Japan Determined

TOKIO, Nov. 29.-Premier Hideki Tojo solemnly and publicly declared tonight the determination of Japan to purge British and American influence from East Asia "with a vengeance-for the honor and pride of mankind.

It was understood the cabinet for optimism.

"The fact that Chiang Kai-shek factory, is dancing to the tune of Britain, America and Communism at the expense of able-bodied and promising young men in his resistance against Japan, is only due to the desire of Britain and the United States to fish in troubled waters of East Asia by pitting East Asiatic peoples

This is the stock in trade of the honor and pride of mankind we must purge this sort of practice from East Asia with a vengeance."

Stressed Historical Ties.

The Premier stressed the historical ties between Japan, China and Manchukuo and the necessity of nations of East Asia to work together for mutual prosperity without outside influence.

Many countries, he said, were indulging in actions hostile to Japan. Domei, Japanese news agency, reported from an army air base in Northern Indo-China that Japanese planes had bombed the Burma Road, the route for United States aid to Chungking, for the first time in several months

The dispatch said one bomber destroyed a Chinese convoy of trucks on the road south of Kunming, Yunnan Province capital, and nearby warehouses.

The press generally showed concern over the future of Thailand. The Japan Times and Advertiser, English language organ of the Foreign Office, said in a front page editorial that Japan must keep Indo-China and Thailand free from "encircling arms" - presumably of the United States, British, Chinese and Netherlands influence.

Policy Held Justified. The newspaper said that only the joint agreement with Vichy prevented Indo-China from falling into these arms, so the policy was amply justified

House Unit Orders Public Hearings on Contract Lobbying

Commissions Paid Former Government Employes Will Be Investigated

Payment of huge commissions to so-called "defense brokers" for obtaining Government contracts in the defense program will be investigated at public hearings beginning Wednesday before the House Military Affairs Committee, Chairman May announced late yesterday.

He did not disclose the names of witnesses to be called by the committee, but indicated the trend of the hearings in calling attention to results of a preliminary investigation conducted quietly in a number of States during the past several months

This has resulted in the disclosure. he said, of "huge commissions" being paid to the brokers. He pointed out that this unnecessary cost is "absorbed in the final analysis by the taxpayers."

Former Employes Active. It has been charged that former employes of the Government have acted as agents for concerns seeking contracts in the defense program. Senator Hatch, Democrat, of New Mexico and others say this amounts to sale of influence growing out of former Government employment. Senator Hatch has a bill before the Senate Judiciary Committee prohibiting any former Government employe from practice before Government agencies and departments for a period of two years after his severance of employment with the Government. Senator Hatch is a member of the Senate's Defense Investigating Committee.

President Roosevelt indicated last week that he believed legislation should be enacted which would prevent former Government employes from carrying on such business.

Law Being Drafted.

The President said that Attorney General Biddle was in agreement with that view and that a bill was in the process of being drafted. Mr. Biddle told reporters he knew of no existing law to prevent private citizens from accepting fees for aid in getting Government contracts, although there was a prohibition against such activity by Congress members or Federal employes.

Several demands for inquiries and passage of various bills have been made in the House during recent davs.

Among them was that of Representative Gehrmann, Progressive, of Wisconsin, who demanded immediate approval of his proposal for an investigation. He said he was moved to press for prompt action by a suit filed in New York by Charles West, former Undersecretary of the Interior and at one time a contact man at the Capitol for the White House. Mr. West, in his suit, asked nearly $700,000 in fees on $70.000.000

Confidence in Russia Reiterated by Three Members of Senate Connally, George and Austin Believe Army Will Continue Fight

By the Associated Press. Three legislators well informed on oreign affairs-Senators Connally, Democrat, of Texas; George, Democrat, of Georgia and Austin, Republican, of Vermont-expressed confidence yesterday that the Soviet where many American supplies must armies would fight on even if Moscow and Leningrad fall, and said the United States should continue to furnish lease-lend aid to Russia. Mr. Connally, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, told reporters that German capture of Moscow and Leningrad would be "bad" but that it need not be "fatal." "If the Russians can keep their Army intact, even if they should have to fall back to the Ural Mountains, they will remain a constant threat to Germany," he said. Because the Russians are "tenacious and tough," he added, they are likely to "stick it out," even if their two chief cities capitulate. Agreeing with this viewpoint, Senators George and Austin said the effectiveness of further Russian resistance thus might hinge directly on the amount of supplies this country could deliver to the Soviets. For that reason, they said, lease-lend shipments should be speeded as much as possible. Senator George said that if the

Such a situation, he said, was al-most sure to bring forth some kind of Hitler peace offer which the Georgia Senator predicted would be rejected both by Russia and Great Britain. "I don't think either country is going to entertain any peace offer,' he said. "Any peace at this time would leave Germany in practical control of the continent of Europe. But Senator George did foresee a possible lessening of effort by the Finnish forces opposing the Russians in the far northern areas come through to the Soviet armies. Senator George said that while he expected Finland to withdraw gradually as an offensive force in the fighting, he believed the Finns would maintain their alliance with

"Why my daughter is the most popular girl in her set"

• I was so worried about my daughter's unpopularity that I decided to do what I thought was the best thing to help her. I enrolled her at the Arthur Murray Dance Studio. In just a short time my daughter was a new person! And now she's a confident and poised dancer . . . admired by her friends and invited to many dances.

Boys and girls who take these dance lessons will find new happiness in life. They learn the Rumba, Tango, Waltz and Fox Trot in just a few hours. Lessons are fun and inexpensive. Enroll now, while there is still time to learn before the holidays.

North African Bases Yielded by Vichy to Nazis, London Hears

4 Declared Taken Over; Report Is Denied by French Sources

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 29 .- A foreign source reported tonight that the Vichy government had yielded to German demands for air and naval control in French North Africa along both the Mediterranean and the Atlantic.

Supervision of four air bases formerly linked by the French commercial airline, Air France, already has been taken over by German officers, ground crews and personnel, this source said.

The modern Tunisian port of Bizerte, one of France's wartime naval bases, likewise has been yielded, he added.

(In Vichy, government sources denied categorically that air and naval bases had been ceded to the Germans and gave official assurance that no Germans have filtered into the North African territory.

(The Free French radio at Brazzaville, heard by the N. P. C. in New York, charged that German secret agents are pouring into French Morrocco in such numbers that they form the nucleus of a small army. It said German armistice commissions were increasing in size, while Italian commissions were being reduced. The same source said German submarines in the Mediterranean are not using the French base at Casablanca but are refueling at secret bases farther along the coast.)

Reports Unconfirmed.

None of these reports could be confirmed immediately in either British or American circles in London

The air bases are Rabat, on the Atlantic coast of French Morocco; Meknes, an important interior airdrome southwest of Fez, and Sfax and Gabes, Mediterranean airports in Eastern Tunisia.

NEW TEMPORARY BUILDINGS RISE ON MALL-These views show how construction is being rushed on about $3,000,000 worth of temporary structures to meet expanded needs of the Government in the defense emergency. Above, looking northeast, near Twelfth street N.W., are seen foundation work for a new office which may be assigned to the co-ordinator of inter-American affairs, Nelson Rockefeller. A second building will be erected to the left of this scene along Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue. It will contain a huge cafeteria for defense workers.

Between the Munitions Building, occupied by the War Department, not visible at the left, and the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool, showing through rows of elm trees on the right, rapid progress is being made on a new temporary building to be used by the Navy Department, which already has occupied the structure (shown in background) between the new building and the Washington Monument in the distance. Foundations for this new building were laid on top of hardpacked ground, formerly an automobile parking lot.

Scarcely had old buildings been torn down in the Mall and the new top soil seeded to grass to beautify Potomac Park, when machinery began cutting into this scarcely settled ground to put up another defense building, near Twelfth street and Constitution avenue. Note circled sign reading "Seeded Please." The row of trees seen between the power shovel and Washington Monument will be saved. They bordered old Thirteenth street.

On the heart of the Mall, along Jefferson drive between Sixth and Seventh streets, a power shovel is tearing up ground for the third new temporary building in this section of the city. In the right background are shown the dome of the National Museum of the Smithsonian Institution, at the foot of Tenth street, and the tall clock tower of the old Post Office Department Building on Pennsylvania avenue.

Djukas Get Annual Cash Tribute to Keep the Peace

By OLIVER MCKEE. United States Army units recently sent to Surinam (Dutch Guiana) to guard the bauxite mines in this Netherlands colony will have as neighbors in the South American jungle one of the world's leastknown black peoples-the Djukas. Descendants of African slaves brought to the New World in the early years of the 18th century, who later revolted, the Djukas, by an ancient treaty with Holland on file with the League of Nations, were recognized as rulers of all the hinterland from a line 25 miles from the sea. As a peace tribute, the Dutch pay the Djukas 20,000 guilders annually

William LaVarre, the well-known explorer, now head of the American Republics unit of the Department of Commerce, is one of the few white men who have visited the interior of Surinam. A guest of Ah Tu Den Du, Granman of the Djukas several years ago, he has spent many months in the Djuka country.

"Ah Tu Den Du is the ruler of the only monarchy in the Western Hemisphere," Mr. LaVarre pointed out yesterday. "He is the king of the jungle and his empire is a portion of Africa transplated in the New World.

Finally, in 1762, the Dutch governor asked for a peace conference. Before accepting the treaty, Adoe insisted that it be sent across the sea to Holland, to be signed by the Prince of Orange, and imprinted with the royal Netherlands seal.

Under this treaty, which still remains in effect, the Djukas received in perpetuity all the colonial land 25 miles inland from the coast. As a peace tribute, the Dutch agreed to pay the Djukas 20.000 guilders annually. For their part they undertook to live peacefully in the interior and to make no further war against the whites. In addition, under the treaty, they pay no taxes.

Six feet tall and 300 pounds in weight, Ah Tu Den Du is regarded as an able ruler. His capital is a village about 300 miles in the interior. Without his permission, no white man can enter the Guiana jungle

The Djukas are sticklers for protocol, Mr. LaVarre said. If the commanding officer of the American protective force decides to make an official visit to Ah Tu Den Du, his party must carry a canoe load of presents for village elders and other Diuka chiefs. Acceptable presents would include rum, cotton cloth, sweet-smelling soap, and for the women, bright-colored clothing and trinkets of various kinds

The Djukas have two languages-

Most Canned Peaches come from California. Yellow Clingstones are the most popular because of their firm texture and even color. Every peach must be perfect in size and ripeness. They are handled with extreme care to avoid bruises. A No. 21/2 can will contain approximately 8 or 9 perfectly matched halves. A good.source of vitamins A, B and C.

The great bulk of Canned Pineapple is of the Smooth Cayenne variety, packed in the Hawaiian Islands. Canned Pineapple is the only plant-ripened pineapple available, for unlike most fruits, pineapple will not ripen after it is picked. The canned product has the true pineapple flavor because the fruit is picked ripe, when its natural sugars are developed to the full. A No. 21/2 can contains 8 golden slices of uniform color, free from blemishes. A good source of vitamins A. B and C; also serves as a source of desirable minerals such as iron, copper and manganese.

Four delicious fruits are combined to make one of the most tempting offerings among all the canned fruits. Pears, peaches, pineapple and Maraschino-type pitted cherries are packed in definite proportion in each can from first-grade fruits previously canned in syrup. For this reason, when the fruits are combined every piece is uniform in size and of good color.

TEN YEARS AGO, when the District Grocery Stores first offered D. G. S. Canned Fruits, we assured Washington housewives that only the highest quality canned fruits obtainable were graced by the D.G.S. label.

TODAY, the tremendous popularity of D. G. S. Canned Fruits with Washington homemakers, bears out our determination to provide only the best.

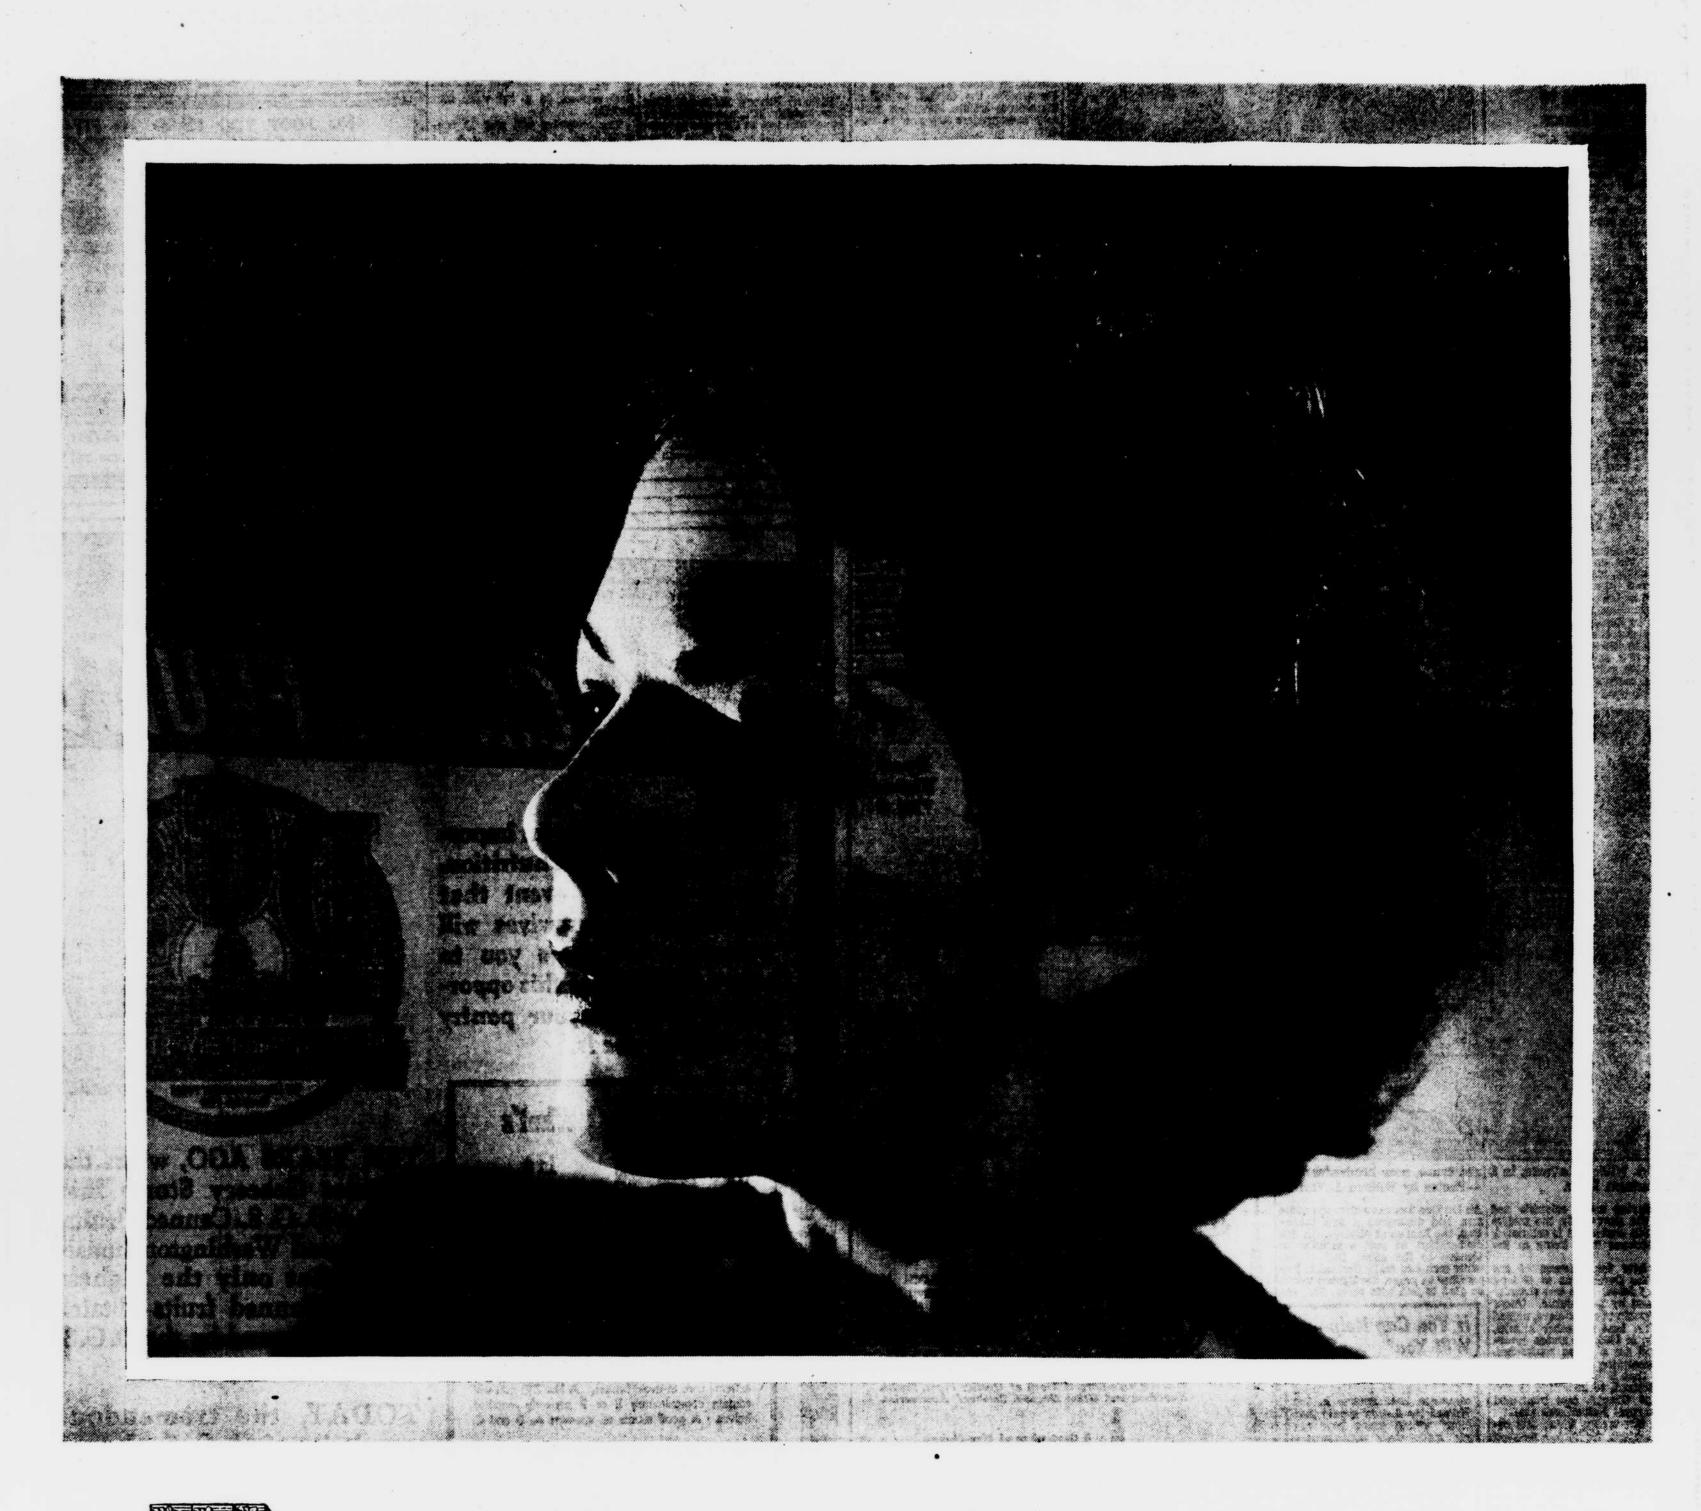

BEFORE any packer is permitted to place the D. G. S. label on any can of fruit, the past production record of the producer as well as the integrity of the packer is thoroughly checked and investigated.

IF YOU ARE A NEWCOMER to Washington, we invite you to taste D. G. S. Canned Fruits and convince yourself of their uniformity, flavor and purity.

Probation Association Simon, Supervising Architect, Progress Is Cited as Fund Plea Is Issued

National Group's Work Carried on in 26 States, The District and Canada

The National Probation Association, announcing notable progress in services for extension and improvement of juvenile courts and probation work, last night issued an appeal for funds in connection with its annual membership campaign.

Work of the association was carried on through 26 States, the District of Columbia and Canada, it was pointed out by Newbold Noyes, a member of the association's advisory council, in a statement surveying accomplishments of the organization.

The association, Mr. Noyes said, "had a notable record of achievement last year. • • • The main work of the association consists of local surveys, consultation visits, conferences, legislation and general educational work and publications.

When You Consider a Speak. ing Course You Are Justified in 'Asking: "What Is the Background of the One who Will Actually Be My Coach?"

Granville Jacobs has PERSONALLY trained more business, government and professional men and women in public speaking during the past four years than any other instructor in the United States.

This is his eleventh season in Washington.

He has been training adults in effective speaking and dealing with people for fourteen years.

Wide experience, not only as an instructor, but also as a practical businessman. Held key positions in direct sales, sales promotion and sales training with The Celotex Corporation, world's largest manufacturers of structural insulation and acoustical materials.

When They Ask-Do You Know?

Where does the wind begin? Why is the sea never still? Why do we count in tens? Why is yawning catching?

How far off is the sky? Does a cloud weigh anything? Why cannot animals talk? Why does a match strike?

The Book of Knowledge

This is a set of books your child will remember most when he or she grows up! They'll remember the pleasant AND constructive hours spent in pouring over facts made fascinating! The Book of Knowledge answers every question a child can ask. It helps them in their school work. It is one of the greatest educational works for children ever published!

Court Conference Included.

Also included in the material released today, which embraced press conferences from January 22, 1937, to December 10, 1938, were off-therecord meetings with editors and publishers of trade papers on April 8, 1938, and with members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors on April 21, 1938. Regular press conferences covered in the release included that of February 5, 1937, when Mr. Roosevelt announced his plans for reorganizing the Federal judiciary and increasing the size of the Supreme Court.

Other high lights of these unpublicized conferences were: To the trade paper executives a complaint that industry consistently gave "lip service" to many of the New Deal "principles." but just as consistently fought bitterly against application for reforms which would schieve the lauded objective. cited opposition to the wage-hour law and to tax reform legislation. going on also to rap at opponents of his Government reorganization plans.

ity problem with this group Mr. Roosevelt repeated his explanation of policy in the Spanish War and extended this to apply to the Sino-Japanese conflict.

In both wars he pointed out American arms were finding their devious ways to both sides, rather than being confined to direct sale only to the side which was maintaining supremacy of the seas.

The President disclosed his fears of a Fascist movement first in indorsing a suggestion that the Civil Liberties Union be given more money for investigating subversive activities in the United States. "As long as the flag is flying we cannot let another nation walk in

You could not stand for it.

"That means we would have to and that Mexico is only seven. He reminded the conference then, also, that in 1918, before the war ended, the Germans were building a Zeppelin with the perfectly definite objective of sending her out in the spring of 1919 by way of the great circle route over Iceland, Greenland and down to New York to drop a cargo of bombs on New York City.

The President's prophetic formula for defense of our interests concluded this conference and came in response to the following question:

"How can we ever defend a territory going down from Maine through the Virgin Islands and al the territory embraced by the Monroe Doctrine and around toward the Philippine Islands and coming back to the United States?'

"Well," he replied, "of course, it you have one enemy, we are all In this connection Mr. Roosevelt right. But suppose you have two enemies in two different places then you have to be a bit shifty on your feet. You have to lick one of them first and then bring them around and then lick the other.

Roosevelt Declares People Are United on U. S. Foreign Policy

Tells Senator Gillette Public Opposes All World Aggression

By the Associated Press.

Alertly waiting for Tokio's next move in the acute Japanese-American crisis, President Roosevelt warned other nations yesterday that America is united behind his foreign policy of opposition to aggression anywhere on earth.

"That there is debate, or that there are statements of conflicting opinion prior to the decisions should not be taken by persons abroad as an indication of lack of cohesion among our people, though that mistake is sometimes made." he said. Booths for Distribution Of Stamps Will Open In City Tomorrow

The District Tuberculosis Assoclation's annual Christmas seal campaign yesterday received hearty indorsement of the Committee on Public Health of the District Medical Society and the Bureau for Tuberculosis of the District Health Department

The Medical Society lauded the Tuberculosis Association for its "useful program of health education" and the Health Department bureau spoke of the fine co-operation between the two tuberculosis organizations in the same general field.

Booths for the sale of the stamps will open tomorrow at many locations throughout Washington, according to Mrs. Reginald Mead chairman of the General Booth Committee. Persons who received seals by mail may pay for them at the booths, and both the contributor and the organization will receive credit, it was said

A film trailer is being shown in downtown theaters this week to boost the sales, and radio programs also will be presented this week.

Paul D. Sleeper, chairman of the Christmas Seal sale, reported that more than 7,000 persons had bought the stamps during the first week of the campaign.

Tuberculosis Unit Here Aids Research Plan

The District Tuberculosis Association has donated $1.000 to the National Tuberculosis Association's Committee on Medical Research, local officers announced yesterday. The money will be used for scientific study of the disease.

Washington's association is one of four State and local groups supporting this research, according to Dr. William Charles White, chairman of the Research Committee. The committee's research program for the coming year will be discussed at a meeting December 12 at the National Institute of Health, Bethesda, Md.

D. C. Rent Chief May Be Named This Week

Frank B. Warren McCarran Choice; Others in Running

Paving the way for early applicaion of the District's emergency rent control measure, expected to be igned within a day or two by Presilent Roosevelt, the Commissioners probably will name a rent adminisrator before the end of this week, t was indicated yesterday at the District Building.

While the city heads made no ommitment, Commissioner Guy Mason said the field of less than a tozen formal candidates for the $7.500 job had been narrowed to two persons. He added that this did not mean there had been yet any "foreclosure" against some different per-

One of the two candidates considered "out front" was understood to be Frank B. 2 Others in Running.

At the same time, it was insisted the Commissioners have not made a final choice between the two socalled "two remaining leading candidates." despite receipt of numerous "suggestions" from important administrative officials and from members of Congress.

Commissioner Mason declined to indicate who might be the other portion of the leading pair or to say who might be his personal choice. Brig. Gen. Charles W. Kutz, the Engineer Commissioner, refrained from any pertinent comment. and the president of the Board of Commissioners, John Russell Young, is due back from a Florida vacation Tues-

However, some special interest was attached to the listing of the name of Louis Loudick, a retired business executive, said to have been a resident of the District for about 15 years. Neither official record nor personal conversation indicated who might be his sponsor, although such information was in the record as to some "candidates.

Staff Posts Sought.

When the rent administrator has been selected, the Commissioners will submit to the Budget Bureau and Congress an appropriation measure to finance the service. The size of the staff and its budget has not yet been determined. The law is to become effective 30 days after it is signed into law, which would indicate rent control will begin the first week in January.

However, applications already are ing received for subordinate posts in the rent administrator's staff Notably among these are several proposals for selection of Prof. Charles M. Thomas, colored civic leader, educator, writer and editor, for appointment as deputy rent administrator. George Carter Minnigerode, experienced in the real estate and hotel business, and a brother of Powell Minnigerode of the Corcoran Art Gallery, has been suggested for appointment as one of four examiners under the rent administrator.

But the boys, meanwhile, will be treated, as Virginia law requires, exactly as if they were adults. Their indictment for murder will be asked. There is nothing in the Virginia statutes to stop their execution, should jury, judge and Governor so decree.

Many Candidates.

Among those who have been mentioned for the post of rent administrator, in addition to Mr. Warren and Mr. Loudick are:

Robert Cogswell, attorney and brother of the registrar of wills, Theodore Cogswell; Elmer E. Cummins, an attorney, a resident of the District for 12 years or more, a tormer official of Municipal Court; Julius I. Peyser, veteran Washington official, lawyer, banker and former member of the Board of Education: Charles A. Jones, former executive of the Home Owners Loan Corp., now transferred to a new post; Galo S. Stroup, builder and real estate rental business operator and formerly with the Public Works Administration and the Pennsylvanta State government, and Elgin Grosclose, resident and Government worker here for a decade, formerly special agent for the Commerce Department, assistant trade commissioner, economist in the Federal telephone investigation, senior economist with the Treasury Department and now acting liaison officer for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

This list was said not to be necessarily all-inclusive, indicating there might possibly be a "darkhorse" in the picture. In fact, there were reports that the name of Paul Edwards, one of the assistant commissioners of the W. P. A. and formerly W. P. A. director for the District, had been mentioned, although Mr. Edwards has not applied for the post.

Karl Borders, for six years in charge of rental advertising for one of the Washington newspapers, was listed as a candidate for examiner under the rent administrator.

Virginia also reported a loss for figure. The October total, however, represented a gain of 78,000 over October, 1940.

Civil non-agricultural employment in the United States in October totaled 40.749,000, an increase of approximately 34,000 over September, and 3.374,000 more than in October a year ago. The employment index for all manufacturing industries combined stood at 135.1 of the 1923-25 average, and the pay roll index reached 166.7.

Factory Change Slight. Though pay rolls advanced by more than the usual seasonal amount, manufacturing employment showed virtually no change during the month, Secretary Perkins pointed out.

"Employment increases continued in durable goods industries, high lighted by further marked expansions in shipbuilding and aircraft." she said. "These gains were offset by decreased employment in nondurable goods caused largely by a sharp seasonal decline in the canning and preserving industry. As a result, total manufacturing employment fell by 14,000 workers, or .1 per cent. Shortages of materials caused serious employment dislocations in many industries, notably plumbers' supplies, stoves, vacuum cleaners, washing machines, refrigerators, electrical appliances, metal furniture, structural steel, brass, bronze and copper, silk and rayon, and hosiery

"One of the important contributing factors to the increase in nonagricultural employment was a rise in construction employment. This increase was brought about largely by the building of new defense is expected to reach a climax by the middle of this week when the House Appropriations Committee is scheduled to act on a request for authorization of the project

The Office of Production Management has joined the T. V. A. in urging immediate approval of the dam as the only answer to a drastic need for additional electric power by 1943. The dam, a T. V. A. project, is designed to supply current for production of some 100,000,000 pounds of aluminum annually.

Senator McKellar, Democrat, of Tennessee, who has been active for years in gaining power projects for his State, has bitterly opposed construction of Douglas Dam because he contends it would result in the inundation of about 30,000 acres, 11.000 of which represents "the finest farm land in the State." Moreover, in a letter to Chairman Glass of the Senate Appropriations Committee. Senator McKellar charged that J. A. Krug, head of the O. P. M. power branch, and David S. Lilienthal, T. V. A. chairman, leaders in the move for the dam project, are "not worthy of trust and they are totally unworthy to be in the posiions they hold."

Glass' Opposition Sought.

Senator McKellar called on Chairman Glass to oppose the Douglas Dam and vote for authorization of dams at Elizabethton and Bristol, Tenn., proposed last July by Mr. Lilienthal as the answer to the power need before the Douglas Dam pro osal was made.

These two dams, which Senator McKellar points out are "farther up in the mountains" and will cover only a small farming area, have been described by O. P. M. and T. V. A. officials as out of the question now, as their construction would take too much time.

Senator McKellar, on the other hand, said in his letter to Senator Glass that he did not believe this to be true, "although no one. of course, can be positive about it.'

Letters urging the House committee to approve the Douglas project have been written to Chairman Cannon by both President Roosevelt and William L. Batt, director of the O. P. M. Materials Division. The President wrote that he had been convinced by the O. P. M. that Douglas Dam is urgently required. because there is no other source in the entire country, either hydroelectric or steam, by which the necessary power can be obtained at the required time.

Other Sites Declared Available. Senator McKellar said he believed President Roosevelt and Mr. Batt "both have been misled."

He contended that there are a dozen dam sites in East Tennessee from which power can be obtained just as quickly and just as effectively, adding that several more are located in Middle Tennessee on the Cumberland River close to present T. V. A. lines.

"Nothing but the foolish egotism and vanity of Lilienthal and Krug stand in the way of building the dams at other and better sites,' Senator McKellar wrote.

O. P. M. and T. V. A. officials, on the other hand, have contended that in addition to the time element involved, cost of construction would be less for the Douglas project than in others suggested and the high stream flow of the French Broad River, on which the Douglas Dam would be located, would give added insurance for the needed power.

A subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, it was understood has turned thumbs down on the project and it was

Crisfield Union Charges Bad Faith on Quitting Wage Negotiations

By the Associated Press.

CRISFIELD, Md., Nov. 29 .-(A. F. L.), announced today his union would file a protest with the National Labor Relations Board, charging operators of Crisfield's struck ovster packing houses with "failure to negotiate in good faith."

Charges against the packers probably would be filed in Washington Monday, the union leader said. A meeting last night between the union and packers, the first since more than 600 oyster shuckers left their jobs nearly two weeks ago, resulted in a deadlock. The newly organized oystermen went on strike November 17 for a labor contract with more than a score of packing plants. Included in the union-proposed contract were

They are: Robert V. Fleming, president and chairman of the board, Riggs National Bank; Eugene Meyer, owner and publisher Washington Post; Merle The Thorpe, editor, Nation's Business, and Lloyd B. Wilson, president, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone

Three main objectives were outlined by Mr. Rust for the local defense savings program-to stimulate the purchase of bonds and stamps: to make those securities as conveniently available to the public as possible, and to urge the adoption systematic purchasing programs by individuals.

The committee, Mr. Rust said, has adopted as its three-fold theme: "The demonstration of patriotism, the curbing of inflationary tendencies, and the promotion of thrift.'

Dr. J. Louis Krick Winds Up 64 Years in Drug Business

Pharmacist Recalls Theodore Roosevelt As Customer

A pharmacist who once carried on his account books the name of Theodore Roosevelt wound up last night a career of 64 years in the drug business

As Dr. J. Louis Krick locked the door at his store at 1742 Pennsylvania avenue N.W. and walked away to retirement he carried with him the name of one of the city's oldest drug firms. Tomorrow the establishment, known since 1890 as the Krick Drug Co., will be closed, undergoing renovation before it is reopened under new ownership.

Industrial Bankers' Case Set for Hearing Tomorrow

A hearing on a proposed compromise agreement that would terminate litigation which asks that a receiver be appointed for the Southeastern Industrial Bankers, Inc., is scheduled before Justice David A. Pine in District Court at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The compromise provides that Clifton M. and Lewis Eiseles, brothers, officers of the concern, are to sell their interests to F. Reed Wills, new president of the firm, with half the proceeds of the sale to be distributed among the stockholders.

Yesterday, a number of stockholders, with a total of $60,000 worth of stock, filed in District Court a protest against approval of the compromise. On Friday, the Securities and Exchange Commission suspended registration of the Southeastern Industrial Loan Co., a subsidiary of the Southeastern Industrial Bankers, Inc.

Hitherto the zone has been barred to American ships by the now-amended Neutrality Act.

Strategy Explained. According to British experts, the strategy behind the German use of their capital ships as raiders would be the hope they would divert British-and American-naval ships from their patrols in the North Sea, the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean and cause them to be sent on wild chases after the swift German vessels.

Such a diversion, it is said, would facilitate the task of the U-boats probable results of a Hitler victory operating south of Iceland, the biggest graveyard for torpedoed merchant ships.

Navy Finishing Plant At North Beach, Md., For Secret Radio Tests

New Branch of Bellevue Laboratory Is Free From Interference

By CLAUDE A. MAHONEY,

NORTH BEACH. Md., Nov. 29 .-At the top of a 109-foot cliff along the west side of Chesapeake Bay a little south of this town, the Naval Research Laboratory is completing an extension project that may solve or simplify many of its most acute radio testing problems.

Along these quiet shores, the most secret devices of the Navy will be tested. A powerful location and detection apparatus, only recently hinted at officially by the Navy, may be checked in the waters where Capt. John Smith's men once mutinied, saying the famous explorer was lost. The station, composed of three structures-a laboratory, overseer's house and dormitory-will be an annex of the larger station at Bellevue, D. C., and will enable scientists of the laboratory to carry on many experiments that cannot be satisfactorily conducted in highly populated areas

Non-Interference Essential.

It is no longer possible to conduct the most delicate tests of ship radios and radio equipment in a region that is criss-crossed with high-tension wires and beset by low-flying airplanes. So the research laboratory has picked a rural site for its new work shop that commands a view of nearly 15 miles of Chesapeake Bay.

manner of craft ply back and forth that might come near the new laboratory for two-way tests. (The British battleship King George V came farther than this point when it brought Lord Halifax to a point near Annapolis, and the new battleship North Carolina here found quiet waters for tests last summer after she had made her firing trials on the Atlantic Ocean.)

By making the tests off the Maryland shore it is thought that the work of taking heavy loads of testing equipment aboard ship will be obviated

Companion Injured Seriously as Machine Crashes Into Bridge

A 19-year-old Washington youth was killed instantly and his companion was critically injured yesterday when a truck crashed into a narrow bridge over the Mattawoman Creek, the boundary line between Prince Georges and Charles Counties. The dead youth was Thomas Gough, 19, of 729 South Carolina avenue S.E., driver of a truck owned by George's Radio Co., 816 F street N.W., according to Maryland State police. The truck struck the Prince Georges side of a one-way bridge on the Bell Hill road between Waldorf and highway No. 224, and his body was thrown across the creek to the Charles County side. A broken rib punctured one of his lungs, according to Dr. J. L. MacKananagh, deputy medical examiner of Charles County, who issued a certificate of accidental death. The youth's companion was Henry Ware, 24, of 644 South Carolina avenue S.E., also an employe of the radio company. He suffered a broken leg and head injuries. He was removed to Providence Hospital, where his condition was reported critical last night.

Oliver H. Perry, jr., 35, of Syracuse, N. Y., was seriously injured when struck by one car and run over by another on highway No. 1 near Columbia pike in Arlington County.

County police said the car which struck him was driven by M. E. Barrett, 41, of Norfolk, Va., and the other machine was operated by George E. Rankin, 23, of 16 Rhode Island avenue N.W. No charges were filed. Mr. Perry was walking along the highway when injured. The Jefferson Rescue Squad removed him to xandria Hospital. He is be-

There you'll find a car that's big and good looking . . . yet surprisingly low in price. One that's easy on gas and oil and always ready to go. One that has great safety features, and exclusive driving features, that no other automobile at any price can offer you.

Best of all, you'll find the deep-down fineness and sturdiness you insist on. While important defense work in which

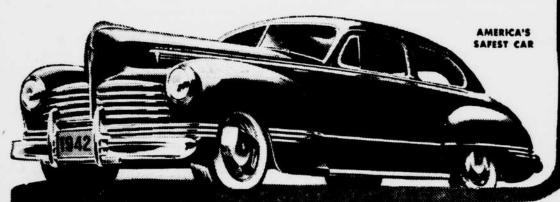

Hudson is extensively engaged limits the quantity of 1942 Hudson cars, quality standards were never so high in all of Hudson's 32 years of engineering leadership. We'd like to prove this to you.

Every smart buyer finds it pays to be a "Hood Lifter." So why not stop in at headquarters today? You'll be welcome.

Launching of 31 for Lease-Lend Duty by January 1 Forecast

By WILLIAM J. WHEATLEY. The Maritime Commission's shipa-day schedule will start tomorrow and by midnight January 1 commission officials expect 31 new cargo vessels will have passed down the ways to become a part of the "bridge of ships" for carrying lend-lease supplies over the oceans.

After January 1 the commission's schedule will be stepped up toward the goal of two ships a day which officials expect to reach by July 1. As a far-reaching contribution to national defense, the commission estimates that it will be able to put afloat during the first quarter of 1942 a total of 1,000,000 deadweight tons of shipping. This total, It is expected, will be increased to 1,400,000 tons in the second quarter, 1.646,000 tons in the third quarter, and approximately 2,000,000 tons in the last quarter.

On Average Basis.

The announced program of a ship-a-day, officials explained, will be on the average basis for each month. With most of the launchings taking place on Saturdays. ships yesterday were Three scheduled to leave their ways this week. Commission officials believe, however, that two more may be ready before Saturday. All of them are Liberty ships-the "Ugly Ducklings" and all of them are from new shipyards.

The Roger B. Taney and the Richard Henry Lee will be launched at the Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard in Baltimore. Miss Mary Patricia O'Conor, daughter of Gov. January Goal Is 40.

Information on hand here indicates that 40 ships will be launched during January and 39 during February.

Officials estimate that during the first three months of 1942, if there are no stoppages of work, more than a hundred vessels will be launched.

To be effective, the report declared. these recommendations "must be acute, carried out, and not tied up with procrastination and 'red tape' which, in the past, have been characteristic of nearly every effort made by your subcommittee to give Washington a modern traffic system, not equal to, but exceeding that in any city of the Nation."

Admitting "urgent need for public traffic problem off-street parking facilities such as contemplated in the bill," the subcommittee said of the fringe lot proposal:

"This plan undoubtedly would reheve the parking problem if the cost further street widenings and oneand operation of these lots would way streets as a temporary palliative permit a fee of 10 cents for all-day for congestion, the subcommittee deparking and certainly not more than 15 cents. "Information has been given the subcommittee that efforts would be made to locate the lots near arterial highways and to streets having either streetcar or bus service. Even so, a motorist who parked his car on these lots would be faced with a streetcar or bus fare to complete his trip into the congested business section.

Mall Site Preferred.

"A better plan, it appears to the subcommittee, is to place the parking lots underground in an area more easily accessible to the business section. The wide expanse of the Mall, stretching from the Capttol to the Washington Monument. is an ideal location for underground garages. Future of Endowed Education In U.S. Described as Precarious

Creation of Civilian Morale Service, Designed to Improve Operation of Democratic Processes, Called Impressive Idea

by Felix Morley.

There is more certainty than news in | Education, deserves special notice on at the fact that endowed education in the least three counts. United States, whether by university, college or school, faces a precarious fu- | yet relatively unpublicized venture, overture.

Caught between the millstones of declining interest rates and rising price | ing of examination and criticism by the levels, the operating problems of these public in whose behalf it is designed. institutions become steadily more difficult. Competition from State-controlled education intensifies as the middle class, always the bulwark of private schools, suffers the attrition of an inflationary economy. The Federal security administrator, Paul V. McNutt, did not exaggerate when, a few weeks ago, he gave warning that "the university of tomorrow must render service or die."

Substantial service has for many years been rendered to their own graduates by American universities and colleges. Its monetary value is noted in a recent report on "The U. S. College Graduate," published by the magazine Time. Statistical evidence is offered indicating that while college graduates amount to only about 2 per cent of the population, this group contributes over two-thirds of all those Americans with annual incomes of $10,000 or over.

The cultural advantages inherent in a college education are usually conceded. But in addition to these intangible values, the Time report concludes that "college graduates have incomes that are well above the average, and may be as high as double the average."

Analysis of Service.

However, it is not so much the service which higher education renders to its beneficiaries, but that of these beneficiaries to society, which is called in question. From the nature of the problem. effective statistical information on social service rendered by college graduates is difficult to obtain. Yet it is obviously important to have such information, if this service is to be the criterion on which the continued existence of institutions of higher learning depends.

Perhaps the most comprehensive analysis of service rendered to the community by college graduates is that compiled by the editors of "Who's Who In America." Inclusion of an individual in this standard work of biographical reference is at least some indication of a life devoted to general social advantage, the more so since nobody can promote himself into its columns by mere material success. Tabulations prepared by "Who's Who" for the editions of 1928-9 and 1934-5. Now that in the earlier edition 73.63 per cent of the names of those included were college graduates, while in the latter issue this percentage rose to 74.73. The percentages of those with no college training were respectively 14.91 and 13.44. Those with some college training, but who failed to graduate, represented 11.46 per cent in the earlier and 11.83 per cent in the latter edition, this class completing the tabulation in both cases. These statistics seem to confirm the reasonable inference that a college education advances not merely the ability, but also the desire, of the individual to be of service to mankind. And, so far as the fragmentary data provide basis for judgment, this combined ability and desire on the part of alumni seems to be increasing.

Civilian Morale Drive.

Last, but not least, the Civilian Morale Service is not designed as a purely temporary program to meet an immediate emergency. It is visualized as a longrange effort to stabilize and improve the operation of democratic processes, under the leadership of educational institutions which certainly should feel a strong sense of responsibility for preservation of the American system of government. President Roosevelt had these considerations in mind when, on September 2. he suggsted that the Federal commissioner of education should "inaugurate an appropriate educational program designed to help students and adults in understanding the many complicated problems of these critical times." From that suggestion has developed the School and College Civilian Morale Service, which seeks "to utilize the extensive experience of educational leaders in organizing and administering programs for the study and discussion of problems of common interest," with the particular objective of "serving the gencral adult population through forums, study and discussion groups, and organ-1zed courses of reading."

of years that they do not need the added protection of the closed shop. The National Defense Mediation Board has stood neither for nor against the principle of the closed shop, but has sought to deal with each case on its merits. In only one case, that of the shipbuilding workers of the Bethlehem Steel Co on the Pacific coast, has the board granted a request for the closed shop. It acted as it did in this case in order to bring the company within the terms of a "master" shipbuilding agreement which the Government had pro-them in the choice of workers; compels the discharge of men who have resigned from or been ousted from their unions; gives labor leaders the power (as stated by the National Industrial Conference Board in summarizing the results of a questionnaire among employers) to control the local labor market to their own advantage "and against the interest of both employers and many employes." The unions maintain that the employer's solicitude for the welfare of nonunion workers is often merely a cloak for the real reason behind opposition to the closed shop-the desire, namely, to weaken or even to destroy the unions. In reply, the National Industrial Conference Board points to statements by some employers who "are otherwise well satisfied with the closed shop" but are against it because of its interference with the worker's liberty of decision.

The unions contend that the closed shop heightens the responsibility of the unions; enables them to resist pressure to keep on seeking new concessions from management: wipes out the friction caused by the presence of union and non-union workers in the same plant; makes for the standardization of wage costs-in general, that the closed shop tends to produce a smooth and stable relationship between workers and management.

The unions say that since all the workers in a plant receive the benefits won by collective bargaining, all should share in its burdens. They object, in other words, to the "free ride" of the workers who pay no union dues.

4.000.000 Workers Covered.

Probably about 4.000.000 workers are covered today by closed or union-shop contracts. This represents a substantial increase in the last two years, due partly to the success of the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.) in winning a unionshop contract last spring from the Ford Motor Co.

Ninety per cent of the 540,000 employes in the coal mining industry are under the union shop. Other large groups having closed or union-shop contracts are truck drivers, building trades workers and employes in the clothing and brewing industries.

The closed-shop issue, then as now a threat to the national welfare, was "frozen" during the World War. This came about through the adoption of a set of principles by the National War Labor Board, under the joint chairmanin of William Howard Taft and Frank

Defense Bond Drive Differs From 1917 Financing Efforts

Then Treasury Sought Huge Loans; Now It Seeks To Keep Cash From Burning Holes In Nation's Pockets

By Marquis W. Childs.

Today it is the Defense bond campaign. In their complete dissimilarity is a measure of the difference between the two war emergencies.

When Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau outlined the bond campaign last April, he told his aides that at all costs the errors of the Liberty loan campaign must be avoided. People were not to be coerced, but persuaded. There were to be no arbitrary quotas. No one was to be called a slacker for not buying bonds. The Liberty loan drive of the last war got huge sums of money, but that is not primarily the problem of the Treasury today. Ordinary bond issues offered in the financial markets are oversubscribed many times as soon as they are announced. The primary problem is to mop up excess purchasing power in the hands of people who find themselves, thanks to the defense boom, with more money than they need for the necessities of life.

Drive Inadequate So Far.

How close has the bond drive come to mopping up the flood of new money released by the expenditure of defense billions? Treasury economists and statisticians are frank to admit that they have no very definite answer to this question, while acknowledging that thus far the campaign has proved far from adequate to do the vital job at hand. They agree, too, that unless it can be stepped up, more drastic measures-perhaps compulsory savings-will have to be resorted to. At the time that the Defense bond campaign was planned, the most optimistic planner estimated the total sales of all classes of Defense bonds at $300.-000,000 a month. In November, the sixth month of the campaign, the total was nearly at that level.

A tremendous voluntary organization has been created throughout the country under the leadership of Eugene W. Sloan, executive director, and Gale F. Johnston, national field director. Mr. Johnston, regional manager for a large

In 1917 it was the Liberty loan drive. | ploye's name and turns it over to him. Hundreds of firms have adopted the allotment system.

The response of trade union organizations was likewise wholehearted. Not only William Green of the A. F. L. and Philip Murray of the C. I. O., but State officials and local organizations indorsed the drive. Trade unions in many instances invested union funds in Defense bonds up to the $50,000 limit fixed for the purchase of series F and series G bonds, in larger denominations than series E, which starts with a bond that matures in 10 years at $25 and goes up to $750.

At the same time the bond campaign was launched the Treasury began the sale of Defense stamps in 10-cent units to be saved toward a bond. While both bonds and stamps were on sale at every post office, as well as at most banks, the Treasury has now placed the stamps on sale in more than half a million retail stores. Larger stores also sell bonds.

Recently the Treasury approved a plan for selling Defense stamps through newspaper carrier boys in every part of the country. This scheme was worked out by the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, which in the first seven weeks sold more than a million stamps through its delivery boys. A promotion campaign has been worked out and the hope is to enlist as many as possible of the Nation's half million carrier boys.

Sales Exceed Two Billions.

Sales from May through October, as a result of this intensive campaign, reached a total of $1,775.124.000, and this was pushed to more than $2,000,000.000 by November sales. Of the total through October, $694.132.000 was in E bonds of small denominations, the balance in F and G, which are purchased by larger investors in units up to $10,000. The E bonds pay 2.9 per cent interest compounded semi-monthly, the F and G a slightly lower rate.

In considering the total sales of E bonds account must be taken of the fact that they have supplanted the so-called baby bonds which were sold by the Treasury beginning in 1936. Sales of E bonds in August of this year were $117.-603.000 as compared with $49.411.194 of

Could Do More.

One may justifiably conclude that by and large the colleges are adequately serving their students; that these students, as alumni, are in return paying large dividends of serving back to the community and that the colleges are therefore, at least indirectly, performing the function which Mr. McNutt and many others regard as essential for their continued existence.

Nevertheless, in the minds of many responsible for educational administration, there remains an uneasy feeling that the colleges, and particularly the endowed colleges, are not doing enough in this period of grave emergency for civilization. There are many who think that the contribution of the colleges should be made more distinctively by the educational institution itself.

Among the many interesting endeavors | contribution which many think must be springing from this sense of obligation, the so-called Civilian Morale Service. sponsored by the United States Office of variations from the central idea as at present proposed. But it may be predicted that for the colleges this central idea will not be essentially modified. It is to have the colleges co-operate among themselves, and with their communities, in establishing discussion and study centers, and in otherwise forwarding and directing adult education in such measure as the individual institutional set-up permits.

Objects of Program.

This is an impressive idea. It aims to bridge the regrettable gulf which has come to divide "town" and "gown" in many a college community. It aims to help in meeting that ardent thirst for dispassionate learning which still happily characterizes the American people. It aims to return to those traditions of co-operative enterprise which characterized our democracy in a more resolute stage of its development. And it may be noted that whether the idea comes to fruition depends not sidering the dynamic, persuasive and tactful character of Commisioner Studebaker, the Civilian Morale Service will catch on, though with varying degrees of success in different localities. There is no disputing the underlying principle that morale in a democracy should be encouraged by methods precisely opposite to those of a totalitarian "ministry of public enlightenment." And there is deep wisdom in the thought that those educational institutions which are completely free from State control should be, for this country, the spearhead of the effort which, for Nazi Germany, is centered in the hands of Dr. Goebbels. Along this, or some similar line, may well be found the path of direct social rendered by endowed education if it is to maintain its prestige and prerogatives in the difficult years ahead.

Another near approach to the closed shop is the "preferential" shop, where the employer agrees that union members the hiring or laying off of employes, or instances, they required non-members to join the union as soon as they came to town." Precisely as in earlier times, the A.

F. of L. and the C. I. O. unions of today enforce the closed shop whenever they are strong enough to do so. Generally speaking, the employer resists the establishment of the closed shop as long as he is able to do so. Wagner Act No Bar.

The Wagner Act (the National Labor Relations Act of 1935) does not affirmatively sanction the closed shop. It provides, however, that nothing in the act or in any other Federal law shall prevent an employer from making a closed-shop agreement arrived at by collective bargaining. Senator Walsh, Democrat, of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee that reported the bill, said during a congressional debate: "All this bill says is that no employer may discriminate in hiring a man, whether he belong to a union or not; but if an employer wishes to make a contract of his own volition with his employes to hire only members of a company union or of a trade union, he can do so."

The same interpretation was given by Senator Wagner, Democrat, of New York, whose name the act bears. "While outlawing the organization that is interfered with by the employer," said Senator Wagner, "this bill does not establish the closed shop or even encourage it. The much - discussed closed - shop proviso merely states that nothing in any Federal law shall be held to illegalize the confirmation of voluntary closed-shop agreements between employers and workers.' Clause Called Indorsement. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in opposing the closedshop provision of the Wagner Act, expresses no doubt as to its meaning. The chamber stated its opposition last year in the following words: "There should be removed from the law the sanction of the closed shop, which the law not only indorses, but for the accomplishment of which it provides effective procedure." In a referendum in 1940, members of the chamber voted against the closed shop by 1.782 to 68. With regard to the closed shop, the

Wagner Act differs from the National Railway Labor Act, which provides a method for the adjustment of disputes between the railroads and their employes. The difference is often cited by those who contend that the closed shop provision should be stricken from the Wagner Act. As amended in 1934, the National Railway Labor Act is generally construed to prohibit a closed shop among railroad employes. The railroad brotherhoods-which form a group apart for the closed or union shop. Six Compromise Decisions.

Chairman William H. Davis of the Mediation Board has said that "a closed shop is an appropriate arrangement in some circumstances," but that "this does not mean that it is universally appropriate, or that it is a proper substitute for self-organization by normal growth."

In six cases, the board has compromised the closed-shop issue by recommending the maintenance-of-membership clause. This arrangement is the next to the topmost rung in the ladder of union security It does not bar a non-union worker from employment (as does the closed shop) or require the worker after a given period to join the union (as does the union shop), but it protects the union by reouiring that all members shall remain in good standing as a condition of their continued employment. The maintenance-of-membership clause armors the union against the attacks either of an labor elements. Some employers are said by the board to have invited it, either openly or privately, as a means of stabilizing their labor relations; others, because of their opposition to anything savoring of the closed shop, have accepted the clause with reluctance. In the Kearny (N. J.) case, the employer-the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co .- refused to accept the board's recommendation of the maintenance-of-membership clause. A strike followed for 17 days, at the end of which time the President took over the plant late in August for operation by

The board's protective action in the Kearny and similar cases is based on the premise, as expressed by Chairman Davis, that the labor policy fixed by Congress in the Wagner Act requires the encouragement of collective bargaining. and that "collective bargaining necessarily includes organized labor."

The board took the position in the captive mines case, where it rejected the demand for the union shop by a 9-to-2 vote, that the United Mine Workers had demonstrated their complete ability to take care of themselves. As the board pointed out, 95 per cent of the workers

vanced against the closed shop is that it is fundamentally wrong because it deprives the worker of the free choice of a job. This point of view was expressed in a recent statement by Albert W. Hawkes, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, that the closed shop is "monopolistic in every sense of the word" and "transgresses the rights of our individual citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution."

The late President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard wrote that "the surrender of personal freedom to an association is almost as great an obstacle to happiness as its loss to a despot or to a ruling class, especially if membership in the association is compelled and the association touches livelihood." Stated in another way, the argument runs that

P. Walsh, declaring in effect that closed and open shop conditions should remain in status quo during the war.

The board held, in other words, that labor should not be permitted to exploit the emergency by pressing for additional closed shops, and that management should not be permitted to exploit it by attacking the closed shops then in existence.

The board's statement was embodied in a proclamation by President Wilson and thus became the official labor policy of the Government for the duration of the war.

One of the alternative suggestions of President Roosevelt in the captive mines case was that the dispute over the closed shop between the United Mine Workers and the steel companies be "frozen," or left in status quo, for the period of the war.

There is considerable sentiment in Congress for statutory "freezing" of the closed and open shop issue, with respect to the whole of industry, for the period of the war, and bills designed to effect this result have been introduced.

No Permanent Settlement.

If Congress should decide to freeze the closed-shop issue for the term of the emergency, this action could not be unfriendly employer or of subversive regarded as a step toward permanent settlement of the issue. The issue is a part of the perennial conflict between capital and labor as that conflict has developed under the conditions peculiar to this country. Each side is motivated by its own economic interest. When free of the restraints put on them by the emergency, capital and labor will resume the contest, and the outcome will be determined in any given industry by tests of economic strength between the parties.

The President told the mine workers that Congress will not order "a so-called closed shop." That is true. It is equally true that in no future that can now be foreseen will Congress outlaw the closed shop. The unions' strength is too great for that. Congress will continue to rest on the Wagner Act formula which gives the unions the right to get the closed shop if they can do so through their own efforts.

It should be kept in mind, among the other realities, that what the President said to the mine workers was not a condemnation of the closed shop. It was a condemnation of their strike for the closed shop at this particular time. He put the right of the Nation to defend itself above the right to strike.

Defense Issue Clear Cut.

The issue between him and John L. Lewis was wholly separate and distinct from the quarrel between John L. Lewis and the steel companies over the closed shop.

All that the President asked Lewis and his mine workers to do was to accept the recommendation of the Mediation Board and, as the board said, "suspend for the duration of the national emergency their unquestionable right to match their economic strength against that of the operators."

The issue between the President and Lewis was simple and clean-cut, and the vast bulk of public opinion supported the President. Clearly, the right of the Nation to take all necessary measures in its own defense is paramount.

The closed-shop issue, where "right" from both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. of the employer clashes with a "right" O .- raised no objection to the amendof the unions, is not so simple. Price Control Fiasco

C......

The legislation which passed the Heuse Friday in the guise of a pricecontrol bill should deceive no one. Viewed in the most favorable light, It is a hodge-podge of political compromises which cannot be expected to prevent serious inflation and which, in fact, may actually stimulate the growth of the evils it is ostensibly designed to prevent.

In its final form the bill imposes no restraint on wages and salaries. An attempt to insert such controls was beaten by a vote of 102 to 53. This, in other words, means that nearly two-thirds of the members abstained from voting on this vital issue, thereby enabling less than one-fourth of the House membership to place one of the greatest single cost factors beyond the reach of any control.

The effort to modify the favored status given agricultural products in the bill was beaten without taking a recorded vote, the members simply shouting down this proposal. As a result the price of food and other necessities enjoying an agricultural status may continue to rise-as much as 30 per cent above their present levels, according to some critics of the bill

The failure of these two offorts resulted primarily from the refusal of administration leaders to support them, and because of this refusal their subsequent protest against the character of the bill in its final form must be heavily discounted. And yet, despite the fact that the administration forces are primarily re-criminal charges, as illustrative of the difficulty of removing judges under present conditions even though indications point to the desirability of so doing. This is an unhealthy situation that should not be tolerated. Where there is the slightest suspicion that the robes of justice are soiled, it should be possible to take prompt, decisive action to prove or disprove the charges, but that cannot be done with the time-consuming, cumbersome methods now in vogue.

The fact that Justice Jackson felt so deeply about this matter that he adopted the unusual course of appearing as a committee witness in support of the legislation emphasizes the necessity for reform. The Senate should lose no time in approving the bill.

73 Days Short

At the present moment the Community Chest campaign of 1941 is approximately 80 per cent successful. That means, in effect, that the drive has fallen short of its goal by onefifth of the total sum needed. In terms of calendar mathematics, mey enough has been subscribed to carry the co-operating agencies of the city through 222 days. The deficit approximates ten and a half Werks must function constantly, its constituent agencies must be consistently It follows, then, that the support of the whole population of the District of Columbia is required. Those who have not pledged anything at all are asked to send in their subscriptions immediately and those who have offered less than they reasonably can afford are invited to increase their help.

Since this year's campaign started there have been a number of developments which have served to strengthen the natural appeal of the Community Chest. One incident has stressed the importance of work for the blind, another the significance of character building enterprises. But perhaps most impressive of all is the growing realization of the privilege of being residents of a free country-a Nation free to practice fellowship and mercy without let or agreed to negotiate, but Il Duce chose war on October 3. The League then condemned Italy as an aggressor and attempted to impose financial and economic sanctions against the Fascist power. Such a boycott as that proposed by Geneva, however, was infeasible of successful application. Despite a personal appeal by Haile Selassie, the League raised its ban in July, 1936, by which date Marshal Badoglio and General Graziani had brought most of Ethiopia under subjection. The Italians, it must be admitted, attempted to justify their possession of the country. Money was poured into public works. Roads were constructed. Hospitals and schools were built. A social program of reform was put into operation. There was hope for lasting general benefit for the native population.

Yet even the best and most notably generous effort was vain once Mussolini had joined Hitler as an active ally, June 11, 1940. A British expeditionary force compelled the surrender of the Duke of Aosta at Amba Alagi in May and the Italian defenders of Gondar were hopelessly isolated from that time until their capitulation vesterday. That they conducted themselves with valor is agreed by their focs. In Rome it justly is said of them that they "fulfilled compictely and with honor the serious tas' intrusted to them by the father-1-nd." But their cause was bad and they deserved defeat. When their white flag appeared against the Abyssinian sky an adventure in folly in which three generations of Italians had spent themselves was known to have failed completely and utterly.

Sauelching the Lobbyists

It is gratifying that the President has publicly given his indorsement to the effort now being made to expose and curb the reprehensible activities of former Government officials said to be enriching themselves by selling their "influence" to applicants for national defense contracts. If a full investigation of this evil is conducted, certain individuals who have had close relations with the White House may be caught in the dragnet, but the President's statement makes it clear that the administration will make no effort

During their period of service with the Government these officials-now lobbyists-were able to establish contacts and acquire a familiarity with departmental procedures which have had a cash value for them in private life. This has been so because businessmen in search of Gov-

Cost of War A Growing Burden

By Owen L. Scott. Only a few years ago even New Dealers were discussing whether or not the United States safely could shoulder a

$50,000,000,000 national debt, but that question was settled in the affirmative when the Nation's debt shot past that mark without so much as causing a ripple of comment. Now the subject of debate is: Can the United States safely carry a debt of $100.000,000,000 or even $150,000,000,000? The issue is far from academic. On the basis of present taxes and present appropriations, debt is going to pass the $100,000,000,000 mark before July, 1944. Before the close of 1945, unless the war ends sooner, debt will be well along toward the $150,000,000.000 mark.

One reason is that the United States, in addition to shouldering the burden supplying an American Army and Navy also is shouldering the burden of supplying the British and Chinese and Russian Armies. Commitments in this task already total $13,000,000,000 with only a start made. In the first World War, total American war loans were $10,350,000,000. In this war there is lendlease in place of loans, which means that no formal I. O. U.'s are given in exchange for the goods supplied and paid for by the United States. The dollar sign does not enter the picture, except for the American taxpaver.

It is right there that a start can be made in answering the query as to whether the United States will be able to carry the load that is shaping up. The answer depends upon several conditions.

In the first place, it depends upon who wins the war. If Great Britain finally emerges on top, there may be some way by which the British Empire can be induced to bear part of the load. The British Empire is being relieved of a very important part of the problem of war financing by lend-lease. President Roosevelt even now is giving consideration to a method of getting something in return. His thoughts, and those of his advisers, run along the line of postwar trade concessions.

However, the British reneged on the last war loans, partly through necessity and partly because their property owners balked at the sacrifice which payment would have forced. There is nothing to suggest that the British will find it any easier to make payments on lend-lease than they did on the war debts. And there is nothing to suggest that the American Congress is going to be any more ready to lower tariffs to permit a post-war flood of foreign goods in payment of lend-lease than there was that Congress would permit the flow that could have paid for war debts. This means, in the second place, that the ability to carry the debt that is being created will depend primarily upon the capacity of American taxpavers to

Japan's Dilemma

Analyzed

By Frederic J. Hackin.

Any one who aspires to analyze the difference between the United States and

moral perspectives and social outlooks of the two peoples, will appreciate their divergent viewpoints on national and international affairs. Reconciling those differences requires more than diplomatic activity. Indeed, it would be a hold

Some of the misunderstanding comes from a belief that words in Japan have the same meaning that they have in America. People of the western portion of the world read about events in Japan and construe them as they would be construed in Washington, not as the Japanese interpret them. That is misleading, for while Japan is considered democratic, it does not follow the pattern of democracy as practiced in the United States. In Japan, democracy is "the imperial house reigning in perfect harmony with the welfare of the people." Japan has a Parliament which cannot govern the nation, a Premier who does not need majority support, an Emperor who keeps aloof from nearly all world activities and of public life only in emergencies.

Back of this strange form of democracy are many centuries of development or lack of it. From 1637 until Perry's ships came in 1853, the people of Japan lived under rigid martial law. Spy systems spread to every nook and corner of the islands. Not a word against the empire could be spoken lest sure and swift vengeance would descend. The executioner was ever alert and strict rules of caste prescribed minutely the rights and privileges of each unit of the population and laid down all its duties.

Only two generations have passed since officer among all the military forces of those restrictions were operative, and their effects still linger in the minds of the Japanese. It is an old axiom that than a year. Last June he enlisted in the the oppressed develop peculiar qualities Marine Corps and while only 17 years of to outwit their masters, and the qualities so developed survive among the descendants of the underprivileged. Japan has Calif. Last week Representative Luther been revolutionized so far as politics and Patrick called his achievement to the economics are concerned. Yet as a result attention of the House saving. "We of a time when martial law prevailed, should give such boys due credit and there still exists an eagerness to please recognize the fact on the floor when they and a tendency to mold the facts into step right out into life and do something more pleasant form, or, at worst, offer worthy in the big round world." Jimmie sullen resentment. After going through this period of regimentation, being disciplined to absolute obedience and not permitted to exercise independent thought, the Japanese almost suddenly, after the coming of Perry, were ushered into the confusion of modernism. Not all the bonds were loosed immediately, but after the downfall of the Shogunate in 1868 the Japanese behaved like children let out of school. Style of dress, thought and action, almost every phase of life from the west was adopted. What Europe and America set as the fashion quickly was given the stamp of approval in Japan The curiosity for which the Japanese are so well known went unrestrained. But when Japan had exhausted all the freshness found elsewhere, she dug into her past for new inspiration for the future. That new inspiration has resulted in a nationalism which now grips the nation, and Japan is seeking to defend it with all her might. Its outcome is of great interest to the United States and the world at large. If left alone, Japan in all probability would return to the static. But, caught in the meshes of industrialism and international affairs, she is swept along by forces over which she has no control. She, apparently, was not a willing signer of the Axis pact, and today seems to be in doubt as to which way to turn. In her mental dilemma, Japan is shopping for what she believes will be the best and safest course to pursue. If and when that course is decided upon, it will be easy to carry it out at home. Propaganda in Japanese hands is exceedingly effective. For example, the Japanese believe that the Emperor can, make no mistake, nor can the nation commit a wrongful act, nor can any of the Emperor's servants do a wrong deed by carrying out the Emperor's will. With such certainties as these to guide them. the Japanese are not concerned with abstract ideas of justice. An act, whether at home or abroad, done in the interest of the Emperor, has an ethical justification Thus there comes into focus the essential difference between the viewpoint of the United States and that of Japan. In this country the people, after all, dictate the Nation's policy. A President may have his opinions, yet his wishes may not be gratified. But in Japan, St. Francis Xavier's statement, 'This nation is the delight of my soul." expresses the viewpoint of every Japanese so long as it is the viewpoint of the Emperor. And that is the nation which the United States faces as a possible enemy-a nation that can see no wrong and where every act has a sort of religjous sanction when done in the interest of the chief ruler's will.

sponsible for the failure of the bill to emerge as an effective pricecontrol measure, there is no gainsaving the fact that the coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats added the final destructive finishing touches

This coalition succeeded in defeating the proposed licensing provisions. which had been described as essential to enforcement of the law, and trimmed the powers of the administrator by setting up above him a board of review with power to reverse his rulings. This board, incidentally, is required to enforce its own decisions through the courts. Under normal conditions this last provision would be meritorious, but in a period of rapid price changes it is apt to prove so slow and cumbersome as to defeat virtually any effort at price control.

In the form in which it finally passed, the bill reflects a disappointing failure on the part of the House to measure up to its responsibilities. Whether it will meet a better fate in the Senate remains to be seen. There is reason to believe that House leaders are banking on the hope that the Senate will restore some of the administration-favored provisions, and this hope may be well founded. But it does not appear at all probable that the Senate will rectify the failure of the House to deal squarely with the wage and farm issues, and if this proves to be the case the bill will not be salvaged as an instrument for effective price control by reinserting any of the clauses stricken out by the House coalition

It will be disastrous for the rank and file of the people if Congress, because of the relatively unimportant political issues involved, finally proves unequal to the task of passing a real price-control law. Yet that, clearly, is the direction in which Congress is heading, and it seems unlikely that this trend will be reversed until the voters have begun to feel the painful pinch of inflation.

Judicial Impeachment

A deplorable weakness in the Federal judicial system has been bared by the testimony of Justice Jackson in behalf of legislation to establish new impeachment procedure by providing for trial by special threejudge courts, designated by the Chief Justice of the United States, when Federal judges are accused of misconduct, instead of bringing these cases before the bar of the Senate after the House has approved prosecution.

Appearing at a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee hearing on the bill which has passed the House, Justice Jackson said there were several occasions during his service as Attorney General when removal proceedings against members of the bench were warranted, but that nothing was done because impeach- government; others with equal ardor ment was not regarded as feasible | argue that the enterprise was merely

Ready to Testify

The scheduled appearance of Representative Hamilton Fish on Wednesday before a special District grand jury investigating propaganda activities in this country should bring to a satisfactory conclusion a controversy which originally seemed to carry disturbing implications.

The original grand jury subpoena served on Mr. Fish was held invalid on the ground it violated the "privileges of the House." Before this matter had been adjusted, Mr. Fish left on a tour of duty with the Army, in which he holds a Reserve commission, and the grand jury recessed. Thus, for a time, it appeared that the jurors might have to make their findings without benefit of testimony from the Congressman. This unfortunate prospect has been avoided, however, by Mr. Fish's announcement of his readiness to testify, and both the New York Representative and the law enforcement authorities may properly find cause for gratification in this turn of events.

End of an Adventure

The Italian conquest of Ethiopia was a gamble from the start. It began as far back as 1870 when an Italian company bought from a local sultan the port of Assab at the southern entrance of the Red Sea. Other nations were seizing large areas in Africa at that time, and Italy, newly organized as a kingdom. wanted a share of the spoils. The methods first employed were peaceful, but by 1887 clashes between Italian troops and Abyssinians had taken place, the results of such bloody incidents as that at Dogali being to confirm Italian determination to hold the territories progressively occupied. Real conflict, in the full meaning of the word, broke out in 1895 and at Amba Alagi, Makale and Abba Garima near Adowa the Italians suffered costly setbacks which led to temporary recognition of Ethiopian independence in 1896. But the struggle did not cease with the signing of the treaty of the lastmentioned year. Rather, it was continued surreptitiously until the open resumption of hostilities at Wal Wal on December 5, 1934. Meanwhile, Russian, French, British and even American influence had been exerted upon the Emperors Menelek, Lej Yasu, Tafari and Haile Selassie. What finally prompted Benito Mussolini to attempt a final seizure of the whole of Abyssinia remains a matter of conjecture. Some writers

ernment contracts have believedpossibly with considerable justification-that these "fixers" were in a position to secure special favors for. them, provided a suitable price could be agreed upon, and the businessmen in many cases have not been disposed to quibble about the size of the fee. Yet this, on its face, is an unconscionable "racket." Defense contracts should be awarded strictly on the basis of the contractor's ability to perform and the price to be charged. Certainly, there is no reason whatsoever why the Government should have to pay something extra to offset a lobbyist's fee in order to get its defense orders placed, and the extent to which this has been done in the past is a matter in which the taxpaying public has a very legitimate interest. Principal credit for the corrective steps which are being taken should go to Senator Hatch of New Mexico, who has introduced legislation to prohibit any person who has been employed by the Government from "practicing" before any department or agency for two years after leaving the service. The Truman committee of the Senate, which has been investigating defense expenditures, is expected to take up the Hatch measure in the near future and to inquire into the circumstances leading up to its introduction. If this investigation is conducted with the same vigor which has characterized other aspects of the committee's work, it may be expected to put an end to some thoroughly un-American practices on the part of persons who have taken shameful advantage of positions of trust they once held with the Government.

Checkmate

War is a gigantic chess game, say the makers of metaphors, and that may be the cause of a big chess tournament just started in Moscow. While the city's defenders are out at the front battling furiously against Nazi attackers, the chess club calmly conducts its own mock battles, apparently undismayed by the approach of the enemy.

Offhand it would seem that from these maneuvers between the Reds and the Blacks little experience would be gained of any value to the armed forces. From the very nature of the struggle, it is one of position, now considered outmoded. Furthermore, it is not unusual for players to take time out between moves to shave, so that not even the most extravagant imagination can by any stretch liken it to a blitzkrieg.

Perhaps Moscow chess is different. It seems probable that some changes have been made, especially in the powers of kings, queens and bishops, even if they have not been entirely abolished. A streamlined version may be played in the shadow of the Kremlin, from which war lessons may be derived. But if this is not the case, and the Muscovites really ex-depends upon a number of factors which Kaiser). cannot be foretold with certainty.

A debt of $150,000,000 will cost about $3.500.000.000 annually to carry, if interest rates are held to the present average rate of 212 per cent. The British are financing their part of the war on an even lower average interest rate so that the United States should be able to count on a cost no higher than 2'2 per cent. The total cost of running the Federal Government, including payment of interest on the public debt, was only slightly higher than $3,500,000 000 in 1932 Now interest charges alone may reach that figure before this war is ended. The ability to meet these charges will depend to a great extent upon the Government's taxing ability.

In the full year 1942, the Treasury expects to extract $15,000,000,000 from what will be about $100,000,000 national income. This expectation is based upon existing taxes. Henry Morgenthau, as Secretary of the Treasury, is prepared to ask Congress to find another $5,000 -000.000 of revenue to bring the total to $20,000,000,000.

If revenues as large as that flow into the Government, then it should have little difficulty meeting interest charges of $3,500,000,000.

But taxes of such size are very painful. And those taxes are dependent upon a very high national income to provide the yield that is expected of them. A high national income, in turn, is dependent upon prosperity. So, the ability of this Nation to carry the debt that is growing so large will depend upon the Nation's ability to maintain a high level of prosperity.

According to New Deal theory, and judged by experience of recent years, the only apparent way to maintain prosperity is to go on creating debt. public or private and at home or abroad

The situation, as a result, appears to boil down to this: If the United States finds the magic formula for permanent prosperity, the debt now being created will not become an impossible burden.

But, if the United States comes out of this war without such a formula and if depression recurs in acute form, then the debt is going to be a very trying burden.

More Government agencies are at work today trying to find the formula for remaking the post-war world on a basis that will assure permanent prosperity than are at work trying to find out how to win the war itself. A victory in the war seems to be taken for granted. Adjustment after the war seems to be the problem that occupies the attention of the country's heaviest thinkers.

That adjustment, however, ties in with the creation of debt that goes along with winning the war.

First, if the British Empire is relieved of an important part of the cost of winning the war, that empire after the way may be in a more favorable compettiive position than the United States. The reason would be that this country, in creating an immense amount of debt and in shouldering the burden of that debt, would have pushed its costs and prices so high that there would be difficulty in holding export markets.

Second, if high costs growing from the war should force the United States into economic isolation as an alternative to drastic deflation of costs, then there would be very real reason to wonder what all the shooting was about. Presumably, the United States is doing what it is doing in this war in order to retain serious misunderstanding (with the

A dispatch from Paris analyzed the impasse. "The whole trouble, it is claimed here, arose out of the chancellor's desire for peace and the Emperor's comment upon the manner in which he was willing to stoop to attain this object. The Emperor, it is added, is undoubtedly anxious not to be compelled to declare war with either Russia or France, but, it is added, he would dearly like to have either of these countries attack Germany or so humiliate her as to cause a popular feeling which would enable the Emperor to carry out the desire of his life, that of leading the armies of Germany in triumph against the enemies of his country." * * * *

re-created the same old problem of repayment of those loans. The only largescale way that foreigners can obtain dollars to pay on their debts is through sale of their goods in this country. It remains to be seen whether Congress, under pressure group interests, is going to be any more ready to permit a huge inflow of foreign goods in the future than it was in the past.

This all adds up to the fact that the problem of debt is intimately related to the winning of the present war and to the sort of economic adjustment that comes out of the war. Far Eastern Crisis Deepening as Battles for Russia and Northern Africa Rage On

Review of 117th Week of War

By Blair Bolles.

Tobruk, Gondar, Moscow, Thailand, Washington, Surinam-those are the big names for the geographer watching the course of the war last week. The British pressing slowly westward in Northern Africa against the Axis forces under Gen. Erwin Rommel relieved Tobruk, the British-held garrison in Libya besieged for seven months. The British cleaned out the last Italian stronghold in East Africa by taking Gondar, in Ethiopia, and its fall removed the threat to the British in Africa from the south. The Germans approached closer to Moscow than at any time since the campaign for the Russian capital began in earnest six weeks ago. Japanese forces in Indo-China prepared for assault on Thailand. In Washington American, British, Dutch, Australian and Chinese officials talked over the proposals for a Far Eastern settlement brought here by Saburo Kurusu, the special Japanese emissary. Unsatisfactory settlement of Far Eastern difficulties-made more irritated by the Thailand move-might bring a Pacific war, and the United States might quickly join in a war in the Pacific. To Surinam (Dutch Guiana), in Northern South America, the United States sent American soldiers.

African Front

The ramifications of the African campaign include the possibility that if Axis troops are victorious against the British in Libya and Egypt, they could move westward and southwestward through Vichy French Africa and Free French Africa to the South Atlantic and establish a center of sea operations far from the British blockade. The map accompanying today's review gives an idea of the geographical relationship of the present scene of fighting to the rest of North Africa and to the Atlantic Ocean.

Tobruk was the first objective of the British North African drive, which, according to information that became available last week, Libvan Drive got off to a flying start because the Germans did not at first recognize it for what it was. a major offensive operation aimed at taking Libya. It began a week ago last Monday. One British column proceeded along the coastal fringe of Libya, and another penetrated the sandy Italian colony along a southern route. The anti-Axis plan aims at killing all German hopes of turning Africa into a Nazi stronghold and base of wider operations. British forces Monday captured the Important Axis supply center of Gambut, halfway from the Libyan-Egyptian border to Tobruk. At the same time an Italian communique revealed that the southern arm of the British invading forces had proceeded into Libya 200 miles and taken an Italian garrison north of Gialo Oasis. This operation made the British attack seem to be turning into a maneuver of encirclement, following the German style.

The British hoped that the taking of Gambut would hamper operation of Axis supply lines. The main military clash | Libya. The New Zealanders went on to at the week's beginning was at Sidi Ed Duda, which a British force that Rezegh, 10 miles southeast of Tobruk, broke out of Tobruk had taken earlier.

were ready to press against the Axis in Western Cirenaica. Cirenaica is the humpy part of Libya which lies between the Gulf of Sidra and the Egyptian border. If the Southern British force heading for the gulf is strong enough to hold a line against the Axis, the Germans and Italians in that area are in a difficult position

> The capture of Cirenaica is not the capture of Libya. Westward from the Gulf of Sidra Africa stretches 1,800 miles to Agadir, Morocco, on the Atlantic, But if Gen. Sir Claude John Eyre Auchinleck, commander in chief of British forces in the Middle East, and Gen. Sir Alan Cunningham, the British commander of the Libyan offensive, can smash the Axis army in Cirenaica, little stands between Great Britain and Western Africa except the miles. An Axis smashup in Libya undoubtedly would be followed by relentless German pressure on France to permit Axis operations in Tunis and Algeria, French colonies along the route from Egypt to Agadir. Meanwhile, the Indians heading across Southern Cirenaica aim for el-Agheila, the point of furthest British advance in the North African war of last winter.

Russian Front

The Russian story last week was a record of relentless, and slowly successful, German movement against Moscow and of new developments in the relation between Germany and Finland. The force of the Axis drive in Southern Russia toward the Caucasus has eased up since England launched the Libyan campaign.

The German high command reported on Monday in Berlin that Nazi troops had approached within 31 miles of Moscow, the closest yet, and the high command has established a sound reputation for credibility. One hundred miles south of Moscow the Russians were being pushed back in the long and bitter battle of Tula, which is a bloody incident in the Axis attempt to reach Moscow. In Southern Russia, however, the Reds opened a counterattack against the Nazis and drove the enemy 37 miles back across the Donets Plateau. Yesterday Berlin admitted the withdrawal of German troops from the "city area" of Rostov.

The ground outside Moscow now is winter-hardened and smooth-going for mechanized armies of Ger-

The whole north of Africa is a potential battleground this winter. Vichy's collaboration would put Hitler in position to force the issue. The British reinforcements at Freetown indicate the Allies are ready to meet that issue.

The British campaign in Libya is more spectacular, but Weygand's fall may have wider repercussions, draw battle lines across half a continent.

The main reasons for the British offensive are obvious. It serves to (1) relieve pressure on Russia and at the same time erase the Axis threat to Suez and the Nile Valley; (2) give the French government a show of Japanese question seemed to make his return imperative.

The week's talks brought no decisions. There were offers and counteroffers, but no acceptances of an offer by either side. In the midst of Thai Crisis the week the State Department was told by reliable observers that the Japanese were taking advantage of the lull by moving troops in Indo-China closer to the Thailand border. If there is action in the Far East-aside from the continuing action in China-it probably will come through an attack on Thailand, from present prospects.

The one consequence of the diplomatic impasse in Washington which was reported to be likely at the week's end is the resignation of Gen. Eiki Tojo as Japanese Prime Minister, although he has been in office since only October 17. It was he who thought of sending Kurusu to Washington, and if the Kurusu mission is unproductive, Tojo, a military moderate, may be held an unsuccessful premier.

Domei, the authoritative Japanese news agency, reported Monday that the Japanese Foreign Office had sent a new communication to Kurusu. Tuesday Secretary of State Hull conferred with the representatives here of the A B C D powers-Australia, Britain, China, the Dutch, who, with the United States, are closely co-operating in presenting a united front to Japan in Asia. Mr. Hull had received Mr. Kurusu and Ambassador Nomura in his apartment Saturday night, and twice before Wednesday he saw the "Allied" powers through Ambassador Halifax of Great Britain, Ambassador Hu Shih of China, Minister Casey of Australia and Minister Loudon of the Netherlands. They present a united front to Japanese desires.

President Roosevelt saw Kurusu and Nomura Thursday afternoon, after Mr. Hull handed the envoys a formal restatement of America's position in the Far East. They talked 45 minutes, and nobody said much. Mr. Kurusu was asked if the call at the White House might be considered a farewell visit.

"Oh, no, no," he said.

The next day the President went to Georgia. Before he left he made the announcement that American merchant ships sailing the Pacific would be unarmed in the existing circumstances. He let it be known that it was his opinion Tokio would be responsible for the maintenance of existing circumstances. In the meantime Kurusu is still here, after two weeks.

On Thursday they had reached Tobruk and the history, which seems long, of the strength, influencing it perhaps to play a stronger hand with the Nazis.

Prime Minister Churchill has indicated the campaign is a full-dress attack, designed to drive the Nazi-Fascist forces out of North Africa.

Nevertheless, the attack, big as it is, is only a small part of the politico-military picture on the dark continent today. A danger spot is the great French base at Dakar. In Axis hands it would constitute a threat to the British lifeline and South America. It would more than double the task of the United States Navy in protecting Atlantic trade lanes, would draw war vessels from North Atlantic duties. -Man by A. P.

PETAIN CASTS A SHADOW ACROSS AFRICA

Collaboration With Axis Would Aid Nazis on New Front

By Constantine Brown.

The possibility-some say probabilitythat Chief of State Marshal Petain soon will sign a peace treaty with the Axis casts a shadow over the initial successes of British arms in Libva.

It is felt in the highest quarters here that such a treaty would mean full cooperation of French naval forces with the Axis in the Mediterranean, as well as placing at Germany's disposal the vast resources of the French colonial empire in North Africa, including its excellent naval bases.

The rejuvenated British high command momentarily took the wind out of the Azis' sails when it assumed the initiative in Africa and hit the German-Italian forces before adequate reinforcements could reach the four Nazi divisions and the nondescript four or five Fascist divisions, remnants of Marshal Graziani's once-proud forces.

Size of Forces Exaggerated.

Inevitable exaggerations have accompanied the British move. While unofficial reports indicated that the forces engaged in this drive by the British amounted to something like 750,000 men. it is, in fact, doubtful whether more than 125,000 have been allowed to participate in the offensive. The Germans in turn have been fighting mainly rear-guard actions, using two panzer divisions and all the Italians they could lay hands on.

The principal British objective does not seem to have been achieved vet. As far as is known here, not a single German division has been withdrawn from the German Army's reserve pool in the Reich for use in Libya. Hence, the pressure on Russia continues as in the past, and until Gens. Winter, Snow and Mud decide that there shall be a stalemate on that frontthe most important and costly stalemate the Nazis have had to face since the outbreak of the war in 1939-it is unlikely that any substantial number of forces will be sent across the Mediterranean.

But what is of real importance to Washington and London is the position of the French. Until two weeks ago the United States followed a policy of coddling the Vichy government. It was realized in both capitals that if the French were to go over to the Axis camp bag and baggage the fight in the Eastern Mediterranean-admittedly the most momentous action in this war because German oil supplies depend on its result-might turn definitely against the British.

The State Department, in full agreement with the British Foreign Office, adopted after the fall of France a policy of mild friendship toward the Vichy regime. The policy-framers in Washington half admitted the truth of the contention of the few realists who insisted that Marshal Petain and his acolytes Realists in the American Government, were repeated to Berlin by way of Vichy. know that unoccupied France is little freer to act than the rest of France and that the idea of dividing defeated France into two portions-occupied and unoccupied-was one of Nazi Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop's schemes to divide the French people themselves. The State Department agreed that this might be the case, but insisted that there was a possibility of effecting a change of heart at Vichy and that this would ultimately serve the cause of Axis opponents.

The administration took particular care to please the French proconsul in North Africa, Gen. Maxime Weygand. He was thought to have an ace in the hole in the form of the 350,000 veterans who composed the North African Army. Although it was well known that this force had been deprived of its mechanized forces and airplanes, and that the German disarmament commission was hard at work seeing that the Weygand army did not possess ammunition for more than a week of fighting, the United States Government played along with the veteran general in the hope that some day, somehow, he might surprise the Nazis by some spectacular movement.

Weygand Kept Promise.

Gen. Weygand never offered any definite encouragement that he would espouse the democratic cause in North Africa, but he was pleasant to Robert Murphy, counsellor of the American Embassy at Vichy, who was sent to North Africa as special representative of the American Government to continue the coddling policy. This diplomacy took the form of 24,000 tons of oil, some 8,000 tons of tobacco and other delicacies which the Weygand army greatly appreciated. The Germans never interfered with these shipments within range of German submarines

Gen. Wevgand is out now, but he kent his promise to Mr. Murphy that as long as he was in charge in North Africa that and mine layers. territory would remain French and nobody-German or British-would be permitted to make a battleground of the pearl of the French colonial empire. The Germans did not press the Petain government for permission to utilize Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco for their fight against the British. Berlin had other things to worry about. It had to remove Russia from the field before it could think of tackling the British in the Mediterranean. The Nazis were discreet: their agents at Dakar were unobtrusive. There were not more than a dozen Nazi uniforms in that French port, and American secret agents officially reported that since there were no Germans there, and

Some wondered why Gen. Weygand accepted German materials to extend the railways and highways from North Africa to Dakar. Others wondered why he followed the advice of the German "experts" to put the natives on a 24-hour-aday hard-labor schedule to complete this communication system far ahead of time. Others wondered why the French suddenly decided to replace the original plan for a standard-gauge railway with a "Decanville" (small gauge) line. But most of our observers attributed these facts to German "stupidity" and Gen. Weygand's shrewdness, and let it go at that.

Results of Coddling. The advocates of the coddling policy argue now that the advantages-relato guard the bauxite) tively small and not costly-which we gave Gen. Wevgand gained precious time for us and the British. This may be so, but the Germans, who will consider their job in Russia ended soon-either by winter stalemate or victory over the Red forces-are preparing to wage war in the Eastern Mediterranean. Otto Abetz, Hitler's Ambassador in Paris, did not even question whether

Gen. Weygand was reliable or not. He knew that the Vichy proconsul was a strong man and such a type of Frenchman is not desirable in regions in which the Germans intend to operate. He had Gen. Weygand removed by Marshal Petain-in spite of Marshal Petain, some reports say-even before Gen. Weygand arrived in Vichy for consultations. The stage is now set for complete collaboration between France and the Reich. Officially the French government will subscribe unreservedly to the "new order" in Europe. In practice this means that military collaboration will be complete. The French can lend the Nazis more support in the Mediterranean than the Italians can. The French fleet comprises three capital ships, 14 light and heavy cruisers, about 65 submarines and some 80 auxiliaries such as destroyers

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 30, 1941.

Early Distinguished Visitors to Washington

From the time the Federal Government moved its departments to the City of Washington in 1800, many of the most noted men of the 19th century visited the Nation's Capital, and were received at the White House by the President and entertained by the more prominent residents of the city. To mention all of these would be quite an undertaking, but undoubtedly the earliest of the celebrated men was the wellknown Irish poet, Thomas Moore, who came here in 1804, and stopped with the British Minister, Anthony Merry, at that time residing in one of the Peter houses, 2615-2620 K street northwest.

Thomas Jefferson, who was President at this time, was not much for social form and when Minister Merry called on him for the first time, in 1803, he rather disgusted his majesty's envoy, who, in writing about the incident, said: "I, in my official costume, found myself, at the hour he himself had appointed, introduced to a man as President of the United States not merely in an undress, but actually standing in slippers down at the heels, and both pantaloons, cravat and underclothes indicative of an utter slovenliness and indifference to appearances."

In Homely Costume

The following year, when Mr. Merry presented Thomas Moore to the President, the poet found conditions about the same and relates that: "I found him sitting with Gen. Dearborn and one or two other officers, in the same homely costume, comprising slippers and Connemara stockings in which Mr. Merry had been received by him, much to that formal Minister's horror, when waiting on him in full dress to deliver his credentials."

more than 1,000,000 potential soldiers of additional rejected men. For the for physical or mental shortcomings sake of comparison, the following rejecduring the first year of the draft, the National Selective Service Organization, with a determined "go ahead" from President Roosevelt, is preparing a Nation-wide, program of treatment to remedy physical deficiencies of a large percentage of these rejected men. Already local draft boards throughout the country have called up sample lots 17.7. of rejected registrants for interviews to determine whether they would be willing to undergo treatment for their physical defects at Government expense, and figures based on the survey have been forwarded to national headquarters here.

An overwhelming majority of the refected men interviewed expressed their eagerness to receive any treatment deemed necessary in their cases, it was understood, and current plans call for inauguration of initial steps in the rehabilitation program within the next few weeks.

Although the immediate purpose in the rehabilitation program will be to make available additional men for military service, Government officials have pointed out that long range benefits of the program to the general health of the Nation are immeasurable.

Of the 1.000,000 rejected men-about 50 per cent of all draft registrants examined for induction into the Army under the Selective Service and Trainings Act thus far-more than 200,000 can be completely rehabilitated and made available for general service in this country's armed forces, according to official estimates. And this figure is growing daily as men throughout the Nation are called up for possible service.

Full Co-operation

Under present plans, the Nation's dentists will get the rehabilitation program under way. Dental defects have accounted for more than 20 per cent of all rejections and the registrants with bad teeth will be the first to feel the effects of the Government's move for "human renovation."

The dental profession, as represented by practicing dentists in every hamlet in the country, has assured National Selective Service officials its full co-operation. Local boards will authorize treatment of men whom Army dental surgeons state have correctable deficiencies, and these registrants will be treated by dentists in their own communities-in keeping with the selective service policy of decentralized administration.

Lt. Comdr. C. R. Wells, chief dental officer for National Selective Service, has estimated that approximately 100,000 registrants rejected for dental defects alone can be made Class 1-A men largely through such simple work as fillings, eradication of focal infection, treatment of oral sepsis and replacement of missing teeth.

Those to be rehabilitated will fall in the 21-to-28-year-age group now being drawn on for selectee man power. They will be called before local boards for examination and the gross dental defects will be recorded to determine if there are any cases that obviously would not be accepted for military service. All others, including those of doubtful status, will be sent to Army examination stations where thorough dental examinations will be made.

> But as Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national director of selective service, has expressed it, "in all cases it is the duty and the authority of the Selective Service System to see to it that every man who should bear arms for his country is fit for that purpose."

In some cases of deliberate attempts to evade service, officials have not waited for the rehabilitation program to take effect. Waivers have been obtained by local boards from national headquarters and men with remediable defects inducted on schedule, with the prospect of spending their first few weeks in the Army as medical patients. This procedure has been the case in some instances of registrants purposely contracting gonorrhea a short time before reporting for induction.

Washington health officials some time ago charged that this city's relatively high percentage of draft registrants rejected because of venereal diseases was due in large measure to deliberate efforts to dodge military service.

President Roosevelt was kept advised of the growing number of men escaping military training because of correctional defects, and on October 10 announced that the rehabilitation program would be undertaken.

In his announcement the President made it clear that the cost of the program would be borne by the Federal Government as a necessary part of the national defense program and additional funds would be made available to the Selective Service System for this purpose.

Rehabilitation Aim

Gen. Hershey immediately called in representatives of interested agencies, both governmental and civil, and workd out plans for the program. To the national director the general aim of the undertaking had been clear for months. His contention may be summed up:

"We have called upon thousands of young men to give their services to protect this Nation in time of crisis. Is it not proper that we utilize every means at our command to return them to the best possible position in civilian life when the crisis is over, as it must be some day? Is it not right and just also that

Roch Gilbert du Motier La Favette. He toured this country during the years 1824 and 1825 and was received wherever he went with enthusiasm, reverence and respect.

When he first came to this country he was 20 years of age. When he returned the second time, in 1824, he was an old man with but 10 more years to live. His career in France was every bit as notable as it proved to be in our country-ever fighting for the rights of the people, ever ready to partake of the bitter with the sweet for the sake of humanity. No wonder Lafayette was accorded a welcome here such as never has been given any person since.

Eighteen hundred and twenty-four was the last year of the administration of President James Monroe, for he was to retire on the following March 4. He was desirous of having Lafayette visit this country before his term expired and had written the general several letters upon the subject, the last invitation being of such a cordial and pressing character that it could not easily be declined. Here is the President's letter, in part:

"Washington City, February 24, 1824. "My Dear General:

"I wrote you a letter about 15 days since, by Mr. Brown, in which I expressed the wish to send to any port in France you should point out a frigate to convey you hither in case you should be able to visit the United States. Since then Congress has passed a resolution on this subject, in which the sincere attachment of the whole Nation to you is expressed. whose ardent desire is once more to see you amongst them. • • •"

Though accepting the invitation, Lafavette declined the offer of Congress to send a frigate to convey him across the Atlantic, preferring to come here at his own expense.

Lafayette's First Visit

On July 13, 1824, he embarked at Havre for this country in the American merchant ship Cadmus, Capt. Francis Allyn commanding, accompanied by his only son, George Washington Lafavette, and his private secretary, Col. A. Levasseur. The Cadmus reached New York on August 15 and on the following day he was officially received. From that time on, until he left our shores for France, he was lavishly entertained everywhere he went --- and he went everywhere.

At Baltimore Lafayette went first ashore at Fort McHenry, where he was soon taken to the tent used by Gen. Washington during the War of the American Revolution. Here he was presented by Gov. Stevens to the venerable Col. Howard, president of the Cincinnati of Maryland, who addressed him with great emotion, saying:

"General: The few of your brothers of Maryland who remain after a lapse of 40 years and the sons of some of those who are now no more are assembled in the tent of Washington to greet you on your visit to the United States and to assure you of their affectionate and sincere regard. This tent will call to your recollection many interesting incidents which occurred when you were associated in arms with Washington, the patriot or soldier, the savior of his country, the friend of your youth. • • •"

An unsung legion of men spread from Washington to the north coast of South America heaved a sigh of relief on the 15th of this month as the so-called hurricane season ended for this portion of the Western Hemisphere. But mindful of records showing that the dread monsters of the sea strike even in winter, these men will not relax their vigilance.

Since last July they have been on a 24-hour-a-day alert. Atop peaks of West Indian islands, on seldom-visited cavs of the Bahama Islands, and along our Atlantic coastline, they have maintained their watch seaward and aloft.

The United States Weather Bureau calls the organization the Federal Hurricane Warning Service, but to those people who live within the hurricane belt it is known as the "legion of mercy." Here is what the bureau has to say of the service: "The service has three main functions: The collection of reports, the issuance of forecasts and warnings, and the distribution of this information to the public."

Newspaper readers are familiar with the occasional notice in the daily weather report: "A tropical disturbance with winds of hurricane force over a small area has been located 200 miles northeast of St. Martins, moving in a northerly direction at about 12 miles an hour. Caution is advised vessels lying in its path."

The storm warning was sent out from Jacksonville, Fla., by telemeter to Washington and other stations along the East Coast. Within a short time all interests knew of its existence. That part is easy.

Detecting Tropical Hurricanes By Malcolm D. Lamborne, Jr.

> Quickly, the hurricane mappers at Jacksonville go to work, the data is compared, and soon the hurricane becomes an identity. All ships in the vicinity or in its path are put on an alert, and because "lending a hand" is the universal rule of the sea, they continue to send in reports, quite often hourly, until the storm is out of their range of observation. Should the hurricane leave the track of steamers, however, and point its mad

Naval and Weather Bureau officials are working now on plans for just such an eventuality. But, obviously, details are a military secret and cannot be released. This much can be told, however. The

A radio. beam would set off a delicate mechanism in these unwatched units whenever essential data was required, and in a short time weather conditions at some island outpost would be available for the hurricane mappers.

The bureau will continue to lean heavily on the shore stations already in operation through the islands. Only if they fall into hostile hands will these stations cease operation, it is believed here.

Airplanes might even be used to scout over the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico in search of the first indications of a hurricane, according to one official of the bureau here, should ships of many more nations become silenced.

The Federal Hurricane Warning Service is just six years old, although the bureau has engaged in such work since the Spanish-American War. In July, 1935, the service was reorganized and expanded into the present organization. Since that time a special teletype cir-

When John Edgar Hoover became director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in 1924, he observed that if criminals worked on Sundays and holidays. the men who hunted them would have to do likewise

National defense made the G-man's working schedule 24 hours a day as well as seven days a week, and 24 hours a day meant just that all too often. For the special agent's associates in the bureau, such as clerks, stenographers and messengers, the working day was extended by two hours

F. B. I. officials say that nobody really minded, because the boss-who always had worked the longest hours of any one in the bureau-was still out in front. But when the first complaint was heard, K came from the boss-he said his staff was working too hard. And because they worked too hard too long, they were hely to injure their health. So the standard overtime for employes below the rank of agents was cut to one hour a day. Later, the agents themselves were limited to an average of three hours' overtime daily.

Furned Quietly

Neighbors of F. B. I. families could not avoid observing that agents worked long and irregular hours. There must have been more than a little back-fence gossip about Mrs. So-and-So and the children who so seldom saw husband and father because he was a G-man. There must have been gossip, because when an unfortunate incident occurred in New York. leading to the discharge of three special agents, reports that F. B. I. morale was cracking from the strain of overwork and dissatisfaction appeared in print.

The F. B. I. fumed quietly, but relaxed from the usual "no comment" enough to deny one story that 250 agents had been fired. It was weeks before Hoover could be approached on that subject, and when he was, he asked these ouestions:

Could morale be low in an organization that is producing as the F. B. I. has been producing, day in and day out, for years, and particularly under the pressure of national defense?

If morale is bad, why have there been fewer resignations than ever with highsalaried positions begging for F. B. I.trained men?

Would older men in the F. B. I. strive to have their sons placed in an organization which they regarded as undesirable? How do you account for the dozens of brother combinations in the F. B. I.? Why have widows insisted on taking their husbands places in the bureau?

Hoover's direct interest in his men has peen an important factor in maintaining their interest in their work. When the bureau was a relatively small organization with only 750 special agents in 1939, Hoover knew every agent personally and something of his history. The increased pressure on him in these times and the tremendous expansionabout 40 new agents added every weekhave made it impossible for the chief G-man to know individual agents as intimately as formerly, but he still operates on an individual basis,

Hoover Knows His Men

For example, there aren't just 50 agents in a particular field office, there are 50 agents with names and personalities in that bureau. To exemplify this, the name of every agent is on a small tag and that tag is pinned on a map at the site of his current assignment. Thus Hoover sees day by day the movement of each man. When something happens somewhere, he merely walks around the corner of his desk to consult his specially designed map to see who is on the spot. If the job calls for reinforcements, he looks at neighboring cities to see who should be sent in for the task. Such matters are his personal concern. Hoover still knows something about every man in the bureau, even if he no longer knows little anecdotes about each one. In normal times special agents know that Hoover will be their strongest supporter if they find a chance to better themselves in jobs outside of the bureau. Just now resignations are not welcomed, although there is no objection, when an agent is confronted with personal situations, to his going into other fields. The F. B. I. has sought to avoid being used as a refuge from military service, and applications are studied with a view to avoiding consideration of young men who are likely to be called for selective service. The F. B. I. does not ask deferment from military service for its employes unless there are unusual circumstances which make continued wrok in the bureau im-

If the men in one bureau consistently work long hours and those in another do not, there is certain to be a shift in personnel to take some of the load off of the one office. Agents are asked to keep themselves in good physical condition. To help do that, they exercise regularly. At headquarters and in some of the larger field offices they have special gymnasiums. No official is too big to be excused from keeping himself fit.

Arming Merchantmen for Defense

By Logan Reavis. The armed merchant ship, venturing danger-laden waters with its cargoes, is like the old stagecoach of frontier davs.

Passing through hostile country, the stagecoach required a guard. The driver was alert for ambush, and tensed to whip his horses to top-speed flight when attack came.

With his new guard of 5-inch guns and anti-aircraft, the skipper of a modern merchantman-like the stagecoach driver-must guard against ambush. He also has the chance of flight. In groups, with a strong escort, these cargo ships' chances of reaching port are good.

But the lone merchantman which encounters a cruiser or battleship at sea may be written off as captured, or sunk, if it is rash enough to resist. By good fortune, it might escape in the dark.

If such a formidable enemy is known to be at large, however, the merchantman ordinarily will not venture far expensive but devastating. from a heavily armed ship of friendly colors.

places to which he would retreat are denied him.

The attacks on merchantmen are most says: likely to occur well away from land, so the danger from dive-bombers is lessened. A fair complement of antiaircraft guns can restrict plane attackers to high altitude bombing. Aim then is poor. A recent west-bound traveler reports that 15 planes assailed his ship and not one hit was registered. But the plane, as scout, may summon to the hunt that most sinister of the fore and aft, of about 5-inch caliber. Both these and machine guns may be mounted to fire at water targets as well as into the air. Some vessels may even carry depth charges. The mounted guns would have, as against low-floating vessel, superior play of fire. And the ship, when heavily ballasted, offers a fairly stable platform from which to shoot. The U-boat carries but a single 4.1 gun and a few machine guns. The chief arrows in its quiver are the torpedoes.

The submarine ordinarily must remain submerged to escape detection. Encourtering another armed mer- The commander's problem is to bring his menace, merchant crews carry on their chantman-of hostile colors-our ship periscope close enough to his target to work. Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission.

> "Even the fastest submarine finds its speed reduced, when under water, to a rate as slow as or slower than that of most merchant ships. The speed of the new merchant vessels (standard types) built by the Maritime Commission in its regular, long-range program is probably double that of the fastest submarine under water.

> "It is obvious, therefore, that fire power on a merchant vessel sufficient to compel a submarine to submerge at a considerable distance, or risk an engagement, affords genuine protection."

Submarines have risked surface encounter rather than see their quarry escape. Unless they emerge unexpectedly close to the ship (and thus risk being rammed), their hope lies in putting a hole in the vessel's unprotected hull.

Attacks are more likely to occur at dawn or twilight; less likely at night unless lights carelessly revealed on the merchantman betray its position or unless "sound-ranging" by the submarine (through listening devices) has been exquisitely refined-which is not proved. Checkitis was washing him out of training as a naval pilot, just as it had others, until he remembered a paragraph in a little book of instructions he had received when he entered training. It said:

"At first you will squeeze the controls five times as hard as you need to. Loosen up and relax. Take a deep breath. Sing. It will improve your flying to relax."

And so he sang, and the tension went out of his muscles. You've got to be relaxed to be a good pilot.

"It's the normal reaction of a nervous, high-strung youth," he explains. "But they've got to be good enough flyers to tighten up and still do a good job of flying."

Checkitis, however, is just one of the hazards on the long road which must be traveled by the youths who want to win their Navy wings. They enter the training station here at the rate of 100 every about seven months.

The first six weeks weren't very exciting for a fellow who wants to fly-but they were important. There's a good deal more to being a military pilot than just flying.

Jimmy went through a brief period of indoctrination and then entered the ground school to study communications, navigation, gunnery, power plant, and plane structures. He also learned to drill with a rifle.

Then he moved into stage A of his training, flying half a day with an instructor and going to ground school the other half.

Every morning he and his barracks mates were out of bed at 5:30 a.m. to clean up quarters, take exercises and breakfast before reporting at the hangar at 7 am.

At the end of another week, the check pilot passed Jimmy into stage B, a course of instruction designed to develop selfconfidence, judgment and fundamentals of flight. Day after day, Jimmy spent hours practicing take-offs and landings in small fields near the main stationsome of the landings being the result of simulated emergencies. Mastering steeper banked turns he was ready for

How It Feels to Fly 560 Miles an Hour

By Ben Pearse.

Five hundred and sixty miles an hour! The only trouble about going that fast is that you never know it until afterward. You may think the whine of the motors is a little higher in pitch than ever before, or that the plane is straining as she never has at any other time. But until it is all over with, and you have time to manipulate your slide rule on the way back to the field, you can never be sure.

So it was, at least, with Ellis D. Shannon, hereinafter referred to as Sam, in order that everybody around the Glenn L. Martin Co. plant, where he is one of the crack test pilots, will know of whom we are speaking.

Sam Shannon has flown faster than any other man in a bombing plane, at least so far as can be accurately determined, establishing a record of 560 miles an hour in a test dive last month with a stock Martin 187 he was giving its final tryout before turning it over to the British. The British have designated the type as the "Baltimore." Higher speeds have been recorded by pursuit planes, which are built with an eve to speed and include power dives among their most routine maneuvers. But the Baltimore is a two-motor plane designed for level bombing and weighing about 12 tons, from two to three times as much as the current pursuit type. It is a lot of airplane to be going that fast, Royal Air Force and Army pilots agree. How it feels to go 560 miles an hour is something Sam Shannon gave no particular thought to at the time.

"You just have so many things on the self.

speed meter reads what the test calls for, water from a hose. As the needle of the keep her there as long as the contract specifications require, then ease up and come home."

On this particular day, there were two observers in the plane beside Sam to take notes and record readings of the various gauges and gadgets. He took off at the Martin airport and started climbing to get altitude for the dive. High altitudes sometimes make Sam sneeze and the latter part of the journey upward was spent taking off his oxygen mask, giving vent to a sharp, incisive "kerchoo," and clapping it back over his nose again.

There was the matter of "blowing out" his ears, too, air vernacular for equalizing the air pressure on the ear drum by flexing certain small muscles behind and watch, but the one marked "Air Speed' took most of his attention. By way of explanation, each plane must be able to do a certain speed in order to be acceptable under the contract, in this case signed by the Martin company and the British Purchasing Mission in this country. If the contract speed is, to use round numbers, 300 miles an hour, it must be divided, say, at 400 miles an hour to demonstrate a sufficient factor of safety.

That 400 miles an hour, of course, is indicated air speed, and may be either faster or slower than the plane is traveling. With a 100-mile-an-hour tail wind, in level flight, for example, the plane actually would be going 500 miles an hour over the countryside. With a 100-mile-an-hour head wind, the air speed meter would be showing 400 miles while the plane would be making a net ground speed of only 300 miles in 69 minutes.

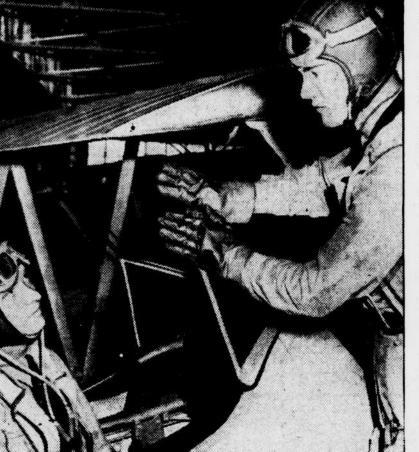

In a steep or vertical dive, wind direction and speed are unimportant, but other factors must be figured in, such as altitude and temperature. A plane will be going faster at high altitude, where the air is thin and cold, than at low altitude or at sea level, where the atmosphere is dense and warmer, although the air speed meter would not change.

Diving from 23,000 feet, where the temperature is around zero, to pretty close to sea level, where the mercury is hovering around 70, is a little like jumping from a snowbank into a tub of warm water, but much noisier. The roar of the motors on either side grew higher "Well, I'll tell you," he explained later, and higher in pitch until it seemed that they would explode. The rush of wind instrument panel to watch that you don't was like 10 hurricanes, maybe 20. A have time to notice how you feel your- blast of air coming through a hole the size of a pencil point, next to a fitting, "You just let her out until your air struck with the force of a stream of cold air speed meter moved around past 325 and 350, the altimeter dropped much faster, down past 15,000, 12,000 and 10,000 feet.

Just about 30 seconds after he started down, the air speed needle reached the mark he was aiming at and Sam began pulling out of the dive. The altimeter read 8,000 feet; he had enough room between him and the ground to ease off gradually.

"When Sam called me that afternoon." explained Joseph T. Hartson, executive vice president of the Martin company, "he just told me the plane made the figure she was supposed to-560 miles an hour. I was surprised." He did a little figuring on a pad on his desk.

"Let's see. Now 560 miles an hour is 9.37 miles a minute and about 825 feet a below the ears, or sometimes simply by swallowing. It was a little chilly up second. Civic Problems, Civic Bodies Exempt Property and D. C. Taxes; Parking Co-operation Is Sought

CIVIC NEWS.

By JESSE C. SUTER.

The Senate on Thursday concurred in the House amendment to the District rent-control bill and it has gone to the President for signature. The House amendment is a substitute provision for the Patman amendment and provides a remedy, by simple process, for reducing any rentals which on January 1, 1941, were higher than those generally prevailing. Otherwise the rents are frozen as of that date. An administrator at a salary of $7,500 per annum will administer the act. He will be a legal resident of the District and appointed by the District Commissioners.

Monday, December 8, is the next regular District day in the House of Representatives. At that time the House is expected to pass the bill authorizing the District to participate to the extent of $6,000,000 in funds at the disposal of the Federal Works Agency. These funds only are available for capital projects incident to the national defense program. Items for the District aggregating $2.000.000 have already been found by F. W. A. to come within the intent of the Lanham Act. The agency will hold this amount available for the District for a reasonable time. It will require the special authority of Congress for the District to get this money. Just whether it will be a grant or a loan or both is not yet known.

The taxicab rates are now the subject of much discussion by cab operators and patrons. The Public Utilities Commission is wrestling with the problem. One avenue of solution is closed to the commission-it cannot consider the use of meters for measuring service. This is because of a rider carried for some years on the annual District appropriation bill.

Subways are once more being discussed as the real solution of the District transportation problem. Representative d'Alesandro is asking consideration of his subway bill which has been lying dormant for a long time. He now wants Chairman Hankin of the P. U. C. to give his opinion on subways.

Chairman Delano of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has recently stated before a committee of the Board of Trade that he considers subways as the ultimate solution. There is a great variance of opinion as to who will pay the bill for any such subways.

Other Exempt Property Belongs on the Tax List.

Citizens are generally pleased with the very thorough and conscientious job being done by the committee of District officials that has already added to the tax rolls real estate valued at $14,000.000. This will increase the tax yield nearly a quarter of a million dollars s year. The work is continuing and is expected to make further substantial additions to the local revenues.

Many pieces of local real estate on the exempted list are beyond the reach of the committee and their superiors, the District Commissioners. The $14,000,000 recaptured for the taxable lists were exempted by order of succeeding boards of District Commissioners under authority of general legislation.

There is another class of real property exempted from local taxation by special acts of Congress. The property in this group is, as a rule, very valuable and its freedom from taxation results in a heavy tax loss to the District.

Exemptions from taxation by special acts of Congress are made, supposedly, because of national or international ownership or use. Such exemptions are in the nature of special courtesies extended by the United States Government, but the District sustains substantial loss of badly needed revenue through the process.

To put it in another way-Uncle Sam sends the bouquet with his compliments, but the District taxpayers are required to pay the florist bill

There was far more reason for the making of such exemptions back in the days when the Federal Government and the District operated on the 50-50 basis. The situation is entirely different under the lump-sum plan when Federal share in the annual cost of running the National Capital has shrunk to about 12 per cent.

The Federation of Citizens' Associations has long protested against being required to put up for these national courtesies. It has also insisted upon the Commissioners making the very kind of

Subway Sentiment Divided, Varied Poll Discloses

Proponents Cite Traffic Congestion Relief; Opponents Question Practicality and Expense

Civic leaders, pedestrians, streetcar motormen, motorists, cab and bus drivers are almost evenly split in their opinions on the feasibility of a subway system for the District, a poll disclosed yesterday.

The subway question is now before the House District Committee, through a resolution by Representative D'Alesandro, Democrat, of Maryland, asking that the Public Utilities Commission conduct a survey on the question. Several suggestions have been made before, but the idea has been discarded by officials as impractical.

The main argument of those approving subways, the poll showed, is that they are needed to solve Washington's traffic problem. Those opposed cite expense and impractability.

study and revision of exemptions which has added the $14,000,000 of values to the taxable property. A similar survey of the lists of property exempted from taxation by special acts of Congress, followed by appropriate congressional action, is needed and might well be expected to add further amounts to the District's income

Changes in use and excessive holdings of unused land and other factors, which were applied in the cases of exemption under general legislation, probably exist in the same degree in these special exemptions. It even may be found that the chief reason for the passage of the special act was that its sponsor, now deceased or without influence, had a power of persuasion which Congress was then unable to resist.

The entire subject is an important one, which the citizens are watching with deep interest. They would like to see explored this other group of specially privileged property.

Snow Parking Ban and Citizen Co-operation.

From December 15 until March 15 it will be illegal to park automobiles on 81 miles of streets in the city of Washington between the hours of 2 a.m. and 8 a.m. This is a regulation which has been in effect for several winters and is invoked for the purpose of permitting snow to be plowed back to the curb line so as to permit traffic to use the entire width of the roadway.

Heretofore the Commissioners have been subjected to much criticism and protest, particularly if the anticipated snows failed to materialize. With the idea of getting civic co-operation the Commissioners this year are trying out in advance a plan of education.

A 10-page mimeographed statement prepared under a committee headed by Assistant Engineer Commissioner Col. Snow, explains the need for the ban, its purpose and its operation. Many questions are answered and a showing of probable saving in expenditures is made

Before this plan was devised the Commissioners were roundly denounced for failing to clean the streets of snow while the curbs were lined with parked cars. It is believed that the complaints at the snow-parking ban have been fewer than those against failure to remove the snow, except when it has failed to snow. As there is no known schedule giving the date and hour when the District will be visited by snow storms, it is necessary to have such a regulation in force during the period in which snowfall is most likely to occur.

Health Department Problems Apply to Other Branches.

During debate in the House on the bill restoring to the health officer the right to summarily condemn food unfit for human consumption, charges were made of the existence of unclean and insanitary conditions in some of the local restaurants. The bill passed but the Health Department was scored roundly for permitting the prevailing conditions.

As a result the surgeon general of the Public Health Service, Dr. Thomas Parran, and District health officer, Dr. George C. Ruhland, were called before the House District Committee on Wednesday. Dr. Ruhland was read a lecture by some members of the committee for what they called his lack of persistent demand for the needs of the Health Department. A number of instances of very unsatisfactory conditions in restaurants were brought out in the course of the meeting.

Dr. Ruhland claimed that conditions were far better than several years ago. He also complained of the cumbersome procedure required to get legislation or appropriations.

There is a fundamental condition involved which confronts all branches of the District government. This obtains in those branches which are required to make various inspections for the protection of the public. It is believed that every inspection force is understaffed through lack of funds. Added to this, most inspectors are without adequate means of transportation. Any department of the District, requiring inspectors will admit that more inspections could be made and with greater frequence if more automobiles and streetcar and bus fares were available.

In some departments they are only able, as a rule, to make inspections in response to citizen complaints. The heads of these departments know that the public can be afforded the necessary protection only through regular systematic inspections, but in many instances their hands are tied.

Another part of this complexity of problems, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, is the absence of any plan of co-ordination between the District Committee and the Committee on Appropriations. The same difficulties are not experienced in the Senate because there is an interlocking of membership of the Legislative Committee with the Appropriations Committee.

Great Tar Rally Erases Early Cadet Lead

Busik Takes Command After Mazur Shoots Works for Soldiers

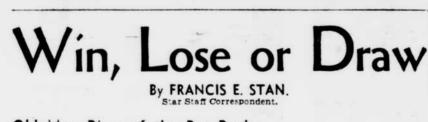

By FRANCIS E. STAN, PHILADELPHIA. Nov. Hurled back for two periods and generally outfought by a spirited. rugged Army team. Navy's greatest football machine in 15 years was forced to come from behind here today to win a 14-to-6 victory over the stubborn Cadets in a game was so bitterly contested that its moments of dreariness were ten by the crowd of nearly 100.000. Not only was Mrs. Franklin D Roosevelt one of the rooters in the vast throng which spilled over Philadelphia's big Municipal Stadium, but she was an omen. During the first half the First Lady of the Land sat on Army's side of the big concrete horseshoe, and it was from there that she saw the thin line of Greylegs, led by Halfback Hank Mazur, take a 6-0 lead in the second period and outplay Navy's highpowered, highly ranked squad to such an extent that during the intermission the Cadets seemed to be even-money choices

Tide Turns Speedily.

There was no between-the-halves entertainment, but Mrs. Roosevelt took occasion to walk from the Army side to Navy's and, thereafter, the tide turned. Making good their vow to "win this one for Swede." Navy's "two-ocean" team roared back defiantly to record a third straight victory in the 51-year-old series between the two service in stitutions.

"Swede" was Mai, Emery E. Larson of the United States Marines who was ceaching a Navy team for the last time. Maj. Larson already has put in his three years as a Middy mentor and expects to be transferred back to active duty next IT CAME TOO LATE-Hank Mazur (left) shot this pass right into the arms of Philadelphia yesterday. It was a fourth-period play that went for 18 yards, but month. Ralph Hill, who was in the midst of the Navy secondary, in the service classic at led to no points and Navy, leading then by 14-6, held its advantage to the finish. Navy was expected to win and, although the score reflected the opinion of the experts, it was a grueling battle in which the tides changed with bewildering swiftness. PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 29 .- Just in case the reader isn't up on the biographies of all the big men of this country, it might be mentioned that Clark Hinkle stands 5 feet 11 inches, weighs 198 pounds, and despite his nearly 32 years-18 of them spent in football-still is able to buck a line as hard or harder than anybody in the business.

The business in this case is professional football. Mr. Hinkle's team, the Green Bay Packers, will perform tomorrow at Griffith Stadium. Like gent trying to swat flies on a warm day and you have an idea of the Army-Navy game. Hinkle is a spectacle everybody should see at least what happened to Georgetown this afternoon as it lost a 14-6 once. It isn't every year that a fullback like Clark comes to town. As a decision to Xavier's hard-hitting Musketeers in the final game of matter of fact, there are very few fullbacks like Hinkle in the whole long history of football.

The man charges like a bison-rah, rah, Bucknell!-and except for Mel Hein of the New York Giants he has been playing pro football longer than anybody else in the National League. When Hinkle broke into the game Herbert Hoover was President of the United States and Max Schmeling was heavyweight champion of the world. That was the away for sizable gains. And the way year Al Simmons led the American League with .390, Twenty Grand won they picked their spots, cut back the Kentucky Derby and Mate the Preakness. Ellsworth Vines was the tennis champion and Lou Boudreau, the new manager of the Cleveland Indians, was 14 years old. The year was 1931.

Some of Redskins Must Show Something

Every year Hinkle threatens to quit and there is just a chance that favored by perfect football weather, he means it this time. The Packers are tied with the Chicago Bears in saw the Musketeers grab a Georgethe Western championship race and, off their last and victorious game town fumble and march 65 yards on with the Bruins, they must be conceded a very good chance of winning sharp, tricky plays for their first out and eventually licking the Giants in the big playoff. If this comes score midway the first period. Three to pass, it is very possible that Brother Hinkle will bow out while riding a winner.

Washington is the mecca of pro football tomorrow because the Redskins, despite their elimination from the Eastern race and their four defeats, still are no pushovers. The Bears will be playing to keep pace with the Packers, but their battle is just up the pike a piece. This would be Philadelphia and the Eagles, whose Alexis Thompson denies that his down. backfield will be Kovacs, Riggs, Budge and Tilden, have little in common was the ball game. with the Bears.

What they have in common is the "T" formation. The Eagles took it up this year. They evidently are of the opinion that it is the way to play football. But the chances are that Chicago will have to show them how the confounded mysticism works and, on paper at least, the pressure is on the Packers. They haven't got a great team to beat, but the Redskins aren't bad. And there are plenty of Skins who have to show something before they can be assured of returning next year.

Baugh and Hutson Crash Greybeards' Defense

Since the rest of the National League teams merely are playing out the string or, as in the case of the Champion Giants, loafing over the week end, perhaps this would be as good a time as any to shed a large, salty tear by way of returning to the Packers-Redskins game.

Hinkle isn't the only star. All things considered, he may be the brightest, but on the field tomorrow in Washington will be men like Sammy Baugh and Don Hutson. Ah, the pity of it! What cruel fate to rule that, barring an interception by the party of the second part, Baugh could not spend the rest of his days happily passing to Hutson.

Even the graybeards who swore by Brick Muller and Osterbaan and Benny Friedman and Dorais and Rockne and some of the other great passers and receivers of by-gone days have changed their minds since

Sudden Marker Comes With Three Minutes Left in First Half

By ROMNY WHEELER,

Associated Press Sports Writer. OXFORD, Miss., Nov. 29. chunky sophomore quarterback named Jennings Moates-an unknown until today-skittered 38 yards through an amazed University of Mississippi team today to beat the Rebels. 6-0, and give Mississippi State its first Southeastern Conference football championship.

For the third straight year State's Maroons throttled the fancy running and passing of Mississippi's touchdown twins, Junie Hovious and Merle Hapes. And for a third straight year-and the 22nd time in 39 starts-State took the bitter intra-State contest.

Score Comes Suddenly.

The touchdown came with explosive suddenness three minutes before the end of the first half. Sonny Bruce took Jack Flack's punt on the Mississippi State 30 and returned it a yard. Then Bruce whipped a pass to Kermit Davis, sophomore end, who piled down to the Mississippi 40. A line buck gained two. Moates shot through center on a quarterback meak, cut toward the sideline, and charged over for the touchdown. Bruce tried a place-kick for the extra point, but it was wide.

Before the game Coach Allyn McKeen of State remarked: "Mississippi has the stars and we have the scrap.

That-and some brilliant sophomores-won the game for State. It was State all the way, with Mississippi's Rebels never able to get in position for a real scoring threat. Blondy Black, Lamar Blount and Fullback Charley Yancey fought their way to the Mississippi 5 in the first period before the Rebels' great line stiffened and held for downs.

Hovious broke loose for 41 yards off tackle early in the second, carrying the ball to the State's 15. Three bucks lost two yards and Bill Eubanks' try for a field goal failed. Later in the same quarter Jack Flack and Bobby Yandell fought their way to State's 19 before the drive faded

Mississippi threatened once more at the start of the third period. Green Spartans, by a 14-12 score. Hovious broke away on a punt return and streaked 50 yards up the sideline before stepping out of bounds on State's 17. Hovious and Hapes banged their way to the 8. where Hapes was thrown back on fourth down with barely 6 inches to go. Bulldogs Resort to Air When Jackets' Hard Charging Checks Line Attack

By the Associated Press

ATLANTA, Nov. 29.- A new and thrilling chapter in the long and bitter football rivalry of Georgia and Georgia Tech was written into the turf of Grant Field today by the churning cleats of Frank Sinkwich.

With the sensational Sinkwich tossing the pigskin far, wide and Tennessee's Volunteers rose to their handsome, the red shirted Georgia Bulldogs buried Tech's Yellow Jackets under a 21 to 0 score befores

Three scores came in the third quarter. Dickson led a parade from the Baylor 40 with his line blasts and a pass to Ted Scruggs, end. which was ruled good because of interference on the 14. Three plays later Dickson went over from the 1.

Dickson intercepted a pass on the Baylor 40 a few minutes later, raced to the 14, plowed to the 7 and then shot a touchdown aerial to Fullback Whitlock Zander. Beecher Huff, Rice tailback, broke off right tackle and bolted 52 yards for the final score.

Huff's mistakes led to the Baylor score. In the fourth period, he punted the ball straight up in the air. It fell and bounced behind the line of scrimmage. Rice wound up with a 5-yard loss and Baylor took over on the Owl 29, driving to a touchdown.

Huff fumbled later and Wenzell Gandy, Baylor end, recovered on the Rice 19 to touch off another scoring drive.

Thrill-Packed Aerial Battle Promised as Mighty Green Bay, Redskins Clash

Invaders' Hutson, Hinkle In Line to Shatter Loop Score Marks

By BILL DISMER, Jr.

Before Washington's largest football crowd of the season, a sellout throng of nearly 36,000, the Green Bay Packers will attempt to clinch share of Western championship nonors this afternoon by handing the Redskins their fourth successive defeat

Non-winners since the last time they played in their own bailiwick on November 2, the Redskins will appear before home folks for the first time as a mathematically-eliminated contender for Eastern honors in the National Football League.

And whether they will be greeted with razzberies or sympathetically, on the grounds that the breaks might have been against them, is a question that will be answered only at 2 o'clock-the advanced time for the kick-off

The possibility that three all-time individual National League records will be broken by as many Packers is expected to vie in interest with their team's chanch to finish ahead of or in a dead heat with the Bears and the Redskins' opportunity to land the runner-up spot in the Eastern Division.

Don Hutson, the Packers' peerless end, will enter the game less than a touchtown's points away from two lifetime marks. Now credited with 75 points. Hutson needs only three more to tie Automatic Jack Manders' lifetime total of 368 and just four more to equal the same guy's record of 79 for a single season. Let him get on the scoring end of a touchdown-pass and Hutson will erase both marks with one fell swoop.

However, Clarke Hinkle, three times chosen all-league fullback during the 10 years he has been with the Packers, will enter the game with just one less point than Hutson. Their personal battle for points is not expected to furnish the Packers any cause for dissention.

Women's Golf Association to Install Its 1942 Officers at Meeting Thursday

Greatest Year Ever Has Been Enjoyed By Linkswomen

Many Big Tournaments Have Marked Season Of Feminine Game

By WALTER MCCALLUM. With their biggest year behind them, feminine golfers of the Capital will gather Thursday at 12:30 p.m. at the Officers' Club of the Army War College to install 1942 officers of the Women's District Golf Association, already chosen by a nominating committee. Nomination is equivalent to election among the fair golfers.

Officers to take over the 1942 direction of the women's links organization will be President, Mrs. Walter L. Weible: first vice president, Mrs. Frank H. Kramer; second vice president, Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts; secretary, Mrs. Gorham Freer, and treasurer, Mrs. E. A. Swingle.

The first three named will be reelected in a gesture of assurance by the women that the 1941 administration has been successful.

Feminine golf, far outstripping the competitive game as played by the men, happens to be the biggest item in the game around Washington any year. The Women's District Golf Association, now entering its 18th year, has grown until today it sponsors a dozen major tourneys, spends a considerable amount of money, is the top women's organization in this sector of the land and runs feminine golf here with an iron hand. If you don't think so, try to play in one of the tournaments without a recognized handicap.

Successful Year Enjoyed.

The competitive year, starting in April, has been the most successful in point of receipts of any in the history of the association. Final figures on association finances will be available Thursday, but of a total income of about $1,200 almost exactly that amount has been spent. Mrs. Weible explained her policy a year ago. It is, she said, to turn back into prizes all money taken in. handicaps. Expenses for the year, dent said. "One of the important changes we was Kenny Huffman of Gallaudet, made this year." said Mrs. Weible, 10 yards behind in 15:55.

Alley Men Drop Feuds, Work as Team to Swell Entry List

By ROD THOMAS.

Bucky Burns and Tommy Nolan, among the thousands at the Washington Navy Yard carving tools and producing things to parlay into a defense jackpot for Uncle Sam. struck a keynote last night for the final week's drive for entries in The Star's Defense bond bowling tournament, to open December 8, with the announcement that the Navy Yard League would "put out" 100 per cent in simoleons as well as sweat in the general cause.

Burns and Nolan, remembered by Washington graybeards as baseball and bowling stars, respectively, coleaders of the Yard's principal duckpin league, said

"In our league are 20 teams. That adds up to 100 regular bowlers. But there are 40 or more substitutes. Is there such thing as 140 per cent?"

Alley Men Agree.

Tomorrow a full meeting of the Metropolitan Washington Duckpin Operators Association will be held and, for the first time in the history of that organization of criss-crossing interests, it will be in agreement on one proposition: That every bowler the Washington metropolitan area, regular or substitute on a team, or with no league affiliation, lay out a greenback for national defense with a square shot at the most alluring prizes in the history of the sport.

In number and sizes, awards in the tournament, all in defense savings, probably will constitute the greatest prize list the duckpin world has known. If last year's field of 16,908 men and women is equalled the fund will be $16,908 in defense savings. Tops in the men's division would be a $1,000 bond. It might seem incredible to some bowlers. used to tenspot prizes, that the lowest award in the tournament will be a $25 bond and in that, the men's rolloff, will be no less than 75 of these, provided the 1940 entry of 16908 is matched.

Bowling Army Has Grown.

There are many more bowlers now than a year ago. The prize fund will be based on number of contestants with 75 cents of every entry fee going into the kitty. The other two bits will fall into a fund to pay for the games of those who qualify for the roll-off.

Last year the field included roughly two men for every woman, and calculations for the 1941 tourna Surprising, too, was the effective manner in which Xavier's line stood up under the terrific pounding of the Hova forwards. The Musketeer forwards came in low and submarined the foe while the ends usually were able to ward off would-be Georgetown blockers and turn in the running plays.

Georgetown repeatedly resorted to its spread formation in an effort to crack the defense, but Xavier beat that, too, by shooting linemen in fast before the blockers could mow 'em down.

Buys Into Wilmington Club

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 29 (AP) .- After serving two years as president of the Wilmington club of the Interstate Baseball League, R. R. M. Carpenter, jr., has become half owner of the franchise.

Down the Stretch By GREG JOHNSON.

The Eastern turf world is moving on to Charles Town, W. Va., where at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow, the Charles Town Jockey Club will usher in the final 18 days racing of the 1941 season in the East.

A number of motor vans are rolling over the roads from Maryland racing points to Charles Town. In the vans are some winners during the meeting at Bowie, which ended vesterday. The Charles Town track is expected to draw horses from every section of America, and this should be the finest meeting ever staged in West Virginia.

Roads and walks, as well as the area in front of the grandstand have been hard surfaced at a cost of $15,000. The well remembered Charles Town mud and dust is a thing of the past.

Secretary Freddie Burton will program seven races daily. Fields in all races except stakes and handicaps will be limited to eight starters. There has been no change in Charles Town's official family from the summer meeting. President Al Boyle worked hard to build up a capable staff and doesn't feel like experimenting.

BERWYN finished second in one of his Bowie attempts and his best form could see him on the head end of the procession from start to finish. BUTTERMAN always shows to good advantage here. LERNER has worked well.

SECOND RACE-RING UP, RAYLIGHT, CARTEL.

RING UP has been on the sidelines for several weeks but he has been working swiftly and he should be able to give a good account of himself. RAYLIGHT has been threatening at Pascoag and he could be in the thick of it. CARTEL may be dangerous.

THIRD RACE-TWO PLY, REM-OLEE, SCHLEY AL.

TWO PLY has been improving with every recent effort and he has the advantage of the rail post position. REMOLEE is near peak condition. He has won six tests this year. SCHLEY AL worked well at Bowie before shipping to this strip.

has been under way for the past d upward; about 7 furlongs six weeks. Reports have been of varying success, but there is at least desire.

Aris Bacas, 1122 Eighth street S.E. bet Bill Spooner, skipper of the Fly-05 ing Fish, the day's fare that Bill couldn't catch him a sailfish. He lost, for Bill put him on two, both 105 of which were landed.

Ordinarily, offshore skippers do not like to take chances, for with them fishing is business, but with sailfish schooling as they now are the odds were all with Bill and he was well aware of the fact. Bacas, however, was only too willing to lose, for he has that first sail, which always is the toughest to catch.

January School Was Record. Schooling sailfish aren't an oddity. We have seen them cover an area several miles wide and 20 long, but because this usually occurs before the influx of winter visitors they seldom see such a congregation. Last January the largest school oldtimers can remember lay off St. Lucie inlet at Stuart, Fla., for many weeks. All records for large catches went by the board. Boats were known to hook, fight and release as many as 40 in one day. During one period of eight hours nearly 5,000 were counted as caught. The big fish are schooling again off the inlet, according to a telegram from Ernest Lyons of the Stuart Sailfish Club, and their numbers exceed the estimate of last winter's school. Charter boats are catching as many as three in an hour

May D. C. Anglers Lured. Few persons realize how many Northern anglers now fish Florida waters. In the past three years they have learned the summer fishing is the best, but it is the midwinter fisherman in whom we are interested right now, for his innings are due.

Play-Writing Contest Announced; Dr. Kayser To Speak This Week

Some 200 high school students. representing more than 25 schools. from Washington and nearby States. will meet at George Washington University Friday and Saturday for the ninth annual conference for senior high school students.

The conference is held by the university each year to give high school debaters in this region an opportunity to discuss the subject selected for high school debates. This year the subject is: "Should every able-bodied male citizen in the United States be required to have one year full-time military training before attaining the present draft age?

After a discussion Friday morning, delegates to the conference will meet in small groups to discuss various phases of the problem. At a general session of the conference Saturday morning the sections will report. Resolutions on the question will be adopted as the expression of the majority opinion.

Dean Dovle to Speak.

Dean Henry Grattan Doyle, professor of romance languages and dean of Columbian College, will deliver a welcome address to the delegates at 10:45 After his address the affirmative side of the question will be discussed by Mai, Ernest M. Culligan, director of public relations of the Selective Service System, Benjamin Marsh, executive secretary of the People's Lobby, will speak on the negative side Discussion leaders at the conference include: Dr. William Crane lege: Dr. Warren R. West, professor of political science and assistant Dr. John A. Tillema, associate professor of political science; Dr. Charles N. Cofer, instructor in educational psychology; Norman B. Ames, professor of electrical engineering; Dr. Benjamin D. Van nome at 1623 Sixteenth street N.W. Evera, professor of chemistry, and A treasure house of rare and un-DeWitt Bennett, assistant professor of public speaking.

Each discussion group will cover three main issues: 1. Do present world conditions require a change in attitude toward our military education and defense? 2. If it be granted that we must revise our concepts about military education and defense, is the proposal to require a -vear of full-time military service of every American youth before reaching the present draft age the best course open to us? 3. Are there any disadvantages of inherent 'evils in the proposed plan of requiring a preparatory year of military train- our art was passing through rather

Mr. Neu is also directing a study club for the boys of the Church of Our Lady of Victory on Conduit road and also gives some of his time to the interests of Fidas House, a social service agency for colored children.

Latest activity, however, is the catechism class for a group of about 24 children of enlisted men at Fort Myer. Va. This class is being conducted on Wednesdays by Cornelius D. Duggan and Thomas Coakley. Efforts are being made to organize similar classes at other camps in the Washington area. In co-operation with the Sodality Union of the District, the students are participating in a series of dramatizations of the Gospel of St. Luke leading up to the birth of Christ. The first of the series will be broadcast at 8:30 o'clock 'tonight over Station WINX and others will continue for the remaining Sundays of Advent. The final dramatization will be given on the Sunday after Christmas. Participating in the programs are students from the Georgetown School of Nursing. Georgetown Visitation Convent. Trinity, Dunbarton and Immaculata. Under the leadership of the Georgetown sodality students already are being canvassed for the annual collection of funds for needy families of the community at Christmas. The collection, which amounted to more than $200 last year, will be completed before the start of the Christmas holidays. Through the St. Vincent de Paul Society the students also are contributing clothes for distribution

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.-Business and businessmen are in a state of suspended animation, according to a report in Business Week today. That's because Washington, place where business policies are made and unmade overnight, is itself suspended between political jockeying and legislative action, the

By all odds, a price-control bill is one of the most far-reaching items on the Government's future books. Not only will a price law directly affect all buying and selling, but also it will determine wage policies. 1942 Slackening Expected.

Present indications point to a much smaller rise in industrial activity for 1942 than in 1941. This will be felt by the electric power industry in the form of a definite slackening in the rate of sales gains, particularly in the industrial division. Residential sales gains will probably taper as the year progresses: in early months consumption will be boosted by the tresubstantially above present market mendous appliance sales made in 1941, but the subsequent shortage Washington reports that Federal of appliances created by defense ington. statisticians had raised the midpriorities will be reflected in later year-to-year comparisons.

Since much of the prospective sales gain will again occur in the low-rate industrial division, the rise in revenues will be comparatively small. In any event, revenue gains under the most favorable circumstances would appear barely ade-

Corporate Obligations Take Mixed Course At Week's Close

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.-Fresh weakness developed in Japanese bonds today with Government issues leading the descent. Corporate loans were mixed.

On the transfer of bonds representing $10,000 face value Japanese 5'28 fell 4'8 points, closing at 39. The 6128 dipped a point. Selling was associated with anxieties over possibilities for a more serious turn in the Far Eastern crisis over the week end.

Other foreign loans down a point or more included Sidney 512s and Polish 4125. Finland 7s dropped 5%. In all these, dealings were small, Chinese Government Railway 5s. an inactive issue gained 33, points over the previous sale on the transfer of two bonds Selective demand for rails supplied a prop for the domestic corporate division and the Associated Press average of 10 carrier bonds rose 0.1 of a point after four successive declines. The better action was attributed to belief in financial quarters the fact-finding board's report to the President would provide the basis for settlement of the rail wage dispute, although a number of the carrier issues continued backward.

Showing final gains of fractions to around a point were Nickel Plate 4'-s at 63' , M-K-T 5s of 62 at 25', Alleghany Corp. 5s of 50 at 6512. Illinois Central 434s at 37%, and Laclede Gas 5128 at 80

Losing fractional ground were Erie 5s of 75 at 2958, Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s at 5338. International Hydro-Electric 6s at 2458 and Pennsylvania General 412s at 1033a United States Governments held to a narrow range in quiet trading

Transactions totaled $3,338,600 face value, against $1 104,000 the previous Saturday, Special Dispatch to The Star.

BALTIMORE. Nov. 29 -- Live poultry de-and has kept up fairly well following tivity of the Thanksgiving holiday pe-od. Prices showed only minor fluctua-ons during the week and in most in-ances closed on about the same level as week carlier. Some items changed several times, but the central trend was about steady. Most the demand was for the bestter-grade tek and some of the less-desirable brds re rather hard to move on occasion, ere was a fair demand for turkers in the of the heavy call during the pre-us week. Prices on turkers, however, re slightly below last week's closing offations

Round of Debutante Parties Fill Washington Society's Pre-Christmas Schedule

Miss Elene Essary Is Introduced; Several From Here to Make Bow At Cotillion in Baltimore

By MARGARET HART, Bociety Editor

Debutante festivities are keeping Washington in a gay mood these pleasant autumn days. The coming-out parties of the last few weeks have been delightful affairs, enjoyed not only by the younger set, but by the senior members of society as well. And before Washington swings into the crowded and merry Christmas season, the spotlight will flicker its rays on many other lovely young ladies who are taking their places in society.

Further attesting to the fact that debuts are taken seriously in the Capital, even during these unsettled times, was the appearance of such a large and representative group at Blair House yesterday afternoon. There were officials, diplomats and scores of members of old, old Washington families at the reception given by Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary to present to society their attractive daughter Elene.

Charming old Blair House, built in 1824, was loaned to Mr. and Mrs. Essary for the occasion, the late Maj. Gist Blair, who lived there during his entire lifetime, and Mr. Essary having been friends of long standing. The historic dwelling has been leased by Mrs. Blair, who has resided there since the death of Maj. Blair not so long ago, to the United States Minister to Sweden and Mrs. Frederick Sterling. When the Sterlings take possession of the house in December it will be the first time for over a hundred years that occupants have been other than members of the Blair family.

Mrs. Essary and Daughter Receive in Drawing Room.

Mrs. Essary and the debutante stood in the drawing room to receive the many callers and in the library on the upper floor of the house Mr. Essary held court. There was a simple arrangement of white flowers on the tea table and enhancing the beauty of the costly furnishings of the mansion were the many bouquets sent to the bud.

The debutante's mother wore a gown of soft green silk jersey with a (See HART, Page D-9.)

Dr. A. Maude Royden, Noted As Pastor, to Arrive Wednesday; Czech Attache Welcomed

By MONA DUGAS.

Washington is being called "the hub of the world" these days, for each week marks the coming of some visitor of international interest, or brings words that a new member of the diplomatic contingent has arrived.

A person of world-wide fame, Dr. A. Maude Royden, the well-known British minister, is to arrive here Wednesday. While in Washington Dr. Royden will be the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Albert Joseph McCartney, and on Wednesday afternoon Dr. and Mrs. McCartney will have a few friends in to tea to meet the distinguished orator. Dr. Royden will leave the city early Thursday morning, but is expected to return here December 17 for a stay of several days, when she undoubtedly will be honored at other entertainments.

First Woman in England To Become Pastor of Church.

Dr. Royden, daughter of the late Sir Thomas Royden, is the sister of the present Sir Thomas, second baronet, who is a public utilities magnate of England and is president of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom. She has had an eventful life, and only a few weeks ago was reported missing from a torpedoed boat en route to this country.

At Gillis Home for 33d Year

Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, who is in her home in Kansas City, had sufficiently recovered from the painful injuries she received in the spring to attend the annual party at the Gillis home in that city. The party was held Saturday afternoon, November 22, and Mrs. Loose, though recuperating from a broken ankle and injured shoulder, went to the home through snow, sleet and rain not to disappoint the children; or herself. It was the thirty-third consecutive year that she has been honor guest at this annual event. Each child wore the neat black oxfords and stockings given by Mrs. Loose, the shoes being an annual contribution to the youthful residents at the home.

Grace Amiot, and the girls' director, Miss Jessie Rogers, presented a brief program in honor of Mrs. Loose, after which they all were served with ice cream and cake.

This fete, known as the Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose shoe party, is one of the bright events of the autumn season for Mrs. Loose, who has done so much for Kansas City in the establishing of memorials, one a public park in memory of the late Mr. Loose. Miss Roberta Quirk Married To Oscar FitzAlan Douglas, 3d, In Blessed Sacrament Church

A number of lovely weddings marked yesterday's calendar, and one of the loveliest was that of Miss Roberta Quirk and Mr. Oscar FitzAlan Douglas, 3d, which took place at high noon in the rectory of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament. The lovely bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Quirk of Chevy Chase. Md., and Mr. Douglas is the son of Mrs. Oscar FitzAlan Douglas of New York City and the late Mr. Douglas.

Msgr. Thomas F. Smyth Officiates at Wedding.

Msgr. Thomas F. Smyth officiated at the wedding in a setting of lilies and Australian fern. The bride was escorted by her father, and wore the wedding gown belonging to her sister, Mrs. John F. McFeatters. The dress is of heaviest ivory satin, made with a high cowl neckline and with sleeves that came to points over the wrist. The long, sweeping train of unusual side pannier cut, fell from a wide butterfly bow at the waistline. The bride's veil was of ivory illusion and orange blossoms and her bouquet was of white orchids and bouvardia.

Mrs. McFeatters was matron of honor for her sister and wore a princess gown of ivory faille with scalloped velvet yokes and wide scalloped bands of velvet on the hemline. She carried a bouquet of Johanna Hill toses and wore a coronet of the roses in her hair.

Mrs. Charles Farley Smith, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Courtney Prettyman were the other attendants, dressed in costumes similar to that worn by the matron-of honor, with similar coronets and Mr. Paul Butler of Chevy Chase, Outstanding

About Well-Known Folk In Books, Art, Politics

Local Bookshops Are Aglow With Christmas Books; Art of Cookerv In Colonial Virginia

By ROBERT CRAWFORD.

The bookshops are alive with fascinating Christmas books in the most taking bindings and many of them are illustrated. One of the most charming little books-just the right size for a child to hold with comfort-to leave the presses in time for the Christmas sales is by Evelyn Miller Crowell, called "Texas Childhood." The binding is just the color of Christmas greens and it's brimful of the most delightful details in the life of a little Texas girl of about 5 or 6, who now a grown-up woman got homesick up here in Washington and wrote the story. The scene is laid in a big white Colonial manor house, Millermore, down in the Lone Star State.

Millermore was the home of the little girl's grandfather, who built it on land he had cleared in 1846, just a year after Texas joined the Union. Many of the characters in the story are the old family servants, their children and grandchildren-a great big happy family in the style of the ante bellum days.

It's a book that not only little girls will find jolly fun, but little boys, too, for while "little girl" did not get to take an active part in the fishing trips and 'possum hunts with her older brothers, she was always thrilled with the stories of advenof herb gardens.

Mrs. Crowell's description of Christmas Eve and the preparations in the big kitchen for the great day are exciting. A trip to the forest with "little girl's" mother, Maybelle, the nurse, and Duck, Maybelle's Kentucky eggnog is much better brother, and her cousin Os going than the Virginia variety, because along to cut the tree and the greens in Kentucky there are no whites of ... the pause at the persimmon tree for the luscious frost-ripe fruit . . the pungent smoke of burning leaves ... the hounds barking and yelping toast when raising his glass to at the 'possum they had treed . . . the music of the hunting dogs echoing in the distance . . . floating and flying in the grapevine swing which stretched itself between two giant oaks . . . was there anything ever more joyous? Mrs. Crowell, assistant chief of the Division of Press Intelligence, executive office of the President, is the wife of Mr. Chester T. Crowell, nationally known magazine writer and a former special assistant to the Rector's Aid Society for the bene-Secretary of the Treasury. Christmas Shopping Changes

Thronged City and Clerk Shortage Complicating

By MRS. P. C. ELLETT, President, District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Even though December will not arrive till tomorrow, the stores are gay with holiday decorations, with holiday goods and with the holiday spirit. In fact, the Christmas buying season has been officially opened and from now until after December 25 undoubtedly there will be a mad sush from morning until night. It is quite a well known fact that the sales forces in many of the stores will be inadequate, or rather, perhaps I should say, not sufficiently large or well trained to care for the thousands of customers who will throng their aisles. This situation has come about through no fault of the stores-rather because of the absorption into Government agencies of many temporary employes who ordinarily work only during rush seasons. By accepting regular employment they have emptied the reservoir from which the stores formerly drew necessary additional help.

Newcomers a Complication.

So, in addition to the thousands of new residents of the city is added the complex situation of sales forces in the stores not being sufficiently sugmented to care expeditiously for the huge volume of business.

However, if the buying period were evenly divided over the hours that the stores remain open, much of the burden of Christmas shopping would be lifted, not only from the shoulders of the buyer, but also from the tired feet of the salespeople. The men and women who make up the selling personnel in our stores are not automatons or robots with no personal feeling.

It would be a humanitarian gesture if those of you who possibly can do so, would arrange to do your Christmas shopping not only early in the season, but early in the day. And it would react to the greater convenience and satisfaction of both yourself and the salespeople in the stores. For there would be less crowding; there would be more time and opportunity for leisurely shopping; there would be less likelihood of tired and therefore less efficient salespeople.

In Capital Letters

My dear:

D - 12

The Ice Club had its first evening session this week and it was a very gala occasion. As usual, there were a number of parties preceding it-early, informal supper parties, so that the guests and the hosts, too, can tear off and get on the ice as near to 8:30 as possible. The Slocum Kingsburys were among those entertaining in their charming Georgetown house, and another party was given by the "Hockley" boys.

After supper and once the party was assembled at the rink, the gayety continued. Special event of the evening this time was a so-called hockey game, played with brooms and a football, a terrifying and hilarious affair all at the same time. Can you imagine anything wilder than a mob of men (on figure skates and knowing very little about ice hockey) trying to wheel around and dash back and forth, getting in each other's way and landing in a pile, with the brooms tripping up some, and recumbent figures tripping up the rest! Ned Murdock, club president, was the only one hurt, and he had a nasty spill, landing right on his forehead!

When his accident turned out not to be serious, we were able to laugh over a remark that sounded pretty strange at first. Some years ago Ned had hurt his back skiing, and his friends were atraid that it might have been banged up again. One who was greatly relieved to find out that his back was uninjured called out, "Oh, it's all right. It wasn't his back; it's just his head."

Incidentally, Dick Sanger deserves special mention as goal guard, raising a cheer from the audience when he neatly swatted the football away from his goal. However, the ladies decided that it was too rough a sport for them after all, and straight skating and dancing were resumed.

Another special feature of Monday night sessions is that guests are allowed (it's once every two weeks), so there were lots of new faces. Poor Pendleton Hogan was the newest of the new-but he bravely tried the ice. clutching to Brock McHarg for support. Peggy and Gregory Prince were guests who looked quite expert, even though he claimed that no one from Alabama ought to even try to skate!

Maisie Howard looked especially fetching, wearing a purple costume with a little hood lined in red. She was skating around with Chuck Owsley, one of the "Hockley" boys. Chuck was drafted, you know, and served his stint in the Army, but now because he is over-age he is out again and back in the private practice of law.

Anne Wilkinson was there, dancing with Jimmie Madden, who was down on a fleeting visit from Boston . . . One of the many fleeting visits he is making here these days. Jimmie was a national skating champion a few years back, so he was watched with admiration and envy.

Carnie Burling has a wonderful new costume this year, the most magnificent red plaid slacks . . . a very warm and practical outfit as well as decorative. Mrs. Cabot Coville is another who wears the long pants instead of the short skirts, hers of dark blue. The whole effect of the rink seems lighter and gayer this year ...

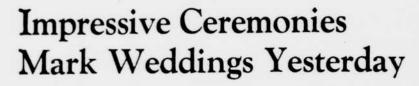

Patricia Morris is a decorative addition to the group, having only been able to come during vacations before. Her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris, are among the most faithful and enterprising of all. Mrs. Train and her son Cuthbert are another family skating combination. Melville Grosvenor can have one dance with his the bride and wore a dress of gold mony which took place in the sa-wife and the next with his daughter, both excellent skaters. Mrs. F. W. Jones, shatter the cristy of St. Matthew's Cathedral. Mrs. Walter Westcott and Mrs. Merwife and the next with his daughter, both excellent skaters.

All of these combinations aren't even beginning to include the younger children, like Frances Sternhagen and the young Murdocks, etc., who skate in the children's hours and only mix with their parents on the Sunday morning sessions.

P. S.-Guess who is in town for a short visit-Ethel Worthington the home of the bridegroom, after sister, Miss Mary Areford, who wore Coad! Women's Organizations Are Sponsoring Holiday Bazaars This Week

Attractions That Will Suit Virtually Every Test Are Being Arranged

By FRANCES LIDE. men's Club Edito

You can just about "pay your money and take your choice" if you make the rounds of holiday bazaars to be sponsored this week by a number of women's organizations

Something for virtually every taste-artistic or practical, frivolous, or patriotic-appears among the attractions listed by the various sponsoring groups

If you go to bazaars to buy a good dinner, you'll note with interest the plans of several church groups, for most of these feature old-fashioned turkey suppers.

The annual book and art fair of the District League of American Pen Women will offer a wide selection of articles representing the original work of members of the branch.

That American rural women have clever ideas as well as clever fingers will be demonstrated by the novelties included in the sale sponsored by the Woman's Farm and Garden Association.

And for the defense minded, there'll be a fashion show of civilian shown Wednesday evening, while defense uniforms at the bazaar of the Women's Alliance of All Souls' featured Thursday. Unitarian Church.

Farm and Garden Association Sponsors Handicraft Sale.

The handicraft sale to be conducted by the Capital Division, Woman's National Farm and Garden Association, will open at noon traction, and the boys' chorus of tomorrow and continue until 9 p.m. Wednesday at St. Margaret's Parish House, Connecticut avenue and Bancroft place N.W.

Among novelties offered will be lapel pins in the form of dolls and patriotic bells made by Southern mountain women and some of the articles of spun glass, hand-hammered metal and jewelry from the display last week in Departmental Auditorium. Mrs. Lenore Fuller. exof Agriculture, and Mrs. Louise J. Hollis arranged to have these items Included.

In connection with the sale luncheon will be served each day by a group of women from St. Margaret's Episcopal Church under direction of

You, Too, Can Be a Star, Says the Man Who Knows

Mervyn LeRoy, Whose Discoveries Would Make a Hollywood Who's Who, Brings Comfort and Cheer to the Hopeful

By Harold Heffernan.

HOLLYWOOD. Let's say, just for purpose of discussion, that you want to become a movie star. Get the mirror and take a good honest look at yourself. What does it tell you?

If you're Miss or Mr. Average Citizen it probably throws back in your teeth the cold truth that you're no Lana Turner, Hedy Lamarr, Clark Gable or Errol Flynn. Any cause for discouragement? Not at all. Whatever you see in the mirror, with few exceptions, is material that can be transferred to the silver screen with mutual profit and pleasure to you and some Hollywood studio.

Much has been written and said about what it takes to be a film star -most of it discouraging to the host of talented hopefuls who don't quite rate as glamor boys and girls. Forget all that, for now comes an expert-and an expert on his record alone-who lays down a set of qualifications that should bring comfort and cheer to one and all. The man who holds out all this hope to the discouraged thousands is Producer-Director Mervyn Le-Roy, who at 35 has spotted enough players, now famous, to make up an impressive "who's who" in Hollywood.

LeRoy's finds, for example, include Clark Gable, Lana Turner, Ginger Rogers, Loretta Young, Edward Arnold, Gale Sondergard, Henry O'Neil, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Dane, Allyn Joslyn, Inez Cooper and Steve Cornell. The last two are very recent newcomers now being treated to the star grooming process at M-G-M under Leroy's supervision.

There's a Recipe. All star-makers have their own individual systems for detecting potential box office gravy in unknowns who cross their paths. We asked boyish-appearing LeRoy for his recipe. He put his answer this way -If you can answer "yes" to the following ten queries there's nothing to bar you from getting your name into lights: 1. Are your eyes expressive? Capable of showing the basic emotions hatred, sympathy and love? 2. Are you blond, brunet, redhead or any shade between? 3. Is your personality interesting and sincere? 4. Are you somewhere between a midget and a giant in size? 5. Is your voice range between a foghorn and a whisper? 6. Do you speak convincingly? So that people believe you? 7. Do you act natural and not carrying a tray, picking out victuals in the Warner Cafeteria when Le Roy first spotted her. He had put in a phone call asking Loretta's older sister, Sally Blane to report for a test. Sally wasn't in and the precocious Loretta, never before inside a studio, decided to make a bold bid for taking her place. She was oh her way to Le Roy's office, to carry out the bluff. Before he learned her identity or became aware of her intentions, the director had Loretta tagged as a little bit of all right for the movies. She grabbed the part intended for her sister and has been going great guns ever since.

Restaurant Discoveries.

Inez Cooper was sitting with friends at a night club six months ago. Le Roy mistook her for Hedy Lamarr (they not only look alike but have exactly the same measurements) and stopped at her table to say hello. Struck by the similarity and the girl's beauty, Le Roy apologized and asked her to drop around to his office. Now she has a term contract and has already appeared in three films.

Likewise, Pat Dane, who recently made a startling debut as a Mickey Rooney temptress in one of the Hardy family pictures, and Steve Cornell, a handsome giant from Texas, are restaurant discoveries. Le Roy talked business with Miss Dane at the edge of the dance floor at Ciro's. Cornell was straddling a counter stool at Armstrong & Schroeder's Cafe when the Le Roys dropped in one recent night for dinner. Imagine yourself draining a cup of coffee, feeling an arm slipped over your shoulder and a voice softly saying, "How'd you like to be in the movies?" It happened just about like that in Cornell's case. The popular impression, through oft-printed tales, that Lana Turner was discovered by Le Roy as she was eating a chocolate soda in a drug store across from her high school is now exploded. No such thing, says the director. It seems Lana was a saleslady in a Hollywood dress shop when a discerning friend called her to Le Roy's attention

Gable's the Prize.

Ginger Rogers began the swift dancing and dramatic strides that eventually brought her an Academy Award when Le Roy in 1931 picked her from the background ensemble and thrust her into an important speaking role of a big musical. Warners later let her get away, just as they did Gable, but Ginger to this day credits Le Roy with her career's first real impetus

Gable, of course, is Le Roy's prize bag. He snagged him out of the The La when it was playing at a Los Angeles theater. Warners didn't like his and hard work? According to Le Roy, that's just about all there is to the business of crashing the movies, and if you can answer the tenth and last question in the affirmative even the others don't matter too much.

Right Place at Right Time. "Sum it all up," said Le Roy with grin, "and you find just about anyone has a chance to click in the picture business."

Being in the right places at the right time has counted heavily for Le Roy in stacking up his record as one of Hollywood's outstanding pickers of talent. What is the importance of "Troilus and Cressida?" The answer is clear. "Troilus and Cressida" treats the war theme from the fundamental roots. That war exists, has existed and unfortunately will probably continue to exist is more than the drive of political and economic expansion. "Troilus and Cressida" brings out the first law of nature, the unrestricted drive of human emotions-sex. And where has sex more license than in wartimes? Hundreds of books have been written on the evils of sex in wartime. Shakespeare treats the subject in his own bitterly ironical way. He makes fun of the Grecian heroes because all they have in mind is a good time. He makes fun of the Tro-

News of the death of Dr. Emilio Diena, greatest of Italian philatelists, has been received in Washington. He was a winner of the Crawford Medal for this contributions to the "study and knowledge" of stamps, the Taplin Medal for his monograph on the newspaper tax stamps of the duchy of Parma and the Lindberg Medal for service to philately. Born in 1860, he began to collect when only 11 years of age His specialties were the postal adhesives of the Italian states, and in that field he was the acknowledged master. Among his writings were essays on the stamps of Modena, Romagna and Sicily. His affiliations included the Italian Philatelic Society of which he had been president, the Royal Philatelic Society of London and the American Philatelic Society.

Residing for many years at 40 Via Vittoria Colonna, in Rome, Dr. Diena kept open house for American visitors-a gentle and kindly old man who was out of date in the quarreling modern world.

Here's how to take off ugly fat-without strict diet lists, no strenuous exercises, no drugs. The easy Welch Way! And intelligent, cooperative people who faithfully followed Dr. Frederic Damrau's instructions lost an average of 7 pounds a month. Amazing results sworn to before a Notary Public. And listen how easy it is. Just mix 34 glass of Welch's Grape Juice with 34 glass water, and drink before meals and at bedtime. Then this happens: First, you have less desire to eat sweet, fattening foods-thus reducing caloric intake. Second, the natural dextrose in Welch's is quickly consumed. This regime actually helps nature consume excess fat. Yet !-- you needn't suffer a hungry moment. So start reducing the Welch Way today.

Corcoran Exhibits Water Colors by John Costigan

Artist Also Paints Well in Oils and Is Able Etcher

By Leila Mechlin.

It is very seldom that an artist is able to express himself with equal skill and facility in two or more media, as is John E. Costigan, an exhibition of whose water colors opened in the Corcoran Gallery of Art last Tuesday, to continue through December 14.

Mr. Costigan paints in oils as well as in water colors and he also etches, in each of which fields he has attained distinction. Curiously enough, his manner changes with each medium. His oil paintings have the appearance of having been done with a rather dry brush, the pigment laid on in short strokes, which, collectively, create an effective ensemble. In his water colors, however, his pigment flows freely and the stroke is broad and decisive. The palette he uses for these, moreover, has, it would seem, a wider range, Then, upon coming to his etchings, a third mode is seen, one which is peculiarly adapted to the requirements of copper plate and etching needle.

There is also, probably, no other American artist who has so closely followed the trend of the time and interpreted it, in all its bareness with such truth that it becomes profoundly significant. Living near to nature himself, he has brought it nearer to others and, even in the raw, manifested the beauty of such life, together with its universality.

Life on Farm.

The majority of Mr. Costigan's paintings and prints have had to do with life on the farm and those who live it-men, women and children of today who love the feel of the earth, the dome of the sky overhead, the long look to the distant horizon, and the animals, likewise made by God and placed under man's dominion. It must not be supposed for an instant, however, that Mr. Costigan deliberately takes upon himself the role of interpreter. Far from it, for the fact is that he paints and etches simply that which as are all things of the spirit.

Mozart, Dead 150 Years, to Be Honored His Music Fills Heart Longings in War-Torn World

By Alice Eversman. This week will see the observance of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, the exact date of which was December 5, 1791. Already this year special programs have honored the memory of the great master whose vast musical output of various kinds has brought constant pleasure to listeners all these many years. The cult of Mozart grows with the passing of time and is particularly significant in the present era, when the trend of life is so far away from the contentment and joy in simple things which is the earmark of his music The honoring of a great musician for what he had contributed to music development should not be apart from honoring the man himself. Character and the virtues are of as much worth as the creation of great works, for it is strength of nature that guides and colors creative impulses Courage Stands Out.

the retrospect view that we now have of Mozart's life, his courage stands out forcefully. It was not of a spectacular kind and to some may seem negligible, but it was courage nonetheless. No great deeds of heroism, no tremendous sacrifices are on the record of Mozart's life. He apparently took the good and the bad that came to him with the same easy acceptance. Yet his courage is to be found in his persistence in being happy and of incorporating that happiness in his Swarthout music. Few of his works carry a shadow of discouragement or sad-ness, yet he had plenty of cause to be wretched and to bewail his plight in his music.

Beecham To Conduct Tuesday

Philadelphia Group To Feature Haydn And Mozart Music

The announcement that Sir Thomas Beecham would conduct a group of operas this season at the Metropolitan Opera has increased interest in his appearance here Tuesday evening with the Philadelphia Orchestra at Constitution Hall. Besides leading the music of Haydn and Mozart, whose works he will conduct later in the year at the Metropolitan, Sir Thomas has programmed for the orchestra's second Washington concert of the season, a that of the piano concerto-by Courtlandt Palmer with the composer at the piano. abroad. Sir Thomas has led the Philadelphia Orchestra as guest in two previous seasons. In January, 1928, (when he made a dramatic entry in a wheel chair), he conducted concerts in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore and in Philadelphia and New York in 1936.

In private life a man of immense means, Sir Thomas began his professional career in 1902 as conductor of a touring opera troupe. Since then he has devoted his energies to shock or ridicule audiences out of their comfortable musical lethargies. His own boundless energy coupled with his large financial resources, have been devoted to the establishment of symphony and opera as an integral function in national life. This year he is administering his characteristic tonic to the symphony of Seattle, Wash., of which he has become conductor. Besides the Haydn "Symphony No. 93 in D Major" and the Mozart "Symphony No. 41 in C Major" (the "Jupiter"), the English conductor

Born in New York and educated in this country, with the idea of becoming a doctor, he nevertheless kept up the study of music paying his way through medical school by playing the violin in dance orchestras and singing in the chorus. Leaving school to devote his time to cultivating his voice, he had an opportunity to sing

But, in this connection, it may be remarked, in Library of Congress some instances, the painter seems to have leaned a bit too heavily upon such potentiality; for, though it may be partially obscure, it cannot hide slips in draftsmanship for which there is little excuse or explanation.

Appreciation of Artist.

A few years ago, the Society of American Etchers issued to its honorary and associate members an etching by Costigan entitled "Cutting Fodder" and at the same time an appreciation of the artist and his work written by John Taylor Arms was printed and circulated. It was very understanding and is quite as applicable to his paintings. It reads, in part, as follows:

Intensely Personal Story Pictures China at War

Background of Conflict Tends To Heighten Drama of New Novel by Dr. Lin Yutang

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

A Leaf in the Storm

By Lin Yutang. John Day, New York.

In this new novel Dr. Lin Yutang performs a very fine feat of balance He divides his attention between an intensely personal story and a picture of China at war without giving either element preponderance. The story is not essentially of the war. It could happen anywhere at any time. But the ingenious doctor fits it into a war background with great plausibility, and no one will deny that the background tremendously heightens the drama of the novel as a whole.

The story concerns three people—a young woman named Malin, a young man named Poya and an older man named Lao Peng. As the book opens. Malin is staying in Poya's family home in Peiping, a refugee from the Japanese invasion. She has been a courtesan since girlhood; Poya's family, however, knows nothing of this. Poya, who is unhappily married, falls in love with her and decides to ask his wife for a divorce. Political developments arising out of Malin's past compel her to flee, however, before he has taken any action, and she goes to Shanghai in the care of Poya's great friend Lao Peng. Through a misunderstanding she erroneously comes to believe that Poya has abandoned her and, in a moment of violent emotion, has a vision of the folly and futility of all human passion. Lao Peng, in whom she confides, thereupon undertakes to instruct her in Buddhism

With him she goes to the war zone and selflessly works for the refugees and orphans, finding in this dedication of herself a peace which she had not suspected. But she encounters Poya again and learns that he has divorced his wife and is expecting her to marry him. To her surprise, then, she finds that it is Lao Peng whom she loves, for she has come to value his spirituality above Poya's passion. Poya, confronted by the new situation, sacrifices his life in battle, and the book closes with Malin and Peng agreeing to continue their work for the refugees without further thought of personal happiness. In other words, the book is a study of the contrast between sacred and profane love.

But all this is set against a tremendous background of battle. The retreat of the Chinese forces to Hankow is the part of the war which it covers and it describes with a very fine pictorial quality the ravaging of the country by the Japanese, the inspiration of the Chinese troops by the vision of a new China, the organization of life behind the lines, the westward movement of the civilians, and the fiery tactics of the famous guerrilla armies. There are descriptions of bombing attacks, of raids by the Japanese on the peasant villages and of lightning counterblows by the Chinese. The sufferings of the people at the hands of the invaders-the inhuman cruelties and humiliations visited by the Japs on their helpless victims-all these aspects of the conflict are presented with an unsparing plainness. But, as said, Dr. Lin does not lose his story even in the lurid colors of such a background.

Indeed, he makes of his story something more than the aforesaid contrast between selfish and selfless love. He also makes it a study of the present position of woman in China. In Malin, who has lived as some man's kept mistress from her early youth to her middle 20s, he puts all the traditionally desirable qualities of the Chinese woman-sweetness, meekness, slavishness, ignorance of the world, self-abnegation and the rest of it. These qualities, he says, are those generally esteemed in Chinese wives. The poverty into which Malin has been born, however, has deprived her of the opportunity to find a husband, and her only alternative has been to commercialize her desirability. Contrasted to her, in the early part of the work, are a number of more fortunate women, who have had modern educations and whose families have arranged marriages for them. These, according to Dr. Lin's flat judgment, are not worth the parings of little Malin's nails. For, as he sees it, they have given up the traditional duties of wifehood without assuming any new responsibilities. Their education has only made them smug and their modernity has only made them hard to live with. Speaking of one such, he polishes off the whole kind as follows:

"She talked much of 'western civilization,' which was often shortened to 'civilization' (wenming), and the problems of wenming or of being 'civilized and modern' were also simple. The word was used essentially in the sense in which women, whether in Buenos Aires or Ankara, declare their modernity. A few trips to the beauty shop could complete the spiritual metamorphosis, plus the courage to appear in public in men's arms and letting their husbands hold their babies for a change, and some knowledge of vitamins." Only so deep, says Dr. Lin, has western freedom penetrated the minds of the sheltered Chinese woman of position. ult there is, But among those whose lives have been din from which there may well grow a wealth of spirituality and goodness which western women may need to emulate. The reviewer would say that the book is the best fiction yet to be produced on China's present problems.

Clarence Darrow's Story Makes Interesting Book

Clarence Darrow for the Defense

By Irving Stone. Doubleday, Doran, New York.

When Irving Stone sets out to do a biography he isn't content with following beaten trails. He snowed this in his earlier volumes on Jack London, "Sailor on Horseback," and Vincent van Gogh, "Lust for Living."

But Clarence Darrow is harder to handle. Despite the wealth of material available on a man who has been dead less than four years, it is obvious that this was a difficult book to write. The author's goal was a definite analysis of one of the most complex and contradictory personalities in American life, and he has achieved this goal-but not without sharp labor pains.

For it is difficult to explain a person who despised the human race, yet loved people; who had no religious faith, yet was a crusader all his life; who was the kindest of men, yet was capable of cruelty in his relationship with women; who detested dry legal tomes, yet was, perhaps, the greatest courtroom pleader of his time.

Mr. Stone succeeds in having Mr. Darrow live again in these pages, skillful, liberal lawyer and idealist who battled throughout his long life for the underdog and contributed much to improving the lot of the working-

The author is well aware of flaws in Darrow's character, many of them linked to a certain vanity in his make-up. No effort is made to gloss over these, but the book provides a convincing rebuttal to those who would seek to classify Darrow as a mere exhibitionist.

One of the finest tributes paid to Darrow is described in a brief paragraph near the end of the book. This tells how the veteran lawyer frequently engaged in public debates on "Is Life Worth Living?" and always took the negative side, of course. In Boston his opponent of the moment, the famous Prof. Scott Nearing, cleverly outmaneuvered Darrow by enumerating the lawyer's contributions to mankind and then adding:

"What you have done bolsters my argument more than anything else. That, incidentally, was one of many times that Darrow enjoyed losing.

The author opens with a prologue entitled "A Lawyer Comes of Age." Darrow at 37 is general counsel for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, with a bright future assured. It is then that he decides to chuck it all to take over the defense of Socialist Eugene V. Debs in connection with the Pullman strike of 1894.

Mr. Stone then retraces his steps to tell of Darrow's early life in an Ohio village, his agnostic father, his first marriage and his decision to seek a legal career in Chicago. Much of this account merely amplifies material taken from Darrow's own "The Story of My Life," published about seven years ago.

Much more effort-the jacket says it took Mr. Stone a year and a half to write the book-went into the description of Darrow's famous cases, which provide a series of landmarks in our social and economic history. Besides the Pullman case, these include Darrow's stirring plea for the miners before the Coal Commission of 1902-3; his defense of Big Bill Haywood, Charles H. Moyer and George Pettibone of the Western Federation of Miners in the Idaho murder trial of 1906; his unhappy defense of the McNamara brothers in the Los Angeles Times dynamiting case of 1911; his handling of the Loeb-Leopold murder case of 1924; the Scopes evolution case in Tennessee in 1925; the Sweet case, which grew out of a race riot in Detroit in 1926, and the Massie murder trial in Honolulu in 1932.

Then, too, when 77 years old, Darrow headed the N. R. A. Review Board which blasted Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's handling of the small busi-nessman. In spite of attacks by Gen. Johnson, who termed Darrow a "tender-hearted cynic." most of the recommendations of the Darrow Board were put into effect.

The book is not without flaws, as in several places Mr. Stone is guilty of constructing sentences so clumsy that their meaning is not clear. The author lists 23 pages of sources in the back of the volume, but is guilty of a slip here and there in not checking these.

For instance, in telling of Darrow's defense of Dr. Ossian Sweet in the Detroit race riot case. Mr. Stone describes a visit supposedly made by Abolitionist John Brown to the Ohio home of Darrow's father for a conference about the Underground Railroad. According to the story, which the author attributes to an article by Clarence True Wilson in 1938, Brown placed a hand on the head of Clarence, then 5 years old, and with a few soft-spoken remarks instilled in the lad a never-to-be-forgotten urge to aid the colored minority

Obviously, the story is apocryphal. for Darrow was born on April 18, Modern Americans in Science and 1857, and John Brown was hanged at Charles Town, W. Va., on December

These flaws are small matters, however, if Mr. Stone's work helps CHARLES M. EGAN. serve Clarence Darrow for posterity.

Windswept

By Mary Ellen Chase. Macmillan, New York.

Since the novel which traces the fortunes of an American family through several generations is pretty much a standby, the best way to introduce a new member of the species would seem to be to tell how it differs from the type. So this work of Miss Chase's can be described as a family novel in which, for three generations, the family stands pat, defying change. It is the usual rule of such works to have the succeeding generations change to meet changing times.

Miss Chase's tribe is the Marstons of Maine. In 1881, the patriarch, the sensitive and cultured Philip Marston, founds the estate of Windswept on the Maine coast, far from any city, a lonely, lovely tract of 1,200 acres lying between mountains and sea. And at Windswept there grows up a feudal household, united by strong ties and sufficient unto itself. The center of the group is, of course, the Marston family, but the others belong to the estate no less, retainers who are friends and friends who are retainers, a close-knit community. Miss Chase would have us understand that the ideals which govern the group are the American tradition at its best-tolerance, courtesy and personal initiative. While the world changes and passes feverishly from peace to war to peace to war again, the Marstons remain serenely themselves, and Windswept stands as a sort of haven of permanence in a shifting universe. The book tells little more than the catalogue of their births, marriages and deaths from the eighties to the present with no strong tragedy or high romance to add After completing his education in color to the history. For it is the story of family tradition, not one of a cheery bohemian fashion, he went Days of Decision individuals.

Miss Chase gives the greatest intensity of her pen to hymning the beauties of the Maine coastal country and the spiritual exaltation which comes to man from residence in an unspoiled wilderness. It should, of course, go without saying, that a femily which can maintain a huge and complete leisure is not oppressed by economic insecurity, and one is forced to the conclusion that the perfect life of the Marstons is not unconnected around the world, gradually building with what is known as unearned increment-which, of course, makes their ideal "American way of life" somewhat difficult for the generality. But, for a high-minded (even though expensive) idyll, the book is a very pretty piece of work.

The Balance Sheet of the Future

By Ernest Bevin. McBride, New York.

Among England's crop of war statesmen, Ernest Bevin stands out as a highly picturesque character. He is that rare figure in British politics-the man who has risen from obscurity to authority. At the age of 11, he was earning his living as a farmhand. Subsequently, he worked as a clerk, a carter and a streetcar conductor. He was early interested in organized labor, and in 1910 he became an official in the Dockers' Union. From that time on, he rose steadily in labor's ranks; he was attending a Labor Party Conference when in 1940 he received Winston Churchill's call to take the Ministry of Labor and National Service. Since then, the entire picture of industry and production in England has been changed, and it is largely to Bevin that credit for the new plan must be given. The present book is a compilation of statements which he has made dealing with the problems which confront English industry at present, and those which are likely to bewilder the country after peace has come.

For the present, Mr. Bevin admits a virtual tyranny, but one which has been brought about by democratic process for the sole sake of defense. The 40-hour week and the right to strike are suspended. All labor is subject to governmental orders. There is, in other words, strict regimentation. This is a war measure only, however, and Mr. Bevin It would seem that Mr. B., who reiterates that after the peace, England must take a new policy toward the working population and not permit another such slump as paralyzed whole areas after World War I. Even as he formulates defense measures, he says, he plans for post-war developments, too. These developments, he says, must include "the wiping out of the slums, the preservation of the countryside, the establishment of a correct equilibrium between town and country, the development of great public services, the breaking down of the barriers between nations, the freer movement of the people over the face of the earth, opportunity for travel and a broadened basis for our whole national life.

This is an inspiring program, certainly, and it is not less to Mr. Bevin's credit that, to those old enough to remember 1917, it has a somewhat familiar sound.

The Man on My Back

This is the ingenious Mr. Linklater's autobiography. To those who He has a little home-town sweethave found his novels, though bright, a bit on the puzzling side, the heart who comes all the way from reviewer is happy to offer the news that his life story is both comprehensible and entertaining.

For his third novel Mr. Gray has chosen to write about the rhinestone qualities of the stage and its entourage. His playwright is forced to breathe the air of satiric intellectualism and take gin with rawiness this story would become something digestible. But as it is, the book fails to make interesting enough reading.

Michael Fontaine is the playwright and litterateur whose life becomes the "Vagabond Path." Michael, son of a rugged, frontierbreaking judge and his too finely cultured wife, is the outstanding literary figure of his day. But success has come too easily. Throughout his life he is always looking back, trying to pick up the pieces that would make his life mean something to himself. However, he is continually trapped by his own

With this book Mr. Cloete brings his chronicle of the Boers in general and the Vander Bug clan in particular up to the time of the first Boer War in the year 1900, and in so doing reaches a new peak in writing skill. Whether or not Gene Tunney got a long count in his second fight with Jack Dempsey at Chicago will remain one of boxing's classic arguments, but there can be no doubt that the first man in the prize ring's modern tists, by Henry Thomas and Dana history to retire undefeated with the heavyweight title needs no such count Lee Thomas (Garden City)—Twenty to beat his old rival as an author.

Tunney's book, a live, fascinating document, evidently from his own pen, is in striking contrast to the dry chronicle of Dempsey's career recently rehashed from newspaper clippings. The reader not only inhales Under the Sea-Wind, by Rachel the aroma of the ring, but has a chance to sink his fangs into the real Carson (Simon & Schuster)-A meat of the game. Tunney personally escorts him behind the scenes of many of his fights, through training camps and through the back door of many episodes of his private life.

It is interesting to note that Brian Bell, now chief of the Associated Press Bureau here, broke the story on Tunney's ravenous appetite for good literature. It is interesting to read how Gene discovered his liking for classical music through the broken Caruso records of Erminio Spalia work of the pathologist has become Milham (Macmillan)-A history of and finally, of the repercussions of his now famous Shakespearean lecture the instruments by which men have at Yale under the protective wing of William Lyon Phelps.

Tunney betrays his amateur status as an author by his use of erudite words that pop up in the manner of hand warts throughout the manuscript, but that does not detract from its merits. The retired champion calls his story an accounting of a debt incurred in the military service of his country and it goes far toward repaying that debt in full.

A Treasury of Gilbert and Sullivan

Edited by Deems Taylor. Simon & Schuster, New York.

A collection from the rich store of Gilbert and Sullivan operetta music would be a happy thought under almost any circumstances. As Mr. Taylor and his publishers have conceived this "treasury," the thought is downright inspired; it is both an artistic achievement and an especial convenience for G. and S. addicts.

Eleven of the favorite operettas-"Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance," "Mikado," "Yeomen of the Guard," "Trial By Jury," "Iolanthe," "Gondo-liers," "The Sorcerer," "Ruddigore," "Patience" and "Princess Ida"-are represented by 102 of the favorite songs. But between the attractive covers of the volume exists more than words and music. There are Mr. a place as a great or important work of self-revelation, but it is a cheer- in American policy from moral condemnation of Hitlerism to use of our iness this story would become eartheach of the 11 sections; and Mr. Taylor is in excellent form. The clever illustrations of Lucille Corcos-one full-page color for each operetta, with pen sketches dotting the pages at intervals-also assist greatly in setting the time-honored mood of the works. Dr. Albert Sirmay supplies the piano arrangements, effective, up-to-date and suitable for amateur effort. From beginning to end, the book is a labor of love that serves Gilbert and Sullivan as the whetstone does the well-used blade. J. W. STEPP.

Amish Folk Girl Tells of Garb And Travel Modes Of Sect Members PRIZE CONTRIBUTION.

While I was riding through the rural district of Lancaster County Pa., I saw the gate of a farm fence painted in a bright blue. I remarked to a friend, a native of the county, about this oddity, and she told me of the strange customs of the Amish folk who live in that section of the State. A gate painted blue means that a girl of marrying age lives within that nouse.

The dress and

Joyce Francis. transportation of the Amish people are of interest. Married men can be distinguished by their beards, and they wear broad-brimmed, black hats. The women wear bright dresses and aprons. The boys are like their fathers in wearing white, collarless shirts and black trousers. In the summer they wear straw hats, shaped like those of the older men. These folk use no buttons and fasten all their clothes with hooks and eyes. They use no cosmetics and wear little or no jewelry.

The Amish still depend on the horse and carriage for transportation. The family wagon has an oddlooking boxlike body.

On Sunday religious services are ers. Riding through the country on Sunday morning, one may see a group of carriages at a farm, which indicates that church is being held there. After church they all eat together.

These people preserve and store much of the food they raise for use during the winter. Their farms are always well cared for, and their usually are abundant.

Vacation Is Spent Collecting Stamps

By Audrey Cathro, 10,

Raymond School.

Well, it seems good to be back in school! During the summer I had a very enjoyable vacation, although I didn't go away.

I spent my summer collecting stamps, and the most interesting way I obtained them was by going to the foreign Embassies around my home. It is quite thrilling to go into an Embassy you have never seen before. When you go in you have a feeling that you are in the country the Embassy represents. The diplomats were very nice to me and gave me any stamps they had available. I have collected stamps since last New Year Day and find it a very interesting hobby.

In '24 the Chicago Civic Opera Co. auditioned, hired her. In three weeks she learned 23 roles — she hadn't known one when she signed her contract.

THE METROPOLITAN Opera grabbed her in 1929. They're still holding tight. Hollywood repeated the grab. They've been very happy about it.

Listed as one of the 10 best-dressed women in the world, she starts a coastto-coast concert tour with only three small suitcases. She has a 12-foot-long gold sash which on occasion becomes a turban, necklet, girdle or piece of braid.

PROUDEST possession is her husband, Frank Chapman, a good baritone. Next is the bird-egg-size topaz he gave her. She is the only woman to sing to the entire assembled Congress of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps, Supreme Court and the President. Occasion: 150th-anniversary celebration of Congress's founding. As a daily dozen for her lungs, she blows soap bubbles. Silly. But listen to the results.

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

DON'T SAY IT! by Stanley Walker

HE WAS well-fed, expansive, cocksure and full of gab. He sat in a restaurant and talked. At least a dozen persons at near-by tables could hear him.

"Just back for the week end," he said. "Good to be back in the old joint. I'm working for the government now, you know."

Well, we didn't know, but we did know that he had been a highly paid manufacturing expert, and that he had talents which could easily be useful to Uncle Sam. He babbled on then, telling just what sort of precision machines he was working on, how many men were employed in the plant, and so on. He even named the hour when, he said, he had seen twenty-six submarines moving out to sea. Finally one of the women at his table, apparently more sensible than the others, said to him:

"Wait a minute. You shouldn't talk that way. How do you know who's listening?"

With infinite complacency the Big Shot pooh-poohed the idea that he might be telling more than he should. But he quieted down.

How much of this kind of careless talk is going on? More, one suspects, than is generally known. And it is bad. Now, more than ever before, it behooves the judicious to keep a sharp curb bit on their tongues. Not that there are spies under every table, but just to be on the safe side. No one who is working on any aspect of national defense can afford to risk idle remarks — though made in all innocence to his old acquaintances. There's always a chance that such chatter may cause incalculable damage.

And there is another side to the picture: Look out for the false rumors, the semiplausible tales with dynamite in them, the sly innuendoes which can do enormous harm to innocent persons. A good rule to follow in such cases is to ask the tale-bearer:

"How do you know?"

And insist on a definite answer.

There was once a woman in our suburban town who was known, behind her back, as "Bad News Annie." I daresay her counterpart exists in ten thousand towns. She is the one who raises suspicions by asking a neighbor what her husband was doing one afternoon when he, supposedly, should have been at work. Or she asks whether it's true that poor Mr. Grackle has really got a dreadful ailment and must go West, or why Mrs. Doolittle looks so worried - et cetera and ad nauseum. Our particular "Bad News Annie" almost wrecked the marriage of a splendid young couple by bringing up, at the wrong time, the name of a girl the husband had once gone to college with.

Likewise, business offices are great spots for irresponsible gabble. Almost every office has a man, or a woman, who makes it a point to know all about the private affairs of everybody else in the office. Usually such people mask this pernicious habit with an overly friendly manner. Recently I heard one of these pests fixed up properly. He had asked one of his fellow workers: "What is your handsome daughter doing these days?" And the man replied: "I really don't know. I never pry into her affairs."

Come to think of it, this business of keeping the mouth closed at the right time is one of the most admirable of human traits, and unfortunately rarer than it should be.

A short time before his death, Ring W. Lardner, the humorist, who was really a very serious-minded man, wrote a letter to a friend saying a good word for a young man who wanted employment.

"You may be puzzled at first by his reticence," wrote Lardner, "but I have never found reticence a handicap." Lardner himself had been known to go for days without uttering more than a half-dozen sentences. The young man he recommended turned out to be successful — and what is more, popular largely because he knew the value of silence.

At THE beginning of the Civil War Charles Anderson Dana, who was to become one of the most famous of American editors, was out of a job. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War, offered him the post of Assistant Secretary. On his way to Washington Dana encountered a friend and told him of the appointment. The next day the news appeared in a paper, and when Dana reached Stanton's office he found that he was still out of a job.

"You talked," said Stanton. Although Dana got the job later, and distinguished himself as Stanton's and Lincoln's "eyes" at the war front, the memory of the talking incident never left him. He'd learned to keep silent.

An injudicious remark, usually based on erroneous or incomplete information, often does great harm. An important executive in New York recently said:

"Twenty years ago I knew young Goodwin. He was in line for an excellent opportunity. I was asked about him. I blurted out that I had heard he was unreliable — pure hearsay. He was turned down. He soon got another good spot, and I came to know him well. He turned out to be a splendid man in every respect. I have thrown much business his way because I want to atone for my rash remarks. I might have been his ruin."

Who among the millions who remember Calvin Coolidge pleasantly wouldn't say that the quality in him they admired most was his ability to keep his own counsel?

In the last few years there has been a flood of literature, some of it doubtless useful, telling people how to do things — how to be charming, how to talk well, how to influence their fellows, and so forth. Why not something on the other side: "The Wisdom of Keeping Your Trap Shut," "Pipe Down," or "If You Don't Know, Keep Quiet"? For, after all, it's the talkative ones of this earth, not the laconic ones, who cause most of our

Part of his training includes 30minute solo flights. Each student is supposed to go up, keep his own time and return to the field when his halfhour is up. But twice in a row our cadet upset routine by staying long past his allotted time.

Just the other day, though, he solved his own problem. Now when he climbs into his training plane, he wears an alarm clock around his neck. When it rings he knows it's time to check in.

FISH STORY. The U.S. Navy has customarily — and without much trouble — named its submarines after fish. But the addition of 40-odd new ships has forced the service to dig deeply into ichthyology (translation: fish-ology) for title possibilities.

Outside of the old familiar names like Rock and Flounder, the new subs will carry such exotic monikers as: Snook, Pargo, Scamp, Pogy, Tunny, Paddle.

NUMBER, PLEASE. Angus Hibbard tells in his book, "Hello, Goodbye," an unusual sales story of the days when he was general superintendent of the phone company. It was back in the '80's when long-distance service between Boston and New York began. One of Mr. Hibbard's first big orders was for the installation of a private wire between the Boston and New York offices of a large firm.

But Mr. Weld, head of the company in Boston, objected to the newfangled idea. Said it couldn't work and ordered the lease for the wire to be canceled.

"Going to the New York office," Mr. Hibbard says, "I called the Boston office and asked if I might talk to Mr. Weld. He came to the telephone... and began saying: 'I don't hear. I can't hear a word. This is a failure. Take it out!"

a few minor luxuries - like cars.

She's a hard worker. Her winter schedule looks like this: 30 concerts, regular weekly appearances on radio's Sunday Family Hour, appearances at the Met, Chicago and San Francisco opera companies.

But she still looks swell, doesn't she? — JERRY MASON trouble.

Of course, there is the inevitable risk that somebody will say of the silent fellow: "I don't know whether he has any sense or not; he never says anything." Well, what is wrong with that? There are worse things than keeping them guessing — and one of those worse things is unduly bending their ears.

"To this I answered : 'You're a liar!'"

"The reply immediately roared back at me: 'What do you say? How dare you call me a liar?!!'"

Mr. Hibbard apologized. Mr. Weld laughed — and continued the lease for the service. M.

THE MAN JAPAN

He's General Douglas MacArthur, Grade-A soldier and head of America's Far East Command. From the Philippines he watches warily for Axis moves — and builds a strong defense to block them

by HENRY C. WOLFE

Famous international correspondent, just back from the Far East, where he interviewed General MacArthur for THIS WEEK Magazine

When General Douglas MacArthur commanded the Rainbow Division on the Western Front, he was warned that a certain projected military operation might entail 3,000 casualties. "Very well," replied the General, "if we lose three thousand men, we lose three thousand and one!" He emphasized the one.

That answer sums up the military philosophy of the soldier who has been named head of the Far East Command. A daring but practical strategist, he insists on sharing action with his men. At du Feys he attacked a German machine-gun nest with a bayonet.

As commander of the famous Rainbow, he had a way of locating his headquarters between assault battalions, though that was hardly the safest and most comfortable place for his officers to get to. "It shortens my lines of communications," he explained.

Like his father, Arthur MacArthur, "Boy Colonel of the West," the General has shattered one Army precedent after another in the interests of improved military service. Recognition of the superiority of the Garand rifle, defense orientation of the CCC program, institution of the four-army system these are but a few of the dashing MacArthur's contributions to the modernization of Uncle Sam's military establishment. A list of the changes that he has sponsored would make one of the most impressive pages in the annals of the United States Army.

Tall, dark-haired, handsome Douglas MacArthur is the storybook hero to end storybook heroes. No fiction writer would dare invent so fabulous a character. But in the hard-boiled realities of a hard-boiled, warring world, the "Kid General" keeps right on adding to his record of achievement.

Most recent of his honors is the Philippine appointment, which gives him the full title of Commander-in-Chief of the United States Army of the Far East. It was not just another routine military appointment. There was drama — drama on a worldwide stage — in the naming of General MacArthur to this post in the far-off, tropical islands of the Philippine archipelago. In July, 1941, Herr Hitler's Axis partner, Japan, moved into Indo-China and threatened to strike at Thailand, Singapore and the Netherlands East Indies. A general war in the Pacific appeared imminent. But the United States matched Nippon's moves with several blitz moves of her own. We clapped an oil embargo on Japan and froze her credits in America. We incorporated the armed forces of the Philippines into the Army of the United States. And we made Lieutenant General Douglas MacArthur commander of the combined Filipino-American defense establishment.

Just as soon as the appointment was made, things began to hum. General MacArthur immediately asked President Quezon to call to active duty 10 regiments of the Philippine Army. Then he summoned virtually all the reserve officers to take command of the growing number of men under arms. He set in motion plans to muster into service other reserve military units just as fast as conditions would permit. He conducted blackouts and air-raid drills and began the construction of shelters for the civilian population.

To the War Department he emphasized the necessity of rushing additional troops and equipment to him. As a result, Army transports from the United States soon were unloading more soldiers, trucks, guns, munitions, airplanes and food. He named seven American officers to supervise the training, transportation, housing and equipment of the expanding forces. Everything worked smoothly, quickly and efficiently. The Commanderin-Chief had long ago laid plans for the defense emergency.

Far Eastern Representative

ALWAYS a great executive, MacArthur increased his own time on the job to 12 hours a day. He passed the word right down the line from his Chief of Staff to his sergeants and corporals that the Filipino-American force must become a crack military organization, the equal of any fighting force in the world.

But the Commander-in-Chief's most important work lies in a far broader field. He is the American representative who works with the military leaders of the other democracies — Britain, the Netherlands and China out in the Far East. It is his responsibility to act for the United States in the councils of the democratic front. In ability and experience he is the man of men for this work. General Marshall in Washington and General MacArthur in Manila make a combination that is no less than providential for us at this critical point in the world's history.

The significance of MacArthur's appointment was not lost on Tokyo and Berlin. Together the new army and the new commander constituted a warning that the United States means to hold the Philippines. More than that, it signified that we intend to play a major role in the Far East, that Pacific affairs are our affairs. In short, the veteran who once carried the ball against the Reich's 1917 line is on the job today to call the plays against the Reich's Far Eastern line.

A Philippine Veteran

T_{HE} athletic, six-foot Commander-in-Chief is no stranger to America's far-Pacific outpost. As a 23-year-old lieutenant of Engineers he was sent there in 1903 and found himself welcome in the palm-shaded Spanish setting because of his father's fine pioneer work when he was military governor of the islands. From 1922 to 1925 he commanded the post of Manila, the 23rd Infantry Brigade and the Philippine Division. In 1928 he was made Commanding General of the Philippine Department of the United States Army.

In 1930 he was made Chief of Staff of the United States Army, but he had not seen the last of the islands by any means. After his pyrotechnic five-year period as head of our whole land force, he received an invitation from President Quezon of the newly formed Commonwealth of the Philippines: would the General act as military adviser to the Commonwealth? It was characteristic that it took a conference of less than five minutes for him to reach his decision. Yes, he would take over the job. The new adviser - soon to be made a field marshal - would supplement the corps of native Philippine Scouts with a ten-year potential of 400,000 reserves trained at the rate of 40,000 soldiers a year. Despite the meagerness of the military appropriations allotted him, he embarked on a program that included modern defense works, an efficient little air force and a fleet of speedy coast-defense boats. At Baguio he established the Philippine Military Academy that turns out a body of cadets smart enough to please even as tough a drillmaster as himself — and he is a former superintendent of West Point.

But civil life beckoned to the 57-year-old general, promising him time for many cultural pursuits that soldiering had denied him. For one thing he wanted to write. Gifted with a flair for memorable phrasing, he had long looked forward to getting his words on paper. Moreover, in April, 1937, he had married, and was anxious to settle down to the enjoyment of a regular family life. At the close of 1937, therefore, in his thirtyfourth year of service, he retired from active duty. record in war and peace is a brilliant chapter in American history."

The record glitters with "firsts," "onlys" and superlatives. He was born at Little Rock Barracks, Arkansas, January 26, 1880, the son of Lieutenant General Arthur MacArthur, Civil War hero and later an outstanding officer of the Spanish-American and Philippine wars. Graduating from West Point in 1903, young Douglas was first in a class of 93, having hung up the Academy's best scholastic record for 25 years.

He was the youngest of American division commanders when he went to France with the famous Rainbow Division. And his promotions were as rapid as his exploits were spectacular. He had a hot head in valorous deeds and a cool one in strategy. After six days of hard fighting near the Forêt de Nesle, for instance, he noticed that the Germans were evacuating their positions. Tired though his men were, he unexpectedly reformed his columns, personally instructed each regiment in the details of his plan and struck in a surprise attack on the Germans' exposed flanks. Not only did he capture the sector but provided the relief division with a more advantageous position for a heavier attack.

Modernized West Point

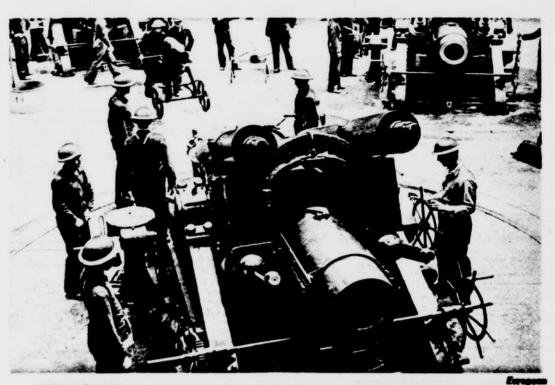

WHERE VER the thick of battle was, there was MacArthur. Or was it the other way around? Secretary of War Newton D. Baker called him the greatest fighting front-line general of the war. He led the 84th Infantry Brigade in the first entirely American offensive, St. Mihiel. His outfit broke the strong German Kremhilde Line and his men were deep in the Meuse-Argonne drive. Within sight of Sedan when the Armistice was declared, he took his division to the Rhineland as part of the army of occupation. In one battle he was burned with gas but refused hospitalization. In another he was wounded. He talked with his men, ate with them, kept their morale high. It is surprising that the romance of the Rainbow commander has not been made a cinema play.

Back in the United States after the war he became superintendent at West Point, the youngest on record. At that, he looked younger than his 39 years. In modernizing the United States Military Academy he aimed to change its spirit from "conservative narrowness to liberal progressiveness," a change of far-reaching importance to today's defense program.

Another "youngest" in the General's career was his designation as Chief of Staff of the United States Army. He was 51 years old at the time of his appointment in 1930, and he is the only Chief of Staff to serve longer than four years. And what a ghost army he inherited! The depression and the cult of pacifism in the United States had (Continued on page 7)

DOES YOUR WIFE SPOIL YOUR JOKES?

This is a warning to wives who do - and a hint to their husbands

by Elsie McCormick

VERYBODY but a congenital sourpuss is likely to agree that in the present state of the world we have urgent need for laughter. It is therefore time to take drastic action concerning wives who habitually ruin their husbands' funny stories. Interruptions, corrections, foot-kickings, head-shakings and sudden changes of subject all operate to spoil jokes and check any mirth except half-hearted titters of politeness or embarrassment.

Watch the behavior of a couple when the husband, whom we shall call Mr. Jones, announces that something reminds him of a story. Unless the performer is an unfailing bore, you will note that the faces of the crowd take on a real or at least simulated glow of anticipation.

Now, for contrast, turn around and make a quick survey of Mrs. Jones. You will observe that she is wearing the expression of somebody watching a loved one cross Niagara Falls on a tightrope.

All unsuspecting, Mr. J. begins: "The other night I was in the observation car on my way home from Pittsburgh and - "

The furrows in his wife's brow deepen, and she begins to breathe heavily. "Not that one, dear," she savs.

"It's a perfectly good and perfectly proper story !" exclaims her husband, brought up short on his haunches. "What's the matter with it?"

"I just don't like it," says Mrs. J. The glow of pleasurable anticipation becomes clouded, and the smiles of the group take on a fixed quality, as if they had been made with the help of rubber bands.

Knocked Flat

WHETHER or not Mr. J. tells the story depends upon his previous conditioning. If he bears the armor of a battleship, he will go ahead doggedly. accompanying the tale with a facial expression which suggests that he is defying the Gestapo rather than merely contributing to the pleasure of the evening. Somehow the story, which might have been funny under other circumstances, falls flatter than a prospector's pancake.

If he is psychically akin to the dormouse he will withdraw his first remarks and begin on quite a different anecdote.

This time he gets away with two and a half sentences.

"But, dear," says Mrs. J., "it wasn't that way at all. We weren't going to Chicago; we were going away from Chicago. And it wasn't a Scotchman we were talking to; it was an Irishman. You remember, as we were leaving Chicago on the train, this Irishman began talking - " and Mrs. J. finishes the anecdote, deftly leaving out the point, and making her husband wonder if Bluebeard's real trouble hadn't been a number of wives who tried to finish his stories for him.

Another way of turning a gentleman's thoughts toward uxoricide is the change-the-subject or by-pass system.

TANGERINES!

Mr. J. begins: "That reminds me of a story. Remember that hot day we had last week? Well, I was walking down Lone Lots Avenue and I happened to run into ---

"Wasn't it hot that day!" exclaims his wife. "I thought I'd collapse. By the way, did Grace get her new refrigerator?"

And in hardly more than ten seconds the tide of conversation sweeps away, leaving Mr. Jones all alone amid the driftwood.

Double Standard

ONE strange thing about family humor is the fact that, while a wife may be fairly tolerant about other people's stories, she expects her husband's to be the type that John Alden could have told Priscilla and the Plymouth elders. When Mr. Jones begins an even mildly gay anecdote, Mrs. J. shrieks, claps her hands to her ears. and stops him in his wicked course. A little later he is surprised to note his wife laughing heartily at somebody else's bright story - a story that might not have got by at all in Priscilla Alden's chimney corner.

In the matter of story-telling, Mr. Jones finds that being host instead of guest does not improve his position. Sitting at his own dinner table, he launches into a funny and exciting tale, and, as he leads up to the climax, he sweeps a triumphant glance around the board.

"So what do you suppose the tiger did then?" inquires Mr. Jones, pausing dramatically for effect.

Mr. Jones gets out the tag line at last, choking only a little, but the effect is somewhat marred by the homicidal glint in his eye.

The question that arises is: What, if anything, can be done about it? Some husbands seem to have found a measure of relief through retaliation in another field. Every time their wives say a word about politics or international affairs, they pounce on the statement and pull it apart.

If, for instance, the lady remarks that isolationist sentiment is decreasing, her husband bows ceremoniously and exclaims, "Well, well, if it isn't Mrs. Gallup herself!"

This method does not improve a lady's temper, but it makes the score less one-sided and helps the husband bear up bravely amid the ruins of his next good anecdote.

QUEER DUCKS, AREN'T WE?

SIBELIUS, the famed Finnish composer, scarcely ever listens to any music but his own. He has three radios in the house and he spends a great deal of his time twisting the dials, trying to tune in on a program of Sibelius music. When he finds one, he turns the instrument on full blast, and is as tickled as a child with a new, and very loud, horn.

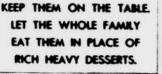

WHILE a quartet was playing one of his compositions Brahms rose from his chair and stomped out of the house, exclaiming: "That's too boring for my taste!"

WHEN Pearl Buck won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1938, she said: "It's ridiculous - and I suppose a great many others will feel the same way." . .

WHENEVER Corot found it necessary to sell one of his paintings, he cried bitterly at the parting. He was happiest when he could give a definite "No!" to a would-be customer. "You see," he would explain on such occasions, "I am a collector but, being poor, I have to paint all my pictures myself --- they are not for sale."

WHEN his "Bolero" became a hit,

Ravel was furious. He described his composition as "17 minutes of orchestra without music" and did not approve of its phenomenal popularity. And he added, "No one knows how to play the damned thing anyway!" - KATHLEEN MASTERSON resulted in wide-scale reductions in our defense forces. Obsolescence was the order of the day, and-most dis couraging of all for the progressive Chief of Staff - indifference. How to modernize and build up from such a peacetime low?

THE MAN JAPAN FEARS

It is hard to imagine it, but the tall, aristocratic general almost licked the boots of various gentlemen to get a hearing for his Army reforms and the money for his program of military expansion. He was desperate. He visited Europe, inspecting the growing military machines on the warbrooding continent and contrasting them with his own outmoded Army. He begged for 46,250 privates. Congress and the brass hats called him a radical. Supposing the persuasive military man did get his fantastic number of privates, where would he house them? But the long-range planning of the Chief of Staff had anticipated that objection. PWA funds had been earmarked for repairs and new buildings. And he continued to warn, wheedle and push the plan for the mechanization and aviation expansion of his revitalized Army. Douglas MacArthur was not only the spark plug of our national-defense program but the father of the country's defense-mindedness.

Back To Work

It is an ironic sort of tribute that the war which the military expert saw coming in Europe should have put an abrupt end to his retirement from Army service. But the hero of St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne belonged where the danger seemed greatest. In July, 1941, that was not far from Manila Bay. In Manila the General has his headquarters in the ancient Walled City district. Built on top of the costly old walls erected by Philip II, they once were the headquarters of the Philippine Constabulary, which, in 1901, was the sole armed force the Filipino people had. General MacArthur calls his offices "the cradle of Philippine defense," and says that he feels "like an old dog glad to be back in the harness again.' He and his wife and small son live in a suite at the Manila Hotel on the palm-fringed shore of historic Manila Bay

During the years which preceded he present war there was much public and private discussion about the advisability of our attempting to defend the Philippines. A considerable body of professional and public opinion accepted the theory that the islands were a military and naval liability to us. Those who held this view urged that the United States retire from the archipelago and let it fall into the lap of the first aggressor who came along. General MacArthur sharply challenged this defeatist attitude. He maintained that the Philippines could be defended - must be defended. He pointed out that when the islands reached a certain stage of military evolution no aggressor would dare to make the attempt to invade from irritating contacts with others, and whose sole ambition is to develop the resources of the country to the betterment of its own educational, cultural and economic levels."

From President Quezon down, the Filipinos idolize their Field Marshal. His democratic ways, his culture, his ability as a speaker and his memory for names and faces appeal to them. It was said of him in 1929 that he knew the name of every noncommissioned officer in the Philippine Scouts. They are proud to be led by a hero who has received numerous decorations for bravery and distinguished service both from the United States and foreign countries.

Above all, they like him because he is a MacArthur. The history of the Philippines in the twentieth century is inseparable from the history of the MacArthurs. It was the kindly, farsighted, brilliant Arthur MacArthur who, as military governor of the islands, started the Filipinos on the path to self-government. When he turned the Philippines over to the civil authorities he left them with the foundation for their present laws, schools and defenses.

In the interests of defense, his son must carry on: he must perfect the military organization of the Philippines. There is more at stake now than the defense of the islands. The tropical archipelago in the western Pacific is the Far Eastern keystone of our security and of all that our security symbolizes. In fusing the Filipino-American Army into a powerful fighting unit MacArthur is deeply conscious of the fact that he is manning the ramparts of democracy.

But he puts the matter much more simply when you ask him about his work. Leaning earnestly across his desk, he says in a quiet voice:

"The United States has directed me to defend these islands. I propose to do so."

SHORTLY after General MacArthur's appointment to his new office, a delegation of Filipino veterans of the Spanish War called on him. They had served under his father, General Arthur MacArthur. Might they have permission to form a regiment that would be taken into the American Army? They wanted to serve under their old leader's son. These men were followed by a delegation of Filipino labor leaders who pledged the support of their unions. They wished "to reiterate the unswerving loyalty of Filipino labor to the Government of the United States because of its efforts to help the Philippines in defending itself against aggression."

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

EORGE WESTLAKE had good looks, an engaging personality, a Harvard accent, and a minor reputation as the author of historical novels. It was almost inevitable, therefore, that George should lecture, and since he was a very good lecturer and not a very good novelist, he soon began to make lecturing pay better than novelwriting. Scarcely any well-known auditorium from coast to coast did he fail to fill, or at least half fill, during the season.

He liked his work, especially since air travel had doubled his ability to dash about from one place to another. At the time this story opens he was two miles high, somewhere between Kansas and California, and was making notes, while he flew, for an additional lecture in a series called "Heroes and Heroism in Fact and Fiction."

He intended to argue that the current popularity of historical novels was largely due to man's innate craving for the heroic - a craving which, unfortunately, he could but rarely satisfy amidst the events and circumstances of an average life. And that, of course, was due to modern conditions, twentieth-century civilization, and so on.

"It is not enough," he rapidly penciled, "to promise a world fit for heroes to live in; what one would really choose is a world fit for men to be heroic in."

George was re-reading this and thinking it rather good, when the plane gave a small jerk and the rhythm of its engines changed. He stared out of the window, and realized that they were rather rapidly descending upon hilly country. The sign came on over the pilot's doorway, "Please Fasten Your Belt," and simultaneously the stewardess from a corrugated iron shed; not till the ladder was in position did the stewardess open the door to admit a first breath of Diamond City air. As soon as she did it, they knew how wise she was for not having done it before.

George accompanied the group across the scorched earth to the small shelter of the shed. On the face of the huge man, the perspiration of air-conditioned fear commingled now with that of utmost relief in a temperature of at least a hundred degrees. The middle-aged man perspired less obtrusively, holding on to his brief case while he administered fussy little handkerchief dabs. After a few moments the stewardess and pilot came to announce cheerfully that it was just one of those things, a couple of hours' repair job maybe.

"But a couple of hours of this!" exclaimed George. "Whew!"

THAT proved to be the general feeling, except that the middle-aged man seemed additionally irritated over the delay. He inquired if there were any chance of being driven anywhere to catch another plane. The pilot said no - the nearest big-sized airport was over a hundred miles off. The stewardess then said: "I'll ask if there's some place nearby where you could go and wait.'

She and the pilot walked back to the plane, where the mechanic and two local men were inspecting the engine. For a few moments the murmur of voices rose and fell across the burning air; then the girl returned.

"One of the men says you can borrow his car to drive to a place along the road. He says it's the only place." She offered the car keys to George, who asked how far it was.

"About three miles. You can't miss it. It's called 'Shangri-La.' "

"What?"

"Or however you say it. You'll find the car back there." "Can't you come with us?"

"Not allowed to. Sorry."

The car was old and dilapidated, but they all piled in. George drove. The road was dirt for a mile, then turned steeply into a secondary road that had once been surfaced but was now worn almost back to the dirt. The sun beat down nearly vertically. In the distance the Sierras, gray and flecked with white, rose to meet the milk-blue sky; in between, folds and troughs of furnace-heat trembled like water under a rippling breeze. Only there was no water and no breeze.

The road curved and twisted amidst the foothills, climbing in hairpin bends. Suddenly a litter of advertising signs came into view. Behind them was some kind of building. The biggest of the signs said "Shangri-La," while a small sign proclaimed, "Good Eats." They had passed no vehicle on the way, and George could think of no particular reason why anyone should build a restaurant in such a spot. However, there it was an imitation railroad car, decorated with a rather half-hearted smattering of silver-gray paint.

began to pass from seat to seat with reassuring smiles and remarks. When she came to George's own seat he smiled and said casually: "Anything wrong?"

"Nothing much - one of the engine's overheating a bit. We're coming down at Diamond City.'

"Never heard of the place."

"You haven't missed much. We're just over it now."

When the stewardess opened the door, they knew why she hadn't done it before

"Don't see much of a city."

"There isn't any."

"Can't even see anything that looks like a diamond."

She laughed and moved to one of the other seats.

TEN minutes later the plane made a perfect landing - ten minutes during which George Westlake looked around him and for the first time noticed his fellow travelers as individuals. There seemed to be only four - all men: one was an airline mechanic, traveling as a passenger; another was a massive-shouldered giant who looked thoroughly scared, while his companion, a sharp-faced, wiry little fellow, was laughing perhaps too heartily at the other's efforts to adjust the belt round his enormous girth. The fourth passenger was locking up a brief case. He looked an ordinary sort of middle-aged type, sprucely dressed, city-pale, and a shade preoccupied.

With one engine out of commission, the plane couldn't taxi to the airport buildings; but this hardly mattered, since there didn't appear to be any airport buildings.

The wind sock hung lifeless, and the place itself looked lifeless. The passengers waited tensely for something to happen. Presently a couple of men carrying a ladder emerged

George drove the car into the dusty parking space. An old dog lay in a spot of shade and did not move. They pushed open the screen door to enter the long, blind-darkened room. It smelled of stale cigar smoke and greasy food and - incongruously - of a few flowers stuck into vases on a couple of tables in booths.

A voice greeted them; they could see no one till their eyes grew used to the change of light, but with one accord they asked the voice for cold drinks. Then they saw a thin old man with a brown wrinkled face, smoking a cigar behind the counter.

He puffed contemplatively and remarked: "Yeah, it's a pretty hot spot this time of year. Always hot this side the mountains. Personally, though, if I was you, I'd have coffee. Not that we don't have most of what you asked for, but the ice didn't come this morning, and if you're like me you'd rather have a hot hot drink than a warm cold drink or wouldn't you?"

The slow, good-tempered drawl seemed to cast a spell. George broke it by admitting that he would prefer the coffee. When the others said nothing the old man shouted back into some inner compartment: "Four coffees."

cheese, maybe?" The fourth man, thus approached, replied quietly that he wasn't hungry.

"Have to warn you the next place is a matter of sixty miles on."

"Doesn't matter," retorted the man, a shade snappily. "We're not going on.'

The old boy looked so puzzled at this that George felt it would be sheer cruelty not to mention the plane descent. So he began the story, telling it well and humorously. "Nothing to make a song about," he concluded, staring through the windows over the hot gravel of the parking space towards the road that lost itself amidst the hills. "What's a mere hitch like this compared with what happened to those who came this way a century ago in their slow covered wagons, with no road to guide them, nothing but faith to reach the Sierras before the winter snowfall - Indians lurking in the hills ready to pick off the stragglers - food stocks lessening and water hard to find - women and children jolting over the rough land under the scorching sun, day after day, week after week, month after month -- " This was more or less a quotation from his already half-composed lecture.

While he was in the middle of it a girl emerged from the inner room with the coffee; she stood in the doorway, listening till the end. She was shabbily dressed, with a faded but clean apron, no stockings and down-at-heel shoes; her sunburnt face was a little thinned by weariness, but still held a look of serenity that seemed to bring a breath of coolness into the stifling interior. She began to pour the coffee into the cups.

"Hello, Merle," said the sharpfaced man with bold admiration.

"Hello." She gave a far-away smile. "Did Dad tell everybody the milk's sour?"

"He did not," replied the giant with a guffaw. "But I ain't surprised, and I still sez, what sort of a dump is this? And the name too - I don't get it."

The old man answered: "Well, that's what they ask about Merle, and honest, I can't say, only it was Fred's idea. Harry's Diner, it was, when we first come here -- Harry bein' the chap we bought it from. But Fred said Shangri-La sounded more modern. It was some place in the mountains he once saw in a picture. So he painted them boards kind of silvery, and he was goin' to put on a fancy front, only he went away before he got around to it." He picked up his coffee cup and with an air of forlorn gallantry added: "Well, here's to your good health, even if you are only here on what you might call a flying visit."

"Two hours," said the sharp-faced man, "if you don't mind us stickin' around."

"Not at all. Fred had another idea once - thought of puttin' a sign up across the road outside: 'Welcome to Diamond City.' Didn't have the time for that, either. You sure are welcome, anyway. Parker's my name - John Gould Parker."

THE sharp-faced man took the proffered hand across the counter. 'Glad to know you, Mr. Parker. I'm Bill White, and this - " he circled his arm around the shoulder of his huge companion, hesitated, then said, "Travelin' incognito, he was, wasn't you, Blitzie, but I guess an affair like this makes an exception. This is the famous Blitz Bordoni, en route to Seattle to meet Mick the Mat-King in the title bout Friday night."

The Blitz grinned sheepishly, while on White's face, illumined by heroworship, gradually dawned the realization that none of them had ever heard of Blitz Bordoni. He stared round uncomprehendingly, then accepted the fact with a shrug. "Well, that's that. I didn't catch your name. sir?"

"George Westlake." "And you, sir?"

manager. But I'd say so, even if I wasn't --- this boy's a fighter. Training helps, mind you, plus weight and brute force and all that, but there's something else that makes a champion - call it what you like - courage is a good word, but I call it heroism! You should have seen him last week at Minneapolis -- "

George, who had no interest whatever in wrestling, edged along the counter toward the girl. She still looked as if she were thinking of something far off, but as he caught her eye she smiled - automatically at first, then sincerely as she glanced again.

"Don't get many strangers here, I suppose?" he began, just for an opening.

"Well, we do and we don't. I mean, most that come are strangers, only there's not many that come any more."

"Why d'you say 'any more'?"

"Since they built the new road, I mean." She pointed vaguely through the window. "Five miles over the valley. Easy grades. But sometimes we still get drivers who miss the right turn at West Fork."

"Too bad you didn't set up on the new road, then.'

"Yes; that's why Fred left -wouldn't stay when he found out about it. But as Dad said, maybe that was why we got this place at such a bargain. Least, we thought it was a bargain."

George said quietly:

"What you really mean is that Harry swindled you by selling you this place without letting you know about the new road."

"Maybe. Dad's not so smart. But then he never was trained for business. Neither was I, for that matter." "What were you trained for?"

"Schoolteacher - always wanted to be. I like books and study. That's what made me interested when you talked about the pioneers in covered wagons. That's true, you know. You can still see them."

For a second he wondered if the loneliness of the place had touched her mind a little. "You mean the pioneers?"

"No, the wagons - or what's left of them. Along a trail over these hills. Nobody goes there now, but there's bits of wagons scattered about the rocks - spokes and wheel rims. Something must have happened there sometime, maybe a fight with Indians, or they just lost their way. Or maybe they couldn't find the diamonds. Nobody ever could. That's why they called it Diamond City."

Suddenly, while George was talking with the girl and Bill White was still boasting about the fights from which Blitz Bordoni had emerged victorious, the screen door was pushed open and a stranger entered hurriedly, strode to the counter, and started to say something. But there was so much other talk that nobody heard his mumbling till he suddenly shouted: "Come on now - don't waste my time. This is a holdup!" Then they saw he was swinging a gun.

George had the odd thought: Well,

"Well, sir - yes, and no, in a manner of speaking. Merle ain't her real name, but I call her that because -well, to be frank, it generally starts a bit of conversation. We get to be pretty lonely in a place like this, but soon as I call her Merle, that starts most folks same as it started you. Funny thing, I useter call her Greta, but it didn't work so well..." He began to arrange cups, sugar, and paper napkins along the counter. "How about a bite o' somethin'? We got ham - make you up a sandwich?"

George shook his head. "How about you, sir? Piece of TODAY millions of people are un-knowingly causing serious damage to their teeth-by regular brushing with dentifrices containing abrasives. Gradually, as months go by, these abrasives cut cavities into the soft part of teeth along the gum line exposed by shrinking gums, where there is no hard enamel to protect them. In fact, among people who brush their teeth regularly, a very large per-centage of all cavities along the gum line that require filling are probably the result of this injury. This was shown by a clinical study in a leading dental iournal. dental journal.

Disclosed by Scientific Research

These startling facts were recently confirmed by scientific research. Eminent independent scientists made laboratory toothbrushing tests with a number of dentifrices containing abrasives. Every one cut cavities into the soft part of the teeth.

In the same manner, these scientists tested the new liquid dentifrice-Teel. In no case did Teel injure the teeth in any way, because Teel contains absolutely no abrasives of any kind.

How Tool Reveals Beauty of Your Smile

Teel doesn't use abrasives for cleansing. Instead, it contains a newly-discovered, patented cleansing agent that's almost magic-like in the way it helps reveal natural whiteness and beauty of your teeth. It isn't soap, yet multiplies into thousands of tiny bubbles.

These active bubbles amazingly help remove the daily accumulation of decaying food particles and dulling surface film. Thus your teeth look so much whiter, more thrillingly beautiful. They "feel" satin-smooth - your mouth gloriously refreshed.

MAKE THIS TEST to tell if your dentifrice contains an abrasive! en abresive ! Tonight, put some of your favorite den-tifrice in a glass of water and stir. Let it stand over-night. When you see a white sediment in the bot-tom of the glass, you know your dentifrice contains an abrasive. Teel, however, leaves no sediment, prov-ing it contains no abrasives whatever which could injure exposed soft part of your teeth.

Start This Safe Liquid Way Today

Naturally, you want to save your teeth from this injury. If, however, you feel that your teeth need an abrasive scouring, at least occasionally, follow special directions on the Teel package.

Get Teel at any drug, department or 10# store. And see your dentist regularly for his professional advice. Procter & Gamble

Jody's whole life was tuned to one great moment. What would he do with the moment when it came? The answer surprised everyone but Beth in the road like this? Look at me car! A bumper twisted, a lamp smashed to hell!" Nace looked about, troubled. "I reckon you ruint my waggin." "Okay, hillbilly! Here's on account!" And the brawny fist smacked into Nace's face. Nace coughed again, slumped down.

Then Jody was there, his spindly arms flailing, as he waded straight into the blow that sent him in an arc, to land on his shoulders in the dirt. He crawled out of the dust cloud, started again for the spraddle-legged, waiting young ox.

A fat man tumbled from the car. "Nix, Butch! A kid like him!"

"Keep the hell out, Maxie!" Again that heavy fist smashed into Jody.

The man Maxie helped him up, this time. "Get away, kid. He's Butch Runther, the the crotch of the apple tree, and took aim.

Jody saw it, too. Just as the rifle cracked, the boy found strength to make a flying leap, butting his stringy head into Butch's belly, staggering him backward. It was Butch's forearm, thrown upward for balance, that the bullet creased.

No more word from Butch or Maxie. They were in the car, Butch hunkered down, while Maxie sent it swooping on down around the next bend.

LISBETH tumbled down the slope, her face twisted with fury, her eyes blazing, no doubt. Jody caught her arm, while he gasped for breath. Then his speech was a lash.

"You ought to be whupped, Lisbeth, cursin' like a valley woman, puttin' into my fight. Now I got to bunt him down!"

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

This is really Beth's story. She claimed it soon after she came to the Echo almost two years ago.

"Since when," I asked her, "does a shecub break into my sports page? I've been following Butch Runther, the yellow bum, since he made his first win, and now that he's going places, he's mine."

"You can have him," she told me. "My story is about the fool from Squaw Mountain who's going to wipe Butch Runther up."

I agreed. Maybe because she turned her gray eyes on me, and nobody could look into Beth's eyes without knowing she meant to do what she said. Or maybe because of the way I felt about her by then.

Anyhow, the story was hers. Then, last night, after it exploded in our faces, Beth walked out and left the writing of it all up to me.

I_T BEGAN on Squaw Mountain. I got that part from Beth, and it's straight, because Beth reaches into a story and lifts the heart out, warm and pulsing, from the life left in it.

She was Lisbeth, then. Lisbeth Rufer, whose grandpa kept the cider mill. She was fourteen, almost woman-grown, as mountain folks reckon, yet young enough to tag at the heels of Jody Pingree, who was towheaded, stringy-built and fifteen. Jody hadn't minded, but after this thing happened, he let her know she pestered him, and that's when Lisbeth got out.

On this day, Jody and his father had just left the cider mill and Lisbeth was watching them make the last abrupt pitch into the main road, with the wagon riding the gray mare's hips.

Likely the accident was nobody's fault. Not five cars a year came over the Hill Road, and the Pingrees hadn't learned to be watchful. Without warning, the big black contraption slithered around a bend and was upon them.

There was the blaring of a horn, the shriek of brakes, and the splintering crash. There were things flying in an awful way, making a blur in Lisbeth's eyes. When it cleared, the wagon was kindling wood, and Jody and Nace were in the ditch.

The mare, still within the thills, was tearing down the road.

Jody shook back his stringy hair and came to his feet. Nace Pingree coughed hollowly, and took a longer time. A bulky man, young, dark, slid out of the car.

He yelled: "What d'ye mean, boilin' out

prizefighter."

"You leave me be," Jody was crying, but it was the squall of an angry mountain cat, not that of a beaten boy. "Dammit, leave me be!" and he beat himself loose.

Butch Runther grinned harder. "You asked for it, punk. Here it comes!"

It came, and kept coming, battering Jody back and back, till he crumpled into the ditch. Nace Pingree stirred, groaned, and Butch walked over to him. Lifted his foot, swung it — right between the thin shoulders of middle-aged, work-worn Nace.

Lisbeth saw Jody struggling up, but she didn't wait. Likely she didn't let out her first angry gasp till she'd flashed to the pronged tree near the cider mill, where her grandpa kept his squirrel gun, and was back to the apple tree.

Jody was weaving to his feet. Butch stood there, laughing, fist ready.

Lisbeth cried out, whippoorwill-shrill, "We'll git him, Jody! The damned polecat!" Maxie squealed: "Glory, Butch! She's got a gun! Duck - she'll shoot!"

He saw it in Lisbeth's eyes. I know he did. Her eyes would be the same back there, even though she must have been a funny little thing: thin, scant-skirted, with long black pigtails hanging each side of a pinched, tense face, as she balanced the squirrel rifle across tow I got to mane min down.

"Don't talk sich, son," his father got out painfully. "He's man-growed. You're puny. You cain't lick him."

Jody's voice was hoarse. "I'll wait then. I'll grow. But I'm makin' my promise." He flung his clenched hands aloft. "I'll foller that yaller dawg an' give him jest what he give you, if it takes all the rest o' my borned days!"

Nace shook his head, tiredly. "He ain't wu'th hit, son. He jest ain't our kind o' people."

Feeling as I did about Lisbeth, I could only be glad that Jody never forgave her, never forgot to let her know that she pestered him, whenever she came near. So Lisbeth got out. She was smart and had already been chosen among the five who were to get a chance at the Settlement School below. Her graduation reward was a chance on the Echo, where she made good, collected everything about Butch Runther's rise in the fight world ... and waited.

That's where I came in. Jody Pingree was twenty when I found him that morning. He was sitting on the curb outside the Midland Fight Pavilion, a lonesome-looking kid with a mountain haircut. I was in a hurry, but I stopped. I'm a pushover for homeless pups and cornered cats. "Howdy, younker,"

Old Parker slowly raised his hands, scratching his head with one of them. "Well, I guess there's nothing we can do," he said. He didn't seem scared. The youth strode around the end of the counter, mumbling something. Meanwhile, as in the descending plane, George was noting with a certain detachment the behavior of the others.

The Blitz, at the first sight of a gun, had raised his arms aloft; Bill White had done the same; but whereas the wrestler's face was stiff with dullwitted terror, his manager, next to him, kept administering nudges of half-nervous encouragement. The girl stood perfectly still, her arms not raised. George did not move at first, either, and was just wondering whether there was a chance to grab the fellow when he was off guard, when he suddenly heard the voice of Mr. Hudson.

"Put that gun down and don't be a fool."

It was an odd voice to come from a man who had hitherto seemed so quiet and unobtrusive; it startled them all, including the youth with the gun, who swung round now to face the interrupter.

"What's that, buddy?"

"I said put that gun down and don't be a fool." The youth approached with a puzzled expression, gun pointed at Hudson's body.

Hudson ignored the gun and fixed the other with a level stare: "You fellows expect folks to be afraid -you don't know what to do when you meet someone who isn't. Well, I'm not, and I'm telling you you'd be a fool to use that gun. You wouldn't have a chance. The state troopers would soon find you anywhere along the road, and if you once left the road they wouldn't need to. So I'm giving you good advice - "

But by that time the good advice was no longer necessary. George sprang on the youth from the rear, bringing him down to the floor, where there followed a sharp grapple for the gun; after that, everything was simple. The Blitz, springing to sudden life and fury, picked the fellow up as if he were Mick the Mat King, ran with him to the door, then held him there while he turned triumphantly to the others: "What'll I do, boys? Tie him up till the cops come?"

Hudson had been examining the gun and now said sharply: "There won't have to be any cops. It's as I guessed - the gun isn't even loaded. Just a bungling fool - Here - give him this and let him go." He took a bill from his pocket and handed it to White, who handed it to the Blitz, who stuffed it in the youth's pocket before hurling him several yards into the dust of the parking place.

A few seconds later they saw him pick himself up and stagger into the roadway.

"Maybe we should have let him spend it here," muttered the old man as the Blitz returned. "We had a feller like that once before - but there was nobody here then but me and Merle." Turning to Hudson he added, "Figgerin' it all out, sir, you're what I might call the Number One Hero of the occasion."

"Oh, nonsense," said Hudson.

"But you flummoxed him first by the way you spoke up - though these other gentlemen, of course, finished the job."

"It was easy. Fellows like that have no brains. If you don't behave as they expect, they never know what to say or do."

"Just because of that, though, there's always the chance they'll shoot with a gun that is loaded," George said.

"One has to take chances sometimes," Hudson barked back. "There's nothing really to fear unless you're afraid of taking chances." His voice was a shade scornful.

"THERE'S nothing to fear when you ain't got much to lose, either," interposed the old man, chuckling. "Three dollars eight in the drawer here. Time the other feller came, there was sixtyfive cents. That's why I said to him, 'Take all you can find and welcome.' I guess I had the laugh. How about a fill-up of coffee?"

They all said yes, and the girl went to get it. A curious silence followed. The Blitz, his duty performed, slumped over the counter with his long arms dangling as if in some profound despair. In Hudson, now that the crisis was passed, the air of authority, of almost contemptuous command, ebbed away. Old Parker lit a fresh cigar. George stared out of the window at the back yard full of assorted litter - an ancient wheelless car in the shade of which a few chickens pecked dispiritedly; a fence of old boxes; a shed made of hammeredout gasoline cans.

The girl came in and filled the cups, reaching George last. This time they talked in whispers, as if continuing a conversation begun years before.

"Where d'you come from, Merle?" "Ohio. Dad had a job in a printing works, but his health went bad. The doctor said he had to live in mountain air. He tried for jobs at first, but there weren't any; they said he was too old. So we sold everything and bought this."

"Who's we?"

"Dad, Fred and I. But Fred got to thinking there was no chance here, so he left and joined the Navy. He sends us a bit of help now and again, and of course it's cheap living here."

"But what about you? Have you given up the idea of being a schoolteacher?"

"Well, for the time I have, because I didn't finish the training, and of course Dad couldn't handle this place without me."

"So you're just staying here indefinitely?'

"Yes, more or less. There's nowhere else to go, and it seems to suit Dad's health - he's much better since we came. But for the new road, we'd really be all right."

"Just work. There's plenty of it." "And you're not lonely?"

"I was at first, but it's a thing you get used to. I go over to West Fork sometimes - I've a friend who drives me over in her car." She smiled. "Won't you tell me something now? I'm curious, too, you know." "Curious?"

I said. "Anything wrong with you?" He eyed me, suspiciously. "I'm jest a-settin' here, tendin' to my own business."

"Well, guess I'd better be about mine" — I shrugged — "Got to rake up a story in here for the paper."

He jerked up his head. "You know fightin' people? Managers and sech?" "I'm Bob Foote, if that means anything to you."

It didn't. He returned politely: "I'm Jody Pingree, from Squaw Mountain. I got to be a fighter. Been tryin', but cain't git started."

My knees weakened, and I sat down beside him on the curb. But I ordered: "You stand up. Let me look you over."

He must have done a big job of growing since Beth left Squaw Mountain, and it was all good growth. He was tall, and there wasn't too much meat on his bones, and he looked whang-leather tough of muscle; moved easy. His hands were big and they hung low — a pair of mighty weapons if he could be taught to use them.

I led him into the Midland and to Lefty Rober, an old middleweight whose heart was as big as his nose was flat. "Got a place for this recruit?" "I can give him a try." Lefty sized the boy up. "If he hasn't got it, I'll soon find out." "His name's Jody Pingree, and I think he's got it."

"We'll call him Hillbilly Pingree." So Hillbilly Pingree was launched. I slipped out and called Beth, and it wasn't ten minutes later that she tumbled out of a taxi. I took her inside. Jody was in Lefty's office, getting instructions. I said, "Here's a gal from Squaw Mountain."

JODY turned. Beth must have looked different, all right, with the long braids clipped to wings of black shining hair that flared against rounded cheeks. Her hat was perky and her knitted red dress clung to her figure in a way I expect no mountain girl's ever did.

She blazed: "Reckon I came here first!"

"Reckon you sent me them papers," he went on, "with his picture in 'em." Then: "Where is he?"

"Training over at Turner Gym." It was then I realized they were talking about Butch Runther, and the way they understood each other I didn't like.

Jody said, "I'll find him." Then to me: "Take her away. It ain't fitten for a gal to be hangin' round a place like this. And," with dignity, "I thank you for your help, now and always."

Beth stayed away, but I kept her informed, for I felt responsible for launching Hillbilly Pingree.

He worked hard and got results. He was naturally fast and shifty, had a keen eye for timing and distance, and enough raw courage to arm a flock of wildcats. Under Lefty's coaching, his speed increased. Muscles began to bunch and crawl under his tanned skin. He put on weight, and developed a flashy left.

He began fighting, and the fans that he didn't know the sandy-haired kid, with the burning eyes, who watched his exhibitions, was any concern of his. For Butch needed his peace of mind. A bout with one Sailor McQuade was coming up, with the winner set for a crack at the title.

Butch, a mean fighter at all times, was ugly at this stage of training. He looked vicious the day I dropped in.

"Hurry up!" he snapped at a sparring partner crawling through the ropes. "What'm I payin' you for?"

The scared boy straightened up slowly. Butch smashed him on the nose while his hands still dangled, and he went on, chopping into the boy's face, grinning while he did it.

Then I saw Jody, clutching the top rope. "Stop that! Leave him be!" Butch blinked down. "Maybe you'd like a taste of it, punk!" "Reckon I'd jest as lief."

I couldn't reach him in time. Jody wasn't ready by two years to meet Butch Runther, but he was in there, peeling off. Butch's first blow came while Jody's arms were close together over his head, inside his sweater. It was a crashing blow over the heart, followed by one square in the face, throwing Jody across the top rope.

Jody had the sweater shucked, and was ready to buckle into it, when the first of us chambered into the ring. Even fat little Maxie Harris was shouting for Butch to quit.

"THE papers, Butch! My gosh, they'll kill you with their stories!"

Butch got in one more blow. It caught Jody under the chin, lifted him up and then he dropped.

Beth, somehow, was there before Jody opened his eyes. She asked: "Why did you let him do it?" And I turned a queer green inside, at the anguish in her eyes. Jody started to sit up. She whirled on him, and I could see, plain as if I'd been there, the thin determined girl leveling a squirrel rifle across an apple-tree crotch.

"So — you couldn't wait! You took another whuppin' that you got to pay back afore we — "

Jody jerked out: "You ain't got no call to horn in on my fights! You got no call to say we!"

Beth drew close to me. "If you'd hear me out, I was going to say: "before Bob and I could pound some sense into you." Guess I can say we about Bob and me," and she threw back her head and walked away. She didn't go far. Whirling, she came back, and her voice was strangely gentle: "Jody, I came hunting you, because Ethan's here. I'll fetch him."

When she came back, I knew who Ethan was — just a younger, loosegaited copy of Jody himself. He might have been Jody himself, the morning I found him.

"Pappy's ailin'," Ethan said.

"How long?"

"Doc says mebby three months." Jody directed: "You go back. Take keer o' him. Ef — ef you need me, come after me." He turned to me. "I got to lick him afore I go back."

I had learned not to expect names. "Butch won't give you a tumble, Jody. He's after the title. Besides, you're not ready." "I can't wait." His jaw was set.

"I can't wait." His jaw was set. Beth echoed it, her gray eyes on me. "No, he can't wait, Bob."

I scratched my head and went out, leaving the mountain kids together. . .

It wasn't hard to do... just a matter of calling the sports boys together. There wasn't one of them, remember, who didn't hate Butch Runther's guts. The next morning every paper carried a guarded account of a nameless fighter who had battered an unknown, in unfair fight, at his training quarters.

liked him. At the end of a year he was being featured in main events. Sometimes he was whipped, often he finished in front. Win or lose, the crowd was with him for his gameness.

meeting of all the employees. He's a sanctified, solid-looking fraud with a tongue that would charm a bird off a limb.

"And does he put on a palaver! All about the new and bigger era for G. S. Hepburn. And the new order of things in business. He stresses that. Employees should be partners with capital. Enjoy the profits of their labor. So every employee of the store, from the humblest porter up, is going to become a full partner in the company. Every little fifteen-dollar-a-week kid will be allowed to put two or three dollars out of her pay envelope into G. S. Hepburn stock every week. Sounds holy, doesn't it, Skimpy? Modern, eh? Of course they'll fall for it. Even if they don't, they wouldn't want Mr. Big to think they weren't grateful, now would they? They might lose their jobs - or something." "But - "

Conners turned and a thin smile of admiration filtered across her thin lips. Mrs. Abbie Tupper stood in the open doorway. As usual she was clad, despite the warmth of the day, in black taffeta, and an amazing concoction of straw, ribbon and flowers teetered drunkenly on her dark head. "Little man clothed in brief authority," she misquoted amiably. "That's Shakespeare, Skimpy."

"Don't call me Skimpy!" the diminutive president shrilled commandingly. "I know your technique. You've used it on me before. Turn back the clock. Remind me of the time I was a - a delicate little boy and you were a big, domineering tomboy that -

"My, but you do cut to the roots of things, don't you?" The big woman crossed the room and dropped into a big leather chair. "This is a new angle for me, Skimpy. Usually I'm out to sell something. Today I'm out to prevent something from being sold."

"If you're talking about the sale of G. S. Hepburn and Company," Wilson snapped, 'you're too late. The deal is closed.'

"Nothing is ever too late," Mrs. Tupper pronounced oracularly. Miss Conners started for the outer door. The eyes of the president of the Ninth National followed her almost with despair. "Bitts is a crook," the big woman concluded placidly.

"That's criminal libel!"

His visitor sank back in the big leather chair. "There's about fifteen per cent of the stock of G. S. Hepburn in the hands of the public. I happen to own fifty shares of it. That isn't much, but it means a lot to me. I need the dividends I get from the stock. I want to go on getting 'em.'

"But -

"Hear me out. The widow of G. S. Hepburn has a trust in your bank. Her interest, amounting to about eighty-five per cent of the company, is, therefore, under your control. Now I'm not saying the bank isn't wise in attempting to diversify her investments. I suppose this block of stock is her principal asset. But I'm objecting to your selling it out to a crook who will wreck the company for the rest of us. So help me, that he will!" "I repeat - "

"Nor till I get through, Skimpy," Abbie broke in on him grimly. "Let me tell you how this man Bitts operates. I know because I ran across his trail years ago. This is his racket: He looks around for some fine old concern, like G. S. Hepburn and Company, where the principal owner has died and the widow or other heirs don't want to run the business personally. Then he makes them, or their representatives, an offer for the stock at say around the market price. He offers a

"It's a perfectly legitimate method of financing a purchase," Mr. Wilson pointed out tartly. "A lot purer than financing a hair tonic -

"We'll skip me," Mrs. Tupper cut in briskly. "This is a Bitts party. Now where does Bitts get the money to finance the payments on this note? Out of his own pocket? No! He gets it out of the pay envelopes of nine hundred poor shopgirls, floorwalkers, the buyers and even the delivery boys of the great department store of G. S. Hepburn. And he makes a whopping profit on the deal." "How?"

"Not by continuing the great tradition of G. S. Hepburn for honest merchandising," Abbie ploughed on. "Bitts doesn't give a whoop for the department store old George Hepburn slaved to build, except as it provides a nice background for his racket."

"And just what is this alleged racket?"

Abbie told him: "Bitts gets control of the store. He fires the president and takes the job himself. He talks big things for the future. Hooey! Remember there are only a few shares in the hands of the public - widows and other simple people like me.

"It's easy to buy a few of these shares and send the price of the stock up, say ten dollars a share. Then what happens? Bitts calls a

"I've almost finished ... Now what happens? Bitts sells all the stock he has bought from the widow, through your bank, to the nine hundred employees. At the price he paid for it? Oh, no! At what he calls the market price. Or, in other words, the much higher price he has established by buying a few shares on the open market.

"Or, put it another way, he makes about ten dollars a share on the thirty or forty thousand shares he buys from you. He pays off part of his note every sixty days with the money he withholds from the employees' pay envelopes to apply on their stock purchases. In the end the employees get the stock and he makes about three or four hundred thousand dollars. That's what I call making enlightened employee-ownership pay a handsome dividend. What do you think, Skimpy?" She leered at him. "Clever, eh?"

"Clever? Just conjecture. Surmise." The little president coughed indulgently. "We deal in facts at this shop."

Mrs. Tupper hauled herself laboriously to the edge of her chair.

A TIP FROM 7,000 DENTISTS

Proper care and diet, they inform us, would save our teeth, help beauty and health

by Sylvia Blythe

HE news, relayed to civilian Americans, by the Selective Service Committee, that defective teeth are rampant in our midst and are something of a threat to National Defense, makes all of us willing and anxious to brush up on our oral hygiene.

To help us do so is one of the aims of the Greater New York Dental Meeting, which opens this Monday in New York City for a five-day session. It attracts attendance from almost every state in the Union.

So to give you a preview of what your dentist is going to advise, THIS WEEK Magazine wangled this advance program of care from the Dental Information Bureau, official spokesman for some ward, when cleaning the upper teeth; upward, when cleaning the lowers; and front and back sides of all the teeth and all the chewing surfaces. Sweep. Don't scrub! Concentrate upon one flock of teeth at a time, and sweep that spot four times before going on. Don't be afraid to brush your gums. That is the kind of massage that keeps them in the pink. The more you massage gums, the tougher they get. If they are in a healthy condition, they won't act up once they get over the surprise attack. If they do act up, of course, that is a sign that all is not well with them. This is always a cue to see your dentist.

To make sure that you always have a dry toothbrush in reserve, have twins in your outfit. Bristles that stay wet all the time are not only limp and ineffectual but have a tendency to deteriorate rapidly. At the first sign of deterioration - that is when bristles begin to shed - it is time to retire your toothbrush. A fly-away bristle is not the harmless little thing it looks to be, because it can stab the gums and cause an acute infection.

affect the health of the teeth. So, as a safeguard against this, brush your tongue every time you brush your teeth. Or use one of the approved oral devices, such as a ring-like, handled lingualator, which scrapes the tongue of any debris.

Keeping a Sweet Breath

IF YOU want to go a step farther in your fastidiousness, make a reliable, well-recommended antiseptic mouthwash a part of your regular oral wardrobe. Used first as a gargle and then as a wash, it freshens your mouth, dispels food, beverage and nicotine odors, and thus helps you to keep your breath irreproachably sweet.

The second half of your home care includes a diet for your teeth, which many dentists today believe helps teeth to hold their own against decay. Those dentists who preach diet in their gospel of tooth-health prescribe an abundance of vegetables, fruits, fruit juices, salads, lots of milk, cheese, eggs, fish and some meat.

So much for the battle that you must fight at home, if you want to save your teeth. For the other half of the skirmish, you should see your dentist for periodic examinations as ' often as he tells you to. Then, he can detect a pit or a fassure while it is still a superficial invasion of the enamel and before it makes its damaging inroads into the pulp of the tooth.

Comply with your dentist's desire to explore with the X-ray, even if he wants to use it only as a precautionary measure. This is his best way of finding decay long before it shows.

Let your dentist put a professional shine on your teeth two or three times a year. While he is polishing them up, he will also nick off the tartar that is a threat to their health. Go to him for removal of any troublesome stains that may bob up from time to time. To try to do it yourself is sheer folly. Anything chemical or abrasive that is powerful enough to remove discolorations is also strong enough 70 damage the enamel. And only your dentist knows what is safe, what strength to apply, how long to leave it on, and where it is needed most.

7,000 dentists. Clip it out, and paste it over the mirror as a daily reminder.

"Ninety per cent of all tooth trouble can be prevented," says the Dental Information Bureau, "if you will give your teeth the proper care, if you will include the proper elements in your diet, and if you will visit your dentist often enough for him to detect decay and deal with it before it does irreparable damage."

How to Brush

YOUR first job is to keep your teeth clean. That means brushing twice a day at least, and particularly before you go to bed. If you zip the bristles

If your teeth are lined up, as they should be, the shimmying-business that I've just described will dislodge food that lurks in the crannies. If teeth are too close or over-crowded, you ought to have them corrected, since that cozy relationship is a hazard to their health. In the meantime you will need to use dental floss to remove the food particles that catch. Remove them you must, because decomposed food doesn't do any good for either your teeth, the supporting structure, or your breath. But yanking debris out with brutal tugs on a string doesn't do any good for your gums, either. For that reason, a den-across your teeth, you go to the foot of the class for not knowing the very first rule of oral hygiene. The approved technique is to hold your brush firmly in your hand, not merely in your fingers, and beginning at the gum-line, to shimmy the bristles, and brush away from the gums. Brush downtist teaches you to use floss gently. In the interest of a sweeter breath and a healthier mouth, keep your tongue as clean as you do your teeth. Decomposed food lodged in the tiny cells of the tongue is not only apt to taint the breath but to make the mouth a breeding place for germs that

Never Ignore "Pink Tooth Brush"

If your tooth brush ever "shows pink"-see your dentist. It may not be serious-but let him decide. He may only say your gums are victims of today's soft foods-that they need "waking up." And, like many dentists, he may suggest "the healthful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

For Ipana Tooth Paste is specially designed to do more than clean your teeth thoroughly. Used with massage, Ipana stimulates lazy gums, helps make them firmer.

So when you brush your teeth, massage a little extra Ipana onto your gums. That invigorating "tang"-exclusive with Ipana and massage-tells you that you are speeding up circulation within the gums-helping them to a stronger, healthier firmness.

Get Ipana today. Let Ipana and massage help you to firmer gums, brighter teeth, a more sparkling smile.

The nation-wide survey, recently conducted among thousands of dentists throughout the country, revealed that dentists personally use Ipana 2 to 1 over any other dentifrice — paste, powder or liquid. It also showed that more dentists recommend Ipana for their patients' daily use than the next three dentifrices combined

After that, a group of us went to Turner Gym. Maybe it was polite blackmail, that threat to print the full details. Butch called it that, in unprintable language. So did Maxie Harris, but he was cagey enough to see reason.

"We gotta do it now, Butch," he groaned. "The milly won't draw worth a damn, but we gotta do it."

Contrary to Maxie's gloomy predictions the bout drew. Nothing had come out in the papers, you understand --- we couldn't kill Butch as news, for he had won off Sailor McQuade and would maybe hold the title some day - but the fans seemed to have a pretty fair idea of what had happened at the gym that day, and were willing to risk a buck or two, just in hopes of seeing one good sock - just one - land somewhere in Butch's yellow face. That's the way they felt about him.

I was plenty worried. If Butch tore Jody to pieces, I'd be to blame. I couldn't get away from that.

Jody did his part. He worked and trained till Lefty objected: "Slow down, or you'll be worn to a whisper." Jody's answer was just a dogged,

"Got two years' readyin' to do in two months. Cain't be lazyin'." Even Beth had the same answer:

"He can't lose time. And he can sure take it. He's tough, Jody is."

Then, three days before the battle, brother Ethan came back. lody walked over to Lefty and me and said: "I got to go. But I'll be back.

Lefty agreed. "You go ahead, son. I'll take care of this milly." And when Jody had gone, he rubbed his bald head and finished : "All he had to meet Butch Runther with was a good left. It'd have been a massacree."

I was just as relieved when I phoned Beth: "Squaw Mountain is a long way off, and with his father dying, he'll forget fights."

would be over"

'He'll be back," Beth said, and she was right. Just twenty-four hours before time to enter the ring, Jody walked into the Midland.

Jody told us: "He's daid, but the buryin'll wait. I cain't leave him be put under ground till I've done it."

THE Coliseum was packed to the rafters that night. When Jody crawled through the ropes, he got a far greater welcome than Butch. Beth, sitting alongside me at ringside, applauded neither. She just sat there, motions. Then I saw how she'd grown.

Lefty's battle-scarred face twisted as he worked over Jody. "Go cautious," he moaned, "till you find a way to put that left through."

Jody nodded, but if he used more caution through those next two rounds, it didn't show. It was the same battering, the same taking. His face was beaten to a pulp, and it was only by a miracle that his eyes were still open - and burning at Butch.

THEN in the sixth it came - the chance Jody had been waiting for. He stepped forward, put everything he had into that left, and caught Butch where he meant to catch him.

Butch's head snapped back. I crouched forward. I heard Beth's gasp, cut off quickly in her throat. I heard the breaths of that whole crowd indrawn, ready to come out in a wild yell.

Butch Runther rocked on his heels, but Butch didn't crash. He stood there, snarling, fighting off Jody's frantic follow-up, until the gong. I put my hand

but there was nothing I could say. Jody had done a grand job. He'd given all he had, and it wasn't enough. The only hope for Jody was that Butch would finish him quickly. Butch wasn't that kind. When the gong brought him to the ring again, he came almost swaggering. Here was a mouse to be teased, tormented, a game he "Just think - if I should liked. But it was let go all of my troubles no game to Jody. He hit the floor twice in that seventh round, and once in the eighth. Hit it and came up, his arms flailing steadily, even if there was only his game spirit behind the blows. I then whispered to Beth: "He's not feeling those blows any more, Beth. A few more won't matter."

She turned her gaze on me, and I told myself: Even if Jody isn't feeling those blows, she is. And then I felt pain, myself, as if the blows Butch was plastering on Jody's face were hitting me, through Beth. That gaze of Beth's told me something I hadn't wanted to believe.

When the ninth started, I knew it was the last. If Butch didn't end it, the referee would. I saw him consider it after the eighth, but he looked into Jody's eyes, and held his arm.

usiness-girl and fiver, too! Thrilled Betty Anne Burke reports: "I wore this pair of beautiful nylons every day at work in a brokerage office, and wore them flying, too. Each night I washed them with New Ivory Flakes. It Jody walked to the center of the ring when the referee beckoned, but he didn't shake hands. He just stood there, blazing-eyed, tow hair stringing over his forehead, looking almost slight beside the bulky, hairy-bodied Butch. Butch weighed a good twentyfive pounds more. The referee finished, - and come out fighting."

Jody came out fighting.

His should have been a waiting game - teasing hot-tempered Butch Runther, keeping out of his way, watching for a chance to use that rapier left. But Lefty had never been able to teach Jody to hold back; so he'd trained him to keep close, keep slugging body blows, whittling his man down.

But this time Jody was up against too much weight, too much strength and skill. There was blood on Jody's face at the end of the first round. "Why did we do it, Beth?" I asked.

"It's murder!" But she didn't answer.

If you want a round-by-round account, you've only to read the morning papers. It's all there; how Jody stood up and took the great smashes from Butch's hamlike fists. How Jody went down in the third round and got up at the count of eight to meet a crash that sent him back

Jody came out blindly. How he ever kept his knees from buckling is more than anyone can guess. Why didn't Butch Runther finish him up there on Squaw Mountain? I boiled inside me. Why did I let this happen? I glanced at Beth, but she was a hundred miles away. Poor kid. She can't even have a chance to comfort him, after he's licked. Jody's never forgiven her ... and he'll hold it more than ever against her. My heart had grown like Jody's face. Benumbed. It didn't hurt so much, even this soon, to know how Beth felt about Jody.

It was good to be able to yell out when Jody, in his blind windmilling, managed to hook a right into Butch's eye. Butch gave it back - a blow to the heart that sent Jody down again. Butch took time out to catch his breath, and I saw in his face that he hoped Jody wouldn't make it.

"The yellow rat's tired," I whispered to Beth. For Jody was up again, and if Butch had moved in with his old speed, it would have been all over. It was almost over, anyway. The two men were in a clinch, but Jody's head was wobbling. His eyes were glazed. The referee broke it up, but

AFTERNOON AT SHANGRI-LA

"Yes, I get kind of curious when I see the planes flying over. I wonder who's in them and where everybody's going - sort of passes the time to think about it. But this is the first chance I've had to ask."

He laughed. "Well, as you've heard, one of us is a wrestler, and the other fellow, I don't know what he little man's his manager, and the

"And you?"

"Oh, I give lectures. Clubs and schools and what not. I've got one at San Francisco tomorrow night-"

But again their talk was interrupted, this time by the whine of a car approaching up the steep road from the distance. They heard its tires screeching on the hairpin bends; suddenly it came into view, a limousine. It turned into the yard and stopped. Four state troopers sprang out and ran up to the screen door. One pushed through, blinking after the glare of sunlight.

"How do," greeted the old man. "You boys just missed him," said Bill White. "But he can't be gone far."

"Who can't?" came the new voice harshly.

"Feller was in here just now -tried a holdup. I guess he didn't know who was here." Bill glanced proudly at the Blitz.

"I guess you don't know either."

"Beg pardon," answered Bill humbly. "I thought you was looking for someone."

"So I am," answered the trooper and stared at George, who looked away uncomfortably. Like most men, motorists at any rate, he hardly enjoyed meeting a policeman's eye. But the stare was soon transferred to Mr. Hudson, whose answering glance did not flinch an instant. Presently the trooper said: "Your name's King, 'isn't it?"

The wrestler's face was stiff with terror, but the girl stood perfectly still

"Yes," answered Mr. Hudson quietly.

"Then I think it's you I'm looking for. There's a warrant out for you, Mr. King."

"I understand."

Mr. Hudson and/or King did not struggle on his way out to the police car. He retained his dignity, even amidst the heat and humiliation of wrists locked together. "Good day, all," he said, as he passed through the screen door.

After he was gone another policeman, thin-lipped and taciturn, came in with pencil and notebook. He asked a series of questions - names, times, and so on. When the examination was over, the old man put a question of his own: "Well, what did he do, mister? Not holdups, I'll be bound!"

"He didn't have to," came the reply along with a bang of the door. "He was the president of the company."

So there they were, with another void to fill and another sense of anticlimax. There was no time, however, to exchange impressions or astonishments, for Bill White, as soon as the police car had left, discovered that it was time to drive back to the plane.

"Thanks for the coffee, Mr. Parker," he said, proffering a bill and indicating that he expected no change. "Quite an exciting time here, one way and another. Reckon things like this don't happen in Diamond City every day."

"You're right there," answered the old man, "and to tell the truth, they'd better not, or I'd be a bit jumbled in my mind, same as I am now. Don't quite seem to figure out who the real hero is after all."

They laughed and shook hands, and it was then that George said: "Tell the pilot to go ahead without me. I'll follow on somehow later."

The old man laughed. "Afraid they haven't fixed that engine proper? Well, I don't blame you - I'd be, too. Wouldn't fly over these mountains if you gave me a fortune. But there's no followin' on later except by the bus that picks up here eight tonight; gets to West Fork eleven-thirty to meet the mail train."

"That'll suit me."

After the car had gone, and Shangri-La was as quiet as the hills that surrounded it, George Westlake still sat at the counter, drinking coffee.

"Stay as long as you like," said the old man, "but I think I'll get a bit of a snooze in the back room. Kind of tired, I feel, what with the heat and everything happening."

He went out, and presently the girl came to clear away the coffee cups.

"Let's not call you Merle any more," George said. "What's your real name?" "Mary."

"I really stayed to finish our talk."

SHE stared at him with a far-off shyness.

'On second thought, I take back finish. Let's carry on where we left off. You were on lonely trails finding old bits of wagon wheels ----

She laughed, suddenly at ease "And you were lecturing."

He laughed also. "Not so romantic, I agree. But it's my job."

"I don't think it's a bad job." "Neither do I, Mary."

"It gets you round to places, that's the best part of it, I'd say." "But only to big places. Which leaves out Diamond City-except when Fate steps in."

"Fate?"

"Yes. Don't you think so?"

As if reminded of something, she said: "You'll miss a day, going by bus and train."

"But I won't miss this talk with you."

"I thought you said you had a lecture tomorrow night in San Francisco?'

"I'll wire to cancel it."

"Why do you want to do that?" "Partly because I'm beginning to think I don't know enough about what the lecture's supposed to be about."

She thought that over for a moment and then asked: "What is the lecture supposed to be about?"

MRS. TUPPER'S MONKEY WRENCH

listen to me, my fine factual friend. I'm not sitting back on my bustle while the band plays on. Savvy? Bitts doesn't know anything about running a store. He's only interested in his stock-jobbing operation. And management is about everything in business today.

"If the bank wants to sell this stock, why doesn't it sell it to the present management? It's darn good! John Creedy has been running the business for years. And he's got a lot of able department heads. If the deal is too big for them as individuals, let them take the employees in. I'm not against employee-ownership. I think it's swell. I'm against Bitts. And I — "

"I'm sorry. The deal is closed. Now if you will excuse me — "

His visitor smiled at that. She struggled to her feet. "Okay, Skimpy. You asked for it," she said cheerfully.

 \mathbf{T}_{HE} indomitable widow of the late Timothy Tupper ploughed a straight furrow from the office of the president of the Ninth National Bank to the Bickford Building, where her lawyer Jeptha Croy had his offices. Waving aside the receptionist and the counselor's secretary, she reached the lean, bald-headed lawyer before he could get his feet off the desk and assume a busy, legal posture.

"This is my morning for throwing monkey wrenches," she announced. "As a stockl 'der in the G. S. Hepburn Co., I want you to c. aw up the papers asking for a receiver for the company right away. Maybe you might also ask the court for an injunction forbidding the Ninth National Bank from disposing of the stock in the company. which it holds in trust for the widow. In short, I want a general stink." As the ashes from Mr. Croy's stogie tumbled in astonishment down his vest, Abbie outlined her talk with Wilson.

At the conclusion of her story the lawyer swung his feet away from the desk and shook his head decisively. "No!" """

"Why not?"

"Because no court would accept your unsupported theory. What you think Bitts is going to do isn't evidence."

"So what? Who cares?"

"So what? Who cares?" exclaimed Mr. Croy. "Gosh, woman! Don't you realize that — "

Abbie waved reason aside with an impaany idea of what would happen to the prestige of this fine old store, to its sales, if you instigated this outrageous action based on on a hunch?"

"Do I usually act like a dope?" his client countered tartly. "I said draw up the papers. I didn't say anything about filing them."

"But -

"Listen, Jep." Abbie leaned across the desk and lowered her voice. "When Bitts hears what I have in mind, there won't be any need to file suit. He'll drop the whole deal like a hot potato."

"That's blackmail."

Mrs. Tupper's smile was cherubic. "Is it? But in a good cause, eh? I mean if I was really in this for what I could get out of it, I'd go around and see Mr. Bitts myself. I think he'd probably pay me a lot for my stock in G. S. Hepburn to shut me up."

Mr. Croy glared savagely. "I won't have anything to do with it. Have you thought how this might reflect on the bank? You're insinuating, in effect, that Wilson and the Board of Directors are the dupes of — of a - "

"And you're on the board, aren't you, Jep?" Abbie cooed. She stared intently at the ceiling. "Well, I'll just have to find another lawyer that has no — "

T_{ELEPHONE} booths lined one wall of the Bickford Building lobby. Mrs. Tupper sucked inherbreath and inched into one. She braced herself against the back of the booth and half closed the doors. Then she waited.

A few minutes later one of the elevators disgorged Jeptha Croy. The lanky lawyer hurried down the lobby, turned left. The Ninth National lay in that direction. The watcher

"But -- '

A MASSIVE fist thundered on the desk. "Suppose I took my story to the papers. Would they publish it? Of course they wouldn't. Libel, like you said. But a receivership action would be news — big news. And they'd be bound to print my reasons for asking for it." She grinned crookedly.

Mr. Croy's fist came down on the desk. "The courts of this land aren't provided to stage publicity stunts, Mrs. Tupper! But let's forget ethics. You talk big about your investment in the company and the necessity for protecting it. You make pretty palaver about protecting the employees. Have you

"Mr. Bitts?" Abbie inquired briskly. "My name is Tupper. You won't remember me, but I was in Memphis a few years ago when you bilked the employees of the Emporium Department Store."

The telephone made indignant noises. Mrs. Tupper cut across the noises: "I haven't got time to listen to you being virtuous. You'll probably get a call from Wilson in a few minutes. He's already yelled for the bank's lawyer. You'll find out from them what all the shooting's about. I'm just calling you to tell you this: I don't care for sanctimonious crooks. On the other hand, no two-by-four bank president is going to give me the brushoff. So when you get through with him - and it looks like you're apt to lose a hunk of your own money - just call me up and I'll tell you how to beat the rap. Or come out and see me. I'm in the telephone book. Abbie Tupper."

MRS. TUPPER'S MONKEY WRENCH

dialed with effort another number. "Good morning. G. S. Hepburn." "Let me talk to Mr. Creedy."

After an interval a dulcet voice said, "This is Mr. Creedy's secretary. May I tell him who is calling?'

"Tell him it's Turkish Bath Tupper, and for pity's sake hurry." "Hello, Abbie. I -- "

"Listen, Creedy, last night when I talked to you over the telephone, I told you Bitts was a crook. I guess I made a lot of threats. Well, I just want you to know that I was mistaken." It was just as well that Mr. Creedy couldn't see the leer that the telephone saw. "He's a fine man. A philanthropist, really. I just thought you would like to know. No, I can't explain. You'll hear all about it later.'

She was grinning broadly as she edged out of the booth. She hailed a cab before the building and gave her home address.

"And quit staring at my hat," she snarled amiably at the cabby. who was gazing with frank amazement at her millinery. "I have 'em made to order by a demented Armenian who makes 'em out of old motormen's gloves."

DRESSED in a flowered print, Mrs. Abbie Tupper sat in her favorite rocker and eyed the big man on her settee without rancor.

"Suppose you let me guess what happened, Brother Bitts," she suggested. "Wilson and Jep Croy called you over to the bank. They told you a snooping, interfering old harridan by the name of Tupper was planning to raise hell with your deal. Right?'

The big head nodded curtly. The cold blue eyes stared around the heavy nose like a wary trout inspecting a fisherman's fly.

"We'll get along faster if you park your caution outside," Abbie suggested blandly. "Strange as it may seem, I'm playing ball with you now." Then, as her visitor sat forward eagerly, Abbie shook her head. "Don't get me wrong, brother. I don't want a cut."

"What is your play?"

Mrs. Tupper rocked vigorously. "Now we're getting somewhere. Plain talk. It'll pay you, brother. Take my word for it."

The man on the sofa was not used to taking anybody's word for anything.

But he was a good judge of human nature. He lit a cigarette and decided to take a chance. "Okay, lady. I made the deal for G. S. Hepburn yesterday. I paid twenty-five gr - thousand down. About my entire personal kitty, in case you're interested. Okay, I did figure on selling the stock back at a profit to the employees. It looked like about the sweetest deal I ever pulled off -until Wilson called me in and told me about you."

of the deal when you heard I was ready to upset the apple cart?"

Mr. Bitts nodded glumly. "Croy said you were only bluffing. He was sure you wouldn't go through with your threat. But I couldn't afford to take a chance on that." He smiled bleakly. "I tried to cancel the deal and get my money back. I told them your story about me was fantastic --but that I didn't want to buy into a lawsuit no matter how unwarranted it was. Wilson was willing to cancel, but he couldn't see giving me back the money. He had me at a great disadvantage. I was on a spot. So I stalled. I had your telephone call in the back of my mind. I said I would let them know."

ABBIE nodded. She leaned forward in the rocker and the print tightened like a drum across her knees. "There's one way you can get your ante back. Every cent of it. But only one. Go back and see Wilson. Tell him you've seen me and proved to my entire satisfaction that I was grossly mistaken about you. Say you are going through with the purchase and that you have my promise to throw no monkey wrenches."

"But - "

"You listen!" The black velvet ribbon around the broad neck quivered with amusement. "This gets better as it goes along, brother. I think it would be good business for the employees of G. S. Hepburn to own the store - have a real stake in its success. I'm suggesting you go through with your plan - minus two little details. Instead of selling the stock to the employees at an inflated price, you sell it to them at exactly the price you paid for it. Point two: The present management is not to be disturbed. You can have some honorary title, if you want it to save your face ---

"You call those two points little changes!" Mr. Bitts' baritone rose bitterly. "You take my money and my idea and leave me holding an honorary bag. I -- "

"WE DO good deeds with them. Brother Bitts," Abbie corrected him cheerfully. "A good deed for you too. After the note at the bank is paid off you'll get your money back as part of the purchase price. If you back out of the deal now, Wilson will keep your down payment on the stock. If you go ahead and try to put over your own deal - and sell the stock to the employees at a whopping price - I'll expose your hand before you can deal the cards. Either way you're sunk. You can see that !"

"What did I ever do to you?" the man on the sofa protested almost plaintively.

"Don't worry about me. Look on the bright side. Besides getting your bait back, think of the way my scheme will polish up your reputation for (Continued on page 23)

GEORGE PAY IT" "LET

Here's how to handle fumblers who always manage to dodge the restaurant check

by Emily Post

sometimes too, we seemingly ghostwalk.

The real player of "you pay" tricks is recognized by repetitions. Her routine goes something like this: Sissy Sponging says:"Let's lunch at Ciro's." She never says whose lunch nor does she take over the role of hostess at the restaurant by seating people or by asking them what they'll have to eat. She lets whoever will give orders. At the end of lunch she suddenly has to catch someone who is about to leave the restaurant; or also suddenly she must put in an urgent telephone call!

Expert at Dodging

IF IT is not possible to disappear, she does the best she can by devoting close attention to making-up her face in her vanity mirror. If someone who knows her ways asks impolitely: "Sissy, isn't this lunch yours?" she replies in surprise: "Why, no!" Or if it is pinned on her by one who says: "This lunch is yours, Sissy!" she becomes a fumbler.

With apparent enthusiasm she opens her bag, searches through it, digs into it, and at last finds to her surprise that she "came out with only sixty-seven cents!"

The really serious "you pay" situations are those which are forced upon men by women who cling to the belief that it is the obligation of a gentleman to pay for a lady - even of one gentleman for many ladies everywhere, and always!

I witnessed an example of this outmoded belief the other day. At the door of a crowded restaurant a smartlooking man of forty or so stood waiting for a table. Two not-young ladies, to whom he bowed, beckoned him to join them. Their greeting showed that they were acquaintances of his - not friends. And when they had finished eating, they said good-bye to him and left. I am certain that he was surprised when the waiter brought him three checks. I even thought he was annoyed. But when I told my luncheon companion what I had seen, she replied:

have been in the habit of making a bi-weekly motor trip to Chicago. During the past year, I have also been taking with me two women buyers for another company since they likewise have to make this trip. I do not wish my passengers to share any part of the driving expenses - and they have not done so - but it is becoming increasingly annoying that I shall. always be host at mid-day dinner, and at supper as well.

"Though these women are pleasant and likable, these trips are not social engagements, I feel the routine of perpetual host to be an imposition. So far as I can figure it, a man is helpless in such a situation. If my companions were men I could say: 'Let's match for it.' But to women I must say nothing and pay the check. I do not want to discontinue sharing my car, nor to avoid the act of paying for suppers, and dinners. But I should like to invite guests when I want to, and not have to do it if I don't. I resent having dinner and supper checks presented to me like taxes!

"It seems to me that well-to-do business women would want to take a turn at being hostesses and invite me to eat with them just once in a while! If you know a solution, Mrs. Post, will you write it, or if you say this is good etiquette, can't you change it to correct a situation which certainly seems a misfit to me in this day when women are always independent - except when facing the restaurant check!"

drift in the wake of the Joneses, are to be found men and women who are in the habit of letting someone else pay the check. Among them are the carelessly forgetful. They are not aware that they are never well supplied; always out of small change; always out of cigarettes; always out of matches; probably out of gas for the car. The light-hearted improvidents of our youngest generation fall in this group with their suggestions of going to lunch or to dine, or to Saturday's game, and taking it for granted that someone will pay the check, get the tickets and buy the gasoline.

ALMOST every great city, among those never-stay-at-home groups

They let you buy the tickets

Pay the taxi fare . . .

These "let's go" suggesters, however, are not gold-diggers in a deliberate sense. They are just as enthusiastic in exclaiming: "Let's listen to the game on the radio," or "Let's eat at the lunch wagon."

That is the case with most of us who are almost sure sometimes to behave as the intentional "you pay" evader does. All of us at times fail to read the clock on a taxi, or to pick up a check, and find the change as quickly as our companions. For instance, we whose bags are filled with an assortment of belongings, that rival those in the pockets of a school boy, genuinely struggle to pay the check before another pays it, and

"Of course they left the bill for their friend to pay. It would have shamed him otherwise."

An Outmoded Notion

As a matter of fact, I know very well that it is the fixed belief of a large number of old-fashioned women, that to pay for themselves, in any way whatsoever, in the presence of a gentleman of their acquaintance, is to belittle him.

Many men do, of course, object to a woman's paying for anything --ever. BUT they want to have to ask the waiter for the check, and they want to reserve the right to invite their guests. In fact, one man's resentment against being appointed a permanent host is described to me by a man in the mid-west who writes me this letter:

"As a buyer for a retail house, I together? Why don't you ask your passengers where they want to lunch, take them there, and leave them until you meet later to start on your return trip? Certainly this is all any "passengers" could ask.

I don't want to be unsympathetic, but I do think you seem to have bungled things badly. As it is, I think that making business engagements, which will prevent your having them lunch with you, is the only plausible way out.

This solution that I offer might also be a warning to any girl of the younger generation. Because her boy friend cannot suggest to her that she be hostess occasionally, he may have to offer her a similar excuse - that he has to work, or he has to see a man when the truth may be that his pocketbook is empty. Quite seriously, also, I hope that this article may be read by the girl who seemingly never went far enough in arithmetic to know that the greater sum for theater tickets, and cover charges, and supper checks, cannot be subtracted from the smaller sum of her boy friend's salary - or his college allowance still less from his army pay. Moreover, taking her out is not his only financial obligation!

WHY YOU SAY IT

John always brought home the bacon.

That's one way of describing success. The phrase comes from the old custom of greasing a pig at a country fair and loosing him among a group of blindfolded people. To catch the pig and hold on to it was quite a task, but the one who did "brought home the bacon."

When you are in Rome, try to do as the Romans do.

In medieval times Saturday was considered a fast day in Rome. But in Milan it was a festival. Saint Austin, a frequent traveler between the two cities, asked Saint Ambrose exactly how to act in both cases. Saint Ambrose replied:

"When I am among the Romans, I fast as the Romans do; when I am at Milan I do not fast. Likewise you, wherever you be, observe the custom of the place if you would neither give offense to others nor take offense from them."

strel shows who used ham fat on their faces to help remove the blacking.

FATING OUT -AT HOME

by Grace Turner

YROLEAN-BORN Ludwig Bemelmans, favorite author among America's smart young men for his "The Donkey Inside," has written three other bright books for adults, five books for children, and many articles for sophisticated magazines. He prefers to paint, however, and decorates his walls with interesting canvases.

Writing is too hard work, he says, and he does it only when the bank balance gets low. But he collaborated this summer with Donald Ogden Stewart on a play scheduled to open in December -- "Hotel Splendide." "Don did the writing," he says. "I supplied the right hotel atmosphere." Credited to him also is a textbook on how to run a "grande hotel." He knows this subject backwards since, as he explains, his father and uncle were joint owners of six European hotels, he himself was born in a hotel, nurse-maided in childhood by maitres d'hotels, and for awhile he was one himself.

Today Mr. Bemelmans's pet hate is maitres d'hotels -- "pompous Irvings" he calls them, except for the maitre at the Ritz Grill, and for Pierre at New York's 21 Club, and the Paris Ritz's Olivier. On the other hand Mr. Bemelmans loves cooks, and likes to live in hotels that other people run. He can't, in fact, accustom himself

5 tablespoons butter

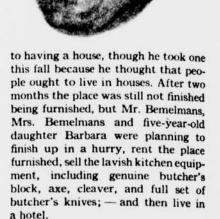

5 tablespoons flour

1/2 cup light cream

2 tablespoons white wine

Salt and pepper

Curries and Tyrolean mushroom soup are the specialties of the private Bemelmans's culinary department. Favorite foods, however, are our wellknown brands of canned soups; chicken hash as made by the Ritz Grill with white sauce au gratin, and served with a border of string beans; also Lobster l'Americaine as prepared by Maud Chez Elle, Simonpure French restaurant, where there is no pretense at decoration except for garlic hanging on the wall, and where the proprietress supervises every dish, and the food is tops.

Get a Horse!

BEEN intendin' for some time to tell you what I think about automobiles. An' here I've gone an' waited till we've got a shortage of 'em.

If I tell you now that automobiles is a great blessin' you will probably want to go out and buy a new one. That would make the shortage worse. If I tell you how automobiles has caused so many accidents an' has taken people away from church an' all that, you will get discouraged an' want to see a law passed against 'em.

So I will sort of stay in the middle of the road — an', likely as not, get honked at by traffic goin' both ways.

One thing that interests me is that automobiles can be driven now with one hand. I happened to come along to my courtin' days just as the horse an' buggy was givin' way to the horseless carriage. An' if you think you could pet while steerin' one of those early models, you are crazy. You could hardly keep it on the road with both hands an' both feet. An' if you didn't watch it mighty close, your engine died on you. Then you had to get out an' crank it. When you got back in, your hands was dirty an' you was as sweaty as a football player an' the girl friend had lost interest. I wouldn't be surprised if those prewar jaloppies busted up a lot of romances.

Anyhow, there wasn't so many of 'em an' the roads was nearly all rough an' there seemed to be quite a large supply of parkin' places where you could stop an' patch up the difficulties — if you didn't have to change a tire at the time.

Nowadays, with radios, defrosters an' other conveniences, to say nothin' of easy drivin', a boy can sure pay more attention to the other passenger.

Only there is so many trucks an' stop lights, so much traffic an' so many neon lights, so many no-parkin' signs an' speed cops, so much main highway an' so little country road, that I'd just about as soon be in a 1917 Ford touring car — back in 1917. At my age, who wouldn'!?

business virtue. Why — it practically makes you a philanthropist. The employees will probably give you a watch — or a great testimonial dinner."

"I'm overcome by the prospect." Mrs. Tupper ignored the sarcasm. "Naturally this little deal we're making will be private and personal. Wilson and his associates won't know I blackmailed you into wearing a halo. When I call them up and tell them - very humbly - that I made a terrible mistake about you - whamte o my! are those going to feel good! Abbie eating humble pie! Snooping, interfering old woman finally gets hers! I can see Jep Croy's false teeth dancing with glee.' Abbie leaned back in the rocker and smiled benignly. "It ain't often you see a proposition that does so much good all around, is it, Brother Bitts? Skimpy and Jep will feel good because they'll feel they've handed me my come-uppance. You'll feel good because you'll get your own money back after you practically kissed it goodby. I'll feel good because my investment is protected. And nine hundred employees of the G. S. Hepburn Store will feel good because they've got a real stake in their jobs. Well, Brother Bitts, is it a deal?"

still asking the same question I've been asking myself ever since you called me up. Maybe I'm entitled to an answer now. What did I ever do to you?"

The big woman chuckled. "The Royal Northwest Mounties always get their man, Brother Bitts. And hell hath no fury like a woman whose hats are given the horse laugh. That's Shakespeare amplified by Tupper. The chances are a hundred to one that you would have gotten away with this G. S. Hepburn deal if I hadn't been in Memphis years ago. Or if you hadn't been there."

Then Beth was at the ropes. No, it was Lisbeth. Lisbeth Rufer, mountain girl. Her voice, whippoorwillshrill, cleaved the din of the crowd. "We'll git him, Jody! The damned polecat!"

Jody's dull gaze focused on her. Oh, it's easy to guess what it was like — to Jody — her face a white blob beyond the ropes, her eyes blazing. Those two wings of shining black hair could easily have seemed to end in long pigtails. Punch drunk, Jody must have seen, sharply, the girl who balanced a squirrel rifle across an apple-tree limb.

Jody's eyes flamed again. His gasping voice came out in a yell through the mouthguards — "Ruint our waggin — " And then he was into it.

Don'T ask me how he did it, or where his strength came from. Whether fury-born or from some secret reservoir, filled by the pine-washed mountain air, what does it matter? All that counts is that Jody broke loose from Butch, and when the big man staggered after him, he found his opening again. A chance to use that left, and this time he put a lot more than his best behind it.

Butch crashed. He came up again, slowly, using all the time there was time enough for his rage to come to a boil. He was like a crazed bull when he lunged back toward Jody.

"Keep away from him, Jody," I prayed.

Jody didn't keep away. His dazed mind made him dodge enough to let the blow glance off his cheek, then he came in, boring, punching, fighting, driving Butch back toward the ropes. And the pitiless glare of the lights on Butch's wet face, showed up the thing we'd always known was inside him. The thing that had been growing, through this evening, as he'd watched Jody get up, again and again, after he'd been smashed down.

Butch was afraid. It sweated from every yellow pore of him. It shone in his small black eyes. He was afraid of a boy who didn't know when he was licked. And on the face of Maxie Harris, his manager, I saw the thing I knew was in every sports writer's thoughts: We built you up, Butch. We wasted our words, and the words we didn't write about you. You never could have been a champ. You never had what it takes. Your left once more, Jody, and he's ready for the trash heap, where he belongs.

JODY didn't need the left. Just that wild tough rain of blows, battering Butch's own yellowness deeper into his marrow, till he buckled at the knees, then slowly toppled at the feet of the boy from Squaw Mountain.

I doubt if Jody heard the shouts. He stood there, staring down at Butch. He didn't turn his gaze, not even when the referee caught his gloved hand, lifted it high. Beth — Lisbeth — still hung at the ropes, and I saw the tightness of her hands, saw that she wasn't breathing.

J. KENTON BITTS lifted himself from the sofa. The old dame was right. As things stood, he was lucky to get his money back.

After all, there would be other opportunities elsewhere — opportunities minus this formidable mountain of flesh who sat rocking before him. He nodded reluctantly.

"Good! Then -- '

J. Kenton Bitts stopped her with a white hand. "One thing, lady. I'm "I don't -- "

"I was coming out of the dining room of the Bledsoe Hotel. Four men were sitting around a table near the entrance. One man looked up as I went by and said in a loud voice, 'Good gosh! Look at the rat's nest with St. Vitus dance on that dame.' Then all the other men howled. Remember?"

"I - I - "

"Women are curious creatures, Brother Bitts. Remember that in the future. I think most women would rather have their virtue questioned than have their taste made the butt of public ridicule. It makes 'em vindictive. It did me. It made me inquire the benevolent gentleman's name. It influenced me into looking into his life and works, then and there. I treasured up the dope I got. It made me resolve that if I ever got a chance I'd make him rue the day he made fun of my hat - So when I read in the papers the other day that J. Kenton Bitts was in town for a big deal, I just decided I'd postpone all other amusements and personally arrange for his funeral."

The End

Jody's weight shifted to the left foot, and I remembered, with a surge of sickness, Jody's vow ... "I'll give him jest what he give you — "

I wondered how the crowd could go on yelling, slapping backs, tossing hats, or how the referee could grin into the movie camera... or how the cameramen themselves could go on, grinding, when the whole thing was about to break like a rotten egg. Kicking a man when he is down.

But Jody's head jerked up. His glance was for Lisbeth. His voice was a croak: "I cain't do it, Lisbeth. He jest ain't our kind of people."

He came to the edge of the ring, and with all the hatred burned out, his eyes were as revealing as Lisbeth's had been. He said, "Got to be puttin' out for Squaw Mountain."

She didn't move, but her hands grew more white-knuckled on the ropes.

Then: "We got to git a soon start," Jody said.

Her hands relaxed. She said, "I'll be ready." They had always understood each other without words.

CON INCOME TAX PAYMENT K New Tax Law Calls for HIGHEST RATES IN U.S. HISTORY!

If you are SINGLE and earn $15.00 a week or more MARRIED and earn $30 a week or more you are now subject to the Income Tax and must file a Return! It is up to you to determine now whether or not you must pay a tax, and if so how much.

N order to raise 312 BILLION Dollars provided for National Defense by the New Income Tax Law, most individuals must pay from TWO to THREE AND ONE-HALF times as much Income Tax as they paid last year.

Each of us wants to share his rightful part of national defense. This year more than ever before Americans are willing to pay their full share of taxes.

The Government does not expect you to overpay your tax, any more than it expects you to pay more than the right price for your food, clothes, or any other article or service. Furthermore, an incorrect return, whether resulting in underpayment or overpayment, is a hindrance to the tax program, involving extra costs to the Government through expensive readjustments.

Over half a million taxpayers have used this book in previous years This NEW edition is NOW READY-completely up-to-the-minute and containing every requirement of the new tax bill as well as the important tax decisions of the past year which may affect you. This year, more than ever before, you need the new 1942 Edition of

THE MOST WIDELY USED TAX GUIDE IN AMERICA

Tells EACH and EVERY deduction to which you are justly entitled and on some of which action must be taken before the end of this year.

ACH YEAR, thousands unknowingly pay the Government more than they should. In many cases the Government has no indication of this, so the money is not refunded. Each year, other thousands are heavily penalized for underpayment caused by honestly mistaken ideas about deductions.

It is up to you to find out your legal deductions now-because the tax blanks do not provide space for some of them.

They Learn Things by Doing Them

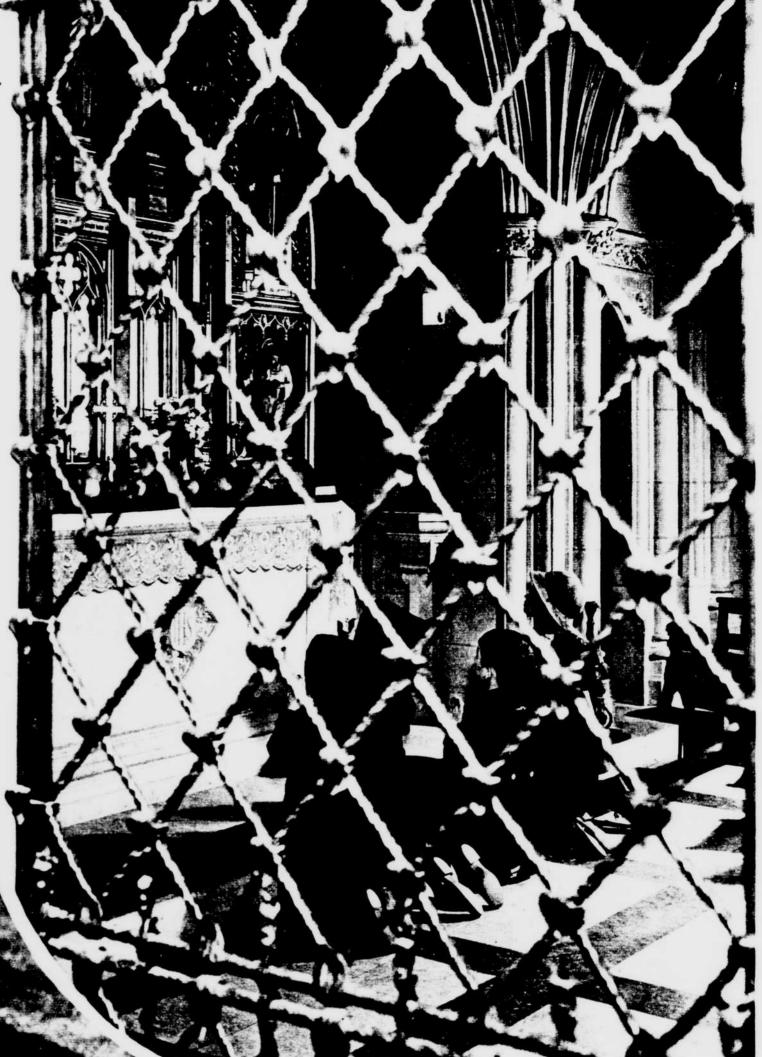

Best taught is the youngster who is taught to think. That's the goal at Beauvoir, the National Cathedral Elementary School, located at 3500 Woodley road on the spacious grounds of the Cathedral Close. And most conducive to the thinking habit is the creative use of hands in applying and "experiencing" the things learned by textual instruction. So that kind of first-hand experience in growing things and making things —which means fun while you learn—is a major part of the curriculum at this interesting school. With it, of course, goes a solid foundation in the three R's for the 160 boys and girls at Beauvoir.

By CLAUDE A. MAHONEY.

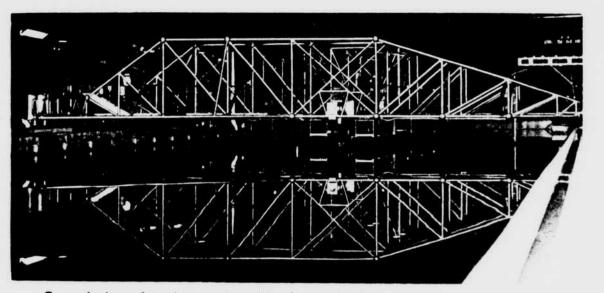

THE outcome of some critical naval battle of the future probably is being decided these days by a few men lying on cushioned catwalks at the David W. Taylor model testing basin at nearby Carderock, Md.

The men are doing what small boys everywhere would crave to do—play with model boats. But the men are plaving grimly and seriously, mostly on the decks of an 84 000-pound towing carriage that pulls or guides the model boats down the indoor channels at Carderock. They read dynamometers which tell to the most minute degree what effect the propeller is having, or how a certain type of hull behaves in the water. They have to be right. A hair's breadth error by a testing scientist might throw a whole ship design out of line.

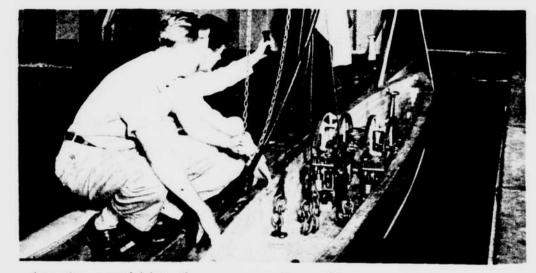

Underlying the test basin's accuracy is the natural rock that forms its foundation. The rails the carriage run on are true to the curvature of the earth's surface within an allowance of three-thousandths of an inch. The carriage must run in an absolutely straight line true to the earth's surface.

The basin is a final check on the blueprint engineering that is the beginning of every American naval vessel. The most infinitesimal error in the engineering must be caught. Uncle Sam's ships must have the ultimate in power, speed, maneuverability and fire power. The engineers figure such things, the basin scientists prove them to be true—or untrue.

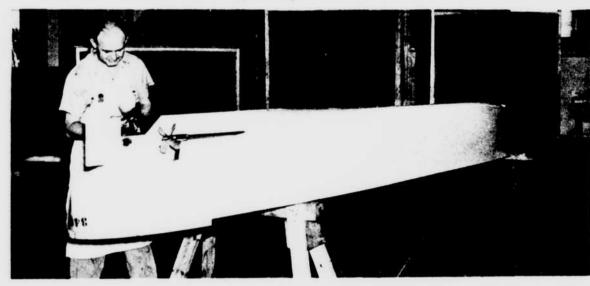

Expert artisans fashion model hulls, often more than 20 feet long, of West Coast sugar pine carefully dried in kilns. The wood must not change shape after it is in form. The rough hull is glued together under a pressure of some 350,000 pounds. When the glue is dried, the whole is put into a profile machine. Final finish is by hand, and water-resisting paint is applied. Then the hull is moved into the fitting room—if it is to be self-powered, as most are—and receives its propellers and small motors and dynamometers.

Now it is ready for the test canal that is 22 feet deep, 51 feet wide and as long as 965 feet. The model is fixed beneath the carriage, its motors are started, and the towing carriage moves with it. The carriage stays above the self-propelled model, connected by wires that give the impulses to the recording machines. Every force of the propeller, every action and response of the model hull is recorded. At the end of one canal there is a turning basin where the rudder of the model is set for a certain turn and the little craft is put upon its own. Theoretically it makes a perfect turn and comes back to the center of the basin. In tests of non-powered hulls, the carriage tows the model instead of merely riding above it.

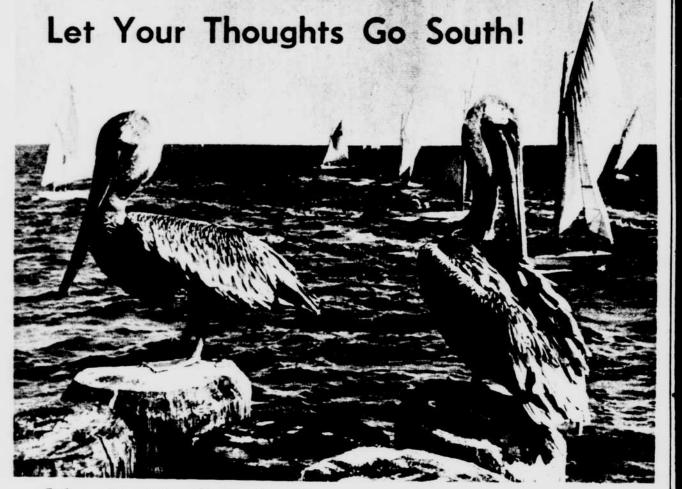

Approximately 450 people, including 14 naval officers, are employed on the 100-acre site of the basin, which already is beginning to be cramped. Capt. L. B. McBride is in charge of the basin, and Capt. H. E. Saunders is technical director.

To speed up defense building in the small-house field, this novel method of construction is being tried out by the Defense Homes Corporation on an 18-acre tract near Falls Church, Va. On an inflated rubber form, covered with a wire mesh, is sprayed a concrete mixture in two layers with an insulating material between. When the mixture hardens the walls of the house are complete. They need no interior plastering or outside painting. Openings are left for windows and doors. Speed and economy are two arguments for the novel construction idea, which permits of some variation in house design and size.

MISS MARGUERITE P. R_______ says: "Because of Mother's illness and my having to help out at home, together with my own doctors' and store bills, I found myself owing almost $400. I've always felt that I couldn't very well pay less than $10 a month on an account and still keep my credit. This meant I was paying out $70 every month, which was more than I could stand, and I was falling behind—so what I did was to go to your Bank and make a personal loan and pay all those bills in full. This not only protected my credit and put me on my feet, but best of all, it cut my monthly payments in half, because now I only have to send your Bank $35 a month instead of the $70 I was having to pay all over town. You can see now why I'm such a booster for the Morris Plan Bank, and why I always recommend you to my friends."

MR. LUTHER J. F______ writes: "You know, I've been buying automobiles off and on now for about twenty years—new ones and good used ones too—but like most people, I guess I've never selected my financing plans as carefully as I have my cars, and I know I wasted a lot of money because I didn't. But I can't be accused of being so dumb these last few years since I learned about your Bank's low cost plan for financing cars. I think you are doing a good job for automobile buyers and I want you to know you have my thanks for saving me money. I've been sending you all the folks in my department that I know of who are buying cars."

MR. and MRS. HERBERT T. McD_____ write: "You should see our house now since it's been painted and the roof and porch have been fixed. It doesn't look like the same place — and it doesn't feel like the same place either since the new heating plant was installed and the weatherstripping completed. Really, I don't know what we would have done this winter if it hadn't been for your Bank. Until our neighbor told us of your home modernization and repair plan for home owners, we never knew such a plan existed, and particularly that anyone would give us as long as 18 to 36 months to repay. Every home owner certainly ought to know about your Bank's services."

The services of our Personal Loan, Automobile Financing, Home Modernization and other departments are available to you too, and we want you to use these services whenever they can be helpful to you in solving your financial problems.

Guns and ships and men-with these ingredients of security in a war-ridden world Uncle Sam builds more mightily by the day. Here's a big 155-mm. howitzer, just cut loose from its "prime mover," being rolled into battle position by men of the 17th Field Artillery near Heath Springs, N. C. These gunners from Fort Bragg fought with the Red forces in the 1st Army field maneuvers.

Like the blade of a giant knife, so slim are the lines of this high-speed cruiser. She's the Navy's 6,000-ton Juneau, sliding down the ways at Kearny, N. J. The new streamliner is a sister ship of the recently-launched light cruiser Atlanta.

Nothing but trees! But more closely you see a gun wrapped in that autumn foliage in the center. It's a 3-inch anti-aircraft gun, hiding from "enemy" planes it's ready to blast. The men are Pennsylvanians of the 213th Coast Artillery Anti-aircraft Battery B. A. P. and Wide World Photos.

Hollywood's Bit for Cotton Hose

Even the sailors like 'em. Here's praise from the Navy for the smart cotton hose worn by Dorothy Lamour. They are fine point lisle mesh designed for evening wear.

JUST to prove that American women will lose no luster during the silk shortage by wearing Uncle Sam's new cotton hose designs, Hollywood stars here set the example. And to back up this assurance, the Office for Emergency Management, which managed to get the star's in these confidential poses, puts its own endorsement on the "fine fashionable" new cotton hose designs from the Government's experimental mills.

With these 150 new designs of cotton hose and with cotton reinforcement to make the supply of nylon and rayon go twice as far in hose production, there'll be plenty of smart stockings to go around. "All in all," says O. E. M., "it doesn't appear that American women have much to worry about in the matter of hosiery."

For sports wear, bike-riding 11 on a Massey picks herself a pair of bright red, knee-high socks designed for the cotton hose era.

Skin-tone cotton hose completes Ann Sheridan's smart outfit. The stockings, with a clock design at the ankle, have that elasticity and sheerness of the new cotton styles.

Paulette Goddard's stockings are gold-colored sheer crepe lisle. Illustrating the new fashion trend, the stockings blend in color with her evening dress of gold bugle beads.

On the wing! When he retrieves, this pup doesn't let a little thing like a 5-foot wire fence stand between him and the gunner. He brings the pheasant right over it in a clean leap. Lee Baldock, dog trainer of Cody, Wyo., taught him the trick.

in the Gift We Want This Christmas

for the busy writing days ahead-busy with Defense work, Business, and Training, with School work, and Family Affairs

Yes, just about everyone wants a Fountain Pen or Set this Christmas. And more than a dozen separate, independent pen surveys leave no doubt that people prefer the PARKER. Here's why:

1. Lubricated Writing with an oil-smooth Point developed by Parker's chief metallurgist, Dr. Robert Pickus, formerly instructor of metallurgy on the faculty of Yale University-a non-brittle 14 K Gold Point tipped with oil-smooth Osmiridium that won't wear scratchy in a lifetime.

2. One-Hand Super-charging Filler-Sactessmakes room for a third more ink than the average of 3 well-known, sac-type pens.

3. Patented Television Pen barrel-lets you SEE when to refill.

4. Smart Streamlined Pen and Pencil-eliminates unbalanced bulk.

5. Original Style of shimmering Pearl and Jet RINGS. 6. Swank Military Clip-holds pen low and UNEX-POSED. Trimmest for uniforms and civilian clothes. 7. Pens Guaranteed by Life Contract +

Every one of these seven features is a vital reason to ask for the Parker by NAME. Due to heavy demand, you may not see it otherwise. If you want friends to write you - give the Jewels of Pendom. Don't forget their Parkers and they won't forget you! COPR. 1941. THE PARKER PEN CO.

Look at all the fun and action you get with my new ERECTORS

It's colossal, boys ... that towering Erector army training parachute jump. You build it yourself. Piece by piece-with your own hands-you fit the long gleaming girders togetherattach the rigging for the four parachutes-and install the powerful Erector reversing electric engine ... and now for thrilling fun. Give the action signal by blowing the Erector whistle ... throw your engine into gear and your parachutes are hoisted up and up until they strike the release mechanism. Then, like a flash they plummet downward -unfold-and lazily float to the ground.

Now get a load of that mighty Ferris wheel. It whistles-twinkles with lightoperates in either direction at slow or high speed. *

You can build hundreds of spectacular, realistic mechanical marvels with one Erector set. And how the Erector electric engine makes them buzz with action! See my new All-Electric Erectors at your nearest toy store today. Take Dad along.
