Teams of Russian Tanks Halt Moscow Drive, Soviet Reports

8.—Ferocious Soviet counterattacks led by strong tank teams have definitely halted the Nazi drive toward Moscow and have thrown the invaders onto the defensive in many sectors, the Russians told the world today.

This news was flashed over the Moscow radio by Gen. Rokossovsky, one of the commanders of Moscow's bitter defense for more than five weeks past, and was bolstered by accounts from other sources.

Informed quarters in London said it was reassuring, but expressed continuing concern over the Russian

Names Board, Calls On Tobin to Order Men Back on Job

BACKGROUND-President Roosevelt has hinted that he may ask anti-strike legislation and otherwise given evidence recently of stiffening attitude toward work stoppages that interfere with defense program. His last public exchange with union leader occurred 10 days ago when three appeals to John L. Lewis brought respite in strike of 53,000 C. I. O.-United Mine Workers in "captive" coal mines.

By JOHN C. HENRY

President Roosevelt "turned on the heat" yesterday to force acceptance by one of organized labor's most powerful unions of the orderly processes of the Railway Labor Act, While the action involved only a relatively minor strike-in its present stage only 60 employes of the Railway Express Agency-the President's attitude might be of great significance in the threatened walk. out of 350,000 operating trainmen

The display of White House firm. ness came in connection with the dispute involving the express agency and employes who are members of the Brotherhood of Teamsters and the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. Primarily a jurisdictional dispute between the two unions, the controversy had been partially resolved to a point where striking clerks had returned to their jobs, but about 60 members of the teamsters' union in Detroit were still out.

Emergency Board to Be Named. On Friday, Mr. Roosevelt was informed by the National Mediation Board, operating under the Railway Labor Act, that the teamsters union was "threatening to interrupt interstate commerce by a strike in eight major cities of the United States and adjoining communities. Sources close to the inquiry said The cities were Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Newark, New York, to give the grand jury information Philadelphia, San Francisco and

The union official's reply was: First, an explanation that he could not transmit such an order except by direction of his General Executive Board, which he could not assemble until Monday; second, that the President had been "misinformed" by the Mediation Board. which the teamsters consider "distinctly prejudiced"; third, that the jurisdictional issue should be settled by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, to which both unions are affiliated.

Price Control on Forum Gore of Tennessee to Discuss Ways

Of Combating Inflation in Radio Talk

Price control as a means of preventing disastrous inflation will be discussed by Representative Gore, Democrat, of Tennessee in the National Radio Forum at 9 p.m. tomorrow. The National Radio Forum is arranged by The Washington Star and broadcast over the network of the National Broadcasting Co. It is heard locally over WMAL. Representative Gore, a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, which has reported a modified, selective, price control bill to the House, favors the control of all prices, including wages and the prices of farm products and rents. This plan for an over-all ceiling is similar to that advocated by Bernard Baruch, head of the War Industries Board during the World Mr. Gore has offered a substitute bill for that advanced by the administration and supported by Leon Henderson, the President's choice for administrator of price control. ### Germans Claim Smash In Fortified Zone Of Kerch Peninsula

Flame-Throwers, Grenades Destroy 53 Casemates on Moscow Line, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press. BERLIN, Nov. 8 .- The Caucasusbound army of Adolf Hitler has smashed through six miles of a heavily fortified zone at the narrowest part of the Kerch Peninsula in the Crimea, the German high command announced today, and news dispatches said a flame thrower and grenade attack had broken across 53 Russian casemates on the front about Moscow. In other fighting an entire Russian cavalry division was declared in the official war report to have been destroyed south of the Yaila Mountains, which rim the Crimean Peninsula. Here the fighting was said to be proceeding in almost trackless country, with the Russians everywhere beaten but not yet rounded up. Murderous Fire Meets Nazis. The high command described the attack on the Kerch Peninsula as taking place "on the narrows leading to the Kerch isthmus"-evidently at the place where the peninsula narrows to a 11-mile wide neck of land just east of Feodosiya. Although the communique said pursuit of the "beaten enemy" was under way, other information here indicated the approaches to Kerch at the extreme eastern end of the peninsula were not wide open. Reports from the front described the Russian defenses as an almost impenetrable thicket of casemates and trenches strongly defended by a Russian rear guard which sprayed every square yard of the terrain with murderous fire. The Germans were silent, how ever, on what was happening in the strategic Crimean port of Sevastopol where for several days artillery and dive bombers have been harass ing the Soviet naval base. The German air force guarding against a Russian withdrawal by sea from the Crimea was reported to have effectively attacked Soviet transports. One of 8,000 tons was sunk off Yalta while others were bombed east of Kerch. A Rumanian submarine was credited with sinking continued cold.

Gen. Darque Declares Teamwork Will Decide Any War in Future

By the Associated Press. CAMDEN. S. C., Nov. 8 .- The armies of other nations are taking a leaf from Uncle Sam's book.

Co-operation between the air and ground forces-considered an outstanding factor in the success of German arms-has been developed by the United States Army so that others now learn from America, Maj. Gen. Herbert A. Dargue said here today.

He is the commander of the 1st Air Force, which has the task of protecting the vital Northeast. This teamwork, he said, will be the deciding factor in any war of the future, and the Army has striven with that goal always in mind. Ends Nation-Wide Tour.

To further this aim of combination of effort, Gen. Dargue, who has fust ended a Nation-wide tour of airplane factories and bases, suggested a regular schedule of largescale exercises like those in the Carolinas with the armies in the field at least four months of the ### more active southern sector seems the best assumption warranted by the facts as they are now available The southern situation is by no means as favorable to the Russians. The German advance on Rostov has been checked, probably by the marshes of the lower course of the Don as well as Russian resistance, but in the Crimea the Germans though apparently held before Sevastopol, seem to be advancing on the Kerch Peninsula and the battle of the Kerch Straits may soon be underway. German success in forcing these straits might-as previously pointed out-have far-reaching consequences. But that success is far from assured, and beyond lies a land of magnificent distances and increasingly bad communications. The worse this situation appears to the German high command, as it unfolds, the more the eyes must turn toward the only other possible route of eastward advance open to them: Turkey.

1. S. Weather Bureau To Be Split Into 7 Major Districts

Streamlined Organization Is Expected to Be in Operation January 1

By THOMAS R. HENRY. A far-reaching program of reorganization and decentralization of the United States Weather Bureau now is in process.

The organization is to be split into seven major districts with headquarters at Atlanta, Fort Worth, Kansas City, New York, San Francisco and Seattle.

In the course of its evolution the Weather Bureau has taken on many functions beyond general weather prediction, such as air weather forecasting, river and flood service, climatological observations, fire warnings, etc. Each of these services has had its own districts with overlapping boundaries and independent status. Each has reported to the central office at Washington which has served as the coordinating

New Set Up Explained.

Under the new set-up, it is explained by Weather Bureau Chief F. W. Reichelderfer, all the services will be coordinated at the regional headquarters and the Washington office will be the coordinating agency for the regions, rather than for the separate services. The new districts correspond to those already set up by the Civil Aeronautics Authority with which the Weather Bureau now is working in closest collaboration.

The following regional chiefs have been named: Atlanta, Glen Jefferson; Chicago, V. E. Jakl; Fort Worth, F. L. Hardy; Kansas City, J. A. Riley: New York, W. J. Moxom: San Francisco, E. H. Bowie; Scattle, J.

The boundaries of present forecast districts, Mr. Reichelderfer explained, will not be changed by the regionalization. There will be a considerable stream lining of the climatological service with systematic inspection of stations and a closer tie-up between the district office and co-operative observers and agencies.

Intensive Program.

An intensive program for estabhment of recording gauges and for collection and distribution of nin and snow records, in co-operaon with the War and Agriculture repartments, will be directed from regional offices.

Special units will be retained at bany, Macon, Cincinnati, Kansas ty. Fort Worth, Albuquerque, Portnd, Oreg., and San Francisco for udy of records and special hydrogical bulletins, but other functions "ill be transferred to the district headquarters and hydrological field inspectors will be attached to the regional liaison staffs.

The boundaries of present rive districts are not changed, Mr. Reichelderfer explained, but where such boundaries overlap the location of the river district center will determine the primary regional distribution. Each region will have a hydrological engineer who will coordinate activities of the sub stations.

The full regional organization, Mr. Reichelderfer said, is expected to be in full operation about January 1.

Paper Racket Suspect Held for Grand Jury

Isadore Nitowitz, 45, of the 1300 block of Tewkesbury place N.W. was ordered held for the grand jury under $1,500 bond when arraigned vesterday before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage on a charge of false pretenses, growing out of an alleged wholesale paper racket. He pleaded innocent and waived preliminary hear-

Lt. Joseph Shimon of the district attorney's investigating squad, said Nitowitz was accused of obtaining $1.500 from Sol. A. Simmons, Washington used-car dealer, with which to finance the wholesale paper purchases. According to Lt. Shimon Mr. Nitowitz gave Mr. Simmons a post-dated, worthless check for $2,000, which was to be cashed later, and the additional $500 was to be Mr. Simmons' profit.

The defendant, according to the district attorney's office, was engaged in a scheme for buying up paper rejected by the Government Printing Office and then reselling it at a subtantial profit. He interested a number of Washington business men in financing the proposition, it was said.

British Civilian Units Improved to Meet New Raid Threats

Defense Organizations Strengthened During Lull in Nazi Activities

By H. J. J. SARGINT,

LONDON, Nov. 8 .- We have been told by the Prime Minister and many members of the government that we may expect renewed heavy bembings this fall as soon as Hitler can spare the time and the bombers. Well, the country, although it has been showing a tendency to ignore shelters and to forget gas masks, is not likely to flinch.

I am quite certain the bombing of civilians will have no appreciable effect on the morale of the country. Since the great lull set in some months ago the organizing machinery of civil defense has been reviewed and I think improved. When the great raids were in progress, the principal care of the higher A. R. P. leaders, headed by Herbert Morrison, minister of home security, was to look after the wounded, to devise means for getting as few people killed as possible and to persuade citizens to evacuate to safer

Where the arrangements required, strengthening was in the direction of rehousing the homeless and of providing food and the means of cooking it to many whose kitchens and coal, gas or electricity supplies had been destroyed.

Small Loss of Life. The one thing that has stood out very clearly in the history of bombing raids is the enormous amount of material damage which is done as compared with the relatively small loss of life. I have seen the whole side of a street bombed to pieces, with each house rendered uninhabitable, with the water, gas and electric mains smashed, without a single human casualty. The inhabitants were either in public shelters or in their own cellars.

With the best will in the world on all sides it was sometimes extremely difficult to find temporary accommodations for the homeless. Rest centers were inadequate and the system of billeting people on householders had scarcely been touched outside the army.

Now, these aspects of civil defense have been greatly improved. In our own district we have available a rest center, consisting of two chapels, where adequate equipment is stored, where there can be housed roughtly six or seven hundred people. This presupposes that the rest centers themselves will not be bombed but at all events the preparations have been made and in a restricted area like the British Isles that is as much as can be done.

In addition to the actual premises required for the homeless, a large number of people have been looking after their stricken fellowcitizens. These rest center workers are largely handled by the women air raid wardens, who have done such admirable work both in the streets and at the air raid posts.

Fire Watchers Enrolled. A further important step has been taken in connection with the complete organization of the firefighting services. Everybody from 18 to 60 who is a British male subject must enroll for fire-watching unless he belongs to certain exempted categories-members of the fighting services and doctors are the principal classes exempted. Although women are not obliged to serve as firewatchers, a large number of them have voluntarily enrolled. Out of some 80 or 90 fire watchers about 30 are women and they take their turn on duty like the men. It is too early still to appraise the exact value of the firewatching service, but the first big raid will tell us how we stand.

In a recent set of instructions is sued for their guidance to air raid wardens, Herbert Morrison says that in the event of an invasion, which will be accompanied by air raids, the wardens will have the opportunity of acting as leaders and advisers to their fellow citizens. Their duty is to do all in their power to save life and property and that duty will continue in invasion. Moreover, a more important duty will be to give all the assistance a civilian can to fighting the enemy.

Should Avert Panic. Mr. Morrison tells the public that in the event of an invasion it must go to the police and the wardens for advice, and he tells the wardens to encourage the public to get to know them and to come to them for help and advice, thus creating the confidence that in an emergency they can look to the A. R. P. service for guidance and depend on it for leadership.

The instructions contain these words, which I think deserve to become memorable:

"People must be kept off the roads or open country and keeping them off may be one of your most important jobs in invasion. Outside the fighting areas 'carry on.' Fighting will not occur all over the country. If the life and work of this country were to stop because the Germans had effected a temporary lodgment at one point, they would have gained more advantage than all the air raids have given them. Take every opportunity of explaining these matters to the people of your area

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Nov. 8-Philip James Roosevelt, cousin of President Theodore Roosevelt and an investment banker and yachtsman, was found dead, apparently of a heart ailment, today on the beach near his home. A sailing dinghy in which he had gone for a sail was found floating, capsized, near the shore.

Detective Thomas Thornton of the Nassau County police said the boat had capsized and Mr. Roosevelt swam to the shore where he collapsed. Deputy medical examiner William Gourn said death apparently was caused by a heart at-

National Art Gallery To Show 25 Notable French Paintings

Pictures From Dale Collection Will Go On View Saturday

Twenty-five French paintings of the 19th century from the Chester Dale collection, New York, will he placed on view in the National Gallery of Art as an indefinite loan beginning Saturday. The trustees of the gallery have issued invitations to a private view Friday.

Special interest and importance attach to this loan not only because of the character and quality of the paintings but because they will fill a gap in the National Gallery's col-

The Chester Dale collection, which is world renowned, was formed to show the development of French painting from about 1800 to the present time with special reference to the works of the impressionists and post-impressionists, who, without discarding tradition added a new chapter thereto. The paintings thus will illustrate the course and directions of French painting from David to Cezanne, later painters being excluded by the gallery's regulation that works by none deceased less than 20 years can be displayed with the permanent collection.

The examples chosen by Mr. Dale from the Chester Dale collection will all be supreme examples and will illustrate individually or collectively the several great movements, such as neo-classicism, romanticism, realism, impressionism and post-Impressionism, which having their inception in France have followed one another in quick succession and vitally influenced the trend of art throughout the world.

The artists who will be represented are David, Delacroix, Corot, Daubigny. Courbet, Chavannes, Monticelli, Manet, Degas, Renoir, Pissaro, Fantin-Latour, Morisot and Ce-

The repeal of the sections which seep American merchant ships out of combat zones and belligerent ports does not necessarily mean that the authority will be used, Mr. Bloom said, but added:

Ninety-five per cent of the French people are pro-British, Mr. Hare said, notwithstanding the government's pro-German position. He added that the people "seem to cling to the belief that a British victory is their only hope, whereas the government feels the Germans will win the war.'

Mr. Hare said all French courts are operating just as they did before the Germans took over and that the court structure has been supplemented only by the Nazi military tribunals. "Even the tax collectors are still operating as before,"

The speaker was introduced by William Roy Vallance, assistant legal adviser in the State Department, who is president of the alumni organization. Other guests at the luncheon meeting included Dr. Manuel Fernandez Supervielle, president of the Havana Bar Association and honorary president of the Inter-American Bar Association, and Dr. James C. This system has been advocated for some time by some Police Court judges and others, who hold that police are required to spend too much time in court under the present system.

The new plan would set a mini-mum collateral for speeding and this collateral would be increased for each mile-per-hour the offender exceeded the limit. Any speeds over 50 miles an hour would be considered reckless driving and the offender would have to go to court.

The amount of collateral for a second or third speeding offense within a year would likewise be increased. In order to provide for this. it will be necessary to draft an amendment to the District Traffic

"After the emergency we go out of the picture, and you stay in." she told the representatives of women's groups. "It is important that you retain your identity.'

In reply to another question, she expressed the view that the wearing of uniforms by women civilian defense workers would increase the efficiency of their work. In England, she said, it has been found that uniforms give confidence to women defense workers.

She emphasized, however, that civilian defense uniforms should be worn only by those qualified for, and doing a job in the defense program. By the same token, the wearing of civilian defense insignia should mean, she said, that "you are doing something for the defense of the community and the country."

F. C. C. Stands Firm On Refusal to Hold Atlanta Hearing

Won't Be Influenced By Political Pressure, Talmadge Aide Told

By WILLIAM J. WHEATLEY. The Federal Communications Commission has crossed swords with the forces of Gov. Talmadge of Georgia. The commission yesterday made public a decision denying the Georgia School of Technology station the right to take testimony on renewal of its license by deposition in Atlanta after the commission had originally refused to hold the hearing proper in the Georgia city.

The commission at the same time made public correspondence between Chairman James Lawrence Fly and Arthur Lucas of Atlanta, in which Mr. Fly said that as long as he is commission chairman "decisions are going to be made upon their merits and not in accordance with purely political influence, threats and co-

Hatch Act Hearing Cited.

The commission said that Southern Broadcasting Stations, Inc., which has been operating the station under a management contract and which is intervening in the current proceedings, "suggests that a deposition session or hearing in Atlanta might be attended by 'confusion and disorder' in the light of circumstances surrounding a recent attempt of the Civil Service Commission to hold a hearing before one of its authorized examiners in Atlanta."

As a footnote the formal opinion carries an Associated Press story printed in The Star, telling of a "rough-and-tumble" hearing before a civil service examiner on alleged violations of the Hatch Act which had to be transferred from the Georgia State capitol because State officials refused police protection to a Federal building where United States marshals provided protection.

The commission said that in view of the previous unsuccessful attempt to have the hearing held in Atlanta, "and in view of all other facts herein, we are constrained to question the good faith of the request to take by deposition the testimony of all key witnesses in At-

Atlanta Hearing Refused.

The correspondence which preceded the opinion grew out of a telegram which Mr. Lucas, who, it was said at the commission's offices appears in the picture as a prospective operator of the station, with William K. Jenkins, sent to Chairman Fly. It protested the action of George Henry Payne, sitting as motions commission, in turning down the request to take depositions, and announced that copies of the message had been sent to members of the Georgia delegation in the House and Senate and to Chairman Clarence Lea of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and to Speaker Rayburn.

The applicants had originally been denied a petition to hold the hearing in Atlanta, one of the reasons for denial being "the great controversy which has surrounded the Governor, the State educational institutions and this radio station.' It was contended that the proposal to take depositions would have, in effect, been a transfer of the hearing to Atlanta.

Child Adjustment Topic Of Marriage Institute

Posters to Be Displayed.

Shouting the theme, posters showing two small children gazing wistfully at the Capitol dome will appear today on lamp posts all over the city. Four thousand of these will be along the main thoroughfares. Seventeen hundred others will be placed on counters, in windows, on bulletin boards of the business establishments, churches and schools: 6,500 will be put in Government offices and corridors, and 5,000 will be displayed Senate May Take Up through the courtesy of the smaller stores and business firms in the suburban areas.

The story, with different symbol, will be told by Community Chest flags and posters which will appear on more than 3,000 streetcars and buses on the day the campaign opens. In Prince Georges County, Md., street banners will remind suburban residents of the drive as it applies to Hyattsville, Mount Rainier and Bladensburg.

Beginning at midnight tomorrow. the poster design and slogan will be stenciled on sidewalks in strategic places where the hurrying crowds of shoppers and office workers cannot miss them. This work will be done by three crews of three men in the Senate tomorrow on the call from the Department of Vehicles

Chest Drives Close In Nearby Virginia With Quotas Unfilled

Campaigns to Go On In Both Arlington And Alexandria

The Alexandria (Va.) Community Chest last night announced it had met about 82 per cent of its campaign goal of $45,000 when the drive for funds officially closed Friday

In Arlington County, Va., where the Community Chest drive closed county, reported yesterday. about two weeks ago, it was announced contributions and pledges now amount to $16,064.86, representing about 56 per cent of its $28,500 quota. The returns are incomplete, however, and Campaign Chairman Conrad Reid said he fully expects the goal to be met when all turns are in.

Both chests are conducted independent of the Washington chest.

The social service agency investi-Alexandria chest officials were gated jubilant over the amounts reported when their campaign closed, Chairman Albert A. Smoot said last Alexander said. "The father was ill year's campaign was only 50 per cent completed when the drive was officially ended and that $14,000 additional came in later.

Expects to Pass Goal.

For this reason, he said, much more can be expected from late returns and additional canvassing, placing the drive "over the top" in The funds already Alexandria. raised this year exceed the total amount raised in 1940 by $8,000. Mr. Smoot declared.

Mr. Reid said this is the first time in three years the Arlington chest has done so well. Eight areas have vet to make their first reports and nine others have already reported collections and pledges in excess of their quota. Among the captains who have already exceeded their quotas are Frank T. Tracy, Mrs. J. Clements Service League. Owens, L. R. Conley and Mrs. Halsey Smith of Area No. 1, 120 per cent B. F. In Alexandria, Mrs. W. W. Fitch made the highest collections based on her quota of $100. Her collections amounted to 225 per cent, although other workers had higher assignments to meet.

Chairman Smoot singled out some divisions of that chest for praise. The industrial division has raised $3,430 from 900 of about 1.800 employes of the Naval torpedo plant and the other employes are being solicited, he said. The public affairs division, headed by Robert C. Whitton, has raised per cent of its quota; Dr. Charles V. Amole, medical and dental division, 180 per cent, and Claude L. Hoover, drugs and restaurants, 95 per cent. Under the general solicitation division Mr. Smoot commended the work of J. Randolph F. Davis, captain of the second ward, which was the first to go over the top with 165 per cent: Mrs. Maxwell Hamilton, with 137 per cent, and Mrs. J. Truman Streng, 150 per cent, both in the first ward; Mrs. Albert Miller, 87 per cent, and Mrs. W. B. Beniamin, 113 per cent, both in the ward, and Mrs. Benton Booging 119 per cent, sixth ward.

Posters to Be Displayed.

Shouting the theme, posters showing two small children gazing wistfully at the Capitol dome will appear today on lamp posts all over the city. Four thousand of these will be along the main thoroughfares. Seventeen hundred others will be placed on counters, in windows, on bulletin boards of the larger business establishments, churches and schools: 6,500 will be put in Government offices and corridors, and 5,000 will be displayed through the courtesy of the smaller stores and business firms in the sub-

The same story, with different symbol, will be told by Community Chest flags and posters which will appear on more than 3,000 streetcars and buses on the day the campaign opens. In Prince Georges County, Md., street banners will remind suburban residents of the drive as it applies to Hyattsville, Mount Rainier and Bladensburg.

Beginning at midnight tomorrow, the poster design and slogan will be stenciled on sidewalks in strategic of shoppers and office workers cannot miss them. This work will be done by three crews of three men from the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

During the week of November 16 approximately 100,000 streetcar passengers will flash weekly passes on which have been inscribed the poster desgin and the slogan. The Miss Alexander recalled that a same will appear in corners of comteacher in the public schools had mercial display advertisements in

Duke U. President Sees Most Colleges Hit by War Crisis

District Alumni Honor Dr. Robert L. Flowers At Annual Meeting

Most American colleges expect decreased enrollment during the current school year, with probably more drastic reductions in the future, due to the defense emergency, Dr. Robert L. Flowers, president of Duke University, said here last night.

Dr. Flowers, addressing the annual meeting of the District Duke Alumni Association, said a recent report indicated prospects of shrinking attendance this year at 330 out of 503 institutions included in a survey. Anticipated decreases range from 5 to 20 per cent, and even more in the case of a few professional schools, he added.

Stressing that colleges are ready to make sacrifices in the interest of defense, Dr. Flowers pledged his institution's fullest support of the national interest.

Sees Future Dark.

"Few persons realize how dark is our future, how great the danger of losing our freedom and liberty." he declared. "Unless we are willing to make great sacrifices our fate may be the same as that which has befallen many of the countries of Europe. And we must remember that all the sacrifices we make would be in vain if the peace that eventually will come is the sort that breeds another war. We must find some way of assuring peace for many years to come."

As examples of Duke's contributions to defense. ### American Guide Week Celebrated by Writers

America this week will observe American Guide Week, dedicated to the efforts of the W. P. A. writers' program which have resulted in a 51-volume series of State and territorial guides, the last of which will be published November 20.

The week has been indorsed by President Roosevelt. It marks the culmination of an effort started in 1935 to gather and publish all the important historical, economic and cultural facts about the States. Several thousand anonymous authors, working for the W. P. A. program, have compiled and written the books, each of which was sponsored by a State or local organization and printed by private publishers.

"Take Pride in Your Country" has been selected as the slogan for the week. During this period, Americans, through radio broadcasts, public addresses and exhibits, will be urged to refresh their knowledge of their country. Plans for the celebration have been made by the W. P. A. in co-operation with a committee of publishers and the American Booksellers' Association. "It is a tribute to American energy and resourcefulness that the W. P. A. Writers' Program, with the aid of private citizens and public bodies, and the use of the skills of unemployed writers and research workers," President Roosevelt wrote Mrs. Florence S. Kerr, assistant W. P. A. commissioner, "could have planned and brought to early completion a guide to each State, principal city and major region, including the far-flung territories of Alaska and Puerto Rico."

'Immediate Action' On Price Control Takes 100 Days

House Committee Finally Reports Measure Which Member Calls 'Nonentity'

By the Associated Press.

Exactly 100 days after President Roosevelt asked Congress for immediate action, the House Banking Committee formally reported yesterday a price control bill which Chairman Steagall said contained "all provisions necessary at this time" to combat inflationary prices. But Representative Kopplemann, Democrat, of Connecticut, another member, denounced the mesaure as a "nonentity" that was "no damn good" and predicted its defeat in the House unless it was changed. The committee decided last Saturday on all major provisions of the bill, and the last week was spent in putting these decisions into legal language and drafting a report to

In brief, the bill would authorize the president to appoint a price administrator who could fix "ceilings" on all commodities, goods and Federal courts and would be subfine and two years imprisonment.

Exempted from price controls would be wages and salaries and mon carriers and public utilities. A principal point of controversy is a provision which would prevent fixing a ceiling on farm products

The administration had proposed that no farm price ceiling lower than 110 per cent of parity be permitted, and there were reports among House members that President Roosevelt would veto the bill if it were enacted in the form approved by the House committee. The measure is not expected to come up on the House floor for a week or more.

To Continue G. W.'s Lecture Series

Other Programs Listed At University During Coming Week

Dr. Lowell Joseph Ragatz, professor of modern European history at George Washington University, will continue the university's "World of Today" lecture series when he speaks on "Ger nany and the New World Order" in the hall of government at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday.

He will follow this with a lecture on "France in Ruin" November 19 and a discussion of "The Russian Riddle" November 26. He succeeds Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser, dean of university students, who opened the lecture series, and Dr. William Crane Johnstone, dean of the junior college, who concluded his series on the Far East last

Dr. Ragatz is a specialist in 19th and 20th century European history and modern imperialism. He has been an editor for the American Historical Association for 12 years and is now completing his fourth work, a two-volume study of Europe since 1789. The lecture series is open to the public.

Broadcast Arranged.

Dean Kayser will participate in a round-table discussion on "The War of Nerves" over a Mutual Broadcasting System hookup Thursday. The discussion is presented by the Medical Society of the District in co-operation with the National Selective Service System. Prof. Henry Grattan Doyle, dean of Columbian College and professor of romance languages, will go his address Saturday. Friday he Moon Holton. will address the George Washington Alumni Club in New York.

Most People Look Hungry. My informant, who last 23 pounds while living under Nazi dominance, told me that most people in France look hungry. "There is no milk except for babies and people past 85. Everyone is supposed to get two eggs a month, but is lucky if he gets one. German soldiers go to the farms and pay up to five francs for an egg, and this explains the short-

"The conduct of the Germans toward respectible Frenchwomen has been fairly good, but there is the case of three drunken German soldiers who assaulted the 80-year-old concierge of their apartment house. I believe that one of them was punished.

"Some of the houses in the redlight district of Paris have the sign 'Forbidden to Germans.' But there are some places opened by special Nazi request for Germans only. The latter are populated by derelicts of all nations, including German and Italian refugee women.

> A note should be made of the Mexican custom of arranging Manger Scenes, or Nacimientos in the home. These are illumined and left open in windows, so that passers-by may see them. A favorite stroll on Christmas Eve takes one by many lighted windows, to see the imagination and loving care which has gone into the Nacimientos.

> These are the joy of the children for weeks previous to Christmas. From year to year the children gather together the little images of the Holy Family, the animal figures . in wood, straw, clay or porce-. and all the other things needed. They are given the drawing room or the sala in which to work, and sometimes they build mountain ranges with many villages, the Wise Men coming from afar off, led by the Star, progressing daily nearer the little manger in Bethlehem, until the Eve of Christmas, when they are brought into the glowing manger. Sheep graze on the hillsides, and the shepherds watch their flocks.

Naturally the villages created by Mexican children take on Mexican characteristics. The peasants are in Mexican dress; sometimes one can see Mexican tortilleras at work not far from the holy birthplace. But it is an activity of creation and devotion which the children carry out, far more imaginative and absorbing than the simple trimming of a Christmas tree.

Gifts are personal. Hand-made gifts are still specially prized. Children's toys are of great variety, and show all the creative arts of the native Mexican, from delicate toys made of glass and pottery, to the sturdy and amusing straw toys which Mexican children love, as do small Americans their "rag dolls."

GUADALAJARA, Nov. 8.-This, the second city in Mexico, with a population of over 200,000, began an experiment last spring which has proven so successful that there is every prospect of its being carried It started with somebody suggesting that, in order to make school children traffic conscious, it would be a good plan to let them handle the city's downtown traffic from 9 to 5 each Saturday. The children first were given training in their schools by city police, girls as well as boys.

Each Saturday enough pupils are time schedule made out, so that each child volunteering can have a 15-minute turn at handling traffic. The ages range from about 10 to 14. The child policeman stands in the middle of the narrow street, blows a real policeman's whistle, waves his free arm in a prescribed manner and has the time of his life signaling to buses, pedestrians and motor cars, while the regular policeman loafs on the sidewalk in the shade and keeps an eye on the general

The annual fall run of amberjack is now in full swing at Bermuda, and many large specimens have been taken on rod and reel within Great Sound and Hamilton Harbor. Two years ago a 141-pounder was caught by handline along the Front street docks in Hamilton.

OBJECTOR LEAVES FOR CAMP DUTY—Stanley D. McNail, a conscientious objector to military service, prepares to depart for duty at the Buck Creek (N. C.) Camp for draft registrants so classified. ### Five From District Go to Conscientious Objector Camps

One Has Change of Heart And Is Transferred To Regular Service

By THOMAS C. HARDMAN.
Washington's selective service organization has assigned five conscientious objectors to duty in civilian work camps, and one man who had a change of heart after reaching camp is now in regular Army service, records at draft headquarters disclosed yesterday.

Overlooked in the publicity given activities of the District selective service program, these men have left the city one at a time since midsummer to report for camp duty of national importance in scattered sections of the country.

The latest to be called up for service was Stanley D. McNail, who was escorted to the Union Station, under procedure similar to that accompanying departure of selectees, Thursday night to board a train to Buck Creek, near Marion, S. C.

Other "CO's" to leave Washington and their camp assignments include Seymour Etkin, Buck Creek: Ira E. Powell, Merom, Ind.; Robert A. Holzhauer, Stoddard, N. H., and George W. Fielder, who was transferred to Indiana for induction prior to reporting to Buck Creek.

One Man Changes Mind.

The fifth man actually departing from Washington was assigned to Patapsco (Md.) camp, but after a few weeks he applied for transfer to regular military service. His name was not given out by draft officials. This procedure is not unusual, a number of cases having occurred elsewhere in the country in recent months, and national headquarters officials have reminded conscientious objectors from time to time that the transfers can be arranged without difficulty.

Another Washingtonian, whose name also was withheld, was placed in the conscientious objector class but just before he was to report for eamp duty changed his mind and asked to be placed in Class I-A-O, the classification given men who are agreeable to non-combatant military duty. He is scheduled to be inducted into the Army later this month.

Still another District objector who had been notified of his pending assignment to a camp has an appeal pending before the board of appeals for a Class II deferment on the grounds that he is essential in his present occupation. The appeal was filed by the Government appeal agent of the registrant's local board.

William E. Leahy, District director of selective service, yesterday pointed out that there are several Army units to which men who are opposed to bearing arms but agreeable to non-combatant service may be assigned. These units include the Medical Department, Quartermaster Corps, Chemical Warfare Service, the Signal Corps, the Corps of Engineers and the Corps Area Service Commands and War Department Overhead.

Commenting that draft regulations permit classification of conscientious objectors in either one of two groups, depending on whether they are opposed to any service under military direction, or whether they are merely opposed to combatant service, Mr. Leahy said: "It is believed that many misinformed registrants who now main-

"It is believed that many misinformed registrants who now maintain they should be placed in Class IV-E (objectors opposed to any service under military direction) would be available for classification in Class I-A-O if they clearly understood the type of service that would be required of them as noncom-batants in the armed forces."

The War Department has issued a detailed circular on the units to which noncombatants may be assigned.

Objectors are called up for camp duty as their names are reached on regular selective service board lists. Cases of a number of District men whose claims for a C. O. rating have been questioned by ocal boards are pending with the Justice Department.

Japanese Situation Threatens U. S. With Two-Ocean Fight

Kurusu Mission Seen as Means of Preventing War In East Despite Hitler's Desire For Tokio's Aid

By Felix Morley.

be expected therefrom, has begun in the undeclared war in which Germany and the United States each define the other as the aggressor. But shooting, unless Congress gives a more precise mandate for attack as distinguished from defense. is likely for a time to remain sporadic. At the moment, hostilities between the United States and Germany continue to be most pronounced in the diplomatic

Some of the advantages in this diplomatic struggle lie with the United States. In Latin America, for instance, this country continues to gain ground, though not without difficulty and continued Nazi resistance. In Japan, however, the situation is decidedly the other way. There the scales of public opinion and official policy are being steadily tipped further in Germany's favor. And if our diplomacy is accomplishing anything to offset this trend, the results are not yet percep-

It is well over a year since, on September 27, 1940, the famous tripartite accord among the governments of Germany, Italy and Japan was signed in Berlin, on the part of Japan by Ambassador Saburo Kurusu, now on his way

Under the first articles of this treaty: "Japan recognizes and respects the leadership of Germany and Italy in establishment of a new order in Europe." Under the second article: "Germany and Italy recognize and respect the leadership of Japan in the establishment of a new order in Greater East Asia." Under the third article, now most to the fore. the three powers "undertake to assist one another with all political, economic and military means when one of the three contracting powers is attacked by a power at present not involved in the European war or in the Chinese-Japanese conflict.

Ups and Downs in Relations.

Since this treaty was signed there have been both ups and downs in the relations between Japan and the United States. There have been times when it quite possible that President Roosevelt might negotiate a settlement of the Sino-Japanese War, on terms which would favor China, yet still result in repudiation of the Axis alliance by Tokio.

But since the end of July, when Washington ordered termination of all commercial relations with Japan, such hopes have been feeble. For the past three months the drift toward complete rupture between Japan and the United States has steadily accelerated.

The great majority of Americans, it would seem, have only recently begun to realize that war with Japan, as well as war with Germany, is daily becoming more of a probability. The trend, however, has not gone unnoticed in Berlin. The expectation that this country can be involved in large-scale war in the Pacific is one of the trumps which Hitler has long held. And the recklessness with which American ships are now being torpedoed off Iceland is indication that the Fuehrer thinks the time for disclosing this card is now at hand.

Further evidence of Germany's reliance on Japanese assistance was given in the official statement on the Greer and Kearny incidents issued from Berlin on November 1. This stated categorically that in both cases the American destroyers shot first "and that therefore the United States had attacked Germany." That statement, German officials hastened to add, did not mean that the Reich intends immediately to invoke the third article of the Axis alliance with

Japan, but was "for the record." Statement "for the Record."

In view of the wording of the treaty of September 27, 1940, the disclaimers from Berlin did little to soften the ominous sound of that statement "for the record." In the last analysis not Berlin, but

Tokio, will decide whether or not American participation in the battle of the Atlantic constitutes an "attack on Germany under the terms of the tri-partite treaty. And the Japanese decision, of course, will not be of a judicial nature, but will be determined primarily by the Tokio government's estimate of whether Shooting, with the tragic results to it can, or cannot, safely risk war with the United States. Germany certainly wants nothing more than to see this country at war with Japan. But there is still a strong Japanese element which trusts that this outcome may be averted. It is that element which sponsors the special mission of Ambassador Kurusu to this country, made by trans-Pacific clipper "in view of the very serious situation prevailing."

War between Japan and the United States will not be averted, however, unless steps calculated to achieve that end are willingly explored by both parties during the visit of the Kurusu mission. For the factors pointing toward hostilities in the Pacific are too impelling to be disposed of without greater effort for an agreement than has as yet been made.

There is, in the first place the progressive deterioration of Russian resistance. The loss by the Soviet of its most vital industrial centers, and the reports that reserves are now being drained out of Siberia, alike indicate that the psychological moment for Japan to strike at Vladivostok is near at hand. Of the desire of the present Japanese government to move against Russia in the East there is little doubt. Fear that the step would precipitate war with the United States is one of the principal restraining factors.

Fear Less Pronounced.

That fear, however, tends to become less pronounced as the American Navy gets more involved in an undeclared war with Germany. The two-ocean fleet is not yet fully in being and Japanese extremists, at least, maintain that if sufficient American warships can be tied up in the Atlantic, their navy can dominate the Western Pacific, even if British, Netherlands and Chinese forces are allied with the United States.

There is room for infinite professional argument on the comparative naval strengths and fighting qualities. But since the pro-Axis government of Gen. Tojo assumed office, on October 18, there is no longer room for the pleasant assumption that Japan is indisposed to measure naval strength with the United States. On the contrary there is all too much reason to believe that the group now formally in power would welcome a showdown before the American defense

The present complete rupture of all commercial relations between Japan and the United States is a further condition conducive to war. All trade with this country being at a standstill, the strong argument of Japanese business against war with America also is stilled. And the argument for drastic action to seize raw material sources now unavailable from the United States is simultaneously strengthened.

It is now some months since friendly Ambassador Nomura warned the Department of State that an oil embargo must inevitably encourage a Japanese move toward Singapore, where Gen. Wavell, commander of the British Indian Army, has now significantly arrived.

Situation Called Grim. The grim character of the Far Eastern situation is not yet generally understood in this country. Public attention has been almost altogether concentrated on the European scene. And as long as the Russian resistance can be maintained effectively, with or without aid of British expeditionary forces, a further Japanese outburst is doubtless improbable. But if military collapse occurs in Russia it seems inevitable that the Far East will spring immediately into streamer

In Washington there is full realization of the danger. That realization helps to explain why the President refused to be stampeded over the sinking of the Reuben James. Outright war with Germany now, as urged so freely by the more vocal section of our intelligentsia. would be welcomed by Hitler as the "attack" conducive to bringing in Japan. And because war in the Atlantic would weaken our defense in the Pacific, the development would also be welcomed by the militarist group now firmly in the

As the zero hour approaches, there is an evident disposition in Washington to

Guard's End of an Era

Mass Conscription and Machine War Portend Change in Its Role

By Richard L. Stokes.

Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding the 29th Division (at right), checks an artillery piece during recent maneuvers. Gen. Reckord is slated for retirement because of age. -Star Staff Photo.

NOW THAT some form of mass con-scription is likely to remain a longterm policy, a question of universal moment is the fate of the National Guard. This body has drawn its reason for being from the historic distinction between organized and unorganized American militia. The theory of the Selective Service Act is that of eventually placing the bulk of the country's qualified manpower on an organized basis. As a result of the draft, together with the relentless march of specialized machine war, must the National Guard cry out with the Prince of Denmark that "Hamlet's occupation's gone?"

For more than a century and a half, since the Minute Men of the Revolution, its occupation has been to carry the torch of military tradition. Through fair and foul weather, often in the face of hostile public sentiment, it has devoted to the task no small sacrifices of energy, leisure Wars, it was counted on to bear the chief brunt of first-line national protection. Has the evolution of arms brought its ancient role to an end at last-in fact if not yet in form?

Portents of Oblivion.

Visible above the horizon are certain portents in the affirmative. The most conspicuous has been a plague of official mortality sweeping through the topmost ranks. The National Guard, when its induction into Federal service began last year, consisted of three cavalry and 18 infantry divisions. A fourth cavalry division, the 21st of New York, was ready for assembling, but was never activated. The organization had no lieutenant generals, though there are nine in the Regular Army. Its high command listed 22 major generals.

One of these, Maj. Gen. John F. Williams, was and is chief of the National Guard Bureau of the War Department. The others were troop commanders of the 21 National Guard divisions. The three cavalry divisions were broken up. Maj. Gen. Edward J. Stackpole, jr., commander of the 22d Cavalry Division, accepted a reduction in rank to brigadier general and transfer to the 28th Infantry Division. Of the 20 divisional commanders remaining, nine already have been relieved of active field duty, and at least three others are scheduled Putting aside the disbanded cavalry divisions, seven vacancies resulted at the head of National Guard divisions. The sharpest concern of its champions today rises from the fact that the places were filled, not by promotions from National Guard officers, but in every instance by the appointment of Regular Army menmost of them apparently jumped up for the purpose from the rank of colonel. This development may lend color to a charge that the Regular Army's design is to make a clean sweep of National Guard divisional commanders, and seize on their double stars for its own officers.

The Displaced Generals. Grounds alleged for depriving the nine major generals of field command include age, ill health, physical disability and incompetence. Records of the National Guard Bureau show that six have officially quit the service, two have accepted transfers to post commands. known in military parlance as "housekeeping jobs," and one has been moved to a military board. Following is a list of divisional commanders displaced or transferred to non-combat duty, with the State or States supplying the regiments in their units:

Maj. Gen. James E. Edmonds, 23d Cavalry Division, disbanded (Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, Tennessee and Wisconsin).

Maj. Gen. William K. Herndon, 24th Cavalry Division, disbanded (Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Washington and Wyoming). Gen. Herndon died soon after he was retired. Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh, 34th Division (North and South Dakota). Maj. Gen. Ralph E. Truman, 35th Division (Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska).

Maj. Gen. Claude V. Birkhead, 36th

Maj. Gen. Walter P. Story, 40th Division (California, Nevada and Utah). Maj. Gen. Morris B. Payne, 43d Division (Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine

Maj. Gen. Clifford R. Powell, 44th Division (New Jersey and New York). Three further divisional heads whose 27th Division (New York); Maj. Gen. | Edward Martin, 28th Division, Pennsylvania), and Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, 29th Division (Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and Pennsylvania). In this connection there should be mentioned Brig. Gen. Walter B. Pyron, commander of the 56th Brigade, because this is the only surviving horse cavalry unit of the sort in the National Guard. He was relieved during maneuvers and assigned to Washington as an expert on petroleum products in the office of the Undersecretary of War.

Of the seven newly appointed heads of National Guard divisions, six are graduates of West Point and five were listed as colonels in the Official Army Register published January 1. Four are still brigadier generals, but probably will be advanced a grade in the next promotion list. They are Brig. Gen. Russell P. Hartle, 34th Division; Maj. Gen. William money. Prior to the two World H. Simpson, 35th Division; Brig. Gen. Fred L. Walker, 36th Division; Maj. Gen. Daniel I. Sultan, 38th Division; Maj. Gen. Ernest J. Dawley. 40th Division: Brig. Gen. John H. Hester, 43d Division, and Brig. Gen. James I. Muir, 44th Division. Pyron was succeeded by Brig. Gen. Charles H. Gerhardt, also a Regular Army officer and West Point graduate.

attorney of San Antonio and the latter a vice president of the Gulf Oil Co. But the chief center of disturbance cycloned about the head of Gen. Truman, an insurance man of Kansas City and first cousin of Senator Truman. Gen. Truman, who was relieved of command during maneuvers by Lt. Gen.

Ben Lear of the 2d Army, accepted an appointment as head of its Reclassification Board, but resigned in wrath, according to report, when he was forbidden to attend a farewell parade planned in his honor by the 35th Division at Camp Robinson. Into the fray rushed Senator Clark of Missouri, who won a commission as captain at an officers' training camp in 1917 and brought about his advancement to lieutenant colonel and then colonel by dint of joining a National Guard Gen. Lear had wired Senator Clark that Gen. Truman resigned after "splendid and outstanding service" with the 35th Division. To which the Senator "If his services were as satisfactory as you indicate, why did you personally relieve him of command? It is, of course, the old Army game, which does not intend to leave a National Guard officer. no matter how efficient, in command of a National Guard division.

"You are trying to blame the tactical defeat which your army suffered (in the Louisiana maneuvers) on Truman and various other National Guard officers, which is exceedingly unfair. You should retire yourself rather than make Gen. Truman the goat."

The War Department's Reply. The War Department's reply to such accusations is that the two biggest fish caught as yet in its "revitalization" net were Regular Army men and veritable 'whales." One was no less a personage than Lt. Gen. Daniel Van Voorhis, who on July 16 was relieved of command of the Caribbean defense area and Canal Zone and assigned to a "housekeeping job" at the head of the 5th Corps Area. It is true that he is 63 years old and had completed the regular three years of an overseas' tour. The other is Maj. Gen. Jay L. Benedict, a former superintendent of West Point, who on October 11 was relieved of command of the 4th Army Corps and placed in charge of the 9th Corps Area. In addition, it is declared that there have been changes of command in all the nine Army corps during the last year. and that six of the cases, all involving Regular Army major generals, were due to retirement or transfer as a result of physical disability. The War Department finally calls attention to its widespread and continuing removal or transfer of Regular Army officers of lesser grades because of age, physical disability their country, at a good deal of expense of time and trouble." Through no fault of their own, he continued, "they have been found ineligible for combat duty in the serious emergency with which we are now confronted, and which requires more difficult qualifications and of a higher grade, perhaps, than we have ever had in war before." Some Pathetic Cases. He affirmed that the War Department is seeking to handle the changes "with absolute fairness." but admitted that

"there have been some very pathetic cases." One was that of Lt. Col. Christion Heidt of the 44th Division, who on October 11 was found slumped over an automobile steering wheel in his garage, dead of carbon monoxide poisoning. With two of his three sons in the Army, he had just been notified of his relief from duty at Fort Dix.

The War Department's difficulty is that on the one hand it is compelled to placate National Guard officers of high degree because of their political influence, and on the other is convinced that in modern warfare it is unwise and unsafe to intrust the command of units as large as a division to part-time soldiers. This persuasion is reflected by the replacement of National Guard divisional commanders in every case by profes-

A survey of the 20 National Guard major generals who hold or recently have held troop commands reveals that only one of them is a career soldier, though all saw active service in the first World War, six were decorated for heroism and six have been graduated from courses in such special institutions as the Infantry School, the Command and General Staff School and the Army War

The One Exception.

The exception is Maj. Gen. Haskell, a graduate of West Point, who resigned in 1934 after service of 33 years in the Regular Army to accept appointment as commander of the New York National Guard—a post carrying impressive social and political prestige. He is now 63 years old and almost one year beyond the new age limit of 62 years set for major generals commanding divisions. But regulations make it possible to retain such National Guard officers from six months to a year after they reach retirement age.

Among the other 19 are five lawyers, five bankers, two insurance men, two State adjutant generals, one gold miner, one capitalist, one oil operator, one newspaper publisher and one magazine contributor and war correspondent. They range from rich to poor and in age from

The War Department's handling of National Guard major generals is only one of many omens in a silent but determined revolution that has been at work. From time immemorial an organ of the several States, the National Guard stands today as an integral component of the United States Army. It is no longer commanded by the Governors of the various commonwealths, but by President Roosevelt. Its State allegiances have been thrust into abeyance before a primary allegiance to the Federal establishment. It is now a commonplace that guardsmen may be called to serve outside the boundaries of their respective States and even beyond the continental limits of the United States, provided the post lies within the Western Hemisphere.

Chose Own Officers.

Thus far, in general, it has been the policy not to disrupt State formations, but the War Department undoubtedly has authority to do so. In fact, this has already been accomplished, over bitter protests from the States involved, in the case of the National Guard's three proudest units-the 22d, 23d and 24th Cavalry Regiments. Some of these, in metropolitan cities, contained mounted troops of ancient lineage and great social and political influence. In half a dozen cases, it was thought diplomatic to retain such units as cavalry reconnaissance regiments. Otherwise, the divisions were broken up and scattered to the four winds, for anti-aircraft and coast or field artillery service.

An old and democratic prerogative of the National Guard was that of choosing its own officers. Even now, in some States, it has been the custom to elect company officers—that is, captains and first and second lieutenants. In higher grades, the rule of seniority frequently prevailed, with appointments made by the Governors. In case a division represented two or more States—for instance, the 35th, 38th or 43d-the officers eligible

Growing Need of U.S. Supplies Confronting Britain and Soviet

Factories Must Turn Out More Arms for Axis Foes Even at Expense of America's Defense. Observer Declares

By Constantine Brown.

Now that the United States is in the | midst of an undeclared war, her military and naval experts are reckoning their assets and liabilities for the fight that lies ahead.

The United States is fighting the Axis with the support of two determined, but sorely tried, partners, Great Britain and Soviet Russia. The fighting coefficient of both is high and they are determined to see this war through regardless of cost. But they are forced to rely on the United States as their chief source of supply of war material of all kinds, from small arms to tanks and planes, of food and of petroleum and all its

Since last May we have sent Britain the utmost help. We have filled the British larder for at least eight months to come, and the British Army in the United Kingdom now is sufficiently well supplied to meet any emergency. Thanks to the number of planes we have sent to England, the British high command can look confidently to the immediate future. The British general staff no longer is concerned over the possibility of a German invasion this year and Nazi air raids no longer inspire the fear they once did. Not only has Britain all she needs to beat off Reichsmarshal Goering's air armada, but she can also retaliate on a large scale.

Of course, not all Britain's war strength has come from the United States. British factories are working overtime and their contribution to Britain's defense is far better than was anticipated. The Anglo-American war industrial effort has secured the stronghold of Britain herself, but the problem is much broader than that.

Near East Campaign Expected.

Preparation must be made for the defense of all those strategic points in the British Empire where the Germans are likely to deliver an attack; accordingly, much of the British and American war production is going to Egypt and the Near East, where the Germans are expected to launch their next campaign before the year ends. If Britain's problem were merely the defense of her islands we could breathe more freely and think ahead to the time when the Allies will have a sufficiently strong army to invade the European continent.

For the present, the British must think in terms of the coming bitter fight-far more fierce, probably, than anything they have hitherto experienced-on a front from Tobruk to Iran. Judging from the past the Nazi high command will not embark lightly on a campaign which may hold the entire fate of Adolf Hitler's Third Reich: the Nazis will muster every ounce of their strength to crush the British in the Near East. That means the British imperial forces must have huge quantities of war material to withstand the Nazi onslaught.

The British imperial forces now standing between Libya and Iran are fairly homogeneous and well equipped. They are handicapped, however, by the fact that reinforcements of all kindsmen and materials-must come long distances across the sea. The Germans, on the other hand, will have the advantage of operating along interior lines of communication, except perhaps at the very start of the campaign, when they will have to establish bridgeheads in Syria or Turkey.

Once these landing operations are completed the task of maintaining communications between the zone of combat and the rear will be far easier than that of the British. An extensive network of railways now connects the Danube River, which can carry war supplies to Greek and Yugoslav ports, with Axis industrial areas, which extend from France to the Carpathians.

Replenishment Difficult.

To help meet the British supply problems, the United States now is massing arms and ammunition in Red Sea and Persian Gulf ports. These supplies will be of vital assistance when Hitler starts his Near Eastern offensive, but their replenishment, once the drain on them begins and the Stukas become active in that area, will be a difficult task. In coming months, therefore, the disregard all risk and convoy merchantmen to all parts of the British Empire where Hitler is being fought. American factories will have to devote most of their time to manufacture of armament for the British, even if it means curtailing supplies of American forces.

British imperial armies will need tanks and planes in increasing numbers if they are to stop the Nazis from reaching the Mosul oil fields. Responsible quarters in Washington believe this country can sunply the British in the Near East in spite of the German U-boats and Stukas, in spite of all the difficulties the Axis may put in our way. Although the Mediterranean route will be unsafe, the Indian Ocean route will remain open.

Britain's situation in the Near East is delicate, but Russia's is much more so Daily reports from the war front tell of whole factories and their staffs of skilled workers being moved from regions now occupied by the Nazis to the safety of the Volga and the Urals. These reports, which many take with a generous portion of salt, indicate that these factories are being re-established within 30 days after they reach their destinations. How true or how much the product of wish. ful thinking these stories may be is difficult to ascertain.

Reserve Force of 4,500,000.

However much of her industry Russia may have been able to move successfully, it appears from the dispatches of Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt in Russia that if the Soviet Union keeps itself alive for the next 12 months it will be due to American supplies. The long and short of the Russian story is that in four and a half months of war Russia has lost the major portion of her industrial equipment and that her principal contribution to the continued crusade against the Axis will be her man

According to the most conservative estimates, Russia still has 4.500,000 trained men to throw into the struggle. This force is extremely important for both the United States and Britain, but it is practically all Joseph Stalin can contribute to the Allied cause. Russian soldiers lack war materials, food, clothing and gasoline. Our assistance to Russia, therefore, must consist of a large portion of our output of antiaircraft guns, tanks, trucks, planes and plane parts, heavy guns and optical instruments for the artillery and aircraft which the Russians themselves continue to produce behind the Volga. In addition, large consignments of gasoline-both straight and high testmust be shipped at any price. Nazi occupation of Rostov-on-Don and isolation of the Caucasian oil fields from the rest of the Soviet Union in the next few weeks would make Russia almost wholly dependent on the United States for mo-

Soldiers Miss Customary Fare.

The Russian soldier was never accustomed to the luxury of bacon, eggs and iam, and the better cuts of meat are not a usual part of his diet, but he is beginning to miss even his customary fare of black bread, onions and salt pork. Russian armies get no food from Europe or the Near East; consequently, Premier Stalin's only hope to keep his soldiers together as a fighting unit is receipt of large scale food supplies from the United States.

It is clear that the United States chief effort must be directed toward supplying the fighting Russians and the British forces which may be attacked soon in the Near East. America, in becoming a vast arsenal for the opponents of Hitler, must find or build ships to carry across the Atlantic and Pacific huge quantities of military and food supplies. The greatest part of the burden of seeing that these ships reach their destinies safely will fall on the American Navy, for British men-of-war will be engaged in a life and death struggle in the Eastern Mediterranean.

The chief assets of our associates are their trained man power. It is up to the American Navy, American shipyards, American factories and American farms to produce all that is humanly possible

Full Speed Ahead!

Railroad Strike Call

The threatened general strike of railroad workers, seemingly set for December 5 by some of the major unions, promises to force a decisive showdown affecting the whole troubled picture of the Government's relations with labor during the national emergency.

It may be that the railroad strike will not come to pass. Certainly, it is hardly conceivable that either the President or Congress would tolerate a breakdown in the Nation's transportation system at this critical period. But, at the same time, it is difficult to see how the impasse which has been reached can be broken unless there is to be a fundamental reorientation of the administration's labor policies.

While a strike by the railroad workers could not be justified on any grounds, the fact remains that they are merely following a well-blazed trail. The whole history of labor disputes in recent years is an almost unbroken story of gains for labor achieved by resort to the strike weapon. The familiar formula calls for an excessive demand on an employer, a strike which ties up defense, Federal mediation and, finally, the award of some gain to the strikers. Even in those few cases where strikes were openly denounced by responsihie labor leaders and Government officials, there has been some benefit, nevertheless, for the men who left their jobs.

Thus, there exists a situation in which it seems that labor has everything to gain and nothing to lose by striking. This being the case, it is easy to understand why the railroad employes should be strongly tempted to gamble as the others have gambled. But, in the thirty-day period which must elapse between the submission to the President of the Fact-Finding Board's report and the actual calling of a strike, there are several aspects of the matter which railroad labor would do well to ponder.

One is that the railroads are a sick industry. Hence, the board's recommendation that the proposed wage increases be in the nature of a costof-living bonus instead of a boost in basic scales. It is to this provision that the unions seem to take most violent exception. But the workers cannot expect periodic increases in an already-high wage scale from an ailing industry. Even the relatively large increases which have been recommended may be more than the railroads can meet out of current revenues, and if the workers should be successful in their demand for more, they are inviting some form of Government operation of the roads on a subsidy basis.

The effect on public opinion of a breakdown in the bargaining procedure set up by the Railroad Labor Act also merits consideration. This is an act which has been held out as a model labor statute, and it is true that it has served heretofore to prevent strikes in the industry, although peace as a rule has been maintained by concessions to the unions. But if it is to break down now, what becomes of the optimistic assertions of those who say that our industrial troubles, the incessant strikes, are due to labor's inexperience in collective bargaining and that the problems will iron themselves out when employers and employes learn what collective bargaining really means? If the threatened railroad strike materializes, what alternative would there be left but sternly repressive labor legislation? The claims of the railroad workers have received a full and impartial hearing. Wage increases approximating $270,000,000 have been recommended. Although "disappointed" by the findings, the carriers have agreed to be bound by them "in the interest of national defense." Only labor holds out, demanding more and threatening to strike this vital industry unless its demands are met.

At some stage in this game there will be added the straw which will break the back of public tolerance. A railroad strike might well prove to be it.

War Prospects The Moscow sector of the Russo-German battlefront has again come to the fore with Russian claims of a large-scale movement northwest of the city on a broad front. London infers that this is not merely a tactical counterattack, but a sustained strategic offensive intended to reopen communications between Moscow and besieged Leningrad.

If this inference be correct, it is of the utmost importance. The Germans have certainly withdrawn much of their air strength from the Moscow area, presumably for their intensive aerial attacks on the Russian positions in the Crimea and the northern Caucasus. The Russians claim that this has enabled them to attain local air parity about Moscow, which would be almost a prerequisite for a successful break-through in the northwestward drive. German communiques admit that the advance on Moscow has been halted, the explanation being excessively bad weather which has turned the countryside into a veritable sea of mud. This matter of weather is a highly important consideration. During early November, Central Russia usually experiences a mild interlude between the first sharp frosts and the settling down of sustained winter cold. In some respects this is akin to our "Indian summer." but there is ordinarily much more rain, sleet and wet snow. It was such weather, rather than extreme cold, which bogged | hands, but in those of the Army and down Napoleon's army in its catastrophic retreat from Moscow.

However, General Mud is no respecter of armies, and if conditions are as bad as the Germans depict them, the Russians should be equally handicapped in any general offensive launched at this moment. The Germans may be using the weather as a false alibi to conceal reverses. There is also the possibility that the Russian offensive may have political considerations. Last week was the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution, an ideal moment to bolster the morale of the Russian people. Joseph Stalin made resounding speeches asserting that Germany is bleeding to death and promising a Teutonic collapse within a relatively short time. Even local victories would be an excellent follow-up to his encouraging words. Incidentally, the propaganda mills on both sides grind busily. Stalin's claim of 4.500,000 German casualties was answered by Berlin's claim of nearly 8,000,000 Russian losses. Both figures appear fantastic.

However, an interesting admission from the German side indicates that all is not rosy in the Third Reich. No less a person than Dr. Paul Josef Goebbels, master-mind of Hitler's propaganda machine, writes an article on the lugubrious topic of what will happen to the German people if Germany loses the war. He predicts nothing less than the destruction of German nationhood and a generally hopeless future. Of course, that is a note which German propaganda has discreetly sounded from time to time in order to frighten the people into supporting the Hitler regime, come what may. But presumably it would not have been used at this rather melancholy moment unless its necessity had become Britain's war Prime Minister is no pollyanna optimist, so his words of cheer shold be regarded as of genuine significance.

The entire war situation seems to be in a transition period, with diplomatic developments fully as important as military operations. Succeeding weeks should throw much light on what impends.

Defense Confusion Requires Correction

By Owen L. Scott.

President Roosevelt is to find returned to his doorstep the same problem that he has tried for more than a year to get off that doorstep.

The problem is that of administering this country's now vast armament program. It is a problem that grows from Mr. Roosevelt's unwillingness to let go of any real personal power so that this power can be delegated to some one who can see that it is used effectively. Out of the problem flows a tangled administrative situation that prevents smooth functioning of the defense program.

On two previous occasions the tangle in administration became so acute that the White House was forced to act. At first, President Roosevelt created the National Defense Advisory Commission. This agency, which had many aspects of a debating society, was supposed to run the defense program. It was almost headless and bogged down. Then came creation of the Office of Production Management. This agency was given two heads of equal rank, William Knudsen, as director, and Sidney Hillman as co-director. After a few months, this organization also bogged down.

There followed creation of what is known as the Supply Priority and Allocations Board, set up after an investigation by the President's adviser. Judge Sam Rosenman. Now there are signs that all may not be well with this newest organization. Any glance at an organization chart will suggest reasons why.

The charts show that S. P. A. B. is buried down the line of defense agencies with an uncertain relationship to those agencies

More than that, there is a tangle of personalities and of overlapping powers that is very difficult to unravel. That tangle, to date, has been held to a minimum by Vice President Henry Wallace, who is chairman of the board. It soon is discovered, however, that Mr. Wallace is given no organization of his own to keep tab on what goes on and that he personally cannot devote any great amount of time to the job because of his other duties

Some of the strange situations that are developing follow:

First, there is the situation confronting Donald Nelson. Mr. Nelson is executive director of S. P. A. B. and as such is responsible to the whole board and to Mr. Wallace in particular. But Mr. Nelson was selected for that place by the President and not by the board. Then, too, in carrying out board orders Mr. Nelson must operate through the Office of Production Management, which is headed by Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Hillman. In that capacity he no longer is bossed by the board but by two members of the board. After navigating through that maze. Mr. Nelson discovers that in reality the actual power lies, not in his Navy, which are responsible directly to the President.

Next, there is the situation that confronts Leon Henderson. Mr. Henderson is given the important task of preventing a run-away price advance. He is head of the Office of Price Administration. But, as such, he has quite uncertain powers; and Congress, instead of bulwarking his powers appears to be preparing a price-control law that, in some particulars, may actually weaken

That is just one side of Mr. Henderson's situation. In addition to heading O. P. A., he also is a full-fledged member of S. P. A. B. and sits with equal rank alongside Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Hillman, among others. Furthermore. Leon Henderson is head of the Division of Civilian Supply, inside O. P. M. In that capacity. Mr. Henderson must report to Hillman and Knudsen as his bosses; and Mr. Knudsen makes it clear that he expects this division to abide by his orders. And if that were not complicating enough, there is the further fact that the Division of Civilian Supply must function within a framework set up by S. P. A. B. and not O. P. M. Once that tangle is straightened out, the discovery is made that so far as businessmen are concerned, their interest in civilian supply centers in Floyd Odlum. who heads another division, that of contract distribution, within O. P. M.

The Government's chart readers have just about thrown up their hands in despair trying to trace the lines of authority here. After that there is a snarl in the field of defense housing. This snarl is so bad that President Roosevelt has had to turn loose Judge Rosenman to try an unraveling job. Here the trouble centers around Housing Co-ordinator Charles Palmer, who has shown an amazing ability to get special grants of power from the White House that put his agency in a class by itself, apparently free from domination in the field of priorities either by S. P. A. B. or O. P. M. or the Army and Navy. Mr. Palmer's battles with Housing Administrator Nathan Straus and Works Administrator John M. Carmody have been loud enough to attract the attention of

Then Vice President Wallace is un against another problem of his own. Mr. Wallace, in addition to his other tasks, is charged with operating the economic defense board, which, in turn, is waging this country's economic war. This board stems directly into the White House and, on the surface, is one of the few defense agencies that appears to have clear-cut authority. Yet, a little investigation discloses that the board has few powers to operate directly. Instead, it must work through Jesse Jones, whose loan agency, working through the Export-Import Bank, the Metals Reserve Co. and the Rubber Reserve Co., holds the purse strings that must be untied by Mr. Jones before anything can be done in the way of buying the goods that Hitler or Japan otherwise might

When the situation here is analyzed, the discovery is made that the real power and authority, outside the White House, are held by the Army and Navy and by Mr. Jones. S. P. A. B. gains in prestige and does exercise power in matters of broad policy relating to raw materials, because Vice President Wallace sits as chairman and is exercising authority. But this situation is complicated and growing more complicated as personalities and viewpoints tend to as it arises. His technique in meeting attending the weekly meetings report Vichy does not offer armed resist- ball held in his hand, and no sign of the fact that President Roosevelt is not functioning while the new board is have been operated in this way, but only noted as an effective administrator nor | super-imposed.

ARMISTICE DAY, 1941

By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

Once again we stand at the threshold of a recurring anniversary of November 11, 1918. It brings back to memory the stirred emotions of the peoples of the world when the news was flashed, "The war is over!" Twenty-three years later we are face-to-face with a world-wide conflagration that in its terrible consequences outdistances the first Great War. What plans were made through the years of peace to avert another catastrophe? What bitter controversies were waged as to the methods that might be employed to guarantee right and amicable relations between nation and nation! Plans for disarmament were effected, restrictions as to the building of battle fleets were made, the Kellogg-Briand Pact to outlaw war was signed by over 50 sovereign nations; a World Court to adjudicate differences was set up and there were signs that mutual confidence was to mark a new and lasting age of peace. At no time in world history had such progressive steps been taken to avert disastrous conflicts. This is the record in brief, and what a record it is! All the proud ventures, all the high hopes have been wrecked, and once again diplomacy and statesmanship have been compelled to admit failure and defeat. What fine and discriminating analyst of history, appraising this period, will be able to make evident the futility of all this designing? One thing surely is conspicuously true, namely, that there can be no security through pacts and agreements unless they are sustained by deep and unchanging moral and religious convictions. The only adequate curb upon selfishness, greed and criminal designs is in the moral integrity and character of those who solemnly and consistently sustain their pledged word by their deeds. Something has been terribly lacking in these eventful and momentous years, and any fair diagnosis discovers it in the lowered moral tone, the abdicated religious convictions that have been common to nations and peoples the world over. The old maxim that, "Man shall not live by bread alone," has been set aside, and for it efficiency, clever bargaining, astute commercial planning, mass production, selfish nationalism have been substituted. Prosperity is the reward that comes to those who have the quick- for our greatest task.

est wit and the greatest skill in bargaining and barter! The only creditable distinctions are those that accrue to those who have registered success in a given calling! These have been the recognized standards by which we have registered progress. In our domestic and social life there has been little to give it high moral distinction when compared with other periods. The Victorian Age we have outlived, and for it we retain little of respect. What were once inculcated in the youth as the indispensable standards of conduct have largely ceased to be.

This short survey of the ways and practices of these late years cannot be regarded as the lamentations of some modern Jeremiah, the harsh judgments of some narrow and disappointed pessimist; they are too accurate a summary of the trends and tendencies of our life to be denied. The strange rise of eccentric, criminal and cruel despots, the recurrence of a more terrible and brutal world conflict, with all the ordered and designed ways of peaceful living interrupted, do not happen without cause or causes. It is eternally true that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." We may now have to insure our tranquility by resort to arms, but is there not something more needed? Have these fateful years since the first Armistice Day taught us no lessons? Can we cure our own maladies and do something for the maladies of other peoples simply by resorting to the remedies that have effected superficial cures in other periods? There is unrest and much distrust abroad in the land. The plea for unity of purpose and unity of action, much as they are needed, is largely unheeded. Many of us believe that God has designed us for some great and noble purpose, some great cause. If we are to rise to meet it. we must be in a better mind and have higher, more selfless resolves than we have disclosed since Armistice Day, 1918. It was prophesied of an ancient nation: "They that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places, thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; thou shall be called the repairer of the breach, the restorer of paths to dwell in." To such a call only a righteous nation can give answer. May God solemnize us and make us ready

Fifty Years Ago In The Star

Although now half a century old, a news item printed in The Star on November 9, 1891, has a familiar ring. The headlines would apply Worship just as well today as then: Repairs "Repairing Warships-Work Being Hurried at the Brook-The dispatch itself read: "These are busy times at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Night and day the rattling of chains and clanging of hammers resound through the usually quiet yard. The big storehouses are open all the time, and although from the commandant down to the storekeeper one and all say there is nothing up there is every indication of a hurried departure of the fleet for some kind of foreign service. On all the ships extra stores taken on board.

All her men were aboard and no one was allowed shore leave. • • • The Atlanta, which is on the dry dock, was taking in coal and will be ready for sea by Friday. The officers of the ship were getting their dunnage on board. . . The Chicago is another ship ready for sea, and her men, waiting orders, were taken out in the vard and drilled in shore movements. . . Work on the monitor Miantonomoh is progressing with a rush and she will be ready for sea in a few days. * * * A telegraphic order was received at the ordnance department this morning to hurry up certain guns "

A report from Vallejo, Calif., told of equal activity on the West Coast. The reason for these activities. although not mentioned officially by the State Depart-Reason ment, was fear of trouble with Chile. American bluejackets, on shore leave at Valparaiso, had been assaulted by Chilean sailors, and some had been murdered. The rebel government, having just won power, had at that time declined to take any action in the case, and more trouble was brewing. Later they apologized and gave reparations, but not until more vessels of our fleet had proceeded to Chilean waters to stand by. * * * * On Saturday, November 7, 1891. The Star's feature story was called "Edison at His Work." ### Work of Alcoholics Anonymous

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Possibly one of the least known national organizations is Alcoholics Anonymous. It is composed of a brotherhood of alcoholics who are banded together to help one another combat their common enemy, alcoholism.

The organization's name is indicative that it does not seek publicity, and probably for that reason the country has heard but little of this unusual group of people. It is true that the movement is only about six years old, but it has chapters in New York, Jersey City, Cleveland, Akron. Chicago, Houston, Baltimore, Washington, and other important centers. The Washington chapter has a membership of more than 200.

Magazines, medical journals, newspapers and private individuals have investigated and analyzed the work of Alcoholics Anonymous and have called the organization and its results "marvelous." The inebriates are finding in their own ranks the road to recovery. a road that in thousands of cases physicians, sanitariums and hospitals, have been unable to show them. Thus the movement is rendering a unique and humanitarian service to society.

As veterans of the drinking evil, they know all the danger signals, the alibis used by an alcoholic to mitigate his drinking and the thoughts in his mind as he emerges from the fog. So the assumption, and in most instances it is more than an assumption, is that the man who has traveled the road is better able to help the fellow who seeks aid to free himself from drink's ultimate consequences.

Alcoholics Anonymous follows a clear and well-defined course. Its leaders adhere so religiously to a definite course that they insist upon debunking any misconceptions. They insist that their's is not an organization advocating cures and that there is no such thing as a cure for alcoholism nor a cured alcoholic. They also insist that the remedy they offer is a conditional reprieve in which they are so busy helping others that they solve their own problem. It is like the rich woman who repeatedly sought happiness and found it, not by sending out sums of money by other people to purchase food for the poor, but by taking the food to them personally.

One primary thesis of the movement, and one on which the best minds on the subject now agree, is that alcoholism very definitely is an illness, not merely a bad habit. Its victims are no different from those suffering from other diseases. To this end, the thought is that the recognition of alcoholism as a malady and the treatment of it accordingly will save the individual from possible ruin and society from unwarranted damage.

Members of the movement are not reformers, missionaries or social workers. They do not expect to save the world overnight. There are numerous methods of help, but no preachments, for the organization takes the position that where one man can be shamed out of a habit, ten thousand gradually can be relieved of it by an understanding attitude.

The organization is distinct from most national movements. It has no salaried officers, no dues, no official publication and nothing to sell except unselfish service. Furthermore, it does not solicit funds. Each local chapter is voluntarily financed by its members and each member is a one-man or one-woman membership committee, bringing to meetings friends or new acquaintances who need help in their fight against alcohol.

This unusual movement was conceived by a 43-year-old native of Vermont when he had reached the end of the road in his career as a hard drinker. The keystone is religion, the recognition of a Greater Power that can help the alcoholic victim when all other things have failed. But with this conception, the organization does not go in for religious doctrines. Its meetings are not of the prayer meeting type.

The originator of the movement is now its leader. From the first World War, in which he had been an officer, he entered Wall Street and became a successful broker. His greatest enemy was alcohol, for it affected his business career and menaced his family life. Having tried all the remedies prescribed he was unable to stop drinking and believed that he was a confirmed alcoholic. It was at this point that he decided the best source to obtain help was from alcoholics themselves. There he found the answer, that of doing something to help the other fellow to give up drinking. Following the plan, it had marvelous effects. Out of this experience Alcoholics Anonymous came into being.

Alcoholics usually make contact with the group through knowing a member, through some hospital or physician familiar with their work, or by writing to P. O. Box 658, Church Street Annex, New York City, or P. O. Box 72, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington. All inquiries receive immediate personal attention and where an individual is interested his name is given to the nearest local group. If he needs a visit he gets it at once, but the A. A.s will not pursue him. No charge of any kind is made for their help.

Some of the country's best-known men and women have become vitally interested in the movement. As an example, John D. Rockefeller, jr., gave a dinner to 60 members of the New York Chapter and listened to some of them tell of their reformation.

Many efforts have been made by physicians, sociologists, psychiatrists and others to find a permanent remedy to relieve the individual of his acquired desire for alcohol. Benefits to some degree usually result from such efforts, but permanency has been found to be largely in the patient's will to desist from partaking. Strengthening of the individual's will power appears to be the strong point in the work of Alcoholics Anonymous. The organization's record of more than 1,000 recoveries a year is noteworthy and makes it deserving of respect and consideration by those who need its guiding influence.

United States Throws Off Neutrality Restrictions as Nazis Slow Down in Russia

Review of 114th Week of War

By Blair Bolles.

The sunshine of optimism bathed the belligerent anti-Fascist cause last week. Joseph Stalin, whose Russian Armies still held the Germans out of Moscow and Rostov and Winston Churchill, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, both spoke of present success and of confidence in the future. The official tone of Berlin, on the other hand, grew bleak. There was a Nazi hint that it might be barely possible that the invincible German troops should suffer defeat and Germany lose the war. It would be enlightening to know what is going on inside Germany. The real story from there does not reach us. We know about as well what is going on in the inaccessible villages of remote Tibet.

Perhaps the turning point of the war has been reached. If so, historians, weighing momentous events of whose existence we at the moment are ignorant, will inform us of the circumstances that brought the turning point. For the United States, a different sort of turning point is at hand. The Senate has approved the Neutrality Act changes. It is certain now that American merchant vessels can mount arms and sail into war zones. The last two years have satisfied the Federal Government that while we may be isolated geographically from Europe, we are not isolated from the Atlantic Ocean. Angus MacDonald, the Navy Minister of the Canadian Dominion government, announced that Nazi submarines had been seen operating off the coast of Newfoundland, 900 miles from the United States. Our Navy Department announced that on the night of Wednesday, October 29, the Navy tanker Salinas was torpedoed southwest of Iceland. The destroyer Reuben James was sunk near the same spot a day later. None was lost on the Salinas, but apparently 100-93 men and 7 officers-were lost with the Reuben James.

War of Words

The world heard interesting messages during the week from Churchill, Stalin and Josef Goebbels, the propaganda genius of Germany. Their words are part of the ammunition of the war. Stalin chose the eve of the 24th anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution,

Thursday, to make his first public address since •Forecast his speech the day after Germany went to war on the Soviet in June. "The policy of the Red Army is to destroy the Germans to the very last man," he said. The next day he issued a statement, predicting that within a few months, perhaps a year, the Reich would collapse "under the weight of her own crimes."

"Germany is bleeding to death, facing disaster."

On Friday, too, Prime Minister an inspection tour of the Tyneside he "We have passed through the darkest and most perilous side of this struggle and are once more masters of our own "The Russians are struggling and battling vigorously with results that are particularly significant." He gave a hint, however, that he did not expect the Germans to collapse tomorrow. He said the British are moving and looking forward, "however long the road."

Friday was the day for Josef Goebbels to examine the dark side of life. In the weekly Das Reich (publication of the Propaganda Ministry he heads) Goebbels wrote:

"Axis powers are really fighting for bare existence, and the worries and distress which we all must bear in the war would pale in the face of the in- | enemy."

ferno which would await us if we were to lose. * * * The chance which the German nation possesses is indeed its greatest, but also its last."

This is a different tone from the countless speeches and manifestos of the Nazis hailing a "new order," something far more brilliant than "bare existence," and foreseeing soon complete victory. But Mr. Goebbels still hopes:

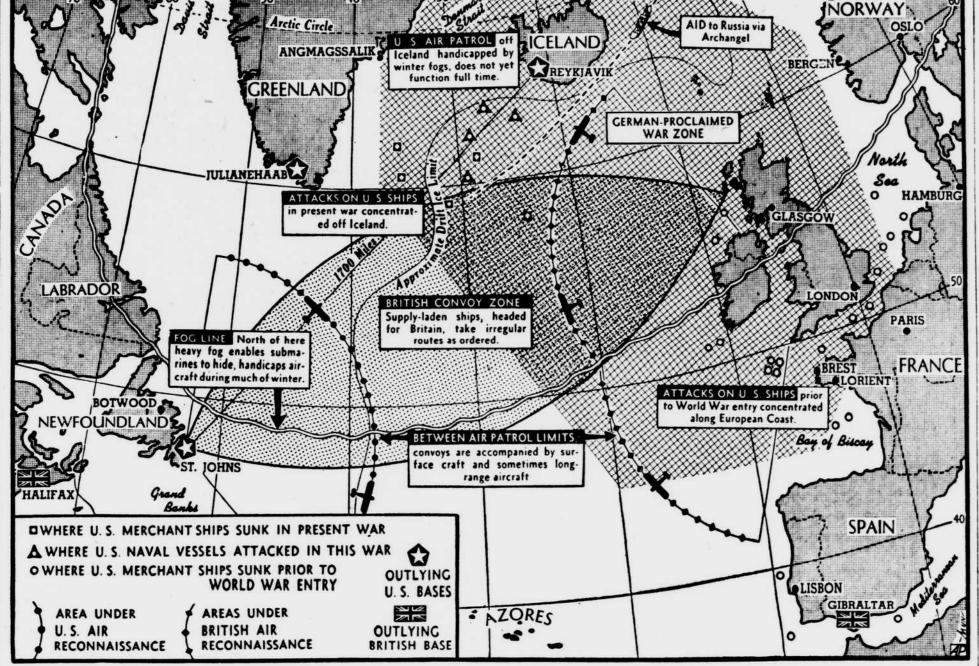

"We can be victorious and we will be

"Just as a war which is won will benefit us all, so a war which is lost would smash us all up. As always in the great hours of history our people has its fate in its own hands."

War in Russia

At the time Stalin announced his faith in the German collapse he attributed Russia's reverses in the war with Ger-Churchill had pleasant words. During | many to "lack of a second front in Europe" and to the fact that no British or American armies are fighting on the continent. It was the most open invitation to participation in the European war that the United States vet has received. Next day Washington lent Russia $1,000,000,000. England was cautious about commenting on Stalin's declared desire that the British distract the Germans by operations on another front. Reliable London sources said plans for a second fighting front were "ready to be put into effect when the time is considered opportune." The highly-placed British Press Association

> "It is felt that Stalin made it clear that he appreciates that when a real opportunity arises-and that might be very near-an additional front will be created. Where that front will be is something we do not propose to tell the

This war already is hundreds of miles closer to the United States than was the World War prior to America's entry, April 6, 1917. The scene of action has shifted westward into waters the United around Newfoundland. So far, nearly a dozen merchant ships carrying the United States flag, or United States operated and sailing under Panama registry, have gone opposed to the war of words, the Russians were holding their own and, indeed, improv-Impasse ing their situation. Berlin admitted the drive on Moscow was stopped dead. London sources heard that a Russian counterattack on Volokolamsk in the central sector was apparently developing into such a powerful offensive that it might reopen Moscow-Leningrad communications and relieve the long siege of Leningrad. Volokolamsk is 65 miles northwest of More and more it appeared that the Germans were in for a grim, glum winter in the trenches around both Leningrad and Moscow. The war of movement is becoming a war of position. Except in Africa, a field of limited operations possibilities, this is a new experience for the Nazis.

Stalin put the price of the Russian war for the Germans at 4,500,000 men killed,

In the war of guns and death, as I wounded and captured. He said Soviet losses were 350,000 killed and 1,358,000 wounded or missing. Wartime statistics are unreliable.

> Even in the south of Russia, where the German advance across the Ukraine to the Donets Basin has been steady, the tide turned last week. The Germans were pushed back in the Donets, and all week they made no progress in Crimea. Last Sunday the Germans claimed they are advanced to within 20 miles of Sevastopol, the great Russian end they were still 20 miles away. Unlike Sheridan, who was 20 miles from Winchester, they did not eat up the intervening distance.

On the far northern front the Russian war took on cosmic diplomatic overtones. The Soviet, Great Britain and the United States united in an effort to talk Finland into abandoning her part of the fight. Thus far the effort has proved down. Most of them have been sunk in waters designated by President Roosevelt as defensive, waters of vital import to the United States because hostile activity there menaces American security in these days of long-range attack. Of graver import have been four attacks, near Iceland, on United disclosed that the Soviets had offered to discuss a separate peace with Finland. At the same time he warned that Fin-Position land would lose American friendship unless at once she discontinued offensive warfare against Russia. Later in the week the State Department explained that American efforts to induce Finland to cease offensive warfare in Russia are aimed solely at preventing naval base on the Crimea. At the week's the Finns from going so far as to make themselves allies of Hitler in the general war which, the State Department thinks, threatens the safety of the United States and other countries. The American Government, Secretary Hull said, still awaits an answer from Finland to the > American warning. Finland is fighting in the general neighborhood of the railway running south from the Arctic port of Murmansk | changes this week.

While the United States carried on a diplomacy for Russia, Russia ordered to the United States a new Soviet Ambassador, Maxim Litvinoff, who signed the treaty here in 1933 that meant American recognition of the Soviet. An old anti-Fascist, former Foreign Minister of U. S. S. R., Litvinoff succeeds Constantine Oumansky, who has been visiting in Russia.

Battle of the Atlantic

At 9:23 p.m. Friday the Senate voted, to the Neutrality Act that erase the statutory prohibitions against arming American merchant vessels and against sending those vessels into combat waters. The House is expected to approve both

Thus the United States makes ready to take a greater part in the contest with the Axis over the seas. The British blockade Europe (and so the Axis). The Germans blockade the British Isles. In opposing the German blockade, the United States has set up its naval patrol, out of which have arisen the incidents of the destroyers Greer, Kearny and Reuben James and the naval tanker Salinas. "Hitier is out to sink our Navy," Senator Glass, Democrat, of Virginia commented when he heard of the Salinas torpedoing.

According to the Navy Minister of Canada, Angus MacDonald, German submarines are deep in the waters of the New World-"within sight of the shore" of Newfoundland. The British Admiralty on Tuesday gave some idea of the scope of its anti-submarine warfare by announcing that 1,276 officers and men had been captured by the British from German and Italian submarines. This led to the calculation that between 180 and 190 submarines have been destroyed by the British since the war's beginning.

The Admiralty at the same time insisted that the success against the submarines had a positive advantage in improving the chances of success for an Atlantic crossing of ships bearing goods to England. It said:

"The relationship between the magnitude of the enemy claims and his own lack of success was illustrated last week when the German high command claimed to have sunk 14 ships totaling 47,000 tons from a convoy homeward bound from Gibraltar. In fact, four ships totaling 8,772 tons were sunk. This was only achieved by the enemy at a cost to himself. Recently, too, one of the largest convoys ever to cross the Atlantic arrived safely without a loss." However, on the same day the Admiralty was making its announcement the Germans again were Shipping making large claims-that Losses they recently had sent to the bottom 73,000 tons of shipping bound for England. One ship which the American Government credits the Germans with sinking is the Robin Moor, sent to the South Atlantic's bottom last May 21. The State Department announced on Monday that Germany has refused to reply to this country's demand for damages of $2,967,092 for the ship.

From across the Pacific came news that may have a meaning for the battle of the Atlantic. The Japanese government revealed on Wednesday it was sending Saburo Kurusu, former Ambassador to Germany, to Washington by trans-Pacific clipper in an effort to reach an accord with the United States "in view of the very serious situation prevailing." If the Kurusu mission fails and a military crisis develops in Japanese-American relations. Germany would be aided in the Atlantic through diversion of Pacific. Germany claims that the United 50 to 37, in favor of the two amendments | States has attacked her in the Atlantica claim that could be the basis for a German demand that Japan assist her in a military operation against the United States under the terms of the three-power pact. Special Emissary Kurusu signed the three-power pact for Japan. He should be here November 17.

START RAID SERIES IN WEST, WELLS URGES

British Writer Concedes Large-Scale Invasion Is Impractical Now

By H. G. Wells.

Recognizing the importance of Joseph Stalin's demand for a twofront war, H. G. Wells explains his theory of how this diversion might be created. In a previous article, Mr. Wells declared the British should undertake an all-out invasion of the continent against the Germans to help Russia. Now the British novelist and historian changes his stand by conceding the present impossibility of a full-scale invasion and recommending a series of raids by small groups of specially trained sol-

LONDON, Nov. 8 (By Radio) .- Military authorities have decided very wisely that a full-scale invasion of the continent, if only to relieve pressure on Russia, is impossible at the present time, notwithstanding Joseph Stalin's plea for a Western front in his recent speech.

The authorities declare they will not yield to popular clamor in this matter, and there is really no popular clamor in the matter so they may rest secure and satisfied in their dugouts, bureaus and so forth. In this resolution they have not only the enthusiastic support of such organs of public opinion as Truth and the Daily Telegraph, but the general agreement of the country.

Nevertheless, a certain number of people, including Mr. Stalin, are inclined to question whether dignified abstinence from large-scale warfare upon the immense Western front the Nazis expose to us exhausts the possibilities

And the country is in urgent need of finding out these young soldiers who are to take over our military affairs in the days ahead.

Suppose we appoint and set 60 to 70 of these raid commanders with their staffs to concentrate immediately on the best military exercise in the world-serious preparation for real

And now, remember, we have the Royal Air Force and the Navy watching the long, exposed western front of the Nazis. Acting upon their reports, suddenly we launch raid Number 11, raid 16, raid 54, dozens of them. Each of them is like an irritating dart at Jerry's exposed rear. Raid 16 may be in luck. It may catch a mere bluff defense; it may find a bogus regiment of old men and boys. Jerry may have been doing a little terrorism and the whole country may rise. We develop that raid. Jerry then will have to bring up troops at that point. It will be like a center of inflammation in his back and he can only do that by hurrying up troops from somewhere else, somewhere a score of miles or 100 miles away. If he does that, raid 14 or raid 15 comes into action 60 miles away. The Royal Air Force would bomb Jerry's communications and reliefs and he will have to bring more and more of his resources to the afflicted spot or recall material and men from Russia. This will be rather better than the war office idea of a raid, which consists, I gather, of suddenly sending the wrong men to the wrong place at the wrong time with no proper preparation.

Expend Men, Anyway.

Maybe raid 16 will be out of luck. The Royal Air Force observers may have let him down. Or that particular young soldier may not be as bright as we hoped. Raid 16 then must put up as good a fight as possible and use up the Germans anyhow. In warfare at times you have to lose men, ships and planes. They are from the point of view of warsubmit plans as soon as possible for the fare pieces in the game. The greatest raids they would like to make. Let us chess champion loses pieces. I should ask the navy and merchant marine. If we can send tanks to Archangel, we can surely keep a raid going now that the battle of the Atlantic has turned in our favor. Lord Strabolgi is a naval man who seems to have no doubts about that. We may find that we cannot only spread those raids, we may even start distributing the stackedup produce of the American Middle West where it is most deserved.

There are such things as iron rations and though our military people seem to regard it as an ungentlemanly idea, we have to remember Jerry's bluff and bogus forces in the west must have quite a lot of capturable supplies. This is not the invasion of the continent which we are being trained to regard with such terror by our large and influential Quisling press. It is a series of young soldiers' military exercises. There ought not to be a single soldier in any of these raids over 40.

"Can't Win Wars With Gorts."

I am sure every intelligent Englishman would insist on that point. It is young soldiers we want to find out. The tradition of subservience to influential superiors in the professional army is a thoroughly bad one and any one who has read the dismaying dispatches of Gen. Lord Gort, casting blame on every one but himself, must realize that the man who can hold on in the army after 40 must be a self-protective man without any vigorous initiative. You can't win wars with Gorts. But these young soldiers are as yet unspoiled. There

Why are these obvious steps not being taken now? In a previous newspaper article I pointed out unambiguously the prevalent disinclination of certain influential quarters to settle our accounts with the Nazis in this phase of our opportunity. The British people are extremely law-abiding and stout-hearted, but they are growing more impatient with the existing order of things here than they have ever been before. They don't like waiting about until Jerry sees fit to hit them. They are literally spoiling for a fight. They want to be in the war. They are bitterly ashamed at the figure we are cutting in the eyes of the world at this present

Though the rumor could not be confirmed, responsible intelligence has it that the Army is engaged in studying possible legislation that would perpetuate indefinitely the present status of the National Guard. Its local duties would be relegated to rear-line formations under the title of Home Guards. One expedient suggested is that Guardsmen be mustered out as individuals instead of units at the end of the 30 months of service. Thus, it is argued, control of the organization's framework would remain in the hands of the War Depart-

EUROPE'S HUNGRY ARE NOT IN GERMANY

Conquered States Drained of Food to Sustain Nazi Machine

By Ovid Martin.

ages on the continent of Europe, confidential Government reports hold little hope that hunger and malnutrition will contribute materially to the defeat of Germany. Early expectations that the British blockade would be able to bring about hunger and collapse in Germany as it did in the first World War have largely been abandoned.

Reports based on diplomatic communications and stories told by officials and private citizens returning from Europe indicate that millions of Europeans are suffering from hunger. Many are expected to die of starvation. Others may succumb to diseases resulting from malnutrition.

But American authorities now say that few of the hunger victims are Germans, particularly those which most directly sustain Hitler's military, industrial and agricultural effort.

There is plenty of evidence, the reports state, that the German militarists, remembering a lesson from the other war that it was not enough just to avert starvation for the population at large, are exploiting the food-productive capacity of conquered Europe to feed their own people relatively well.

Continent Almost Self-Sufficient.

Despite industrial Europe's longtime dependence upon overseas markets for a part of its food supply, the continent has sufficient productive capacity under normal conditions and with proper rationing to maintain its population on a diet conducive to health.

Statistics place Europe's food selfsufficiency all the way from 75 to 85 per cent. Much of the deficiency has been in protein foods, such as corn and oilcake, imported from abroad to supply livestock and dairy industries, which in turn exported large quantities to Great Britain. So the actual deficiency of the continent itself may be said to be only between 10 and 15 per cent—an amount that could be taken up by a little belttightening and rationing.

Government reports say, however, that the war has interfered to a considerable extent with production and caused a consequent reduction in self-sufficiency and the appearance of severe food shortages. But in spite of this reduction, which occurred in Germany as well as in the conquered countries, rations in the Reich are said to be at almost pre-war

Many of these have since been replaced by prisoners of war, but their productive output is said to be much less than that of the average German, largely because of hate

Growing requirements of the German military machine have left smaller than normal quantities of iron and steel as well as gasoline and other fuels for farm tractors and harvesting machinery. These shortages, together with a withdrawal of many draft animals from farms for army use, has adversely affect-

Reports state that the most serious wartime difficulty is a shortage of phosphoric acid fertilizer. Germany as well as most of her neighbors have been dependent upon the United States and Africa for nearly 90 per cent of their vital phosphoric fertilizer requirements. These sources have been cut off by the blocked production.

Workers' Diet Guarded.

Officials say that the German rationing system is designed to provide a diet that will maintain the utmost efficiency, and physical as well as mental alertness of the armed forces and of the workers in war and agricultural industries. In the other war, little attention was given the diets of those outside the armed

Reports received through diplomatic channels state that present restrictions "do not appear to have been so farreaching as to affect in measurable degree the physical condition and working efficiency of the population at large." "In many respects," those reports say,

"the food situation has been considerably better than in the comparable period of the first World War." The reports add that considerable differences exist in the wartime restrictions by consumer groups. "There is no doubt," they say, "that the rationing system has been shaped with a view to favoring large-size families and, above all, those groups of the population which most directly sustain the military, industrial and agricultural

Nazis Draining Italy.

What of Italy, Germany's Axis partner? Normally Italy is 95 per cent selfsufficient. Officials say it would be quite easy for this country to get along, except for one thing-exports to Germany. It is said that the Germans are requiring Italy to supply huge quantities of foods, which she can ill afford to furnish, in return for German coal.

> Much of the food shortage in France has been due, officials say, to "the deliberate German policy" of cutting off unoccupied France from the occupied food producing areas.

Expect to Use Ukraine.

"This German policy contributes as much to the prevailing food shortages in German-dominated countries as lack of foodstuffs."

quantities of grain, oil seeds and other vital products from the occupied Russian Ukraine. Information is lacking on how much food the Germans were able to seize, or to what extent the fleeing Russians were able to carry out Stalin's "scorched earth policy."

The Germans expect to extract large

It is known, however, that the Germans hope to get good crops from this area next year.

"It is significant," says one report, "that apparently a considerable increase in the manufacturing of farm equipment, including tractors, took place in Germany on the eve of the Russo-German war. This activity could not be wholly accounted for by domestic or export needs and may have been part of the preparation for the Russian campaign.

City's Growth Brings Changes to 'Avenue'

By John Clagett Proctor.

What a great change a few years will bring about, especially in a marvelously fast-growing city like Washington, now the 11th largest city in population in the country, with nearly 200,000 Federal employes alone, and this number being increased every day. Even some of the native residents, who have known the city for half a century or more, frequently find, when looking for the residence of some old friend, or for some historic building, that only the site can be located. Here, most likely, to their amazement, they may find a large public building or some towering apartment house. And the former Washingtonians, who have been away from the city for a short space of time, may get lost in the new Capital, and may even find it necessary to employ a city guide to show them around town.

The growth of the city has not been confined to any particular section, but in the downtown area, the changes are more noticeable, and this applies to the south side of Pennsylvania avenue from Third to Fifteenth streets, and in the squares lying to the south of Pennsylvania avenue to Independence avenue.

The triangular-shaped square between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, Pennsylvania avenue and what was once D street, is one of the more interesting sections of this city. When the Capital's blocks and lots were surveyed and marked off by Surveyor Ellicott, this square was made into four lots, lot No. 1 being at Twelfth street and lot 4 at Thirteenth street. Lewis Morin's house was on lot 1, and in 1807 was assessed at $1,600. On lot 2 in this square Coltman & Calder, in 1807, had built an $800 house, quite likely for business purposes.

Regarding Lewis Morin there seems to be little known about his business activities in this city. W. B. Bryan in his sketch of the "Hotels of Washington Prior to 1814" tells us:

"Another hostelry that played no small part in the lives of the citizens at this early period was what was known as Morin's Tavern. This place was established by Lewis Morin of Baltimore, who in May, 1800, bought from the City Commissioners lot 1, square 292, at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Twelfth street, paying for this deep triangular piece of ground the sum of $549.77. Here he erected a two-story frame dwelling house, fronting 30 feet on Pennsylvania avenue and extending back to D street, 'and used by him as a tavern,' as the deed of that date, November 16, 1801, recites.

"This inn was selected as the polling place for the ward in which it was located in the first city election and for a number of years subsequently. By the year 1811, Mr. Morin had opened a grocery store in the same locality. There is but little mention of the hotel. Mr. Morin died in the fall of 1811 and two years later a Mr. Espey is spoken of as his successor."

Various Businesses in Block

In 1846 we find in business here Haslup & Weedon, coachmakers, and John Reese, silversmith. In 1850 the list is increased, with John D. Clark, a justice of the peace; Daniel Pierce, umbrella maker: C. Lesiardi, watch and clock maker: John Wagner, picture frame maker, and William Voss, watchmaker and jeweler.

By 1878 the following persons were engaged in business on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets. At No. 1200, Augustus Lepreux, groceries; 120z, Otto Heunsch, boots and shoes: 1206, the Green Mountain House and saloon, conducted by Patrick H. Morgan: 1216. Horace K. Fulton, a pawnbroker, was in business at 1232; a few years later at 1218, and Elias Heidenheimer, a few doors away, was at the corner of Thirteenth street, and afterward moved next door, to 1236. In 1883 Louis Goldman kept a clothing store at No. 1200, next to which was Paul Bonavires, the tonsorial artist. At 1206 was Francie H. Finley, the bottler; at 1208, John H. Hicks, barber. Then came, in order, Ada Franklin, who sold cigars; James E. Bromwell, silver plater; Howard South, who sold harness, etc.; Edward Donally, who made harness, and at 1222 Julius Baumgarten, the engraver. William E. Spalding & Co., painters, were at 1224; William H. Woolls, eating house, 1226; A. McCliesh & Son, cabinetmakers, 1228, and at 1230 J. H. De Atley kept an appetizing restaurant where steamed ovsters were served to perfection. Steinem Bros., pawnbrokers, were at 1232. Gibson Bros., printers, were on the corner, upstairs, and on the lower floor were Easton & Rupp, stationers.

Perhaps the most notable place once In this block-and which still is well within the memory of many-was Hantock's Restaurant at "1-2-3-4" Pennsylvania avenue.

This restaurant had its birth 101 years ago, and, probably, voluntarily went out of business even before the National Prohibition Act went into effect. For the first few years of its existence it was not a tavern, but rather what its name implied, until 1846—the Star Coffee House. Andrew Hancock was its first proprietor and by 1850 it was evidently serving its celebrated liquors, for in that year we find it called the Bald Eagle House, its house number then being under the old system, 239 Pennsylvania avenue.

Death Announced

In 1862 Andrew Hancock's son, John, was clerking for his father, and by 1865 had succeeded to the business, the father moving to 516 Virginia avenue, and John, the son, remaining at the Pennsylvania avenue address. In the 1867 City Directory, John Hancock advertised as fol-

No. 239 Pennsylvania Avenue, Bet. 12th and 13th Sts. John Hancock, Proprietor."

After conducting the business at the old stand for about 20 years, John Hancock died and his death was announced 1885, as follows: "DEATH OF JOHN HANCOCK. surateur, died suddenly this afternoon my cousin Knickerbocker and several of Honor.

A few minutes before 2 o'clock his wife heard him breathing rather heavily, and went to him, and before she reached him he had stopped breathing. Dr. Smith Townshend was immediately summoned, but arrived too late. He decided that the death resulted from

Three days after his death The Star told of his burial and the respect shown the dead. It said:

"Funeral of John Hancock.-The funeral of the late John Hancock took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence, 1234 Pennsylvania avenue, the Rev. Dr. Naylor of Foundry Church officiating. The remains were interred in Oak Hill Cemetery. The pallbearers were Messrs. W. S. Roose, Thomas M. Steep, Thomas J. Russell, George Gibson, H. C. Coburn and Walter D. Wyvill."

Andrew W. Hancock succeeded his father in business, and was of the third generation of the name of Hancock to run the same business at the same place, which from outward appearance was by no means as attractive a place as a number of others in the city and yet this place succeeded and even gained fame when others failed and went out of business entirely. Nor is it probable that the refreshments sold there excelled those dispensed by other firms engaged in a similar business. Perhaps, after all, it was due to the personalities of the several proprietors and the display of mementos and relics, each telling its own silent story of some particularly notable person or event.

Van Ness Residence

Because of these relics the place became known as "The Old Curiosity Shop" restaurant and the collection on display there included many interesting specimens. There was a wine glass and small tumbler which were labeled as the "identical glasses" out of which Jeff Davis was wont to take his regular toddy at Jost's liquor store, No. 1702 Pennsylvania avenue. A small strip of blanket was taken from the one which inclosed Booth's body when it was delivered to his friends. A huge iron key, rudely made, used to lock and unlock a smokehouse on Washington's Westmoreland County plantation, and a host of other curios.

Around the corner from Hancock's place, on the south side of D street, between where formerly stood the engine house, at the corner of Twelfth street, was another historic building, much older than the one on the Avenue. It was built in 1804 by Gen. John P. Van Ness as his residence, and the corner building was erected by him at the same time and rented for business purposes. The latter has undergone considerable remodeling since it was first built, but the former is substantially as it was

The Van Ness residence, at 1202, was occupied by the general and Marcia Burnes Van Ness, his wife, until the mansion house at Seventeenth and B streets N.W. was completed and occupied by them in 1816. It seems quite likely that Ann Burnes, wife of David, the original proprietor, died in the D street resi-

Van Ness was always a good entertainer, and loved to have distinguished company around him, and it was while living on D street that he was visited by Washington Irving, one of America's most celebrated writers and the son of a Scotsman who had emigrated to this country before the Revolution. Irving in January, 1811, wrote to a friend:

"I am delightfully moored, 'head and stern,' in the family of John P. Van Ness, brother of William P. He is an old friend of mine, and insisted on my coming to his house the morning after my arrival. The family is very agreeable. Mrs. Van Ness is a pretty and pleasant little woman, and quite gay; then there are two pretty girls likewise, one a Miss Smith, clean from Long Island, her father being a member of Congress. She is a fine, blooming country lass, and a great belle here. You see, I am in clover -happy dog!"

Franklin Engine House

Gen. Van Ness was popular in the District of Columbia, and served as Mayor of Washington from 1830 to 1833.

The engine house to the west of the Van Ness house was erected in 1857 and occupied until about 1931. According to 'Sessford's Annals," where we find this reference: "Franklin Engine House, built on North D between Twelfth and

It was, according to an early account, erected by Everett & Brother, and was used as a blacksmith shop and a coach factory. A writer, who was contemporary with the time, observed that it "was a quaint building for a newspaper office, but quite suitable for making coaches." Entrance to the ground floor of this building, the home of The Evening Star for more than a year, was by two large doors, wide enough for a wagon or carriage to go through. A writer describing this building says:

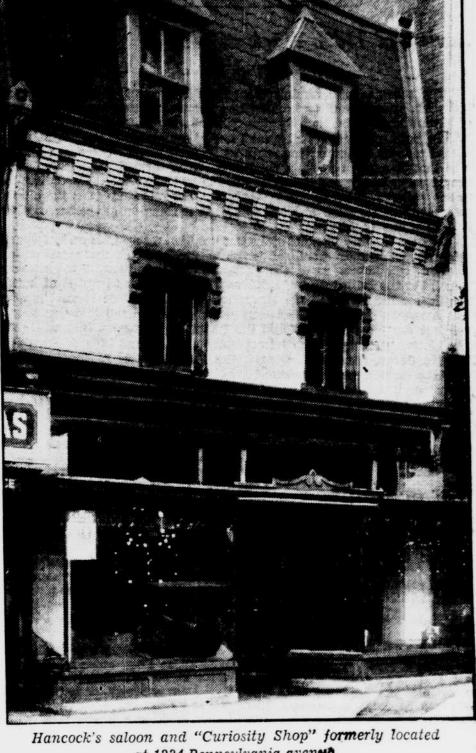

"The office of The Evening Star, upstairs, was compact. Business manager, editor, reporters, compositors were all thrown together in one room. Happy family it was. Three windows in front, the sashes of which extended down to perhaps not more than 1,000 impressions moved to be replaced by the engine an hour, performed its daily mission in a shed adjoining the building in the rear, and manpower was utilized in place home from May, 1853, to September, of steam, which was not adopted until several years later."

In the building at the southwest corner of Twelfth and D streets, was the restaurant of John Baier, in 1878, and here frequently came the thirsty gentry to wet their whistles. It was once the residence of Dr. George A. Carroll.

Station House Replaced

On the west side of Twelfth street, midway of the block, once stood the first police percinct, which, no doubt, is recalled by many evil doers and by many who were just suspected of being evil. This site was first occupied by a station house about 1883, with Lt. Richard A. Arnold in charge. Prior to this, the precinct was located at 414 Tenth street N.W., with Lt. M. A. Some time after this, its number was changed to Precinct No. 1, and here Lt. T. Brooke Amiss held forth for a number of years and when he retired he had the title of captain.

Lt. Arnold, here referred to, was publicly regarded as an unusually efficient officer, though the accusation was made vice in precinct No. 1. This, of course, was brought to the attention of Samuel H. Walker shortly after he was sworn in as major and superintendent of police in 1886. The first thing he tried to do was to clean up the area south of Pennsylvania avenue. A night attack was made on some of the dives then existing in the unsavory neighborhood, and, not so strange to relate, some prominent men, not Washingtonians, were caught in the net. Some one made the statement that these arrests were ordered by the chief for the purposes of influencing legislation in Congress, which he emphatically denied. The result, however, was an investigation and trial of a number of of-

Maj. Walker's resignation, which had been tendered, was accepted. He stayed in office just about five months. The early history of the opposite side of the Avenue from the Post Office Building is also interesting, for here at an early date was a brickyard, followed in the 20s by a frame building. On the corner where The Star office now stands P. L. Duport kept a fancy goods store. Later an exchange office was kept here some time. Then Charles Lauten leased this property in 1845, with the privilege of buying, and was soon embarked in the confectionery business, and as a chef won a high reputation. In the 20s, we are told, there were the grocery store of Joseph Gibson, the book store of Pishey Thompson, the shoe store of James Lymington, the boarding house of Mrs. Arguelles, the residence of Gen. Walter Jones, with his law office, and J. B. Gorman, painter, and near Eleventh street some small buildings. North of the Avenue on Eleventh street were the houses of John Williams, colored; T. J. # Jefferson Sculptor Won Early Fame Here

Mr. Evans studied in the Corcoran School of Art, then in the Art Students' League, New York, and the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Paris. His first serious work was done here in the atelier of the late George Oakley Totten, jr., the wellknown architect, who recognized his talent and foresaw for him a brilliant future. But New York was then the mecca of all professional artists and Mr. Evans, called there by one or more orders, established a studio in or near Greenwich Village, where for many years artists had congregated.

One of his first patrons was Frank A. Vanderlip of whom he did a portrait bust and decorative figures for the garden of his New York estate. He has had an exceptionally successful career and his works have found great favor both among laymen and his professional colleagues. In 1926 he was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and the commission had been awarded for from both, but his work is essentially his own characteristic expression; graceful, finished, correct. To an extent it is traditional but also it is of the present. Exhibiting in the Paris Salon he received a medal and figures by him have been acquired by the French government for the Luxembourg and by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. Here at the Capitol are his statues in bronze of William Jennings Bryan and J. Sterling Morton, and in the Pan-American Building his portrait bust in marble of Gen. Bolivar. The Hall of Fame, New York, has his portraits of George Bancroft, John Greenleaf Whittier, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Grover Cleveland. His statue in bronze of Robert E. Lee is in the Capitol at Richmond. Under private commission he has done portrait busts of Owen D. Young, John D. Rockefeller, jr., and Bernard Baruch. Also he has to his credit several memorials in various parts of the country. Certainly along these lines Mr. Evans has had exceptional experience.

The full length, standing statue of Jefferson, while offering especial opportunity for sculptural expression, also presented uncommon difficulties - chief among which was that of the subject having been so frequently and so well portrayed in the past that, like Washington, his likeness has become fixed in the people's minds and variation from type would create adverse criticism. As the Atheneum portrait by Stuart of Washington is generally accepted as most correct, so the portrait of Jefferson, modeled by Houdon, is universally regarded as typical of the man who more than any other laid the foundations for democracy in this country.

Very wisely, Mr. Evans has followed the Houdon interpretation in the matter of likeness and expression, but he has enlivened the statue he modeled by endowing the figure with animation. making it vigorous but not restless. His Jefferson is seen standing with his weight on his right foot, with face and body on the same line, and looking toward the observer. He wears knee breeches, buttoned waistcoat with high, turnover collar, and a very long fur collared overcoat. Both hands are dropped by his side but in the left he holds a roll of paper, probably an official document. There is a suggestion in the model of the painted portrait by Sully, owned by the American Philosophic Society, but the Evans Jefferson is a younger man in appearance, the idealist, still capable of wielding power. Stuart's portrait is more official, withdrawn, of one exercising leadership but battling with opposition. Nearer to Mr. Evans' conception comes the portrait by Rembrandt Peale which is primarily of the philosopher but also the country gentleman whose hospitality was so renowned that it has become a tradition. No doubt Mr. Evans studied all these his mind, thousands of persons have torian. worked on the idea first.

In shirt sleeves, cutaways, business suits or uniforms, they probe and analyze in Washington, in the 48 States and throughout the world. What they learn is assembled, co-ordinated and evaluated, and finally the essence of their knowledge pours into the White House by cable, telegraph, mail, telephone and in crisp little memoranda which are handed to the President across

In this critical era, a special group of informants are at his elbow, delivering much of this information, serving a purpose apart from that of his cabinet and the heads of the various agencies, who in ordinary times are the President's principal informants.

The names of Donovan, Hopkins, Lubin, Currie, Coy, Mellett and Winant someday probably will intrigue the historians, who will search their secret files to learn why President Roosevelt acted thus and so.

From morning until late at night, he reaches repeatedly into "the basket," repository of nearly all the papers that await his attention. In normal times it is formidable enough, but nowadays it piles up in bales. It is taken with him on trains, on the yacht Potomac, to his office at Hyde Park, to his stateroom during voyages at sea. But it never gets beyond him. When pressed, he always can clear it up in a burst of concentrated, solitary labor.

The rapidity and thoroughness with which he masters the material astounds those who work with him. One of his intimates said that he has a photographic mind—the kind of intellect which can absorb a page of reading matter in the time it takes an ordinary man to read a couple of lines. Yet he doesn't miss a detail of what he reads. And he can recall it years afterwards.

At press conferences-dramatic performances which the President obviously enjoys immensely—he amazes his staff by being able to answer questions on minor details of governmental affairs on which they had no information whatever.

decades was all but publicly shelved. Despite the loss of the Shenandoah in a squall over Ohio in 1925, and the crashes at sea of the Akron in 1933 and the Macon two years later, an expenditure of $3,000,000 was authorized by Congress in 1938 for a new Navy airship approximately the size of the Los Angeles, which, incidentally, was retired for age only last year and was declared structurally sound after 2,700 hours aloft theories the Martin company, builder of during seven years active service. An appropriation of $500,000 actually was made for the new craft, but uncertainties as to the size and type delayed the work and the money reverted to the Treasury before plans were even drawn. The glistening giant which slid down the ramp of the Glenn L. Martin Co. on Middle River yesterday morning will, in a way, replace it.

The Mars, with its 200-foot wingspread and 117-foot hull, is the product of five years of research and planning. Until the Macon dropped into the sea off the West Coast six years ago, she was only an idea in the back of the minds of Department of Aeronautics officials. The Shenandoah and Akron had met tragic ends, to be sure, but the Los Angeles was older than either of them and still in regular operation. Moreover, the Germans were stressing dirigible development and establishing long-distance records periodically with their Graf Zeppelin and Hindenburg. The dirigible, vulnerable and slow as it might be, seemed to have a definite strategic value with its long range and reliability.

Whether it was the investigation following the Macon crash or something else, the following year the Navy asked for designs of a large flying boat with moderate speed, long cruising range and a larger carrying capacity than had hitherto been dreamed of.

"Not so many years ago," explained Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of the Navy Department Bureau of Aeronautics, "it was seriously contended by competent aviation engineers that the ultimate limit for aircraft was a range of about 4,500 miles. It seems a little ridiculous today, but at the time it was made 10 or 15 years ago, when wooden construcseeing that all communications are in tion and relatively low-octane fuels were order and properly prepared before they the foundation of the opinion, it seemed pretty sound.

The huge German DO-X with its 12 motors of 400 horsepower each had less power than the new plane launched vesterday, with only four motors. It was decided to take our eyes off the ground of immediate practicable development and raise them toward the horizon of the future.

"Our calculations for stress and strain. our aerodynamic tables, we knew, were correct for aircraft of the size we already had built, but would they hold for a ship much larger? No one could say. A machine tool, briefly, is a machine that does the work of a tool—a planing, cutting or drilling tool. For example, a planer shaves a slab of steel down to within a thousand of an inch of the thickness specified by blueprints. It would take weeks to do this by hand.

A machine tool seems an unromatic hunk of steel until you talk to B. A. Getz, sales manager of the Simmons Machine Tool Corp. plant, and watch a 15-ton crane roll along on its rails under the tall roof of the Simmons shop with

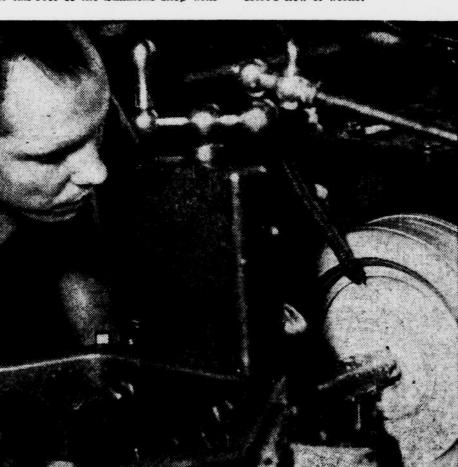

By Howard Dobson.

A few weeks ago, Simmons received that old machine, so rusty you couldn't read the builder's name stamped into the frame; a few days from now it will be in a defense plant.

The story is this: In about one-fourth the time necessary to build a new machine tool, you can rebuild into an old one the accuracy and speed the machine had when it was

Charles A. Simmons has been doing it since, as a mechanic with greasegrimed fingers 30 years ago, he started a business on a single abandoned metal

Six United States companies do most of the machine tool rebuilding, and the Simmons plant in Albany does more than any two others. By the end of the year, founder and President Simmons says, his plant will have put back into defense production about $7,000,000 worth of rebuilt machine tools. They were worth about $16,000,000 when new.

A Canadian tank plant needed a 10foot planer and only one American firm would take the order to build one-if the tank plant could wait 14 months. Experts in Simmons' section of O. P. M. in Washington found a 40-year-old planer and in less than 14 weeks the Simmons plant had completely rebuilt the machine and put it into production in production, Simmons experts say, is about 20 years. Rebuilders guarantee another 20 and claim a rebuilt machine is superior because its castings have finished the slight stretching and warping that can throw a new one enough out of line to ruin its work. Simmons, a pioneer in his business, was called to Washington by the O. P. M. over a year ago to head its division of rebuilt machine tools. The air was blue with talk about "retooling," "tooling up" and machine tool bottlenecks. Grabbing a telephone in each hand and jumping machine shop operators out of their shoes from coast to coast, he began to dig up rusty old machines everybody had forgotten. He sent his own ace salesman, George Long, out to make a survey of unused machines, and Long found machines the Government didn't know it owned takes time out to shed its skin. At last the little caterpillar loafer decides to get down to work and make silk. He climbs on a bare branch and spits out a filmly thread, winding it around him at the rate of 65 head motions per minute, or a total of 300,000 his eggs from cold storage so that his nods to build his cocoon in about three worms may hatch, much as he has done

> Cocoons to be used for silk are, after eight days, placed within an oven fired at a temperature slightly lower than the boiling point for water, to slay the inclosed chrysalides. Moths will emerge from the other cocoons in about a fortnight. Domesticated through thousands of years the female moth cannot fly at all, and her mate gives a poor performance. When the two are placed together eggs will be laid within a few hours after the moths have emerged, and the life cycle of the silkworm will have been rounded out within one and campaign to raise silk on a big scale, competent organization and generous financing would be imperative. Orchards should be planted, since the Oriental mulberry leaf makes a better food than the common American variety. And, much more important, industry would have to set up plants to reel threads from the cocoons. Once this is done, the weaving industry already exists.

A reeling industry would require entirely new machinery, and in this fact may be found the catch. For competition would arise with the new but existing industry which makes artificial silk from "coal and air" and other improbable substances

Recognizing the momentum of such competition, Mr. Keleher concedes it is entirely possible that commercial silk production here will remain what it is now-a vision. If so, he is content to boost silkworm culture as a hobby.

Ants Are Warriors Bombyx mori is assuredly the aristocrat of all insects. The ant leads a more industrious life, but its races still war among themselves, almost as if they were human. The butterfly is more handsome, but it bursts from a cocoon of the shoddiest material. The bee caters to man's base hunger, not his love of beauty in clothing and tapestry.

Besides, the bee stings. The silkworm traces his productive ancestry at least as far back as 2,640 years before Christ's birth, when a Chinese emperor's wife, Si-ling, tended worms with her own hands. China guarded its worms with such an air of secrecy that Japan could not discover the art of raising them until the third century A. D. A princess anxious to carry the industry into India stole eggs and mulberry seed over the border in her headdress, tradition says.

Bombyx mori progressed to the Western world when two Persian monks brought silkworm eggs to Constantinople concealed in a hollow cane. That was about 550 A. D., and from contents of the bamboo tube were produced the races of silkworm which stocked Europe and Asia Minor for more than 1,200 years, according to historians. Many an American has sworn he could grow rich in a season by raising the silkworm. When a mania swept the country in 1838 mulberry trees were planted in every garden patch. In Pennsylvania as much as $300,000 for seedlings changed hands in a single

Lamenting such crazes, the Department of Agriculture began scientific experiments under a $15,000 appropriation in 1884. Correspondents in many parts of the country were set raising worms. The most pressing problem, of reeling silk from the cocoons, was tackled in 1902 when machines were imported, together with handsome French and Italian girls whose instruction of American women proved that workers here could quickly learn to create silken thread. Into this scene in 1884 walked young Mr. Keleher, a native of Washington, whose first job was that of office boy. He recalls that the department's division during this time that his insects do not of entomology then had about seven suffer from indigestion, dropsy or employees; now it is a vast bureau. A pebrine. ### Civic Problems, Civic Bodies

U.S. Obligation Seen in Highway Cure; Welfare Board Backed Over City Heads

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Last Monday the District day in the House of Representatives yielded a single crop of one bill-that for rent control. The bill, as passed, was substantially as agreed upon by the local citizens and the House District Committee with the variation by an amendment offered on the floor by Representative Patman, Democrat, of Texas. This amendment would introduce a complicated course of procedure which would defeat largely the purpose of the bill.

The Senate District Committee held a hearing on the House rent-control bill on Thursday. The first witness was Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee, who explained that his assent to the Patman amendment was due to the lack of a quorum of the House at the time. Consequently a point of no quorum would have blocked passage of the bill. Citizen groups made earnest pleas to the Senate Committee to eliminate the amendment.

The Senate late Tuesday confirmed the nomination of Gregory Hankin for membership on the Public Utilities Commission. He was sworn in by Justice Justin Miller of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia yesterday. It is understood that Mr. Hankin will begin to function tomorrow as a member of the commission. This will be the first time the District has had a functioning Public Utilities Commission since the death of Riley E. Elgin, last February.

While there is now a legal quorum on the commission for the transaction of business complete agreement between the two members will be necessary. The law provides for a commission of three members with action by majority. With one vacancy the commission may find itself deadlocked and still an impotent body.

Much important District legislation is on the committee calendars of both the Senate and House District Committees with only indefinite promise of early action. The situation is due to the fact that members of the District's "common council and board of aldermen" are busy with the affairs of the Nation or doing errands for their constituents.

Fiscal Equity—the Key to Solving Highway Problems The hearing on the proposed gasoline tax increase, off-street parking of motor vehicles and related subjects continued through several forenoons last week.

The hearing continued to accumulate in the record much data and many suggestions of value. The citizen viewpoint was shown to be favorable to the proposed highway plan, but dissent was general from the idea to finance through an increased gasoline tax. Both the Board and Trade and the Federation of Citizens' Associations were emphatic in their objections to such financing. These bodies are also on record as opposing any increase of taxation at this time and for holding appropriations within present available revenues.

These and other organizations also hold that there is a distinct and logical obligation on the part of the Federal Government to bear an equitable part of the financial burden. The obligation in the present instance is considered even more pronounced and greater than the regular annual continuing obligation.

The idea, prevailing among some of the folk on Capitol Hill, that the District of Columbia community has long neglected to carry on the work of improving its highways so as to take care of rapidly expanding traffic is challenged by civic leaders. They point to the fact that District taxpayers have paid, without serious question, all taxes which have been imposed upon them by a Congress in which they are not represented. They have also shown that at times the Congress has failed to appropriate for highway improvements from large accumulated amounts collected from the taxpayers for that specific purpose.

Highway and other unmet Capital needs have been permitted to accumulate by the inaction of Congress and not by the District taxpayers. And, while the cost of operating, maintaining, expanding and beautifying the National Capital has increased tremendously the amount of the Federal payment has continued to shrink to a very small proportion. The mounting costs have been and are now due, in large measure, to expansion of the Federal establishment but appeals for the payment of a fair Federal share have been in ong interesting features of the testimony at the hearing was a suggestion that a 2-cent gasoline tax might not yield so large an amount as a 1-cent tax. This thought was based upon the idea that with a 2-cent tax dealers in Maryland and Virginia, by reason of their lower operating costs, would be able to undersell District gasoline dealers. In this way the District would lose the entire 4-cent tax on millions of gallqns of gasoline.

Figures presented by Baxter Smith, chairman of the Safety Committee of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, showed that many of the States having high gasoline taxes divert a large part of the tax to other than highway and traffic uses. Taking this fact into consideration, together with the large yield in the District of Columbia and limited highway mileage, he held that the local "earmarked" tax is really larger for highway and related uses than in some of the States with a higher rate.

Teamwork Required for the Aged and Infirm

Solution of the problem of the proper housing and care for the present and future inmates of the Home for the Aged and Infirm is somewhat beclouded by a misunderstanding between the Board of Public Welfare and the District Commissioners. The present is the second recent clash between that unpaid board of public spirited citizens and the Commissioners.

Whether or not these clashes of opinion and authority are the part of an old plan to discredit and abolish the citizen boards and vest their authority in the Commissioners has not been disclosed. It is understood, however, that in some quarters there is a desire to follow that part of the Griffenhagen plan.

The Commissioners are understood to favor the immediate erection of a new home, presumably on a new site, and a new ward at Gallinger Hospital to care for the bed-ridden cases requiring hospitalization. The Commissioners also favor the immediate repair and improvement of the present home.

The Board of Public Welfare favors the new ward at Gallinger Hospital and the immediate repair, renovation and improvement of the present home. They however would postpone the erection of a new home until it can be known what relief will be had from the new hospital ward and the boarding out of some of the inmates.

The board has been berated because of the suggestion of what is called the "farming out" of the old folks. The chairman of the board explains that such boarding out would be only in cases in which it would be for the best interests of the old persons in question. If they wanted to live with friends or relatives and it could be arranged satisfactorily and be helpful to the inmate then, and then only, would such a course be followed.

The visit of Mrs. Roosevelt to the home brought conditions into the spotlight, but these conditions were well known for years to the committees of Congress and succeeding boards of District Commissioners. Some citizens who have been following welfare problems closely believe that there is no occasion to rush pell mell into the building of a new institution.

Such an institution, say the wise ones, should provide for the segregation of the distinct types of inmates. Old married couples are now required to be separated through assignment to male and female dormitories. It is a cruel hardship on old couples, who have been living together for many years, to be separated in their last

Light occupations might be provided for any who are able and who would be helped by having some regular task and responsibility. Entertainment of various kinds should be provided and by all means the spiritual needs of these old folks should be ministered to by a regular chaplain or other means.

The idea of all of the District public welfare and penal institutions being under the control of a board of reputable, public spirited citizens was arrived at through no accident. It came about in a regular process of welfare evolution and was instituted only after mature study and deliberation. That the system has made good is the belief of most of the informed citizens. The citizens who have unselfishly given their time as board members to this civic service are due the grateful appreciation of the community.

The board members are appointed by the Commissioners for fixed terms and it has been suggested that if the present make-up of the board is unsatisfactory the present Commissioners and their predecessors are alone to blame.

To some citizens it appears that the Board of Public Welfare members and not the Commissioners have taken the most practical position for the immediate handling of this important problem.

Time to Plan Your Part in Community Chest Campaign Next Thursday is the day on which the campaign for the 1942 Community Chest opens. It is therefore the immediate job for all patriotic and public spirited citizens.

Throughout the country hundreds of thousands of good citizens have without pay been preparing for this annual appeal to finance, in one single campaign, the welfare and character-building agencies. Throughout the Nation the Community Chest or Community Fund method is followed for financing the urgently needed agencies of their communities.

This is the modern, efficient way of doing this job. Through this method much of the burden of fund raising is done away with and at the same time the reduced cost of the single campaign and centralized handling increases the available portion of each dollar for the specific work for which contributed.

Subscriptions should be as large as a person can possibly make them. They are to support numerous agencies for an entire year.

Citizens Map Zoning Stand For Hearing

Boarding House Plan to Come Up December 3

By JOHN W. THOMPSON, Jr. Civic organizations are now mapping their stand on tentative proposals to relax zoning regulations to permit boarding and rooming houses to operate temporarily in "A" restricted and semi-restricted areas for the duration of the national emergency.

Basic plea behind the suggested relaxation is that it will provide an answer to the housing shortage here for defense workers.

Realizing that the change is a radical deviation from general zoning policy, the Zoning Commission has not made up its own mind on the matter and is definitely looking to the public hearing December 3 for a complete expression of public opinion.

While zoning authorities are withholding all opinion until after the hearing, it is unofficially believed a concerted opposition would be sufficient to kill the proposal. To get the matter before the citizens the commission has drafted tentative amendments to the present zoning regulations which, under the Zoning Act, requires a public hearing. Specifically, the changes would: Opinions Split on Issue. 1. Permit persons who obtained special permit from the building office to operate boarding and rooming houses in "A" restricted and semi-restricted areas for the duration of the emergency or in any event not beyond December 31, 1943. 2. Subject persons operating such houses in those areas after the expiration date to the penalties prescribed in the Zoning Act for violations of regulations

3. Would terminate the permission whenever the President declared an end to the state of national emergency or the December 31, 1943, date, whichever comes

Leaders in the Federation of Citizens' Associations clashed on the issue at their last meeting when Chairman Leon Pretzfelder of the Zoning Committee sought instructions from the delegates on how to represent them at the December 3 hearing. He moved approval of the proposal on the ground that it was an emergency proposition with adequate safeguard against permanency. A motion to recommit the matter to the Zoning Committee carried and effectively killed Federation representation on that particular issue since the next Federation meeting is December 6-three days after the hearing. In general, the argument for the suggested amendments breaks down into the need for temporary housing by a large number of persons ve of the Washington Military brought here by the defense activities of the Capital, which need is dent of a board of officers to ex- expected to evaporate after the amine young men from the District emergency. It is contended that of Columbia to determine their fit- many persons in the A restricted ness for appointment in the Officers' and semi-restricted areas already Reserve Corps, and to conduct the are operating rooming and boarding houses in a limited way on the "Q. T.," and that the proposed changes would only legalize an existing situation. It has even been argued that persons taking in roomers in these residential areas during the emergency are performing a patriotic duty and should be encouraged rather than discouraged. Destroys Zoning Basis. On the opposition side, it is contended that the proposal destroys the fundamental basis of zoning and would injure the values of property purchased in the belief it would be free from such operations. There is no assurance that the regulation might not be extended at its expiration date, or that any large scale checkup would be made to close up Military Intelligence Department the houses when expiration is orofficers will meet Wednesday eve- dered, opponents argue. To comply with rooming house laws regarding tical problems and public relations. fire escapes and the like would require investment by the landlord he might be unwilling to see lost at the expiration date.

> Change in the character of the neighborhood is generally considered the easiest basis for asking a rezoning, say opponents, and even temporary concentration of a large number of rooming and boarding houses in a given area, with attendant financial tie-ups from changes to the building to turn it into a rooming establishment, might eventually be pleaded, they say, as just cause for changing the zoning and making permanent the change. Supporters of the suggested amendments, however, say the exodus of population after the emergency will not leave enough persons here to make continued operation attractive or profitable.

The hearing December 3 will be primarily on the relaxation amendments, it was announced, and will not include discussion of the recently proposed amendment to the Zoning Act to give the commission power to compel provision of offstreet parking facilities by all new construction in the District.

Concensus is that this latter proposal requires congressional authorization and until such authorization might be granted will not be the subject of public hearings by the Zoning Commission. In the event of passage by Congress of such authorization, any regulations drawn under the authorization would be the subject of public discussion, it was said. The Federation approved this compulsory proviso of off-street parking requirement. At the outset there was some question as to whether the boarding house proposal might not also require congressional authorization. but after two sessions of discussion the Zoning Commission believed the situation could best be handled by commission regulations. Under present rules not more than two paying roomers are permitted in homes in A restricted and semi-restricted

The ideal class consists of a maximum of no more than 30 children, 25 being a more workable number. But I venture to state that there are very few classes except, perhaps, in the vocational schools, where the number is below 30. In fact, classes of 45 and 50 are not

Mme. Melius Plans Campaign for Opera Company in Capital

Government Should Provide Building, Soprano Says

A national opera company should be organized in Washington now, and the Federal Government should provide it an appropriate theater building, Mme. Luella Melius, operatic soprano, contended in an interview here.

Mme. Melius refused to accept the view of many that such cultural projects have little chance of achievement during the current emergency. She argued that such diversions as opera are important to maintenance of a healthy civilian morale to a greater degree now than at any other time.

"Streamlined" opera by American artists is her plan. Thousands who love the arias shy away from performances because of their length and long conversational passages, she pointed out, but would enjoy abridgements requiring not more than two hours to present. She said such programs could become selfsupporting after early financing in home nursing will be held at the by the Government.

Reaction Sought.

Mme. Melius indicated she had been given encouragement for her proposal, but explained she wanted to get the reaction of as many individuals and groups as possible before beginning an intensive cama book review. Miss Clara Hickman paign for support in Government

"The people must back a national opera in the long run," she said. When a theater was built, management of the national opera would begin assembling a company of

War Victims in Moscow Hospital Cheerful Despite Painful Wounds, U.S. Writer Finds

(Twelfth of a Series.) By RALPH INGERSOLL.

War sometimes seems an impersonal thing until you meet the wounded. The first Russian wounded I saw were in a hospital on the edge of Moscow. It was a hospital for head wounds. Dr. Graschenko who was in charge is a scientist with an international reputation. Before the war he used to come to experimental medicine. There were as many doctors as patients in this hospital because it used to be devoted to research. We drove out there one morning, Jenny Leshchinskaia, my interpreter, and I, after some telephoning. The hospital was an unassuming building and there was a long hat rack in porter showed us into Dr. Graschenko's office. Its walls were hung with American doctors with whom he had worked. He came bustling in a few minutes later, still in an operating gown. He was a quiet, cheerful man with very kindly eyes. We sat for a while and talked about his work, in English. There were about 100 cases in his hospital-he took only difficult cases and discharged them to less specialized hospitals as rapidly as possible. Most of his patients were flown to him from the front. He said he hadn't known much about wounds

Bandages Not Romantic. It was a hot day and most of Dr. Graschenko's patients were stripped to the waist. The bandages on their heads did not make them look romantic. The bandages just looked wholly inappropriate. I felt angry standing looking at them. I thought, people had no business cracking young men's heads open. I thought Baltimore to lecture on his specialty, other trite things such as that one minute each of these men had been absolutely whole, full of his life and plans for living.

A second later he had begun to live his new life, of hopes that he might partially regain his speech, get back his eyesight, be able to move his legs again.

For now I saw what Dr. Graschenthe hall for the doctors' things. A ko had explained to me, that in a head but the real damage may be whole had no feeling in one side, or the eyes could not see or the tongue make speech. The hospital seemed very well equipped although there were no screens on the windows and there were many flies in the rooms. But you could tell it was a fine hospital from how carefully and cleanly the wounds were dressed, from the precise delicacy with which the nurses handled the patients and from the whole atmosphere which was competent, reassuring and kindly.

I saw Dr. Graschenko only once again, the day before I left, when I met him at Voks and I asked him how the boy who suffered so much was-the one who was being given the codeine electrically through the skin. He said, "He's definitely bethead wound the bandage is on the ter. The codeine takes effect in 30 minutes now. Sometimes we can anywhere. The body that looked so keep him asleep for several hours."

I went to church when I was in Moscow. I had no trouble. It was, now I come to think of it, almost the only institution I was to visit in tients and we began to talk-with Russia without having to make the patients who could talk-and arrangements in advance. I simply asked my interpreter-secretary for the address of the nearest church. She gave it to me, and I got into my car and drove around to it.

She did not know what denomination it was. It turned out to be Catholic. The driver took me about half mile from the hotel. We turned off an avenue into a side street. I saw half a dozen cars parked by a gateway leading into a courtyard. all seemed to like each other and to in the courtyard. There were 10 or 15 more cars parked

LEAVING THE NAVY IN HIS WAKE—The camera not only catches Fullback Fred Evans on his way to the touchdown that sunk Navy's football team yesterday in Baltimore Stadium, 20 to 13, but it reveals how Notre Dame blocked for its ball carriers when the chips were down. As Evans nears the finish of his 6-yard dash, all of Navy's 11 would-be tacklers form a picture of frustration as the Irish blockers do their work. Star of the game, Passer Angelo Bertelli, set up this touchdown, as he did the other pair for Notre Dame, with one of 12 completed passes good for a total of 232 yards.

The Meeting Momentus Along the Gowanus

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Time was when a baseball or a football team could invade Brooklyn with firm steps and light hearts. Brooklyn was just a sprawling suburb of New York and usually good for a few laughs. counted in the win column as much as a triumph over the Giants, Cubs. Bears, Cardinals, Tigers and the other big menageries of the pro grid and Fordham, 0.

Jock, of course, is the more formally known Dr. John Bain Sutherland. He takes over when Leo the Lip rips off his sweaty flannels and heads for California, where he plays golf in a cream-colored slack suit. Jock is the Dodger football coach. And tomorrow he will play host to the fans had lost faith in the oft-beaten Washington Redskins in the game outstanding on the pro grid schedule. It should be a lively party.

Bears, Packers Also Awaiting the Redskins

The good burghers of the borough are very excited over the prospects. They have come out of the hiding places they've inhabited since the World Series and they are storming the gates of Ebbetts Field. After a singularly slow start the Dodgers are rolling. They have a chance-indeed, a very excellent chance—of winning the Eastern title. The only reward, of course, is the opportunity to be ham-strung by the Chicago Bears or the Green a chilling blow today. Bay Packers but what punishment is this compared to having to play the

As for the Redskins, they are on the spot. They have achieved the Eastern leadership at a time when remaining commitments call for them to oppose the Dodgers, Bears, Packers and Eagles. All they wall of humanity from the Fordham have to play, after tomorrow, are the lowly Pittsburgh Steelers (twice),

Giants May Be Feeling Long, Hard Pace

Nobody in football is so great that he can spare a sneer toward Dr. John Bain Sutherland. As for our Ray Flaherty, he is a modest man. He knows that Dr. Sutherland knows his football. Moreover, Mr. Flaherty has heard tell of this fellow, Ace Parker.

The meeting should be momentous because both Mr. Flaherty and Dr. Sutherland have brought their teams along with studied care and Pitt's great back from Scranton. Tomorrow is a day both teams should be at white heat.

Meanwhile, across the Gowanus the New York Giants will be entertaining the Detroit Lions. After leading all season, the Giants slipped back into second place last Sunday following a defeat by the lowly Chicago Cardinals. It was the second straight setback for Mara Tech and lends credence to the theory that the Giants were brought along running and a 28-yard pass to Wild too fast at the start and now are feeling the strain. Moral Is: Don't Get Halasmen Mad

But the Giants can regain the lead tomorrow by polishing off the Lions while the Dodgers slap down the Redskins. If this happened the Redskins would just about be out of the running because on the two largely following Sundays they will be called upon to play the Chicago Bears and the Green Bay Packers. In the Western half tomorrow will be no such important engagements. The new inland leaders, Curly Lambeau's Packers, have an open date. The Bears will play the Cleveland Rams, whom they expect 1939, that Fordham had been held day Doolan was on the bench when to smash by almost any score they name, especially after blowing that one

If anything, the Bears should be more dangerous than ever from now on. It was the same way last season. The Bears were good but not terrific until that afternoon the Redskins eked out a strange, 7-to-3 decision. Practically all of the ground-gaining was done by the referee as he penalized the Bears for everything from clipping to having George

That made the Bears good and mad. The next weeks they scored 47 points on the Rams, 31 on the Cards, and 73 against the Redskins in the championship play-off.

There was nothing tainted about Gutshall set up the second Indian Hoyas would not be denied and marched right back to punch over the marker.

A beautiful high, spiralling punt by Bernie Ulman seemingly had extricated Maryland from its difficult position, but Dornfeld partly nullified the kick with a neat 14-yard runback to the Terps' 34-yard line. A double pass, Ben Reiges to Lou Falcone to Art Lemke who took the ball around his knees on the dead run, brought the Hoyas to the 3 where Maryland dug in for another do-or-die stand. A pass missed fire and Doolan and able to reach only the 1-yard line on a reverse before Ben Bulvin faked another pass and ran the width of the field for the score, barely squeezing into the end

A 69-yard quick-kick by Dornfeld that rolled dead on the Terps' 11 arranged the trappings for the next score. Ironically Jack Wright had caught the Hoyas napping on a similar play only a moment before and a clipping penalty against Georgetown had set it back on its own 20. Dornfeld's boot erased all

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 .- Primed to upset the Dodgers and thus retain their newly acquired leadership of the Eastern division, the Redskins made final preparations for tomorrow's game behind closed doors tonight, with plans for avenging last year's 16-14 setback at Ebbets Field the central topic Ray Flaherty's warriors will en-with a half-game lead over the ever-contending Giants. But another reversal like 1940's probably would cost them the top rung of the sectional ladder, inasmuch as the New Yorkers are favorites to turn back the Detroit Lions in another league game here at the Polo Grounds. Stressing the fact that the Dodgers would go "all out" in an effort to keep from being practically eliminated from the Eastern title chase, Flaherty sounded a warning to the Redskins to pay as much attention to the Brooklyn ends as to the enemy's more highly touted backs-Ace Parker, Pug Manders, Dean Mc-Adams, Bill Leckonby, et al. Current statistics show that three Dodger ends-Perry Schwartz, Eddie Rucinski and Herman Hodgesall have caught more passes than Dick Todd, the Redskins' chief re-

Woman Golf Leaders Favor Remeasuring of Courses and Raising Handicaps

None in District Up To 5 Rating, Avers Association Head

Some Refuse to Submit Their Best Scores. Mrs. Weible Holds

Feminine golfers, members of the active Women's District Golf Association, have more than the usual busy off-season period ahead for them if all the fuss currently being made about handicap results in action by the association.

Mrs. Walter L. Weible, president of the association, thinks there should be action which would revise handicaps upward. So does Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, Maryland state champion, a 1-handicap player, and probably the most consistent golfer around town over a 10-year stretch. "Many of our courses have incorrect par ratings," says Mrs. "Practically all of them should be remeasured. I am sure this will bring the par ratings down and the handicaps up.

"I do not think we have a woman golfer around Washington who consistently can play to better than a five handicap against a correctly measured course," says Mrs. Meckley. Yet Mrs. Meckley and Mrs. Myron Davy, the new Middle Atlantic champion, both have ratings of a single stroke. They do not play consistently to this rating. If they did, for example, Mrs. Meckley would play Kenwood, her home course, in 74 all the time, and Mrs. Davy would play Columbia in 77. Women's par for Kenwood and Columbia is 73 and 76.

Withhold Best Scores.

Arrayed against the thought of these women is the attitude, as described by Mrs. Weible, of some women who, she says, refuse to turn in their low scoring cards because they fear their handicaps will be lowered. "We have many cases of that," says the association president. "Many of our players do not turn in their best scores."

Mrs. Weible would have the courses of all member clubs of the Women's District Golf Association remeasured as quickly as possible. and would go over the handicap list with a fine tooth comb to insure more accurate handicapping next Par for the 13 member clubs is as follows: Argyle, 76; Army Navy, 76; Belle Haven, 75; Beaver Dam. 77: Columbia, 76: Chevy Chase, 77; Congressional, 77; Kenwood, 73; Woodmont, 77; Manor, 74; Indian Spring, 75; Washington, 75; Ban-too high," says Mrs. Weible. "We opening minute of the final period, base our handicap system on the ending the drive which followed system used by the United States the kickoff after the third Eagle This provides for counter the average best scores with 80 per cent of the difference between that average and the average of par. But when the par is too high the handicaps are too high."

Take Opposite Views. Mrs. Meckley claims that her handicap of 1 stroke is ridiculously low compared with the handicans of feminine golfers in her class from other cities. But Mrs. Myron Davy, a 1-stroke handicap player (she is nearly a scratch golfer) is pleased with her low handicap and would like to lower it. She plays more golf in outside tournaments than any other local woman, and she says her low handicap here obtains desirable pairings for her in outside events. Some of the fuss now going on has to do with scores made by a couple of the top linkswomen around town which, it seems, were not turned in for handicap purposes. There's little doubt that a genuine attempt will be made during the winter to remeasure the courses accurately and bring about a revision of handicaps.

Despite the low score the game was interesting and well-played with both teams producing several outstanding stars. Tech relied mainly on sophomores and several gave indication of being of big help to the 1942 Maroons. Among them was Jim Brooksbank, playing his first game for Tech after spending the previous part of this season on the unior eleven. A short, stocky halfback, Jim proved a valuable plunger and kicker as well as a good pass receiver. As a safety man he also played well and ran back several

That was what Jim Brutz,

Most of the high-ranking Navy officials sat near the colorful midshipmen section in mid-field, with generous sprinklings of important administration officials from Washington, and enough chrysanthemums for a dozen wholesale florists.

Across the way in the day's biggest grid attraction were the Notre Dame contingent and 100piece band, a small but enthusiastic gang that-just like the team-never gave up when the going was toughest.

There was Jesse H. Jones, Secretary of Commerce; Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture: Frank C. # Veteran Furr Facing Puncher in Harkins Here Tomorrow

Fitness for 10-Rounder Uncertain, but Phil Still Fights Smartly

The old, familiar battle cry, "And in this cornah—Phil Furr," will echo through the rafters at Turner's Arena tomorrow night and into the spotlight will prance the ancient war horse for another bow and another bout, this time with Wickey Harkins of Philadelphia.

It's a 10-round duel Furr is letting himself in for and the wonder of it is that he can stand up that long. much less cope with a character of Harkins' ability. Phil is no schoolboy and time has taken the inevitable toll of his speed, reflexes and punching power. SECOND RACE - MISTING, INSCOLIAN, AIR MAR-SHAL. MISTING still is a maiden, but the Ladkin filly has three good seconds to her credit, and she could master this sort. INSCO-LIAN was right there in both of his Pimlico tries. AIR MARSHAL has some good form to give him a chance here.

THIRD RACE - CHEER ME, CHALLANTE, UNKNOWN

LAND. CHEER ME scored in her last two Laurel outings, and in her present condition the filly must be given the call. CHALLANTE has been raced into condition. and she could have a lot to say about the result. UNKNOWN LAND has speed, and she is a threat.

FIFTH RACE - PARMA, CHUCKATUCK, GULLIVER

PARMA copped at the United Hunts meeting last week, and he may be able to defeat this clever jump opposition. CHUCKA-TUCK wins his share, and he rates in the first flight. GULLI-VER II won at Laurel, and he could be in the thick of it.

SIXTH RACE-SWABIA, PO-MAYYA, STROLLING IN. SWABIA has a win at this point and at Laurel to her credit, and she will be hard to dispose of in this small field. POMAYYA just failed to click in her first at this point and should be dangerous. STROLLING IN is ready for brackets.

SEVENTH RACE—BEST SELL-ER, OBASH, DARK DIS-COVERY.

BEST SELLER has improved greatly in recent weeks, and if he is sent back after Saturday's triumph he should register. OBASH has been working well and should be traveling fast in the late stretch. DARK DISCOV-ERY ran second to Market Wise at Jamaica.

EIGHTH RACE - RESOLUTE II, GEN L, STARLIKE. RESOLUTE II has worked well since arriving at this point, and he could be the one to earn the honors. GEN L has fair form to his credit, and he could be the main contention. STARLIKE has good New York form to rechanged him in this affair.

October Rail Volume 11.9 Per Cent Ahead Of 1940 Month

By EDWARD C. STONE.

More evidence of the present business boom in the Capital was disclosed yesterday in the October report of the Railway Express Agency, which revealed three new records in shipments.

According to Supt. C. W. Turner, shipments handled by the Washington office in October numbered 216.314, compared with 193,236 in the class "A" and 51.1 per cent of dividend requirements to $3.79 a 1940, an increase of 23,078, or 11.9 per cent, the highest total for any month this year and for any other October on record.

The third record was registered in the first nine months of 1941. when shipments in and out of Washington reached 1.871.468, as compared with 1,606,620 in the corresponding period last year, a sharp upswing of 264,848 shipments, Mr. Turner said

So far this year every month has so far this year every month has found shipments well ahead of the same month a year ago, comparisons being as follows:

Defense Bond Sales Mount. Officials at the City Post Office reported last night that interest in the purchase of United States savings bonds and stamps is growing steadily among Government workers and others, as shown by the sales figures for October.

The number of bonds sold at the main office and substations reached 9 438 which was a gain of 731 bonds over the 8.707 sold in September. The value of the bonds in October was $364.856.25, which was $656.25 less than in September. The records show that fewer large bonds were sold but that interest in the lower cars and trucks in the United States denominations is increasing rap-

Sales of Defense stamps totaled $320,101,40, a sharp advance of $23,-241.65 over September when sales amounted to $296.859.75. Sales were nearly $100.000 better than in August when the total stood at $237,-495.35. Officials were very much pleased with the October sales in both the stamps and bonds, explaining that the voluntary plan in Government offices is meeting with

The dip, if these men are guessing correctly, will be a product of the changeover from a partial to a full

It will spring from a shortage of many kinds of goods for civilian use and from a shift of the Nation's labor supply from primary concern with normal production to a situation in which half or more of the country's productive effort may eventually go to war purposes.

These observers believe it will be short, though it might be rather sharp while it lasts-a kind of "dipsy-do" in the long line on the chart which marks the climb of production since the start of the

A third reason for expecting that the business and production pace may slacken a little soon, experts here say, is the amount of durable consumers' goods"-automobiles, washers, vacuum cleaners, household appliances - which the buying public has absorbed in recent months because of fear of shortages or higher prices.

Price Ceiling Rule Helps

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 .- A ruling by the Government clearing up many complaints about the retroactive clause of the cotton cloth price ceiling attracted more interest than any other development in textile markets this week.

The amendment to the price schedule allows contracts concluded before July 21 to be settled at levels called for when the spot cotton market sells at 15.99 cents a pound. Some statisticians here have been figuring temporary displacements at 2.000,000 men, and this is concededly a guess, which may be either high or low. But any such number of men out of work for a few months it is suggested, would almost surely find reflection in the movement of

They expect the demand for this kind of goods to be subnormal for a few months. # Autumn Season Rivals June as Most Popular Time for Weddings

Miss Margaret Lansdowne Becomes Bride of Mr. John C. Hunt In Ceremony at Cathedral

By MARGARET HART,

Society turned its almost undivided attention yesterday on brides as the many impressive ceremonies in churches in the Capital emphasized the rivalry between June and the autumn season as the most popular. wedding time. Happily, the curtailment of elaborate social functions has not so far effected the plans of our bonnie autumn brides. The customary receptions following the ceremonies are quite as lavish as in less distressing times and the dresses and flowers of the bridal parties follow traditions of the fashionable brides of other years.

Officials, Diplomats and Many From Residential Set Attend.

Officials, diplomats and scores from the town's old residential set thronged the Washington Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul yesterday for the wedding of Miss Margaret Lansdowne to Mr. John Conway Hunt, and then met again later at the Sulgrave Club to extend to the young couple their wishes for happiness.

To mention a few of the many guests, the Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone occupied one of the front pews and from the diplomatic set present were the Ambassador of Peru. Senor Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander; the Ambassador of Argentina and Senora de Espil, the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten Ponthoz, the

Washington Debutantes Preparing to Make Bows During Thanksgiving

Many Planning to Attend Bachelor's Cotillion Next Month in Baltimore

By MONA DUGAS.

Thanksgiving holidays are almost upon us, and already the debuantes who are away at school are making plans for the festivities which will mark their days at home. Not so far in the distance, either, is the Bachelor's Cotillion in Baltimore, which is to be held the first Monday of next month. As has been the case for so many years Washington buds again will hold much of the attention at this gathering.

Miss Eileen Erwin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, will be one of those going to the Baltimore Cotillion, and Miss Margheritta Stirling, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Calhoun Stirling, is another Washington debutante who is expected to bow in Baltimore. Miss Stirling also is to be presented at the St. Cecelia Ball in Charleston, as well as here, where her parents will introduce her on Christmas Day.

Parties to Fete Miss Erwin

During Christmas Holidays. Miss Erwin, who is to be honored at a ball on December 29 by her parents, has been enjoying gay week ends from her studies at Bryn Mawr, where she is a freshman. Last week end she was in New York with Mrs. Erwin, shopping for debut gowns-one of the most delightful of occupations-and she has been to several football games and university proms this season. A number of parties are being planned for her during the Christmas holidays-one, a din-* ner which her uncle and aunt, Maj. and Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard, and Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard, and Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard, and Mrs. Johnson 29th, and another dinner party which Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, To Wed Miss jr., will give.

Miss Hurley and Miss Morris To Bow During Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving holiday debutantes include Miss Ruth Hurley, pretty daughter of former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, who is to bow on Thanksgiving Day at the Washington house which her parents recently leased from Mrs. Fred-George Maurice Morris, are to give a tea for her November 22 at the Lindens, their famous old house here; the reception at the Sulgrave Colquitt, on Thursday, November 27. and the party for which Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hamilton, jr., have issued invitations, which will introduce their daughter, Miss Marian Hamilton, on Friday, November 28. The Thanksgiving holidays are drawn out to some length, for some schools recognize one date and some another, so Washington fetes are arranged to fit the individuals most

McNutt, chairman of the Chinese fete to be held Novem-Jesse Jones. ber 25 at the home of Mrs. Anne Archbold, Hillendale, 3905 Reservoir road N.W., has an enthusiastic group assisting her-Mme. Yu, wife of the Second Secretary of the Chinese Embassy, and some 40 members of the Washington chapter of the Chinese Women's Association. This group has taken over full responsibility for the tea—a truly Chinese tea featuring almond and fortune cakes and a delicacy known as Chinese buns, which Mme. Deson Sze and a group of friends are going to prepare. Mme. Wang, wife of the Attache of the Embassy, and an- Miami, Fla., for the winter. other group are gathering articles to supplement the "cargo" of the junk Cheng Ho, contributed by Mrs. Archbold.

Mme. Yu and ladies of the Embassy are arranging the entire program of entertainment - Chinese music and dancing and a famous Chinese juggler.

Rich brocades and rare embroideries, carved jade, blue and white "rice" china, priceless Kusu wall hangings and gorgeous embroidered coats are among the articles given by Mrs. Archbold. There are small pewter wine cups, large gold lacquer brandy goblets, fascinating cards for Christmas, package tea, Chinese sweets - any number of tempting things for guests to purchase.

Proceeds from the fete will go toward the $5,000,000 fund being raised by the American Committee for Chinese Industrial Co-operatives, which is providing thousands of Chinese refugees with work. Recent reports from headquarters of United China Relief in New York show that 3,000 co-operative workshops already have been set up throughout the interior of free China, providing self-help work to more than 75,000 workers, many of them refugees from bombed Chi-

Her brother, Mr. Karl Kindleberger, served the District of Columbia as district attorney, and another brother. Mr. Paul Kindleberger, now resides in California.

Miss Kirby, who is the daughter of Maj. Maxwell Kirby, U. S. A., retired, has attended schools in California and Hawaii and more recently has taken a business course. She is gifted in music and art as well as dramatics and appeared with the Civic Theater in "The American Way," in which she gave a good account of herself. She has followed in the footsteps of her uncle, Mr. David Kindleberger, who was a brilliant pianist a few years ago and made a world tour, giving recitals in all the important capitals. Miss Kirby was born at Fort Hayes, Ohio, where her father was on duty before he served as assistant to the late Gen. William Mitchell when the latter was chief of the Army Air Corps.

In Capital Letters

This seems to be a fairly scholastic fall. Very few of the debutantes and other girls are idle these days, whether they are away at school or studying here in Washington.

Pat Barker (who, incidentally, did a super rendition of "Daddy" at the beer and skittles Halloween dance!) is studying at Holton-Arms. Mildred Dunn and Elaine Darlington are both studying, too, and Natalie Sutherland and Lydia Langer are improving their art down at the Corcoran. Mary Acheson is up at Westover, and Hillis Reid Morris is up at Smith. Patricia Morris, incidentally, has just begun a volunteer job at the Corcoran Art Gallery showing visitors through the Gallery, a job which Nan Ferguson has been doing, too.

I wonder if Bob Parson, as assistant director of the Gallery, could have anything to do with the popularity of this avocation? He certainly is in great demand. He is escort to Eileen Erwin when she makes her bow at the Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore, and he is also going to escort Mickey Stirling when she makes her second debut at the St. Cecilia in Charleston on January 8, so you can see how far ahead Bob's calendar is dated!

now far ahead Bob's calendar is dated!
But to go back to the school idea again, even those who have finished Ball Listed with school are having a taste of it again this week end. Holton-Arms is having its 40th anniversary and, being quite an occasion, there is quite a celebration. Yesterday afternoon there was an hilarious basket ball game and a cocktail party for the out-of-town guests. Buffet supper at the school followed, at which Pat Prochnik sank a few songs, which were very popular. You remember Hilah White-who used to live here before moving to Charlottesville? She is here for the week end visiting Patty. Another girl you must know who is here for the week end is Adele Bunker, who is staying out with Mary Parker. She is the daughter of Senora Rossi, wife of the former Italian Ambassador to the United States. Peter McHarg is over from Baltimore and Sally Perot Branigar, who hasn't been here for ages, is being royally welcomed by her many friends. It is such fun seeing so many people together again! After the meeting and luncheon today, most of the out-of-towners went down to flag-bedecked ballroom of the Hurja, Mr. and Mrs. Archibald see the National Gallery, and then went on to cocktail parties in their Shoreham Hotel Tuesday evening MacLeish, the Secretary of the Inhonor. Eleanor Flood was among those who had a few friends in, and when the Veterans of Foreign Wars terior and Mrs. Harold L. Ickes and Mrs. Daniel Borden was another hostess.

I hear that Al Baer has plans afoot for getting up something for Tuesday, since it is a holiday. Then on Wednesday afternoon the Ice Club of Washington begins its fourth winter. That means the Peets and the Burlings and the Bortons and the Wallings and the Grosvenors and all the skaters really get under way and start to limber up their skating muscles. Speaking of the Wallings, they have had a time! The house they are building isn't ready for them, and the house they were living in was bought out from under them, so they had to pack up and, luckily, moved over to Bill McComb's little house by the Sam Smiths. They hope, however, to get into their own house by December and, meanwhile, Bill has moved into a duck-shooting camp!

Did you know that Edgar Prochnik leaves today to go to Florida with the Air Corps? Ted Ayres had a party in honor of Edgar last night, Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz which was lots of fun, though probably making it all the harder for have taken a box for the ball, and Edgar to leave town, rather than speeding the traveler on his way!

Bob Werlich is coming home for the first Thanksgiving and plans to give a party. With all the gang coming home from Princeton and Yale and everywhere, there will be plenty doing, I have no doubt.

Miss Bernice Willett Wed In Evening Ceremony.

The wedding of Miss Bernice Elizabeth Willett, daughter of Mrs. O. A. Frye of this city, to Mr. Glenn Ellis Watts, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Dewey Watts, also of Washington, took place at 7 o'clock last evening in the McKendree Methodist Church. The Rev. Charles F. Phillips performed the candlelight ceremony after a musical program by Miss Dorothy Boutchyard and Mr. Charles A. Bright.

Baskets of chrysanthemums and fern ornamented the church, where the bride was given in marriage by her grandfather, Mr. F. A. Keithley. She wore a gown of ivory slipper satin made with a fitted basque bodice and bouffant skirt with a wide flaring train. The yoke was of Chantilly and a ruffle of matching lace edged both the yoke and the points of the long fitted sleeves. Her coronet of seed pearls and orange plossoms held the veil of illusion in place. Her bouquet was of orchids, white roses and sweetpeas. The maid of honor, Miss Marianna taffeta gown made with a quaint basque waist and bouffant skirt. A bertha collar was edged with matching lace and the headdress was of

In Appreciation

What does it signify?

Just this—that once each year we try to show how much we appreciate the great good-will this store has gained in this community.

- —to show it in a practical way by offering our sort of clothes for less—much less
- —at a time when you are most ready to buy!
- —Here are fashions that are most wanted.
- -Here are assortments which make choosing a real pleasure
- -Here is an organization long-experienced at fashion selling eager to serve you!

Visit us, then, during our Appreciation Week!-Come tomorrow if you possibly can! And as you scan this page bear in mind, please, that its purpose is to serve you as a directory to the many fashion events represented by these hundreds of items!

Lightsome Mood Right One For Current Playwright, Recent Cycle Discloses

Coward's Merry Lark, 'Blithe Spirit,' Gave Season a Belated Happy Start, Carried on By 'Junior Miss'; New Comedy Due

By Jay Carmody.

Shortly after Munich, if memory serves, Robert Sherwood in conversation with some friends observed that this was no time for comedy. The phrase was picked up by Samuel Behrman, who used it as the title for a comedy starring Katharine Cornell. It was light, amusing, talkative and intermittently dramatic and it grossed a million dollars before it concluded its road run after Broadway.

Its success would seem to imply that Mr. Sherwood was somewhat less than accurate in his judgment. That, however, is merely the superficial deduction. Mr. Sherwood was speaking merely of his own disposition as a playwright. As the author of a number of highly successful comedies, he was saying only that the mood which had produced them had vanished under the stress of bloody and disastrous circumstances. For him, it was no time for comedy. As for others, they could write in any mood they pleased and that Mr. Sherwood would not gainsay them was evident in the fact that he was co-producer (as member of the Playwrights' Company) of "No Time for Comedy."

Actually, It's a Bright Time For Plays in Lightsome Mood.

Truth to tell, in a broad and general way, it is the ideal time for comedy in the theater if the evidence, not merely of box-office stature, but critical acclaim counts for as much as every one knows it does. Any one who felt so disposed could coin the thought that the playwright with the light idea was the playwright with the right idea; if, of course, the dramatist was a fellow of sufficient skill to make a play of his theme.

On the local scene, which has been busy since August 25, the evidence is strongly in favor of that point of view. Despite that early beginning, the season did not really get off to that exciting start for which every one waits until the opening of Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit." Prior to that improbable farce, some considerable people in the theater had tried to put life into the theater, only to induce a feeling of general dissatisfaction. None of the plays, irrespective of authorship, was the thing for which audiences palpably were looking. Then came "Blithe Spirit," and last week "Junior Miss," and an entirely new spirit was immediately evident,

Plays on the solemn side were not precisely commercial failures. There was first "The Wookey," which opened here and went on to considerable success in New York, not because it was a fine play or even a well-written play, but because it was a lovable play. Its central character was an irresistible Cockney individualist and that the others who revolved around him were strictly off the shelf made no difference. Only two critics, so far as this department could count them from here to there, had the heart, or the enthusiasm, to refer to "The Wookey"

There was little among the immediately subsequent routine drama to inspire excitement until Maxwell Anderson and Helen Hayes united forces in "Candle in the Wind." That was a dream combination, especially as augmented by the direction of Alfred Lunt, and theatergoers dreamed great anticipatory excitement around it. The nearest to favorable criticism it received was a kind of apologia for having to be disappointed with Mr. Anderson's inability to handle his theme other than confusedly and pointlessly. It carries on with Miss Hayes bearing most of the burden.

Even Kaufman-Ferber Team Failed to Beget Excitement.

"The Land Is Bright." by such a playwrighting combination as George item deemed a certain bet to ignite the enthusiasm of the customers. It met with a mixed response here and an even more mixed one in New York. the one point of agreement between the different factions being that its sheer theatricalism would enable it to endure. That seems 'o have been the case, but not until some nasty, disagreeable things had been written about the competence of the authors, theretofore persons of impeccable reputation for perfection.

By the time Mr. Coward was ready to toss in his light-hearted witches' brew, a lovely, taunting and deathlessly sexed ghost into the bosom of a neurotic, artistic family, every one was pretty discouraged. His play was not 10 minutes old, however, before the dismal mood induced by his predecessors was dispelled. Mr. Coward never before achieved biles here. They have turned us vigorous message delivered in fresh such a lofty status as a benefactor to mankind; not even on those occa- from the contemplation of outworn sions when he had written better plays.

Last week, the Messrs. Chodorov and Fields, who authored "Junior brighter future. Miss," also discovered that this is precisely a time for comedy, especially for the comedy that may easily turn out to be the flashiest of the season. In Judy Graves, adopted from Sally Benson's stories in the New Yorker. they have universal childhood with all its wonderful humors. That they could miss is the least conceivable thing about the theater season thus far. And, starting tomorrow night, the comedy cycle goes on with "Papa United States, but our public is ex-Is All," the Theater Guild's first venture of the season into the light- acting and demands the best.

Prospective Movie Stars Seldom Remain Hidden

A Note on the Talent Scout, Who Misses Very Few College Shows, Little Theaters or Night Clubs

> By Hubbard Keavy, Associated Press Staff Writer.

HOLLYWOOD. In the talent prospect files at Paramount there is a 1932 memo, now well worn from much passing around, which reports on the abilities and appearance and movie possibilities of a certain Astaire, Fred. It was written by a talent scout who had seen Fred in some show

The scout was not enthusiastic. He reported that Astaire "is thin, he doesn't have too good a voice, he is losing his hair . . . on the whole, a poor prospect .

"P. S.-He also dances." So Astaire didn't go to work for he's going to sign up Memphis' best the movies then, but a year later he was cast in "Flying Down to Rio" and he has been doing all right

This is not a story about Fred Astaire. It is about talent scouts, who work like a well-organized fifth column, except that their objective is definitely benign. The Astaire report is not amusing so much because of its irony; rather, because scouts usually do not overlook any such possible bets.

For the lowdown on the talent-Ivan Kahn, who, with Tom Moore,

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People-Review of the Stamp Press—List of Local Meetings

By James Waldo Fawcett. Postmaster General Frank C Walker announced on Tuesday that airmail service will be inaugurated between the United States and Africa on or about November 29. The new airpost froute will run from Miami, Fla., to Leopoldville, Belgian Congo, by way of San Juan, Puerto Rico; Port of Spain, Trinidad; Belem and Natal, Brazil; Bathurst, Gambia and Lagos, Ni-

Monrovia, Liberia, will be added as soon as landing facilities have been developed there.

The Postmaster General's statement concerning arrangements for the new system includes more than four pages of instructions for cover collectors. Those interested are advised to consult postal clerks for necessary interpretation of details.

Sales in the Philatelic Agency for October reached a total of $53,067.90.

It has been announced than when the 50-cent airmail stamp went on sale at St. Louis October 29 there were 54.580 covers canceled and a total of 70.839 stamps, valued at $35,419.50, sold.

Let's start with John, 12, the youngest of the group. He considers the first chronologically. In this field he has several old weapons as the start of his collection.

John's other interests include adges, pennants and railroading. His badge collection consists of political campaign and similar buttons. The oldest of these is a Liberty Loan button from the last war. He has souvenir pennants from each place he has visited. His railroad interest is represented by a rather large assortment of tinplate equipment.

John's largest collection probhe has nicely mounted on large cards for display purposes. He has several novel assortments, such as a set arranged to show both the visible and invisible spectrums.

William, jr., 17, has fewer hobbies, but they show the result of careful work. He has a large collection of scale-model planes he has built and a fine assortment of tobacco pipes. One group of the plane models represents the winners of the Thompson Trophy, 1929 to 1939, inclusive. The pipes include many meerschaums and numerous other interesting foreign ones. Most all the members of this unusual family collect stamps in general, but Mrs. Meggers heads her hobbies with a United States specialized collection. She also has pitchers, marbles and coins. Probably the most unusual of her collections ably is his pencils. Most of these is the one of marbles. They are not ordinary marbles such as boys and some girls play with today. Mrs. Meggers' interest in them dates from her own girlhood when they were her chief passion. She then had a basketful of them and was heartbroken when she lost them in the woods one day. Time passed and about two years ago she saw one of these marbles in an antique shop. It started the present collection.

The marbles are of glass, most of them 11/2 inches in diameter, and having a small white figure imbedded in the center. In addition to a nice set of these, Mrs. Meggers has some glass ones with colored designs Betty Jane has the largest indi- in them and others of china and

Dumbarton Oaks Passes Its First Anniversary

Many Changes Made Since Dedication of Library and Collection Last November

By Leila Mechlin.

Dumbarton Oaks Library and Collection, on Georgetown Heights, has just celebrated the first anniversary of its establishment, having been formally dedicated on November 2, 1940.

At that time a new building was opened to accommodate both the library and the collection, but the house, which had been the home of the donors, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, remained virtually as it had been when occupied by them.

During the past year many art in the Freer Gallery, or how far changes have been made, and the student may here go toward first floor of the residence, erected more than 100 years ago, and so charmingly remodeled by Mr. and Mrs. Bliss, with the best features of the old mansion retained, is still seem to provide a large setup for as it was during the Blisses' occu- a very few students, but in this field pancy. Charming Vistas. Upstairs, great changes have been made, luxury banished, working dens—in themselves a work of art quarters set up. Here the library (which will house more than 12,000 are all open to the public, especially books already acquired and available) is located, taking the place of several bedrooms at the center and in the front, with windows looking south. Adjacent to the library, to the east, are offices and workrooms for members of the staff, each furnished simply but suitably for service, and likewise with charming window vistas.

The fellows' workrooms are on the same floor, but to the west. completely isolated and well-adapted for avoidance of interruption. In graphs, these there are no "frills." Intelligent Research. But life for the fellows at Dumbarton Oaks is far from being a carefree lark. Each fellow has a reputation to maintain and, ever before him or her, the possibility of discovery and achievement-the hope of adding something to the sum of world knowledge. The 9 or 10 now in residence have come from universities in various parts of the country and the majority, if not all, have as post-graduates earned their doctors' degrees. For these young men and women of gift, attainment and vision, the privilege of working in fellowship under such conditions and surroundings as Dumbarton Oaks provides must be very great. The goal also is very great. It is the expectation of the trustees, as voiced by Dr. Forbes and Prof. Sachs, that by intelligent research the spiritual heritage of the past will be preserved to enrich the future, for through a better understanding of the forces that have made men what they are must come. they believe, knowledge helpful in the upbuilding of a better ordered life in the future.

This hope has been concisely stated on a tablet placed upon the wall inclosing both garden and buildings on Thirty-second street whereby visitors obtain admission to gallery and library. It reads as

By John Gunther. Harper & Bros., New York.

As Mr, Gunther himself says in his preface, this work follows the pattern of his two preceding "inside volumes—the one treating of Europe and the one of Asia. That is to say, it undertakes to give a contemporary picture—a vivid, entertaining one, of course—of the political, economic and social factors in the lands of which it treats. It does this and, Latin America being, as everybody knows, Hitler's natural target should he ever attempt this continent, it makes one of its prominent political factors a discussion of war sentiment, espionage and general Axis activity throughout the south. There have been books on Latin America by the score during the past year and, while nearly all of them have been sound, they have necessarily repeated one another considerably. Also, there have been blind spots in most of these works, for few authors have attempted complete coverage of the entire Latin American region. Mr. Gunther has made an effort to do just this. He is as thorough in writing about little Paraguay as he is in writing about big Brazil. He has applied the same technique and outline to all his countries. His book stands, therefore, as the most thorough compilation on the subject to date-not new or original in material or outlook, but giving a wonderfully full coverage.

The countries discussed are Mexico, the South and Central American republics, Puerto Rico, Haiti and the Dominican Republic and Cuba. There is also a chapter on those islands whose fate would lie in our hands should Germany win the war-a chapter headed "The Coming American 'Imperialism.' " And there is a final summing up in which Mr. Gunther offers his opinions on "What to Do About It." The treatment of all countries includes a brief history, a statement of the present political situation, a series of character sketches and thumbnail biographies of leading personalities in public life, a statement of the economic situation, particularly as regards trade with the United States, and a summation of the large facts of the social condition-education, public health, literacy wages, cost of living, and so forth.

Chart Bears Information About Eeach Country.

These findings are all told with the utmost picturesqueness in Mr. Gunther's customary manner, in short. To make the facts available on short notice, however, he has also included a chart on which the following information about each country is noted: Area, population, capital, racial composition, illiteracy, President, character of government, chief problems, attitude to the United States, military missions, fifth columnism, approximate budget, chief exports, best customer, exports to the United States in 1938, percentage of total exports, imports from the United States in 1938, percentage of total imports. More than this, even, there is a map showing the location of American naval and air bases.

If other readers are minded as this reviewer was, however, they will look to see what Mr. Gunther has to say about Axis penetration and the relations of the various countries toward the United States before examining anything else, for it is out of these points that our interest in the others grows, and we may as well say so. On the first question, then, he says that in some countries, and particularly in Argentine, there is much German activity and reminds us that last year Uruguay actually discovered and quashed a Nazi plot to seize the country and "transform it into an agricultural colony of the Third Reich." He feels, however, that, in the main, the South Americans are peace-minded, and that only a conviction that Germany is going to win will get them into the war. If they come to believe that the democratic cause is lost, he says, they will naturally seek to win favor from Hitler by giving him aid. As long as they think that England has a chance, however, they will remain neutral, or on a basis of hemisphere defense with the United

It is precisely this, of course, which makes our relations with them so important. It is interesting to read that Mr. Gunther rates Brazil as "friendly, with reservations"; Argentina as being friendly in the bulk of its population, but with the rich classes "suspicious"; Mexico as "friendly despite oil dispute"; Paraguay as "doubtful" and the rest either "friendly," "very friendly," "getting friendlier" or "dependent." On the whole, he feels that good neighborliness is nearer than it has been in a long time, and that our fear of spontaneously sympathetic Axis cooperation in the south is unfounded. Because certain of the southern republics have totalitarian governments, we need not expect their leaders to feel brotherhood toward the European dictators. For the first thing any dictator wants is to be Mr. Big, and the last thing any of them wants is a potential Mr. Bigger

Dictatorships Are Essentially Benevolent,

As for those dictatorships, too, Mr. Gunther reminds us that they are fundamentally different from the European models They are essentially benevolent, he says, and move, even if they do not aim, in hater of learning, a sneerer at culthe eventual direction of democracy. The Gomez regime in Venezuela ture. was a scandal, he admits, but he has kind words for Vargas of Brazil, cratic life was too much for him. He who, throughout his short life, ent day's outstanding opera and zarre. Ubico of Guatemala and Martinez of El Salvador, as well as for the heads of other regimes which are in various degrees absolutisms. Civil his object was to get the best of a liberties do not matter as much to a population of poor peons and landless laborers as they do to us, he observes; what countries which country to do so. have majorities belonging to these classes need first is peace, education and social measures. And most of the dictators in the south seem to Mr. Dooley's America realize this, if we are to believe Mr. Gunther.

Summing up on "What we ought to do," Mr. Gunther says chiefly that we must in every way try to get air bases on the vulnerable coastal points, particularly at Natal and Recife, that we must watch the German airlines now operating in South America and endeavor to replace them with our own service, and that we must improve the so-called "cultural" program which is being put on as an effort to soften Latin sensibilities toward us. This program, he says, is at present "totally off-key." "Latin Americans," he observes, "don't like uplift any more than we do. The approach should be the opposite."

His book may be called a readable encyclopedia. And its readability is not less for the generally optimistic tone which it adopts.

Satan in Top Hat

By Tibor Koeves. Alliance Book Corp., New York.

Laval

By Henry Torres. Translated from the French by Norbert Guterman. Oxford University Press, New York.

Each of these books tells the story of a man who made bad faith in public life his career. The first is the history of the Westphalian, Franz von Papen, remembered ignominiously by Americans for his expulsion from their country in the days preceding the first World War. The second is the life of Pierre Laval, the Auvergnat, who climaxed a career of doubledealing in politics with the sell-out of his native land to its hereditary

The appearance of the two books at the same time is purely a coincidence, and another coincidence gives force to the first. That is the recognition by one of the biographers of the likeness of the two renegades. Mr. Koeves, mentioning that Von Papen has sometimes been compared to Joseph Fouche, rejects the idea and goes on:

"The image as well as the role played by another Frenchman comes more readily to the minds of all who watched the development of Europe's convulsive recent history. * * * Laval's aims were similar to those of "The advent of the Popular Front was to deprive Laval of power and the opportunity of becoming a permanent political fixture. Working behind the scenes, he organized reactionary forces, living in expectation of the day he was to climb back to power on the back of Fascism. * * *

"Franz von Papen had already done away with the republic in his own country. * * * The Westphalian and the Auvergnat were destined to finish their stubborn fight by the same historic gesture: The delivery of their respective nations to Adolf Hitler.'

As Mr. Koeves sums up Papen's history, it is a series of carefully planned betrayals. After his expulsion from America, he was relieved of diplomatic duties and finished the war in the Near East. Under the republic he devoted himself to bring about the downfall of Chancellor Bruening who, after herculean labors, had almost succeeded in stabilizing Germany's post-war confusion. That done, he sold out Von Hindenberg to Hitler, believing he was also selling out Hitler to himself. Discovering that he was wrong about that, he set about serving Nazi-ism to the greater glory of Papen.

As a reward for this service Hitler finally took him into the party.

Mr. Torres, for years a colleague of Laval's, says that he has written in his book "only what I myself have seen, heard, felt, experienced." He leaves the former French Premier no shreds of character. Laval, he says, has been a shyster and double-dealer all the days of his active life. He was a slacker in the first World War, says Mr. Torres-who, himself, saw front-line service. Laval was then an extreme radical and favored an international resistance to militarism; he chose the moment when his country was fighting for its life to air these views. The reason was that he was building up a law clientele among the socialist workers. When Clemenceau came to power, his name was found on a police list of dangerous citizens. Many were arrested; Laval was spared on condition that he keep the government informed as to the activities of his fellow radicals.

Used Political Influence in Law Practice.

Having served two terms as a deputy, he had formed a considerable number of politically useful friendships. He began to utilize these in his law practice. He could request a Minister of Justice, for example, to make his frontiersmen talk like very grop a case, and the case would be dropped. His fees for such services became enormous

Some of his clients-or some of those to whom he gave service, though he did not formally acknowledge them all as clients—were Mme. # Correspondent Views War In Terms of Humanity

Narrative by Robert J. Casey Filled With Poignant Tales Of Suffering and Tragedy

Can't Forget

By Robert J. Casey. Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis.

Home from the wars and with a lot of experiences he missed as an artilleryman in World War I, Mr. Casey is engaging in that age-old pastime of the adventuresome-reminiscences of all the things, big and little,

Bob Casey is no stuffed shirt, no pompous expert pontificating on the grim issues of World War II, and he does precious little moralizing about America's coming role in the war, for he does not see war that way.

But he does see the war in terms of humanity, in terms of the little man and his suffering, his hopes and disillusionments. And his book. which is like a fresh breeze on a stuffy day, is filled with poignant tales of suffering, tragedy and adventure, many of them told before in his news dispatches to The Star and the Chicago Daily News-whose reporter he has been for over 20 years-but all of them retold here as a foreign correspondent's narrative of 22 months at the battlefront

And Mr. Casey was at the battlefront, whether in France during the debacle or in England during the blitz, for he was no headquarters reporter, taking high command handouts and trying to make them look newsy, but seeking out the real story of the war in the flames of the

Kept Himself in Thick of Fight. From the time Mr. Casey went to Europe in the fall of 1939 until he returned a casualty this year, he managed to keep himself in the thick of the fight, sometimes just one jump ahead of the Nazis-as when he slipped out of Luxembourg on the eve of the Germans' move in-but always where there was trouble. And he saw plenty of it. Perhaps his best story-and he swears it's true-is his widely publicized taxicab ride from Luxembourg through the Siegfried Line to Treves, where he and Walter Kerr of the New York Herald-Tribune had a profound, albeit well-suppressed, desire to sabotage the sidearms arsenal of a substantial number of Nazi generals who were assembled to hear Robert Ley, Hitler's jailer of the German worker. Mr. Casey and Mr. Kerr put aside the temptation to disarm the Nazi high command, but one shudders to think what might have happened if their desire had been stronger than their willpower. Mr. Casey probably would not have lived to undergo the experience of waiting for a Nazi land mine to explode months later in London.

The fame of the Siegfried Line exploit brought tighter regulations to the German-Luxembourg border— there were to be no more taxi rides through the west wall-and a foot-thick dossier on Mr. Casey in the Nazi files, knowledge of which convinced him that it was time to observe the war from other points. He moved out just ahead of the Nazis

Back in France and stymied by the intricacies and delays of French officialdom, Mr. Casey explored the front lines without official authorization-in fact, in spite of technical arrest at Nancy. His story of the collapse of France, the pathetic flight of the refugees, the tragedies of human beings and their families, the little things that are significant in the lives of people in wartime, is moving and heart-rending. But it is not all pathos and drama. There is a plenteous and refreshing supply of comedy, of anecdotes of the kind that only war can supply.

French Tanks Twice Captured Border Town.

There is also more than a hint of what went wrong with France in the chapters on the battle of Longwy, a tank skirmish which, in itself, is lost now in the magnitude of France's collapse. The French tanks, regarded by Mr. Casey as some of the best in Europe, took the French border town twice from the Germans, but they ran out of gasoline, and the infantry, which was to arrive to hold the town, never showed up. Just a little incident in a big war, but highly indicative

Mr. Casey went to England expecting a repetition of France's panicky defeat, but he was not there long before his ideas changed, and after seeing the English under the blitz of September, 1940, he became a convert to the belief that the English will battle for their island from one end of it to the other if necessary. His transformation is the kind that comes with personally witnessing a courageous people under the fire of war, the kind of war in which grandma and grandpa hold the front line, and the soldier, safe in a military objective somewhere, waits for the action that

Mr. Casev is convinced he saw Hitler try and fail to invade England, and his evidence is substantial. He saw the fires of German barges along The Days Grow Cold, by Barbara the French coast across the Strait of Dover; saw how the R. A. F. knocked out of Hitler the idea that England had no effective air force

Mr. Casey finally went to Egypt by way of Iceland. Newfoundland dreams about a deserted mansion and Nigeria on a ship which was sunk on its return to England. He may have another book on that enisode of his war experience, unless he The Nun and the Bandit, by E. L. yields-and one hopes that he will-to the urge to see the subsequent

Miss Fitz's work does not carry a prepossessing title, and the subjecis not yet well enough known to bring reader interest automatically. Et once the first few pages have been passed, the story begins to gain in intensity, and the problems that beset "Lady Sourdough" begin to forn a plot as complete as a novelist could desire

"Fizzy," as Miss Fitz was nicknamed by her associates, was earning a living as a stenographer in New York before she conceived the idea of going to Alaska to make a fortune. It was in this capacity, with practically no money of her own, that she became associated with the Rowe Co-operative Mining Co. and arrived in Alaska in the spring of 1900. After going through incredible hardships and suffering bitter disappointments, she finally separated herself from the ill-fated mining company and set out to seek fortune on her own. She suddenly found that her struggles had brought her more mining claims than she could use. With ingenuity and foresight, and a little chance-taking, she built a telephone line, only to lose it again; bought the Council City News and made a success of it, and finally found fortune and happiness at this Arctic "end of the rainbow.

Miss Fitz netted over $100,000 from her mining claims, remaining to supervise their operation until 1906. In that year, while visiting in the United States, she met John Sanger, younger brother of one of her Alaskan associates. Seventeen days later they were married in New York. The couple spent three months in Alaska before the bridegroom flatly stated that he wouldn't stay there for all the gold in the world. So "Fizzy regretfully turned her back to her beloved Alaska and returned to the States with her husband.

This story might be characterized by the words inspired by "Whiskers," a dirty but wise product of the frontier: "Look at this chit of : Manhattan stenographer who dreamed mighty dreams of a pot of gold then went out and found it!"

Yankee Bride in Moscow

By Elizabeth Hampel. Liveright, New York.

Elizabeth Coffee, born in St. Louis, had never traveled more than 200 miles from her home before she went to Moscow. Upon her arrival she married Al Hampel, an electrician connected with the American Embassy. The ceremony consisted merely of signing a document in a public building at a desk under a sign: "Workers of the world, unite." (Across the room was the divorce desk, over which was inscribed, "You have nothing to lose but your chains.")

For two years Mrs. Hampel lived in Moscow. This book tells the story of her daily life and that of other Americans in the Embassy Building. longed life, and the other with the Such troubles as nude swimmers beside the lawn of her summer hut, proceries that provided rotten food, flies and no containers because of a try which have enriched it. On the second day, Sunday, we attended church and after that checked in and became an official citizen of Boys' State. Proudly we took up the tasks of regular cadets by making our own beds and sweeping and scrubbing the floors.

All of this was not in vain because my section won the inspection for the week by having the cleanest rooms every morning for inspection the routine of the day which was as

Take tarantulas for instance. Do you like them? Well, neither do I. And, offhand, I can think of no one who doesn't regard them as things to be avoided. No one, that is, but Warren. He likes tarantulas so well that a couple of years or so ago he adopted one as pet. You may recall the picture: of Warren and his tarantula that appeared in The Junior Star.

You may remember, too, that only a few weeks ago, Warren told Junior Star of the Air listeners all about some of his other unusual pets-including, of all things, a skunk.

Well, now the 11-year-old Frank Buck of Taft Junior High School has written to The Junior Star "in defense of serpents." And his words carry the stamp of authority, too. because snakes also have been numbered among his pets

"The poor serpent has seldom gotten a square deal since the beginning of the world," Warren begins. And he goes on to explain that it is only ignorance that causes most people to dislike snakes.

"It is true that some snakes are poisonous," he concedes, "and it is wise to keep out of their way. But,' he argues, "the harmless snakes outnumber the harmful ones three-to-

Posters, on Backs, Advertise Carnival

By Annalee Lumpkin, 13,

More than a thousand students and other children from the neighborhood turned out recently for the most successful carnival ever held at Eliot Junior High School. For almost a month before, the students worked enthusiastically on their individual booths, each group striving to make it the best. The advertising problem was solved by printing posters which were pinned on the backs of boys and girls to wear as they walked through the halls. The posters also were displayed in the classrooms. Weather for the carnival was exceptionally good, and immediately after lunch on the big day the booths were put in place.

Hot dogs and soft drinks had a record sale, with the "dogs" selling out first. Miss Lambarton's stand, where "apples on the stick" were sold, made the most money, with Miss Wild's pony rides second. The carnival earned $200, which doubled the income from last year's event.

The girls traded part in such diversions as archery, horseback riding, sailing, canoeing and swimming in the "Big Pond," a picturesque lake with overhanging willows framing the cool rippling

Although there were enough permanent shelters, most of the Scouts preferred to sleep in tents, and most of the cooking was done out of doors. Each of the girls from foreign lands demonstrated the native weaving of her country, some showing patterns handed down from generation to generation for hundreds of years. A large map was posted on the wall, and each girl signed her name in the State or nation whence she came. Only one representative appeared from war-torn Europe, refugee from France, who has been in America for five months. Vichy Ambassador Tried To Dissuade Author, Washington Hears

Before the colonel took his leave of his attache's post Mme. Lombard played an active role in his pursuit of his duties. To her is due, in part, the departure from the cabinet of Secretary of War Harry Woodring, who left in the midst of the Nazi military campaign in France.

SITUATED ON BEAUTIFUL CORNER LOT IN ONL OF THE CITY'S FINEST RESIDENTIAL SECTIONS.

A faithful reproduction and true characterization of 7 homes completed prior to 1700. except for its modern features of equipment and construction. In time to come it will reflect the finest construction of its period. House contains 14 rooms (including servants' rooms). 5 baths and 2 lavatories, with a floor plan providing the utmost convenience. The larse master suite on 2nd floor has an open fireplace. 2 private baths and 2 dressing rooms. Among many distinguishing features are the glassed conservatory at the head of a beautiful stairway; the exceptional amount of closet space and the authentic period lighting fixtures, millwork and hardware. Parquet floors laid over solid concrete subfloors all of which are completely insulated. Many other attractive features, too numerous to mention. We do not think there is another house in this section of the country with the construction and detail found here. This property cost the owner over $70.000. It is being offered at $48.500, which in our opinion. is a ridiculously low figure. It was completed in November. 1937, and to-SMALL BRICK HOUSE. 3½ ACRES, CORNERING ON 2 STREETS,

For some prideful proprietor here is a property that is high class in character, modern in its appointments and outstanding in its low-price appeal _____ a potential little estate establishment offering development possibilities out of the ordinary. It is likewise a real opportunity for the family of modestly intentioned expenditure seeking a close-in home having every convenience, combined with sufficient land for garden, poultry, horse or cow.

Amidst towering trees, standing line sentinels, this delightful establishment, with its cast of stateliness, offers the partly finished canvas upon which a prideful proprietor of artistic aims can complete the perfect picture of a proud little estate of uncommon dignity and delight.

Cornering on 2 macadam streets and bordered by big walnuts, an arched driveway, fringed with flowers and flanked by occasional big trees, leads gracefully alongside the dwelling's impressive piazza with its imposing 2-story columns. A well-ordered 2½-story dwelling comprises 7 rms., butler's pantry, many closets and bath; high ceilings and spacious, tyocial of gracious homes of old; sink, running hot and cold

Revolt!

Down with Brutus!

A FEW WEEKS ago, we presented what we thought was the opening and closing chapter of the saga of Brutus the Lion. But William Bridges, Curator of Publications for the New York Bronx Zoo, has an epilogue to add to his original report.

Brutus, you may remember, was the lion who jumped into the moat surrounding his dwelling place in the zoo and was coaxed out only after his keepers doubled his regular rations of choice beef. There was no question about it. Brutus was a smart lion. So smart that he was the unchallenged King of Lion Island.

He reigned well and proudly until, one morning, he cut the pad of his foot. The veterinarian, fearing infection, retired Brutus and caged him up alone for six weeks. Brutus complained bitterly. He grunted, roared, woofed. No results. He had to serve his full six weeks.

AT LAST the day came when he could return to his subjects. Impatiently he endured the vet's final inspection. Finally free to leave his solitary cage, he bounded up to the open door, eager to rejoin his underlings. He hurled himself through — right on top of one of his mates, sleeping just outside.

The sleeper awoke with a startled roar, clawed savagely at Brutus's flank. He reared, roared and whirled again and — Brutus gave ground. Brutus the King, the Great. In about 10 seconds, he was in a fight for his life. For months his subjects had been waiting for this moment. Every lion on the island wanted to take a crack at him. Simultaneously they began moving in from all sides.

LIKE a bunch of small boys determined to dethrone a bully, they all ganged up on him. In a snarling, lunging circle they drove him toward the edge of the moat a step at a time. Brutus fought back valiantly. But the odds were too great. One foot was already over the moat's edge when the keepers came running to his rescue. As the men entered, the rebellious subjects hesitated, debated among themselves and, deciding they'd done their job, retired.

Brutus scrambled back to safety. But only his life was safe. He had lost everything else. Dignity. Honor. Crown.

ONE-WAY STREET — STRAIGHT UP!

by Donald Culross Peattie

THE whisperings of doctors and nurses didn't fool me. I knew I had pneumonia, and that in another hospital my wife lay close to death from mastoid. If she died, they wouldn't tell me yet—for fear I shouldn't want to live.

I wasn't at all afraid of dying; it seemed so easy! No more difficulties, pain or fear or worrying debt. All you had to do was just give up, give in and let yourself go down . . . down . . . down . . . down . . .

Out of that dangerous darkness the light of the window opposite my bed drew me up and made me open my eyes. I lay staring at the window. At first there seemed nothing to see - only a bit of jutting brick wall, and a vine on it. It was a Virginia creeper and as these were the short December days, cold and dark, the leaves had fallen. But I began to see, all the better for that bareness, how by many thousand branches and tendrils this vine had made its way toward my window. Down there in the stony courtyard, in sunless city soil, it had started its struggle. It had everything against it for the first thirty feet of its life. But it attempted only one brick at a time and so, putting out little disks that clung to the mortar tight as a kitten's claws, patiently, irresistibly it had risen into the sunlight and air.

It was while I lay looking at the vine that, as unconsciously as a plant, I began to fight, to struggle against the ease of death. I remembered that I had a daughter and a son who would need me the more if my wife died. I was already better when my mother-inlaw came running past the floor nurses to tell me that my wife would live. Down like the swoop of a gull went my fever.

I'm not a person to draw pat morals from Nature; you can't get me to attribute courage to a vine. The creeper was just obeying natural laws. But the sight of that triumphant surmounting of all difficulties did recall to me the fact — scientific and spiritual — that the only way out is up.

It comes into every life to feel trapped by a set of cruel circumstances, so that there seems to be no way out. You turn this way—but lack of money stops you. You think you'll try that way—and you haven't the health for it. You turn another way—and find that you are bound by beloved dependents; you can't leave them as hostages while you play at chance.

I've seen men try to escape through a brandy bottle, only to drown in it. Others try to burrow away from the hard facts, refusing to face them. Still other people think they can run away, but as soon as we begin to run, things begin to chase us, and in the end we are sure to be overtaken. And who can fight with his back turned?

No, when you stand your ground and face the truth, you see that the only way out is up. Up toward those ideals of conduct that seem, in our weariness, too high to reach. Only a brick at a time — by a little more effort, more courage, more patience — can one make the climb. A hundred clutching hands drag us down — worries, angers, fears. They are stronger if you heed them; it's an old rule for climbers not to look down. For help, look up. But do you realize you can make a definite practice of reaching out for a hand up, on the way?

I'm not talking about prayer, because the less prayer is talked about the more sincere it is, or so it seems to me. There are other uplifting experiences to which we can also turn. A young doctor of my acquaintance, who works among hopelessly crippled children, regularly budgets a part of his slim earnings for records of great music. No matter how late he comes home, he stretches out on his couch for fifteen minutes of listening. "The music recharges my batteries." he told me. "Especially Mozart. I always remember that while his father lay dying in the next room. he wrote one of his loveliest works." Mozart too knew that only by brave effort could he surmount grief. Now the gay courage of his music gives a lift to my young medical friend, who carries the upward swing with him when he enters the wards next day.

Music is one of the rungs on my own ladder upward. Another I mount in a leap when, just before bedtime, I step to the front door, open it and turn out the light behind me. I stand a few minutes, looking at the stars, drawing deep breaths of night air that clear my head and send my blood coursing fresher through my veins. Around me the petty limitations of the day crumble and fall away. I feel how much sheer time there is out there, and my pulses are slowed to a steady beat. Into my mind flows some of the generous. decent vastness between the stars. The rhythm of their immense and glittering clockwork makes order in my own confused and tired thinking. If I gaze upward long enough, I am literally lifted out of myself by the stars.

"A fine picture is like an open window to me." That is what I once heard an old judge say. His work has been chiefly in the juvenile courts, where his mind is filled with the tragedies of youth. But his chambers are not far from a great art gallery, and daily, as some men do exercises for their health, the old gentleman strolls over there to sit before one of those "open windows."

The door is always open, too, to Nature, and this is one of the surest escapes in the world. For through Nature we escape not only oul of our manmade troubles, but into a world that is greater and happier than our own. Speaking as a naturalist, I can promise you that every evidence in that world proves that the upward way is the way of progress. Every gardener knows that all things that grow, grow toward the light. Only by lifting his eyes to it can a man find the real way out.

SOUNDS AND FURY. A lady we know who is a volunteer Air Raid Warden in New York gives us this footnote to the U. S. Civilian Defense Program:

According to official regulations, air raids are heralded by wailing sirens. But the more dangerous poison-gas attacks are announced by little wooden ratchets similar to the party noise-makers so popular on New Year's Eve. Reason: the rat-tat-tat of the ratchets sets up vibrations which can be sensed even by deaf people. And the "All Clear!" signal for gas attacks is sounded by little metal bells like those junkmen carry on their carts.

STRONGER SEX. And, talking about women, the Nazi air force—unwillingly, of course—has contributed to English research in feminine behavior. One fact proved by the German bombings has been that women are less likely to be bomb-shocked than men. The ratio is 18 women to 30 men.

In a moonlight-and-roses atmosphere, women may be more emotional than men. But not in air raids. Their protective instinct for those they love is a shield against the nerve-shattering effects of warfare noises. They go about their blitz jobs with much more calm than their trouser-wearing colleagues.

And if a woman is bomb-shocked, she responds more quickly to psychological treatment. Part of the cure is retelling of experiences. Women remember the details better and are more willing to talk about them. Then, once recovered, they're all set to go back to work.

CO-OPERATION. Private John Prochaska, of Battery H, 210th Coast Artillery, has just returned to Fort Sheridan, Illinois, from a 30-day furlough. John got his leave because the War Department decided that a threshing machine was more important than Army training:

The private owns the only threshing machine at Azalia, Michigan. Came harvest time and 57 of his neighbors filed a petition with the War Department to let their thresher come back home. The adjutant general in Washington didn't hesitate. Probably remembering what Napoleon had said about an Army marching on its stomach, he just sent through the furlough order.

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HE flagpole was Jeff Graham's idea. He brought the matter up at town meeting. We were pretty patriotic by this time. Wadrey Anderson's fertilizer plant was being turned into a gunpowder factory, and government men, acting mysterious, had set up a radio listening station on Henry Whipple's farm. The flagpole seemed like a fine idea, especially when Jeff warmed up to his oratory. You wouldn't think a six-footer weighing over two hundred pounds would have any flair for elocution, but Jeff always could talk!

"What we've got to do in Farmville," he said, "is set an example for other small towns and villages in this neck of the woods! They need waking up! Patriotism - that's what we've got to show 'em! We're Americans. Citizens of the finest country on earth. We're free people, and it's our solemn duty to show the free people of other lands that we mean business!

"What we need," Jeff shouted, "is a symbol of our Americanism. Yes, sir. Something big, that people will sit up and take notice of. What we need is the biggest flagpole you ever laid eyes on, set up right in the middle of the town-hall lawn! With Old Glory waving from

Jeff had always told us what to do, more or less, and this time he didn't need to bear down much. We agreed there ought to be a flagpole, and it had to be a whopper.

"What we'll do," Wadrey Anderson declared, "is go out right now and locate a tree that will suit." This was on a Saturday afternoon.

was the way to do things, while they were piping hot. But we didn't need to hunt up a tree. "The tree we want is less than a mile from here. You men come along with me." We did, and Jeff had sure picked out a beauty.

I said, "That's the finest Norway pine I ever saw, Jeff."

"That isn't a Norway, Will. It's a genuine red pine, and there aren't many left in these parts. The ancestors of that tree traveled the world over, as masts and spars on the old clipper ships.'

He was proud of having picked out that tree. It was American. Had roots in the past.

The tree was straight as a ramrod, and high enough, and it grew on land owned by a fellow name of Joe Wilczek, who worked at the fertilizer plant. It was on the corner of his property, a hunwhat we wanted.

He was a big unsociable sort of fellow, born ever there was work to be had.

His father, who brought him to America when he was around thirteen, was buried in Birch Hill cemetery, along with most of Farmville's dead, and now Joe was married to a Polish girl he'd met while working in a mill in Montpelier, I think it was, and he had

> Joe hadn't any education to speak of.

He came over and nodded, by way of saying how do, and looked kind of puzzled at the way we were studying the pine. His little girl came over, too. She was a pretty thing, with dark hair and big black eyes. She just looked at us.

in one of those Baltic countries. He was about forty-five, wore old clothes most of the time, and worked around in different places when-

"Wilczek," said Jeff Graham. "we have just come from a town hall meeting." He told Wilczek what we'd decided. Then he waved a hand at the tree and said, "There'll be no finer flagpole in the State of Vermont!"

Wilczek was not what you'd call quick to understand. He scowled at the pine for some time, and then looked hard at Jeff. "You want to cut down my tree?" he said.

Jeff said that was the idea.

"No," Wilczek said, and shook his head. This was something we hadn't looked for, and it struck us as being mighty narrow. After all, Wilczek was a citizen of Farmville like the rest of us, and ought to have some feeling for the town, even if he was a queer sort who never attended town meetings.

Jeff had more patience than the rest of us. When we began muttering and sending dark looks at Wilczek, Jeff gave us a stare that shut us up. Then he explained to Wilczek so even a child could understand, why the town had to have that tree. "It's not as if we wanted your tree for some mercenary reason. This tree will fly Old Glory. Doesn't that mean anything to you?"

WILCZEK was stubborn. "She is my tree, on my land. You have to find some other."

"But you've got any number of trees! You won't feel the loss of this one!"

"Some other tree," Wilczek said. "I am sorry. His little girl stepped forward then, shy as a rabbit but anxious to say something.

"You gentlemen don't understand. My father doesn't know how to say it, but -Wilczek turned her away from us. "Ella,"

he said, "you go in the house."

"But, Pa

"Go in the house!"

The little girl went away, looking back at us. Wilczek said again, "I am sorry. Some other tree." Then he went away.

"Well," I said, "that's that."

We were all pretty sore, because we hadn't foreseen anything like this and didn't have any idea what to do about it. Delbert Hubbard said there was a white pine back of his place we could have, but he thought it was pretty old and might break up when we felled it.

Matthew Selley, who runs the Main Street garage, thought he'd seen a good tree - he didn't know what kind - near the falls on Hemlock Brook.

Jeff Graham just glared at them. "The town wants this tree," he said. "and the town's going to get this tree!"

"It's his property," I pointed out.

"Then we'll buy the tree. We'll take up a

It was my job to keep track of the money that came in. I also called on half the townspeople personally, including Miss Watlet, the schoolteacher. "We're collecting money for a flagpole to stand in front of the town hall." I told her.

She gave me a dollar and seemed real interested. "It's high time," she declared, "that this town developed some patriotism! Heaven knows I've been working on it hard enough. I've even had the children writing essays on why they are glad to be Americans!"

MISS WATLET is a brisk kind of woman, who speaks her mind at great length. I didn't want to get into any argument with her.

She said, "Are you planning a ceremony at the dedication of the flagpole, Mr. Evans?" "Well, we haven't talked about it."

"You certainly should!" she declared. "But I'll take care of that. You leave that part of it to me, and I assure you it will be in capable hands. Among other things" and she was already planning away like a politician - "we must have a reading of our prize essay on Americanism. Indeed we must!"

I'd meant to tell her about Joe Wilczek and his tree, but I let it go because she was wound up for fair. "That will be mighty nice, Miss Watlet, I'm sure," I said, and got away quick as I could, with her dollar.

We got $47.20 in all. Jeff said that would change Joe Wilczek's mind all right. "That's a lot of money," he said. "Perhaps we should set aside some of it to pay for the flag."

We talked it over and decided no, we'd give every cent of that money to Wilczek for his tree, and pay for the flag some other way. The money was raised for the flagpole, and we decided Wilczek was entitled to it. It was a lot of money, though. "More than he makes in two weeks," Wadrey Anderson said.

HE BUILDS MACHINES THAT THINK

And almost every one of them - like our famed bomb sight - embodies military secrets vital to American security. Those secrets must remain mysteries, but here's their guardian — Tom Morgan

by Don Eddy

F SOMEONE walked up to you and asked, "Who is Tom Morgan?" the chances are you wouldn't know. Even if you heard his full name, Thomas Alfred Morgan, it might not mean a thing to you.

And that's odd, for Tom Morgan is one of the handful of topmost men in our drive toward supreme armament. Probably he knows more important naval and military secrets than any other individual. He controls what is possibly the most vital, certainly the most scientific, complex and mysterious industry in our entire preparedness scheme - an industry which turns out wondrous defense machines that actually seem to think for themselves.

He is president of The Sperry Corporation, a streamlined giant of an organization which has grown from nothing more tangible than an inventor's notion that the gyroscope, a child's toy, might be put to practical use.

Tom Morgan is not much of a hand to blow his own horn. That's why you haven't heard his name. When he joined the Sperry company in 1912 there were exactly 11 other employees. Today there are 20,000. Next year there will be 50,000. They work in 15 sprawling factories dotting the East and Midwest, each a weird maze with locked doors and barred windows which spit eerie blue-white flares of light at night. Guards patrol these factories incessantly, inside and out. For inside, hand-picked workers are constructing ultra-secret, ultra-deadly, ultra-scientific implements of war for our Army and Navy.

The Man Himself

YET there's nothing secret, nothing deadly or mysterious about Tom Morgan. When he isn't closeted with admirals or generals in Washington, you may find him in the largest office on the topmost floor of a midtown New York skyscraper — an office with a door that is never closed. He is 54 years old, tall, tanned, vigorous, rugged, direct, uncomplicated. You like him instantly. You notice first his eyes. which are wide apart and ingenuously frank: then his mouth, which is wide and quirky and smiles easily; then his voice, which is deep, unhurried and burred with a homey Carolina drawl. And you think of the story one of his old foremen told you:

It happened on a day in 1917. America was newly at war. Sperry was then, as now, a key military plant. And on this morning, a spontaneous grievance strike had been called because the men didn't like the superintendent. They marched into a big machine shop and massed there, about a thousand of them.

There was a lathe bed at the front of the shop, and beyond it a door to the executive offices where the board of directors was in extraordinary session. Presently the door opened and young Tom Morgan came out, big and quiet and confident. He vaulted to the bed of the lathe and stood there looking over the rebellious crowd. Finally he spoke:

"They've just told me to take charge of this plant. I can't run it; that's your job. All I can do is serve you. All I can tell you is that every man is going to get an honest deal. All I ask is an honest deal from you. You've got to trust me and I've got to trust you. Right now we've got a chore of work to do for Uncle Sam. By the Lord Harry, let's drop this foolishness and get it done!"

He leaped from the lathe bed. Somebody started a ragged cheer. Ten minutes later the factory was going full blast.

Please Omit Flowers

NEXT morning young Superintendent Morgan found an elaborate floral horseshoe in his new office. Attached was a scroll signed by 63 foremen. Morgan summoned a half-dozen of them. He had his back to the door, when they arrived. Without turning, he growled: "Take that damn thing out of here. I want work, not posies!"

But when he wheeled and looked at them under his bushy brows he was grinning broadly, and they were grinning when they started to carry it away. Suddenly he stopped them.

"Loan me a chisel, one of you fellows," he demanded.

One was produced. Morgan picked a block of wood off a bench. Quickly and efficiently he hacked out a wedge and blocked his office door wide open. Nothing was said; nothing needed to be said. Tom Morgan, you see, isn't much of a hand to talk. But that open door was a symbol and a promise. From that moment to this, he has been idolized by the men and women of the Sperry company, and other industrialists have come to label him a "human engineer."

I asked him about that one day. It embarrassed him. But he said, rather diffidently, one thing to remember:

"The way to get things done is to get along with people. If you go at it right, everybody will help you."

There, in two sentences, is the formula that has lifted a barefoot country boy to affluence and intimacy with Presidents and

Morgan himself is no secret. His door has been wedged open for 24 years kings, and has transformed a toddling commercial enterprise ("loony," many called it at the beginning) into a towering industrial giant.

And what a giant, what a wizard it is, this Sperry Corporation!

You feel the tension, the alertness, the secrecy, the instant you enter the outer reception room of one of the factories - such, for stance, as the one at the end of the Brooklyn Bridge. It has 425,000 feet of floor space but it's cramped for room at that. The man behind the information desk wears a light-blue uniform and a heavy service revolver. The first time I went there he told me bluntly: "You can't go in this plant. Nobody can."

I glanced about the room. Within ten feet were six other guards, all eying me speculatively. I noticed the flaps were unbuckled on the holsters of their pistols.

"But I'm a reporter," I said to the man at the desk, "assigned to write a story about the

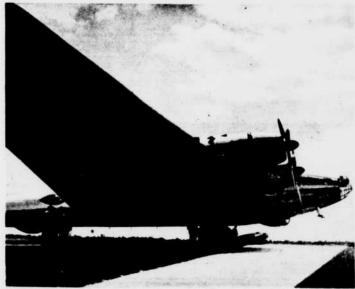

He sighed wearily. "Brother," he said, "if you were Alexander the Great you wouldn't get in here without a pass signed by Tom Morgan." I heard footsteps behind me and from the corner of my eye I noticed that the six other guards had casually fanned around me in a semicircle. So I went back to New York — and found Tom Morgan in a big room with the perpetually open door.

BEAUTIFUL - BUT VAGUE

And now you are about to meet that nitwit of the air, that versatile vacuum, Miss Vera Vague, who is really somebody else!

by Fredda Dudley

// poo-Hoo!" comes the greeting in sort of a yelping chord. "Yoo-hoo!"

The master of ceremonies winces and averts his face. Then, bracing his shoulders as if determined to get it over with at any cost, he proceeds with the announcement: "And now, ladies and gentlemen, here comes that zany of the ozone, that nitwit of the networks, that versatile vacuum. Miss Vera Vague."

"Well," chortles the voice with a bustle.

"bless your heart!"

And out onto the broadcasting stage walks - guess what. Not a spinsterish damsel with a hair-do like the spire of a church; not a female who might have escaped from one of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Tish" stories.

No, not on your life. It's a strikingly beautiful girl wearing a chic tailored suit and carrying a script into which she, personally, has slipped some of the best gag lines and all of the characterization.

The ancient canard that beauty and brains never get wrapped in the same package is forever disproved by Vera Vague. Her hair is black as obsidian, her eyes a lovely blue, her features flawless.

A Quadruple Threat

In ORDER to keep the record straight, we should admit hurriedly that Miss Vague has lots of everything, including names. On the screen, where she has had fat parts in many pictures, she's been known as Barbara Jo Allen. (Recently, though, she has dropped the "Jo.") On the radio she not only portrays the unquenchable Vera Vague, but she also takes the part of that sweet sorceress Beth Holley in "One Man's Family." And in private life she is Mrs. Vernon Patterson, proud mother of a talented young person named Joan.

The career of Miss Allen-Vague, or Miss Vague-Allen, is important because, in common with many other marksmen, she aimed at one target and struck another. It all began during the hectic days of 1932 when radio was really hitting its stride. Miss Allen was in San Francisco, where she had been playing with the Henry Duffy repertory company. At that time the broadcasting stations were beginning to make a bid for actors, and Miss Allen was given an audition. It turned out fine, and she was told to come back ready for work the next day.

WORK was right. In no time at all she was doing 12 radio shows a week. For each of the broadcasts there were at least two rehearsals. And for each rehearsal there appeared to be at least one dialect part. In a week's time she would leap from the slurred consonants of Alabama to the nasal twang of Cape Cod: then on to the Oxford accent, to the Irish brogue, and back to mid-western Americanese.

"I had only one accident," says the blithe Miss Allen. "One night in the midst of a Chinese drama, I was supposed to read a line that went something like, 'Meling's heart sighs for Alung's sin.' I can't tell how it happened; all I know is that suddenly I was reading in a good, thick County Cork accent. 'Me ould hear-rt sighs for a slug o' gin.' '

What can you do with a duplex mind like that?

Answer: You can have fun with it. Miss Allen came to that conclusion in 1935 when the studio personnel was planning a show in which each staff member was to do an act entirely out of character. Comedians went Hamlet and radio villains were planning to do Little Eva. So Barbara, who had never played anything on the air or upon the boards except luscious heroines, reached down into her sense of humor and produced - VERA VAGUE.

She tried the skit out on Edna Fisher, who was chief staff pianist at the time, and Edna went from a mild grin into hysterics. "I wasn't that funny," said Barbara. "You're just trying to encourage me."

She Couldn't Forget Vera

Vera Vague was a spontaneous success at the show, but the next day Barbara Allen returned to the microphone to do heroines. After all, those long years of training had been undertaken with one goal in view. She wanted to become a serious actress, a motionpicture star capable of heavy dramatic work. But Vera Vague refused to be forgotten, and whenever she dragged herself out of hiding she always won a big laugh. Barbara Allen decided that, if she was ever to be taken seriously, she would have to kill off the zany in her nature at once.

It must be pleasing to Vera Vague, the eternally optimistic man-hunter, to know that her life, at that time, was saved by a man. His name was Don Gilman; he was vicepresident of the western division of N. B. C., and he considered Miss Vague screamingly funny. He spotted her on the Woman's Magazine of the Air, and Vera immediately became

After that, the progress of Miss Vague was akin to her optimism: absolutely unquenchable. Nothing that Barbara Allen could do was final enough to destroy her maddening

In conversation, Barbara refers to Miss Vera Vague as if she were an actual person. (Continued on page 15)

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

Some recruits had arrived, and in my absence First Sergeant Taggart received them. Subsequently he reported he could make soldiers out of all but one, whose service record disclosed that in civil life he had been a dancing master.

"A dancing master," Taggart elucidated, "is developed entirely in the legs, and if this man had any development above the chin he'd never have admitted his shame. It's been my experience that soldiering and art won't mix, and this rookie, Edward Joseph Moroney, thinks he's hell on the mountaintop."

That night at retreat the last man to ooze casually into line ten seconds before assembly blew was a tall, well-built, handsome young fellow in his middle twenties. He had a graceful walk, a proud, devil-may-care tilt to his head and lazy, smoky, dark-blue eyes. Taggart glanced over his shoulder at me and murmured: "The dancing master, Captain."

Just before dismissing the battery Taggart ordered: "Moroney, front and center, double time, march!"

The dancing master arrived with a rush.

"The time limit for a battery formation is a minute and a half," Taggart warned him. "We never wait for assembly. A good outfit always beats the call. So hereafter, when you hear me blow my whistle, shake your dead tail and risk being killed in the rush."

"I was not late for formation," the dancing master told him pertly, "and I decline to furnish you with a dreadful example by getting killed in an unnecessary rush."

"Guardhouse lawyer," Taggart told me afterward. I knew Moroney would be a joy or a nuisance — but never a corporal.

The men liked him. He'd brought a guitar into the service with him and he sang without coaxing. Taggart admitted grudgingly that he'd rather listen to the dancing master sing than to Caruso, because a plain man could understand what he was singing about. He had a John McCormack tenor. He'd been a hoofer in small-time vaudeville, and the year previous, when he had no bookings, he'd operated a school of ballroom dancing.

He was never on the delinquency book, although Taggart suspected he should be—often. The Top complained to me that the non-coms covered Moroney up: hence the man would be the ruin of discipline in the battery. He softened the hard-boiled; Taggart said he had a suspicion the man was working on him, and he hated the thought. I explained that the dancing master merely had charm, and that charm opened a path for him like the siren on a fire engine.

"He must be aware of his charm," Taggart growled, "because he has joined the French class over at the YMCA hut. He tells me he has more masculine society than he can handle. What he craves is female society, and when we get to France and before we go up to the front, he means to have it. He says to me: 'Sergeant, how can I get them to love me unless I can parlay francaise enough to tell them how much I love them?' "

"Love pirate, eh?" I suggested.

"It would suit that scatterbrain if he left a sweetheart wherever this battery went in to park overnight. The louse makes love for fun."

"That kind," I told Taggart, "always meet a girl they want to marry and can't, because she sees through them. They pay the piper, and they pay him in heartbreak."

At a British rest camp en route to France, the dancing master went A.W.O.L., returning five minutes before we marched down to the boat that was to take us to Le Havre. He pleaded guilty and said he would take battery punishment instead of a summary court, so I sentenced him to two weeks in the can, on bread and water, with a full ration every three days. This was pretty severe, but I thought it best to knock his ears down hard once; then I might not have to do it again.

We landed in Migne, a village in a valley near Poitiers, to wait until an opening came for us at the artillery training center. By that time I had forgotten I had condemned Moroney, but Taggart remembered, and I had to invest ten francs for two weeks rental of a stone granary with barred windows on it. In this improvised guardhouse he placed the dancing master.

"I should have done this the moment we got here," he confided, "because the son of a Turk has already dazzled the village baker's daughter. He saw her in the bakery, and buck-and-winged his way in on pretense of buying a bun; while she was waiting on him he tap danced and she cheered and laughed, so he came down after supper with his guitar. I saw him kissing her good night — an hour after taps went."

The following morning my interpreter, Corporal Labaig, called at the orderly room, accompanied by a pretty girl with flour on her arms.

So I knew her to be the baker's daughter. Wooden shoes couldn't hide the fact that she had small, dainty feet, nor heavy woolen stockings camouflage her slim ankle and well-turned calf. Despite her coarse dress, one saw she had a lovely form. She was about five-feet-five, with gorgeous hazel eyes, crinkly chestnut hair, a pale olive complexion and the only perfect teeth in France.

When Labaig introduced her as Mademoiselle Juliette Lamerie and she murmured a response, her voice was like a harp.

In such matters one wastes no time. I said: "Corporal, does she want me to return Moroney to duty?"

"Yes, sir — that is, while the battery is in Migne. She suggests he can serve his sentence in some other village."

"Chances are she'd prefer it," Taggart growled. "Keep him away from other girls."

"I told her she was asking the impossible, sir," Labaig said. "But what can one do with a woman? She says if the captain will turn Moroney loose, she'll pray every night that he'll go safely through the barrage."

"Request denied, Corporal. Take her out. She makes me nervous." But Juliette wouldn't leave. In fact, she sat down to prove she didn't intend to leave. After she had split a sad five-minute Madonna look between Taggart and me and made us both feel like skunks, I saw Taggart sigh deeply and knew he was at the breaking point. So to make it easy for him I told him to turn the dancing master loose. He handed the calaboose key to Labaig, and told him to let the girl have her damned dancing master.

That night Moroney missed retreat, and about taps Taggart found him sitting with Juliette on the steps of the old flour mill, playing his guitar and singing and, between songs, kissing her and telling her in his horrible A.E.F. French that she was the light of his declining years. Taggart said the girl was pointed at the ground, and dressed in conservative serge. "Sometimes," the Inspector sighed, "I wish you'd gone into the F.B.I., or become a history professor, or a lawyer, or a Brain Truster, or almost anything except come into my bureau to plague me. Sometimes I think I should put you in uniform and let you pound a cemetery beat, nights, out in the Eleventh Precinct. Now what d'you know about the Freelander Memorial Library?"

"A LITTLE," said Tommy. "It contains a million, two hundred thousand volumes, and one of the largest collections of rare books and first editions in the world. They specialize in American firsts, and they have an enormous endowment, and some excellent examples of Shakespeare folios.'

"And a murder," said the Inspector.

"And a murder."

"If the friends of Willie the Mope wanted to knock him off, why did they have to do it in a quiet, respectable place like the Freelander Memorial?" the Inspector groaned.

"He wasn't exactly the literary type," Tommy mentioned.

"Well," the Inspector ordered. "Get going. Homicide Squad will give you everything they have up to now, which isn't much. They've picked up all Willie's pals, of course. They've got alibis enough to last 'em a year."

"Did you mean start now?" Tommy asked. The Inspector half rose from his chair. His mouth opened, but no words came forth.

"I was just wondering," Tommy mused. "because Joan called and asked me to find her some raw rhubarb. Puzzles me. She doesn't like rhubarb. I don't like rhubarb either.'

"Please," the Inspector pleaded, "get out!" Tommy left.

He ambled into the homicide squad room and inquired, politely, into the details of what had happened to William Mullaney, alias Willie the Mope, age 35, height 5-6, weight 132, knife scar on right side of face, and a record planted with a conviction at 16 for bootlegging, sprouting with arrests for assorted varieties of larceny, and finally blossoming into forgery, blackmail, and counterfeiting, but with no convictions for these crimes.

"I didn't ask for the job," Tommy explained to the homicide squad chief. "The Inspector wished it on me."

Strangely, Captain Yates didn't appear irritated. Ordinarily he guarded the rights of his homicide squad, where murder was involved, as jealously as if each clue was an authentic map to buried treasure. Captain Yates put his feet back on his desk top, smiled sweetly, and said: "The Bull told me you'd be down. I'm glad you're taking this baby off my hands.'

'Bad one?"

"Mmmm. Sounds simple enough. The clerk in Deck 35 — that's where they keep some of their best books - found him. The clerk name of Altmeyer - was turning out the light when the library closed at nine, and he found Willie the Mope just lying on his back between the shelves. Strangled.'

"Guess Willie had a few enemies," Tommy suggested.

"As far as we've found out, he didn't have any friends. He was a little guy with big ideas and liked to throw his weight around.

you found out how Willie got into the library stacks?"

There were only the two of them in the squad room, but Captain Yates peered over his shoulder, as if he feared someone would overhear. Then he rose and shut the door. Finally he whispered: "He had a note from Judge Palley! You know who he is!"

"Well, he's a millionaire, and a retired district judge," Tommy said, "and he's sort of a lobbyist, and something of a philanthropist, and he gets on boards."

"And one of those boards is the library's advisory council. Believe it or not, here's the note."

It looked genuine. It was done on the excellent stationery of the Hon. Robert Hobart Palley, Public Relations Counsellor. It was neatly typed, and Judge Palley's signature was bold and plain. It read simply:

"Please admit Mr. William Mullaney, who is doing research for me, into the stacks."

Tommy tucked the note into an envelope and put it in his pocket. "What's Willie been doing recently?" he inquired.

"Don't know. Been living in Philly and coming down here once in a while. Philly cops are working on it."

"Thanks," Tommy said. He drifted out of the shining limestone pile that was Headquarters, stepped into his roadster, and pointed its battered nose towards northwest Washington.

THE thought came, as he drove, that it might be wise to do something about Joan's raw rhubarb. She'd been so insistent about it. She has been acting strangely, he decided. Last week it was dill pickles, and usually she couldn't abide them, and this week raw rhubarb. Married a year - less ten days and she'd never asked for either pickles or

He detoured two blocks to the C Street market, selected what he believed to be a nice bunch of rhubarb, ordered it delivered, and then stepped into a phone booth and dialed his apartment.

Joan answered, and he said, "Hello, darling, that rhubarb's on the way."

"Aren't you bringing it yourself, Tommy?" she asked, and there was a plaintive, littlegirl quality to her voice that made him wish, suddenly, that he wasn't a cop on assignment, because he could imagine her sitting in the big chair with her knees drawn up almost to her chin in the way she had, and her bright hair piled in curls on top of her head — lonely.

"Sorry, honey," he said. "Got to go to the Freelander Memorial Library and browse around."

"Library? Why, Tommy?"

"It's a job - just a little job." he said lightly. That was all he told her, because for the past few weeks she'd seemed nervous, and distraught, when he said words like murder, or holdup, or shooting.

"You'll hurry home, won't you please, Tommy?"

"Certainly," he promised.

"And Tommy, when you come home will you bring me an avocado? Goodby.'

He climbed back into the roadster. Avocado. That was a new one. What strange eating habits she was developing. He guessed women wo things I would like to know," groused B. M. (Bulldog) Bullock, Inspector of Detectives of the Metropolitan Police. "Why is it my slice always comes back this time of year, and what was Willie the Mope doing in a library in the first place?" The Inspector raised his chin from his shirt front and advanced it, formidable as the prow of a battleship, an inch across the desk.

"I'm sure I can't tell you," said Detective Sergeant Tommy Tucker, his eyes vacant and inattentive behind his spectacles.

"I might as well quit golf in the month of October," the Inspector declaimed, and then seeing that Tommy wasn't listening, he exploded: "I call you in here to talk about a job and what do you do? You stand there and stare out the window with your mouth open like you've been tapped on the head with a billy. No wonder we don't get any work done in this bureau! No wonder the librarian is beefing, and the newspapers are beefing, and the District Commissioners are beefing, and they're all beefing at me!"

"Huh?" said Tommy, thoughtfully rubbing the Phi Beta Kappa key swinging from his watch chain. "Didn't notice it was so cool

"The library murder!" the Inspector shouted. "The library murder! That's what I'm talking about!"

the factory again, not a great deal can be written. I had to surrender my fingerprints and photograph and swear never even to mention some of the things in social conversation. For in this building, and the others like it, Sperry is constructing weapons of war like none ever seen on this planet, super-scientific devices designed to make America forever dominant. This is truly the wizard's den of modern warfare.

Of course, there are also commercial machines being fashioned in the great shops, modern miracles that we have come to take for granted. The gyroscopic compasses for steamships, for instance, some as tall as a man. Then there are uncanny evolutions of these, one of which holds a ship on a given course, manipulating rudder and controls by itself; and another which automatically writes a complete history of the voyage. With these it is theoretically possible to start a vessel out of one port and dock it at another without a human hand touching the helm or the log chart.

In the aviation departments I saw more mysterious commonplaces — directional gyros and gyro-horizons, which tell the pilot where's he's heading and whether he's on an even keel; also the newer gyro-pilot, which keeps an airplane faultlessly on its course while the human pilot relaxes.

Near by, men with delicate precision tools were turning out pieces of metal measured to the incredible accuracy of one-half of one-tenth of one-thousandth of an inch, much finer than the finest spider web. They were for use in connection with the new "flight ray," an instrument installed in a plane by which a pilot can bring his ship into the precise center of an airport runway in impenetrable fog or deepest night. He rides smoothly down an invisible ramp through the air, and this ramp is mysteriously created by an eight-inch tube of glass and copper set up on the flying field. It is called the Klystron.

The Klystron is, of course, a radio tube. But instead of shooting out its waves fanwise, it can be made to project a straight beam no more than two feet wide, infinitely more accurate than a bullet from a gun. With Klystron installed in the center of a runway and aimed on an easy slant skyward, and with the beam-receiving "flight ray" in the airplane cockpit, the pilot is able to come down to a perfect landing. Still brand-new, Klystron is expected to be useful in many fields. Among other things, it may make long-range television broadcasting cheap and easy.

"But right now," said my guide significantly, "it means that bad weather won't stop our fighting planes."

Mystery Even to Makers

More than nine-tenths of Sperry's business is military. Even before the national emergency was declared, the plants had been virtually commandeered. During my several visits there was always an armed guard within five feet, watching every move I made.

Many of the men who work on these floors don't know what they're making. Each is given a part of a job to do. When the secret device is finally assembled, it is the product of hundreds of pairs of hands. No one man knows exactly how it has been made.

But some of the things that are happening in those mysterious cloisters can be told. For one thing, a military searchlight is being made, brighter than any light ever before created by man. It's 800,000,000 "beam candlepower" throws a ray that will spot an airplane five miles up.

Most remarkable of the devices which can be mentioned is a series of delicate, uncanny instruments intended to spell doom for enemy bombers. Operating automatically, it picks up the sound of a plane's motors 12 miles distant, determines its altitude, speed, direction, the wind velocity and all other pertinent factors — and delivers all the information in a split minute to the gunners of an antiaircraft battery. Guns and searchlights can be trained on the plane long before it comes within reasonable shooting distance.

With these and even more intelligent instruments, including our famous bomb sight and mysterious devices which make the big guns of our dreadnoughts the most deadly accurate seagoing weapons in existence, Sperry has been transformed from an agency of peace to a machine of war. And this somewhat disturbs its president, Tom Morgan, for he is at heart a peaceable man. If he could have his way, he'd be

He started life on a farm in Vance County, North Carolina, on September 27, 1887, and his heart has never wandered very far away. When Tom Morgan was a boy, his father never saw $100 cash from one year's end to the next. The boys — Tom, Charles, Frank and Robert — took off their shoes right after the spring thaw and didn't put them on again until after the first good frost.

The county school was a one-room plank building which ran only two months a year. By the time he was 16 and ready for high school, Tom had managed to accumulate a stake—three acres of tobacco, two cows and a horse. He sold them all, plus a pile of fertilizer he was saving, and found himself with $30. He slung his shoes over his shoulder and walked to Littleton, where there was a private high school, and enrolled.

The next years were an unending struggle to keep going. He started working as a carpenter, then got a job as night telephone operator. His hours were from 6 P.M. to 8 A.M., but in addition he was the company trouble shooter, and on Saturdays and Sundays he collected phone bills. There weren't many calls at night, so he took on an additional job - night manager of a livery stable. He rigged up a buzzer system between the telephone office and the livery barn and got along all right. Still having time on his hands, he rented an abandoned house for $10 a month and took in other boys as roomers.

At high school he first heard of wireless. It intrigued him. The Wrights had just flown at Kitty Hawk, and the thought of airplanes intrigued him, too. But there wasn't much a Carolina backwoods boy could do except raise tobacco or work for the railroad, so in 1908 he joined the Navy with the idea of learning a trade. He was made an apprentice electrician and sent to school at Brooklyn, New York, the first city he'd ever seen. He became a radio operator and in 1910 was assigned to the U.S.S. Delaware, the first dreadnought ever to sail with our Navy.

Perfect Opportunity

THERE were a good many things wrong with the Delaware. Her telephones didn't work right. She had no central fire-control system. That made her duck soup for young Morgan, who liked to fix things. Within a year she was working so smoothly that the Navy made her a sort of test laboratory, an experimental ground for new gadgets. Thus, one day in 1911, an inventor named Elmer Sperry came aboard to demonstrate a new type of compass, the core of which was an electrically-powered gyroscope.

Of the whole ship's crew, only two men took the gyro-compass seriously. One was Ensign Reginald E. Gillmor, chief electrical officer. The other was his right-hand man, Tom Morgan. They took it so seriously, in fact, that when Mr. Sperry diffidently suggested they leave the Navy and help him put the new compass on the market, they instantly agreed.

Today Mr. Gillmor is president of the Sperry Gyroscope Company, number-one subsidiary of the larger Sperry Corporation, headed by Mr. Morgan. Between them, Messrs. Morgan and Gillmor have reared their spinning infant to versatile maturity. The gyroscope has fathered several dozen talented offspring. Sperry hydraulics, for example, are utilized for cranes, shell hoists, mine lifts, steering gears, gun turrets and for such prosaic chores were strange creatures. Even The Bull, who had been married thirty years, claimed his wife was a deeper mystery than the Mary Baker murder. He'd better try the library, speaking of murders.

At the great bronze gates of the Freelander Memorial he bumped into Big Dutch Kraft, who gambled for a living. "Hello," Tommy greeted him happily, "been catching up on your reading?"

Big Dutch hunched his shoulders, like a fullback about to hit the line. and said, "I'm in a hurry, copper."

TOMMY rested his right hand on Big Dutch's arm. "I'm afraid," he said, "you're going to be delayed. I suppose you didn't hear what happened to Willie the Mope in there?"

'Sure," Big Dutch said, "I heard. What's that got to do with me?"

"Didn't you have a bit of trouble with him?"

"That was two - three years ago." "So he's murdered, and you're right on the spot." "If I had anything to do with it, think I'd be here?" Big Dutch asked.

"No," Tommy admitted. "I don't. But just for curiosity, what were you doing in there?"

"I'll tell you," Big Dutch said, "because if I don't, I know you'!l cart me down to Headquarters, and a bunch of those thick homicide squad dicks will keep me up all night. It's like this: I go up to the public periodical room all the time. They got all the race sheets in there, and anyone can read 'em, free. I study up on past performance charts. Now do you mind if I go, copper? I got something good in the fifth at Bowie.'

Tommy didn't remove his hand. "You get around," he suggested. "What's Willie the Mope been doing, up until the other night?'

"I don't know. Me, all I know is the races."

"Well," Tommy said, "I guess we'd better go to Headquarters.

Big Dutch thought this over, and finally said: "I'm not sure, y' understand, but I hear he went legitimate. I hear he's been workin' for an art dealer in Philly."

There was a barely perceptible flicker in Tommy's eyes. "Oh," he said, "an art dealer." "Imagine a rat like that in a high class profession like art," said Dutch.

"You imagine it," Tommy said. 'I've got enough to worry about." He dropped his hand from Dutch's sleeve.

Tommy sauntered into the library, and an elevator dropped him to Deck 35, which was deep in the earth, and still and remote as if its towering shelves formed a lonely canyon. Mr. Altmeyer had been the clerk in Deck 35 for eighteen years. In that period the most exciting thing that had happened was the day a nice old lady tried to sneak out with an early Dickens miniature under her bonnet. It wasn't surprising, therefore, that Mr. Altmeyer was agitated, and the words bubbled out of him.

Yes, Mr. Altmeyer admitted, he had let the man into the stacks. No, he'd never see him before. He was positive. There weren't a great many people allowed into Deck 35. Some pretty valuable books in here, Detective Sergeant Tucker was to understand. Then why had he let Willie the Mope into the stacks?

ALTMEYER'S hands shook as he adjusted his thick-lense glasses. Why, the man had a note from Judge Palley, of course!

"You recognized the signature, I suppose?" Tommy suggested.

'Certainly!" said Altmeyer. "I've seen Judge Palley's signature many times. Johnny Tibbs - he's the law clerk in the Judge's office - comes in here quite frequently on errands for the Judge. Fetching and returning books. And the Judge's secretary -Percy Palley - he's a nephew comes into the stacks occasionally."

"Do they carry notes from teacher,

"Oh, yes. Precisely like the one that poor man had. Have to have them, you know, to come into this deck. We're quite strict about it. Only a note from one of our own people in authority, or a member of the Advisory Council, can get you in."

Tommy's eyes roved the unbroken, endless lines of books. "Judge Palley,' he ventured, "must be a voracious reader.'

"He is indeed," said Altmeyer. "Reads an amazing variety of titles by an amazing list of authors. Mostly, Johnny Tibbs comes over for them. All young Palley ever asks for are detective stories." Altmeyer closed one owlish eye in an awkward wink.

"You say all Percy ever asks for are mysteries?'

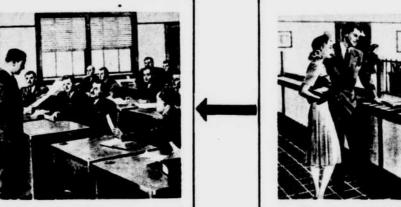

"That's correct. You know, even here on Deck 35 we have detective stories. Oldtimers, of course. I myself sometimes enjoy - '

"Strange," Tommy interrupted. His nose twitched. It always twitched, and he could not help it, when his mind climbed an elusive thread. "Now, Mr. Altmeyer," he said, "if you'll just show me where you found the body -- '

Altmeyer led him down a corridor, and then they stepped into a more narrow passageway, also solid with books, as you turn from a street into a blind alley. "Right here!" the clerk said, and pointed. "His knees were drawn up, and he was staring at the ceiling." Altmeyer shivered.

What an Agency System looks like

Scenes such as this educational meeting for fieldmen are common in District Offices. Field Training Instructors, who assist in this educational work to improve Metropolitan's service, operate from the Home and Head Offices, but in the field they work under the Superintendent of Agencies of the Territory to which they are assigned.

Assistant managers in each District. besides office work, help to train agents to serve existing policyholders, analyze insurance needs, and sell insurance to fill those needs. They try to visit, with the agents, as many policyholders as possible in the District at least once a year.

This shows a typical District Office, the hub of the Agency System. Territories are divided into Districts, each in charge of a manager who, in addition to his other duties, supervises the work of the agents. The District Office, with its manager, assistant managers, agents, and office clerks, might be called a "service station" for local policyholders.

Districts are divided into smaller · areas known as Debits, each in charge of an agent, who serves the policyholders living in his Debit. The size of a Debit is the result of what experience has shown to be the most efficient operating unit in the light of local conditions.

Metrepelitan has, in the United States and Canada, about 19,000 agents, 2,500 assistant managers, and 850 managers, as well as 5,700 office clerks. Through them the Company maintains direct and constant contact with policyholders . . . one of the chief means of seeing that Metropolitan policyholders are served faithfully and well.

"working in my fertilizer plant." Jeff and Wadrey and myself went over there of a Thursday evening, and Joe Wilczek was working in his garden. "Joe," Jeff said, "the town has decided to buy your tree and pay you good money for it. We've got forty-seven dollars and twenty what a lot of money that was. He needed money, too. His house needed lots of fixing up, and his clothes were in mighty sad shape. Yes, sir, fortyseven dollars meant a lot to Joe Wilczek.

He held out the envelope of money, and Joe looked at it. It was a fat enve-

But you know what he did? He looked at us and shook his head and said, "No."

I said, "What? You won't even sell

"No," he said. "I am sorry."

JEFF got mad. "Look here, Wilczek," he said, pushing his jaw out, "you're being pigheaded obstinate about this! A tree's only a tree, and we're offering you a deal more than it's worth. What you need is a grain of good American patriotism!"

"I am sorry. You do not understand."

"You're right we don't understand!" Jeff shouted, and proceeded to tell this stubborn foreigner just what was wrong with him. He laid it on good and heavy.

Wadrey Anderson was sore, too. He planted himself in front of Wilczek when Jeff got through. "Is this final,

"All right then," Wadrey shouted, "get yourself another job! I won't have any pigheaded foreigners working in my place!"

Joe Wilczek didn't say anything. He sort of shrugged his shoulders, helplessly, and went into the house.

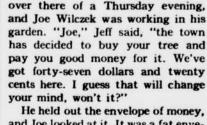

But that didn't end it. Jeff wouldn't let the matter drop. We talked it over and he had an idea. We'd go over there at night, he said, and take the tree, whether Joe Wilczek liked it or not. If he tried to stop us, we could handle him all right.

YES, sir, we'd take that tree. So long as Wilczek got paid for it, he'd have no complaint. And we were determined not to let any dumb foreigner's obstinacy stand in the way of Farmville's patriotism. By this time we were calling Joe Wilczek a foreigner.

The three of us met at my house the following night, and I had my shotgun in case Joe Wilczek decided to get ugly.

We took a big two-handled saw and some ropes and an ax. It was a raw night, and we had a drink of whiskey apiece before starting out. Just the three of us, mind you. What we meant to do was get that tree and have it standing in front of the town hall by morning. "It will show Wilczek and others of his kind that real Americans are a determined, fighting lot of people," Jeff said, "especially when they're in the right

The front was dark. We stood there at the corner of the property, close to the tree, and talked a while, and decided to get started. We wouldn't go up to the house and tell him. He'd hear us soon enough and come out to see what was going on, and then we'd deal with him in whatever way was

"I just hope he gets ugly," I said. "These foreigners ought to be taught some respect."

We looked the tree over and decided how to cut it down. And just then the headlights of a car swung around the bend of the road, forcing us to move back.

THE car stopped in front of the house, not forty feet from us, and I can tell you we looked at it good and hard. It had yellow New York license plates, and was covered with mud and dirt, but it was worth a lot of money, that car.

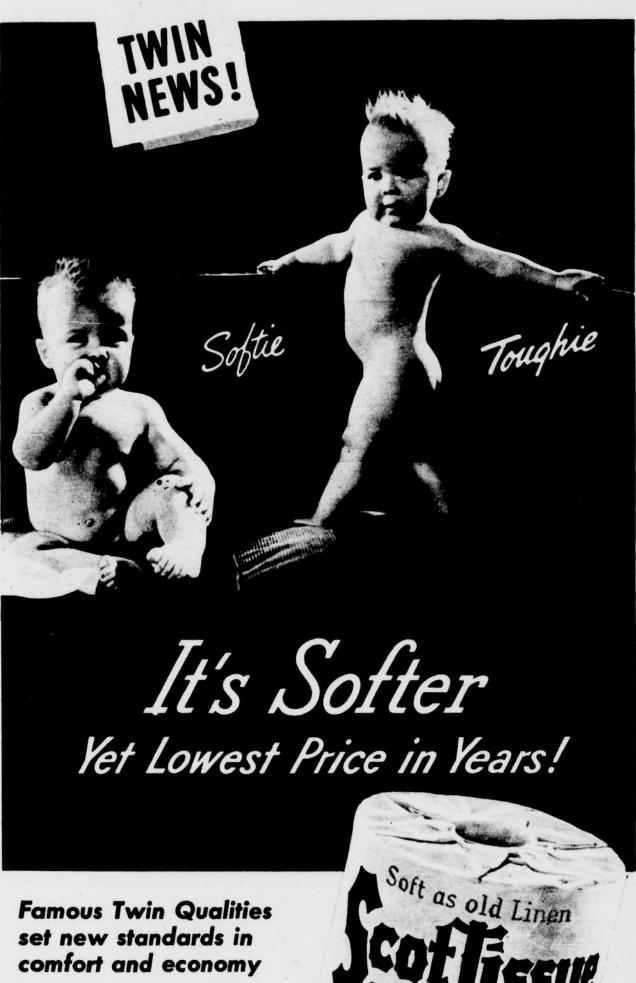

A dark little man got out, went up the steps and rang the bell. None of us spoke a word. Just watched. The car's lights were still on. Pretty soon a light went on in Joe's front room, and Joe opened the door.

We couldn't hear what was said. It looked mighty suspicious, though, I can tell you. The dark little man did most of the talking, and Joe just listened. Then he hurried back to his car, lifted a black suitcase out of the trunk, put out the car's lights, and lugged this big suitcase into the house. The door closed, but the light in the front room stayed on.

"You see that?" I whispered, trembling some with excitement. "A New York car, and him taking that big suitcase into Wilczek's house! At this time of night!"

"Sure you didn't hear anything?" The guardian of Deck 35 hesitated, and his thin hands gripped and twisted. "Unfortunately," he said, "I was called by the superintendent to check some unreturned volumes. That was between eight and eight-thirty. The little man was alone in the stacks when I left. It must have happened while I was away, because I didn't see him when I returned. I didn't find - find him dead until I came back here to turn out the lights at closing

"Any books missing?" Tommy asked casually

"That's the queer thing." Altmeyer said. "There was an extra book. It was under his body.'

Tommy thought of Joan, waiting at home for him, and The Bull fuming at Headquarters, and of Captain Yates, complacently chuckling, no doubt. "No wonder Yates wasn't sore," Tommy muttered.

"What's that?" Altmeyer asked. 'Nothing. Talking to myself. What do you mean, extra book?"

"At first I thought it was one of our best first editions, and then I discovered it wasn't a first edition, and wasn't even a library book. It was an early copy of Louisa May Alcott's Little Women.'

Tommy's long frame drooped under the weight of this information. "Why," he asked, "would Willie the Mope be reading Little Women?"

"I can't say," said Altmeyer, "but there it was, under his body. I thought at first it was our own volume real collector's item. But ours is right there. See it?'

And what about the extra book?" Tommy insisted.

"Exactly like ours, but a later printing. I examined it. Found the words 'part one' on the spine. That's how I knew it wasn't a first. But there was a library bookplate in it, and I thought it had come from the general stacks. But I checked up, and apparently it isn't a library book at all. Bewildering. Nothing like this ever happened here

Tommy's nose was twitching again. "You never had a murder before," he remarked, and turned away and sauntered out of Deck 35, and out of the library, and into the bright, crisp sunshine

The man who opened the door of Judge Palley's office suite, Tommy guessed, was Johnny Tibbs. He was tall as Tommy, and broader. He possessed a good, political smile, and a smooth, square chin. His collar was starched, his tie neat, and his gray suit

'My name's Tucker," said Tommy. "I'm from Police Headquarters. I'd like to see the Judge."

"Sorry. The Judge wasn't feeling well this morning. Went home early. Anything I can do?"

"I guess you can help," Tommy said.

Then the door to the inner office opened, and Tibbs said: "This is Mr. Percy Palley, the Judge's secretary. Perhaps you'd better talk to him."

Percy's collar was open at the neck, and his handclasp was slack, and he seemed profoundly uninterested.

"Well," Tommy said, "I'm glad you're both here. I've got just a little matter to clean up. It's about that fellow who was killed in the library."

"If you're talking about that note," flared the secretary, "we've told you men all we know. One of you cops routed me out of bed about it. If you people don't stop pestering us, my uncle'll have somebody broken."

"It's only a small thing," Tommy said, slipping the note from his pocket and carefully unfolding it. "Is this the Judge's signature?"

'Go ask him," Percy suggested. "and see what happens!"

Tibbs took the note. "I don't know," he said, studying it. "Looks like the Judge signed it, but of course he said he didn't."

"I wish you'd get out of here," young Palley barked irritably.

'Mind if I use your typewriter a moment?" Tommy asked, and without waiting for a reply stepped into the secretarial office. He sat down in front of the typewriter, took a sheet of paper from a drawer, and typed: "Please admit Mr. William Mullaney, who is doing research for me, into the stacks."

He took the paper from the machine, folded and pocketed it. Then he swung around in the chair and asked quietly: "Did either of you ever see Willie the Mope around here?"

Tibbs shook his head emphatically. Palley's voice was shrill: "I never saw Willie the Mope in my life, and I never heard of Willie the Mope in my

"That's enough," Tommy said. "I was just asking."

His long legs carried him into the corridor outside, and he walked to the elevator. Outside he stepped into a phone booth, took out the two notes, and compared them. The S and E were dropped, he noticed, and the W was battered. He'd bet the same machine did them both, but he couldn't be sure until an expert said so. Anyway, that could wait for the trial. He was beginning to hope there would be a trial.

He dialed Headquarters, and asked for Inspector Bullock.

"Making any good?" the Inspector asked, and because the gruffness was missing from his voice. Tommy knew The Bull was worried. "Hope you are, because people are certainly beefing. You ought to see the afternoon papers. You'd think I personally murdered Willie the Mope."

"Believe I'm doing all right," Tommy said. Then he suggested that the Inspector call the Philadelphia police

ARE CATS SUPER-SMART?

Let's watch Mollie the Maltese - and see

by Elsie McCormick

N ONE of those perennial arguments that go on from generation to generation, cats are frequently described as being far less intelligent than dogs. The fact that most cats refuse to roll over and play dead on command, or otherwise make spectacles of themselves, is considered proof of a lack of mental ability.

Personally, I don't believe that the two ideas have any connection. Many bank presidents might also refuse to roll over and play dead, but this does not mean an inadequate I.Q. A cat, whose sense of dignity is at least as great as a financier's, simply doesn't see any reason in such antics and thus refuses to be a party to them.

I do not mean to imply, however, that an intelligent cat doesn't have his or her own little bag of tricks. These are not designed to amuse the owner or to help him break awkward pauses in conversation; instead, they consist of various systems of practical and psychological racketeering, meant to install the cat as master of the household in as short a time as possible.

Being a dog-lover is easy, for a neurotic or for anybody else. Dogs build up one's self-esteem at almost every turn, making even the poorest human specimen feel like a king. To enter into a friendly relationship with a cat, however, you must be made of far sterner material. You must, in other words, be able to take it. A cat may have a deep affection for you, but the one thing you can be sure of is that her love won't take the form of blind adoration. Underneath her gentle manners will be concealed a working blueprint of all your weaknesses, and a willingness to take advantage of them to the extent of the legal limit.

First Lesson

My UNDERSTANDING of the many ways in which a cat can make a monkey of its provider developed through my ownership of Mollie the Maltese. When she came home with us, I accidentally stepped with almost crippling force on her right front paw. Mollie retired under the bed to nurse her pain and her sense of outrage. She was oblivious at first to the apologies which we delivered kneeling by the upraised bedspread. But the saucers of canned milk and salmon which we recklessly shoved along to her over our second-best rug had a somewhat less frigid reception. She was limping when she came out, but there were flakes of salmon on her whiskers and a meditative look in her eye which indicated that she knew how to deal with these softies in the future.

That paw did Mollie good service for several weeks. The limp disappeared completely after a few days, and she frolicked gaily about the house, knocking bittersweet out of vases and sharpening her claws on the frame of the divan. When she was hungry, however, she would sit down before an empty saucer, hold her onceinjured paw in the air, and look at me with an expression of gentle, martyred accusation. After a few weeks she even forgot which paw had been stepped on. Often she held up the wrong one, as she turned on her injured look and tried to shame me into giving her an extra portion of liver.

Mollie soon developed other devious methods of managing her adopted family. One of her favorite thirddegree devices was to sit in the middle of the kitchen while dinner was being cooked and stare at the icebox door with the unwinking intensity of a fur-bearing basilisk. After spilling a fancy dessert in the act of making a detour around her, one generally gave in and fed her ahead of schedule. If this didn't work, she sometimes caught the edge of her empty saucer in her mouth and let it bang to the floor.

Her next step was sheer blackmail. She would dash to the living room, jump on the mantel and freeze, paw upraised, before one of our Chinese vases. We don't know what the subsequent methods would have been, for her "stop-me-quick-if-you-don't-wantto-hear-this-one" gesture always brought gallopingly prompt results.

As Mollie grew older, her field for racketeering broadened. On Sundays, usually, the household routine was slow in getting under way. The consequent delay of her breakfast irked Mollie down to her last gray hair. She would stalk solemnly over to our nextdoor neighbors' and mew piteously at their side door until they presented her with a saucer of milk. She hovered over the milk with one eye on our windows, making sure that we saw how she had been reduced to beggary. If she happened to have a kitten on hand - and we were seldom poor as far as kittens were concerned - she would bring the infant with her to complete the impression of heartbreaking neglect. We always gave in and called her back for her favorite breakfast of fried liver or sausages.

Mollie the Maltese left us some time ago to take up her residence in celestial catnip meadows. We long missed her affectionate moments-her way of laying an appreciative paw against one's cheek, her gentle ankle massages. But what we missed even more were her methods of racketeering and her ability to see through homo sapiens down to his last weakened bastion.

We haven't acquired a cat since. However, the day when we shall again be bossed by a feline is not far distant. A black-and-white job has recently taken up residence in our birch woods. Wild and wary at first, she now pauses at a distance and looks us over speculatively as we work in the flower beds.

Before long, she'll shyly and gratefully accept a bit of canned cat food.

Philip Gendreau

Mollie could blackmail you — and make you love it

A week or so after that she'll move in, bag and baggage, complain about the rations, and have spells if she isn't allowed to sleep on the guest-room bed. Also, if she's among the brighter of her kind, she'll be getting the better of us in a dozen devious ways. And if you don't think we'll enjoy it, you don't know cat-lovers!

LOOK OUT FOR Infectious Dandruff!

Start NOW with LISTERINE!

Take these signs seriously. They may be a warning of the infectious type of dandruff, so common and frequently so stubborn!

Your common sense tells you that it's wise to treat an infection with an antiseptic which attacks large numbers of the germs accompanying the infection.

So, be wise . . . start right in with Listerine Antiseptic and massage. It's a simple, delightfully easy, medical treatment.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Listerine gives hair and scalp an antiseptic bath . . . kills millions of germs associated with infectious dandruff, including Pityrosporum ovale, the stubborn "bottle bacillus" which many authorities recognize as a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

Those distressing, loosened dandruff flakes begin to disappear. Itching and inflammation are relieved. Your scalp feels healthier, your hair looks cleaner.

76% Improved in Clinical Tests

We've received countless letters from men and women all over America, praising Listerine to the skies for bringing them relief from dandruff's distressing

Not only that . . . in a series of severe clinical tests, fully 76% of the dandruff sufferers who used Listerine Antiseptic and massage twice daily showed complete disappearance of or marked improve ment in the symptoms within a month!

If you have the slightest sign of infectious dandruff, don't wait . . . get after it now with Listerine Antiseptic, the tested treatment. The large economy-size bottle will save you money. LAMBERT PHARMACAL Co., St. Louis, Mo.

THE TREATMENT

MEN: Douse full strength Listerine on the scalp morning and night.

WOMEN: Part the hair at various places, and apply Listerine Antiseptic.

LBERT HANSSEN was jogging his A big truck along the express highway at thirty miles an hour. "Low bridge ahead," said his helper.

"I see it," Hanssen replied.

"This is where Bill Kade ripped his top off last week," the helper offered. Yeah. Bad spot - 'specially for these new trucks -- clearance on them is less than on any others in the fleet. Makin' 'em big as freight cars these days. We'll clear it though - she's loaded down."

Hanssen swung the truck to the middle of the road and passed beneath the low arch of a railroad bridge with only inches to spare.

We ought to be in Philly by fivethirty," the helper speculated. "Easy," replied the driver.

The rear-vision mirror picked up a pair of bright headlights, and Hanssen eased over to allow room for passing. A long car pulled alongside and gauged its pace to that of the truck. The muzzle of a Tommy-gun protruded from the tonneau window. A man with an automatic pistol in hand leaned from the front-door window.

"Pull over, Buzz. This is a stickup," called a heavy voice, as the sedan edged over slightly, forcing the red van to a halt.

"Highjackers!" breathed the helper. "How'd they know we was carryin' liquor?"

use gettin' hurt. Nothing we can do there's four of 'em."

"Climb down out of that cab," commanded one of the quartet, as he thrust his pistol inside. "Snap it up - the boss wouldn't like it if anybody was to get hurt."

The pair obeyed. Hanssen was searched and the key to the lock which secured the rear door of the truck was taken from him. Two of the bandits got into the cab and started off with the truck. The driver and his helper were forced into the rear of the sedan at pistol point.

For a while the big sedan followed the truck, but later turned off the main road. After an hour Hanssen and his helper were forced out of the car on a country lane, miles from the scene of the highjacking. The bandit car sped away. In the cold gray of the dawn they walked the deserted road. "Should have got the license number," the helper said suddenly.

"I got it," Hanssen answered. "But it won't do any good; they're out-ofstate tags and probably stolen."

"What are we gonna do?" asked the

"Find a telephone," Hanssen replied. But the morning had turned pink with the sun before they reached a farmhouse with wires running to a pole at the roadside.

When they reached city police headquarters, they couldn't identify any of the photographs in the identification bureau, but they furnished police with varying descriptions of the highwaymen.

Detective Sergeant Dillon spoke to Hanssen: "Four hundred and fifty cases of whiskey, eh? Whew! That's a big load. We'll see what we can do -Ought to recover the truck prefty soon; they can't hide a big thing like that for long. We'll let you know as soon as we get somethin'."

The police teletype instructed officers to canvass all public and private garages, giving a description of the truck and the brand of the whiskey. Police of nearby large towns were asked to be on the lookout. State police also were asked to help.

In the afternoon of the same day Sergeant Dillon called Hanssen and asked him to come to Butch Rankin's garage on Market Street, where he had located the truck.

Upon his arrival, the sergeant resumed his questioning of the garage owner. "Butch," he said, "you say a guy brought it here this mornin', empty, and paid you for a week's storage, huh? Well, the name and address he gave you don't check. There ain't no such address. How come you didn't check up on the license?"

"Look, copper, it ain't my job to scare business away. The guy paid me, didn't he? You cops make it tough for a guy that wants to do the right thing," Butch growled.

"Now look, Butch, we ain't blamin' you, see? Just give us his descrip-

"Have you looked inside?" Hanssen asked.

"Yeah - the truck's empty, all right," replied the sergeant. Hanssen studied the top of the truck for a minute and then called the sergeant away and whispered into "You might try it," the sergeant suggested.

Hanssen climbed into the cab. The keys were in the ignition switch. He backed the truck close to the garage door, got out of the cab and looked up. The top of the red van reached three inches above the door

"Well, by gee!" exclaimed the sergeant, "You're right."

He turned and placed a hand on Rankin's shoulder. "C'mon, Butch," he said, "let's go down to headquarters and have a talk with the skipper - maybe you can convince him that that liquor wasn't unloaded right here in your garage."

BEAUTIFUL — BUT VAGUE

was purely a device for letting in a little sweetness and light, not to say laughs.

There was one sequence in which Basil questioned Barbara as a patient. You can imagine the answers she gave in

Vera Vague's nutso-soprano. There was another sequence in which she had trouble with the elevator system in the building. There was another . . .

But came the night of the sneak preview, when the studio officials hoped

Refers to her, we might add, with an attitude in which exasperation is mingled with indulgence.

"She gets out of hand," Barbara says with a shrug. "You know how she is - always going in over her depth.'

Vera Vague is a composite satire of all the attitudes that one woman resents, or is bored by, in another. She will sail into any topic without fear, but after the generalities are exhausted, she bogs down deeper and deeper into the slough of redundancy until there is little visible but high blood pressure and an agitated feather topping an odd hat.

She'll Take Anything

No TOPIC is too involved, too technical or too remote to be tampered with by one of the Vague lectures. Her favorite brainstorm so far is an inspired bit of insanity dealing with that harried subject: Capital and Labor. It goes something like this:

"I have just finished reading 'Das Kapital' by Harpo Marx," she announces in the voice that has looked under a thousand beds. "It is a very interesting book, telling all about closing the sweater shops on Labor Day, which is a very good idea as the weather is usually too hot in September for sweaters to be worn anyway."

"But, Miss Vague," inquires the patient voice of her heckler - usually Jack Carson on the "Signal Carnival," her West Coast program - "what do you think of the open-shop policy?"

"You mean the open-door policy, of course," corrects Vera. "You men! You never get anything right. Well, I'm in favor of it," triumphantly, positively.

"Why?"

Miss Vera Vague becomes a flutter ing butterfly avoiding the pin. She sputters, she stammers, she gets herself into a tizzy, and finally bursts out, "Well . . . where there are so many men working hard in a small space, they've just

Her vis-à-vis at the microphone has gone down for the third time, but he inquires feebly, "In closing, Miss Vague, have you decided whether your sympathies are with capital or with labor?"

She rises to the occasion as only Vera Vague, the unconquerable, can. "I've thought it over and I just can't make up my mind. I know capital has done a lot for the world, but my goodness . . . where would we all be if it hadn't been for . . . '

And she dashes offstage with a shriek of diabolical laughter.

Vanishing Act

IN THE corridor, the zany vanishes and in her place is a faintly embarrassed, extraordinarily handsome girl whose natural voice is a full octave below the Vague hysterical soprano.

Vera Vague, instead of preventing Barbara Allen from getting ahead in the movies, actually helped her. A studio executive decided she would be the perfect funny foil for Basil Rathbone in his horror picture, "The Mad Doctor." This was the story of an insane psychiatrist who loved his women and left them - as slightly disappointed corpses.

Introducing Barbara into the plot to get an audience reaction to their horror show

The horror turned out to be exclusively their own. The audience took one listen to Barbara-Vera and decided that this was an uncommonly funny comedy; they shrieked through the psychiatrist's interview; they howled through the allegedly blood-curdling scenes; they had a wonderful time, and they weren't scared a bit.

It Didn't Pay '

In her next picture, "Kiss The Boys Goodbye," with Mary Martin and Don Ameche, Barbara turned villainess and gummed up the works for Mary. But even in this dire part, Barbara managed to get a bright 250-watt laugh. Of course, there have been other pictures in which Barbara has been herself, and has talked in her natural voice.

When Barbara speaks softly and seriously, there is no Puckish quality about her at all. One almost forgets that there resides in this beautiful, quiet girl one of the prime comediennes of our time. Almost, but not quite.

The next instant she will be telling you about what happened right after she finished making "Melody Ranch," with Gene Autry and Jimmy Durante. To mark the event, she had obeyed that feminine impulse and bought a fabulously expensive new hat.

The more she thought of that hat, the happier she grew, so she stopped at one of Beverly Hills' swankiest cocktail lounges to celebrate. Glancing around at the other patrons, she gasped. Three booths away sat a woman wearing an exact duplicate of the hat Barbara had purchased 20 minutes before.

After burning to a crisp, Barbara's sense of humor came to her rescue. Maybe, she thought, the other woman would enjoy the joke, too. Catching the woman's eye, Barbara pointed to her own head and smiled broadly.

The woman stared at Barbara, dropped her eyes and whispered to her escort. "No sense of humor at all," thought Barbara. "Maybe I'll have more luck with the man.'

When, after the proper interval, the escort shot a searching glance toward her, Barbara was ready. Pointing to her head again, she went into another wide grin, expecting him to get the joke.

He didn't. Instead, he and his companion rose to leave, giving Barbara one of those "the-woman-is-insane" glances. Barbara tried for the last time. Pointing frantically at her own hat, and then at the other woman's, she shrugged, she laughed, she shook her head. But the pair beat a hasty Exasperated, Barbara sat back among the cushions. Then, as she caught sight of herself in a panel mirror, her eyes widened with horror. She was wearing her old hat. She had ordered the new one sent out.

That's Barbara Allen, who tries hard to be sweetly serious, but whose sense of humor forces her to be just a little - well, just a little VAGUE.

so happy he just didn't have the heart to bust the meeting up until after taps had sounded and the dancing master had paid no attention to it. Then Taggart, realizing that sweet Christian thoughts were wasted on him, had broken it up and chucked Moroney back in the can.

The following day being Saturday, and no duty, I walked down to Poitiers for some French grub. Who should I see in Robert's Rotisserie but the dancing master and Juliette Lamerie! The girl looked a little frightened when she saw me, but apparently she did not tell Moroney. Nor did I interfere in their happiness. There was always time to knock down his ears. Instead, I bought a new padlock for my little bastille. I was walking back to Migne in the long twilight when a donkey drawing a battered old barouche passed me at top speed. Juliette was driving and Moroney was urging the donkey along with a switch. Well, Taggart had him locked up when I got back. He had discovered that Julie had a key to the padlock, given her by the old peasant woman from whom we rented the jug. Taggart was very proud of Julie for this, and declared she had more enterprise and initiative than lots of generals he knew. Nevertheless, he was more than ever resolved to save her innocent young heart from breakage and spoilage by the dancing master, and he received my new padlock with much appreciation. We didn't want to put a sentry on the guardhouse, because that would be using Moroney to make extra duty for the battery.

THE morning we left Migne, Juliette waited until Moroney's squad swung by the bakery, then she fell in beside him and took his left hand and marched with us up the hill out of the valley to a plateau covered with wheat stubble. We were making short-cuts across country over farm roads to Poitiers. The men were winded when we reached the top, so I had them unswing packs and sit down to rest for one cigarette.

The dancing master did not sit down. Juliette came into his arms and wept brokenheartedly. Taggart looked at me, and I knew there was blood on the moon. We left her standing there when we moved on, and I knew she would not leave until the column dipped over the skyline and down where the troop trains waited to take us somewhere — somewhere from which there would be no returning. We marched at route step, and I thought Moroney would look back and wave at her, but he didn't. Taggart muttered to me: "He don't give a damn. He's had his fun."

I looked back - I had to - and she was running toward us, following the hypotenuse of a triangle about which she evidently knew. She wanted to catch us before the road turned. She wanted one more embrace -- I saw she couldn't make time because her sabots kept falling off and she had to stop to put them on again. Finally she just held them in her arms and ran in her stocking feet. So I halted the battery and told Moroney to go back and meet her. When he returned we resumed the march, and again left her standing in the wheat stubble gazing after us.

We marched about three hundred yards and again the road turned at a right angle. Taggart said: "Good glory, she's coming again!"

I HALTED the battery and sent Moroney back to her. I told him to make his goodby snappy and final this time. I was angry and sad, and no buck has the right to make his battery commander feel that way. To my horror the girl walked back to the battery with him, took my hand and kissed it and murmured: "Merci, mon capitaine, merci bien!"

And then, most inexplicably, she kissed Taggart's leathery brown cheek. I caught Moroney's eye and he grinned vacuously and shrugged. I wished I could have struck him.

We had come into the main-traveled road now, and where we left Juliette there was an ancient shrine — three flat tiers of stone surmounted by an eight-foot iron cross, rusty and red; on it was a life-size wooden effigy of Christ. Just before the head of the battery dipped over the brow of the hill, to be lost from her sight forever, I glanced back and saw her kneeling at this shrine, praying for the dancing master. He looked back, too, but quickly turned his head to the front again.

"There is more than one way of crucifying, Moroney," I told him in an aside. And again I caught the vacuous grin, the careless shrug of a shoulder, as if with that gesture he shed responsibility for a heart broken because he liked to make love for fun.

From that day forward the dancing master did not have a good time. Taggart gave him all the dirty duty he could find, and after we went up to the front, whenever shellfire cut my telephone lines, I sent Moroney and some more punks like him out under machine-gun and shell fire to find the break and splice it. I lost them all but Moroney.

After the Armistice we went up on the Rhine as part of the Army of Occupation. In April of 1919 replacements reached us, and our war soldiers were ordered sent home to be demobilized. However, we had quite a number of European-born soldiers, and G.H.Q., thinking these men might want to visit their old homes now that they were so close to them, authorized the discharge in Germany of any men desiring it, promising transportation to the United States any time within a year; if the soldier had a wife, an honorable discharge would rate a ticket for two.

To my surprise the dancing master asked for and received his discharge. Just before he left us he came to my orderly room, musette bag on hip, his cased guitar slung over his shoulder, and told Taggart and me just what he thought of us.

"You gave me dirty duty when it wasn't my time on the duty roster," he reminded us, "but I never kicked for my rights because that would have been evidence to you two that you were getting under my skin. At least three times a week for three months I mended broken wire because you wouldn't send a good man out on that deadly job while you had a louse left."

Your Skin can be Lovelier... more Appealing... Go on the CAMAY "MILD-SOAP" DIET!

This exciting idea in beauty care, based on the advice of skin specialists, has helped many brides
—it can help you!

"YOUR DREAM of greater loveliness can come true," says this radiant Camay bride, whose beautiful complexion surely makes her an expert. "I know from my own experience with the 'Mild-Soap' Diet that a little effort can make one look lovelier!"

It is true that many women cloud their true loveliness through improper cleansing. And many others fail to use a soap as mild as a beauty soap should be. "Every time anyone comments on the attractiveness of my skin, I am reminded to be grateful for the Camay 'Mild-Soap' Diet," Mrs. Petts says.

Mrs. Petts' confidence in the "Mild-Soap"
Diet is justified. For skin specialists themselves advise a regular cleansing routine with a fine mild soap. And Camay is not only mild... but actually milder than the 10 other famous beauty soaps with which it was tested. That's why we urge you to "Go on the Camay 'Mild-Soap' Diet!"

Do as Mrs. Petts does. Cleanse your skin with this milder Camay night and morning for at least 30 days. Your skin will feel fresher immediately. And with faithful care, you may reasonably expect to reveal its hidden loveliness within a few short weeks.

GO ON THE "MILD-SOAP" DIET TONIGHT!

Get three cakes of Camey today! Start the "Mild-Soap" Diet tonight. Work Camay's milder lather over your skin, paying special attention to nose, base of nostrils and chin. Rinse with warm water and follow with 30 seconds of cold splashings.

In the morning, one more quick session with Camay and your face is ready for makeup. Do this every single day—twice a day—for 30 days. Don't neglect it even once. For it's the regular cleansing that reveals the full benefit of Camay's greater mildness.

as greasing your automobile. Other products plot the degrees of curves, tilts and grades on roads and railroad tracks, and prevent oil-well drills from twisting out of line.

Strangest of the company's strange policies, perhaps, is its flat refusal to enter into competition with any other manufacturer; if a product can be made as well by somebody else, Sperry refuses to make it.

"We only want jobs that other people won't tackle," Tom Morgan told me.

To solve these teasers, the company adheres to a labor-relations policy Morgan established years ago - an honor system. Inventive scientists on the company's pay roll punch no time clocks, keep no office hours. It is not unusual for one to disappear for weeks or months while he thinks out a difficult problem. If he solves it, he is rewarded under a unique merit system; if he doesn't solve it, nobody blames him.

"I guess you call that teamwork," Morgan says.

Success Prescription

Tom Morgan has an unshaken faith in the soil. Two years ago little Elon College, west of Durham, North Carolina, made him an honorary doctor of science. He became interested in the school, discovering two things: that it was planning to start an aviation unit. and that it was spending $300 a month for dairy products to feed the students. He thought aviation should be sidetracked in favor of subsistence. Always practical, he presented the school with a farm, helped stock it with dairy cows and hogs and instituted an agricultural course. "Farming," he says, "puts a man on his honor to do his best. It won't hurt the youngsters to learn that principle. They can use it wherever they go."

Morgan's fetish is progress. To this end he bought, five years ago, 2,250 acres of run-down land adjoining his old home in Vance County. As tenants he has five Negro families of good reputation, and he has wired in electricity and bought tractors and other machinery.

For recreation, he likes hunting, horses and dogs. His best pal afield is a setter pup, Queenie. Next best is a Kentucky saddle horse, Highland King. He has a home on Park Avenue. New York, but his heart is in a little pine cabin he built on the farm. He goes there when he can, gets into buckskin breeches, field boots and sombrero and putters around in a shop he has equipped for both metal- and woodworking.

While he putters, he thinks. Recently the Navy presented Sperry with a brain-teaser. President Morgan's mind began whirring. He went down to the farm and straight into his workshop. That was Saturday morning. When he returned to the city Monday morning he had the crux of the problem sufficiently solved so that his engineers could finish it.

With a salary of $100,000 a year (he started with the Navy at $17.60 a month) he has a healthy respect for money and a keen appreciation of its importance to individuals.

"I never asked for a raise in my life, and I don't think any man should have to. If we hear of any man in the leadership group in the Sperry organization who finds it necessary to ask for more pay, his superior is going to catch hell. A leader's first job is to pick the right men, but it is equally important to keep them right, and no man can do his best if he's worrying about money."

That's homespun philosophy, but it's an earthy creed that has built a business and developed a man. Perhaps it's one reason the Sperry family swears by its big boss, Tom Morgan. For of all the myriad whirring wheels of The Sperry Corporation, the allimportant balance wheel is Tom Morgan himself.

and have them arrest the art dealer. 'And have them hold their book collection," Tommy added. "They'll have one — a good one."

"We've got enough headaches," Inspector Bullock protested, "but it's your show. Hope you don't mess it up. Oh, your wife called. She told me let's see - she told me to tell you not to forget what she told you to bring her. Sometimes," the Inspector continued with a mounting sense of outrage, "I think you young cops just use me as a sort of post office!"

Tommy bucked the four o'clock traffic as he tooled his roadster up Connecticut Avenue, and pulled up in front of the Alaskan apartments.

The Judge was at home. He didn't look ill. He was tall and fit and lean, and tanned as the tennis courts could make him. A shrewd character, Tommy decided.

"Guess you know what I came for." Tommy said. "I don't have to tell you it's my job, and I don't like to bother you."

Judge Palley nodded. "Just sit down over there," he said. "I've been thinking this thing over. Want you to get to the bottom of it, quick. If we keep on letting it grow into a mystery, and the papers find out about that note, it won't do me any good. Won't help the library, either.'

"You didn't write it?"

"Ever see this Willie the Mope?"

"No, of course not."

He wasn't lying, Tommy felt. He wondered what else he could ask. He stepped to the bookcase and his eyes flicked along the titles. Detective stories. "Who-dun-its." He plucked a book from the shelf, flipped open the cover, and noticed that the Judge stiffened in his chair. Inside the cover was a Freelander Memorial Library bookplate. Tommy tried to make his nose keep still. "You read quite a bit, Judge?" he asked.

Judge Palley smiled, the tight smile of a fighter who doesn't want his opponent to know he's been hurt. "I know it looks bad. But the books aren't stolen. Only borrowed. You know how it is, borrowing books."

'Wasn't thinking about that," Tommy said. "Just noticed that all those books are mystery stories."

'That's all I ever read. I read to relax. Haven't time for anything else."

TOMMY closed the book. "Tell me," he requested gently; "do you go over to the library yourself to select these slipping into his voice, "it's the fault of that blasted lazy nephew of mine these books haven't been returned."

"And you never read anything but detective stories?"

"Never!"

Tommy looked at his watch. "Well, Judge," he said, "we might as well clean this thing up now. Do you mind calling your office, and telling your nephew and Tibbs to meet me in the library, in Deck 35, in twenty minutes? And tell 'em to bring any books they have out."

The Judge called. Then Tommy said: "Don't mind going with me, do you? And we might as well bring those library books, hadn't we?"

"By all means," the Judge agreed. "I wouldn't have you think for a moment that I, a member of the Advisory Council, would be taking books from the library and forgetting them."

"Oh, of course not," Tommy said. They were waiting in Deck 35-Altmeyer, again gripping his thin hands together as if to keep them still; Percy, somber and irritated; and Tibbs, courteously curious.

"I just asked you to meet here," Tommy told them, "so we could thrash out this business. Now, if you'll let me see the books you brought - "

Percy had three volumes. They were mysteries. "I took them out," he snapped, "for my uncle!"

'Sure," Tommy said. "Everybody did." He glanced at the titles and tossed them on a table. "Now," he ordered, turning to Tibbs, "let's see yours."

Tibbs had only one book, an old, thick-sided copy of Hawthorne's "House of Seven Gables."

"This one check with your list of books out?" Tommy asked Altmeyer.

"Yes. That's the only one Mr. Tibbs still has out. Mr. Tibbs took it out two weeks ago. It was the only 1851 Hawthorne first we had in the deck. Glad to see it back, because it's quite valuable. But of course Mr. Tibbs always returns the books he borrows.'

TOMMY examined the bookplate, and fingered through the first few pages. "Mr. Tibbs," he said, "always returns books - but not the books he borrows. If you examine it carefully, Mr. Altmeyer, I think you'll find it's a second or third printing, and not very valuable at all.'

Tommy handed the Hawthorne to Altmeyer, but kept his eyes on Tibbs, which was wise, because Tibbs swung from his heels. Tommy ducked and stepped back and came up with his automatic. Tibbs retreated until his shoulders were against the shelf. He was breathing hard.

"Want to tell how you did it, and why?" Tomny asked him.

"I want a lawyer."

"All right," Tommy said, "I'll tell you. You figured out this idea of steal-(Continued on page 21)

FOR INSTANCE

THE earth's rotation plays an important part in the aiming of longrange guns. For example, if this factor is not taken into consideration, a 2,100-pound projectile, fired due west at the equator, will travel about onequarter of a mile farther than one fired due east.

During a football game, a player has been known to lose as much weight as 30 pounds - which means one pound for every two minutes of actual play.

ALL clothes were made to order in this country until about 1825 when a merchant in New Bedford, Mass., started manufacturing ready-to-wear clothing to meet the rush demands of sailors who wanted new suits during their few hours in port.

NIGHT air is more healthful than day air, because it is heavier, cleaner and contains more radio-active matter.

THE ground beneath Chicago's Merchandise Mart does not belong to the building's owners. But they did buy the air space the Mart occupies for $2,500,000. Similarly, the owners of a skyscraper in New York leased for 33 years the air rights over a five-story building next door for $742,500.

And this is what we can learn from them

ALL, lean, straight, gray-haired, gray-eyed and distinguished looking, Major-General John Hay Beith is an astute, lantern-jawed Scotchman, famous as author, playwright and recent Director of Public Relations for the British War Office. He has been in this country more than once and seems to know the United States inside out, from Wall Street wizards to jaloppy-driving harvestfollowers, or from rural politicians to the bigwigs in the inner sanctums at Washington. He thinks that America is a great country, but that Americans should know more about it. And he threatens that some day he will write a guide book to America for Americans, including an interesting chapter on our fine native dishes, and a special appendix on our not-so-fine small-town hotels.

It is the writer in the man that makes him so uncannily observant. Under the name of Ian Hay he has written some forty books, with sales close to 3,000,000 in England and the United States. Over here we know him best for "The First Hundred Thousand," one of the earliest war novels published during World War I. It was based on first hand experiences of the Major-General - then Captain - on the Western Front with the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders regiment.

Until very recently Major-General Beith and his wife have been living in a roomy old house in London's Mayfair. "We've had a thin time of it," he says, "sleeping on the ground floor with our small domestic staff housed in the basement. There were four stories above us, so that we weren't likely to be devastated unless 'they' scored a direct hit, but all our windows were blown out and the whole thing was nerve shattering. So I closed the house before I came over here and my wife has gone to live in a new and modern block of flats. She won't leave London because her mother, who is over eighty, lives there and won't budge. The old lady regards the whole thing as a personal affront on the part of Hitler."

Contrary to what people think, tea is not scarce in England, according to Major-General Beith. Elaborate teas at home, with all kinds of accompaniments, have gone by the board; but the refreshing afternoon cup persists. And in offices everybody still stops for tea. "In the last two years, while I was in the War Office, tea came every day, air raid or no. You'd even go down to the shelter, preceded by fifty secretaries, each carrying her tea." he says.

Over here in America the Major-General stops for his own afternoon tea. It is really one of those things as much a part of being English as the morning cup of coffee is part of being American. Even the school boys stop for tea in the British Isles. And in typical British-school-boy fashion the Major-General served his lower form apprenticeship, in his Scotch school, as the "fag" who lighted the study fire and made tea and toasted the scones for an upper-form boy, the youthful Viscount Simon who is now Lord Chancellor of England.

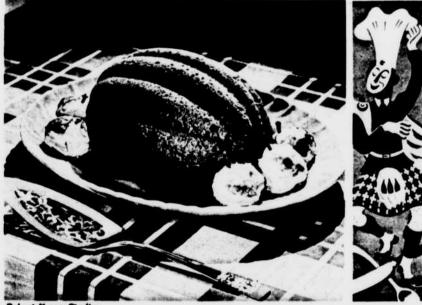

Two of the four Scotch recipes which follow are old-time favorite accompaniments for Scotch tea with fixings, and their very names suggest to Major-General Beith happy and peaceful days, when English tea was a ceremony, a delight, and a feast.

"You were too fresh and defiant in Migne," I reminded him, "and wholly unappreciative of kind treatment."

"What red-blooded man would have remained in your silly little jug with a girl like Juliette waiting outside? I'd risk anything for her, but you two were so hell-bent on discipline you tramped on her heart."

"To keep you from trampling on it."

HE BURST out laughing. Indeed, from the first I had seen that he wasn't very angry at us; he just had something to say, and for the sake of his self-respect had said it.

"What a kick I got out of that missionary spirit of you and old Poison-Puss Taggart," he said gaily. "You two have your dirty moments, but you have your splendid moments, too, and I think it was swell of you both to try to protect Juliette from me.

"Well, I had my fun with her, but not the way you two Puritans thought. We both believed our happiness could last only while the battery was billeted at Migne and, of course, Juliette, being French and a realist, said only a fool would decline a great happiness because it was destined to be brief. She said the memory of it would help her bear the long unhappiness after I went away. You see, what you two moralists didn't know was that I loved Juliette and would have died rather than hurt her."

Taggart said he'd be damned, and the dancing master continued: "I'd said goodby to her the night before we left Migne, so it wasn't a pleasure to me when she walked up the hill holding my hand, and later ran after me through the stubble. When you told me to go back and meet her, I looked down at that stubble and saw the ground was full of little rocks and big pebbles — Once when I was a kid somebody stole my shoes and stockings and I had to walk home through a field like that. There was Juliette coming to me in her stocking feet, and I knew every step hurt her."

He helped himself to one of Taggart's cigarettes. "I suppose you two thought my ego swelled like a dead horse when I saw her kneeling by the shrine praying for me. Because I grinned and shrugged, you thought I didn't care, whereas I did that to keep from crying — I thought: How little she has to pray for."

He got his guitar out of the case and said: "Poison-Puss, I haven't suffered. Even when the skipper sent me out to mend wire, and death was whispering around me, I wasn't unhappy, because Juliette had promised to pray for me and light a candle for me every Sunday on the tomb of St. Radigonde in the crypt of Notre Dame in Poitiers, and ask to take me safely through the barrage. I just didn't think I could lose. Ah, well, those wooden shoes were always doing a clog on my heart.

"And now, to show I forgive you, Poison-Puss, I'm going to sing to you for the last time the song that always ironed out that hard old mug of yours"

And in a voice that had in it that strange, sweet Celtic lilt, he sang:

"Oh, the days of the Kerry dancing! Oh, the ring of the piper's tune! Oh, for one of those hours of gladness, Gone! alas — like our youth, too soon."

When he had finished he said gravely: "So I'm going back to Migne and hire again that donkey and the ratty old barouche, and drive my darling down to the railroad station at Poitiers after the local curé has married us. She's been in Migne five years. She isn't a peasant. Her father was an architect. He went out in 1914 and was killed the first day; her mother got shrapnel fragment from an antiaircraft gun on top of her head in the civilian rush from Chalons-sur-Marne. and that left Juliette alone on the road. She doesn't remember how she came to Migne. The baker and his wife took her in and gave her a job thirty francs a month, room and board. She was fourteen then."

"What have you got to offer her?" Taggart growled.

"Nimble fingers and nimble feet and a voice plain people like to hear. Little enough, but so much more than she expects. Whatever happiness she knows with me must come the hard way. I'll be hoofing it in cheap vaude-ville or singing in cheap cafes, and she'll be hoping for a little home of her own where she can toss up a ragout for her Edouard—but living in a wardrobe trunk instead and patronizing the delicatessen." He stood up. "But it will be one marriage that will jell."

Old Taggart looked at me and there was pain in his hard eyes. "In France, sir," he said, "it is customary for the bride to bring the groom a dowry. That's always up to the bride's parents, but seeing Juliette's parents are dead, it looks like a job for her godfathers, sir. She'll have to have some going-away clothes... Here's twenty bucks for her, Dancing Master, with love from old Poison-Puss, who never had a chance to get married because he was always too busy marching to the sound of the guns."

I stood a tap for twenty more. The dancing master's fine dark eyes grew suddenly misty and he thanked us huskily in Juliette's name.

When he was gone Taggart said: "There goes a soldier! And I can tell you now, sir, that he never ate a crumb of your damned bread or drank a drop of your damned water in Migne while he was doing his two weeks in the mill. No, sir! That monkey had real meals and wine with them, and although he paid the baker for them, Juliette prepared them and fed him through the barred windows. He loved being in chokey because he could spend his time studying French and finding out new ways to tell the same old story. But come night, Julie would let him out -- '

"After I had bought that new padlock, Sergeant?"

HE NODDED. "And they'd walk down the river road and listen to the nightingales, and the old mill wheel groaning on its axle, and the river chuckling, and the moon shining, and after taps she'd put him back in the cooler."

He got out an old pocketbook and read me a letter. It was from Juliette, and all funny and cockeyed, because she'd dug it herself out of a French-English dictionary:

"Mon cher sergeante: Hard heart I think have not you but very soft have you to comprehend what unhappy womans be Juliette for Edouard in bastille. Never have I to laugh in Migne before he to arrive. Then like the nightingale my heart to sing. Yes, discipline must be if nobody see can you for unhappy Juliette give the key? Merci, premier sergeant, merci bien. I kiss you like the loving friend, Juliette."

"So," said Taggart, "I walked by the bakery when she was standing out front, and in pulling my handkerchief from my pocket one of the two keys that came with your hell-anointed padlock dropped out — and Juliette was on it like an M.P. on a drunken non-com. I double-crossed the captain and now I'm damned glad of it."

He was so filled with rectitude I didn't have the heart to tell him that three keys had come with that padlock, and that I'd given him two and Julie one—and she'd lost it. Discipline will go to hell if the captain is soft officially.

Sometime when you see advertised a motion picture starring Darrel Lynn, the singing cowboy, make a point to see it. Moroney and Juliette had it the hard way for ten years; then sound came to the movies and some film tycoon grabbed him off the floor of a night club. Yes, it was a marriage that jelled. Five children and the oldest an R.O.T.C. shavetail in my division—Yes, they changed his name to Darrel Lynn. The boss thought Edward J. Moroney sounded too much like a traffic cop.

Mr. Altmeyer groaned. "That's terrible," he said. "I've been very careless, and I'll be blamed."

"No you won't." Tommy said.
"Nobody'd ever think to examine see that the editions were the same, so long as they bore the library bookplate. That's where Willie the Mope

Tibbs set his lips tight, and Tommy, unperturbed, went on: "You needed Willie the Mope because he could counterfeit the bookplates, and he could dispose of the first editions through a fence. That's where the art dealer in Philadelphia came in."

"How do you know I did all this?"
Tibbs asked. "Couldn't it have been him?" He nodded at Percy.

"No, it couldn't," Tommy said, waving his automatic for emphasis. "I knew it was you when the Judge told me he never read anything but detective stories. Percy, here, never took out anything but detective stories. Besides, Percy never worked nights. I figure you do. Otherwise, Willie the Mope couldn't have snitched the stationery. He wouldn't hang around the Judge's office, days."

"Oh," Tibbs said. "I see." His wide shoulders hung dejectedly forward.

"So you knew Willie was a good counterfeiter," Tommy went on, "but you forgot he was a forger. You forgot he could forge the Judge's signature on a note that would let him into the stacks as freely as you yourself got in. And you forgot —"

"That's right," Tibbs admitted.
"But I wouldn't have followed him into the deck if I hadn't seen Mr. Altmeyer leaving the library. I knew the Mope would be alone in the deck, and I came down here. I got my hands around his neck." Tibbs stopped speaking. Tommy looked at his hands. They were corded and sinewy.

AFTER the precinct men had taken Tibbs away, and after the Judge and Percy left, Tommy found himself alone with Altmeyer. "Why," he inquired, "did you lie to me about being called by the superintendent?"

The clerk's frail hands were twisting again. "I knew you'd find out," he moaned. "Mr. Tucker, I've got six children . . . "

"Don't worry," Tommy said. "This is just between you and me."

BEAUTY IN THE BUD

New rules for baby's health—and some old ones—lead straight to later good looks by Sylvia Blythe

THE only fairy godmother who can give a child beauty is a parent. If that is the kind of mother you are trying to be, your best guides are the methods of an upto-the-minute child's clinic. So, I made a roundup of baby's problems and took them to a child-growth clinic which helps a mother to nip troubles in the bud, and keeps an eye on the young miss and mister until they skip off to school.

Problem number one is baby's head. That wonderfully soft little skull is as impressionable as a lump of potter's clay, say the doctors, and can be flattened out by constant pressure in any single spot. So, it is wise to turn the baby frequently from side to side. Moreover, since baby can turn its own head - and will - to follow light and movement, lay it down one time with the little head toward the headboard; the next time with the head toward the footboard. This will prevent a baby's turning always in the same direction, and lying on the same side of the head.

The time to start building posture is the first time you pick baby up.

The keystone is a straight little back. A baby has a beautiful back and posture if they are not interfered with, says one clinic doctor, so we try to prevent curves by asking the mother not to be always right-handed in her care of the baby. Be sure also to hold either baby boy or baby girl so that it can see all it wants to see without twisting the small body.

Then, from the time the baby sits up, train it in the iron-spine school. To do that keep the baby lying down until it can sit alone with a flat little back. Make a Spartan out of the little mite for its own good. Don't encourage curves by propping it up with pillows on the bed, on the floor or in the pram.

Next, let baby crawl until it ripens to the toddling stage. Hand-propelling its busy little body around helps to strengthen that tiny back and to develop something pretty special in the way of a chest. For these adventures on all-fours, give the baby the whole run of the house. If you coop it up in a narrow playpen, you force the tiny girl or boy, out of sheer boredom, to pull itself up in order to see what's going on beyond the fenced-in world. Up too soon on little legs, baby risks bowing them in or out.

If a child is normal and healthy and given its own sweet time about walking, it will master the art and emerge, as a kitten or a puppy does, sure-footed from its tumblings.

But what can interfere with a child's graceful walk are shoes and socks. Too short or too pointed, they prevent feet from developing properly. That's why both types of footwear should at all times be square-toed and roomy. To safeguard toes, choose shoes of the moccasin type with the seams above those busy toes. See that the shoes have straight inner soles and that they girdle the ankle, until baby reaches the age of three.

Sturdy But Flexible

THE first walking shoes should have pretty sturdy soles, but the uppers should be as flexible as the glove on your hand. You are being almost wickedly unfair, if you try to fit the first walking shoes yourself. Let a trusted shoe salesman do the honors. Then, if there is any doubt about little toes not being properly lined up in those oh-so-important first shoes, they should be fluoroscoped.

If a fiddle-bow curve sneaks into little legs, in spite of all precautions, see a doctor about inserting wedges in the shoes. Their purpose is to change stance and correct curves. In this respect, tot athletics are very useful, too. Legs that bow out are helped by roller-skating, for this forces the knees in. Legs that bow in and knock at the knees are straightened out by tricycle-riding.

If the small miss is to dazzle her public later on with little cadet-like rows of pearly teeth, or the wee lad is to have an attractive mouth in manhood, the first full crop of twenty baby teeth should be shown to the dentist. This visit should be made not later than the third year. Since sound and good-looking permanent teeth depend upon the attention these little forerunners get, any cavities in baby teeth should be filled. If stains from foods, medicines or minerals in water mottle their pearly whiteness, discolorations should be removed as fast as they pop up. If teeth are too widely spaced or crowded or they show signs of bucking, take the baby to an orthodontist and let him begin making casts of the mouth and studying the developments. By the time the child is twelve years old the mouth and jaw will really show what they are up to. If the teeth haven't straightened themselves out by then, let the dental specialist begin his corrective work. Wearing braces or other simple appliances to bring balky teeth into line all too often spells the difference between good looks and plainness later on.

The Thumb-Sucking Problem

This brings us up to the thumbsucking habit which, if it isn't nipped in the bud, can push teeth out of line and spoil the shape of a mouth. Baby sucks its thumb as an escape from boredom, and is usually willing enough to settle for any other kind of diversion as a substitute. A toy, a lollipop, or silly boo's from mother will be wholly acceptable. But it is very unsporting of you to imprison a little hand in a guard, or seal a finger up in bitters. You rob the baby of its fun, and offer nothing instead.

But perhaps your headache is a little girl whose infancy has been serene enough but who, as she grows older, develops an excitable little temperament, and begins gnawing away at her nails. That's not such an easy problem to solve. The best plan is to remove the excitement, stress and strain of her surroundings. Help her choose quieter playmates and, when she is old enough for movies, radio serials and books, censor out those that keep her overly excited.

While you are plotting ways to calm her down, you can also gain her full permission, and then keep one nail at a time out of harm's way by wrapping it in adhesive tape and keeping it bandaged until the nail grows out. When time comes to liberate the little prisoner, manicure it within an inch of its life, and show her how wonderful it can look. Then give other nails, one by one, the same treatment, and let her see for herself what glamorous possibilities they have when they are left unchewed.

It looked queer, all right. You couldn't ever be sure of these foreigners, Jeff pointed out. With Wadrey's fertilizer plant being turned into a powder factory, and the government operating that radio listening station over on Henry Whipple's farm, most anything was likely to happen.

"First he wouldn't let us have that tree," Jeff muttered, "and now this happens! You ask me, he'd have given us the tree quick enough if it was some other kind of flag we'd wanted to fly on it!" We talked like that, getting more and more worked up. I finally suggested it was our duty to find out what was going on. "We can creep up close and look in a window - if we're careful."

Jeff carried the ax and I gripped my shot gun in both hands as we crept silently to the veranda. If the dark little man was dangerous, he would be armed with something a lot easier to use than an ax or a shotgun. We got to a window, and could see in.

It LOOKED bad. Wilczek and his wife were sitting on an old sofa, and the dark man was in a chair facing them, his back to us. The suitcase was on the floor in front of him, and it wasn't a sides of the box were flat on the floor now, and the top was raised up on a

We couldn't see much of the machine itself, but we could see metal gleaming, and something turning, and a row of dials along one edge of it.

The stranger was hunched over the machine, turning the dials and talking to the Wilczeks at the same time, with his head tipped up like a bird's. I didn't like his looks.

"He's a foreigner, too," I muttered. leff poked me to shut up.

"What are we going to do?" I whispered.

The dark man stopped talking, and Mrs. Wilczek got up off the sofa. She went upstairs. For a while the stranger and Joe Wilczek just sat there, talking in low tones. We couldn't hear what they were saying, because they were clear over the other side of the room.

"What are we going to do?" I whispered again. "We ought to do something!"

Neither Jeff nor Wadrey answered, because right then Mrs. Wilczek came downstairs, and the little girl was with her. The dark man stood up and said something to Ella and shook hands with her, and smiled. He had a paper of some sort in his other hand.

You could see Ella had just got out of bed, because she was wearing pajamas. She was still sleepy and kept rubbing her eyes as she looked at the machine. The stranger spent a long time showing her the machine. Then he handed her the paper and she unfolded it and read what was on it. We could see her lips move and we knew she was reading it aloud, but we couldn't hear a word.

The stranger listened and kept nodding. When she got to the end of the paper, he took her arm and led her across the room. He stood her right close to the window. We could hear him now. "You just stand over here, young lady, where the machine won't make you nervous," he said, "and read it again. Read it just as you did the first time. And talk into this," he said, handing her something on the end of a wire. Ella waited for him to go back to the machine. Then she began reading, and the Wilczeks and the dark man sat very still, listening. We listened, too.

"Why I am glad to be an American," Ella read. "I am glad to be an American because this is a free and wonderful country. My grandfather came here thirty-two years ago, to escape oppression in the land where he was born. He worked hard, and saved enough money to buy some land. 'This,' he said then, 'is my home. I have worked for it and now it is mine. No one in this country will take it away from me.'

"THE first thing he did on his land was to build a house. Then he planted a tree. It was not a large tree, but to him it was a symbol. My father, Joseph, was thirteen years old then, and helped plant the tree.

"'Joseph,' my grandfather said, this tree will grow, and you will grow with it. This land will be yours, and then your children's, and their children's. Long after I am gone, this tree will be here. Take good care of it. Never let anything happen to it. It is an everlasting symbol of your allegiance to America. It means that you belong here!"

"The tree is still on our land, but I am old enough now to know for myself what it means, and my father, Joseph, no longer has to tell me. It is a beautiful tree. Its roots are deep and strong. They are like the roots of America. Its trunk is straight and true, and has weathered every storm. No doubt there will be other storms, such as the one raging today, and some of them will be savage and terrible. But I know that my tree will be standing when they have passed."

That was the end of the paper. Ella Wilczek stopped reading, and the dark man smiled at her. He shut off the machine. "Fine, young lady! And I want to congratulate you on winning our contest. We're very proud of you. And we're grateful to your teacher for sending your essay in to us."

He closed the machine and shook hands with the Wilczeks, and with their little girl. "You listen to the radio next Monday evening," he said, "and you'll hear your essay exactly as I've recorded it."

Mrs. Wilczek said something that we couldn't hear, and the man shook

"Thank you, no," he said. "It's very late. It was an imposition for me to come at all at this hour, but schedules have to be kept, broken axles or not."

We didn't wait to watch him leave. Oh, no! We picked up our tools and got out of there, and made for home. And I can tell you we were mighty glad we hadn't announced to anyone else that we were going to cut down Joe Wilczek's tree! It was bad enough for us to have to face each other.

We got our flagpole -- a white pine from Delbert Hubbard's place. We had our ceremony, too, and Ella Wilczek read her essay. But Ella didn't read it in front of the town hall. No, sir. Right after the pole was up and Old Glory was run to the top of it, the people of Farmville went down to Joe Wilczek's place and sat on the grass, and Ella read her essay under the tree that Joe Wilczek's father had planted.

Then Jeff announced that since we'd got the flagpole for nothing, the money we'd raised was to be presented to Ella Wilczek, for winning the radio contest.

"And," said Jeff, "for teaching the town of Farmville what it means to be an American."

The End

I was lucky to have the help and coaching of a friend who is a bang-up bowler when I took up the sport. But even so, a 120 average seemed to be about the best I could hope for using a different bowling ball each time I bowled. So I decided to take Harry's advice and get my own personally fitted Brunswick Mineralite. What a difference! The grip, customfitted to my hand, was easy and natural. I began to improve right from the start and kept on improving My average climbed to a 147 the following season and the next to a 155 ... and was Harry proud of my score! I'm sold 100% on my perfect-fitting Mineralite - wouldn't think of using any other ball."

> Yes, the right equipment helps you bowl your best, and bowling a really good game means bowling friends and more invitations to bowl.

Women find it a big advantage to own their own Mineralite Bowling Ball. The perfect, bored-to-measure grip means less strain on arm and hand muscles. Mineralites can be ordered in attractive colors and in special women's weights if desired.

HERE'S how the Washington Redskins have been clicking of late in their rush to the top of the pro league's Eastern division. It's an early high spot of their victory last Sunday over the Pittsburgh Steelers at Griffith Stadium. "Old Thirty-three," Sammy Baugh, is tossing a pass to McChesney. It gained 10 yards to the Steelers' 7-yard line and set up the Aldrich field goal in the second quarter.

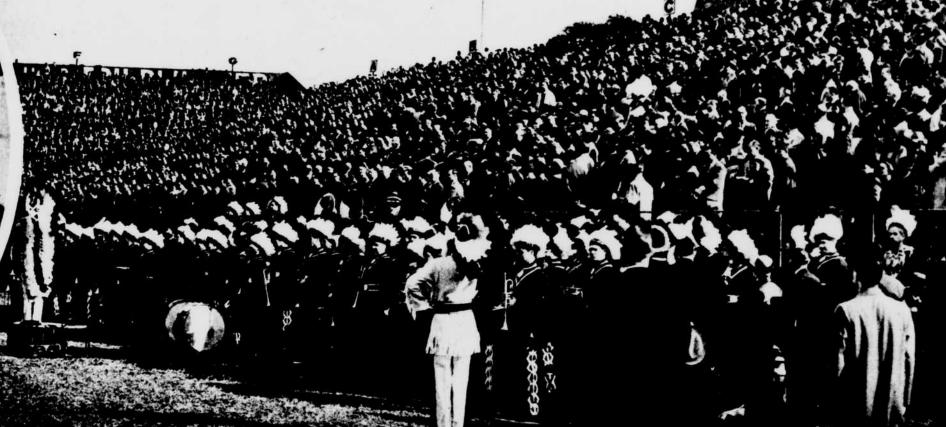

You find it as all kinds of elbows Democracy in its purest state! Fans ; in through the Georgia avenue ramp with all the happy anticipation of another rub and jostle in the frenzy of a touchdown pass—or a missed one.

The Redskins' big Bob Seymour takes to the air momentarily as he pierces the Steelers' line on a reverse. The play picked up 7 yards to the Pittsburgh 15 in the third quarter.

Sporadically the Steelers also displayed a punch. Here's Art Jones heading to earth after cracking the left side of the Redskins' line for 6 yards in the last quarter. Aldrich is spilling him.

Every one on their feet as the flag is raised after "The Star Spangled Banner" is played by the Redskins' band. Not an empty seat in this view of the bleachers and the field stands (at right).

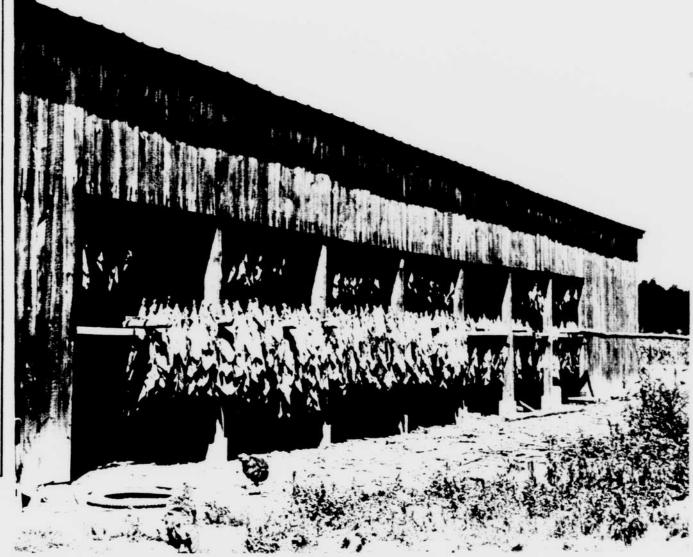

SOIL EROSION has long loomed as an ogre to the farmers. In defense of the land and for better production of Tidewater Maryland's traditional harvest—tobacco—the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture is urging the adoption of strip cropping.

Contour farming follows the natural pattern of the land, with fields laid out in slope-rounding strips instead of the former squares with erosion-inviting downhill rows. This keeps the fertile topsoil from washing away. The plan also lends itself easily to crop rotation which maintains fertility of the soil by following soil-depleting crops with soil-building vegetation.

On his 218-acre farm in Charles County, one of the five counties in Southern Maryland which produce an average crop of between 24,000,000 and 25,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually, Ralph Gardiner this year demonstrated the advantages of the contour plan. Here he planted 14 acres of the famous product. He built 1,000 feet of diversion terraces to hold and conserve moisture. He also cultivated other fields on contour, using soil conserving practices and crop rotation of corn and wheat to prevent soil loss.

of racked tobacco grown on the contour. It is now ready for drying.

The yield from the contour-planted 14 acres fills the curing barn of the Waldorf farm. The leaves will be stripped off and packed in bundles when they are cured.

Rows of fine Maryland tobacco, planted in level curves around the slope, are interspersed with bands of root-gripping vegetation to hold the the soil and keep it from washing away.

This was the scene last June as the young tobacco plants were thriving. Early rainfall was stored by the curving rows of furrows which acted as long narrow dams.

A flagstone walk bordered by boxwood and casual gardens invite you into the old charm of Weathered Oak Farm.

It is rather hard to believe that the farm's blacksmith shop has been up less than six months. But that doesn't date its ancient timbers, shingles and equipment. In the foreground is an old logging wagon with dangling tongs and wheels 8 feet high.

The living room of Harvest House abounds with antiques of every description, with not a repro-

Still functioning, this bellows in the blacksmith shop once fanned a busy forge at Potomac, Md. The anvils and the ring-shaping cone (right) are just as ancient.

Hundreds of stones, carefully chosen for their worn and rugged appearance, went into this massive chimney.

e chimney. Star Staff Photos by John Mueller. TUCKED away in a garden spot in the gently rolling Bradley Hills section of Maryland is what appears to be an authentic early American farm set down in an ever-changing modern world.

It is all that the name Weathered Oak Herb Farm implies—with buildings of silvery, worm-eaten planks and logs, chinked with moss-covered stone, giving the impression of having been rooted there at least a century ago. English boxwood, some of it 170 years old, is everywhere on the 25 undulating acres. Majestic views, waxy holly trees and rare plants fill the eye. A hundred varieties of herbs sweeten the air. You learn there's an illusion in the thoroughly ancient aspect of Weathered Oak Farm—but that does not detract a whit from the beauty and charm of it.

Developed by the late Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl and Charles H. Merryman, who together designed the famed Bishop's Garden in Washington Cathedral, the farm is the result of meticulous planning to achieve the effect of an old, old rural estate. Although appearing ancient, the structures that fan out from a quaint little herb house actually have stood in the present form only a short time; the oldest is only five years old. However, the material that went into their making is as old as it looks, nearly all of the framework coming from abandoned or razed farm buildings in Montgomery County, erected originally by the early settlers.

Many of the heavier beams came from a mill in operation on Paint Branch, near Colesville, a hundred years back. Ax-scarred chestnut log walls alone know how many years have passed since they were stripped of their bark. Weather-worn boulders grace cavenous fire-places and granite slabs are jig-sawed into spacious hearths.

Underfoot are floors of brick that once adorned the sidewalks of Frederick and Georgetown, polished by the daily scuffing of much shoe leather. Overhead are wood-shingled roofs, curled at the corners by long exposure.

The farm buildings—the harvest house, the blacksmith shop, the plow shed and the herb house—are furnished in a manner to attract the most fastidious collector. Not for sale, but there for appreciative visitors to admire, are virtually all the objects, useful and ornamental, that decorated the homes of our forebears. Pewters, brasses, tins, delicate and serviceable pottery, prints, paintings and hand-bound books of yesteryear, whale-oil and Paul Revere lamps—all of those and more.

Hutch tables that are quickly and resourcefully converted into benches are to be seen, along with chairs, cupboards and other furnishings that once were the pride of an older era. Among the more rugged antiques are relics such as a log-hauling wagon, complete with great tongs that once dragged giants of the forest to the mills; an ox-cart of picturesque dimensions, and a Brewster tally-ho, in use in the gay 90s as a "race track special" between Benning and the Arlington Hotel.

Up the rude stairs of the farm's Harvest House there's a huge candle to guide you. The candle itself is wrist thick. Its stand is made from the wooden gear of an old mill.

ONE of the busiest places at the great Pearl Harbor Naval Base near Honolulu, T. H., is this escape tank, where submarine sailors are trained in escaping from disabled submarines by use of the artificial lung. All men must pass the physical test of this training before being assigned to submarine duty and also must qualify once a year to continue in that duty. The escape training tank, popularly called the "diving tower," is 134 feet high and filled with fresh heated water. At the side is a square elevator shaft connected to the tank by three

From this escape lock he must rise slowly, stopping at every marker for 10 breaths. Too rapid a rise would cause a disease called "the bends."

THEY WERE IN THAT MINE--IN SOME WAY THEY ESCAPED THE POISON GAS AND THE FLOOD-- BUT WHY DO THEY REFUSE TO BE RESCUED NOW?

DO NOT KNOW...
SAHIB WARBUCKS
HAS A REASON...
THAT IS SUFFICIENT
EXPLANATION FOR ME-

BUT LOOK! TH' WATER
IN THAT MINE MUST BE A MILE DEEP! THINK
O'TH' PRESSURE! NOW
"DADDYS" GONE BACK IN
THERE TO WHERE YOU
BLASTED THAT TUNNEL
SHUT-YES -- WITH THAT BARRIER REMOVED THE MINE WILL BE
DRAINS A BATH TUBONE WELL-SET

WOULD YOU BELIEVE IT ?

THAT'S A QUESTION ALL OF US ARE ASKING ....

HARD TO PREDICT .....

FAIRLY PLAIN MODERN WARS ARE TOO COSTLY AND DEVASTATING

WAR -LIKE THAT FOUGHT DURING THE MIDDLE AGES BETWEEN

ACTUALLY IT LASTED FROM 1339 TO 1453, WITH A FEW TRUCES IN BETWEEN.

The Sunday Slav

A passing policeman heard Mrs. Benson's screams and rushed into find the stunned boy crying over the body...at the trial, which I attended in disguise, the evidence left no doubt of Carl's guilt! However, just as I was about to leave, he said a strange thing that halted me in my tracks.....

and so the trial ended, but somehow I couldn't help feeling Carl Benson was not lying. His story of the ghost seemed completely insane, but I've seen insane men before and Carl Benson was not mad! ....finally against my better judgement, I decided to do a little of my own investigating....

"WELL, I DIDN'T BELIEVE THE BOY'S STORY OF COURSE, BUT AS I HAD NOTHING TO GO ON, I DECIDED TO VISIT THE POOM WHERE BENSON WAS KILLED"...

WELL, SPIRIT, TRY TO YOU GOT US PROVE OUT OF BED... THAT NOW GO AHEAD KID IS AND PROVE
YOUR POINT!! CENT!!

FORTHE FINGER AND WET FOOTPRINTS OF YOUNG BENSON PROVE THAT HE STOOD AT THE LEFT OF THE DESK, AND NEVER MOVED TO ANY OTHER PART OF THE ROOM!

ALSO, THE BOY'S FINGER-PRINTS MAY BE ON THE GUN, BUT THEY'RE NOT ON THE TRIGGER! HE NEVER FIRED

THRUST!!....BUT MRS.
BENSON WAG KILLED BY A DOWNWARD BLOW! IT
CARL TO STRIKE A
HOLDING THE KNIFE
YOURSELF!!

AH .. GOOD

GOING AROUND TO THE REAR OF THE CASTLE, LADY LUCK CAUTIOUSLY LOOKS IT OVER ....
