felt queer and light, and his legs had needles jabbing at them — but they moved! He jerked along as if he were on stilts; stilts that hurt, and were stiff, and burned him — but they moved. Through his dizziness and his gasping breath, he heard a funny, whimpering little voice that said over and over:

"Help me, God! Oh — please — help — "

Somehow he stooped over and picked up three bright, quivering things, and then he turned slowly, painfully back. His whirling brain and his groping fingers searched frantically. His water glass. His — water glass! Where was it? The stilts seared through his dizziness and held him in space, but they still moved . . .

His fingers closed around the water glass and he dropped the three bright things and heard them plop into the water. It would do until—until—where was his bed? Things were spinning so! And—thank you, God!

ing so! And — thank you, God!

The stilts gave way, and Tucker clutched wildly at nothing. Then there was a sharp, hard pain as something struck his head, and Tucker Todd lay very still.

SOMEONE was crying. Crying deeply and not caring. Tucker opened his eyes. Why, it was Jim! Doctor Holden was there, too, and Miss Hemstreet, and the sun was shining! There was a bandage on his head, and the inside of his arm hurt.

"Jim?"

"Did I hurt me, Jim?"

"You've a bad gash in your head, fella, but it's all sewed up now. You're okay." He choked suddenly. "Tucker! Oh, Tucker! You — you walked!"

So that was why Jim was crying — because he was happy! Tuck sighed, and happiness flowed over him. Even if he did feel queer, he felt like he could fly, too. He'd done it! He'd prayed — and he could walk!

A light step came down the aisle and Jim's voice fairly sang; "Anne!"

Then Doctor Holden's voice. "What are you doing here? I thought I told you to stay off duty for a while, young lady!"

"Off duty? I should say not! I feel fine. How is he?"

"He'll be right as rain in a few days, thanks to you. He lost a lot of blood, but the transfusion picked him right up. It's a blessing you're the same type and were so close by." He took a deep breath. "Well, I'll be on my way now—" his voice trailed off. Miss Hemstreet followed after him.

"Jim."
"Yes, Tuck?"

"Yes, Tuck?"
"My arm hurts."

"That's where the needle went in, Skipper. You have a pint of new blood to make up for last night's performance. And Tuck, listen—" Jim's voice shook. "There's something else. How—how would you like to have—a mother?"

Tucker lay quite still, with his eyes closed. He knew Jim meant Miss Lacey. Well, he loved Miss Lacey more than anyone, outside of Jim, but having her wouldn't be having a real mother — not like one with the same blood.

She bent over him, her face pink and her eyes shining. "He's trying to tell you, Tucker Todd, that I've always wanted a little boy like you."

He looked up into the gray eyes, and suddenly all his doubts faded before what he saw there. His arms went around her neck. "Oh, Miss Lacey — Anne! I do love you so very much!" It was then that he saw the white gauze on the inside of her elbow. "Your arm!"

"Never mind that, Tucker. It's just where they took the blood. It doesn't hurt. You have the same blood that I have now, young man, so — why Tucker!" She stopped before the look of incredulous joy that swept over his face. A look so near to awe that she was startled. "What on earth—?"

"Oh!" Tucker sobbed as he pulled her down to him. "He heard me! Oh, He did hear me! And you're — you're real!"

And Tucker Todd, aged seven, broke down and cried like a man.

The End

Try It Yourself Tonight

TODAY, as you've probably read in newspapers and magazines, there's a new idea—of what to do to meet special strain. A scientific idea of how to build up increased vitality—the idea that people under special strain need special food—in addition to the normal diet—to be at their best!

All this may be news to the public, but it is old to Ovaltine. For more than 20 years, Ovaltine has pioneered in preaching the need of special supplementary food, for those who want to be really fit.

What It Does

For years, thousands who wakened tired and logy—lacked freshness and vitality to carry them through the day—have found they wakened fresh and buoyant—with lasting vigor—when they drank a cup of Ovaltine regularly each night and morning. For Ovaltine is a special food-concentrate designed to do two important things:

First: When taken warm at bedtime, Ovaltine fosters sound sleep, in a safe, natural way, without drugs. It has the power to relieve that feeling of "nervous tension," thus helping to condition the mind for rest.

Second: Ovaltine supplies a special combination of food factors designed to replenish vitality while you sleep—rebuild worn-out muscle, nerve and body cells. It provides significant amounts of the rarer food elements everyone must have for vigorous health—in a food specially processed for easy digestion—protecting minerals, Vitamins A, B₁, D and G, all the essential amino acids, syridoxine, pantothenic acid—elements now known to be deficient in many foods. Thus acts as an insurance against strength-sapping food deficiencies which affect more than ½ of all people today.

So, by all means, try this "special food" idea modern science is urging. Turn to new, improved Ovaltine night and morning—starting tonight. See if you don't begin to feel infinitely "fresher" and more alive—with abundant vitality to face these strenuous times. Get a tin of Ovaltine, now.

How To Groom a Husband

Good looks are a good investment for any man, says Eddie Senz, famed Hollywood expert

by Sylvia Blythe

ONVINCE your husband that good looks are a good business investment, and he'll be a pushover for an efficient way to improve his appearance. So says famed Eddie Senz, the movie "make-over" man, who uses his talents not only to help put actors and actresses across, but to help men and women put themselves across in other walks of life. Many business and professional and military bigwigs got where they are after they first put in an appearance in the Senz workshop.

Mr. Senz has already solved every problem you can conjure up about the obstacles a man's appearance can put between him and success.

Suppose, for instance, the problem is one of too-short stature. This puts a man at a disadvantage if he has to compete every day with towering sixfooters. The man you are interested in can do a lot to even up the odds, says Mr. Senz, if he will wear the right kind of clothes.

The actual build-up begins on the ground floor with platform-raised shoes that derrick a man up as much as two and a half inches. These are not shoes with high heels. The platform that raises him is a wedge of cork and is hidden between the inner lining and the outer sole of the shoe. It fools even the gimlet-eyed. A man can also build up convincing height by wearing the right hat - and that does not mean a towering shako. The hat will be of conservative height, but will have a narrow brim.

Between his hat and his shoes, a short man can use still other rules to increase the illusion of height - or also to make himself look slimmer. Thus, suits should be single-breasted. The jacket must not be so short that it makes him look like an Eton boy, nor so long that it slices inches off his legs. If he likes a patterned cloth a pinstripe vertical design will make him look taller. But checked or herringboned horizontals are bad because they build him out East and West, and less due North than he needs.

For a man with the opposite problem of being too tall, lanky, and ungainly, a subtle widening with horizontal patterns in suits, even checks of hound-tooth size, helps. Best spot to upholster him for figure fullness is his middle. So he should wear a doublebreasted suit. Best spots to pad him out are shoulders, and he will look less tall, more youthful and more fleshand-boned in suits of lively or of lightish color.

Further - he can cut down some of his Ichabod-height if his hat boasts a sizeable brim. But the crown must be shallow. And nothing qualifies better than the old pork-pie.

Problems Easily Solved

Suppose your husband's problem is a face, a head or some individual feature that is at cross-purpose with the rest of his looks. Just name the problem, and Mr. Senz will match it with one he has already met.

Too-round a face? There are ways to make it look less so. Hair must not be parted in the middle nor plastered down seal-slick on opposite sides. On the contrary. It should be parted on the side, and if there is enough hair to fool around with, it should be brushed up and back for height. It should be clipped close at the side of his head. If a man is a little short on hair over his brow, Mr. Senz advises a frontpiece - frankly, a "toup." If cleverly made, this also will remain his own secret. Glasses are something else to consider. On a round face, they should have high ear pieces, a high bridge, and deep squarish lenses.

There is also the collar. One low enough to show some neck, and made with long wing flaps will help to slenderize his face. He should keep his collar lodged under his Adam's apple, and snugly closed. He should have neck bands that button at the top.

His hat? Choose a crown that is fairly tall and as wide across as his face.

There should be a dent in the crown to break up all of that expanse of roundness. A fedora with a dashing diagonal brim is the perfect hat.

If, on the other hand, a man finds fault because his is a long face, he should part his hair either straight center or diagonally off-center; keep it flat on the top; and encourage a little thickness at the sides. He needs a high collar and broad, low wing flaps that spread away from his tie. And if he wears glasses, they should have oblong ovals, a low bridge piece and low temples. His hat, like the one recommended for the tall man, should have a blunt shallow crown. But the brim should run out like an awning straight across his face.

Mustaches Often Help

This man can also decorate his face with a mustache. It is useful, since it foreshortens his face. A wide one

Now, that we are into mustaches. let's examine some of the finer points. As a rule, a gay blade of a mustache localized in two neat spots, is the most debonair. But if a man's face has massive proportions, he had best keep his decoration scaled to size. The more uptilt to a mustache, the more youthful a face looks. Try to get your husband to experiment. He may even discover, as plenty of forthright men have discovered before, that a waxed mustache is a fastidious touch and makes a nicer ornament than an abandoned tuft.

A mustache may also be needed for camouflage. It helps to screen faulty teeth or gaps where teeth are too widely spaced; it masks the jut of a prognathic jaw; it keeps the secret of a short upper lip.

Last, let's talk about shoulders, that droop, spoiling the impression a man's clothes make, adding unfair years to his age, and often giving an air of general defeat. Best remedy, says Mr. Senz, is a shoulder brace device that looks like a pair of suspenders with a steel rod running across the back. It can be used, with no discomfort, to girdle a man to ramrod erectness, and if he can once be got into it, he'll thank you for your pains.

"Oh." said Miss Marple, "but we've got to find the money, haven't we? You mustn't give up, Mr. Rossiter. 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again.' "

You mean you're going to - go

"Strictly speaking," said Miss Marple, "I haven't begun yet. 'First catch your hare - ' as Mrs. Beeton says in her cookery book - a wonderful book but terribly expensive; most of the recipes begin 'take a quart of cream and a dozen eggs.' Let me see, where was I? Oh yes. Well, we have, so to speak, caught our hare - the hare being, of course, your Uncle Mathew, and we've only got to decide now where he would have hidden the money. It ought to be quite simple." "Simple?" demanded Charmian.

"Oh, yes, dear. I'm sure he would have done the obvious thing. A secret drawer -- that's my solution."

Edward said drily: "You couldn't put bare of gold in a secret drawer."

"No, no, of course not. But there's no reason to believe the money is in

"He always used to say - " "So did my Uncle Henry about his safe! So I should strongly suspect that that was just a simple blind. Diamonds, now they could be in a secret drawer quite easily."

"But we've looked in all the secret drawers. We had a cabinetmaker over from Westchester to examine the furniture."

"Did you, dear? That was clever of you. I should suggest your uncle's own desk would be the most likely. Was it the tall escritoire against the wall there?"

"Yes. And I'll show you." Charmian went over to it. She took down the flap. Inside were pigeonholes and little drawers. She opened a small door in the center and touched a spring inside the left hand drawer. The bottom of the center recess clicked and slid forward. Charmian drew it out, revealing a shallow well beneath. It was empty.

"Now isn't that a coincidence," exclaimed Miss Marple. "Uncle Henry had a desk just like this, only his was burr walnut and this is mahogany."

"At any rate," said Charmian, "there's nothing there, as you can see."

"I expect," said Miss Marple, "your cabinetmaker was a young man. He didn't know everything. People were very artful when they made hiding places in those days. There's such a thing as a secret inside a secret, so to speak."

She extracted a hairpin from her neat bun of gray hair. Straightening it out, she stuck the point into what appeared to be a tiny worm hole in one side of the secret recess. With a little difficulty she pulled out a small drawer. In it was a bundle of faded letters and a folded paper.

Edward and Charmian pounced on the find together. With trembling fingers Edward unfolded the paper. He dropped it with an exclamation of

Charmian was untying a ribbon that held the letters together. She drew one out and glanced at it. "Love

MISS MARPLE reacted with Victorian gusto. "How interesting! Perhaps the reason your uncle never married."

Charmian read aloud:

"My ever dear Mathew, I must confess that the time seems long indeed since I received your last letter. I try to occupy myself with the various tasks allotted to me, and often say to myself that I am indeed fortunate to see so much of the globe, though little did I think when I went to America that I should voyage off to these far islands!"

Charmian broke off. "Where is it from? Oh! Hawaii!" She went on:

STRANGE JEST

"Alas, these natives are still far from seeing the light. They are in an unclothed and savage state and spend most of their time swimming and dancing, adorning themselves with garlands of flowers. Mr. Gray has made some converts but it is up-hill work and he and Mrs. Gray get sadly discouraged. I try to do all I can to cheer and encourage him, but I, too, am often sad for a reason you can guess, dear Mathew. Alas, absence is a severe trial to a loving heart. Your renewed vows and protestations of affection cheered me greatly. Now and always you have my faithful and devoted heart, dear Mathew, and I remain-

Your true love,

Betty Martin P.S. - I address my letter under cover to our mutual friend, Matilda Graves, as usual. I hope Heaven will pardon this little subterfuge."

EDWARD whistled. "A female missionary! So that was Uncle Mathew's romance. I wonder why they never married?"

"She seems to have gone all over the world," said Charmian, looking through the letters. "Mauritius-all

"The whole thing's a sell. There never was a female missionary. It must be a code." "My dear, dear children - there's really no need to make it all so difficult. Your uncle was really a very simple man. He had to have his little joke, that was all."

For the first time they gave her their full attention. "Just exactly what do you mean, Miss Marple?" asked Charmian.

"I mean, dear, that you're actually holding the money in your hand this minute."

Charmian stared down.

"The signature, dear. That gives the whole thing away. The recipe is just an indication. Shorn of all the cloves and brown sugar and the rest of it, what is it actually? Why, gammon and spinach to be sure! Gammon and spinack! Meaning - nonsense! So it's clear that it's the letters that are important. And then, if you take into consideration what your uncle did just before he died. He tapped his eye, you said. Well, there you are — that gives you the clue, you see." Charmian said: "Are we mad, or are you?"

"Surely, my dear, you must have heard the expression meaning that something is not a true picture, or has it quite died out nowadays: 'All my eye and Betty Martin."

Edward gasped, his eyes falling to the letter in his hand: "Betty Martin -- "

"Of course, Mr. Rossiter. As you have just said, there isn't - there wasn't any such person. The letters were written by your uncle, and I dare say he got a lot of fun out of writing them! As you say, the writing on the envelopes is much older - in fact, the envelopes couldn't belong to the letters anyway, because the postmark of the one you are holding is 1851."

She paused. She made it very emphatic: "1851. And that explains everything, doesn't it?"

"Not to me," said Edward. "Well, of course," said Miss Marple, "I daresay it wouldn't to me if it weren't for my great-nephew Lionel. Such a dear little boy and a passionate stamp collector. Knows all about stamps. It was he who told me about rare and expensive stamps and that a wonderful new find had come up for auction. And I actually remember his mentioning one stamp — an 1851 blue 2 cent. It realized something like $25,000. I believe. Fancy! I should imagine that the other stamps are something also rare and expensive. No doubt your uncle bought through dealers and was careful to 'cover his EDWARD groaned. He sat down and buried his face in his hands.

"What's the matter?" demanded Charmian.

"Nothing. It's only the awful thought that, but for Miss Marple, we might have burned these letters in a decent, gentlemanly way!"

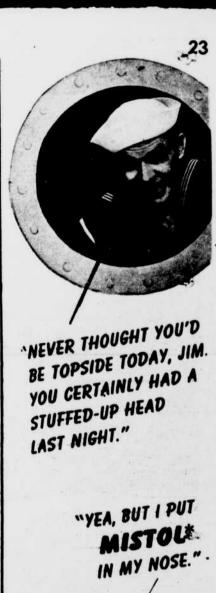

"Ah," said Miss Marple, "that's just what these old gentlemen who are fond of their joke never realize. My Uncle Henry, I remember, sent a favorite niece a five-pound note for a Christmas present. He put it inside a Christmas card, gummed the card together and wrote on it: 'Love and best wishes. Afraid this is all I can manage this year.'

"She, poor girl, was annoyed at what she thought was his meanness and threw it all straight into the fire. So then, of course, he had to give her another.'

Edward's feelings towards Uncle Henry had suffered an abrupt and complete change.

"Miss Marple," he said, "I'm going to get a bottle of champagne. We'll all drink the health of your Uncle Henry."

CIRCLING Washington and dotted all over the country are the small private air fields where every day new pilots are made. These little airports, surrounded by corn fields and country roads, have a life of their own. Like a magnet, they draw youngsters in their teens, mothers, fathers—the people who fly and the mothers, fathers—the people who fly and the many others who are just air-minded. At these airports is the comradery that exists when every one cares tremendously about one thing. The thing here is flying. Student pilots arrive early in the morning, trying to pile up time before they go to work. They give up their lunches to dash to the nearest airport. Just as flying-crazy are the youngsters who hang around the airport, occasionally "hitching a ride."

Biggest day in the life of the student pilot comes with his first solo flight. Each field has its own tradition for the great day. At Hyde's Airport near Clinton, Md., the hero is doused with water—to take the cockiness out of him. Because he has a long way to go before enough hours are recorded in his log book to earn a private pilot's certificate, goal of every student pilot.

George R. Brewer doesn't know it, but he's on his way to the traditional dousing student pilots get in return for their first solo at Hyde's Field.

Learning Child Care in 'Laboratory School'

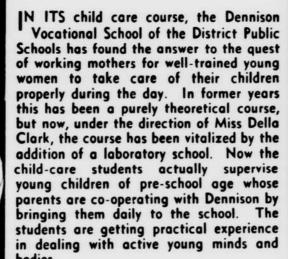

The psychology of teaching is to hold attention. So while she gives these youngsters a lesson in dressing a doll, Student Barbara Switzer tells them a story about dolly. Even the boys are spellbound.

Youngsters arrived at that mature age of 4 quickly learn how to undress themselves. Dorothy Schaaf feels very self-sufficient las she goes about it for the afternoon nap.

For the general protection of the children there's a morning health inspection. Matron Virginia Giss examines 4-year-old Martha Rogers as Doris Huffman of the same age looks on.

The 13 youngsters in the laboratory school are learning to live together as they play games, hear stories, dance, sing, paint and watch movies. And through these recreational activities the students gain an insight into child psychology and physical welfare. In the daily routine of noon lunch, the before and after washing, the afternoon nap with its undressing and dressing, the young nurses learn how to establish good habits in children and practice the principles of nutrition, dietetics and health habits studied in their theory classes.

There's a right and wrong way of undressing a sleepy youngster. Miss Clark demonstrates to some of her students how to do it to cause the least annoyance.

All-important care of the teeth is apt to run into some early resistance. That seems the case as Student Mary Walker gives a lesson to 4-year-old Doris Huffman. But Doris soon learns the trick of brushing her own.

There is, of course, a difference of opinion about spinach in the school. Jay Baker doesn't agree at all with the dietetic theories about it, and Student Marjorie Chamberlain is having a little trouble convincing him.

Youngsters are taught the significance of arace as a spiritual note in the day's living and playing and getting along together. These two reverent 4-year-olds are Martha Rogers and Paul Boggs.

WOMEN are winning their way by the hundreds into the vital defense jobs of West Coast aircraft factories. In the Vultee shops alone, at Downey, Calif., there are now more than 350 women on the shop pay roll. These pictures show how they are doing men's work in every department except the center wing assembly, the pattern department and the foundry and hammer shop. For this work they are getting an average wage of 71 cents an hour, compared with about 44 cents in other industries before they began working on planes. The average age of women at Vultee is 2712 years. Three out of four are married and two-thirds of these have children.

Another assembly job in which young women with any mechanical bent quickly acquire efficiency. Note the smart shop "uniform" one of the girls wears, while the other prefers a more feminine blouse.

Operating drill presses in the drilling and reaming of various small parts for plane assemblies. Women have proven themselves so efficient and "durable" in repetitive operations requiring manual dexterity that company officials are convinced they could handle far more of the shop work in a greater emergency.

This strange adoption happened in the household of Mrs. Clara Smurr at Bell, Calif. Lady Linda, English setter, took over the kittens when she thought the family cat was neglecting them. Finally, by compromise, the kittens became a sort of joint property.

Winter resort style tip for the younger set. If it be a California or Florida beach, you'd look a long while for a smarter sun suit than this seersucker creation worn by 5year-old Connie Bell at a Los Angeles fashion show.

Here's a simple question: WOULD YOU PAY MORE FOR LESS, OR LESS FOR MORE? When you buy a funeral, insist upon peak value at whatever price you pay! Chambers must give more! Even more than appears in this advertisement. Because Chambers furnishes funerals to the U. S. Govt. Chambers value is outstanding—we believe the greatest in the City of Washington, one of the greatest in the world. To prove it—

CEMETERY SITE AND CLOSED, ALL COMPLETE)

This is the casket offered with 60 or more services, including Cemetery site. A new Chambers challenge Value!

In case of death call Chambers—the largest undertaker in Washington, whose reputation is ample proof that he is reliable. Chambers conducts more funerals in one month than most undertakers do in a year. These claims are facts—else we couldn't present them in this newspaper. Every word is the truth!

The 'Fightinest' Fish of the Seven Seas

The battle is at its height and Mr. Lerner is glad he's tightly strapped in that swivel seat on the ship's stern. Beads of perspiration dot his brow as he keeps a taught line and tries to guess the next lunge. His mate, Capt. Eddie Wall of Florida, steadies the seat.

FIGHTING a 500-pound broadbill swordfish with rod and reel is no sport for softies. Sportsmen who have landed a big broadbill with light tackle are a select class —fewer than 100 have achieved it. One of the hardest fish to hook, it is even tougher to hold as it flashes through the water at 60 miles an hour, twisting, diving and often leaping 10 feet in the air. Perhaps foremost among swordfish battlers is Michael Lerner, New York sportsman, who is seen in action here in the famed swordfish waters off Louisburg, Nova Scotia, home of a commercial fleet that harpoons thousands of pounds
