Roosevelt Sends Note to Hirohito: Japanese Convoys Near Thailand; U. S. Takes Over Finnish Vessels

President's Action Looked on Here As Last Step

By BLAIR BOLLES.

President Roosevelt last night communicated a message directly to Emperor Hirohito of Japan -an unprecedented action-as disturbing reports reached the State Department that two large and heavily escorted convoys were seen yesterday morning steaming into the Gulf of Siam. which washes the shores of

At the same time, the State Department said its reports showed Japan had 125,000 troops in Indo-China, next door to Thailand, with 82,000 of them in Southern Indo-

The State Department, in announcing the President was sending the message, was completely silent on the nature of the communication, but diplomats viewed the step as an extraordinary-perhaps a lastchance-move to put up to Japan the whole burden of the preservation of peace in the Pacific. How the message was sent, at what time, whether it was an ultimatum or a plea-none of these questions was to be answered last night

The view was expressed by interested authorities that the Chief Executive of the United States has taken the longest possible stride in the negotiation with Japan by communicating with the highest authority in Japan, the "Son of Heaven," and that the President can go no

Next Step Japan's.

The next step, it was felt, is wholly up to Japan, for whom the movements yesterday of this country, the British, the Australians and the Dutch in regard to the Eastern Pacific sector were filled with warnings of war. That Japan stands on On Pacific Defense the very brink of war was the consensus in informed circles in Washington last night. A threat to Thailand would be the war's occasion,

There was some speculation here, too, whether the President's message to the Emperor did not contain a statement of dissatisfaction with the Japanese explanation given him yesterday as to the reason for Japanese troop movements in Indo-China. Once before, but indirectly, President Roosevelt communicated with Emperor Hirohito. That was defenses in the event of Japanese on December 13, 1937, in a mem- aggression, orandum presenting the American case for our demand for satisfaction for the bombing of the gunboat

Belgian King Reported Wed to Daughter of Ex-Cabinet Member

Sister-in-Law of Late Wife Confirms News; 'Incredible,' London Says

LONDON, Dec. 6.-A report broadcast by the German radio that King Leopold III of the Belgians had married Mary Lelia Baels, daughter of a former Belgian cabinet minister, was termed by Belgians here tonight as "incredible" and "strange," but in Stockholm the sister-in-law of Leopold's late wife confirmed it.

The German broadcast said the marriage of the King and Mile. Baels on September 11 would be announced in Belgian churches tomorrow in a pastoral letter by Bishop Van Roey of Belgium.

Stockholm reports said the marriage took place near Laeken Castle, Brussels, where the King has been living since he ordered capitulation of Belgian armies to the Germans in May, 1940. These accounts added that a civil ceremony would be held Monday.

The broadcast said the letter would state that children from the King's second marriage will be ineligible to succeed to the throne. that right being reserved for Leopold's two sons and one daughter by his first wife, Queen Astrid, who was killed in an automobile accident in 1935.

Described as Well Educated. In Stockholm, Princess Elsa Bernadette, wife of Prince Charles, who is the brother of the late Queen Astrid, said Leopold had married a well-educated, simple woman named Baels.

An English acquaintance of Mile. Baels said she was about 30. "She speaks English perfectly and is well read in English literature," the acquaintance said. "She, her mother and her sister came to Britain as refugees during the World "The girls were educated in a Nation-Wide Walkout Called by Welders For Tuesday

Refusal to Pay A. F. L. Dues Brings Lockout Threat on West Coast

A Nation-wide walkout of welders, which had its beginnings in a jurisdictional strike of 67 men on a $40,000,000 Morgantown, W. Va., ordnance plant, is scheduled for Tuesday unless there is Government

At odds with the American Federation of Labor over rejection of demands for a separate union, the United Brotherhood of Welgers, Cutters and Helpers announced yesterday the strike would be effective throughout the country Tuesday

Lloyd Payne, brotherhood secretary, in announcing the executive board's decision, said 75,000 men would leave their jobs in shipyards and defense construction projects. The union claims 125,000 members. In Los Angeles, where one small shipyard was closed and anotherat work on cargo vessels aggregating more than $75,000,000-was seriously hampered by a walkout several weeks ago, welders forecast almost immediate lockouts because of persistent refusal to pay up dues in the A. F. L. Boilermakers' Union.

Welders Expect Lockout. Employes at the big California shipyard were given mimeographed copies of a resolution adopted at a conference among O. P. M., A. F. L. and shipyard representatives, which promised no discrimination if union accounts were brought up to date. Accompanying the resolution was a statement by Vice President John A. McCone reading "The principles and policies stated in this resolution are binding upon and must be complied with by this company and each of its employes. Kindly . . govern yourself accordingly." Richard Hardie, a union spokesman, said "The A. F. L. apparently has coerced the management into such a stand. As a result we expect our members to be locked out when they go to work on the graveyard shift at midnight. Earlier, President Paul Gregory of the shipyards local had declared:

"We know that on Monday morning the A. F. L. will start pulling the welders' time cards and tell the companies to lock the welders out because they are in bad standing with the union. In that event, we're going to have trouble and plenty Working Pending Settlement. To which E. V. Blackwell, busi-ness agent of A. F. L. Boilermakers' Local 92, which has master contracts at the two shipyards, retorted: "We expect something like that to happen-sometime next week." West Coast welders have been working recently pending O. P. M. Friday Lt. Comdr. George M. Keller, on loan from the Navy to the O. P. M., said

"There will be no discrimination against welders for failure to maintain their union status * * * provided that they immediately cure

This brought a quick reply from National President Karl V. Morris: "This is slavery. The welders of this Nation will refuse to pay further tribute of any nature either to the A. F. L. or C. I. O." Heber James Brown of Oakland. Calif., attorney for the independent union, said President Roosevelt had been advised the brotherhood had no alternative but to strike.

Men Out at Morgantown. The welders, who tie together sections of steel and pipe into working parts of ships and buildings, are affiliated with various unions within the A. F. they may be attached The 67 men employed by a subcontractor on the Government's new anhydrous ammonia plant at Morgantown, struck two weeks ago, protesting what they called "dictatorial" practices of the steam fitters' local in Pittsburgh.

They were joined by others last week, to make the total number idle approximately 100. Army officers at the plant said construction had been seriously impaired.

Reclassification of Men Already Deferred Also May Be Necessary

Prospects that a new class of 21 possible military service at least by July 1 of next year appeared wirtually a certainty yesterday due to a pending acceleration of draft inductions accompanied by a fast-growing shortage of manpower.

A sharp upturn in the rate of inductions to carry out the Army's announced plans to expand land and powers the President to proclaim air forces to 2,000,000 officers and men will mean the drafting of approximately 500,000 selectees by next spring as a start on the program, officials estimated.

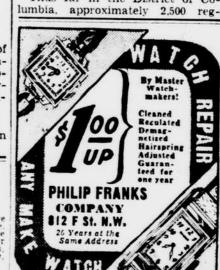

Many of these newcomers, of course, will have to be counted as replacements for men currently being discharged from the Army First indication that a shortage of manpower is becoming a serious problem came from Lt. Col. Joseph F. Battley, chief of the War Department's labor division, who contended that it may become necessary to reclassify and draft young men already deferred because of the nature of their civilian jobs.

Must Employ Older Men.

Col. Battley said that the time has come when defense industries must employ older men and those disqualified for military service because of physical handicaps in order to release potential soldier material for the service.

Discussing the possibility of re-classifying Class II-A men (deferred as necessary to the national health. safety and interest in non-defense fields) and Class II-B registrants deferred because of essential national defense jobs), Col. Battley said: "When our military manpower needs multiply vastly, when our industrial production levels off. when our industrial training programs succeed-and it seems tha all of these things are happening or will happen-then you will be told that it is the time to look into Classifications are more than 90 per cent complete, according to official estimates, and in many cases, particularly in the District, inductions are not lagging far behind classifications.

That a new registration day, similar to that held for the enrollment year-old youths will be called up for of 21-year-olds July 1, will be necessary during the coming year, possibly by late spring, is generally accepted in selective service circles. This would go far toward relieving the manpower shortage, as an estimated 1,000,000 American youths reach the age of 21 each year.

Speeches Are Banned At Annual Dinner Of District Bar

Honor Guests Include Members of Judiciary And Other Officials

Speeches were banned as several hundred members of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia last night joined in the 70th annual dinner at the Mayflower, with members of the judiciary and other officials among the honor guests.

Holman Willis of Roanoke and Riley Wilson of Charleston, noted raconteurs of the legal profession, occupied the place on the program that would have been alloted to speakers if there had been any speakers, and afterwards there was an old-fashioned minstrel show, with talent drawn from the ranks of the association.

In the cast were Dwight Rorer, interlocutor, and these end men: George H. O'Connor, Albert A. Stern, Charles D. Hayes, R. Aubrey Bogley, Jerome F. Barnard and John Cullen.

In the chorus were Ugo Carusi, Warren W. Grimes, John Paul Jones, William T. Hannan, Caesar L. Aiello, Robert R. Faulkner, Jean M. Boardman, John M. Littlepage. Frederick Stohlman, David A. Hart and Craig L. Reddish.

Connell Directs Performance. Sam Holland was the pianist, and Denis E. Connell directed the performance.

The finale was written by Donald R. Richberg George Maurice Morris was toastmaster. The guests of honor included: Solicitor General Fahy, Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner of the United States Court of Appeals, Associate Justices Harold M. Stephens, Justin Miller, Henry W. Axis Plot on Tampico Charged by Mexican

By the Associated Press. MEXICO CITY, Dec. 6.-A charge that the captains and crews of 10 Axis vessels siezed by the Mexican government at Tampico last April has plotted to destroy not only their own ships but the port of Tampico as well was made by Vice Admiral Luis Hurtado de Mendoza today.

Admiral Hurtado asserted the ships were loaded with highly combustible material and a plot had been discovered to set them on fire. with the object of spreading the flames to the whole port, where much gasoline was stored.

Boy Killed but Saves Dog

SPRINGVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 6 (AP). -Leland M. Weber, 17, spared the life of his dog today but lost his own in the act.

Young Weber and his father were cutting down a tree on their farm when it began to fall. Seeing the dog in its path, the youth tarried to save the animal and was struck on the head.

ORALE IS A WOMAN'S BUSINESS

Every time you listen to war news on the radio, you think

"How can I do more to help?" You go to First-Aid classes. You spend hours at the Red Cross. And still you feel a little apologetic because you're only a woman. You even feel guilty when you take time off for feminine things, like buying a new hat or getting your hair done. BUT, HAVE YOU FORGOTTEN THAT

SMALL, TERRIBLY IMPORTANT WORD "MORALE"? Have you

forgotten that morale is a woman's business, now, more than ever? The way you look affects so many people around you ... your family, your friends, even strangers who pass you in the street. To them, a woman's beauty stands for courage, serenity, a gallant heart ... all the things that men need so desperately these days. So the time spent in your favorite beauty salon every week isn't selfish or frivolous.

It's part of your job of morale. It's a woman's way of saying, "WE WON'T BE BEATEN!"

There are many people who have already given generously to the Red Cross, the Community Chest and other charitable organizations, but who still would not enjoy Christmas to the full if they had not helped bring a little special holiday cheer to some needy family. In this big city, in these busy days, is not always possible for us as individuals to seek out those to whom the Christmas season might be bleak and sad. Especially to the men and women from all sections of the United States who will be spending the holiday season in the Capital this year and will wish to carry on their traditional neighborly custom of Christmas giving, I commend the Christmas Campaign sponsored by The Evening Star. Their Christmas Is in Your Hands . . .

Cash or Toys Will Help in Bringing Yuletide To 6,000 Needy Washington Children

More than 6,000 Washington children will be without the kind of Christmas children should have this year unless some one outside their home helps them.

Here are brief glimpses into a few of those homes, into the daily lives of a few of the children whose parents can't afford Christmas. These glimpses are presented here in the belief that people who can afford Christmas will want to spread it beyond their own family circle and will want to know to whom their gifts are given.

You can help these children through The Star-National Broadcasting Co.-Warner Bros. Christmas campaign. Mail or bring cash gifts to The Star's Christmas House, Eleventh street and Pe sylvania avenue N.W. Your contribution will be acknowledged in the news columns of The Star. Take a toy to Christmas House or to any Warner Bros. theater, where collections are being made in the lobbies. Attend or send children to any of the 12 Warner Bros. theaters where "toy matinees" will be held on December 20. A toy is the only ticket of admission.

Nine-year-old Tom lives with his mother, four over them. Their father left them a year ago. Tom does his homework at school because there's not enough clothes. When they can't be fixed any more, Tom doesn't go to school. On those days he misses most there is nothing left over, they go to school without

Eight Children

Jimmy's friends let him play with their footballs once in a while. Jimmy's father isn't able to afford such things with eight children to feed. In fact, Jimmy, who is 14, and the oldest, and his sisters and brothers can't remember ever having a real toy. Jimmy has made a doll cradle for his sister Alice by cutting an oatmeal box in half. The smallest boy, George, plays with a wagon Jimmy made for him out wheels. As for clothes, Jimmy wears the cut-down trousers of his father, and the other boys get them as they are outgrown. Martha' jacket, now too small for her, is going to Davy as a sort of Christmas present, although the elbows are worn through and the zipper has broken, so the jacket has to be fastened with pins. Martha will get Jimmy's sweater. For the last month Jimmy's father has been too ill to work. He's hoping to get back on the job by Christmas. though the doctor said it would take longer for him to

Dick and May

Dick is the man of the family, at 13. He can barely remember his father, who died when he was 5. With his mother working. Dick's main job is to see that his sister May, who is 9. stays out of the street. Neither Dick nor May have had a new toy since their father died. Their mother's earnings just cover food and rent. Dick prizes a toy dumping truck he got the Christmas before his father's death. Two wheels of the truck are gone and the body is bent. May plays and sleeps with a Teddy bear whose ears are missing and whose body has lost most of its stuffing.

Three Sons

For the past several years, since the death of her husband, Mrs. Barnes has worked to maintain a home for her three sons, James, 11; Gene, 8, and Joe, 6. Last week, she was taken to the hospital and the doctors said she would be there a long time. Temporarily, their great-grandmother, who is blind, is taking care of the three boys. She cannot keep them indefinitely but she will keep them until the first of the year, rather than have them spend Christmas with strangers. James sells papers on Saturdays and Sundays and sometimes earns as much as 50 cents which he turns over to his great-grandmother to help meet household expenses. Despite her blindness, great-grandmother can sew a little and tries to keep the boys' clothes mended. She rarely goes outside so the boys run the errands. If she could afford it, great-grandmother would like to do something special for the boys this Christmas since it is the last holiday they will be together.

The Elkins Children

Since their mother died two years ago, the Elkins children, Eddie, 8; James, 6; Carol, 5, and Jessie, 3 have been sent from one relative to another. Nobody wanted four children permanently and their father didn't want to scatter them so now Mr. Elkins is trying to be both mother and father. He doesn't allow them to leave the house when he's not there, which is all day. It's a busy street. He can't buy toys for them but he finds old funny papers in trash cans. Eddie reads all except the big words to the younger children. His they live in a four-room frame house. Thomas, who is father has showed him how to make paper caps so he 14, keeps the floors scrubbed. The two girls, Beth, who and James can play soldier. Then he tears some of the is 11, and Dora, 9, do the cooking. When she's not trying papers into dolls for Carol and Jessie. Mr. Elkins had to make the smoky stove produce a little heat, Dora been putting money aside for a coat for Eddie. He's plays with Billy, the 7-year-old, in the back yard, been wearing two out-at-the-elbows sweaters to school. narrow dirt plot where they build play houses out of But Carol is convalescing from scarlet fever and the bushel baskets and pieces of board until Thomas needs doctor said she had to have good nourishing food. the wood to stoke the stove. They rarely see their other Eddie will have no coat this winter.

June and Frieda

June and Frieda, aged 3 and 4, take care of thembrothers and a sister in one downtown room. Tom selves from 7 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock at sleeps with his mother and two smaller children in the night when their Aunt Ida returns from work. Somebed where they share a single quilt. The other boys times a neighbor looks in to see if they are all right, sleep on the floor with a blanket under them and coats but they have learned to look out for themselves. For lunch, they help themselves to the food Aunt Ida has wood to keep the room warm and his mother can't left out for them. When they finish eating, they afford to buy much oil for the lamp. His mother stretch a blanket on the floor of their one-room apart-spends all her time away from work fixing over old ment and take their afternoon nap. They have already explained to Aunt Ida that if she would get them each the school lunch. In the mornings, Tom's mother a doll and carriage for Christmas, they would take warms up what the children had the night before. If turns putting their doll in the carriage. Aunt Ida promised their mother before she died that the children would be cared for, but feeding and clothing them is all she can manage. There's nothing left over for even a doll carriage to be shared.

The Grandchildren

Janie, who is 10, was taken to the hospital the other day. The three other children, Clara, 9; Tony, 7, and Dick, 12, keep asking their grandfather when she will come back. Janie is their cousin. All four chilof a match box, with milk bottle tops pinned to it for dren are orphans. They can't remember their parents. Both grandparents adored the children. Frequently their grandfather, who is quite old, went to work despite his arthritis, so they could have the right things to eat. A few weeks ago, Grandmother went to bed for a nap and didn't wake up. Grandmother had promised to curl Janie's hair and make her a new dress for the Christmas piece she was to speak at school Grandfather, whose few plans for Christmas for the children have been dashed by funeral expenses for Grandmother, hasn't told the children yet that Janie will not be with them for Christmas. She is suffering from the same disease that made them orphans and took their grandmother-tuberculosis.

The Daly Children

Jerry and Junior are the youngest of the five Daly children. They are 3 and 6 years old. They play with two old gloves they found. When they play out on the streets. Junior's toes slip out of his shoes and Jerry's jacket has to be pulled back on frequently because the front part of it separates and falls down. Dorothy, who is 8, and Bessie, who is 13, wash the dishes, clean the floors and try to keep their young brothers' faces washed while their mother is at work. Their chores frequently keep them out of school. Since their father's illness, the home is always cold. Before, the father had managed to salvage enough wood to keep the stove going. John. 15 years old and growing fast, is always hungry. When his mother makes meatballs from canned beef, they must be carefully divided. John's share is one. He would like just once to eat until he couldn't eat any more.

Jean and Her Children

On Christmas, as she does every holiday, 19-year-old Jean will take her half-sisters and half-brothers to visit their mother in the sanitarium. She has been mother and father to the three children since their own father went away. Until two weeks ago, the four of them lived in a damp basement room. Jean was able to move them to another room with a wood stove. Now that the scurrying in the walls doesn't keep them awake at night, Jean tells them that their warm room is her Christmas present to them. They understand that only children with mothers and fathers get toys for Christmas.

The Davis Children

When the parents of the four Davis children were killed years ago in an automobile accident, the children heard their uncles and aunts arguing about putting them in an orphanage. One uncle held out against it and since then he has cared for them alone. The others refuse to help. With their uncle and grandmother, uncles and aunts-never around Christmas time.

7,500 Axis Prisoners Counted in Libya, British Announce

Cairo Reports Continued Efforts to Reduce Enemy Mechanized Formations

CAIRO, Egypt. Dec. 6.-Axis war prisoners are being rounded up in Libya faster than they can be counted and now exceed 7,500, the British declared today as their forces continued efforts to whittle down German and Italian mechanized formations in a welter of minor actions.

British sources said the full initiative apparently lies now with the imperial armies in North Africa. but acknowledged that operations still were restricted to strong patrols and that there has been no new major tank fighting.

However, a resumption of largescale fighting was expected in British quarters as the weather improves. The British were reported in a better position for it than in the earlier stages of the battle.

It is the bring about the highest degree of purpose of the meeting to decide the method of approach in the present situation. Since we have held nearings on the Herring bill and ized all means of mediation and on the Ball bill-however, not on the Bridges bill—it is indefinite what the committee will decide in regard to hearings on the Smith bill. "In many provisions, the Bridges bill is included in the Smith bill. In the event hearings are held, they will undoubtedly be limited, in order to work with dispatch, to representatives of the National Defense Mediation Board, the National Labor Relations Board, Army and Navy, American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, the railroad brotherhoods, representatives of the independent unions. Representative Smith, the sponsor of the bill, if he cares to ttend, a representative of the National Association of Manufacrers, and a representative of the Inited States Chamber of Comnerce. of the Senate. Meanwhile, the Connally bill, providing for the seizure by the Government of struck national defense plants and for "freezing" the shop conditions, open or closed, during the emergency, is on the Senate calendar. It is the hope of Senator Thomas that Senator Connally will agree to let this bill rest, at least until after the Senate shall have an opportunity to consider the Labor Committee's proposed substitute for the Smith bill. The House, during consideration of the Smith bill, voted strongly against including in the measure a plant-seizure provision. Since the House has already declared its opposition to such legislation, it might be futile for the Senate to pass the Connally bill. Senator Connally said last night that he was anxious to get action on his bill. He said, however, he would confer with Senate leaders before determining what course he would pursue. He pointed out he could offer his bill as a substitute for the House bill.

"Then," he said," it will be possible to work out a measure with the best features of both bills."

Probable Procedure. Should the Connally bill be called up in the Senate, it is expected a move would be made to amend it by substituting either the Ball or the Smith bill, or perhaps both

Senator Taft, Republican, of Ohio and Senator Ball, both members of the Labor Committee, are in accord with the procedure proposed by Senator Thomas. Senator McNary, the minority leader, also has given approval Senator Pepper. Democrat, of Florida issued a statement vesterday demanding that the Labor Committee and the Senate bring out legislation which will have the effect of putting an end to strikes in national defense plants.

"I want to see the Labor Committee of the Senate take this Smith bill and go to work on it and fearlessly lay down a code of conduct that will drive oppressive labor practices, whether from labor or management, out of the life of this country," Senator Pepper said. "I say this as a champion of labor itself, for labor needs to be defended against some of its own embittered and avaricious leaders by by their efforts to use the noble cause of labor for personal aggran-

"The sooner real democracy prevails in labor organizations, the sooner the corrupt among the labor leaders (and there are only a relatively small number as compared to the whole) are thrown out, the sooner all labor shows itself willing to put the national defense above everything else, the sooner will labor regain the confidence and the solid support of the country and the Navy for major operations in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans." The year witnessed the "virtual transition of the Nation from a peacetime to a wartime footing, with tremendous industrial expansion for production of war material," the report said. The record of 2,059 planes was in contrast to the 306 added in the previous year, the Secretary pointed out. The additions gave the Navy an increase of 82 per cent in plane strength. Aircraft emphasis during the year was placed on dive bomber and fighter types with greater engine power and improved propeller design. An effort was made also, Mr. Knox said, to enlarge the complement of patrol bomber types.

Cruiser Which Sank Bismarck Destroys Third Nazi Raider

Dorsetshire Overtakes Converted Merchantman In South Atlantic

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Dec. 6.-Destruction of . another German raider-the third announced within a week-was credited by the Admiralty tonight to the cruiser Dorshetshire, the British warship which fired the final, fatal torpedoes into the German battleship Bismarck.

The communique did not identify the German raider, describing her only as a converted 10,000-ton merchantman, which was overtaken by the Dorsetshire and sunk in the South Atlantic.

Last Tuesday the Australian cruiser Sydney was credited with sinking the German raider Steiermark (also called the Kormoran) in Australian waters in a combat fatal also to the Sydney. The date of this fight was not given. The day before the Admiralty had announced that on November 22 the cruiser Devonshire had sunk another raider in the South Atlantic

Survivors Left Behind. In both the South Atlantic sinkings the Admiralty reported that the suspected presence of submarines caused the British victors to steam off without picking up survivors. Besides being noted for firing the last three torpedoes which sank the 35,000-ton Bismarck, the 9,975ton Dorshetshire also assisted in the destruction of the German freighter Wakama last April off Rio de Janeiro.

She caught her latest victim as the raider's seamen were loading oil and provisions into five boats alongside her, the admiralty said. The communique did not say when the action took place.

The communique said that when the Dorsetshire's scouting plane spotted the German raider the latter twed to escape, leaving the five boats behind. But the cruiser closed in swiftly and sank her.

Unusual Refueling. The business of the five oil and provision-laden boats beside the raider mystified even usually informed naval observers, who pointed out that refueling of submarines by such methods was difficult. These sources, however, were unclined to draw three conclusions from the two South Atlantic sink-

1. United States co-operation in North Atlantic convoy duty probably is freeing fast British warships to comb the South Atlantic more closely than heretofore for submarines and their supply sources;

2. Catapulted aircraft are proving a valuable aid in seeking out war-

Frank Statement Asked On U. S. War Aims

Frederick J. Libby, executive sec-tetary of the National Council for Prevention of War, said in a statement vesterday that the American people "should be told frankly and fully what Japan wants, what the British want and what we are proposing as potential mediators between Japan and China."

Characterizing the Chicago Tribune's story of War Department plans for a huge A. E. F. as "a patriotic service to the American people," Mr. Libby said the question does not hinge on 'what pleases Hitler,' but on the constitutional rights of the American people who are the final boss over such crucial issues as foreign wars.

The American people, he said have accepted the word of the President that our military preparations ere for national defense and not for foreigin wars. He added that neither Congress nor the people "have been consulted as to whether we want to go to war with Japan, 6.000 miles away, over Thailand or the other interests of the British

Maj. Gen. Trott to Retire From Army December 21

Mai. Gen. Clement A. Trott, now on duty in Chicago, will reach the statutory retirement age of 64 on December 31, and will end 32 years of active military service, it was ennounced yesterday.

A graduate of West Point in 1899. Gen. Trott has seen emergency service in the Philippines, Mexico and France. He was with the 83d American and the 21st British Divisions during the World War. For exceptional services he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal and the Silver Star for bravery.

Before the rearmament program started, Gen. Trott served in Hawaii and later commanded the 16th Infantry Brigade at Fort Meade, Md. In October, 1940, he was placed in command of the 5th Corps Area. Last September he was given special duty in Chicago.

Gen. Trott is an honor graduate of the Infantry-Cavalry School, a graduate of the Command and General Staff School, and of the Army War College.

Red Cross to Dispatch Medical Aid to Russia

The American Red Cross announced yesterday that a large portion of $5,000,000 worth of medical supplies will be shipped to Russia within 60 days. Most of the supplies are being purchased with funds made available to President Roosevelt by Congress for foreign war relief. Chairman Norman H. Davis announced, however, that the Red Cross would welcome private contributions for Russian relief work.

Two members of the recent Amerlean Red Cross delegation to Moscow, James T. Nicholson and Robert Scovell, are in Russia to complete arrangements for distribution of the supplies. The other two members, Allen Wardwell, chairman, and Dr. George Strode, recently returned to advise about purchase of supplies. The supplies will be distributed by the Union of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies of Russia.

Conference to Foster Home and Community Gardens Is Called

Wickard and McNutt To Address Session on Defense Food Phase

A campaign to encourage home and community gardens as a defense measure will be launched at a National Defense Garden Conference here December 19 and 20.

The conference has been called by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and Paul V. McNutt. Federal security administrator, who is director of defense health and welfare services. The campaign is in line with a joint recommendation of the Agriculture Department Garden Committee and the nutrition subcommittee of the office of defense health and welfare services.

Warns Against Unsuited Plots. Although this recommendation calls for more farm, home, fruit and community and school gardens, it cautions against converting city back yards, parks, playgrounds or other land unsuited for the purpose as in the last war. Better gardening of land already under cultivation is stressed

The conference is expected to attract representatives of national garden clubs, State extension services, the school systems, home garden and farm papers and seed and horticultural trade associations. Secretary Wickard and Mr. McNutt will be among the speakers.

Sees Other Foods Released. "Defense gardens will be a vital part of the food-for-freedom program," Secretary Wickard said in announcing the conference. "American farmers are pledging themselves to deliver the largest amount of animal protein foods ever pro-duced in this country in any one year. The eggs and cheese and pork they'll produce-and the planes and tanks our factories are turning out-will help lick Hitler. The defense garden program will release a larger amount of commercially grown vegetables for helping Britain and for improving the diets of people in our industrial centers." The importance of defense gardens for better nutrition cannot be over emphasized," said Mr. McNutt. "Fresh vegetables provide many of the important proteins, vitamins and minerals essential for good

Ren Fritman Separated From Parents at Parade In New York City

By the Associated Press. DANVILLE, Ill., Dec. 6.-Ren Fritman, who had spent a lifetime seeking his true identity, died yesterday at the estimated age of 97. He became lost during a parade in New York in 1852 and never saw his parents again. The name he bore was given him by a New York

Mr. Fritman fought in the Civil War and then came west to Indiana, where for 25 years he taught school in Carroll and Tippecanoe Counties.

Was Unable to Speak English. Mr. Fritman, who never knew when or where he was born, frequently told interviewers he thought that his parents brought him to America from Europe, probably from Germany, and expressed the belief that the inability of both he and his parents to speak English accounted for failure of the New York police to locate his father and mother whe nhe became lost in the crowd. The parade, he had said, broke up at Broadway and Twentyseventh street, and he stayed right there until the police found him.

The aged man said he recalled that he stayed at the orphanage. known as Randall's Island, until he was 12 years old, when he was sent to a farmer at Delphi, Ind. He stayed there about a year and then ran away. He enlisted March 20, 1864, with Company B, 17th Regiment, Indiana Volunteers. He gave the date of his discharge as August Advertised to Find Parents. Frequently throughout the years he advertised in newspapers trying to find his parents, without results. He also attempted to establish his identity by corresponding with the orphanage.

Mr. Fritman came to Danville from Lafayette, Ind., in 1927 after the death of his wife. He is survived by a daughter. Mrs. O. E. Williams, wife of a professor at Ohio State University at Columbus, Ohio, and by a grandson, Alan, also of

Ruhland to Seek Increased Funds For Health Work

Acts on Advice to 'Get Tough'; Mason Assures Support

By DON S. WARREN.

Very considerable increases in the Health Department expenditures for this fiscal year and next, to insure better protection of the health of Washington's greatly increased population, will be sought shortly by Health Officer George C. Ruhland, with the "general" approval of the District Commissioners, it was revealed last night.

Taking for granted that members of the House District Committee and the Board of Commissioners meant what they said recently when they declared he should "get tough" and ask for what he needs. Dr. Ruhland told The Star yesterday

"I will do so." At the same time, Commissioner Guy Mason announced the city heads would support proposals for advances of Federal funds for expansion of private hospital facilities, in view of the critical situation facing the National Capital. Something in this direction should be done, and done soon," said Mr.

As to specific items, Dr. Ruhland said he would seek early deficiency funds or additional regular appropriations for the next fiscal year for employing at least 50 more nurses, extra sanitary, restaurant, milk and boarding and rooming house inspectors, for constructing another wing at Gallinger Municipal Hospital to cost $600,000, and for a health center, or poly-clinic, in Anacostia, the third of the series he has planned.

Mason Assures Support. Commissioner Mason immediately responded that Dr. Ruhland would be given "all out" support. The Board of Commissioners "should and would" reserve final judgment on requests for any specific item, or as to the total picture. Mr. Mason said, but would support a general program for better health protection. That is all right by me," said Dr. Ruhland. "They are my superiors and so long as they give me general support, I am satisfied."

Dr. Ruhland asked District Building reporters to emphasize that Health Department officials were taking at "face value" recent statements of House District committeemen and spokesmen for the Board of Commissioners that the Health Department should "get tough" in meeting its problems, and should ask for necessary funds, and that members of Congress and the city authorities would support such re-

Waste Paper Collection Drive To Hit Stride This Week

Truck to Visit Schools On Regular Schedule To Gather Bundles

Washington's waste-paper collection campaign, showing an average daily increase of 50 per cent in the amount of material salvaged during its three days of operation, is expected this week to hit the stride planned for it.

Some confusion and delay occurred on the opening rounds of the collector's truck, but these difficulties have been ironed out. Collections will be resumed at 9 a.m. tomorrow on a regular schedule. Directors of the drive, sponsored by parent-teacher and home and school associations, in co-operation with The Star, pointed out that the truck will visit a fifth of the District schools each day and will have almost an exact time to reach each building. This will enable parents or teachers who are supervising collections at each school to determine approximately at what period of the day they should be on The truck will cover district 1, according to the schedule published daily in The Star, and will visit each of the schools included, beginning with Orr School. Tuesday's collections will be made in district 2 and, by Wednesday, the collector's route will start again over the same path covered on the opening day of the drive last week. 'Many of the schools already visited were unprepared because, their principals explained, they have been given so little time in which to broadcast notice of the campaign. But they gave assurance that their organizations would be complete by this week and that an enthusiastic response could be ex-

Man Marooned on Rock In Cabin Cruiser Rescued

Simon P. Smith of the 1100 block of Fourth street S.W., who police said was a guard at the Railroad Bridge, was rescued last night from a 36-foot cabin cruiser in which he had been marooned on a rock near the District side of the Potomac for about four and a half hours. Mr. Smith was taken from the cruiser at about 8 p.m. by police from the harbor precinct who used a rowboat to effect the rescue after an unsuccessful attempt had been made to tow the marooned boat from the rock with a motorboat. Mr. Smith was using the boat to patrol around the bridge when it became stuck on the rock, it was said.

A hole torn in the boat caused it to leak badly and Mr. Smith was bailing rapidly when police arrived. The cruiser, police said, belongs to Harry M. Purcell of Baltimore. Another effort was to be made today to float it at high tide Police were notified of Mr. Smith's plight by a man to whom he called on the bridge, it was said. Police who rescued him included Sergt. Franklin Morrette, Pvts. Charles A Parker, Frank McGrath and E. J.

Ruhland to Seek Increased Funds For Health Work

By DON S. WARREN.

Very considerable increases in the Health Department expenditures for this fiscal year and next, to insure better protection of the health of Washington's greatly increased poptilation, will be sought shortly by Health Officer George C. Ruhland. with the "general" approval of the District Commissioners, it was revealed last night.

Taking for granted that members the House District Committee and the Board of Commissioners meant what they said recently when they declared he should "get tough" and ask for what he needs, Dr. Ruhland told The Star yesterday: "I will do so."

At the same time. Commissioner Guy Mason announced the city heads would support proposals for advances of Federal funds for expansion of private hospital facilities, in view of the critical situation facing the National Capital. Something in this direction should be done, and done soon," said Mr.

As to specific items, Dr. Ruhland aid he would seek early deficiency funds or additional regular appropriations for the next fiscal year for employing at least 50 more nurses, extra sanitary, restaurant, milk and boarding and rooming house inspectors, for constructing another wing at Gallinger Municipal Hospital to cost $600,000, and for a health center, or poly-clinic, in Anacostia, the third of the series Loudoun Grand Jury he has planned.

Mason Assures Support Commissioner Mason immediately responded that Dr. Ruhland would be given "all out" support. The Board of Commissioners "should To Get Loveless Case and would" reserve final judgment on requests for any specific item, or as to the total picture, Mr. Mason said, but would support a general program for better health protection.

Civic Legal Group Calls Fire Engines Ineffective Above Forty-five Feet

The Montgomery County (Md.) Commissioners will be asked to amend the county zoning ordinance to place a height restriction on new apartment and commercial building construction by a resolution to be presented by Richard B. Barker, chairman of the Legislation and Legal Action Committee of the County Civic Federation, at the federation's meeting at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the Bethesda Elementary School.

Mr. Barker said yesterday that present county fire equipment is unable to take care of buildings more than 45 feet in height.

The resolution also will urge an increase in the space requirement for apartment house units. Present zoning regulations require 625 square feet for each family unit in an apartment house, which is insufficient, according to Mr. Bar-

Army Studies Plan To Teach Soldiers Facts About War

New Lecture Program To Follow Line Already Tried Out in Britain

These visi- alive international contacts. tors from overseas can tell the Yankee soldiers out of their own ex-Lofoten Islands or commanded sea search is accordingly reduced." fights on the Mediterranean.

Britain Using Program. The Morale Division here has been impressed recently with the ancient wisdom of Oliver Cromwell, the about his citizens' "new model army," remarked that the good soldier "must know what he fights for and love what he knows." The morale experts feel that "to know" for the American soldier means knowing what the shooting overseas is all about, and that means knowing in considerable detail the background of what goes on today. A similar program is already operating in England, although apparently the War Ministry has kept quiet about it. The English soldiers' lecture agency is called the Army Bureau of Current Affairs. In a desultory way the American Army has arranged lectures for the soldiers in the past, but many of them have been anything but morale builders. Recently Roy Bower, former American Consul in Munich, spoke at Fort Belvoir, Va., about the iniquities of the Germans and called for the leveling of Berlin to the ground by an American Expeditionary Force. The soldiers talking among themselves afterward were overheard giving disgruntled comments in reaction to what they considered an expression of an extreme point of view about the German people.

Fact, Not Emotion.

The thought which the Morale Division is said to hold is that Army men themselves should give the talks and make them statements of fact and not emotion, in order to promote knowledge and inspire illating discussion. It would be a broad supplement to the education in the narrow sense which already is available to the soldierlanguages, shorthand, craft-training and so forth.

In England non-commissioned officers as wel las officers give some of the talks, which are presented in training time, at rest intervals during exercises and at other odd moments, and occasionally as formal lectures or through informational motion pictures. The British experience in this revolutionary side bar of military training began when W. E. Williams, director of the British Institution of Adult Education, approached the War Ministry last August with his idea for the A. B. C. A. He has now a special War Office staff of men with a wide knowledge of economics, the world in general and of education. This staff supervises the camp lecturing, which the regimental officers often find a difficult problem because their time is so heavily occupied with the pressing matters of purely a military nature.

War and Current Affairs. Williams' office sends to the camps weekly broadsides of information as the basis for the lectures. One broadside is called "War," providing military information in the widest sense and presenting short narratives of what is happening in war operations in various parts of the world. It also describes the outstanding achievements of the three British military services, the Army, the Air Force and the Navy.

The other broadside is called "Current Affairs," compiled by students of events of the day. It contains the fruit of much study and information and usually has a few maps to illustrate happenings clearly. The two broadsides are published fortnightly "War" comes out one week and "Current Affairs" the next, giving the lecturer and the soldier a happy mixture of news and discussion about fighting and politics.

Six former British newspapermen now in the Army write "War." The circulation of the broadsides and the operation of the program is almost wholly limited to the British Isles camps now, but the British hope to include in the extension course the Indian troops and Dominions armies eventually. The Tommies already have heard talks about - among other things-the Monroe Doctrine. the way the Gallup polls are carried out and the mechanics of the lease-

Lectures for British Here.

These topics reflect the great interest in American affairs which now has become widespread in England and among the British every where. The working newspaperman here receives frequent inquiries from the British nowadays for the most detailed information about dry aspects of American life which we take for granted and about which the average American has never bothered to find out a graet deal. This British curiosity has inspired a program of 12 lectures for the benefit of the British colony in Washington—now 4.000 strong—on American life. "Our Hosts and Their Country," is the title of the The first lecture was given by Dr. C. W. Thornthwaite, University of Oklahoma geographer, on "Land of America," with lantern

Urges Extraordinary Powers for Cabinet For 45-Day Period

State of Emergency

By the Associated Press.

HAVANA, Dec. 6 .- President Fulgencio Batista today asked Congress powers to rule by decree for 45 days. "The time has come to adopt the give extraordinary measures required by national defense," President Batista said in his message to Congress. The message did not name specifically the powers which Batista asked but he called for a state of emergency as provided in the constitution. "The preparation of Cuba for defense consists," Batista said, "essentially, of co-operation with the United States," which he described as "the great Nation to whom we are

Death Toll Will Turn German People Against Hitler, Says Dr. Ragatz

Dr. Lowell Joseph Ragatz, professor of European history at George Washington University, yesterday told a gathering of high school students that general uprisings among the conquered peoples of Europe are certain by next spring, but he warned the defeat of Hitler will not be complete until the war is carried to the heart of Germany itself.

Dr. Ragatz, who last spring forecast Hitler's invasion of Yugoslavia, Greece and Russia, predicted Germany's huge death toll finally will turn the German people against "The defeat of Hitler will cost considerable blood and money." he insurance against another great war in another generation or so.

"The war should be carried into the heart of Germany itself. The icine. They must be thoroughly defeated but then given a square deal in the peace settlement."

Military Training Approved. Dr. Ragatz spoke before a lunchthe District and nearby States athigh school debate conference.

The students earlier in the day adopted resolutions voicing approval of a continuing program of compulsory military training of youth below the present draft age. This subject, chosen as the topic for high school debates, was argued at the opening session of the conference by a representative of the Selective Service System and a speaker from th People's Lobby. The conference declared such a program "would lessen our liability to future emergencies," improve this Nation's foreign relations, benefit the health of American youth, reinforce the American educational system and would be in perfect accordance with democratic principles. A strong minority argued, without success, that universal conscription would be detrimental to the character of American youth.

War Picture Improves. Dr. Ragatz told the group that the war picture has improved in recent weeks, but that many people still permit "blind fear, terror and belief in the inevitability of a sighted a burning merchant ship Hitler victory to grip their minds." on the horizon, with another standcause Hitler has not won "one single We asked if more help was needed great contest." Oliveira Salazar, Premier of Portugal, gave this correspondent tonight the first interview he has granted any American or European correspondent in nearly 10 years. In all Europe there is no chief of state more inaccessible, nor one whose personality is less revealed to people

It is an assumed fact in Europe that this secluded statesman, an eminent scholar, an economist and a humanitarian of high reputation in intellectual circles everywhere, may some day be one of the few acceptable mediums through whom the ultimate readjustments can be accomplished in Europe.

Even today Dr. Salazar stands as the one man, amid all the European tensions and alignments, who has the equal and absolute confidence of Eastern, Central and Western Europe, Scandinavia and the Balkans Visits Immense Palacio.

I was escorted to the immense white Palacio de San Bento, where the legislature meets. It was deserted except for two guards at the door and a sentry. I was ushered into an elevator, taken to the second floor and through a series of rooms to a beautifully paneled reception room. Premier Salazar received me at once in his official quarters, a large suite with magnificent tapes-

the announcement from Washington, released here today, that after January 15 no export licenses would be granted to a number of foreign countries, including Portugal, and asked his permission to quote him directly in answer to my question as to what effect this stoppage of American imports would have on his country. Dr. Salazar authorized

"We are a marginal importing nation, and the effects of this policy would be extremely serious and unfortunate for my people. Unlike any other country in Continental Europe, except Spain, our seacoast is at present open to the United States and most of the things we need are available to us from no place else in the world. In the case of wheat, for example, our maximum production is sufficient for seven or eight months' minimum consumption and we must import the marginal four or five months' supply from the

'This is likewise true of petroleum, for which we are absolutely dependent in full on America. All our industry and most of our transportation, including the distribution of foodstuffs, depend on American oil shipments. Portugal cannot maintain herself without them. It is impossible to overstate the importance of this matter to the economic and social life of my country. "We need very little, but what we need is needed very badly. We have large dollar balances in the United States, which we placed there long ago. We have always paid for every transaction immediately with these and we are fully prepared to do so in the future. I deeply hope that this policy toward Portugal may be reconsidered in Washington at once." (Copyright, 1941.)

(Dr. Salazar, formerly professor of economics at the University of Columbia, has been virtually dictator of Portugal since he became Premier in 1832. He had been taken into the cabinet in 1928 as Finance Minister. On several occasions he has reaffirmed Portugal's centuries-old friendship with England, while insisting that his country must remain neutral in the war. In December, 1940, diplomatic circles in Vichy reported that Dr. Salazar was sounding out the European belligerents on the chances of bringing about a negotiated peace.)

Maritime Commission Offers Tankers for Sale

The Maritime Commission announced yesterday that it would dispose of to private operators its 123 high-speed tankers, now being constructed, and which will be available for commissioning late next year and the first part of 1943. Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the commission, in a letter to the oil industry, said that "in line with the policy established by the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 the commission desires, if practical, to place these vessels under private ownership and operation." He said that the commission earnestly solicited the co-operation of the industry in carrying out this proposal. The tankers are single screw, turbo-electric drive, of 10,750 gross tons, with a capacity of 138,000 barrels, and a speed of 141/2 knots.

Defense Cabinet Post Proposed by Kilgore Wins Quick Support

Mead and Norris Back Suggestion for Single Responsible Head

By the Associated Press. A proposal to centralize administration of the defense program under a new cabinet officer attracted strong support in Congress today. with Senator Mead, Democrat, of New York, declaring that some such plan must be adopted if "little business" is to be saved from destruc-

This plan is embodied in a bill introduced by Senator Kilgore. Democrat, of West Virginia. It calls for the establishment of a department of defense co-ordination and control with jurisdiction over all defense purchases and over the utilization of industrial resources.

The projected department, headed by a new cabinet officer, would control allocation of scarce raw materials to industrial plants.

In offering the measure, Senator Kilgore said he believed the time had come for co-ordination of the defense effort under one responsible Mead Supports Plan.

Agreeing with this idea, Senator Mead told reporters that he believed such a setup would facilitate the spreading of Government contracts to smaller concerns, eliminate waste and give non-defense industries a better chance of obtaining needed materials.

"Something ought to be done, too, about these lobbyists and highpressure people who are running around Washington," the New York Senator declared. "I'm beginning to think that one responsible head of the defense program might get that

Senator Norris, independent, of Nebraska said he favored placing a civilian in charge of the production program-one who would be concerned with keeping costs down and with spreading the contract work to all sections of the country.

Hearings to Come Soon. Chairman Reynolds of the Military Affairs Committee, to which the bill was referred, said he would order hearings on it soon. While not committed to the proposal, Senator Reynolds said he was convinced that steps ought to be taken speedily to "eliminate waste, duplication and competition among Government agencies" in the defense

Church Federation Asks Scientific Tests For Drunken Drivers

Also Proposes Some Official Supervision Of Wrestling Matches

Scientific tests for drunken drivers and city control over wrestling matches were recommended to the District Commissioners last night by Washington Federation of Churches.

The proposals were formally presented to Commissioner Guy Mason in letters from Wilbur La Roe, jr., in his capacity as chairman of the federation's Committee on Civic Announcing that certain tests for drivers had been conceded by Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer fo the District, to be "practicable," Mr. La Roe suggested that conferences be held with scientific experts in the matter in the "hope" of developing a basis for legislation in the District.

"So-called drunken driving of automobiles is becoming a major public menace," wrote Mr. La Roe 'Up to the present time there has been no recognized standard in the District of Columbia for determining whether or not such an offender is under the influence of Explaining he had discussed the matter both with Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech and with Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, Mr. LaRoe said the present boxing commission does not desire to supervise wrestling.

"No other agency has control at the present time," he added, "with the result that so-called wrestling 'matches' are being staged, especially between women, in comparison with which a bull fight is quite a decent

"It would be a simple matter to provide by law that no wrestling match shall be lawful in the District of Columbia unless those sponsoring it show that it will be a bona fide exhibition of wrestling skill and obtain a permit for the match. Major Kelly, who appreciates the evils growing out of lack of regulation, has indicated to me his willingness to be responsible for the issuance of such permits."

Mme. Litvinoff, Born In British Nobility, Known as Novelist

Mission Here Will Be Her First as Wife Of Ambassador

> By RUTH COWAN, Wide World News.

Uncle Sam and his wife are in the audience waiting for the curtain to go up on the new scene of "Life at the Red Embassy.

That scene will begin when a woman born into the British nobility takes over as official hostess for the proletariat at an imposing gray stone mansion that a great American fortune built.

She is Ivy Low Litvinoff, wife of Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet's new Ambassador to the United States and deputy foreign commissar in his homeland. They are due to arrive in the capital today.

Ivy Low, the name by which she is known in American literary circles, has ink in her blood.

She is the daughter of the late Sir Walter Low. British scholar. Her mother, the former Agnes Herbert, was a novelist and critic. She is the niece of Sir Sidney Low, noted historian, who wrote "Governance of England." Another uncle, Sir Maurice Low, was a former Washington correspondent for the London Morning Post. She is a cousin of the wife of Anthony Eden, Britain's foreign secretary.

Praised by Masefield.

was natural that Ivy Low should write. She is the author of "The Ghastly Beast," a novel praised by John Masefield, Britain's poet laureate. In recent years she has made English translations of Russian children's stories, which have been published in this country.

Mme. Litvinoff is not only a woman of culture, but one of charm and personality. She is considered striking in appearance. Her pictures are those of a woman with strong clear-cut features. There is intelligence, warmth and wit in her expression. Her hair is now graying.

She has the courage required for adventure-she proved it when she took the step from a conventional English drawing room to the role of wife of a foremost revolutionary in the 20th century Russian political experiment. She and Mr. Litvinoff were married in 1916.

There are details yet to be filled out in Ivy Low's romance with the hero out of a Russian revolutionary novel, but it is not unlikely that she met Mr. Litvinoff through their mutual interest in writing.

In a calm phase of his career, Mr. Litvinoff edited a legal newspaper in 1906 in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad). Involved in revolutionary intrigues, he was forced shortly afterward to flee the country and eventually reached England. There for about 10 years he was a publisher's clerk by day and a political philosopher by night.

First Envoy to Britain.

The Russian revolution of 1917 brought him reward for his years of. work. He was appointed first Soviet Ambassador to Great Britain. But that did not open diplomatic doors for Mr. Litvinoff and his wife. The Court of St. James' was not ready to receive a representative of the Bolsheviks.

But Litvinoff remained in England, denounced in the press and under almost constant surveillance. In 1918 when Bruce Lockhart, British consul-general at Moscow, was arrested as an agent-provocateur, Litvinoff was seized as a hostage. Within a few weeks arrangements were made for exchange of the two diplomats, and Lityinoff was permitted to leave England. With him and into a land of chance went his

Meanwhile he was busy in Europe thawing the diplomatic ice. He was Soviet foreign commissar for nearly a decade until 1939 when Europe again broke out in flames

During these years, and especially while he was head of the Russian Foreign Office, his wife was hostess at many important diplomatic events, some as brilliant as those held in her native land.

Taught in Russia.

Mme. Litvinoff also found time for her educational interests. She encouraged the Russians to study English and she taught the subjects in Russian universities reach their new home. The house over which Mme, Litvinoff will preside is a many-room three-story structure on fashionable Sixteenth street, an avenue of imposing embassies and legations. It was built in 1910 by Mrs. George M. Pullman, widow of the sleeping car magnate, but she never lived there. It served as the Russian Embassy for the Czarist government for several years before the revolution of March, 1917. It was then taken over by the Kerensky provisional government, which was officially recognized by the United States for five years. From 1922 until this country's recognition of the Soviet Union the mansion stood vacant. When the Soviets reopened it in 1934 it was sumptuously refurnished, but the orders to the decorators were to keep it much as it was in the days of the Czars' gold braid.

House of Luxury.

Mme. Litvinoff will find herself in a dwelling of Oriental rugs, red carpet-covered stairs, handsome draperies. In the chests are heavy silver services and fine table linens. That one may not forget that one is in the official home of the proletariat, there is a large oil painting of the October Revolution at the head of the main stairs. Mme. Litvinoff will likewise find a long invitation list, because the Soviet Embassy in the past seven years has been the scene of some of this party-going town's most lavish

1942 Voting Unlikely to Relax Democratic Grip on Congress

Pressure Groups Will Be Active as Well as G. O. P., but Opposition Lacks Cohesion and Money

By Raymond P. Brandt.

The announcement last week that the America First Committee would actively participate in the 1942 primaries and elections by supporting those who "oppose further steps to involve us in war." was a reminder that pressure groups as well as the two major political parties are making plans for next year's contests for the Seventy-eighth Congress.

In the present Congress, the Democrats enjoy a majority of 105 in the House, with 267 members against 162 other parties. In the Senate the Democratic majority is 38, with 66 members against 28 Republicans. Two Senators represent other parties.

Even if the Republican party were not disorganized, disunited and nearly bankrupt, there would be little likelihood that these majorities could be overcome next year. As it is, the professional Democratic politicians at the National Committee headquarters and in Congress are smugly confident they will encounter few troubles next November. They boast that they probably will pick up 10 seats.

Chairman Joseph W. Martin, jr., of the Republican National Committee is making the customary pre-election prediction that his party will win 50 to 60 new House seats and cut down the Democratic majority in the Senate. Of the 31 Senate seats to be filled next year, 22 are held by Democrats and eight by Republicans, Senator Norris, Independent, of Nebraska has announced he is not a candidate for re-election. Senators from the Solid South hold 10 of these seats. They will either be reelected or succeeded by Dmocrats. The Republicans would be lucky if able to show a net gain of six Senate votes.

Situation Differs From 1918.

Although there has been no formal declaration of war, the forthcoming election has been compared with that of 1918, when the Republicans regained control of the House in the face of President Wilson's plea for a Democratic Congress as a symbol of national unity. Despite superficial similarities the situation today-or as it is likely to be next yeardiffers fundamentally from 1918.

Vandenberg of Michigan, McNary of Oregon, House Minority Leader Martin of Massachusetts, Representatives Wadsworth and Fish of New York, Michener of Michigan and Dirksen of Illinois. Among the Republican Governors the most prominent and promising are Harold Stassen of Minnesota, Dwight Green of Illinois, Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and John W. Bricker of Ohio. District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey of New York is bidding for fame and if he becomes the next Governor of New York he will rank with personal following among the Republicans. Former President Herbert Hoover and former Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas have shrunk to political insignifi-

Charles Evans Hughes had barely been defeated for the presidency two years before and in the Senate were such hardboiled politicians as Penrose and Knox of Pennsylvania, Lodge and Weeks of Massachusetts, Curtis of Kansas, New and Watson of Indiana, Harding of Ohio, Fall of New Mexico. Many of these former campaign pleted coffers of the Republican party. a deficit, but their withdrawal from the militant Republican forces is a primary reason for the present defeatist state of the Republican organization.

The anti-Roosevelt bloc, while bitter and vociferous in its well-organized days, was not especially effective in elections. The 1934, 1936, 1938 and 1940 elections demonstrated that. Its power next year probably will be less.

The other issues will be the war situation, military and non-defense spending, taxes, the growing strength of organized labor, farm subsidies, rising prices and the plight of small business. As chairman of the Republican National Committee, John Hamilton used to base national Republican policy on the votes of his party members in the House. This solution is unworkable today. While most of the House Republicans are voting noninterventionist and for labor-curbing legislation-traditional Republican policiesthey also are voting for larger appropriations, bigger farm subsidies and against effective price control legislation along with the Democrats. Some of the more frank Republicans in the House admit they are looking out for themselves regardless of what might be national Republican policy. This is not unusual in non-presidential election years.

Whether as a natural industrial development or as a result of New Deal legislation or both, organized labor is more class conscious today than it has ever been. The A. F. L. and the C. I. O. each claim a membership of 5.000.000 workers. If these 10,000,000 workers and their families could be forced to vote as a class conscious group on a detailed labor program, they would be the most powerful single force in an election. In the past they repeatedly ignored orders however, when organized labor will have flight to the main floor. Whispers follow him as he makes his way directly to the office of Miss Grace Tully, the President's personal secretary, and takes his place at a small desk in one corner. Sometimes he goes directly up to the quieter room where the cabinet meets, spreads out his papers and calls in the men he wants to see.

The whispers fly through the lobby and out into the city that Judge Rosenman is in town. Which means that big doings are afoot. President Roosevelt has called in his most important unofficial adviser.

"Sam, Harry and Felix are the fellows who talk things over with the President." says one man who sometimes gets in on these conversations himself. But Justice Samuel Irving Rosenman of the New York Supreme Court is the most available for important tasks.

Harry L. Hopkins' health is shaky, and his time is largely taken up with affairs of the lease-lend office, of which he is administrator. Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court obviously is not in a position to act for the President in any but an Unseen and Unpublicized.

Unseen and unpublicized, Judge Rosenman has worked for Franklin D. Roosevelt since 1928. Except when he edited the collection of the President's official papers in 1937, the White House has made no public reference to him until

Last summer it confirmed reports that Judge Rosenman was making a study of O. P. M., O. P. A. C. S. and other agencies and out of this study came the machine known as S. P. A. B. Early in November the White House again confirmed rumors that Judge Rosenman was digging into the much-criticized defense housing situation with a view to having the set-up reorganized, and later the President himself referred during a press conference to the judge's housing brain trust and the last of that group to remain in the innermost circles of the White House, a man who for 13 years has stood successfully all the tests for a friend, adviser and helper on the part of an exacting and phenomenally active

Judge Rosenman is a very happy man. At 45 he has achieved his lifelong ambition to be a judge, makes $25,000 a year and has the job until 1948. He has two sons, to whom he is a pal and a playmate, and a bright, busy little wife (who is a leader in New York public housing activities and a consultant to Charles F. Palmer, co-ordinator of defense housing).

Judge Rosenman has a world of friends and, it seems, no enemies. The late Louis Howe, Mr. Roosevelt's early confidant, reputedly is the only man who ever quarreled with Judge Rosenman, and the two were at daggers' points most of the time.

Vivid Sense of Humor. Judge Rosenman's idol and the symbol of all his interests is President Roosevelt, his closest friend. He is able to be of tremendous service to his friend and makes himself available at all times, tossing off with no difficulty the arduous labors of a judge. So anxious is he to be available when the President calls that in his apartment in New York he has an unlisted telephone. One of his sons, when asked by his teacher to furnish his home telephone number, refused, ganized farmers. At the recent C. I. O. convention, leaders announced a $200.000 fund to unionize the oil workers in the South. Part of this program calls for abolition of poll taxes and active participation in primaries and elections against Senators and Representatives with

"anti-labor" records in Congress. This is the same technique announced by the America First Committee. It is a revival of the old Anti-Saloon League, public utility and railroad strategy of non-partisan support, which includes financial contributions to those candiwill vote. The Anti-Saloon League's campaign was directed by shrewd men, possessed of expert knowledge of practical politics and inspired by an almost religious zeal. It is doubtful whether the leaders of organized labor as yet have this shrewdness, experience and enthusiasm.

The Professional View.

Professional politicians are concerned with the mechanics of primaries and elections. Federal and local patronage, in their eyes, takes precedence over issues. In one respect the Republicans are in better shape than for some time. Of the 48 States, 20 have Republican Governors, and many of the larger cities have Republican or non-partisan Mayors. These Republican States include such important political units as Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Massachusetts and Wis-

The professionals also want support from the proper people. Mr. Willkie knew this when he announced he would speak in behalf of those Republican candidates who have voted for the administration's foreign policy. Mr. Roosevelt knows it, and while he may formally deny that he is taking an active part in a primary or an election, he can be conference remarks which can only be interpreted as his advocacy for the reelection of a favorite. The failure of his "purge" in 1938 has probably taught him that it is bad politics, even for a President, to try to bring about the defeat of an opponent.

His court decisions are seldom overruled, and he is fast making a reputation as a fine liberal judge—in the tradition of Cardozo and Brandeis, who, it is said, are his models. He is a national leader in Jewish educational and social welfare institutionals, to which he devotes much of his time.

He has a free laugh and a vivid sense of humor. In the Albany days he functioned as court jester, the way "Pa" Watson does now. He has a large, finely shaped head, topped with thick, sandy hair. He has sharp, brilliant eyes, an aguiline nose and a broad, generous mouth. His friends describe him as "cherubic" for his innocent, good-natured expression and his plump physique. Al-He is a sturdy veteran, creator of the | though he is only 5 feet 8 inches tall, he weighs well over 200 pounds.

His Appetite Terrific.

Judge Rosenman has a terrific appetite, and hunger is the only thing that ever seems to irritate him. During long, weighty day-and-night conferences at the White House he devours all the sandwiches, coffee-and especially the malted milk-that the chef sends to him. Miss Marguerite Le Hand, the chief presidential secretary, ordered double chocolate ice cream sodas to keep the inner-Sam contented.

He never smokes, and he drinks liquor very seldom. Steaks and chocolate in every form are his chief gustatory delights. He cooks steaks for his friends over an open fire at his camp at Blue Mountain Lake, in the Adirondacks, and does an excellent job of it.

He loves picnics and outdoor frolics, yet he loathes exercise. He contends exercise is unhealthy and unpleasant. so why bother with it. His idea of a violent outdoor life is sleeping late, lying in the sun in a bathing suit and dangling a fishing line from a boat in which he can be comfortably seated. He is a great reader and conversationalist. Games bore him.

He enjoys motoring-driving his car, as his wife says, "with judicial temperament; he'll never get stopped for anything but blocking traffic."

Neither money nor position laid the foundation for Judge Rosenman's climb to his position next to the throne. He was born of humble parents in San Antonio, Tex. They took him to New York City when he was 8, and there by dint of a struggle, he obtained an excellent education, an A. B., with highest honors, at Columbia University in 1915 and an LL. B. at Columbia Law School in 1920. During the first World War he entered the Army as a first lieutenant. always on the bench, he faced two velt. She sent Mr. Rosenman. Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Rosenman saw much of each other during the next few months, and when Mr. Roosevelt was elected Governor he asked young Mr. Rosenman to become his legal counsel. Mr. Rosenman hesitated. He wanted to run for the State Senate. He asked the advice of one of his chief sponsors. State Senator Nathan Straus, who is now United States housing administrator, and Mr. Straus fold him to hitch his wagon to Mr. Roosevelt's star

And this he did. His chief qualification, besides being an extremely able lawyer, was his ability to act as a liaison man between Gov. Roosevelt and Tammany Hall, whose mutual associations were strained. He could be depended on to carry messages straight each way.

Turbulent years followed, and the Governor's legal counsel was in one of the hottest spots. Mr. Seabury's investigations were going on; Mayor Jimmy Walker was hauled before the Governor to answer charges. Political dynamite mines were planted all around.

Named to Court Vacancy.

Mr. Rosenman grew closer to the Governor all the time. He and the Governor would sit up late with Mrs. Roosevelt on Thursday nights, when condemned men were executed at Sing Sing, in order to be on hand for an instant call in case of a clemency appeal. Mr. Rosenman and Mrs. Roosevelt used to inveigle the Governor into a card game to try to take his mind off the harrowing ticking of

The Governor would appear to laugh and forget the time. He showed no awareness of the hour when midnight struck and the executions began. But promptly at 12:30 a.m., when they normally were over, he would invariably lay down his cards and say, "Well, let's stop." In March, 1932, Gov. Roosevelt had the opportunity to give the 36-year-old Sam Rosenman the gift he most desired when a vacancy occurred on the Supreme Court bench. The governor made this statement when he appointed him

"This act of mine today is one of the most unselfish things of my life, because I am cutting off my right arm. * * * During the past three years Mr. Rosenman has been of very intimate and essential help to me personally in the conduct of the administration. The term of the bench expired in February of the next year and Mr. Rosenman resumed law practice. His first partner was Susan Brandeis, the daughter of the late Supreme Court justice. In July of 1933 he was reappointed by Gov. Lehman to fill another unexpired term, and in the fall of that year he was in that election came only after prolonged resistance from Tammany, which seemed by then to have cooled toward Mr. Roosevelt's protege.

Rosenman and the governor one night in the spring of 1932 were planning the campaign for the presidential nomination, trying to figure out a program to get the country out of the economic depression, and it was then that Mr. Rosenman suggested that Mr. Roosevelt ought to have an economic advisory council. Instead of relying on the usual politicians to plan his speeches and campaign, borrow the best brains of the universities, Mr. Roosevelt agreed, and the brain trust was born.

On Flight to Chicago.

Mr. Rosenman has been at Mr. Roosevelt's side during practically all of the crises and critical periods that followed. During the Democratic convention, while the other advisers went to Chicago, Mr. Rosenman stayed with the candidate and was "the man at the other end of the wire" when any one called from the convention headquarters. After the long, breathless wait, word of the nomination at last came through, and Mr. Rosenman hurriedly enplaned for Chicago. While the plane tossed and bucked headwinds, the two labored over the acceptance speech, cutting and revising to make it fit the party's platform.

U. S.-Japanese War Is Absurd Economically, Writer Asserts

Each Country Would Have Little to Gain, but Tendency of Great Conflicts to Grow Larger Asserts Itself

By Felix Morley.

greater absurdity than war between Japan and the United States could be imagined. The normal commercial relationships between these two nations are almost unique for their freedom from serious competitive problems. In nearly all important particulars Japanese-American trade is complementary and mutually advantageous to the very interest in both countries.

The primary Japanese export to the United States has for many years been raw silk, an agricultural product in which no American farmer is interested stockings and underwear is much desired by the aforesaid farmer's wife and daughters, to say nothing of the urbanized section of our feminine population. Beyond the individual satisfactions which this silk affords, hundreds of thousands of Americans have come to depend for their normal living on the various phases of its transportation, manufacture and distribution.

On the other hand, Japan has become dependent on the United States for a major share of articles and commodities which read like an index to America's basic production. In recent years this country has supplied from one-third to four-fifths of all Japanese imports of cotton, wheat, oil, leather, lumber, automobiles, machinery and diverse steel products. The amount of employment provided for Americans by the Japanese market in all these lines has also been Stoppage of Trade.

Since last summer this mutually beneficial trade has been completely stopped, though the substitution of a war economy prevents the effects of the change from being universally apparent. We no longer buy any Japanese silk, tea, brushes, camphor, toys, grass rugs, pottery, embroideries, pearls or other articles which used to be furnished by that country. Japan no longer receives from us the far more essential products which we used to ship across the Pacific.

There is already economic war between that "shooting war" difference is that actual fighting would permanently and disruptively terminate that long era of harmonious commercial interchange which has been of incalculable benefit to the people of both

From the political viewpoint it is equally impossible to see any long-range advantage which can be expected by either the United States or Japan from the war in which both countries are very reluctantly preparing to engage. Fulfillment of Japanese hopes for "a co-prosperity era in Greater East Asia' depends entirely on achievement of a peaceful working agreement with the now well-established nationalistic gov-"the China incident." In consequence less to accept the latter's domination.

Japan's Desperation.

Since Japan has failed to subdue an unaided China in four years it is certain that this objective would not be ad- strength to affect the outcome moves vanced if the enormous strength of the instinctively towards participation in the United States is thrown without reser- | melee along the lines which seem to vation on the Chinese side. The mere fact that the Japanese government is now clearly willing to take the huge risk sible indication of the feeling of desperation which now controls the empire.

On the other hand, there is nothing going to war with Japan. If we should stroving our best market in the Far East and in converting a treasured friendship into a bitter and permanently revengeful attitude on the part of the Japanese inate China it is at least equally im- | foundation.

From the economic viewpoint, no possible for China, even with American assistance, to dominate a defeated and sullen Japan. In fact, to anybody who come must seem utterly fantastic. The Chinese have great virtues, but not even years has as yet demonstrated their ability to govern their own huge country efficiently, let alone the socially more advanced and experienced Japanese.

United States Position Mixed.

Only in friendly co-operation between China and Japan is there any real promise for Asiatic stability. And such cooperation the United States has done little to forward. First, we inadvertently aided Japan against China; now we aggressively aid China against Japan. The situation might have been happier if we had more resolutely and consistently tried to forward that mutual agreement, which would be as profitable for us as for the two principals.

Such hopes, however, now seem water under the bridge, or nearly so. Paradoxically, both Winston Churchill and Adolf Hitler seem to be one of mind in viewing war between Japan and the United States with equanimity. And in the fatalistic attitude which rules, both in Washington and Tokio, there is little which promises to turn a tide now rising rapidly toward actual hostilities.

The threatened war in the Pacific promises less than no gain for either Japan or the United States. Whether it would be any more advantageous for either Great Britain or Germany, both of which are now reduced to taking gambler's chances, is hard to say.

There would be long-range gain for Great Britain in having this country definitely committed to fighting as an outright ally. There would be shortrange gain for Germany in having American attention and military supplies at least temporarily diverted from Europe and North Africa to the Far

However, neither the increasing recklessness in Berlin and London, nor the willingness to disagree in both Washington and Tokio, entirely explains the drift toward a Japanese-American war which, viewed by itself, is simply preposterous. Other factors are involved and unless they are understood nothing will be gained by all the additional suffering and sacrifice, chaos and calamity, which now looms over the horizon.

War Pulls All Countries In. There is a clearly defined tendency, obvious from 1914 to 1918 and agein since September, 1939, for a war involving any two of the great powers to draw all the others into its orbit. So pronounced is this tendency that it might law of international politics.

Finland's New War

There is more than irony in the relentless march of events which has brought forth a formal declaration of the existence of a state of war between Great Britain and Finland. For Americans, and for the people of Britain and Finland as well, it is a truly tragic state of affairs.

For the time being, it does not appear that the British declaration will bring any material change in a condition which has existed for some months. Britain's naval blockade was extended to include Finland last June, and diplomatic relations were officially severed on July 28. Thus, the immediate consequence of the pronouncement of a state of war probably will not amount to much more than a formal recognition of the status quo.

But there is the future to be considered, and this is painful to contemplate. At the moment, it is believed in some quarters that Finland's minimum war aims anticipate the occupation of East Karelia, a vast territory which has never been a part of Finland as we know it today, although the population of the area is preponderantly Finnish. Under Russian development, according to the Finns. East Karelia has become a gateway for invasion of their homeland, and it is on that assumption, presumably, that Finland has based her supposed plans for staying in the fight until the territory is occupied. There is no indication, however, that the Russians intend voluntarily to surrender East Karelia, and there that issue

On the face of things, it seems preposterous to suppose that Finns and Britons would ever shed each other's blood over an issue so remote as East Karelia. But issues, under the spur of war, have a way of losing all semblance of their original identity, and there is some indication that this may be the case with Karelia. Commenting on the British declaration, Finland's President, Risto Ryti, is quoted as saying that Europe's salvation hinged on war against Bolshevism. If that means that Finland proposes to keep fighting until Soviet Russia is beaten, Britain's formal declaration of a state of war, made on the twentyfourth anniversary of Finnish independence, may be but a distressing prelude to a fight to the end between these two exponents of all that is finest in European democracy.

Fighting Chetniks

The Chetniks are fighting again for Serbia and news dispatches tell of their successes against the Germans. A great battle against three Nazi divisions in the valley of the western Morava River; the destruction of a munitions dump with the death of 1.500 persons at Oujitza, Serbia; the execution of a Serb "Quisling" general-all these are but the latest of their reported exploits and betoken the strength of the Serbs' traditional struggle against oppression. The Serbs thus are giving the most emphatic demonstration of any of the occupied countries of refusal to accept Axis rule. The war goes on in Yugoslavia in continuous guerrilla operations which signify the existence of the closest thing the Allies have to a second continental front against the Axis. Cut off from the rest of the anti-Axis world, the Serbs, undeterred by mass executions, have reverted to Chetnik tradition and Chetnik tactics to expel the invader.

The Chetniks are the modern torch-bearers of the spirit of those earlier Serb guerrillas, the "hajduks," who helped win Serb freedom from Turkey early in the past century. They take their name from the Serb word "cheta" (small band) and whenever Serbia has gone to war or suffered alien oppression they have risen to the fight.

Today, in a struggle which requires all the daring, skill and strength they have ever possessed, it is the Chetniks, their ranks swollen with hordes of regulars who refused to surrender, who lead the fight. Their commander is General Draja Mihailovic, who was a prominent Chetnik in the Balkan and World Wars, and who in 1939 took command of all the Chetnik battalions assigned to the five Yugoslav armies. With him is the aged Kosta Pechanats, who has fought as a guerrilla since youth and who in 1916 landed | concentration of Government activibehind German lines by plane and ties in this city, there is plainly a not always mean a soft drink. stirred the Serb populace to revolt.

bacle of last April. They obtain their supplies by raiding German garrisons. They snipe at sentries and frequently make large-scale forays against German-held towns, working hand-in-hand with the peasants. Their operations have been so successful that they are now engaged in what appear to be fullfledged military operations, holding positions in defense of a specific mountain territory. Invaluable to them is the work of their women, many of whom are enrolled directly in the organization. The feminine Chetniks not only smuggle supplies, serve as couriers and carry on elaborate espionage, but frequently engage in battle with the German troops, sacrificing their lives for Yugoslavia. It is by such an indomitable will to victory that the final defeat of Hitler will be achieved.

No Time to Cut

The demonstrably effective work of the District of Columbia Defense Housing Registry is being threatened by a curiously ill-timed decision at Work Projects Administration headquarters to cut the clerical personnel which, since last March, has been performing increasingly important work in locating desirable housing for defense workers. Under the circumstances, there should be an increase in this clerical force, rather than a reduction, and it is desirable that W. P. A. reconsider its decision.

The defense registry project represents a successful co-operative undertaking to meet the housing problem in a practical way. Opened last March by a committee of the District Civilian Defense Council, the Board of Trade has obtained contributions for a manager's salary, telephone bills and other incidentals; the municipal government has provided the space, light and heat; the inspection of available rooming quarters has been done by volunteer workers and the Alley Dwelling Authority has inspected available rental homes and apartments. W. P. A. has furnished the clerical personnel and the Division of Defense Housing Co-ordination-which has established some 200 such agencies throughout the country-has helped to publicize and otherwise to promote the work of the local registry and has planned to expand it.

About 1,000 persons a month, most of them in the lower salary brackets, have been placed in satisfactory living quarters through the registry and there are now some 5,000 rooms listed as available. Government personnel officials have come to rely on the agency to solve many immediately pressing problems for defense workers brought to Washington.

It is doubted if W. P. A. is furnishing a more valuable service anywhere or that W. P. A.'s need to curtail extends to this vitally necessary defense work.

Their Christmas

When Newman S. Sudduth, a Star artist, was asked to illustrate the appeal of the 1941 campaign sponsored by The Star, the National Broadcasting Company and the Warner Brothers theaters in behalf of a happier Yuletide for the needy children of Washington, he drew a picture which certainly dramatizes the issue with a poignancy not possessed by even the most meaningful words. The composition is reproduced elsewhere in The Star today. Once seen, it will be remembered for a long time. The joy of the boy riding his new bicycle in the street contrasted with the speechless misery of the boy to whom the holiday is merely an occasion for heartache tells the story with a conviction that could not be surpassed. It is the hope and the aspiration of the directors of this year's effort that they may provide the neglected child with the only proper answer to the question:

What did you get for Christmas?" Perhaps by the morning of December 25 Mr. Sudduth may have justification for a second-and infinitely less sorrowful picture. It lies in the power of the people of the Nation's Capital to direct his pencil and his brush to such a pleasant end. Not much is asked. The friends of childhood in Washington are invited merely to contribute to the making of the merriest kind of Christmas. Money or new toys or new clothing are wanted-not for adults, not for grownups, just exclusively for the Civil Aeronautics Board in October for navigating their planes in the District air space reservation indicates that violators of the regulation will face disciplinary measures. The action of the board should serve a useful purpose, therefore, in impressing upon airmen the necessity for complying with the law.

Extending from points east of the Capitol and the Union Station to Dupont Circle and New Hampshire avenue, the air space reservation embraces those parts of the city in which most of the Government buildings are located, including the White House, the War and Navy Departments, and the new defense agencies. A plane crash in this area might not only cause a loss of life, but destroy, by fire or otherwise, valuable Government papers and files. With the United States embarked on all-out defense effort, the safeguarding of this area against such dangers has assumed an added importance.

The air space reservation has been laid out to reduce to a minimum these hazards. Airmen should familiarize themselves with the bounaries of the reservation, and obey the regulations by keeping their planes out of the prohibited area in the District.

Bible Week

During the first World War Rear Admiral Reginald Rowan Belknap was engaged in laving the North Sea mine field which helped to bottle up the German fleet at Kiel. Now that a second great emergency has developed the same energy and devotion which he manifested in 1917 and 1918 are being applied to what properly may be called the purposes of spiritual defense. He is acting as chairman of a Committee of One Thousand to make the American people conscious of the religious background of their distinctive way

"We are not only threatened in a military way," Admiral Belknap says, but by alien doctrines and ideals, more powerful for the destruction of a nation's future than any physical force. You cannot kill an idea with a bomb. Let us look to our most powerful weapon, the Bible, which for two thousand years has been unquestionably the strongest force in the world, the very symbol and foundation of democracy."

A casual glance at the history of American civilization suffices to show that the sentiment thus expressed is abundantly justified. Each separate stream of immigrants sion. From the Scriptures came the Declaration of Independence, the ideal of the common good established in the Constitution, the philosophy of honorable individuality confirmed in the Bill of Rights. In every crisis of the past three centuries the people of the Western-the newer-half of the globe have turned for aid to the Gospels. So, in the prevailing emergency, Admiral Belknap and his committee, working in close collaboration with the Laymen's National Committee, Inc., of which Dr. Frank Kingdon is chairman, have designated the week beginning today as 'First Annual Bible Week." They ask the help of all men and women of religious conviction to the end that there may be "national realization of the part religion plays in our government—a realization that our spiritual defense must keep step with our military preparedness."

A Sure Cure

A glance at the average Japanese newspaper shows columns of hieroglyphics representing the very acme of indignation against America. In contrast is one bunch of hen tracks, the brain child of Ichiro Kewose, member of Parliament. He politely thanks our President for humanitarian services in repairing Kewose's health. It seems that since the American gasoline embargo he has been forced to do much walking and this, together with a shortage of sugar, also attributable to American action, has cured him of diabetes.

Mr. Ichiro Kewose is quite welcome. Uncle Sam has now taken out a doctor's license, and is qualified to practice, with a variety of treatments. He has, in fact, made a specialty of Japanese ailments, especially delusions of grandeur, expansionism, and adhesions to the Axis, and has the right medicines at hand. Withdrawal of gasoline is merely one of hundreds of prescriptions which, it is hoped, will effect a gradual cure without the necessity of the knife.

How the United States Equipped Japan for War

By Owen L. Scott.

If and when shooting starts in the Pacific, there will be little argument about the responsibility, probably never in history have the responsible officials of one nation been as patient in dealing with another nation as President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull have been with Japan.

This patience has been shown throughout the past eight years. It is apparent in just about every known variety of conciliation. It has been a patience so long suffering that if now there is to be shooting, the United States will be at a disadvantage in some respects due to past efforts to please the Japanese. Certainly there is little or nothing in the record to suggest that President Roosevelt has sought a fight in the

As matters now stand Japan probably is better supplied with reserves of vital war materials than any other nation. She is reported on very good authority to be prepared to fight for between one and two years on the stocks of oil, metal and machinery that she stored up. The bulk of this material was supplied by the United States at a time when this country's own war industries were being allowed to deteriorate.

A Japanese Navy that now might move out to fight the United States Navy would be a navy built largely of American materials. Some armor plate for Japanese battleships was made in this country. The oil that drives the engines of Japan's Navy is largely American oil, and the aviation gasoline that provides fuel for Japan's airplanes is largely American gasoline.

Japan's war industry today is using scrap iron and scrap steel from immense stockpiles built up through purchases in this country. The American steel industry is suffering from shortages of scrap due in important part to the amount of this metal that was allowed to go to Japan. At the same time, the machinery used in Japan's war industry is American machinery to an important extent.

It is almost as though this country. by its policies of recent years, had built up an army, navy and air force in Japan, only to find that its own creation was turning out to be an enemy. All of this was done to buy Japanese friendship. That effort obviously did not succeed. When Japan joined the Axis a few months ago President Roosevelt finally decided that the time had come to stop selling her the vast quantities of oil, gasoline, steel, copper and machinery that this country had been selling to her so that Japan could build immense stockpiles of war materials.

Then it was too late. Japan had built her navy up to its present peak strength. She had fortified many of the Pacific islands that she had agreed not to coming to America from Europe fortify. She had moved into positions brought the Book as a sacred posses- that threatened to flank the American outpost in the Philippines. She was in doctrine of equality set forth in the a position to strike at the one remaining supply line into China. Yet to show again this country's patience, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull have agreed in the past few days to open American markets to Japan if only the Japanese would agree to accept a few basic principles that must underlie any friendly relationship between nations. The Japanese government appeared not to be interested. It professed to be offended by the prospect of an opportunity to regain prosperity and stability, preferring instead to take on the hazards of a test of strength.

The Japanese, relatively, are stronger today than they probably ever will be

The reasons are several. For one thing, Japan's Navy is reported to be bringing into service two new battleships that are larger and faster and more heavily armed than any in the British or American Navies. These battleships, of course, are built principally of American materials. At the same time the United States Navy is divided in order to carry on its Atlantic patrol. That division permits a concentration of battleship strength in the Pacific, but leaves the Pacific fleet short of destroyers and of

Likewise Japan's air force is about as far advanced as it ever is going to be while the United States is only now swinging into stride. Every day that passes finds the United States growing stronger. War industries in this country are beginning now to produce. Aircraft production is above 2,000 a month, while Japan has trouble turning out each month 250 planes of now antiquated design. American shipyards are grinding out merchant ships and naval vessels in numbers that soon will begin to be very impressive. The new American Army is taking form and American tanks and guns are starting to flow out of factories in a stream that permits diversion of some of them to the

While this is going on, the Japanese see that they are being forced to eat into the stockpiles of American materials that they built up in the past. Once those stockpiles are reduced there won't be new materials to fill the gaps. In other words. Japan's days are numbered unless, first, she is willing to resume friendly relations with this country, or, second, she is able to crash through to conquests in the Pacific that will open to her the sources of raw materials that It seems that in Japan, where the decision is being taken, there are three groups, each representing a point of view. One group, representing the conservative elements in business and finance, has wanted to resume friendly relations with the Inited States. A second group, representing less conservative elements in business and much of the navy, has wanted to play for time. This group expected eventually to fight the United States, but it preferred to wait for an opportunity that Hitler's conquests might open. A third group, representing the army, has been anxious to start a fight and get it over with. President Roosevelt and Mr. Hull have thought that with care they could win over enough elements in Japan to avoid war. That explains why for many years the United States went on selling Japan the very materials that were vital to this country's own defense if war should come. The policy of supplying the Japanese with everything they wanted to buy was stopped only when Japan formally joined with Hitler and Musso- of force may represent the only kind of They declare that in each of the 17 lini. from St. Paul's gifted pen, he employs a metaphor that has become increasingly familiar to us today. It has to do with dier to meet the stern perils that must attend him in his exacting service. He says, "take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." In detail he suggests what this equipment must be, and urges that it be complete and adequate to meet every emergency. Put in modern language he would say: "You are called to go forth against what may prove superior odds. You have a task that will call for something more than your equipment. You need a kind of preparedness that will give you moral courage and strength to stand up against all your enemies. Your armament is essential, but behind it must reside qualities of mind and spirit that will stabilize you in the time of your severest testing, wherefore, be possessed of that kind of fortitude and strength that will enable you to resist and overcome that which is evil and being possessed of this you will be able to stand and ultimately to triumph."

What he says is applicable to every severe trial to which we may be subjected. A man needs more than that which another's hand and brain have fashioned. There is an armor of the soul, the investment of which does more to strengthen the will and prepare it to fulfill its task than all strong armor that clothes the body and encases it in steel. In the quarrel scene between Brutus and Cassius, in "Julius Caesar," the former to defend himself against false accusations says:

"There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats: For I am armed so strong in honesty,

That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not." His defense was not in his Damascus blade, or in his battle shield; it was in the finely tested qualities of his character, the enduring strength of his blameless life. There is a conflict in our modern world, even as there is a conflict in every man's soul. To overcome all that is false and mean and base calls for fitness, for moral worth, the equipment of the soul. In

In one of the most striking passages | emergency that may arise. We are once again building the physical strength of America, making it ready for any service it may be called upon to perform. Our leaders stress morale as indispensable. It is a quality of mind and heart that is quite apart from training; it has to do, not with the training of the eye, and head and hand; it is more than physical gifts and alertness in action; it concerns the moral and spiritual qualities of each man, it is the dynamic of the spirit, the driving and sustaining power that enables him to withstand in the evil day, and overcoming every obstacle, gives him power to endure.

> In another place, St. Paul admonishes "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," and as he contemplates his own life as it draws to a close he writes: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." This is the triumph of one who had done all, suffered all, but was erect and resistant, even to the end. We are in a world that tries men's souls; we need all that we possess of moral and physical strength to fit us for trials that lie ahead. It becomes increasingly clear that what we have to overcome is more than flesh and blood, it is, "principalities and powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, spiritual wickedness in high places." If we are to be made fit and ready, we shall have to challenge the true strength of our manhood and womanhood, we shall have to be more than an arsenal to give succor to those with whom we are confederate and for great principles. The soul of America must be aroused, her moral and spiritual qualities evoked, her true character revealed. In other great crises these have been made evident and seemingly insuperable difficulties overcome, because the high qualities of American character at its best were called into action. There is a danger now, as always, that as a nation, we shall depend overmuch on our resourcefulness and our mechanical skill, our riches and our power. These are not enough. If we have grown indulgent, grown soft in moral and spiritual qualities, the time is at hand to resort to ways and habits that in other days made our fathers fit to resist and overcome all trials and all obstacles. "Wherefore, take unto you the whole armour of God, challenges our mettle, we again are called | that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

Capital Sidelights

Senator William H. Smathers of New Jersey has just returned from a bear hunt on his preserve of about 10,000 acres in the heart of the Great Smoky Mountains. Three bears (1.000 pounds) cially proud of one of them that fell before the gun of Senate Page Richard H. Rogers the first time he had ever shot a high-powered rifle and the first bear he ever saw in the woods. Another bear was shot by the Senator's law partner from Atlantic City. The party drove 120 miles out from Waynesville, N. C., where the Senator was born 50 years ago. He graduated in law from the University of North Carolina when he was only 19. The preserve which the Senator and a group of friends own is almost completely surrounded by the Federal park and is one of the best hunting and fishing grounds in the Eastern United States. Wild turkey and grouse abound and in clear pools 10 and 12 inch trout can be seen playing in the sun. The party had the very unusual thrill of seeing and hearing a pack of hounds fighting a bear on both sides of the mountains from them at the same time. December 7, 1891, printed a The really hard work of the hunt was carrying the 1,000 pounds of bear 3 miles over the roughest and steepest mountain and about 5 miles down the path. By general agreement and on motion of House Leader McCormack, a position was created for former Representative "Jim" McAndrews, who was defeated in the last election by Representative Charles S. Dewey of Illinois, who, as former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was responsible for reduction in the size of paper bills. The new job is exclusively for "Jim." who is now 79 years of age, and expires with him. "Handsome Jim." as he has been known for many years, is an outstanding figure, unusually tall and squareshouldered, and as courteous and affable as any man in Congress. Throughout his entire life he has shared his prosperity with less fortunate people and has been noted for his unostentatious charities. He is a native of Woonsocket, R. For years the late Representative Edward Kenney of New Jersey fought in Congress for a measure to legalize a national lottery as a means of supporting the Government. Now the subject has been taken up again in a very serious way, when the Government is many billions in debt and with no end in sight. It is recommended by a delegation of five members of the House Appropriations Committee who have just returned from an official inspection trip through Central and South America.

The World's Youngest Capital

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Recent awarding of a contract for the construction of a $450,000 Georgian building in Canberra, capital of Australia, to be the first Legation of the United States to be erected on that continent, is a reminder that Australia has the youngest capital in the world. Moreover, Canberra was modeled after Washington and with it has many things in common.

Twenty-eight years ago Australia's capital was only a vast tract of open sheep country at the foothills of the Australian Alps, and existed only on blueprints and drawings in the Chicago office of Walter Burley Griffin, a townplanner and disciple of Frank Lloyd Wright, one of America's foremost architects.

Today, sheep still graze on broad pastures within sight of the low white building which is the seat of the Australian national legislature. The wide avenues and boulevards of Griffin's plan curve through lines of exotic trees, free of houses between the huge administrative buildings and the constellation of planned suburbs. Only about 12,000 people live in the capital. They are all government officials, their families, members of Parliament and newspapermen, the nucleus of a great city that has yet to grow. Meanwhile, decisions affecting Australia's wartime industrial development and armed dispositions in three continents are made in the idyllic atmosphere of a rural Utopia.

Canberra is probably the only 100 per cent political city in the world. Except for essential public utilities, it has no industries, unless government and administration can be called an industry. All its inhabitants from janitors to ministers talk politics, making it the world's easiest working territory for political correspondents. If nobody else knows, some waitress can probably tell what happened at the last cabinet meeting. "It is," wrote a veteran Canberra correspondent, "a capital cut away to show the moving parts. On a clear day a lobbyist can be sighted 3 miles distant."

The founders of Canberra had a definite purpose in mind in locating the capital in the wide open spaces and far away from other places. The six states of Australia federated in 1900. At that time the two large cities were Sydney, Australia's oldest city, capital of the senior state of New South Wales, and Melbourne, younger, richer capital cf Victoria. Each feared that the influence of the other would dominate the new federal government, and one clause of the Commonwealth constitution was that the seat of government should not be within 100 miles of either city.

From many angles, Canberra is an American invention. The whole Australian constitution and its federal system were modeled on the Constitution of the United States, and Washington, D. C., was the model for the federal capital It was an American, King O'Malley, an immigrant from California and minister of home affairs in the first Australian Labor government, who decided on Canberra from 50 sites suggested as the future capital. It was the sort of dream an American could understand, to plant surveying pegs on a great empty amphitheater of grass and forest, and decide it would be the capital. Like Andrew Jackson, when there was a dispute as to where the United States Treasury Building should be locatedplanting his cane into the ground, he exclaimed: "Right here is where I want the cornerstone."

Canberra is 230 miles from Sydney and 430 miles from Melbourne, 1.900 feet above sea level on rolling country below the snow-clad Australian Alps, threaded by the winding Molonglo River, that joins the Murrumbidgee to flow 2,500 miles to the Indian Ocean. Canberra is an aboriginal name. Anthropologists argued about what it meant, and to this day no one knows the meaning of the word. But the name stuck, although other names were suggested. Time was when Canberra was known to the press and public as "the city of the hollow log." That was before the 8,000 .-000 imported and native trees had been grown on its geometric avenues. Later, and before buildings were erected, it was called the "city of foundation stones." Like Washington in its early years. Canberra was often referred to by still other uncomplimentary names. Today Canberra is one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and Australians, somewhat to their surprise, find one of their once most criticized national projects a leading tourist attraction where the curious go to see how politics work in the bush.

There are other American angles to Canberra besides its conception, its founder and its architect. As in the District of Columbia, the residents of Australian Capital Territory do not vote. From time to time the citizens, as in Washington, complained loudly of this, but not so loudly as they complained of another constitutional deprivation, the right to drink.

Probably few Americans know that the United States' style of prohibition was in force in another part of the world, not merely through imitation, but actually imposed by an American. King O'Malley, who looked like a bearded forty-niner, was really a fanatical dry. and in 1913, quietly made an ordinance forbidding sale of beer or liquor in Federal Capital Territory. This did not matter in 1913 for nobody lived there. But when the capital was officially occupied in 1927 and officials, clerks and others moved into the untenanted city, it began to matter very much. A sleepy village called Queenbeyan, a few miles from Canberra and outside the Federal Capital Territory, became the national speakeasy. Queenbeyan boomed with big hotels to deal with the week-end flow of thirsty officials, newspapermen and members of Parliament away from the arid capital.

That, however, is all in Canberra's past. As the plans of the Chicago planner continue to take shape in stone and trees, the city that was once dubbed by ill-sounding names is on its way to becoming one of the world's most beautiful capitals. Erection of a legation to house our country's representatives in this distant land will be a step in that

Danger of War in Pacific Grows, With Tokio-Washington Parleys Near Stalemate

Review of 118th Week of War

Japanese troops pouring into French Indo-China; a mighty British fleet, led by the giant battleship Prince of Wales, steaming into gun-bristling Singapore; America's Army of the Far East, under dapper but tough Gen. MacArthur, on wartime alert in the Philippines; fierce diplomatic tension in Washington.

British and Axis armies, highly mechanized but battle-weary, reorganizing and attempting to unscramble their criss-crossed lines in North Africa. Russian armies roaring back from what looked like defeat and disaster in the Caucasus, driving startled German forces out of Rostov; other Russian armies and even civilians fighting desperately, not winning perhaps but still not losing the battle of Moscow. Sinister political pressures, mixtures of flattery and threats, directed against an old man, Vichy's Petain, as Nazi Germany pursued her conquest of a once-proud French Empire.

Paraphrased, these were headlines in last week's war.

Far Eastern Front

It would be difficult to say today what might have been the most important of these developments but from the standpoint of America's future-whether we ing months, or days-nothing exceeds the immediate implications of all Far Eastern movements.

For few are in disagreement that Washington today is in a bad temper with Tokio, that the Philippines we once considered indefensible against a major attack are now armed and bulwarked to a point where there is confidence of ability to fight off any presently envisioned assault, and that unqualified is this Government's determination to keep China alive and on its fighting feet.

In this latter circumstance rests the necessity of keeping open the one great supply line between the stolid armies of Chiang Kai-shek and the munitions factories of America—the romanticized Burma road.

Already, American engineers have studied this highway of freedom, its construction, maintenance and operation. Experts trained in the tough early years of motor transport in this country are now en route to administer the job as their compatriots figured it needs done. And over the winding 700 miles of this ribbon of war material already are droning vigilant Americanbuilt fighting planes, many of their "honorably discharged" from service in the United States Army and Navy.

It is written in the cards that American equipment of all kinds, manned by American fighting men, will move into battle action as soon as Japanese threats materialize against Burma, Singapore, the Philippines, or the rich Dutch Indies.

By clearing Rostov, it also restores to Russian use some strategic facilities for marine operations within the land-locked Sea of Azov. Other Developments

Fitting closely into these two battles of Russia and North Africa was an announcement by Washington on Wednesday that defense of Turkey had been found vital to defense of United States and that henceforth this strategically located European-Asiatic nation would be granted lease-lend assistance.

Acknowledgment that such aid already had been flowing to uses of Ankara government by way of Britain did not reduce fact that public announcement was open gesture of friendship for Turkey, that it was

Turkey service of notice that we have joined in diplomatic battle to win favor of that government, and that there may already have been some assurances given that when faced with alternative of fighting with one or another, Turks will throw in with anti-Axis bloc.

There were scattered developments of interest and import in this past week.

One was the meeting of Marshal Petain and Admiral Darlan, heads of Vichy France, with Nazi Marshal Goering. Much speculation followed this rendezyous, from cession of French naval bases and her fleet to German proffers for French exploitation of occupied South Russia, but no authoritative announcement or action has yet come from either Berlin or Vichy

Another was disclosure of vast anti-Fascist plotting within Italy, including terrorist sabotage of munitions plants and assassination attempt against Premier Mussolini. According to government charges leveled at arrested conspirators they were motivated by "democracy and liberalism . . . Communism and terrorism."

Britain's House of Commons approved by 326 to 10 a proposal by Prime Minister Churchill that there be conscription of women from 20 to 30 and that men be called to service between 1812 and 51.

Getting tough, Britain presented an ultimatum to Finland, Hungary and Rumania that they should quit fighting Russia by Friday midnight. Unsatisfied with response, London said curtly on Saturday that henceforth these countries would be considered "at war" with Britain, and vice versa.

Finnish forces for months past have been driving Russians back from areas occupied by Reds after 1939-40 conflict between these two nations. Finland to this point, however, is not formally a member of the Axis, and has denied that she has been fighting Berlin's war.

Secretary Hull has had more to do with directing American policy in the Far East than has President Roosevelt. The Chief Executive has felt impulses, as in 1937, to put an end to Japanese provocations, but Mr. Hull has pursued a more restrained course, one consistent with what he believed to be the wishes of the American people. While heartily disapproving Japan's actions, he gave her the benefit of the doubt. Mr. Hull, like many others, believed war would prove disastrous to humanity, and he did not want the United States to be guilty of loosing upon the world the holocaust which envelops it today.

Few people really know our Secretary of State. The Nation at large has great respect for him because he appears to possess a mild and dignified manner. Dignified he is, but those who know him would never describe him as mild.

Mr. Hull is no diplomat in the strict sense of the word. Until he became Secretary of State he had nothing to do, except at a distance, with international diplomacy. But during the many years he was in Congress he made a careful study of world economic questions, tariffs among them, and was convinced that unequal distribution of wealth and unbalanced tariffs were

Thailand is perilously close to the Burma road, the sole remaining artery through which China can draw fresh blood from the western world. Any interference with Thailand by the Japanese would probably mean the closing of this last Chinese lifeline from the outside world, and since America is determined not to let China down, an attack on Thailand probably would be considered a cause of war by this The Secretary of State's firm attitude was due to his conviction that help to China must proceed unhampered by any power. It was a most astute diplomatic move.

While horse-trading went on in Washington, German agents arrived in Chungking, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's capital, and warned the Chinese commander in chief that the Reich could save China while the United States and Britain could not. Japan must dance to Berlin's tune, Capt. Fritz Wiedemann, Adolf Hitler's chief emissary in China, said, and if Gen. Chiang would agree to an armistice with Japan, even though it might at first appear disadvantageous to the Chinese, the Reich would see to it that China finally would come through

The Reich's past gestures of friendship for the Chinese people should be an ample guarantee of the Fuehrer's good intentions, the Chinese were told. Capt. Their motives were thoroughly selfish. he contended, and as an illustration he reminded the generalissimo that the democracies never agreed to relinquish their obsolete rights in China's principal ports-Tientsin and Shanghai-and that they have never relinquished their extraterritorial privileges, which originated at a time when China was treated as a backward country in which the white man considered himself outside the law of the country. The German game was as obvious to him as it was to us. If Herr Hitler could persuade the generalissimo to accept an armistice with Japan, thus allowing Tokio to withdraw the bulk of its forces from China, those troops could be used against Hong Kong, Singapore, the Netherlands Indies and probably Siberia. conclusions. One is that America, if drawn into active land warfare, won't repeat what it considers mistakes being made in the Libyan campaign. "Fighting" in the Carolinas under umpire rules instead of shells, the Army has decided that massed anti-tank guns, both mobile and units that stay with the divisions seem the answer to mechanized attack. Fighting tanks with tanks, as the British and Germans are doing in the Libyan desert, is not a part of Amer-

In our plan the tanks are but a part of the most powerful battle team, with infantry to flank and knock off the antitank crews and artillery to blast the enemy so the tanks can get through, disorganize the rear with speed and the force to cut out the softened opposition. Flexible Fighting Teams.

To do this, American armored divisions from lessons learned in maneuvers, are to be made up of more flexible fighting teams with more infantry in them. And there is to be at least one more motorized division-like the Rolling 4th-to supplement the armored divisions.

Some experts hold the view an armored corps should have two armored divisions and one motorized. In an armored (mechanized) division it is possible for the men to fight in their vehicles; soldiers of a motorized division ride close to the scene of battle but fight dismounted. During the Tennessee maneuvers in

"But it is to be added with emphasis that the losses would be unduly heavy and the results of action against an adversary such as the Germans might not be all that could be desired."

Until the recent first Army maneuvers in the Carolinas most of the officers spoke publicly of only "defense" whatever the job might be. At the time the tactics and organization of the Army was based mainly on holding off any enemy. Now all the talk and action is directed toward offense-go out and whip any opposition decisively.

Physical Durability First.

During the year passed the command has satisfied itself with the physical durability of the soldiers. They are the first in the Nation's history who have got up to training battles involving whole armies before they were put up against bullets.

In simulated war they have not been as conscious as perhaps they should be of the danger of jamming on roads or congregating within the range of aerial observation and that, among other things, is a prime object of the intensified small-unit training. United States equipment has proved itself in the rigorous maneuvers at home and on the fighting fronts abroad. Now the goal is to polish the fighting man's abilities, aiming at perfection, and to emphasize technique—the best way to handle divisions and armies to insure success with the least loss of life and Tank Defense.

"But to my mind it is dangerous psychology to discount the moral effect and shock action of tanks before the bullets begin to fly. I believe that good progress has been made in the tank killer units. However, I, for one, am not yet prepared to admit that we have a definite answer to a massed tank attack." "The tank attacker principle has proved its soundness." Gen. Drum said. History Written in Virginia Bill of Rights

By John Clagett Proctor.

A week from tomorrow Virginia is going to celebrate the Bill of Rights Day. The President has signed a proclamation to that effect, and Gov. Price of Virginia has appointed Circuit Court Judge Walter T. Casey of Arlington County as chairman of the celebration, which is sponsored in the Arlington-Pairfax-Alexandria area by the Northern Virginia Regional Defense Council.

To many, at a glance, the holding of these exercises may mean very little. But when we consider that the Bill of Rights was incorporated almost in its entirety as a part of the Federal Constitution, and that it includes the first 10 amendments to this document, and that it guaranteed the rights of the people, it looms as a very vital part of our political existence.

Indeed, so important did the omission of a bill of rights in the Constitution seem to Patrick Henry that when its ratification was before the Virginia convention he said he was "most awfully alarmed" because it did not contain such a bill, and in the end the State only ratifled the Constitution by a majority of 10 votes, and it is probable that this majority was only secured through the pledge of James Madison, who gave his word that he would do all he could toward placing in the Federal Constitution the requisite amendments guaranteeing the rights, privileges and immunities of the people.

Author of Amendments

Evidently Mr. Madison kept his promise, for of the 12 amendments later submitted, 10 were passed by the First Congress, September 25, 1789, to which the approval of 11 States was required for patification, and on December 15, 1791, just 200 years ago, Virginia agreed to the emendments which then became a part of the Constitution. George Mason, who stands foremost among our American patriots, was the author of these amendments, which follow:

"I-Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right . of the people peacefully to assemble. and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

"II .- A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be intringed. "III .- No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be , prescribed by law.

"IV .- The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be piolated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

"V.-No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise intamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury. except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

"VI .- In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be contronted with the witnesses against him: to have compulsory process for obtaining Witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel tor his detence.

"VII .- In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United State, than according to the rules of the command law.

"VIII .- Ercessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed. nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

"IX.-The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

"X.-The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution. nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Indorsed by Freeholder

George Mason was also the author of the Fairfax County Resolves, which were indorsed and signed by the "freeholders and inhabitants" of that county on July 18, 1774, and, if it is true that the pen is mightier than the sword, then one must concede a very high place to him, for his writings fairly burn with the fire of patriotism.

Washington and Mason were not only neighbors in the general sense of the term, but the closest sort of friends, working together and relying upon each other for counsel and advice in matters of great moment, such as those which brought on the revolt from the mother country, in which each played his own natriotic part.

Here in Washington there is every opportunity to hear a good speech if one has the inclination and the time. Indeed, something is always going on in Congress, and some member is always ready to display his oratorical ability for the benefit of his associates and the galleries, sometimes, quite likely, just for the purpose of having the speech printed in the Record that it might be sent

Lightning was flashing and thunder crashing all around his balloon. One moment the balloon pops upward like a cork from a champagne bottle, the next it drops as if conked on the top by a circus roustabout's sledge.

Finally, by a combination of skill and luck the balloon lands in a turnip patch. And because of the grace of the fates that day you have been able recently to observe the activities of your Weather Bureau being pepped up, hereabouts and

If you think this an odd way to begin a story about what your Weather Bureau in Washington and along its far-flung network is doing for you and national defense, rest assured it's no stranger than the career of the young Navy balloonist who became its chief.

He joined the Navy, saw the world, then was appointed by the President to chart it.

"Reich" went into the Navy as an ensign, an Indiana-born science major fresh out of Northwestern U., during the World War. He was a member of the Navy's first aerology class, and, within a few brief years, was of that small handful of men in the whole world (then and now) who was and is both a qualified heavier-than-air (airplane) and lighterthan-air (airship) pilot.

He established the aerological school at Norfolk, then became aerological officer of the L. A. for three years, and later aerologist of the Bureau of Aeronautics. While there he was responsible for a great many new aerological instruments. and was one of the first to encourage use of the polar front method of synoptic weather chart analysis.

Meteorology, said Mr. Reichelderfer, United States Weather Bureau chief, is changing so fast that it's a big job to keep everybody up with what's going on. The process of adapting the weather service to its changing environment, he adds, is obviously more or less of a continuous one, and, like other applied sciences, it is profoundly affected by developments in kindred fields.

Aeronautics and radio communications have opened to the meteorologist new possibilities and new responsibilities.

Faced with increasing requirements, the bureau recently has re-examined the entire weather service and made a new appraisal of the relative impor Ocean weather reports have taken on craft. The science receives further impetus from extension of various national weather reporting systems, to cover additional areas of the globe in the interest of air transport. The trend is toward a large increase in aerological observations. These should result in further progress in physical methods of weather analysis and forecasting. Recent technique in air-mass analysis is being extended, "Progress in meteorological research," said Reichelderfer, "often has appeared relatively slow, and the results have sometimes been disappointing. In the atmosphere we have to deal with vast and complex physical processes which are difficult to analyze. "More thorough understanding is necessary with reference to various weather conditions. If we recall the success attained in other scientific fields in which have reason to expect similar efforts in meteorology will yield great benefits." One of the things the present Weather Bureau chief is trying to do is raise the standards of the whole science, not only in the bureau, but in other fields as well. The American Meteorological Society, of which Reichelderfer is president, expects to start a campaign to get rid of the quacks and long-range forecasters who

As Reichelderfer put it: "The local official in charge has full authority to interpret the forecast in the light of his local knowledge."

Your Weather Bureau at present makes observations at 325 airport and city offices, has 2.500 special stations for observing river stages, frost conditions and the like, and about 5.000 co-operative climatological stations.

Airways stations make observations and telegraph reports hourly. Collective synoptic reports also are exchanged with meteorological centers of other nations—though not so generally since the war as before.

In 15 cities where there formerly were small offices at both the airport and in a central-city location, offices have been combined with the airport to provide continuous 24-hour service. The bureau recently also has taken to the air with daily "breakfast broadcasts" of its early morning outlook.

There are nearly 100 stations at airports which are manned entirely by a staff of Weather Bureau employes, rendering 24 hours of service daily. Hourly and more frequent weather reports are received and transmitted by teletype, weather maps are prepared every six hours, and airway forecasts and upperair pilot balloon and radiosonde reports are posted for the guidance of pilots. Besides airport stations fully manned by Weather Bureau personnel, the bureau has 30 partly operated by such employes, and more than 350 additional stations equipped with teletype to send and receive hourly. These are augmented by many others which transmit reports by teletype every six hours Let's assume that a German raider is

He built quite a mansion on the island and soon became an incorporator of the old Bank of Columbia, at first located at the northeast corner of Twenty-ninth and M streets, and 11 years later on the north side of M street between Wisconsin avenue and Thirtyfourth street. resentment against airport ambulances began welling up in him.

They were always there, those ambulances, waiting, waiting for the moment when the cunning of his mind and fingers would not be equal to the emer-

They were there with their doctors and nurses, efficient and patient. When he flew he could see them far below, their tops shining like the backs of beetles, and when he landed he would glance toward the ambulances, waiting as always, and say to himself, "Nu m'au avut."

Freely translated from his native Rumanian, it meant, "They didn't get me." Now, as he strode out on the concrete apron at the Wayne County Airport, where his big plane rested, he caught a glimpse of the ambulances out of the tail of his eye. The ship was loaded to almost twice its normal weight for a test hop

There were fire trucks waiting, too, but he did not mind the fire trucks so much. They only fought the fires when an airplane crashed. The ambulances had a more sinister function. They probed into the remains of an airplane and plucked out the body of the pilot.

Sometimes the pilot would still be alive, and an ambulance would clang away to the hospital, its gong announcing the successful termination of its waiting period. The doctors and the nurses and the stretcher-bearers were happy that their patience had been rewarded.

Or, so it seemed to Alex Papana. Maybe his hatred of ambulances went back to that time at Brasov, Rumania, when he climbed to 16,000 feet in a new fighter and carbon monoxide gas from the engine, seeping into the cockpit, almost killed him. Back on the ground he had muttered as he was hauled from his cramped quarters, "Nu m'au avut"they didn't get me.

Ambulances in Audience

"Eleven hundred gallons, good," he said to the crew servicing his plane.

Getting the heavily-laden machine off the ground was one thing. Getting it back down again involved dumping most of the contents of the fuel tanks aloft. The wheels were not built to take the landing impact of such an overload. An ingenious device had been installed in the nose to rid the ship of its excess fuel in midair. When Mr. Papana pulled a trigger, a cylinder of carbon dioxide-innocuous relative of the deadly carbon monoxide-would open the dump valves and flush the tanks clean.

"The wind is down the long runway." observed a mechanic. "You are all set." Mr. Papana nodded. "So, I see, are our friends the ambulances." He smiled briefly. "One must not take off," he confided, "without ambulances in the audience." He began fastening the straps of his parachute. "It would violate the social conventions."

"How's that?" asked the Greaseball. "No matter," responded Papana, "I am

He got an okay. He reached for the trigger, pulled.

Something exploded. The noise was muffled by the roar of the engines.

At the same instant a white substance, like fog, hissed into the cockpit. He was blinded. His eyes burned. His hands and face felt hot, yet they were cold to his touch.

He clapped his hands to his eyes. As though his mind stood apart from himself, reasoning, calculating, he thought: If this is carbon monoxide, I am done for. If it is carbon dioxide, I have a

Gas Cleared Up

He fumbled for the cockpit window latch at his shoulder. The window was too small. He could not get his head out for a breath of air. The ship was careening. He could feel it twist like a tortured serpent.

Savagely he tugged at the opposite window. It shot open. The wind whipped in. He breathed deeply. He began to see. Frost came off his lashes as he rubbed his eyes. The cockpit was clearing of the gas.

His heart pounded, but the steady drone of the engines was reassuring. The ship was back on an even keel now. He could think. He knew what had happened. The cylinder in the nose had snewed its contents into the cockpit.

He must figure this out. The fuel tanks remained brimful. Without the carbon dioxide he could not operate the dump vaives. That meant he could abandon ship and toss away the $100.000 invested in it, or he could try to land it.

The plane had been paid for with his own funds plus $80,000 in public and private subscriptions in Rumania.

He shook his head. He must not lose But what would happen when he asked the landing gear to take the crushing impact of twice the normal weight of the plane?

"Papana to tower, Papana to tower," he called, "the dumping system does not work. I must try to land with full load." "Tower to Papana, we advise against

He swung back, headed for the airport. The beetle-backed ambulances had moved. They were scattered here and there on the field, each trying to guess where the plane might crash. And with them were the fire engines.

He had decided what he would do. High above the airport he practiced his landing. Gingerly he throttled down. The airspeed needle crept backward. He watched the rate of descent indicator. At 1,700 revolutions on his engines the 'Great Lakes' Turns Out 500 Men a Week

By Gladwin Hill, Wide World News.

The World War was on. The United States Navy needed men, but quick. And what a jamboree they had! Soon -without a sizable boat in sight-there were 47,000 men milling around at Great Lakes, training for the Navy.

Great Lakes was so big that-well, a friend of mine swears he spent the whole World War here doing nothing but design fire houses for the place.

With the armistice, Great Lakes subsided almost to extinction. The hundreds of Jerry-built emergency structures disappeared, leaving only a few squat stone nucleus buildings. Forty lone marines patrolling the grounds were all that disturbed the wheeling of the gulls

Today a Great Lakes alumnus, or one of the original seagulls, would think he was pixillated. The same thing is happening all over again.

Trees coming down, grass coming out. ground being graded, permanent buildings going up, trucks and workmen tearing back and forth. The hydrants on the old company streets, which for a while became hazards on an officers' golf course, are near streets again.

More Expansion Coming

Once more, Great Lakes is the world's largest naval training station. Some $5,000,000 has been spent on its expansion, with $12,000,000 more expansion in the offing. Nine thousand sailors are in training. They're now building to accommodate 15,000, and eventually expect 25,000.

The two-ocean Navy expansion program calls for doubling the present personnel of approximately 250,000 to around 500,000 by 1945. And one-third of the Navy's enlisted men pass through Great Lakes. There are smaller training stations at Newport, R. I.; Norfolk, Va., and San Diego, Calif. Homespun humorists have always gotten a great kick out of a naval station 1.000 miles from salt water. But it's quite sensible when you look into it. Naval technique has reached the point these days where salt water is a relatively minor factor. A battleship is less a ship than a fortress, filled with highly specialized mechanisms, manned by

On the edge of the main grass yard, two are taking snapshots of each other. In the gym, a couple are bouncing a basketball. Down the hall, a band is banging away on "The Belle of Chicago" march. From another room comes the solo wail of a boogie-woogie trumpet.

"That." said my guide as we passed a door, "is one of our three swimming pools." At the end of the corridor there's a set of slick bowling alleys. All over the grounds, "I Don't Want to Set the World on Fire" comes out of the loudspeaker system-a noon-hour recreational innovation.

But this superficial informality covers a high-pressure training system. Like a prep school or college, yes-but with the regime crammed down from four years into six weeks. Everything is nautical. On the reservation is "abroad"; off it is "shore leave." Time is in bells; in writing, 9.30 p.m. is 2.130. Sleeping quarters are rooms filled with pipe frameworks, for ship hammocks. Closets are sailors' sea-bags. The recruits get $21 a month apprentice seamen's pay. At the end of the six weeks they get 9 days leave-"The shortest nine days I ever spent," one sighed. Then about half the men go right into service, the other half to Navy specialty schools.

The District's main electrical school is in St. Louis, the storekeepers' school in Toledo, the radio school in Indianapolis, the aviation mechanics' school in Chicago, 1.635 men are at the machine school at the Ford plant in Dearborn,

But typewriter peculiarities, like handwriting quirks, are part of a modern sleuth's bag of tricks, and the Metropolitan Police, in co-operation with the Treasury and the Secret Service, recently acquired 400 photographic records of type changes and type faces to add to the already useful collection of Ira Gullickson, chief document examiner of the detective force.

The photostats show the letters and characters of a given typewriter in a He circled for his approach. Gullickson, a former news photographer, looks at them all. Last year, he said, he axamined over 700 cases for the department, and one of them alone involved 4,000 specimens of handwriting.

Meandering Trail

"I had one case," the 39-year-old sixfooter said at headquarters, "that I was sure was a phony, but I could prove nothing from either the typewriting or the handwriting. We traced the paper to the manufacturer, and found that whereas the lady who allegedly signed the document died in 1912, the paper was not made until 1919."

Tracing authorship by means of a typewriter sometimes leads an investigator over a meandering trail, Gullickson said. "In the Twentieth Century-Fox case two years ago where a soldier sued unsuccessfully for one and a half million dollars on a charge of plagiarism, I traced a typewriter from the factory through several owners back to a mailorder house to be rebuilt and then through other owners to the storage house in St. Louis w uch sent it to me. It had been traded for a horse and for an automobile. It has be in used by a student for writing college themes and by a preacher for sermons."

Gullickson refused to play the expert for this reporter and identify offhand the make of machine which produced a note we carried. He said he was careful not to give snap opinions, and pointed out that finding the machine upon which any given document was written is no simple matter. The many rebuilt typewriters these days are a complicating factor, he said, as is the fact that one of the best-known typewriter companies made the type faces for another of the famous makes between 1930 and 1933 and other such exchanges occur.

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies

CIVIC NEWS.

Utilities Teamwork Now in Prospect; Zoning Restrictions Modified

By JESSE C. SUTER.

The civic groups have been very busy during the past week with many meetings. Civilian defense matters were a prominent feature of most of these meetings. This is said to indicate, despite the charge of apathy and lack of enthusiasm, that there is a considerable effort being made.

The Federation of Citizens' Associations held its regular meeting last night, an account of which appears elsewhere in The Star

The President signed the Rent Control Act on Tuesday and it is effective on January 3, 1942. It now becomes the duty of the District Commissioners to appoint the $7,500 rent administrator provided by the act. The Commissioners are expected to act within a few days. They claim to have made no commitments and are now interviewing the numerous candidates for the position

Tomorrow is the regular District day in the House of Representatives, when Chairman Randolph will try to obtain consideration of some of the bills on the House calendar

The Senate is expected to authorize a survey of the District water system through a grant of $20,000 from the contingent

Considerable difficulty is being experienced in getting men to fill the positions open in the Metropolitan Police Department. Aside from the 100 new positions recently authorized there are 16 vacancies. Competition with defense industries makes it difficult to find men available, and then the needed investigations and examinations are necessarily slow. The required training which must follow appointment will delay for many months operation of the department at full strength.

Prospect of Team Work on Public Utility Problems.

Chairman Gregory Hankin, of the Public Utilities Commission, started an innovation in local public utility procedure on Wednesday when there assembled, on his invitation, in the board room of the District Building the representatives of the citizen and business groups and also representatives of the public utility companies. More that 70 of such representatives of these groups were in at-

Express bus system extension, crosstown bus lines and other immediate improvements and utilization of existing facilities, he believes, should come before other methods are tried. He, however, favors thorough investigation and study to see what new facilities

Representatives of a number of the associations which have been urging the establishment of crosstown bus lines were gratified to learn that the commission and company engineers are now studying and working out the details of the crosstown bus problem. It is expected that one such line will be given a tryout in about two weeks. Two lines may be the final decision if the engineers find them practicable and if they promise to be supported by adequate patronage.

The location of the crosstown lines will not be definitely decided until completion of the engineers' work. The southernmost line under study may go from the Catholic University neighborhood and through Porter street. The northern line study tentatively contemplates the Military road and Concord avenue route. The adoption of these two routes would contribute materially to harmony between two of the contending factions of crosstown bus advocates.

A number of civic representatives participated in discussion of the problems and President Merrill of the Capital Transit Co. told the assemblage that his company is carrying from 25 to 28 per cent more people than a year ago and that the company has bought from 25 to 30 per cent more vehicles than it had in operation then. He agreed that the service can be improved and he says they hope to Chairman Hankin stressed the need for an increased staff for the commission in order to make the surveys and studies so necessary if the commission is to function efficiently. This shortage of has been brought to the attention of Congress by the commission a number of times. On at least one occasion the force was reduced instead of being increased as requested.

Without the proper personnel it will continue to be a long time, always, before either the public or the utility companies can obtain any desired relief.

Wednesday night's meeting lasted two hours and Chairman Hankin stated that another might be held early in January. There is indicated, in such a gathering, the possibility of a plan being worked out for some real team-work between the commission, the civic groups and the public utility companies.

It is suggested that some joint committees might be created which would bring the divergent interests to see that, in the final analysis, there is more mutuality of interests than real divergence. Fault finding and antagonism before the commission have in the past seldom, if ever, produced satisfactory results. A plan of teamwork might save time and money to the District, the companies and the taxpayers and save many an otherwise perfectly good disposition from being unnecessarily ruffled.

In civic circles it is believed Commissioner Hankin has made a good start even though he is not ready to go in for subways on a mere cursory examination of the subject.

Buy Christmas Seals and Help Fight Tuberculosis.

A letter sent out by the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association tells us that the death rate from this disease in Washington in the last 10 years has been reduced by almost one-fourth. The purchase of the little seals at Christmas time has helped to make

But they go on to tell us that the fight has only begun and that Washington still has the highest tuberculosis death rate of any city of 500,000 population or more in the United States. The map on the back of this letter indicates that this disease is no respecter of location in the District, though it is true that it is worse in some of the more densely populated sections.

Each sheet of 100 seals represents a dollar for better health. They are to be had in the hotel lobbies, department stores and other public places or by writing the association at 1601 Eighteenth street N.W.

This year's seals are very attractive, with a lighthouse throwing a bright beam of light over a pleasing snow scene. They should be used on every piece of mail matter sent out. They are also fine for use on Christmas packages and show that the user is civic-minded and is doing his bit toward the eradication of one of the world's worst scourges. One can never tell but that, in participating in this humane warfare, he is saving a member of his own family. Get and use your seals at once.

Zoning Restrictions Modified During Emergency. Despite the opposition, on advice of its expert adviser of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and representatives of citizen groups the Zoning Commission lifted the ban on the operation of rooming and boarding houses in "A restricted" and "A semi-restricted" residential areas. The rule as originally proposed was modified so as to limit the number of roomers or boarders per dwelling to four. The original plan carried no limit. The rule became effective yesterday and will continue through the national emergency or until December 31, 1945.

The rule is adopted as a national defense emergency measure to help house some of the new Government employes who have come to Washington in such large numbers.

There had been such general opposition to the lifting of the ban by the associations located in the restricted residential section that it was surprising that so few came out to the hearing.

Special occupancy permits will be required to operate these houses and the applicant must sign an unconditional agreement that the use as a rooming or boarding house will cease at the end of the emergency period or by December 31, 1945, whichever one is reached first.

The Board of Trade Bulletins Supply Helpful Data.

Each issue of the Bulletin, published by the Washington Board of Trade, is a mine of useful statistics and other data of special interest to every civic-minded resident of this voteless and unrepresented District of Columbia.

The November number publishes population estimates for the District and the Metropolitan Area. As of the end of October, 1941, there were 770,000 people residing in the District and 1,057,000 in the entire Metropolitan Area.

From its population studies the Bulletin predicts that Washington will within a few years be a city of 1,000,000 people if the Federal establishment continues to expand. Of this latter there appears to be little doubt. Other studies released in the Bulletin give Federal and other employes, daily telephone calls, department store sales index, electric output (k. w. h.), check transactions, postal receipts, trolley and bus passengers, number family-unit permits, job seekers, new car sales, living costs index and unemployment compensation compara-

Pinball and Slot Machine Probe Started by Protests

Regulations Subcommittee and District Attorney Conducting Double-Barreled Inquiry

By JERRY O'LEARY, Jr.

A double-barreled investigation of pinball and slot-machine devices in the District-one by the Regulations Committee of the Commissioners and the other by agents of the district attorney's office-has resulted from a growing number of protests against the entire setup.

Chief cause of complaint are the so-called "pennylands." Children have been reported in some instances spending their lunch money in such establishments near schools. Sometimes mothers have found their children staying late in these establishments, it was stated, and in one instance a pinball shop, which remains open frequently until past midnight, stands not 15 feet from an elementary school in Northeast

There appears to be no disposition at the District Building to boost the rate of real estate tax, which now bears most of the load of the city's expenses. The only other courses seem to be a sales tax or an increase in the income tax.

Since all previous efforts to have a sales tax here have been beaten at the Capitol, it was indicated that the "realistic approach" would be through the income tax.

Although the proposed 1943 budget of some $55.000.000 is a balanced budget on the basis of expected revenues, it was pointed out that the estimates still will not meet the entire needs of the District and that more money may be needed

In such event a blanket injunction might be issued against all machines until the test case was decided, it was stated. A District statute of 1901 imposes sentence of five years in prison against operators of establishments which permit persons to gamble on the results of mechanical contrivances on the premises. Several years ago a drive against the machines was started, but trickled out indecisively in the courts In recent months numerous new establishments have been reported set up here, mostly in empty stores now jammed full of slot machines. In addition drug stores, delicatessens, restaurants and pool halls have permitted installation of machines. The final report of all the investigators, he said, might contain recommendations against licensing establishments which may ask permission to operate as a "place of amusement." but in reality may be only "a place for gambling and loose spending.

Best solution, in the mind of one official, might be imposition of rigid laws which would have the same effect on operators and distributors of slot machines that the alcoholic beverage control laws have on liquor establishments. In other words, he said, regulations to prevent patronizing of the places by youth and prevent installations near schools and churches.

Campaign to Save Waste Paper Aids P.-T. A. Units and Defense

Capital Urged to Co-operate in Plan To Conserve Materials Vital in Crisis

By MRS. P. C. ELLETT,

President, District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers. We all remember the days when the cry of the junkman—"Any rags, ers and parents. old papers"-echoed through alleys and when it was the custom to save such articles and sell them. Days of prosperity eliminated this custom until Worly War I, when it again became the fashion to conserve vital defense materials. Then parent-teacher members and those of other honor roll chairman, was guest organizations conducted campaigns to save old newspapers and rags. The speaker.

The plan is for the paper to be ignated days every week and a certified dealer in scrap paper will see at the booth in the Park road that it is collected the same day. The dealer will pay market prices and the money will go to the local parent-teacher unit. It is believed that if this project is properly handled it may be a source of continued income to parent-teacher units.

This project will be serving a twofold purpose: It will help the treasury of parent-teacher units and it will be a defense project. We shall try to make reports from time to time as to how much paper is being collected, which units are making the greatest efforts and what projects are being financed by the money so earned.

Over 6,000 Nurses Join Army For Active Duty in Year

Maj. Julia Flikke, Veteran of World War, Heads Corps

By JESSIE FANT EVANS. Wherever the Army sends its troops. Army nurses go along to take care of the soldiers.

Army nurses today are on "around the clock duty" in every Army Hospital base, including those in Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone and Iceland. In Iceland, they are cheerfully evolving all sorts of substitutes for accustomed procedures and refusing to be dismayed by the rapidly approaching prospect of 23 hours of darkness out of every 24.

A little over a year ago there were 700 Army nurses. Now, there are 6.877. Before this fiscal year is over it is expected 8.237 will be enrolled. Each is a volunteer, drawn from the Red Cross list of Army and Navy Reserves.

The Army is proud of the fact that it has never had to draft a nurse. During the last World War, 21.480 volunteer, registered nurses served our armed forces. Over 10,000 of this number were with our troops on foreign soil under incredfbly difficult conditions in most in-

Cupid Often Reduces Ranks.

Army nurses must be graduates of class A nursing schools. They must also be in top-notch condition, without physical impairment of any kind. Provision is made for age and disability. Retirement on 75 per cent of their pay is possible at the age of 50, after 25 years of service. They volunteer for one year with the pledge, that except for "cogent" reasons, their service, if satisfactory, shall be of three years' duration.

Marriage is accepted as a "cogent" reason, despite the fact that Dan Cupid sometimes reduces the nurses' ranks with the virulence of an epidemic. The service is philosophical, however, with regard to authorized defections on the theory that establishment of happy American homes is an asset in building good citizenship and loyalty to country.

Late Battles on the Pro Football Front

This is one Sunday when a football fan can take it easy. The season isn't quite finished, of course, especially the professional campaign in the National League. But unless Jimmy Conzelman is one of the great magicians of our time his Chicago Cardinals will absorb a fearful thumping from the Chicago Bears in the only game that has any important bearing on the race.

The Bears need the game today with the Cardinals. A victory will them with the Green Bay Packers, who already have finished their schedule with 10 wins and a single defeat, and will necesitate a play-off for the Western championship. When this is over there will follow a week of preparation and then the winner will play the New York Giants, champions of the East. At the rate they aren't getting the race over S. Claus will be coming down the chimney as Play-off No. 2 moves into Elsewhere on the professional front the Giants will play the Brooklyn Dodgers in New York and the Redskins will be hosts to the Philadelphia Eagles. It would be nice from a box-office standpoint if the Giant-Dodger game meant anything. For a while it looked as if this game would decide the Eastern title. But the Dodgers never seemed to make up their minds whether they were a good team or a mediocre outfit and while they alternately were both the Giants clinched the crown.

Bears Probably Will Set Another Record

Mr. Conzelman, coach of the Cardinals, is the gentleman who arose to his feet one day at a luncheon and declared that it was next to impossible to beat the Bears. He called George Halas, his organization and the Bears the last words in football. Apparently the Packers had other words for them for the next week they defeated the Bears, 16-14. but Mr. Conzelman's Cardinals are in no wise to be confused with the

As is becoming customary the Bears will establish another record. If the Packers don't set a couple of marks of a week-end you may rely ball fields nearly four times per game. That's a lot of hiking. It sounds as if the Halasmen have been on maneuvers all season

Schedule, Circumstances Help the Giants

The Giants cannot be expected to go all out against the Dodgers, despite the New York-Brooklyn rivalry. The concensus is that the Eastern standard bearers, while clear-cut winners in their own circuit, are not as good as the Packers or the Bears. But the Giants have a chance to win. The play-off in the West won't hurt the Giants, at least.

With the pressure off now the Giants can tackle the Dodgers without Inviting disastrous injuries and next week, while and if the Packers and Bears are locked in a death grip for inland supremacy, the Giants possible that the Eastern champions will catch a Western team that has hunting trip, has been placed in been let down after the furious battling for a chance to play the Giants. Class 1-A, subject to immediate

At home nothing will be at stake, although the Redskins will have small personal interest in winning over the Eagles. By winning, and if the Giants beat the Dodgers, the 'Skins would tie for second place and split up a hunk of coin. But otherwise it will be just a football game. The Eagles can't even win the booby prize, Pittsburgh's Steelers already

Eagles Are Oddities of Pro Football

For a well-rounded pro football background, however, the Eagles should be seen once. For one thing they are living testimony that there are "T" formations of all kinds, good, bad and indifferent. as you know, use the "T." So do the Eagles. The Bears have won 23 of their last 26 games, including pre-1941 season exhibitions. The Eagles have won only three games during the last two National League seasons gander because they are in some respects the oddities of the game. It may be recalled that Alexis Thompson, Yale '36, bought the Eagles last

Mr. Thompson, head man of a quartet that includes two more Yales right in the drug business. They shopped around and finally asked Art Rooney of Pittsburgh for a price. It was too high. They approached Bert It was a problem, but nothing Mr. Thompson couldn't solve, "Look here," he said, in effect, to Bell, "why don't you and Rooney be partners here at Philadelphia and sell me the Steelers?" It was agreed but at the last minute Mr. Rooney backed down. He liked Pittsburgh. So Mr. Thompson, who apparently is very agreeable, took the Steelers to Philadelphia an Messrs. Bell and Rooney took the Eagles to Pittsburgh.

Hagerty Wouldn't Mind Having His Hoyas Back

It was a razzle-dazzle play if there ever was one. For a time everybody in the sports world was confused. This condition probably applied to the participants, too, although Mr. Thompson and his Yale-Harvard associates had the drug business to fall back on for relief.

There followed much shuffling of players. It still seems strange to find players like Dick Riffle and Don Looney and Jay Arnold in Pittsburgh uniforms. They seemed as much a part of Philadelphia as the wild cab rides through the alleys they call streets. Some of our better radio

As to the matter of winning games, both the Steelers and Eagles maintained a stubborn attitude. They couldn't win. The Pittsburghs under Bell and Rooney and the Philadelphias under Thompson and his curious quartet of Yales and Harvards, have a total of three victories thriller. By the way, Mr. Thompson and his partners don't carry the Yale-Harvard touch too far. True, they hired for a coach none other than Earl (Greasy) Neale, formerly of Yale, but no Blue or Crimson blood will be shed on Griffith Stadium this afternoon. Immediately after taking over the Eagles or Steelers or whatever they are, Mr. Thompson began to specialize in, of all things, the collecting of Georgetown players. With Jim Castiglia, Lou Ghecas and Joe Frank on his roster he is the object of fierce envy from the man-about-town who developed them,

Coach Ray Flaherty has intimated that all of his rookies will see considerable action, but Ken Dow and Al Krueger are the only newcomers who haven't been used extensively, so there won't be any particular new angle to the presence of other first-year Redskins on the field.

More interesting, it appears, are the chances for Sammy Baugh to better the passing average of Cecil Isbell, who wound up his season here last Sunday with an efficiency percentage of .568, and Frankie Filchock's opportunity to better his standing as the league's fifth leading ground-gainer.

Baugh doesn't stand much chance of equaling Isbell's completion mark, as the Packer star was credited with 117 in 11 games, while the Slinger has completed only 91 in 10. But a near-perfect average today might enable Baugh to raise his present

Hoyas, Eagles, Colonials And Blues Play Here; Terps Take Jaunt

By LEWIS F. ATCHISON. Basket ball bounces into the sports picture this week with heavy firing in all directions.

Everybody, with the exception of Maryland, opens at home, but the Terps pull out for Richmond Saturday and lay over for a game with William and Mary at Williamsburg on Monday night.

To Catholic U.'s brand-new team goes the honor of pulling the drawstrings on the season in a game with Mount St. Mary's tomorrow night at Brookland. The Cardinals help Gallaudet get under way Friday night at Eastern High School.

Georgetown, reputedly coming up with another fine team, makes its debut against Western Maryland at Tech High School Friday, and George Washington, gunning for the Hoyas-among others-takes the plunge the following night on the same court, playing Wake Forest.

A. U. and Gallaudet Battle.

Staff Cassell's American U. outfit goes against Gallaudet Saturday night on the home boards in its initial appearance.

Offhand it would seem that Georgetown and G. W. again will thrash it out for the No. 1 ranking. with Maryland next and the others scrambling for what is left. Topnotch New York teams and the usual assortment of Southern Conference visitors dot the major teams' schedules, while Mason-Dixon competition is the backbone of other

Elmer Ripley is satisfied his first Georgetown combination will give anybody a fast whirl but shudders to think of what can happen when the reserves take over. With Capt. Buddy O'Grady, Ken Engles, Bill Bornheimer, Charley Schmidli and Don Martin in the starting line-up the Hoyas can travel with the best. The reserves, who include Gabe Gabbianelli, chubby Dick Dieckelman, Lane O'Donnell-a Washington boy-and Frank Cleary, may surprise and stand up under fire, but they seem to need more experience and Ripley isn't building dream castles around them.

Zunic Is G. W. Key Man.

Bill Reinhart also expects to have a formidable starting five at G. W., but what he needs is more heighth around the backboard to pick off stray shots. The Colonials aren't going to be a runty outfit, but Ted Reichwein, an untested sophomore, is the tailest man at 6 feet 3 inches and the average is approximately 6

Lanky Matt Zunic is the key man in Reinhart's plans, and rightly so. This two-legged rocket is one of the best courtmen east of the Mississippi and should receive due recognition this year. Important, too, are Bobby Gilham, who is due for a good year; Joe Gallagher, who should blossom into a full-fledged regular with his added experience, and Roy McNeil, who has developed into an old smoothie under Reinhart's tutelage. Mearle Du Vall's knee injury has forced Burt Shipley to revise his plans at Maryland and may result in an all-sophomore starting team. The Terps are a rugged bunch, with Guard Heck Horn the biggest man in uniform around here. They need plenty of work for the experience but are willing, fairly fast and fairly with 1,258.

Washington Duckpin Army Opens Fire Tomorrow in U.S. Defense Tournament

Patriotism and Huge Prize List Inspire Mammoth Field

Ideal Setup of Star's Annual Handicap Event Is Tough to Ignore

By ROD THOMAS. Uncle Sam may come up with an A. E. F. in '43, but in the meantime, on a rough guess, 1,000,000 soldiers are about to fall in defense of the old boy. All, however, will be men

With the vast majority of entrants expected to use their league games this week in the qualification test, each must turn in his paid-up slip before facing the maples.

Mass Entries Recommended Many already are "on the line" with well invested bucks, in some instances leagues having entered their entire memberships with appropriations from prize funds. This procedure still is recommended. According to the foremost bowling authorities of the entire country the general setup of the Washington tournament, already adopted as a model for defense savings mapleshooting events to be held in hundreds of cities, is such that any league bowler, not to speak of many non-leaguers, would be extremely dollar-in-pocket conscious to pass it up. If it's a bargain for a bowler open Tournament surely it's one for a league and if an appropriation from the prize fund ould throw akilter the plans of the league, it would seem a cinch to replace the dough with an extra week's assessment after Christmas bills are Inducements Are Many. If last year's entry of 16.908 is matched, the prize fund, measured in defense savings, in which all awards will be made, will be approximately $17,000.

Twenty-five prizes of $50 each. Forty of $25 each This has been called the dream prize list of duckpins, but it is easily attainable depending upon whether most of the city's regular bowlers would invest a dollar each in themselves and national defense.

Astor Clarke, the No. 1 duckpin bowler of the country, will have no better chance to pluck the guaranteed $1,000 first prize in the men's division than the bowler with the lowest league average in the city The woman "duffers" will fire on even terms with the Loraine Gullis and Lucy Roses for the $500 bond that heads their prize list. The full handicap system of the tournament guarantees league bowlers equal opportunity, with men's scratch at 129 and women's at 120 Non-Leaguers Get Handicaps.

Bowlers without league averages this or last season, will be rated on averages of 115 for men and 100 As you may have noted in looking over the conjectural prize list, numerous attractive awards will be made in the qualification round, but that the bulk of the spoils will be distributed in the rolloff. One-half of the contestants at each alley will qualify for the rolloff and qualifiers will shoot the final at the plants where they fired the preliminary. Every effort has been made to accommodate bowlers in all circumstances. To the alley men has been delegated the responsibility of setting rolloff dates convenient for the majority of their patrons. For the many bowlers who plan to be out of the city through the Christmas provided they are among the qualifiers, they may use for the final set their first league games upon returning, if rolled by January 10.

By GRANTLAND RICE,

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (N.A.N.A.).—There was a time, not so many dynasties ago, when the New York Giants were the most valuable franchise in baseball-worth more than almost any stock on the big exchange. Now the same Giants are in a spot where it may well take a million dollars to bring them a first-division ball club. Mel Ott is a smart, keen baseball man who knows his trade. But he will need at least 10 or 12 new, good ballplayers before he will be back in old Giant territory, around the top. And good ballplayers are not picked up around the first corner It is hard enough to get one or two

Some one has let the Giant machine go to rust. It will take a large bale of money to have it shining again. MacPhail at Brooklyn has proved the job could be done. Lacking a gate producer of the crowd-gathering qualities of Bobby Jones nowadays the United States Golf Association, once a standpat outfit which held its major title tourneys at only the blue blood clubs, is going out into the great open spaces with the big tilts for links crowns.

In spacing the big affairs, in what to Easterners seem to be the hinterlands, the U. S. G. A. is carrying out its avowed policy of spreading championships all over the land, on the theory that good golf is played everywhere, and the Texas or California golfer has as much right to a title event as the staid New Eng-

But the East, or that sector of it east of the Mississippi, is starving for major affairs. Three men's championships were held in the West this year, and all four of the big title affairs next year will be held far from Times Square or Dupont Circle. Last major men's tourney to be awarded to an Eastern club was the amateur championship of 1940, won by Dick Chapman over his home course at Winged Foot.

The 1942 schedule is as follows: Open championship, Interlachen Club, Minneapolis, Minn., June 18, 19 and 20; public links championship. Denver, Colo., July 27-August 1: amateur championship, Pebble Beach. Calif., September 7-12; women's championship, Tulsa, Okla. September 21-26.

Debate on Handicaps Florida Skippers Priming Gear For Big Winter Fishing Spree Looms This Winter Sailfish, Bonefish Start Sport Early, In Feminine Golf

the best time to nail 'em.

Sailfish Begin at Stuart. Sailfish. The little town of Stuart, Fla., two-thirds of the way between Jacksonville and Miami, is the hot spot for these great oceanic battlers. More than 5,000 were caught in the offshore waters near St. Lucia Inlet last winter. But Stuart isn't the only sailfish spot. Miami with a big concentration of boats, produces plenty of sail. Palm Beach boats get around 3,500 a year. And all the lower east coast from Fort Pierce down to Key West. has good sailfish water and many fish. First four months of the year

Marlin. No fishing port in the world has produced as many white marlin (the smaller species) as Ocean City, Md., in the summer of with a national perspective, are newspapers next year will be accept- 1939, when around 1,300 were laid on the docks of the Maryland town, east coast, but not in any great number. There's always the chance a white marlin will pick up a sailfish bait. If he does you have a real scrap on your hands, for the marlin will outfight, outjump and out-anything the usual sailfish. But marlin off Florida, during the winter season, are considered rare.

Tarpon Start in Spring.

Tarpon. No use trying the usual tarpon haunts in January, February or March. They just aren't there, although a school usually hangs out at the entrance to Miami Harthat some kinds will be off a cer- bor in the swift water of Governyear for tarpon.

But tarpon do run at Key West every month in the year. Jack Channel, Calda Channel, Chica Pass and Jewfish banks are best in the early months, and accasionally, if the weather has been warm, Old Silversides will show up around Bahia Honda and around the cuts under the highway viaduct on the Key West road in February and March.

Bonefish. Ah, here is the answer to the trout and bass fisherman's prayer. Here is a fish with the speed of light, the shyness of deer, and the "savvy" of a veteran boxer. Here is the answer to the dream of the light tackle man-in the ocean. His royal shyness is present in the shallow Florida banks anywhere from Miami south. Hot spots are Soldier Key, east of Miami, Tavernier, Matecumb, Islamorada, Pirates Cove and all shallow banks in the warm sea. Winter is best time.

Blue marlin. That's a "maybe" matter. The big blues, running in weight away up there (world rod and reel record, 730 pounds) start to take bait in January. But the best time is from April on and the best spot definitely is the Gulf Stream on its east side, which means Bimini and Cat Cay waters. Every year a few blues are picked up on the west side of the stream in waters adjacent to Miami, but the blue marlin cannot be classed as an East Coast fish.

Wahoo, dolphin, kingfish, bonito. They are present anywhere in the blue water off the lower East Coast. At times they become a nuisance, picking up your carefully-fashioned will be the second meeting of the sailfish bait. He has no seasons, or fondness for any particular bait. Get yourself the heaviest tackle you can find, drop over a bleeding hunk of meat or fish anywhere in fairly deep water and hang on. We leave that to the last because it isn't too much fun. But any way you take 'em, those scrappers in the waters around Florida are game boys. They do their stuff, and if you catch 'em you will have done yours.

New Orleans Racing To Be Best Since Golden Days

Meet Opens Christmas And Will Run 42 Days; Purses to Be Modest

By the Associated Press.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 6 .- It'll be a merry Christmas in New Orleans for lovers of horses, for on that day the Fair Grounds will resume operations after a year's layoff-with a racing meet that promises to be the biggest and best since the golden days when E. R. Bradley ran the track.

Secret Weapon of the U.S.A.

This country has a weapon which the whole world respects. It is more important than our 3,000,000-candlepower searchlights . . . the deadly accurate American bomb sight . . . or the great Garand rifle. More vital in defense than the new bombers . . . the scout cars . . . the fast tanks that outclass the world. The one weapon that means more than all others and which no other nation can steal from us - is the free spirit and personal courage of American youth.

AMERICA'S Defense calls for the expansion of the U. S. Army Air Corps to a total of 400,000 men now. To you-and to every ambitious and patriotic young man-this means a matchless opportunity. Army air fields are ready. Training and combat planes are being delivered. We've

Blue Ridge Parkway Sets New Record For Season Travel

965,000 Use Some Part Of Scenic Route, Census Reveals

ROARING GAP, N. C., Dec. 6. Traffic on the Blue Ridge Parkway, open with minor detours nearly all the way from Mount Mitchell, N. C., to Roanoke, Va., set a new traffic mark last season, official traffic estimates of the National Park Service reveal. The park service census shows that 965,000 persons rode on some portion of the parkway during the travel year ended September 30 an increase of 30 per cent over 1940. Most popular entrance was North Carolina Route 21 near Roaring Gap. where 103,000 visitors were counted driving onto the ridge route during the season

Contracts have been let for links between Deep Gap and Blowing Rock and from Mount Mitchell by Craggy Gardens to connect with State highway No. 70 into Asheville. Barring unexpected delays, the drive is expected to be open from near Asheville all the way to the Virginia line next summer. Eventually the parkway will swing south heville, to Mount Pisgah, and ato the Great Smoky Mountains National Park

The surfaced portions of the parkway are open throughout the year to traffic, but between October 15 and April 15 travel there is strictly at motorists' risk and the park service counsels avoiding the ridge route during periods of snow, ice and fog

Colonial Christmas Will Be Observed In Williamsburg

Candlelight and Yule Log Ceremony Included In Holiday Program

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Dec. 6 .-Festivities in which the whole town shares will be the keynote of Colonial Williamsburg's community celebration of the Christmas season, starting this year on December 14 and running through January 1.

The exhibition buildings will be illuminated by candlelight, and the "great lanthorns" will be lit in the cupolas of the Governor's Palace, the Colonial Capitol and the Wren Building of the College of William and Mary, to shine once again as in the 18th century as beacons of hospitality over the surrounding countryside. In keeping with colonial traditions, all the buildings and private homes in the restored area will have candles as their Christmas illuminations, and will be decorated with holly and greens.

A Community Christmas Committee has been appointed, which will co-ordinate the celebrations, and which will make honorary awards for the best-decorated and illuminated houses and places of business. Carolers will sing in the streets, there will be Christmas concerts in the ball room of the Governor's Palace. a "Yule log ceremony" at the Williamsburg Lodge, and an open house for townspeople and visitors historic Raleigh Tavern on Christmas Day.

American University Carol Singers Plan Christmas Service

Annual Program to Be Presented on Campus December 17

Highlighting the pre-Christmas festivities on the American University campus is the annual Christmas carol service scheduled for December 17 in the great hall of the Women's Résidence Hall.

Rehearsals have been underway since October for the program which will feature traditional carols representing many countries. The selections cover a wide chronological scope and include ancient plains songs of the seventh century as well as modern carols. Among the modern carols selected by James McLain, director of the chorus and instructor in music at the university, well-known local musician, now on the faculty of the university.

Four local students will be featured as soloists: Carol Kennedy, junior, 1201 Thirteenth street N.W.; George Olmstead, freshman, 3911 street N.W., and Anne Sweet, freshman, 3601 Rittenhouse street N.W. The male soloists include Carl Byham, tenor, a senior from Kane, Mr. Byham is also president of the student body and a member | the world of the football and basket ball teams.

Catholic U. Will Give More Aid in Program For Training Nurses

Start; Juniors Select 1943 Yearbook Editor

Realizing the urgent need for additional nursing personnel in the national defense emergency, the Catholic University school of nursing education will give additional co-operation to Federal authorities in the program of supplying personnel for duty with troops and in public welfare work.

Sister M. Olivia, dean of the school, announced yesterday that the two months' experience in public health nursing which has been 1equired as a prerequisite to the prcfessional courses in the university's program of study has been changed to one month's observation in a well-organized public health nursing agency, which will be selected by the university. It is planned that the month's observation will immediately precede the opening of each semester. It will be given in January for students who will enter in

Sister Olivia announced the university anticipate Federal funds will provide assistance to graduate nurses who meet requirements for admission to the program of study in public health nursing.

Lecture Series Starts

A series of lectures on activities of Federal agencies identified with the defense nursing program are given every Thursday night in Mc-Mahon Hall auditorium under auspices of the School of Nursing Education. Miss Naomi Dutsch, airector of public health nursing in the Children's Bureau, opened the series last Thursday, describing work of Church Class Plans Party her division in the Labor Department. Next Thursday night, Miss M. Harmon, assistant director of volunteer services of the Red Cross. will speak on what civilian volunteers can contribute to preparedness program in the present emergency. The junior class of the university has established a precedent by selecting an editor and business :nanager for the 1943 Cardinal yearbook. Joseph E. Joers, 536 Peabody street N. W., a student in the School of Engineering and Architecture, and

Benedict Vicas of Hartford, Conn. a pre-medical student in the School of Arts and Sciences, were chosen editor and business manager, respectively. Eleven students in the School of Architecture have been awarded mentions by the Beaux Arts Institute of Design for their work in architectural design in the annual class B competition. Roger Allard Lectures on U. S. Agencies of Southport, Conn., received a first mention, which advances him to class A work in the school. Others receiving mention included Carl Ruppert, 2002 Fourth street N.E.; Maurice Patlen, 2839 Twenty-seventh street N.W.; Van Donnelly 6807 Fairfax road, Bethesda: Daniel Antinozzi of Derby, Conn.; Rod Davis of Denver; John Hutton of Drexel Hill, Pa.; Edward Leffson of Pelham, N. > Cathedral Statue Finished The life-size statue of St. Joachim and the Blessed Virgin as a child, on which the Washington sculptor, Louis Di Valentin, has been working in the wing of the art department of Catholic University for several months, is completed, and will be removed shortly to St. Matthew's Cathedral to be placed in a niche in the east wing, opposite the statue of St. Anne. The statue is a gift to St. Matthew's from Princess Margaret Draper Boncompagni, who commissioned Mr. Di Valentin to do the work Carved of Indiana limestone, the sculptor first made a small plaster model and then the task of copying the images in stone proceeded at the art department so that students in sculptoring could watch the creative piece emerge into lifelike form.

Sister M. Jeanette, art department director, announced yesterday Mr. Di Valentin will be a member of the faculty of the department at next year's summer session and will teach sculptoring to a class for which advance registrations already have been received.

The Sigma Delta Sigma Class of Columbia Heights Christian Church will hold a Christmas party at the church December 22 for defense workers here who will be unable to spend Christmas at their homes. A buffet supper and entertainment program are being arranged for 100 guests.

Vital improvement in bank loans in the fifth Federal Reserve district is reported in the Reserve Bank of Richmond's latest monthly review. just received in the Capital. Between November 13, 1940, and the same date this year loans of reporting banks to business and agriculture rose 18 per cent, while all other loans rose 7 per cent.

Investments in securities rose 25 per cent, reserve balances at the Richmond bank climbed 35 per cent. demand deposits increased 25 per cent, while time deposits moved up 3 per cent, the report says. Debits to individual accounts in 25 cities, reflecting check transactions, mounted 35 per cent during October over October, 1940, the gain in Washington alone being 34 per cent, debits here totaling $614,763,000.

October automobile sales took a sharp drop, being 60 per cent lower in Washington than a year ago and down 38 per cent in the fifth district. In Washington 1.250 cars were sold, against 3,109 in October last year. In the 10 months, however, sales in the Capital are 18 per cent

Turning to employment, the report says that October pay rolls in Washington revealed a numerical gain of 1.1 per cent over September and an advance of 2.8 per cent in amount. The value of building permits in Washington in October mounted to $3,034.610, not includng Federal Government work, the BALTIMORE-Despite unseasonally warm weather a spurt of Christmas buying carried retail sales well ahead of last week and last year. A good demand for winter merchandise was noted. Wholesale markets were rather quiet, although turnover was substantially above a year ago. Well-stocked retailers awaited a more brisk movement of seasonal goods before placing fill-in orders with wholesalers. Bank clearings were 21 per cent above 1940.

CHICAGO-Christmas buying was well under way this week, with volume exceeding expectations. Demand for heavy apparel was reported brisk and toy sales registered exceptionally good gains. The lull in wholesale activity continued. Despite the closing of some open hearth furnaces because of scrap shortages, the steel rate advanced fractionally to 100 per cent of capacity. Bank clearings were 34 per cent better than in the corresponding 1940 week.

CLEVELAND-Retail trade continued at good levels, maintaining its lead over a year ago. Early Christmas selling was brisk despite warm weather. Shortages of iron and steel scrap continued to affect operating schedules in steel mills, but the rate rose 1 point to 96 per cent of theoretical capacity. Bank clearings were 36 per cent above

DETROIT-Retail volume generally continued to better both last week's and last year's levels as holiday buying continued at a strong Items subject to the luxury tax showed signs of regaining more normal sales levels and accessories, not subject to excises, showed gains of about 15 per cent over a year ago. Higher prices helped to account for an increase in wholesale volume of from 30 to 40 per cent over last year. Automobile output advanced to 93.495 units from 76.820 in the previous holiday week. The steel rate dropped 8 points from last week's level to 105 per cent of capacity.

INDIANAPOLIS-Sustained holiday buying lifted retail sales volume substantially above last week, with gains over the same 1940 week averaging about 25 per cent. Wholesale markets continued very active, with turnover holding at levels estimated to be about 30 per cent above a year ago. Manufacturing operations were maintained at a very

KANSAS CITY-The tempo of retail buying quickened with the approach of the Christmas season and volume continued substantially above last year's levels. Wholesale turnover was brisk, particularly in apparel and gift lines. Bank transactions showed a gain of 25 per cent over the corresponding week in 1940. Industrial activity held at high rates. LOUISVILLE-Retail trade registered gains in the week and was well above the same period a year ago, as Christmas purchasing became more brisk. Wholesale volume held steady in the week. The volume of bank clearings rose 35 per cent above last year. Defense industries, operating at peak levels, continued to absorb available labor supplies.

PITTSBURGH-As holiday shopping gained momentum, retail trade gains of 15 to 18 per cent over a year ago were noted. Women's ready-to-wear specialties were moving especially well. Mild weather continued to retard sales of seasonal goods and men's furnishings and automobile winter merchandise were in small demand. Shortages in many lines were responsible for a lull in wholesale markets; reorders were at comparatively low levels. The steel rate rose 3 points, reaching 99 per cent of theoretical capacity. Bank clearings were up 33 per

ST. LOUIS-Christmas shopping began in earnest, lifting retail volume well above last week and from 5 to 11 per cent above a year ago. Gift items, such as women's lingerie, jewelry, perfumes and toys, were among best sellers. Warm weather has slowed sales of winter apparel and retailers' inventories in these lines are relatively heavy. Wholesale ordering on spring goods has been rather dull. Manufacturing activity rebounded to former highs as a local machinists' strike

TOLEDO-With small goods and gift merchandise in the lead, Christmas selling picked up momentum this week; retail volume advanced from 10 to 15 per cent above last year. Furniture and heavy apparel were reported to be moving quite slowly. Due to unusually mild temperatures and the well-stocked condition of retailers, wholesale turnover has been rather slow except in Christmas notions and ready-to-wear. Employment in 51 local plants increased to 26,750 from 25.740 last week and 22,452 a year ago.

YOUNGSTOWN-Retail trade was somewhat retarded by continual warm weather; holiday buying has been slow in getting under way. Retail merchants report unusually heavy stock positions, particularly in winter goods. Industrial operations were again close to peak levels, recovering from the decline during labor disputes in the coal fields. Scrap shortages still threatened steel operations, but the rate moved upward to 91 per cent of capacity from 88 per cent

The breadth of the business upswing now getting under way is indicated by carloadings. Normally at this time of the year, freight traffic undergoes a sharp contraction from its September or October high. But last week, loadings increased some 50,000 cars.

Apparently, business traffic, instead of making the church-steeple peak of former years, has spread itself out, and rolling stock, instead of being retired to the sidelines in November and December, has been a contributing factor in the comecarrying a bumper volume of defense and other commodities.

Business Excellent.

Spurred by record car and truck usage, fear of shortages, and buying in anticipation of higher prices, demand for automobile tires has continued at a high level since midyear. Unit shipments for July through October were 25 per cent higher than in the same period of 1940. Deliveries during these months exceeded production, with the result that inventories have fallen to the lowest point since 1932. Crude rubber consumption, the best index of overall activity in the industry, ran 11 per cent higher than in 1940, despite restrictions. An increasing percentage of the rubber processed has been going into mechanical rubber goods, demand for which has been greatly stimulated by the high level of general industrial activity stemming from the de-

Tire manufacturers are participating importantly in defense production. Large Government orders covering a long list of rubber and non-rubber products have been placed with virtually all manufacturers-one, for example, has obtained contracts valued at more than $100,000,000.

In addition to direct defense work, the industry is doing a substantial business as subcontractor, supplying both regular lines and special arma-

Confusion Is Fading, Observers Discover At N. A. M. Meeting

By FRANK MacMILLEN and CHARLES E. HARNER.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (Wide World).—A new phase of the defense effort appears to have arrived. marked by a kind of quiet underlying confidence in the ability of Government, industry and labor to get the job done, and done right.

This sort of important psychological turning point is hard to measure, but we have spent a week where we have heard, seen, talked to-on and off the record-some scores of the key figures in American Government and industry who are making and executing the plans of our Government to assure the ultimate defeat of the totalitarian powers.

Since Wednesday we have watched the Congress of American Industry, which is the annual meeting of the National Association of Manufactur. ers. Several thousand of the top executives of America's corporations, large and small, many with shops and factories back home crammed with defense orders, have talked among themselves, listened to speeches by most of Washington's defense agency heads, and by their own leaders.

Earlier in the week we spent two days talking with delegates to the convention of the National Industrial Council, composed of regional, State and local manufacturing association officials. Their meetings were private, but most of the men were willing to tell us what went on in their

Higher Ceiling on Sugar Hinted by Cuban Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.-A higher ceiling price for sugar was predicted

The present domestic ceiling of 350 cents a pound on raw sugar "would just have to be raised" to 3.75 cents, these sources said, if the United States concludes the deal. Negotiations it was understood are tied in with talk of a cut in the tariff on Cuban sugar to 0.75 of a cent a pound from the present 0.90 of a cent. The reported offer of 2.65 cents a pound, plus duty at 0.75 of a cent and freight averaging 0.34 of a cent son said yesterday he would ask a pound, would indicate a domestic

Debutante Has Busy Day; Gives Dinner, Is Dance Guest And Wedding Attendant

Marian Hamilton Sets New Pace; Is Maid of Honor at Wedding of Miss Knopp to Lt. Tompkins

By MARGARET HART,

Debutantes have unusually crowded calendars these days and yesterday one lovely bud set a new pace even for the fast-moving Washington social whirl. Miss Marian Hamilton, who was presented to society November 28 by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hamilton, jr., not only entertained at dinner, then went on to a merry dancing party in her honor, but before all the evening's gayety she was maid of honor at the wedding of her cousin, Lt. William F. Tompkins, jr., U. S. A., to Miss

The dance honoring Miss Hamilton was given by her aunt, Mrs. Mae Hamilton, and the setting was the Sulgrave Club. Pink roses and a profusion of white flowers mingled with stately palms to make a pretty background for the party, which was mostly for young people, with only a lew of the hostess' friends attending

Mrs. Hamilton and her niece stood at the head of the stairway to receive the guests, the former wearing a gown of black lace over pink. The debutante was in a dainty frock of pink taffeta made along period lines with a full skirt and a fitted bodice. Bands of silver sequins trimmed the bodice and the bud carried blossoms tied with ribbon to match the

Many Parties Are Planned For Debutante; Numerous Fetes Slated During Holidays

By MONA DUGAS.

Even at this late date another debutante has appeared upon the scene. She is Miss Jean Bullitt Slaughter, daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Willis R. Slaughter, and her parents will introduce her to society at a tea

Miss Slaughter, who is a very pretty addition to the debutante contingent, is a sophomore at Cornell University, and is majoring in geology. She is a member of Alpha Phi Sorority.

Upon her arrival here. Miss Slaughter will be honored at a number of parties, one of them being the luncheon which Mrs. Robert Daniels will give December 22 for Miss Slaughter and for Miss Eileen Erwin.

house at 3335 Dent place.

Pity the poor mother of the debutante who is away at school and who can only come home in time to enjoy the festivities. It is her mother who must accept or decline the invitations that pour in and-hardest task of all-she must keep an accurate date book for her popular daughter, so that no two affairs will con- . flict. Among the latest invitations out are those issued by Miss Muriel Maddox, who will entertain at cocktails next Friday, and cards for the tea which the Misses Edith and Joanna Huntington will give on December 21.

Next Saturday Miss Janet Fish will entertain at tea for her niece. Miss Judith Cutler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Cutler of New York City. Mrs. Cutler is the former Miss E. Rosalind Fish, sister of Miss Janet Fish, and will accompany her daughter to the Capital.

Another visitor among the younger group here is to be Miss Joyce Glueck, who will come from her home in Cambridge, Mass., to spend about 10 days during Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. Ansel Phelps at 3900 being Prince Joao de Orleans e Cathedral avenue. Miss Glueck is Braganca. Mrs. Griggs and her husthe daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shel- band have many Brazilian friends,

Of particular interest is the news that the Macneil of Barra and Mrs. Macneil will give a dance on New Frederick S. Hicks, a student at the University of Virginia. Masquerades are always popuplanned, one the dance which Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley will give for their daughter, Miss Ruth Hurley, and the "fiesta at Rancho Grasslando," at which Mr. and Mrs. William J. Flather will be hosts on January 3 for Miss Agnes Flather. There will be a number of dinner parties before both these affairs. One will be given at the Shoreham | Grosvenor. by Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr.

Robert C. Watson will give in honor Miss Erwin and Miss Dorothea Drayton before the Flather dance. Mrs. McCook Knox, too, is planning to entertain before this latter affair,

Uncle Sam Taught Japanese How To Shoot; Gave Them First Arms; Art Gallery Innovations

The outcome of the conference between President Roosevelt and Mr. Saburo Kurusu, Tokio's special emissary, relative to the grave situation in Indo-China and the Pacific, is still on the knees of the gods. After all, paradoxical as it may seem, it was Uncle Sam who gave Japan her first introduction to modern arms and taught her how to shoot.

When Commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry, brother of the hero of Lake Erie, opened Japan to commerce in 1852, and in 1854 presented Japan with a small arsenal of modern arms such as the natives had never before seen and at which they marveled, he could not vision the day some 80 years later when the little water-bound kingdom would be-

The small arsenal of arms presented in 1854, so far as is known, were the first of the kind seen in the empire. There were 15 Hale rifles, 3 Maynard muskets, 12 cavalry sabers, 6 artillery swords, 1 carbine and 20

up. A very amusing description is given in an old account of the Japanese seating themselves on top of the little cars and taking a spin of

Ships Impressed Natives

As Being Supernatural. It was in January, 1854, that Commodore Perry sailed from Hong Kong on his second trip to the Bay of Yeddo, with nine vessels anchoring before Yokohama. The natives were said to have gazed in amaze-ment at what they believed was some supernatural power as the steamers Mississippi, Busquehanna and Powhatan sailed into the Bay of

The countries of Europe, before Perry visited Japan, repeatedly had sought relations with the Flowery Kingdom, and it has been claimed that a Russian named Rezanoff, an admiral in the Russian Navy, called at a Japanese port 40 years before Perry, or about 1812. It appears, however, that Rezanoff did not tarry. Perry made friends with the natives, and the years which have passed since that first visit have been largely years of friendship. In time of flood and earthquake it has been America's Red Cross that hastened to the relief of the suffering people.

The first treaty, signed in 1856. between Japan and the United States was burned in the great fire at Yeddo in 1858. In 1860 the first Japanese mission came to Washington to obtain the signature of President Fillmore. Since that first mission, with all the colorful trappings of Oriental grandeur, Japan has made great strides in adopting the customs, habits and dress of Western civilization, and instead of the gorgeous robes of the visitors of that first mission Mr. Kurusu visits the Department of State in cutaway, spats and topper. Miss Virginia Mary Wagner and Lt. Birdseye Marry at Fort Sill; Miss Laura Harris Ellis Bride

Although taking place in Old Post Chapel at Fort Sill, Okla., the wedding yesterday of Miss Virginia Mary Wagner and Lt. Mortimer B. Birdseye, jr., is of much interest here. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Huff Wagner of Chevy Chase, Md., and Lt. Birdseye is the son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. M. B. Birdseye of this city. Chaplain Bean efficiated at 4 o'clock yesterday.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a long ivory satin dress made with long sleeves and a sweetheart neckline. Her veil fell from a Juliet cap, and she carried an ivory satin prayer book with white orchids attached to the cover. The bride also wore a pearl necklace which was given her at birth.

Mrs. Robert V. Elsberry, the matron of honor, wore a chartreuse faille gown with a headdress of yellow flowers and a matching face veil. She also carried yellow flowers.

Lt. Robert V. Elsberry of Fort Sill was best man.

A reception at the Officers' Club followed the ceremony. The couple will make their home at Fort Sill. .

The bride is a native of Washington, where she attended public Army Orders ert Beach School. Catonsville, Md., and attended Wilson College in Chambersburg. Pa. Lt. Birdseye is CAVALRY.

In Capital Letters

They are coming out in Washington-and they are edging their mothers out of the social picture gradually but firmly. From now until the early part of January, parents and benefits and older Washington's parties are all eclipsed by the debutante whirl,

There were several debuts last week, ending up with that of Elene Essary at Blair House. After her delightful party, Elene entertained her assistants and their beaux at dinner at the Chevy

It was a very gala evening there, because Lucy Marbury also was hostess at a dinner for the younger set and Dr. and Mrs. Tewksbury entertained for their friends. Dave McMorris, one of the foreign service school boys, was being warmly welcomed. He's been living in Annapolis most of the fall, but now he is here to stay through the Christmas holidays, at least. Thurman Arnold, jr., was there, too, much to every one's delight, for he has been too busy to get out very much this fall. Mickey Stirling was looking very glamorous with her hair worn upswept on her lovely head. Ruth Hurley was saying what fun she and Mickey McChord had had at the Friday Supper Club the night before, and Jack Brookes informed us that he and his family have finally completed the house they were building on Wolf Trap Farm, near the Jouett Shouses'. They just moved in about a week ago and are crazy about it.

On Sunday members of the Beer and Skittles Club were invited by Jim and Margaret Wimsatt to his mother's house on Sixteenth street for the bi-weekly meeting. It was a much smaller and quieter party, with the strict new rules explained by Club Treasurer Al Baer. After Al's speech, Juddy Bowles was called on, but wouldn't talk! Connie Hunt also was asked to explain about his moustache, which he grew while recovering from a recent illness. His bride, Peggy Lansdowne Hunt, had a few things to say on that subject, too. We were wondering whether we might have the December 14th meeting at a skating rink. Skating has become such a social sport meting at a skating ring. Skating has become such a social sport this year and the Ice Club's parties sound like a good idea to follow, at least for one experimental bang-up (!) time.

On Friday Muriel Maddox is giving a party for Marion Hamilton, and on Saturday, the 13th, Zevah Fish is giving a tea at the Sulgrave Club in honor of Judith Cutler. Zevah has been away so long, in New York and Boston . . . it is good to have her back again, Incidentally, she, too, was at the club Saturday and said she'd had a grand Thanksgiving with Beth Kean, her cousin. After Zevah's party, some of the group are going on to Madeleine Rizik's dance at her new house on Woodland drive. Dorothy Shorb is having a party for Delphine Colquitt on Tuesday, December 16, at her home on Woodbury lane. Dorothy is very active in the Civic Theater this year and Delphine is studying art.

Betty Frost has just sent out invitations to a cocktail party for Elene Essary on December 21 at her home in Chevy Chase. Jane Lesh, who is at Sweetbrier, along with Elene this year, will have a luncheon on December 23 for Julie Mills and the two Henderson girls, Floranne and Josephine, who will be returning from Smith and Vassar for the Christmas holidays. Another luncheon in honor of the Hendersons and also Elene Essary will be on the 24th, with Elizabeth Benson hostess at the Colonial Dames. Still another luncheon is already scheduled, this one on the 27th, when Helen Dunigan is hostess and Delphine Colquitt is the guest of honor.

All of this isn't even beginning to mention the actual debuts and dances during the holidays . . . Who says a debutante's life is an idle one?

Senora Ester Neira de Calvo Heads Girls' Junior College

Problems of inter-American relationships should rest with all the people and not merely with a small group of politicians, according to Senora Ester Neira de Calvo, woman educator of the Republic of Panama and delegate from that country to the Inter-American Commission

Toy Library Major Interest Of Mortar Board Alumnae

Personal and Impersonal

By FRANCES LIDE,

The toy library at Friendship House, now in its third season. has become the major interest of its sponsoring organization, the Washington Chapter of Mortar Board Alumnae

Staffed by chapter members and volunteer students from George Washington University who are studying sociology, the library is open on Fridays from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

An average of more than 60 children show up weekly to select their toys and sign up for the articles which are withdrawn for stated periods.

The sponsors have been pleased this year to note improvement in the care given the toys by the youthful borrowers. As an incentive in this direction, the library offers a bonus toy to the child whose record, at the end of a six weeks' period, shows he has taken good care of the toys and returned them promptly.

Three Parties Given At Friendship House.

As a further incentive the chapter also gives three parties annually at Friendship House at which the children compete for certain choice items.

The library staff reports numerous instances in which the youngsters unselfishly relinquish their own privileges in favor of brothers and sisters. Toys or games whole families can enjoy also have been favorites.

Only articles which can be washed are circulated in the library and one of the young "patrons" earns a weekly income by laundering doll dresses and cleaning the toys. The chapter, which receives contributions from a number of organizations, reports a special need just now for roller skates and occupational toys. Miss Marguerite Smith, a Mortar Board member who is with the Library of Congress, serves as toy librarian on her day off and Mrs. William H. Morris heads the Toy Committee. Mrs.

The chapter will co-operate in the Christmas party at Friendship House December 19 by providing a gift toy for each young

The large first-floor room was kept intact and a counter set up in the rear which serves as a buffet. A well-deserved reputatien as "good cooks" also enhances the popularity of the hostesses.

Businesswomen To Aid Mission

Members of the Business and Professional Women's Club will remember both children and adults with Christmas gifts this year. Contributions will be left at the Waters Travel Service, 808 Seventeenth street N.W., where they will be collected by the Social Committee and taken to the Central Union Mission. Mrs. Jean Bennett, superintendent of the mission, will personally supervise distribution of the

The club teas have been discontinued for the remainder of the month, but in January a series of Wednesday evening open house programs will be presented at the Silver Bowl. There also will be an open house on New Year Day, which all out-of-town business and professional women's club members are invited to attend.

The club will hold its monthly meeting at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow at the Washington Club.

Washington Club To Meet Tuesday

A description of her escape from Belgrade will be given by Mme. Slavko Grouitch, widow of the first Minister from Yugoslavia to this country, at a meeting of the Washington Club at 11 a.m. Tuesday. Mme. Grouitch has founded and maintained a home for orphans in Yugoslavia and was active during the last war in behalf of that country. While in Washington, she is the house guest of Mrs. Walter Tuckerman at her home in nearby

Maryland. A book review will be held at 11 am, tomorrow and a luncheon for members and guests will be served at 1 p.m. Wednesday.

The Board of Governors will meet at 10:30 a.m. Thursday.

Olsen and Johnson Call Their Latest 'Sons o' Fun'

By Ira Wolfert.

NEW YORK. The latest edition of the show in which Ole Olsen and Chic Johnson have been making a living for the last 25 years is called "Sons o' Fun." It might just as well have gone by the title which is both their trade and mark-"Hellzapoppin'"-for it turns out to be that same old rose by another name, meaning that it is another dose of likewise

We are not arguing, just stating the facts. The only difference between "Sons o' Fun" and the various editions of "Hellzappopin" is that currently the odd bits, smidgeons and snips that go on while our favorite middle-aged boys are resting or changing clothes have more Broadway style to them-or "production," as it is called.

The tailored beauty and trim talents which go to make up Broadway style seemed a little uneasy to us at having to rub shoulders with the bumptious humors of Olsen and Johnson and their accustomed company. But that is a matter largely of whether you think a revue should be a harmonious ensemble or a grab-bag with something in it to please every taste.

A Little Rattling.

"Sons o' Fun" is certainly on the grab-bag side. Your ears are hardly clear of the violent sounds, for example, of a skit called "'Hellzapoppin' Night in Buckeye, Arizona," which the blackout is provided by Mr. Johnson ogling the audience from a bed he shares with 10 or 12 chorus girls, when your eyes become filled with Carmen Miranda and Rosario and Antonio.

There is nothing wrong with either side of the business. But we found it a little rattling to be swung constantly back and forth from hearty, blasting gags to the intense, rather dissolute emotions of Portuguese and Spanish gypsy arts -at least at the speed with which the show travels. No. we preferred less "production" with our Olsen and Johnson and a steadier diet of

Worse for Wear.

Incidentally, Miss Miranda has returned from Hollywood somewhat the worse for wear. It's her appearance and, since Miss Miranda hasn't the voice to sing songs but has instead the rare talent of making you see them rather than hear them, that's important.

Miss Miranda used to have an oily, quite yellow skin. It went very well with the wild tossed-up appearance of her songs. The movie people seem to have denatured and polished the skin of her face so that now it looks like celluloid. Not good, we call it. Celluloid is pretty, but too brittle and fashionable to convey a sense of strut. In addi-Miss Miranda's habit of seeming to belong in her outlandish clothes and have taught her to wear them in the depressing way of a Fifty-seventh street mannikin. The chances are they will begin motoring again soon. For "Twelfth Night" is a play that requires more than Helen Hayes, Maurice Evans and Margaret Webster seemed able to bring to it, and so, ipso facto, more than these skillful amateurs

There have been so many bad productions of this Shakespeare comedy an impression is gaining ground that it is dull. It isn't, folks, as you would discover if you took the trouble to read it and it wouldn't be if actors took the trouble to play it in the manner to which it once was accustomed.

Now a New Threat.

The consent decree and how to meet new selling conditions imposed resulted in a thorough cleaning house, not only in Hollywood and New York offices, but in branch try. Old methods of selling pictures in season blocks, sight unseen, had to be abandoned, new systems set up. Block booking was out, as of September 1, and every studio had to come up with heavy reserves of completed pictures—so exhibitors could see before terms were talked. Now, in the closing days of 1941, comes the dire threat of another censorship storm. The Legion of Decency's sudden cracking down on the Garbo picture, "Two-Faced Woman," by giving it a "C" or "condemned" rating—the first time in many years it has so severely rebuked a major film-was followed by municipal banning of the film's showing in scattered cities.

Riot Act Rumored.

Grave concern over the possibility of another "boycott" and "pledge" drive by the legion was expressed all over Hollywood and members into conference. It was recalled that the 1933-1934 campaign by the legion ate into box office receipts to the ravenous extent of 25 per cent or more.

There were rumors that the noncommittal Hays was reading the riot act to code violators and that he was even attempting to prevail upon officials of R-K-O to relinquish their claims on General Manager Joe Breen and permit him to take up that censoring job right where he left off six months ago.

and Jack Carson of the cast of the Nugent - written. Nugent - directed "The Male Animal." Fonda, it might be explained, is portraying an irate drunk.

The score: Eight swings, one hit, three knockouts (one the innocent bystander).

Only Clean Blow.

Carson countered Fonda's first nose. Fonda tore in flailing, shov- just standing there.

But it was inevitable that some day, somebody would put the nightelub kind on film. Elliott Nugent's !done it, and for humor it ranks took it manfully and retaliated with > Fonda missed with two haythe forehead, which saved him from falling down. Carson, seeing red. sent Fonda reeling into a hammock shoulder.

Credit for the triple knockout went indirectly to the hammock. With a hard swing, it buckled Margaret's Role Fonda's knees. He caught Carson in a tight clinch going down, and punch with an insult. Fonds led Jack, trying to fight clear, quite acwith a right and almost knocked cidentally planted the only thing himself out on the floor. Carson even resembling a clean blow on the came back with a tweak to the chin of Herbert Anderson, who was ing Carson in the chest. Carson Nugent made everybody happy

If they could see a movie fight in the making, with its faked uppercuts and imitation right crosses, the youngsters would be disillusioned. The piecing together of the film, made in short takes (the fighters get winded) gives the illusion that somebody has been hurt. The makers, but scored with a butt to addition, between takes, of red paint adds to the illusion of blood-

The original script of Republic's W "Lady for a Night," called for Blanche Yurka to commit suicide in a swamp. But the Hayes office said that her character would be cheating justice by taking her own life. Now a court room scene has supplemented the swamp, and Miss Yurka will be revealed in her true colors in a court room denouement.

Presenting His Own Story of a Career Guided by a Wonderful Wife To a Hollywood Contract

By Red Skelton.

HOLLYWOOD. At the ripe old age of 12, already a veteran of a medicine show and a minstrel troupe, I was playing a Missouri River showboat. However, in the interest of truth I must say that though the range of my performances was wide, the quality was low, as the showboat skipper emphasized one day when I fell into the river. He promptly pitched my clothes and valise in after me, shook his heavy cane in threatening gestures & and called in loud and convincing tones that he hoped I drowned but

That was a distressing fall, but it wasn't my first, nor my last. I've been falling around, mostly into difficulties, since an extremely early period in life. It was, in fact, on my 10th birthday that I fell-literallyinto my first role as a thespian. That was with the medicine show.

The show set up for business in a vacant lot in our town and I was

"Go ahead." he snapped, indicating the assembled throng.

But they, like the showboat captain later, were unappreciative.

on falling for crowds. The career which got away that steps has taken me through most of the by-paths of the entertainment world - medicine shows, showboats, would trip light-heartedly down the stock companies, minstrel shows, burlesque, vaudeville, radio and the movies - and into some surprising situations, both at work and at play. I've done most everything but Shakespeare and that, I fear, is an ambition destined to go unfulfilled, although Edna says - but that's another story, Edna is, and what a story! At least in my book she is.

But let's begin at the beginning, as I understand they teach you in school. I wouldn't know too much about that, as school and I hardly got on speaking terms. When people ask me how far I went in school I like to tell them that I was in the third grade so long that George Washington, from his gilt- my clothes and valise, along with and that it might be a good idea edged frame behind the teacher's desk, started looking down on me

But I soon found a new vocation racking balls in Kramer & Schmidt's poolroom, and this developed into a nice sideline of trick playing cards. Kramer & Schmidt fed me and bought me clothes. They also gave me all the old decks of cards which were thrown away by the rummy players in the back room. I'd cut and trim these cards, hitchhike to nearby towns, like Bicknell, Washington and Evansville, and sell them at a fair profit, seeing as how since that she didn't like my act, they didn't cost me anything. I started skinning up the rope a top speed and had got about halfway when the captain broke in my door and peered out the window. The shock was too great. I fell into the murky river and out of the window to join me in the water came some well-chosen words.

And Calls Both, Though Unknown, Swell Dancers

HOLLYWOOD. Fred Astaire usually has four or five dances in his pictures, and they leave his partner exhausted.

In his new film he does eight numbers-a record, he says-and for the first time has two partners. The girls are comparatively unknown-Virginia Dale and Marjorie Reynolds-but they're both swell dancers,

The girls are equally complimentary about Astaire, but they admit he's a perfectionist who won't stop, no matter how long a number's rehearsed, until he's entirely satisfied with it. Virginia says her feet bled after one particularly hard day.

"My arches collapsed, and I had to wear plastic supports in my shoes," Marjorie adds, reflectively. This was Astaire's schedule-Thirty days of rest after his last picture, three months of working up the dances for "Holiday Inn" and rehearsing them with the partners; two months on the picture itself, and now, a month of dubbing-in sound and steps. Then 30 days of rest before starting another picture with its grind of eight hours of dancing a day.

This mutilated cover illustrates an obviously malicious violation of postal regulations perpetrated all too commonly at the expense of the philatelic public.

Mailed at the Washington City Post Office early in the morning of November 22, the envelope shown above was franked with three National Parks stamps in perfect condition. The clerk operating the canceling machine put the cover through upside down. Then, instead of reversing it and postmarking it properly, as required by law, he deliberately smeared the stamps with thick black ink and thus destroyed what otherwise would have been property of value to a collector.

An investigation of the mischief is being conducted. Meanwhile, readers whose mail may be mistreated similarly are invited to communicate with Deputy Third Assistant Postmaster General Roy M. North or Postmaster Vincent C. Burke. -Star Staff Photo.

The oldest date back to the early 17th century. The oddest one is also among the oldest. Instead of a lip it has a spout like a teapot. It is probably a Stiegel.

The collection includes both pressed and blown glass, and, besides the American, there are Venetian, Spanish, Bohemian, Dutch, German, French and English. They are not easy to acquire, as the demand far exceeds the supply, and some of Mrs. Keller's specimens have come from strange places. One was picked up in the shop of an Armenian rug dealer and an-

曾CHESS 世 The Game and Its

Players By Paul J. Miller, Jr.

Vying for the Chess Review Trophy, emblematic of the women's Karff of Boston has won two games eight-game match now in progress in New York. It would appear that tional title for women in the open tourney last year, cannot overcome the early lead of her adversary. However, the third game looks drawish, and anything may happen before the curtain is rung down on the final round.

The day before the match began. the defending champion, then Mrs. Rivero, married Donald Belcher of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research, an instructor in mathematics and physics at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y.

Chess writers, posting releases under a New York dateline, are touting the match as the first of its kind for women in this country. But such is not the case, as the annals of the period around the turn of the century will prove.

Chess Review Magazine is to be commended for donating the silver cup at issue and sponsoring the match. There are very few class A feminine players in the United States, and you can count on the fingers of one hand those who would rate even a minor junior master Webster, gave an interesting talk ranking. Any woman player who wins the cup three times gains permanent possession.

should be the integrity of the seller, at one of the early shows. whether that seller be breeder, kennel owner or owner of a pet bitch that is bred occasionally. All puppies are cute at the age of six weeks. Unless the purchaser is an unusually good judge of dogs he cannot tell what the pup will look like at a year. He can only guess from what the seller tells him and from the sort of grown breeding stock that is kept in the kennel.

Even more important, a puppy's health and disposition depend upon the sort of care its mother and father had when they were puppies, and more particularly upon the sort of care its mother had when she was carrying her litter. A good puppy can be ruined in the first eight weeks of its life by had handling and feeding. These things are not always apparent immediately. But much can be surmised from a survey of the puppy's enreliable breeder will welcome a veterinarian's check-up.

It is doubly wise to decide on a breed, or at least on a size and general type of dog, before setting out to buy. Apartment and city dwellers had best stick to the small and medium breeds. Nervous individuals had better choose dogs from the more placid breeds. Dogs chosen purely as pets should not be expected to turn into hunting companions or utility farm dogs at maturity. While most breeds make good pets and companions, it is wise if you have any dual purpose for a dog in mind to choose one whose heredity may fit him for the

Fully important as the proper choice of a puppy is the proper care of the pup after you get him. Many volumes have been written on the subject. Goya Shows Another Side in Portrait Recently Given to National Gallery

Spanish Artist Is Represented by Four Paintings

By Leila Mechlin. Another painting by Francisco Gova has been added to the National Gallery of Art. It is a portrait of Don Bartolome Sureda and was the gift of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. B. Frelinghuysen, in memory of Mrs. Frelinghuysen's parents, Mr. and

Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer. There were already four paintings by this distinguished Spanish painter and printmaker in the National Gallery, all derived from the Mellon collection; but Goya was many-sided, and this portrait of his confrere illustrates a phase of his work heretofore not represented. Certainly in spirit and style it is quite unlike the two life-size portraits of women-Senora Sabasa Garcia and the Marquesa de Pontejos-acquired by Andrew W. Mellon and now in the National Gallery. Goya is reported to have said, "I have had three masters. Nature, Velasquez and Rembrandt." But there was a fourth, Jacques Louis David, with whom he fraternized in Rome in his young days after fleeing from Spain to escape the Inquisi-It is the influence of this fourth master that may be seen in the portrait from the Ravemeyer-Frelinghuysen collection. Compare it, for instance, with David's lovely painting of Mme. Hamelin, in the group lent recently by Mr. and Mrs. Chester Dale, and note the similarity of line and its use, the gravity of treatment, the reticence of brush stroke and a certain drooping pensiveness in face of figure. Goya was in Rome in the early 1770s, and the portrait of Don Bartolome was not painted until about 30 years later, but the impression of David's style then registered is obviously still

This group will be followed occupation, 1808-1813. Goya lived peaceably with Spain's enemies, and incidentally, did some of his best Then, when Ferdinand resumed the throne, in 1814, one of his first acts was to re-create Goya, "Painter to the Crown," or Spanish Court. But Goya was enormously gifted, and his services were valuable. It pleased the vanity to have a portrait by Goya. Also-even more, perhaps, than was then thought-it gave immortality.

There must have been a bright era in Spain about the time that Goya painted Don Bartolome, for the industrial arts were surging ahead and the graphic arts coming into their own by discovery and practice. Lithography had lately been discovered by Senefelder, and, a bit later, aquatint came into being. Goya used both, and with supreme skill, but Don Bartolome was, it is said eight years ahead of him in the practice of the former as a medium for personal expression.

Hat in Hand.

As Goya painted him, Sureda does is pictured at about half-length, standing with his right arm restturned toward the observer. His more satisfying. left hand is on his hip and his arm akimbo. He wears a double-breast- Howard University Gallery ed coat of dark gray, cut short at the waistline, but with long and ample skirt. There are large lapels on his coat, as well as a velvet collar. A white neckcloth comes up high under his chin and is tied in front. A thread of red runs through the neckcloth, and one of blue through the white of the waistcoat. The face is swarthy, the eyes dark; over the forehead straggles his long brown hair. The expression is introspective, the attitude one of deference and attention. The line of the body suggests motion, but the figure is really very still. As a composition, it is extremely interesting. That the artist has re-echoed the color of the face in that of the lining of the hat is worth noting, for it is an extraordinary clever stroke. Such things do not just happen.

There is probably no name in art better to conjure with than that of Gova. Born in 1746, of humble peasant parentage, he had no contacts with art, save in his church and no instruction until after he was 16, when he made up his mind to be an artist. The 80 years of his life spanned tumultuous times; in Spain, the art of painting was at a low ebb, but the pictures he painted and the prints he produced are counted among the world's greatest. "Goya," said Carroll Carstairs in an essay on this master, quoted in a catalogue of a Goya exhibition held in New York a few years ago, "is the nervous pulse in the history of time. Through him, you get its his period in its true colors. He gives it atmosphere. He gives it life."

To which he added: "He was a realist with a particular right to his realism. He lived adventurously. His work, in its mass and variety, is equivalent to that of several men. Goya was several men. His love of life and its attendant incident and accident, the years at his disposal, the fluctuation in time he has painted blue water encircled hills, the tide lapping the shore, two nude figures in the foreground watching its gentle insurge. Or, again, it is one of Shakespeare's sonnets which inspires pictorial expression. Obviously, a well-stocked mind marks no boundary between the arts. And yet it is color which Mr. Adams finds most significant and moving, the glory of color found in autumnal foliage, or in evening light, or, for that matter, in the paintings of Van Goch and Gauguin. He is no modernist, but he pays full tribute to what stimulus their innovations may offer. He is both realist and dreamer, but, after all, we have long been told that art is only some one's dream come true.

The Christmas sales exhibition of small paintings, prints and drawings by artists of Washington, Baltimore and vicinity, on view at the Phillips Memorial Gallery until December 26, seems likely to prompt thoughtful observers to ponder the whole question of public support of contemporary American art. It would be difficult to imagine a simpler case of artist versus layman than this exhibition exemplifies. It is open one month before Christmas, when most people are selecting gifts, and its primary purpose is to display original works priced within reach of the average person. It is shown under auspices of a gallery renowned for its support of living artists and centrally located, convenient to the majority of Washingtonians likely to purchase art. In every respect the circumstances of presentation seem

shown, many persons will conclude, with regret, that a majority of the contributing artists do not seem to be acquainted with public tastes in art. One assumes the artists sent works which they thought would make acceptable gifts, in view of the show's purpose. Nevertheless of approximately 100 works on view not more than 15 per cent would impress the average person as desirable for home decoration. The public has demonstrated its preferences many times, by popular votes shows, by choices of lay juries for exhibitions (such as that in Philadelphia last year) and by what the average person buys and hangs in Russian Orthodox Church, Russian traction to be offered at Constitution mon with that of Sureda—the heavy and condition, influence and expericolor used, the markedly Spanish ment, all combine to multiply and fruit studies by Nan Watson, demeasures of taste, the public has a Cossack soldier songs, the latter acstrong liking for pleasant subject companied by dancing, the exciting at the piano by Carroll Hollister, matter, good craftsmanship and climax of the performance. As a Hobby

Charles Cooke Gives Results of His Experience

Notice

Notices of Christmas church nusic intended for the special page of December 20 must be received by the Music Editor in typewritten form not later than Saturday, December 13.

By Alice Eversman.

It is a common occurrence to hear adults, who as children have studied the piano, express a determination to take it up again. Somehow or other they never get around to it, partly because it seems such a big undertaking and partly because they do not know how to go about it.

Yet they would like to brighten their lives with a little personal music making or cultivate a more intimate knowledge of the works heard on concert programs or over the air. Many would like to adopt music as a hobby and, since they had some foundation in childhood, naturally turn to the piano to realize their ambition.

All these hindrances to taking up the piano again in a serious way have been brushed aside in Charles Cooke's delightful book, "Playing the Piano for Pleasure." Mr. Cooke is neither a professional musician nor a teacher. He is a newspaperman. He studied the piano, as many others have done, all his life more or less. Becoming seriously interested in his adult years, he began to figure out how he could acquire a repertoire that he could play acceptably. The result of his experiments are given in his book.

How to Practice.

Not only does he give suggestions for a repertoire, but he has arranged his list progressively as to difficulty. Furthermore, he tells how to practice and how to conque: those particular passages that have the faculty of remaining a constant stumbling block to performance He discusses technique from the viewpoint of an amateur pianist and gives good advice on a method of memorizing. The book is written in an enter-

Growing Excellence.

The leading roles will be taken by the same young singers who have attracted attention by the constantly growing excellence of their work. Some of the principal parts will be alternated between wo singers, but in the opening performance the characters will be in the hands of Howard Moore, Jeannette Bittner, David Manley, Clarke Paulsen, Edith Jones and Constance Krueger. Seventy-three singers will be included in the cast. which will be trained in a professional manner by Mrs. Manning. Whatever the musical status of an individual, he can seldom resist the charm of the immortal works from the pens of these two unusual men. Not long ago, and it is appropriate to call attention to it now, book was published by Simon & Schuster called "A Treasury of Gilbert and Sullivan." Here are 102 songs from 11 operettas, illustrated in most colorful fashion by Lucille Corcos, with piano arrangements by Dr. Albert Sirmay

The most delightful part of the book, however, is Deems Taylor's histories of the operettas. They are arranged in order of writing, and Mr. Taylor precedes each with the facts that surround the collaboration of the authors.

Step by step one follows the growth of this remarkable musical friendship in a way to feel thoroughly acquainted with the two The illustrations are beautiful and can be used as a reference for the costumes of the period.

Hindu Author Shows Clear Understanding of America

Krishnalal Shridharani's Style Is as Brisk as That of a Native-Born Columnist

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

My India, My America

By Krishnalal Shridharani. Duell, Sloan & Pearce, New York America, to date, has probably led the world in sending out "good-will ambassadors." More than any other people, seemingly, we trust to the talents of unofficial representatives to make ourselves known to our neighbors. But, though we have had this almost for a custom for some decades, the number of articulate foreign travelers who have come to us with good-will in their hearts has been rather notably small,

One has only to consider the average foreign visitor's book on America to see the contrast. Englishmen have been traditional for their patronizing characterizations of our culture, and other foreigners have pretty much followed their procedure. The typical patterns of these criticisms, moreover, inclines the American to believe that they derive from prejudice rather than from observation. But we have become used to such treatment and are now detached toward, if not downright bored by the trans-Atlantic sneer. Just the same, it is altogether agreeable to find good-will toward ourselves in a book about us by a foreigner who (a) is not an exile and (b) has no intention of taking out naturalization papers.

That is what one detects immediately in this work by Krishnalal Shridharani, a young Hindu, who has recently lectured in our country, a disciple of Gandhi, participant in Gandhi's famous "march to the sea," author of a book in English on the technique of non-resistance, and a distinguished poet and playwright in his own language. Mr. Shridharani has been in our country seven years; he did not undertake to sum up America after a six-week lecture tour. He did not even come to lecture; he came as a student. Obviously, he has studied well. His work is mature and seasoned, and also absolutely charming.

He has understood us, and the best-the unquestionable-evidence of this lies in his use of our language. Louis Bromfield, in his introduction to the volume, says that Mr. Shridharani has written "in the idiom of an American." That is true. This Hindu poet's English prose style is as brisk as that of any American columnist, colloquial, humorous with our own brand of humor, immensely flexible and under perfect control. When one compares his handling of our slang, for example, with that of the visiting Britisher, one can hardly believe that this is the work of a man whose native tongue bears no resemblance of our own. For the use of a foreign slang is the final test of the linguist. Mr. Shridharani uses ours as if he

The affection which he expresses for our country is similarly convincing. It does not lie in protests, but in the spirit of breadth, tolerance and understanding with which his whole book is imbued-and this spirit, be it understood, has nothing to do with that "mysticism" which Americans vaguely attribute to all East Indians. It is practical and modern. Its essence, one feels, lies in the author's self-respect as a citizen of a country which, in his belief, has a great future. In his breeziness, good humor and interest in all things, there is, indeed, a reminiscence of the American traveler of 50 years ago, the self-sufficient Yankee of song and story, if only the Yankee with his self-assurance had had behind him a thousand years of an established culture. This is the voice of young Old India. The freshness of its accent could not be simulated. The book is divided into four sections—a brief autobiography which | brings out her Albanian dagger and leaders and an examination of India's position in relation to the war and the future. The section dealing with this country records the author's surprise at his discovery that many Americans visualize India as a land populated almost wholly by "swamis." There are, he says, such holy men in his country-but he had to come to California to find one who had gotten rich. He was also surprised to learn that Americans believe that Indians engage in "mystic" exercises much of their time. A woman who entertained him let him know that she expected him to rise at 5 each morning and put in time "meditating," a procedure which he found includes the author's impressions of the United States, a discussion of a cable and asking him to perform the "rope trick." "I realized," he says, "that she believed that this was merely the equivalent of a daily setting-up exercise for me." Coming to the question of his country's future, he admits much outward evidence of backwardness, but says without qualification that modern India is to be counted among the democracies. It has rejected Japan's pan-Asiatic plea because Japan, the self-appointed leader of the proposed united Asia, is totalitarian. It has taken its stand with the free governments of the West in the present war, putting freedom above race. When peace is established. India will be a power for a righteous new order. Mr. ism first. Democracy already has made great progress among his people, he says. Women in India take a larger part in government than in any other country, the leaders are fully aware of the need for scientific education, and the mass of the people is awakened and eager to be taught. Only the opportunity lacks, he says, waiting a time of peace.

Putting this book beside the works of the great Chinese, Lin Yutang, an American cannot but feel that East and West have met at last. In the writings of these two Orientals, there is a spirit so akin to our own that it plainly speaks of brotherhood and should lead to a future of splendid co-operation.

By Frances Winwar. Harper, New York.

Miss Winwar seems to be one of the most promising of our young biographers. She has produced some excellent works on 19th century English poets and reached a high point last year with her history of Oscar Wilde, a biography of genuine brilliance. Her present book on Walt Whitman is, however, subtly disappointing. There is a certain looseness about it. It is, above all things, Miss Winwar's interpretation of Walt's life drawn from his work rather than from recorded facts or other sources. Hence, it falls between two stools. Interpretation of an author's mind and soul on the basis of his written words is valid as a theme for a critical study. To derive opinions about the deeds of his life solely from such evidence, however, seems inconclusive. Miss Winwar's work suffers from confusion between the two approaches. She draws no clear line between her analyses as critic and her findings as historian. Granted her method, however, she rounds out a case. She undertakes to settle certain points in Walt's career which, simply for lack of conclusive evidence, have always been disputed. For one, she takes up his attitude toward women and the influence which that attitude had on his development. She considers that, up to the time he went to New Orleans he was badly inhibited by his Quaker upbringing and by his love of his mother. His writing, to that date, was totally without distinction and often bathetic. Returning from New Orleans, however, he was full of his project for "Leaves of Grass"; his genius had flowered to the full within a few months. It has been established, of course, that he had a love affair while in the Southern city, though little has been determined about the matter. Miss Winwar draws the conclusion that the mysterious mistress was an octoroon, and that her simple, uncomplicated ardor freed Walt from his inhibitions and gave him his great vision of the fecund earth. Her evidence cannot but impress a reader as too slight to be called definite.

In the same manner she offers her opinion on the existence of the six opera impresario of the 20th cenillegitimate children of whom Walt boasted the paternity. He was tury are things to be cherished even pestered, she says, by inquiries from John Addington Symonds as to though they are not as revealing as whether the comradeship between men which he exalted in his "Calamus" poems had any unnatural connotation. At first, Miss Winwar believes, Walt did not even understand Symonds. When he did see the meaning, he hastily invented a flock of children to protect himself against further firm ground in its wobbly days insinuations. He also claimed at the time a living grandson with whom around the turn of the century, and he said he corresponded. There is no evidence whatsoever that he had who projects the "Met" into its most any children, says Miss Winwar, adding that if he had had a grandchild golden era in his later years, was who kept in touch with him, he surely would have remembered the boy not only a resourceful businessman in his will. Commonsense is on her side on this point, as is also the but a keen lover of the operatic critical sense of the poems. But, again, lacking proof, her summing up art and sympathetic friend of its must be accepted simply as a theory.

The book also takes up the influence on Walt of the Trancenden- world's two leading opera houses talists, examining the point as to whether Emerson's teachings affected | naturally brought him in close conthe nature of Walt's vision. Miss Winwar holds that Walt had not read tact with those performers best Emerson at the time he brought out his first edition of "Leaves of Grass." The influence of Walt's mother was, in the author's opinion, the canini, Caruso, Farrar, Chaliapin, strongest personal current in his life; but, again, she does not bring Campanini, Tibbett, Ponselle, Pons, forward much in support of her contention. On the whole, the work is not satisfying. One can say that it reads well. But a serious student of Whitman will find that it only Puccini. In his memoirs Gatti adds to the number of opinions already existing concerning him.

Three Companion Pieces By Margery Sharp. Little, Brown, Boston.

The quality of the three long stories which make up this volume is that peculiar crystalline fragility which one associates with the classic ballet or with marionettes. The reviewer, indeed, reading the trio, often found herself visualizing the scenes as enacted by dancers or puppets. The first of the group is a piece of pathos. It tells of the romantic elopment of a little 18th century French ballet dancer with a handsome young English "milord" who is making the conventional Grand Tour. The dancer has never had such a magnificent lover, and she plans to spend all of three weeks in his company. To her utter dismay, she discovers-too late-that the humorless young man's intentions have been honorable. He takes her to his damp, cold English family home, marries her in the chilly ancestral chapel and returns to his interrupted foxhunting. In the dour air of respectability, the little dancer dies, like a butterfly bereft of the sun. It would make a charming ballet, indeed.

The second piece contains broader implications of irony; it goes beyond pathos and skirts tragedy, but skirts it daintly, even so. It tells of another thwarted romance, but the heroine of this one is a too innocent English girl who, at 17, is being sent to India with her uncle to wed his middle-aged friend, who, as everybody tells her, is "a good match." She is not disturbed by her future. She has no reason to be. For nobody has told her what marriage is. So she gobbles sweets and plays with a parrot and finds her days on shipboard adequately occupied. Then enters the lover of true suitability, a fiery young man who, being poor, is not a good match, a dark romantic, passionate fellow who sweeps her away. While the elders doze and gossip, the young couple, unnoted, play out the Romeo and Juliet theme. Then there is a storm, the young man is killed and the heroine, with a woman's knowledge, views the dull fate that lies before her. Delicately told, this tale nevertheless bites fairly deep.

The third piece is pure comedy. It gives us the story of Kathi, a wild young Albanian girl who, to save a handsome young Englishman's life, kills a fellow countryman, unhesitatingly stabbing him to death. Grateful and enamored, the Englishman marries her and takes her back to Devon. There her grave mountaineer peasant manners deeply impress the county gentry; it shortly mes told that, in her own land, she was royalty—a princess. She pleases every one; she is a model of Victorian

Another hostess almost routed him by producing In this book Mr. Duranty undertakes to breast the current of American opinion and the great weight of past testimony to prove that Stalinist regime in Russia has been an era of good will and innocence. His work merely moves one to the reflection that it is an embarrassing thing for a government to justify its positions on moral grounds unless it is confident that moral principles have a way of remaining unchanged. They do not take color from circumstances. They are not subject to expediency.

Mr. Duranty, however, is not dismayed by his task. He takes for his starting point the fact that most Americans believe that Lenin planned a regime of justice and proceeds from this to declare that Stalin, in everything, has been guided by Lenin's teachings. He disposes of the fact, brought out by Max Eastman, that Lenin repudiated Stalin in his will; he does this by saying that he just does not care what Mr. Eastman says. He is certain that his own opinion is right and documents to the contrary do not matter.

He then takes up the famous trials of the old Bolsheviks, and asserts that the sensational "confessions" were true. In two cases, he heard these confessions delivered, and, he says, that was enough for him. That was proof. And so on. Finland's invasion was justifiable, Russia has always wanted peace, the pact with Germany was only a ruse on Russia's part-and so on again. The details do not matter. Any one who can be satisfied with one man's word unsupported by serious proofs would find the book entirely convincing.

Roosevelt: Dictator or Democrat?

By Gerald W. Johnson. Harper, New York.

This book is announced by both its author and its publisher as an in college, their ambitions, their "impartial" study of the President, undertaken to determine, strictly politics, their diversions. Good preon the basis of facts, whether or not there is reason to fear, as many sentation. Americans do, that Mr. Roosevelt is shaping his course to achieve an eventual dictatorship. It is hard, however, to see where the impartiality Kilbourne (Putnam)-Story of nurse comes in. The tone of the volume is one of frank admiration where who falls in love with her patient's Mr. Roosevelt's character is discussed, and where his deeds are taken husband. Trite. under consideration, only a little moderation is used.

Mr. Johnson, editorial writer for the Baltimore Sun, admits from time to time that Mr. Roosevelt has played politics, and he says, too, eration of battered lives by the inthat politics is a dirty and ruthless game. But even these admissions fluence of country surroundings and are couched in an admiring tone. For what enthralls Mr. Johnson in wholesome country people. Naive. the President's political maneuvering is the conspicuous fact that, to date, the President has always won. The tactics of the game do not appear land Marmur (Holt)-Story of man to him to be important beside the great and gleaming accomplishment of who goes to sea and woman who

He undertakes, to be sure, an examination of the ends to which the President has put his victories; that, indeed, is the whole point of his work. Does the Rooseveltian record represent a break with democratic tradition, he asks, and is the President a truly American figure? The answer to the first question is no, and to the second one yes. As to Mr. Johnson's impartiality in arriving at these answers, however, the reviewer can only say that any reader who has gone as far as page 10 of the book would know, without doubt, what the findings were going to be. It's a set piece. There is nothing else in the world that better describes it.

Apparently, Mr. Johnson, in deciding that Mr. Roosevelt is a genuine American, has not stopped to think that nobody in the country believes nadian wilds, with plot assisted by otherwise. And yet the doubt of Mr. Roosevelt's democracy is fairly widespread. Nobody suspects him of being a foreigner. The point raised by the President's critics, however, and not disposed of to their satisfaction by Mr. Johnson, is that being an American and being a democrat are not necessarily synonymous-that, in short, if we do get a dictator in this country, it will certainly be an American who seizes the power. Not one of the 130,000,000 citizens of the land fears the accession of a foreign tyrant. Yet quite a number of them feel today that democracy is in genuine peril among us.

Considering the sometimes almost revolutionary nature of Mr. Roosevelt's various administrations, Mr. Johnson is able to assure us that there is nothing new in a President taking a revolutionary course; that, in fact, krieg in Poland and brought them the great American Presidents have usually done just that-as, for example, Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln. We may content ourselves therefore, he says, with Mr. Roosevelt's unprecedented conduct; it is the sign of a great President. This reasoning is no doubt eminently satisfactory to the President's admirers. "Unprecedented conduct," however, seems to the reviewer to cover quite a bit of territory, in which there is room for other manifestations than the exclusive ones of greatness.

Mr. Johnson's book will please pro-Rooseveltians and displease anti-told her at various times. Hers is the story of a little boy who left school because he wanted to be a cowboy, a youth who wanted to see the world, a man whose interest in all the life around him and whose natural talents made him beloved from Maine to California.

Mrs. Rogers has attempted to be objective, to picture the daily habits, the quirks and the philosophy of her famous husband. In doing so, sne has made generous use of quotations from his newpaper paragraphs, his longer weekly articles, his lectures and his letters home. Actually, Will Rogers is seen best through what he said himself; but, by the way she has assembled her material and by the background anecdotes she has salted between the quotations, Mrs. Rogers high lights the common sense remarks of her husband's words.

The publication of this book may produce a renewed interest in Will Rogers' opinions. Readers are sure to find such collections refreshing. The world could use a Will Rogers today.

William Henry Harrison: His Life and Times

By James A. Green. Garrett & Massie, Richmond. This biography, written as an old-fashioned eulogy, is evidently a work of love. It is paintakingly documented and obviously accurate in historical detail. There are many excellent photographs, old and new; and there are poems and even musical scores of songs and dances of the era. Finally, the publishers have printed the volume handsomely, in large format with what must be the year's biggest and clearest type.

But all this cannot atone for the fact that the biography itself is anything but distinguished. Its form is so haphazard that one is not always certain what character or era the author is writing about. The style is stilted and awkward. Mr. Green strives to make every episode in the life of the old Indian fighter as important as the battle of Tippecanoe. The result is a book without proper emphasis or values—in short an unsatisfying interpretation.

Latin America Produces A Steinbeck of Its Own

Broad and Alien Is the World

By Ciro Alegria. Translated from the Spanish by Harriet de

Onis. Farrar & Rinehart, New York. This book is announced as winner of the Latin American Prize Novel Contest, a competition organized throughout the Latin American countries and in Puerto Rico under the direction of the Division of Intellectual Co-operation of the Pan-American Union. The author is a young Peruvia 1 who has already achieved prominence in letters in his own country. His present book indicates that he has somewhat the qualities and preoccupations of our own John Steinbeck.

For the story is a presentation of the case of an underprivileged group, the "community Indians" of Peru. "Community Indians" seem to be those who hold their own lands and are consequently independent of the white population. Such tribes live in their own villages, elect their own officials and generally carry on a self-contained existence. But, though thus independent, they are usually ignorant and simple, and, when a white land owner wishes to dispossess such a group, it appears that he can do so with no real opposition, since the Indians are powerless before the white weapon of legality. That is the whole matter of the

The little community of Rumi is the center of the story. It lies in fertile land, and the nearby rancher, Don Alvaro, covets the good acres. He also plans to use the labor of the Indians, when he has dispossessed them, to work his mine. So he starts proceedings. The Indians strive to meet fire with fire and employ a lawyer, but they are victimized on every hand. Their counsel accepts Don Alvaro's bribe while ostensibly fighting their case; they lose and are forced to move to new land which is poor and unfertile, and Don Alvaro visits his vengeance on them by stealing their sheep and cattle and imprisoning their leaders on trumpedup charges. The active men drift away to die hunting rubber or working the coca plantations, both forms of hideous slavery. Those who remain sink into despair and die of the bitter climate of their new holdings. It is a shocking, sickening tale, and beautifully written. There is one consideration, however, which ought to be mentioned of works of this kind, and that is that they quite often present a picture which is more dramatic than complete. They are, of course, novels, not reports, and they must have the unity of a work of fiction. But one has only to think of the most famous of their type, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," to realize that a fervid protest in fiction against an injustice, even a real injustice, does not necessarily cover the whole case. Certainly, no one would try to maintain that Mrs. Stowe presented anything like a complete years to his family, and his efforts or just picture of slavery in our own country, and likewise Mr. Steinbeck, wringing the bosoms of well-fed readers with "The Grapes of Wrath," produced a work which was rather more black and white than any con-

This is not to say, however, that Mr. Alegria's novel is not, as a novel, a first-rate thing. But Americans who are astonished when Mr. Steinbeck's foreign readers ask them how soon they think the revolution of the Okies is going to break out might meet the same kind of surprise in Peruvians if they took "Broad and Alien Is the World" as a complete authority on its subject. The suggestion is made, at any rate, for dispassionate consideration.

All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes. Messner, New York.

Although frankly fictional as to its leading characters and the episodes in which they are involved, this novel nevertheless gives a faithful picture of the glamour, fascination and intrigue that is Wash-

The story is divided into two parts, "The Fat Years" and "The Days of Reckoning," covering the period of 1927 to 1940, during which the city was swept from its quiet, self-satisfied complacency into the larger and more diverse orbit of world affairs. This novel includes a wide assortment of characters drawn from many aspects of Washington life, although the main thread of the story is wound about the comings and goings of only a small group. Chief among these is Wing, a red-headed country girl who becomes a newspaper woman of wide influence. She marries Bob Morton, a Senator's son. They organize a newspaper syndicate and Zoe not only ferrets out much Capital gossip, but travels to many foreign countries in quest of news

There are members of the diplomatic corps who engage in romances and make marriages with Washington women. There are rich dowagers, daring debutantes, pampered beauties and social secretaries.

One of the more amusing episodes concerns the flutter of small talk and gossip which preceded the well-remembered garden party at the British Embassy for King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. But, while the locale is largely Washington, the author, through the eyes of Zoe, also brings to view many interesting scenes and incidents in France, Mexico and South

Mrs. Keyes, who lives in Alexandria, displays evidence that she has learned her Washington well. She has written authoritatively, and with fine skill, of an era which encompassed one of the most thrilling of the GLADYS WOOD DANIEL.

Capital's colorful history.

By Randolph Leigh. Lippincott, Philadelphia.

Mr. Leigh, whose articles on this adventure appeared last winter in The Star, believes he has found one of the last frontiers, and, strangely enough, it lies just below the State of California. The frontier in question is the Gulf of California and the land bordering it—the Mexican coast line to the east and Lower California to the west. Cortez explored the gulf in the 1540s, the Jesuits attempted the building of missions in the 17th century: but apart from these intrusions, the region has been unnoticed by all but a relatively few adventurers and colonists.

Cruising the tide-racked gulf to its headwaters, the author and a group of scientists virtually rediscovered the gulf country and returned with a wealth of data and information. It probably comes as a surprise to many Americans that the gulf country contains some of the richest mineral deposits in the world, sufficient marine life to supply all the fish for the United States and Mexico, and the world's most violent tidal bores. All this the author discovered aboard the two-masted schooner

In continuing this exploration by small boat up the old Colorado River, Mr. Leigh returned with data leading him to believe that the turbulent gulf is slowly eating northward and might, in time, flood California's rich Imperial Valley. The author also believes it would be to the advantage of the United States to purchase the peninsula. Mexico has failed to mine its mineral wealth or otherwise take advantage of its many resources, he maintains, and certainly this country would.

Mr. Leigh has written a highly informative book which does not lag because the author knows when to leave off facts and figures and return to adventure afloat. The book also contains interesting history MALCOLM D. LAMBORNE, Jr. of this little-known region.

In a large room we found gray metal tanks containing crustaceans. What interested me most were the sand fiddlers, which ranged from 3 to 5 inches in length. I was amazed to discover that these in their infancy are the tiny crabs found on oysters. One crab with a claw about twice the size of his body convinced me that he wasn't as friendly as those in the infant stage.

Next was the fishroom, where I saw some bluefish and large rock. The rock were all tagged and ready to be turned loose. The tags were for identification, so that when the fish were caught the hatchery could be notified and thus find out how far the fish had traveled since their liberation. I saw one bluefish hungrily eyeing a rock. I wonder if he would have sent in the tag had he caught his neighbor.

Jimmy Henry, 16, of Anacostia High School has a friend from whom even the mighty Tarzan might learn a thing or two. Only under the most desperate circumstances does he resort to the use of a weapon, and then it is nothing more formidable than knife. The friend surprised Jimmy and his father by showing up without a "He said he could do much better with a club," Jimmy explains. 'My father and I thought he was

They still thought so after they had bagged their first rabbit. Their friend had tried to use his club, but the animal would have escaped if Jimmy hadn't scored a bull's-eye with his gun.

With the next rabbit, however, the Henrys' friend did better. "He killed the rabbit caveman style," Jimmy writes. "And my father, not having any luck with his gun, decided to try the club. He got one rabbit this way and had a good chance to get two more; but he was inexperienced with the club, and missed both shots."

The friend did much better, however. "All told," Jimmy summarizes,

GIRLS AS ARMY FLYERS. In addition to her many flight records, Jacqueline Cochran has still another. "Jackie" was the first woman pilot to deliver an Americanbuilt Hudson bomber to England. It is doubtful if the feat could be duplicated by any of the 2,258 certifled woman pilots in the United States. Ferrying bombers is a job that demands ample experience and training, besides a passing grade in a stiff ferry pilot's examination. Mrs. Vita Roth, managing director and treasurer of the Women Flyers America, believes that women should be trained to ferry planes across the United States or from the manufacturer to the airport, and relieve the men for more important duties. Any girl who holds a commercial license and has had the proper number of flying hours would be eligible. The United States Army Air Corps has already acted on this suggestion and has requested the registration all qualified woman pilots with 200 hours or more of flying experience, interested in the possibility of assisting in the ferrying of aircraft under the jurisdiction of the Army Air Corps Ferry Command. The job is to be a full-time one with a salary

House Military Unit To Make Study of Army Personnel

District Quartermaster Officers Will Hold Court-Martial

A special House Military Affairs Subcommittee plans to conduct a study of Army personnel administration during the present session of Congress. It has not been determined what the scope of the study will be, but indications are that the center of the inquiry will be the relation of Reserve commissioned personnel to that of the Regular Army.

Fear has been expressed by some members that a personnel study might degenerate into a verbal contest as to whether Reserves are being given a square deal in the Army. It is expected the subcommittee will take up the study as soon as its chairman, Representative Faddis, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, now on active duty as a Reserve colonel, returns to Washington.

District quartermaster officers will hold a mock general court-martial tomorrow evening at the Social Security Building, Third street and Independence avenue S.W. The meeting will be in charge of Maj. Paul K. Monaghan.

A film, portraying the use of the machine gun in attack, will be shown at the 320th Infantry conference at martial will be taken up.

Wednesday evening Military Intelligence Department officers will view a film covering the interrogation of prisoners, followed by a discussion of geographical hot spots.

The controller general recently ruled that a Regular Army Reservist no on account of conditions of dependency not existing at the time he entered active duty or within 20 days thereafter, was discharged on his own application made more than 20 days after his acceptance for active duty, is entitled to the lumpsum allowance payable to Regular Army Reservists for time on the Reserve list, if found qualified and accepted for active duty.

LEST WE FORGET

THE FIRST FLAG to fly over our country was a white rectangular banner with the picture of a black raven. Leif Ericson planted it in New England in the year 1000.

THE RAVEN WAS the Vikings' compass. Released, the black-wingers flew straight to the nearest land.

THE ROYAL STANDARD of England — red cross of St. George on a white field — was the second flag to fly on this continent. In 1497 John Cabot planted it on the American mainland.

THE MAYFLOWER flew the Royal Standard years later when it brought the Pilgrims to America.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1787, Captains Robert Gray and John Kendrick set sail from Boston — and carried the Stars and Stripes on its first trip around the world.

HISTORIANS believe the idea for the stars and stripes in our flag came from the traditional arms of the Washington family: three red stars, two red bars.

DANIEL WEBSTER started the custom of rising for the "Star-Spangled Banner." The first time a whole audience rose was when Jenny Lind sang it.

THE SUN NEVER sets on our flag. It waves over 4,000,000 square miles of American territory — from Alaska to the Virgin Islands, from the Panama Canal to American Samoa.

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

GET MAD!

by Channing Pollock

HREE years ago, Dana Webster, a 67-year-old civil engineer in Indianapolis, read the proposals for his city's budget with mounting indignation. There were the usual indications of waste and possible graft. But in Indianapolis, as elsewhere, the population took these things for granted, dug down for ever-increasing taxes, groaned a little, and let it go at that.

Webster wrote a petition of protest. When 600 voters had signed that petition, a meeting was called and an organization set up. Nevertheless, the budget passed, and then Webster got mad. "Not angry," he confessed; "just plain mad." He had never made speeches before, but he made them now. Four thousand people attended the next meeting, and 27,000 signed the petition. Webster and his crowd trimmed the tax rate in 30 counties.

By the same tactics, half a dozen citizens of Larchmont, N. Y., have saved the town five million dollars since 1939. A woman in Yonkers, N. Y., lost patience with the local political machine and, beginning with gatherings of small groups in her home, rolled up a rebellion that swept that machine into the rubbish heap. There have been more or less similar manifestations in Cleveland and Kansas City and Toledo, but they have been far too few. Nothing of the sort ever happens—no reform great or small, is ever possible—until someone decides that "enough is enough," and goes out to do something about it.

As a people, it seems to me, we are regrettably afflicted with good temper. That is a virtue, of course, within certain limits, but only within certain limits. Beyond that, it is merely an alias for stupidity, laziness and indifference. An English friend said to me long ago, "You Americans will stand anything. For 40 years, your citizens have clung to straps, and been pushed around, in streetcars and subways, and nobody has done anything about it. Yesterday, I saw a subway guard plant his shoulder against a woman's back and shove. If that happened in London, somebody would raise hell and put a stop to it mighty quickly."

GRUMBLING but impotent millions are herded and pushed around in almost every city of the United States. "Something should be done," we say when we get shoved. But before night we've forgotten the matter, or decided to "let George do it."

We have stood for crime, graft, greed, corruption, treason; rotten politics and dangerous pressure groups have gone almost unopposed by the vast majorities on whose apathy they depend. One concludes that what America needs is not "a good five-cent cigar," but the capacity to get mad. We are ready enough to get mad about little things that affect us personally; why can't we get mad enough to do something about important things that concern all of us?

A few years ago, members of two labor unions got into a row and threw gas bombs among the women and children at matinees in 21 New York motion-picture theaters. Thirty-five people were injured, and when the story appeared on the first pages of newspapers, I waited for an outburst of public indignation. I'm still waiting. Continued disclosure of subversive teaching in our schools, continued interruption of production for national defense, and continued evidence of the effectiveness of alien agents still interest us far less than the football or baseball scores As Denis Tilden Lynch points out in a care fully-documented book, the alliance of criminals and politicians "represents a yearly tax of $57 to $105 on every man, woman and child in this country . . . and nobody seems to care." In the four Presidential elections preceding that of Franklin D. Roosevelt, only three per cent more than half our electorate ever "cared" enough to go to the polls!

EVEN in our personal lives an occasional explosion can serve to clear away debris. My first public speech was so haltingly inept that I left the room in a rage at myself. The result of that rage has been 17 years of continuous lecturing. Once, I asked a particularly gentle and kindly acquaintance how he won a citation for gallantry in the World War. "A machine-gun nest opened fire on us," he answered, "and I was about ready to run, when they killed a buddy of mine. That made me mad, and the next thing I knew we'd waded into those Heinies, and I had a Congressional Medal."

It is astonishing how many political and social achievements have followed that pattern. A schoolteacher in London went to a slum to instruct some poor women in sewing. The appalling conditions Octavia Hill saw there made her indignant. With borrowed money, she leased three houses, and turned them into the first model tenements. That example started a worldwide movement. Florence Nightingale, horrified at the treatment given wounded soldiers in the Crimean War, organized a nursing service that has spread over the world and eased the suffering of millions.

Most of such blessings of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness as the world still enjoys were the attainments of angry men who stormed a Bastile or tossed a shipload of tea into Boston Harbor.

Too many of us today have adopted "I'm too busy," "I can't be bothered," "It's none of my affair," and "What can I do?" as slogans. No person, family, community or country can survive such general complacency and indifference. "Eternal vigilance" cannot preserve our freedom unless that vigilance is translated into vexation and action.

On Monday we shall begin the celebration of "Bill of Rights Week." It has been 150 years since we added to the Constitution those amendments that guarantee our liberties. We have enjoyed those rights because, more than a century and a half ago, our ancestors got mad enough to risk their lives for them. We shall continue to enjoy them only so long as we retain our capacity to get fighting mad whenever they may be threatened.

SIDELINES

BARBECUE. Recently a British bomber smashed a Nazi war plant in the Danish town of Skive. Propagandist Goebbels reversed his usual procedure and issued a communiqué which was a masterpiece of understatement. He said there were no damages — the only thing hit had been a cow.

The local paper, "Skive Folkeblad," dutifully carried the announcement. Then added the simple devastating comment:

"The cow burned for four days."

REASON. A teacher in one of New York's progressive schools for small people noticed that Mary, a three-year-old, would go off in a corner when there was group play and single out only one child as a companion.

The teacher, curious, asked: "Mary,

Mary had an answer . . .

why don't you come over here and play with all of us?"

Mary had an answer: "I like to play with Marjorie better than anybody — 'cause Marjorie puts mischief in my head."

POLITE. While we were waiting for a traffic light the other night, we read an interesting sign on the back of one of those huge cross-country trucks:

THIS TRUCK STOPS FOR ALL R.R. CROSS-INGS, REDHEADS AND BRUNETTES — AND WILL BACK UP ½ MILE FOR A BLONDE

MOMENCLATURE. The name Doe means lots when it's up in lights on the Metropolitan Opera marquee. It also means lots of trouble to its owner, Doris Doe, the contralto Grace Turner tells about in her food article this week.

Trouble came for the first time just after Doris, alone, had arrived in New York with heavy ambitions and light pockets.

As her financial supply dwindled, she was delighted one day to get a money order from her father. She rushed to the post office to cash it. Before she knew it, she was surrounded by alert guards and suspicious postal clerks. Finally, supported by credentials and witnesses, she was able to prove that she was not trying to defraud the government — her father (whose signature had caused all the fuss) was really and truly John Doe.

Lifting the curtain, for a moment, on the dead city, the lost gold and the sixty-six Germans

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

Groton and Harvard, and striped trousers and morning coat at tea in Lord Halifax's gardens, but Homer Jones was Central High and the University of Nebraska, and wore herringbones, and despised starched shirts. He ate at Casey's Chop House across from the State Department, and he lived in a tiny apartment in the lower reaches of Massachusetts Avenue, which is really all a Foreign Service Officer, Class 8, can afford.

"You'll never get anywhere in the department," Lockhart, chief of the European Division, told him, "until you get yourself a chic wife — rich — who knows how to seat sixteen at dinner according to protocol, and who can persuade you to wear clothes."

"What's wrong with my clothes?"

"Nothing, except that they make you look like an airedale after a run through a swamp."

"Me, I'm just a country boy." Homer would then allow his six-foot-four frame to collapse into the best leather chair in Lockhart's office, so that his elbows and knees projected at impossible angles, and Lockhart would groan, and sigh, and shake his head. He remembered that Homer Jones had displayed a knack for obtaining excellent information in the most unlikely places. He remembered that he was young in the department, and there hadn't been time to knock off the rough edges. But Lockhart had a practical suspicion of homespun diplomats. They got themselves, and the country, into trouble.

One day the Undersecretary called Lockhart into his office, and asked whether the European Division could produce a man who had been stationed neither in France nor the Caribbean, and who could pass as a tourist—"You know, just an old-fashioned, pre-1939, American tourist."

"I have one like that," said Lockhart, "Homer Jones."

"What's he like?"

"He is," said Lockhart, "as average American as sirloin steak. Sometimes I think he has sense. Other times I wonder."

The Undersecretary thought this over. "How is his French?" he asked.

"Execrable."

"That's fine. Jones — Jones." The Undersecretary played with the name, Jones, uttering it to the somber oils on the walls. "Jones," he said. "Somehow it ought to be Hallowell, or Pettybone. Jones is almost too good a name for an American tourist. However —"

In A short time Homer Jones found himself in Room 21 of the Grand Hotel de la Paix in Fort de France, on the French island of Martinique. He was staring at a hairy spider usurping his shower, and wondering how he could shake le comte Andre Fouget, and at the same time meet the girl in the white dress. Since both of them were in the bar below, he could not very well avoid one and approach the other.

There was nothing in the agenda, he knew, that called upon him to meet a girl. His instructions were explicit. He was to find out what was happening to all the rubber coming from South America. He was to seek out the anti-Vichy element, and discover the truth about the gold. He was to find out what happened to the sixty-six Germans.

Martinique was still a chink in the armor of bases guarding the Caribbean, but it was flanked, now, by the new American bases at Dominica and St. Lucia. It was uncomfortable, having Martinique under the control of Darlan and Laval, but it was not dangerous unless it fell into the hands of the Germans. The United States kept a destroyer patrolling outside the scimitar-shaped harbor of Fort de France, and a fleet somewhere in the background, and a tireless, shrewd Naval Attache who prowled the waterfront, to see that this did not happen.

There were, however, disturbing incidents. Too much rubber was arriving in Martinique. and not enough was going out. Half the gold of the Bank of France was buried up in the dungeons of Fort Bourbon, but there were rumors that some had filtered away. And there were, definitely, sixty-six Germans who had disembarked from a Casablanca ship, and then had vanished. The State Department hoped that the Germans were not aviators, because of the American-built pursuit planes and dive bombers on the hill behind the fort. It hoped they were not navy officers, because the aircraft carrier Bearn still lay moored in the bay, and the eruiser Bertin was still in dock. The department hoped they were not a number of other things, and since the department didn't know who and what they were, the department was jittery and had to find out.

Under no circumstances, Lockhart had emphasized, was he to ask help from the Naval Attache or the consul. Vichy was seeking an excuse to eliminate the American listening posts on Martinique, and they were not to be involved in any trouble Homer Jones might stir up for himself.

So far, Homer hadn't been able to stir up any trouble, but he had been in Fort de France only six hours. She was obviously an American, and what is so rare as an American girl on the island of Martinique? "What would any tourist do?" he asked his conscience. He stepped under the shower, dressed quickly, and then took time to perform a little trick he had learned from a friend in the FBI. He arranged three toilet articles so carefully that if they were moved a fraction of an inch he'd know it...

She was half through her Cisco punch when he entered the bar. She was a smallish girl, well-made, with the grace of competence you see in a trained nurse, or an airline hostess. She looked up when he came in, and his long legs carried him to her table. "Hello," he ventured. "Aren't you from home?"

"I was hoping you'd come down," she said.
"You know, we're the only American tourists in Fort de France, and I knew we'd have to meet sooner or later. So I just waited here for you. Sort of an ambush."

"I'll take a tall one," Homer said, slumping into a chair. "This heat knocks me out."

"You won't find it so bad tomorrow," the girl said, "when you go over the mountains to St. Pierre."

Homer jumped. "How," he asked, "did you know I was going to St. Pierre?"

"Oh, I know all about you. You're an amateur volcanologist, and you came to Martinique to take a look at Mt. Pelé. Your name is Homer Jones, and you're from Hyannis, Nebraska. That makes us practically neighbors. I'm from South Dakota, originally."

At the next table, Homer knew, the two officers were inspecting him. They wore the duck shorts and shirt of the French Navy on tropical duty, but they weren't Frenchmen. They were memorizing his face.

"How did you learn all that?" Homer asked.

"Oh, Andre told me." The count, Homer was relieved to find, was not at his elbow. The count had been at his elbow ever since he stepped off the clipper dock. The count had been very courteous, explaining why military laws made it necessary for him to leave his camera under seal and offering to obtain a car for his trip to St. Pierre and Mt. Pelé — even volunteering to change dollars into francs at above the legal rate.

"Does the count," Homer asked, "make it a point to meet stray Americans?"

"He's met the only two who have strayed here in the last year. But even if he hadn't given your history, I'd have found out anyway. Radio Savane."

"What,"Homer inquired, "is Radio Savane?"

THE girl sipped her drink, and lowered her head, and Homer saw that her lashes were long and dark. Then he noticed that they were concealing her eyes as they cut at the next table. "The Savane," she explained, "is that big park between Fort St. Louis and the town—the one with those trenches in it, masquerading as air-raid shelters. People meet there, to talk."

JOKES TO BEAT HITLER

By radio, secret pamphlet and word of mouth, the British are warring with wisecracks. Here are a few of the tales that make Nazi leaders squirm

by Peter Engelmann

SHORT while ago, the London radio broadcast an especially exciting bulletin — in seven European languages: 'Rumors circulating in Switzerland report the German Air Field Marshal, Hermann Goering, shot down over the English East Coast.'

At the end of the regular news period, the announcer rushed in with a flash:

"We have just received information from authoritative sources concerning the rumor circulating in Switzerland that Hermann Goering was shot down over Great Britain. These rumors are believed to have been due to the mistaken identity of a balloon drifting over the East Coast."

A joke? Certainly. Yet, it's much more than that: it is Psychological Warfare.

In the great "V" campaign which is now sweeping Europe, laughter has become a weapon as important as guns. Jokes have become dynamite. And political anecdotes whispered everywhere are undermining the Nazi colossus.

Laughter Is Bitter

TRUE, it is not the gay laughter of children, or the satisfied geniality of a party after dinner is over and the cigars are lighted. It is a bitter laughter which follows words whispered in the dark. It is the laughter of people who are no longer allowed to say what they think, who are separated from the truth, but who, in the face of all lurking terror, cannot resist the urge to whisper a mocking word. The more ruthless the terror, the harder their jokes hit.

Yet these jokes are more than the last refuge for the freedom of the human mind they also represent one of the gravest obstacles

and radio, S.S. men and Quislings - all pound out, day and night, their prophecies of happiness to those who follow the Leader and of misery and death to everyone who dares to resist. To contradict those lies with logic would be a laborious task. But there is another way of debunking propaganda - a simple five-line letter, for instance. It was written first in Germany. Now thousands of copies of it are circulating through the Netherlands and Belgium:

"Dear Uncle in America: We are fine. No one has been harmed. Hitler is leading us to new prosperity. Cousin Hendrick, who was of different opinion, was buried yesterday."

Jokes in a hundred different versions tear the mask of lies from the Nazi face. In Austria they may whisper this in your ear: Hansl meets Franzl. Franzl has just been released from the Dachau concentration camp. "My dear Franzl," says Hansl, "I am so happy to see you again. It must have been terrible, horrible . . . "Horrible?" interrupts Franzl quickly. "It was the most healthful time in all my life. Early in the morning we started out with excellent exercise. Then we got a hearty breakfast. Afterwards we were allowed to rest and to read the latest newspapers and magazines. Then lunch, very good food - and so it went on ...'

Hansl looks incredulous. "I talked to Sepp when he came back from Dachau, and what he told me certainly sounded very different from this.'

'Quite possibly," snaps Franzl. "But Sepp is already back again."

Nobody Knows How They Start

WHAT makes the political joke an outstanding psychological weapon is the fact that such biting laughter need not be stimulated artificially. Nor does it have to be smuggled into Hitler Europe. It springs straight from the heart of the people.

Rarely can you find the source of such anecdotes - like folk songs, they begin spontaneously and, once they catch on, they spread rapidly. Furthermore, a good joke has in itself a charm and appeal which even a true Nazi cannot resist. So the stories are carried over the continent by German soldiers, by Hitler's S. A. troopers — as well as by men just released from concentration camps and other anti-Nazis.

And underground workers and psychological campaigners are working feverishly to spread the barbed tales. Jokes brought by refugees and couriers to England are thrown back by radio to all corners of the Continent. Additional laughs are created by a few wits who work in the Foreign Language Section of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

No other program presents more jokes than the one the Danes - always Europe's gayest people - broadcast from London. The Danish speaker likes to put his jokes in the middle of news broadcasts. Between latest bulletins from the Eastern Front and reports of new R.A.F. bombings you may hear the story of a Mrs. Thoersleff who went shopping and asked for a pound of butter.

"No butter, madam," the grocer's wife replied.

"Then please give me a dozen eggs." "No eggs."

went into the house. It was the biggest house Mack Spencer had ever seen. The living room's huge window framed a view of lawn and white beach and blue gulf. But Mack Mack went up to his room, unpacked and had been raised on this coast, so he turned sat on the edge of the bed, staring at the back to look again at the girl. He had to wall but seeing instead the way Ann Hendermake a distinct effort to keep from staring son's dark hair curled about her head; the at her while he talked to Mr. Rogers. "I was wide, level dark eyes; her mouth with its in the National Guard," he explained. "That's almost straight upper lip and the lower one how I happen to be a sergeant." the room with violent strides. What's wrong with me? he thought. A

Julian. He wrenched himself erect, pacing

Julian had, a date with Ann that night, and there was a pretty red-haired girl to go with Mack. They danced at the pavilion where, between tunes on the juke organ, they could hear the soft mutter of the surf and the clash of palm fronds. Under a laterising moon, they drove across the long bridge to the mainland. In Sarasota they danced to the music of local bands, and at two in the morning bought beer and sandwiches at a stand near the bay.

When they reached Julian's home, dawn was stretching sleepy arms into the sky. From a pine tree a mockingbird tried a few tentative notes. "The only reveille we'll have this morning." Julian said. "How'd you like

"Who? Oh. Swell. She's a good dancer." Julian laughed. "Army life's got you. You look as if you were already asleep.

But when his body was lax between cool, lettuce-crisp sheets, Mack could not sleep. He could only think of Ann. He recalled her face, feature by feature: the high forehead, the straight nose. It was a pretty face but it was not, he forced himself to admit, earthshakingly beautiful. She was no prettier than the red-haired girl. Why then couldn't he breathe without thinking of her? She was Julian's girl, anyway.

It's just one of those things and I'll be over it tomorrow, he thought, and rolled face down upon the bed, trying to shut off the memories within his brain.

THAT afternoon. Ann was as pretty in a bathing suit as he had known she would be. her legs and shoulders a deep gold. But she didn't swim well, and this surprised him until she said, "Oh, I'm just a beginner. Dad retired and came down here last fall; until then I'd lived in a small city in the midwest where the only water you didn't drink was in the community pool. It was always crowded, and people were always getting ear trouble from going in it, so -

"Wait until I square things with Uncle Sam and get back to stay," Julian said. But he did not wait to begin the first lesson. After watching them for awhile Mack swam slowly out into the gulf, then back again. There was a dull ache at his heart and he was furiously angry with himself because of it; yet he could not shake it off.

And as the days drifted past he knew that it was hopeless. "I've got to get away from here," he told himself. "I've got to get away before I make a fool of myself." But he had no excuse to walk out before his leave was up. And now Julian was shouting from downstairs for him to come on and play tennis.

He didn't want to play tennis. His game was just good enough to show how much better was the game Julian played - the difference between a man who has played some for fun, and one who has had ample instruction by professionals. Everything else was that way too, Mack thought. His dancing was all right, but Julian's was more polished and intricate. Mack was a strong swimmer, but his strokes looked slow and clumsy in the water compared to Julian's flashing crawl. Even their physical appearance had this difference: Mack, slightly the larger, had a good humored, pleasant face that had none of Julian's sharp handsomeness.

He wondered if Julian had invited him here to act as a foil for his own qualities before Ann, at the same time incurring an obligation Mack would have hundreds of chances to repay at camp. But that was completely unfair, he told himself; he was a louse to be thinking it. Nobody but a louse would fall in love with his friend's girl and then get dirty thoughts about the friend because of it.

THERE was rain one afternoon, sudden thunder while the sun still shone, then a whipping wind and thick gray rain. Julian snarled against the forced postponement of a tennis match, tried to read for a while, then went to

About twilight the rain stopped, and Mack went for a walk along the beach. The sky was gray, the wind blew and a gull flew into the wind, seeming to hang suspended, neither making progress nor losing, until it whirled, tilted sideways, and went sailing downward, its raucous cries drifting behind it.

Mack had gone about a mile when more rain came.sweeping down the beach to meet him. Ahead of him there was an old palmthatched shelter, and after one look at the rain he raced for it. He and the rain reached the shelter at the same moment and he pulled up, panting. Ann said, "I didn't think you were going to make it."

She was sitting on a rickety, unpainted table, the relic of some forgotten picnic. She wore white shorts and a white, short-sleeved shirt, and in her hair a few drops of windblown spray glistened. For moments he could only look at her as a man might look at a dream which fails to vanish upon awakening. "What - ?" he said. "Where - ? I didn't see you."

"And don't sound very pleased to see me

He made an effort to grin and recover his composure. "That was surprise, not disap-pointment."

Ann said she must go home. She and Julian went out together, and Mack was not aware fellow takes me home with him on leave and now." that he was staring after them until Mrs. I get mad at him for having a good-looking Rogers said. "She's so pretty I'm not surgirl. I must be going nuts. prised that Julian has ideas of marriage when

Louise?"

"I'd sort of like to go there," Homer said, "to listen."

If you walk two abreast, Homer discovered, it is best to walk in the street because of the toytown sidewalks, and they had walked almost to the Savane when Homer said: "Say, who are you, anyway, and what are you doing where you know you oughtn't to be, and how is it you know all about me, and I don't know a thing about you?"

"My name is Anne Smith, I've been here a week, and I came because I've always wanted to go to France, and I never had a chance to go anywhere -I did secretarial work for a grain house until my great aunt Hannah died. Then of course I couldn't go to France. Martinique was the next best thing. Martinique," she said, as if she were reading it from a travel folder, "is a bit of Old France in the New World."

"Didn't you think it might be a bit dangerous, just at this time?"

"That's what my boss told me, but I didn't listen to him.'

A sudden horror overcame Homer Jones, and he stopped and grabbed her arm. "Did you say your name was

"What's wrong with Smith?" Then she knew what had leaped into his mind, for she said: "Of course, it may seem rather strange to the French, one of us named Jones and the other Smith. But that's my name, and there's nothing I can do about it."

THE Savane was alive - not with individuals, but with small groups. The groups congealed, hands gesticulated, heads nodded, and then they disintegrated and formed other groups. Thus the news was passing in Fort de France, for the censorship was strict, Radio Martinique broadcast only, the official communiqués from Vichy; and only the very rich could afford a short wave radio, or dare to possess one.

The girl steered him expertly into one of these groups, one where there were no sailors, or Senegalese troops, but only the dark men of Martinique. In a few moments Homer knew why he had seen "De Gaulle" chalked on the hotel walls, and the letter "V" cut into a table top.

It was best, he knew, to be only mildly curious, and to use the negative approach. There was, of course, no truth to the rumors that sixty-six Germans had come and vanished? The gold, naturally, was still in the dungeons of the fort. How could it slip by the American destroyer sniffing at the harbor entrance like a nervous hunting dog?

The girl's head was tilted, and she was looking up at him appraisingly, and Homer felt that he was talking too much, perhaps, and exposing his hand to a girl of whom he knew nothing -- except that she claimed to be named Anne Smith, and surely had no business on this island.

One of the Martiniquans spoke of the possibility of rain. Anne Smith put her hand on Homer's arm and said, "I see our friends of the hotel bar are sitting on the bench over there. They are Alsatians, no doubt, or perhaps from Lorraine.

"No doubt," said Homer. "I guess we'd better get going."

"You are," Anne Smith said as they strolled back to the hotel, " a very curious man. I guess the word is inquisitive."

MISSION TO MARTINIQUE

"It's my pointed nose," Homer said. "You're going out with me tonight, I hope. The count wanted to show me the town, but you seem to know it pretty well."

"Not well enough," she said, "to talk about such things as Germans or gold among people I meet for the first time.'

"Didn't know they were so sensitive," said Homer. Then the wind shifted, and the stench of rotting gutters slapped them in the face. "Just a little bit of Old France in the New World!" Homer remarked.

"IF YOU close your eyes and hold your nose you'd think you were in Paris," Anne said.

"Do you know Paris well?" Homer asked.

She looked at him, and he thought she frowned.

That night they drank Piper Heid-sieck, '28, and then went out and sat on the sea wall, and their legs dangled over so that the tiny waves of the bay whispered close by their toes. He put his arm around her shoulders, and would have kissed her, except that he'd been thinking, and was afraid.

When he returned to Room 21, he knew at once it had been ransacked. His tube of toothpaste and his shaving soap were gone entirely, so he knew it had been done by an expert. He was unworried. His clothes bore Omaha labels, or none at all, and all his instructions were in his head.

It was after midnight when he heard the gentle tap on his door. He opened it, and a man stepped in and said, "Do not turn on the lights. I am one of those to whom you spoke this evening. If I were interested in such things," he continued, "I would make a tour, if I were a tourist, to see Mt.

"It is just things that one hears," Homer said. "It is not of importance or concern to anyone, least of all me."

"OF COURSE not. But you will not be able to go tomorrow, although tomorrow would be the best time to go. The road along the shore is always closed. It is said it was washed away by the rains. And every two weeks or so the road over the mountains is closed also, and tomorrow it will be closed."

"Thanks," Homer said, and the man was gone. He was a chunky little man, and evidently was frightened. . .

Homer exhibited, he thought, just the proper amount of surprise and chagrin when le comte Andre Fouget appeared in the morning to offer his

It was to be regretted, but no cars could be obtained that day. There was the gasoline shortage, and also the road was under repairs. He would not fail, the count assured him, tomorrow.

Homer dawdled over his breakfast. hoping that the girl would come down. He was watching the stairs when she entered the dining room from the patio, and sat down beside him. "You've been out already?" he asked.

"Yes. Early morning is the only time to walk. Too hot after the sun's

"Well," he said, wondering if it was anxiety he saw in her eyes, "I guess my trip's off. The count says there aren't any cars - no gas. Anyway the road is closed."

"Now isn't that strange," said Anne Smith. "I saw a whole string of trucks going out of the city just at dawn. Covered with tarpaulins. They were headed for St. Pierre."

"Yes," Homer admitted, "that is strange, but, of course, the count must know.

"Of course."

"Well," Homer said, "guess I'll be going. There's the curator at the museum to see, and some others."

The Sweetest Story Ever Told...

THANKS TO PALMOLIVE ... MADE WITH OLIVE AND PALM OILS

There need be no age-limit for loveliness. Sweet tribute is paid alike to the Debutante's glamour and to Mother's glowing charm. Today's lovely women are wise in their beauty care...most particular of all, in their choice of a beauty soap and knowing this is the allimportant step to a lovely glowing complexion, soft and smooth as dew-fresh flower petals, millions of women keep to one soap, Palmolive.

Because Palmolive, they know, is made with olive and palm oils, Nature's finest beauty aids. These vegetable oils (no animal fats) are the only oils used in Palmolive's making. And though this is true of no other leading soap, Palmolive costs no more.

Yes, lovely women try Palmolive because of its cherished blend of olive and palm oils. And as ardent whispers testify to Palmolive's beauty benefits . . . they determine to keep to Palmolive. So it is that Palmolive has won and held its place...the largest selling beauty soap in all the world. Will less than Palmolive's exquisite care do for your complexion?

KEEP THAT SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION

Stefansson — America's Arctic schoolmaster

Army wives talking. They were a loyal crew, willing to accept bravely almost anything that military orders might decree for their young officer-husbands. But about one possibility they seemed to have the jitters. They were afraid their husbands might be sent to the Far North.

Already a large detachment of American troops had been sent to Iceland. In Greenland, the Navy had unearthed a German radio station; and everybody was wondering if that might lead to the sending of more protective troops. In Alaska, a powder magazine explosion had just reattracted attention to the creation of great new military and naval outposts there.

That will be the American soldier's job if war hits the Arctic. And we'll be ready! The world's greatest tamer of the frozen North, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, is teaching our troops how to live — and fight — there

by Earl Parker Hanson

Author of "Stefansson — Prophet of the North"

One young woman put into words the great fear that seemed to grip all those Army wives: "I just can't bear the thought of my husband being sent to one of those awful places to freeze to death."

I think I was able to convince that young woman that her fears were exaggerated. I did it by telling her about Vilhjalmur Stefansson.

Stefansson, perhaps more than any other one man, is responsible for the fact that the Far North may be an important field of military activity in any war that faces us. He threw open the doors of the Arctic by proving precisely that it is not an "awful place" — that, instead, it is a pleasant, much-maligned place where white men as well as Eskimos can live and work safely and unadventurously. And it is Stefansson today who is teaching our Army and Navy what they need to know to make the Arctic, when they get there, the docile sort of place that he says it is.

For several years Stefansson's headquarters in New York's Greenwich Village, housing his private library on the polar regions (the largest of its kind in the world), and working space for his small staff, have hummed like the busiest kind of a research institution. He has supplied the Army with reports totalling more than two million words, the equivalent of twenty full-length novels and probably the greatest and most concise body of practical information on the Arctic available anywhere in the world.

Part of this information is an Arctic Manual, telling in practical terms just how to live and get along in the North. This is for the soldiers. Much of the rest of it is specialized information of highly tactical value. This is held for the confidential use of key officers. Stefansson is now busy on a new work for the Navy: a guide for ships and sailors that ply Icelandic, Greenlandic and other northern waters.

If you should see Stefansson at work among his books and papers you would get an impression, not of an adventurer, but of a distinguished scholar. And that impression would be exactly right. A tall, shy, iron-gray-haired man in his sixties, with pleasant wrinkles edging his eyes, Stefansson has no flair for heroics. "An adventure," he likes to say, "is a sign of incompetence." The outpourings of the "intrepid" school of explorers — and their press agents — fill him with scholarly score.

At a big official dinner recently, he was cornered by a young woman reporter. She knew he was the famous Arctic explorer, and was certain that he was brimming over with tales of adventure and suffering. Stefansson's natural shyness grew to positive embarrassment as he saw the purpose of her effusive, breathless questions. Finally, taking advantage of a lull, he broke in. "My dear young lady," he said, gently, "I am very sorry, but I am just everything that you don't want me to be."

A Long Valuable Record

Arctic scholar, isn't of much use to a sob-sister. But when the scholar's research is backed up by a long record of active exploration — by eleven and a half years in the Arctic without benefit of elaborate supply expeditions — he can be of inestimable use to the military and naval men who are already in the Far North or who may soon find themselves there.

You don't hear many details of what is going on, militarily, in Alaska, Greenland and Iceland. There is a big reason for that. They are so vitally important in our defense set-up now that neither the Army nor the Navy cares to say much about them: they don't want to give potential enemies information about the very spots where an enemy would be most likely to strike. But it seems to be generally recognized that Alaska (called in the past the Achilles' heel of our national defense) is being made into an outpost that will rank with Pearl Harbor, in the Pacific, in impregnability and strategic importance. Recognized, too, is the fact that both Greenland and Iceland are being made decidedly unhealthy for any invader.

Stefansson's start in Arctic work was more or less accidental. As a young instructor in anthropology at Harvard, he had meant to specialize on Africa. Then came an unexpected invitation to join an Arctic expedition. He traveled overland to Herschel Island where he was to meet the rest of the expedition, which was traveling by ship. The ship was wrecked and the main expedition never arrived. Young Stefansson was stranded in the Arctic, with virtually no money or supplies. He could have passed the winter comfortably with the Northwest Mounted Police, but there was no anthropology to be studied there, and he was a scholar, then as now. He decided to go out and live with the Eskimos. That was how he discovered that the Arctic is a friendly place — for those who will live the Arctic way.

Admittedly, it took adjustment. There was the matter of eating fish, for instance. Stefansson had been born in northern Manitoba, the son of Icelandic parents who had just immigrated. His first winter on earth had been a time of near-famine for the immigrant colony. There had been no milk, and the baby had been kept alive on a gruel made of boiled fish. Whether because of a physiological reaction, or, as he thinks more likely, because his mother's frequent mention of it in later years set up a psychological reaction, he had never since been able even to smell fish without gagging. But when he got out with the Eskimos, they had nothing but fish to eat. When he got hungry enough, Stefansson found he could eat it, boiled, frozen or in the half-thawed, ice-cream-like state in which the Eskimos most relished it. In fact, he soon found that he was relishing it himself.

Arctic Dry Cleaning

And there was the important matter of learning how to keep clothing dry and clean. In mild climates we clean our clothes by washing them, and hanging them on the line to dry. Stefansson learned that the Eskimos have an entirely different technique. Before they retire for the night, the Eskimos strip and turn their clothes inside out. The body moisture on the fur quickly freezes. Then it is a simple matter to brush it off — and the dirt comes off with it.

It took adjustment to stand stark naked in fifty-belowzero weather and clean his clothing before crawling into a sleeping bag. But, by making that adjustment, Stefansson went far beyond previous explorers in making the Arctic safe.

In those experiences is the nub of Stefansson's philosophy of the Arctic. A few years ago, he was scheduled to address the graduating class of the University of Pittsburgh. The subject assigned to him was: "Courage." He immediately discarded it. "I don't know much about courage," he told his listeners. "What is far more important to an explorer, or to anybody else, is adaptability. I shall speak about that."

Of course he did show courage in the North, and plenty of it, but he didn't think of it that way. There was the time, for instance, when he went far out on the ice over the Polar Sea with two companions and a mere handful of supplies. The supplies were eaten in the first two weeks; the next three months Stefansson and his companions had to live on what food they could get by hunting.

They found seals sunning themselves on the ice—and stalked them by lying down and playing seal themselves, slowly edging up on their quarry until they were within rifle shot. Polar bears were so numerous that often they could be obtained simply by staying in camp, and waiting for the bears to stalk them.

They didn't eat their meat raw—even when their slim supply of kero-sene was exhausted. Then they put bear fat or seal blubber in their stove and boiled the meat in water.

Virtually all other explorers, and even the Eskimos (who never ventured that far out on the ice) had insisted that there was no life at all out there. The world's leading scientists not only "knew" there was no such life; they even "knew" why it couldn't exist—because the ice was supposed to keep sunlight from penetrating the water.

But Stefansson, having reasoned it out in his scholarly mind that there must be life out there—fish, seals to follow the fish, bears to follow the seals—said dryly that he didn't believe the fish had ever heard about not being supposed to go there. So he started out.

Months later, after his obituary had long since been published on the supposition that he had perished, a ship of his own expedition, commanded by the man who is now world-famous as Sir Hubert Wilkins, found the "dead man" and his companions alive and well-fed — just as Stefansson had said they would be.

To be sure, it had been necessary to live on a different diet than they had followed at home. But Stefansson had previously observed that the Eskimos enjoyed perfect health on such a diet. It was a diet without added salt or any trace of vegetable matter: things which the medical world had held were essential to health. Some years later, back in New York, Stefansson went on an all-meat diet again for a year, under medical supervision, to give the medical profession a chance to study what effect such a diet has on a man living under average city conditions. Contrary to the impression many people got from this experiment, he has never advocated an all-meat diet as necessarily superior to one containing vegetables. What his work has shown is that meat contains all the elements needed for health, and that the human body could adapt itself. Today, in vigorous health, he is a telling exhibit in the case for adaptability.

That is perhaps his biggest message to our military men who may be sent into the Arctic: that they can, if they will learn how, adapt themselves to Arctic living. Ever since he retired from active exploration in 1918, he has been working, in books and on the lecture platform, to convince the world that the North is not a formidable barrier, but a gateway—that it should be colonized, exploited, used.

It was Stefansson, in 1922, who first advanced the idea that
a natural stemping stone for air service

Greenland, together with Iceland, was a natural stepping-stone for air service between Europe and America. The suggestion met almost universal skepticism. But our forces guard Greenland today because it is so obviously just what Stefansson said it was.

Iceland's Favorite Son

For twenty years, Stefansson has been publicly arguing that Iceland was rightly in the Western Hemisphere, and should be protected by the United States under the Monroe Doctrine. We have just caught up with that theory. (Incidentally, to the Icelanders Stefansson is a national hero, even though he was born after his parents had left that country. In a straw vote conducted by an Icelandic magazine last year, he was chosen as the favorite for President, if Iceland should become a republic instead of the independent kingdom it then was.)

It was Stefansson, twenty years ago, who advocated the possibility of transpolar commerce by air, and the consequent opening of the Arctic. He was called an impractical visionary. But the Russians, fifteen years later, were proving that he was right. Indeed, it was the extent of their Arctic penetration—establishing colonies, setting up weather stations, opening new sea and air lanes of transportation—that first caused many of our military men to revise their ideas about the possibilities of the Arctic in military strategy. And the Russians had taken their cue largely from Stefansson. They had studied his books, adopted his theories. When their first trans-polar flyers flew across the Pole to this country, in 1937, they carried with them Stefansson's "The Friendly Arctic." It was to have been their guide to survival, they explained, if they had been forced down on the Polar Sea.

Our soldiers will have an even more precise guide in the Arctic Manual which has just been issued by the Government

Y MISSUS is the real thing. Don't let anybody tell you otherwise. Only the ▲ ▼ ▲ way I put it to myself was, "She's a woman, see? Kitty's a woman." I was thinking that when I reached home. Because I had to face Kitty again and she'd been giving me a bit of an argument last night.

All right, I said, keep cool, Joe. Don't argue any more. Kitty's just a woman - a home woman. You got to make allowances. It's for her you want the dough, isn't it? For her and the kid. And a bit for yourself. There's a law of supply and demand, isn't there? Plenty of times you've been laid off. Sure, we're making nice money, but there's lots going. Don't blame anybody but yourself if you don't grab a slice of it.

Kitty couldn't see it quite that way.

"You're making more than you ever did in your life, Joe?"

Sure I was. Why not? But there's more if you go after it right. Kitty knows the boys have been boasting a bit about the slowdown. A slowdown, see? Not a strike. They can fight a strike; they can break it. But a slowdown's different. Harder to get your fingers on. They refuse more money? Okay - production begins to drop. Everybody's working. Everybody seems to be hard at it. But the stuff isn't going through. You got to be a realist these days.

I won't argue, I told myself, going in.

"Hullo, Kitty."

"Hello."

Maybe I shouldn't say it but there's a youngster for you. Crazy about her dad, too. Thinks the sun rises and sets by me.

"Over at Brennan's," Kitty said. She began to fry the steak while I washed up. "They've taken in another child."

"They're goodhearted, all right. English kid?"

'No. I think she's Polish or something." "I hope Sue don't catch anything off her," I said. "You never can tell, the way things are over in Europe." Steady, Joe, I told myself, you stuck your fool neck out on that one. I'd had a bit of a dust-up with the missus when she wanted to take in an evacuee. I could tell now she was all tightened up. But Kitty's not one to let her tongue run. She's not that kind, thank God. The steak smelt good in the pan. When it comes to a steak never mind the cheap cuts, I say. I guess I can afford a good steak now and again.

She went on frying it.

"Joe."

"Huh?" "Eddie Jones has been killed."

"No!"

"Mrs. Brennan told me. The Jones's got word this morning. He was over Germany. Night bombing."

Well, what did you know about that! Nice kid, Eddie. His people live across the street from us. Eddie came over to tell us goodby. Looked good in his uniform. "Help us build lots of planes, Joe." He grinned. . . "Okay, Eddie. Okay." . . . "Well, so long, Joe," he said. "Mum and Dad are waiting for me." . . . Huh! Well, what did you know about that! Eddie killed.

"You been over to see Mrs. Jones?" I had to ask twice.

"No," Kitty said.

"Oughtn't you to go?"

"Yes."

"Going over after supper then, are you?"

Look, was I mad then? I knew how she figured it. She figures because I helped argue the boys into this slowdown she can't go face Mrs. Jones, who's lost a son. Is that sane? I asked myself. Does it add up? I wanted to shout all kinds of things at Kitty but I couldn't get them out. I wanted to tell her she'd been listening too damn much to the radio. Sure, we're a "vital industry." Sure, we know what we make.

"Listen," I said to Kitty, "did Eddie have a plane under him or didn't he? Okay, then - so what?" When you're feeling like I did you want an answer, but Kitty just made passes at the steak with her cooking fork. "Okay, okay. I'll go down to the restaurant and eat. Maybe you'd choke eating at the same table with a guy like me." We'd had our arguments in ten years of married life, but it hadn't ever come to this before. I saw what I'd got to do. I'd go off and get good and drunk for once in my life

THAT was when the door flew open and she came in. My kid. My Sue. You could see something bad had happened. Take a look at her face. Who put that look in my kid's eyes? I wanted to know. They'd hear from me plenty. From me, her dad - see? Nobody could do that to my kid. She just flashes across the floor and grabs me about the knees and hangs on, crying like her heart would break. I picked her up and held her. Steady down, I said, take it easy. I told her to tell her daddy what it was all about.

"It's Elsa," she says, sobbing.

"Who's Elsa?"

and say to hell with it all.

Well, it seems that's the new little foreign girl they're looking after at Brennan's. There's quite a story back of this kid, and Mary Brennan - that's their twelve-yearold - has been making a song-and-dance about it. Stuffing my kid's head full of hor-

"Listen, Sue," I said, "you just forget it. All that's a mighty long piece away from here, see? Why, listen, kiddie," I said, "nobody's going to put your daddy in a concentration camp and beat him up. No, siree! This is a free country. We don't do that sort of thing here. And nobody," I said, looking over at Kitty standing there against the window and my heart doing a flop - "nobody's going to drop any bombs on Mom. No, siree. You just forget it."

She had quieted a bit, and I nodded to

Kitty. Maybe Kitty didn't see. Maybe she didn't want to see. She stood there like a statue. So I'm still in the doghouse, eh? Well, I know what I can do. On the way I'll drop in at Brennan's and tell them what I think about letting their girl scare a sensitive kid like

I look down at Sue. I've got to manage a smile for her. To show her everything's all

But I don't smile. I can't. Not with the tears still running down her cheeks, and a damp wisp of curl lying against it, and her eyes looking up at me as if I was God and could give her a slice of heaven.

HEN she says, her lips all quivery, "You'll do something, won't you, Daddy? I told them you'd do something.'

Huh? Sure, I'd do something. I'd tell them they couldn't scare my kid and get away with

"They've still got Elsa's daddy there," Sue says. And she begins to cry again.

My gosh, am I responsible for Elsa's father?

If you've never had a kid break her heart in your arms you wouldn't quite understand. Especially your own kid. I could feel her arms holding tight to me, and her cheek wet against mine, and her voice sobbing out: "Daddy, you've got to do something. I told them I'd tell my daddy and he'd do something - "

It's a tough spot to hold, being a kind of hero to your kid. What can I do? Am I Superman? I looked up and caught Kitty's eyes. But she turned away. Kitty's like that. She knew I was on the spot plenty without her looking at me. I put Sue down.

"Okay," I said.

I started to the door again.

"Joe, where you going?"

"To talk to some of the boys." "I'll keep things hot," Kitty says.

That's all. That's my missus for you. She'll keep the dinner hot for me. But I see her chin go up. I think it was the way her chin went up that busted me wide open.

I look at Sue. She's satisfied now. Her daddy's going to do something about it.

I walk out the door. Halfway down the block I look back.

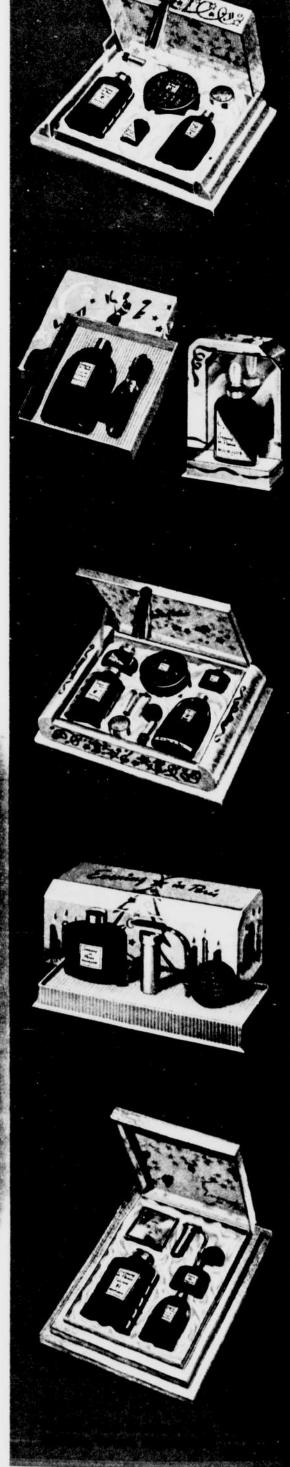

There's Kitty slipping across the street going over to see Mrs. Jones about Eddie.

THEY are filming the fade-out of "Louisiana Purchase." Bob Hope, as Representative Jim Taylor, has conducted a successful filibuster to keep Victor Moore, a hilarious "reform" Senator, from getting the floor.

Triumphant hands lift Bob to the rostrum. The galleries cheer.

Vera Zorina runs in (don't ask me why) and Bob hoists her up beside him.

"Taylor for Governor!" yells the crowd. Bob grins happily, says, "Well, hush mah mouf!"

Which Zorina immediately does, with a great big kiss.

On the ninth rehearsal of that kiss, I remark, "He certainly does it with enthusiasm!" "Oh," answers a Hope stooge, quite seriously, "he does everything that way."

Enthusiasm - that's Bob Hope. And it's genuine enthusiasm. It has carried him to the top in Hollywood with a rush. His "Caught in the Draft" and "Road to Zanzibar" rank high up in 1941 box-office appeal. "Nothing but the Truth" and "Louisiana Purchase," also starring him, will probably outdraw the earlier two.

As a matter of fact, Bob, with his outthrust chin, slightly elfish look and quick patter. may be the world's only happy comedian. Other top-line funny men either complain of overwork or feel that stage and screen have passed over their "real" dramatic talents.

Bob thinks his work is swell, life is grand, everything is hunky-dory. And he doesn't want to play Hamlet.

He doesn't complain about overwork, either. Yet in one year he crowds laughs and hard physical stunts into four movies . . . he breaks records on a five-a-day personal-appearance tour . . . he builds, helps write and stars in 40 radio shows . . . he works - free - in 263 benefits.

Bob Hope's need for zest, and proof that he had it, arose early. The fifth of seven brothers, he was born in London. His father, a stonemason, brought the family to America when Bob was two, and settled in Cleveland.

As the boys reached waist-high, each tried to help boost the family income. Bob sold papers, jerked soda, ran errands, clerked holidays in a shoe store - and invented several more unusual ways of making money:

Large picnics were the rage in Cleveland. The Butchers' Association might gather, for instance, at Luna Park; the Grocers' Association at Euclid Beach. Foot races for kids were a regular feature; first prize might be a ten-spot; second, a suit of clothes. Bob and his brother Jack practiced sprinting through the Cleveland parks at night, then would run off with first and second prizes at several picnics on a single week end.

Then came the biggest picnic of the year. First prize was $25; second prize was a complete outfit — suit, overcoat, shoes and hat. Despite the tougher competition those prizes would draw, Bob and his brother decided to win them.

The starter for the race was a walrus-mustached worthy who always puffed: "On your mark. Get set. Ready? Go!" On the eve of the picnic, Bob persuaded another of his brothers to call on this fixture. "I am a reporter," the lad lied. "I want to write a story about your fine starting. I suppose in the big games tomorrow you'll be entirely up-to-date and omit the word 'Ready,' like the big starters do in New York?"

Beating the Gun

MR. WALRUS spluttered that, naturally, he'd start the games the up-to-date way.

Next day Bob and Jack were off at the second "t" in "Get set." Nearly everyone else was caught flat-footed, unready for a quick "Go!" The Hope lads finished first and second.

It was shortly afterward that a friend suggested to Bob that he try boxing. He did. "I not only had a glass chin, but there must have been an electric light in it," he says. "They didn't have any trouble finding it." Bob decided it was hard to rise in a profession while unconscious.

Leaving the ring flat, Bob decided to try dancing. He took lessons from a man who owned a school and who agreed to let the youngster help teach, by way of tuition.

Business was bad. Finally, the owner said. "You can have the school. I'm through." But the course called for six lessons and Bob's knowledge ran out at three.

Experience! That's what he needed. He and a neighbor girl, Mildred Rosequist, both only about 17, became a "dance team," performing at small entertainments. Fee: eight dollars for the pair.

Bob figured a laugh might help the act. Mildred would lie back on her partner's arm, in a suddenly frozen dance pose, and Bob would begin.

Here's the very first Hope joke:

"Did I tell you about my cat, Carbide?" "Why do you call your cat Carbide?"

"Because she has acetylene kittens!"

Whew!

Mrs. Rosequist broke up the team some say to nip a budding romance. Bob explains it another way: "Mrs. Rosequist heard my jokes.'

Bob paired up with another young dancer, George Byrne, and went into vaudeville road shows. In those days each program concluded with a "tabloid revue." Hope and Byrne would try to get worked into this - the show's high point - and Bob was always dinning at the manager, "Give us a break, willya!"

Finally, one manager said, "O.K., Bob, you can announce the show that will play next week."

A Comedian Is Born

Bob's voice shook. (This would be his big break.) "What's next week's show all about?" he asked the manager.

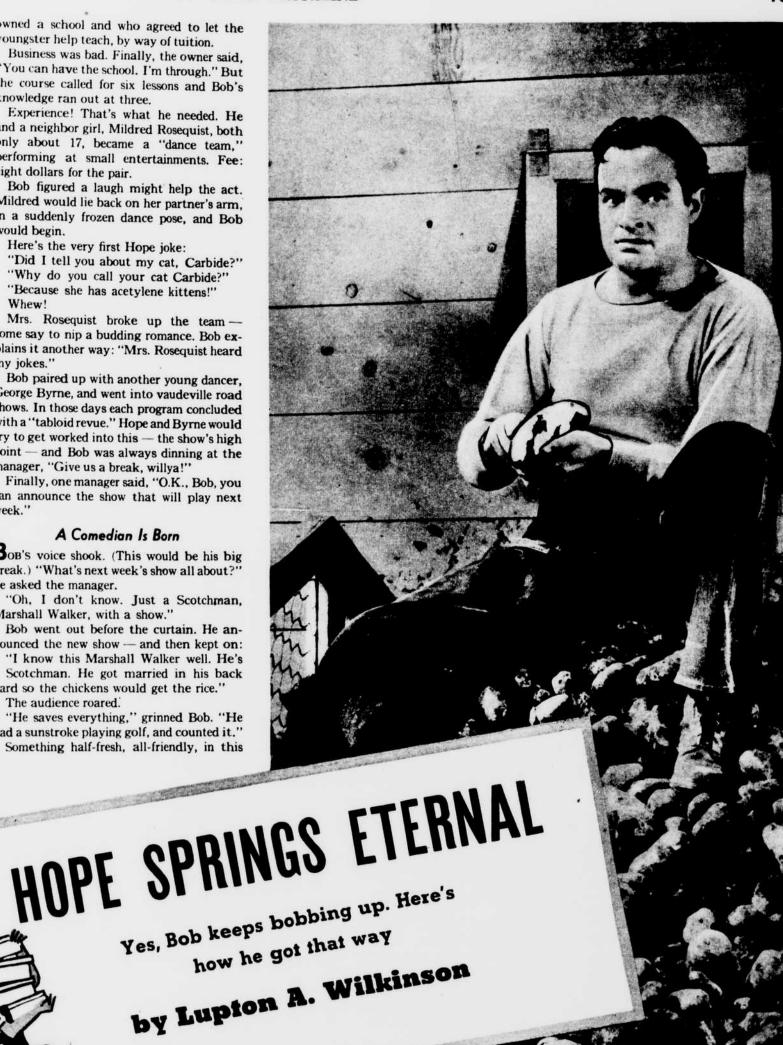

"Oh, I don't know. Just a Scotchman, Marshall Walker, with a show."

Bob went out before the curtain. He announced the new show - and then kept on:

"I know this Marshall Walker well. He's a Scotchman. He got married in his back yard so the chickens would get the rice."

The audience roared.

"He saves everything," grinned Bob. "He had a sunstroke playing golf, and counted it." Something half-fresh, all-friendly, in this kid warmed his hearers. An obvious fact helped win them: he enjoyed his own jokes. 'You'll get your money's worth in Walker's > watching his wife's vanishing cream." The applause ended a dance team; Bob knew comedy was his meat. So did the manager. He offered to switch him to patter. But instead Bob went home to Cleveland and practiced monologues on the neighborhood circuit, often without pay. After a year of this he tried Chicago. "Before I landed a job," he recalls, "I got down to where I lived on a nickel's worth of beans a day - for four weeks." The job was master of ceremonies at the Stratford Theater - a one-week stand. He ran it to six months - then RKO signed him to a threeyear vaudeville contract on the road.

This, also, was successful, but Bob declined renewal. "I'm ready for New York," he said. He had his bumps in the big town, finally bounced into a leading role in the hit musical "Roberta."

In a Broadway restaurant someone introduced Bob to Dolores De Fina, a striking

HERE Holden was smart was in giving her the diamond bracelet right there in The Club Banjo. Even Walt admitted that. But being in love with Peggy himself. Walt wasn't in the mood to be paying Holden any compliments without strings tied to them.

"Sure, it was shrewd," he said, "but look what a crumb it proves him to be. If Peggy could only see it."

The way it looked to Walt, Holden played politics to win a girl he couldn't get, as Walt put it, normally. Walt felt that was pretty small stuff.

Anyway it was smart, because Holden knew what the other girls in the show would say when they saw that bracelet—that she'd be a sap not to take it, and a sap not to marry him.

Holden knew the other girls were on his side because Peggy had told him so.

Peggy was like that. She told everybody everything. It was partly because she was so young. And maybe that was why we fellows in the orchestra all had a soft spot for her. But we did think she was giving our Walt a raw deal. She and Walt had been practically set, until she'd started running around with that playboy.

As for Holden, he had a handicap with us fellows in the orchestra. He'd got a waiter fired that we used to shoot craps with. We thought enough of the poor guy to chip in and pay the first installment on his new baby. So between ourselves we didn't see why Peggy should even consider marrying that old man. A sweet girl like her. Well, he wasn't old, exactly.

by Frederick Laing

Maybe so. Peggy's old man drove a cab, and she helped support the family with the bit she did there at the club, singing a song or two and cutting a few capers.

She didn't really have a voice. Besides her looks, which were strictly okay, she didn't have much of anything except the personality of a high school jitterbug. But that was one reason why Walt wanted to marry her.

"She was never meant to be a show girl," he said. "She has a born talent for being somebody's wife."

We took Walt's word for it. He was as smart as Holden, but in a different way. Less shrewd, you might say, and more intelligent. Hearing him play, we knew he could have had a career with the long-haired boys at Carnegie, if he'd wanted it. But he had a lot of respect for what heart, or that he'd really be good to her. She knew what he meant. What did an expensive present mean to a guy with all that jack? But when the girls in the dressing room saw that bracelet, they just laughed at Walt's arguments.

"Good to you?" they said. And what more was there to say, from their viewpoint?

Walt had been going to take Peggy home that night, and when she made some excuse and went out with Holden instead, he didn't say a word. The next evening when Peggy came in, she looked pale. It seemed she and Holden had been hitting it up after they'd left—celebrating the engagement present—and maybe the clasp of that bracelet had been loose, or maybe she hadn't fastened it just right... She'd thought it was lost in one of the taxicabs they'd taken, but she wasn't sure.

The telephone rang as she walked in and it was Holden. It was Holden about every twenty minutes after that, so we gathered he was more than a little put out about the loss of that bracelet himself.

Later some reporters came in and started asking her questions. When the story came out in the papers, there was a shot of Peggy with a little too much leg and one of Holden alongside of her. They weren't mean to her in the story — she wasn't the kind of girl anybody but a heel could be mean to — and they played up how much Holden was worth in the way of stocks and bonds. He was big stuff in that field. There was no doubt of it.

And it was funny how Peggy cheered up after she saw that publicity. We began to see what Walt meant by glamor appeal. For a girl whose pa drove a cab, she'd come a long way.

The next evening Peggy got a call from Holden that the bracelet had been found. A taxi driver had returned it. He'd found it wedged in the back seat of his cab.

Peggy had been running out between shows to buy the newspapers, to see if there was anything more about Holden and herself. We saw her go out again just before the one o'clock show. Then we lost track of her until she came out for her final number.

She didn't have the zip in her act that she usually put into it. She might have been just tired, of course, a letdown after the excitement. But — as soon as her act was over, she rushed to her dressing room and cried her eyes out. We learned that from one of the girls. She said Peggy wouldn't tell her a thing.

She was still crying a little when she came out of the dressing room. Walt looked at her and he looked at us, and then he put his horn down and went after her.

They stopped in front of the orchestra and she sort of hid her forehead in his shoulder.

"If that big crumb has done anything to hurt you —" Walt said.

But she kept shaking her head. Walt looked over at us and shrugged and we shrugged back. How do you know what goes on in a dame's mind?

HOLDEN walked in about then, and we saw him kidding around with the hat-check girl. He had the bracelet with him, and he felt pretty good.

He came over to where Walt and Peggy were standing, and gave Walt a funny look. Then he handed her the bracelet. They were close enough to us so we got what Peggy said to him and the way she said it.

She'd been thinking it over, she said, and while it was very generous of him to offer her a bracelet that cost all that money, very generous indeed. . .

For a girl whose dad was a cab driver, she had a lot of class in the way she handed it back to him.

Holden lost his temper and started to give her an argument. After all the trouble he'd gone to, he said. And he told her she was an ungrateful little...

Walt's eyes got as big as his fists and he started after Holden, but Peggy got between them and she threw her arms around Walt and kissed him, right then and there.

The trombone player picked up his horn and blew a loud "haw haw" on it, and Holden left in a huff.

She never did give him a reason, but we all saw that little item in the paper Peggy had dropped. Holden must have seen it too — one of those "honesty pays" stories, written in the murderous way some of those boys can write. The headline was:

"Cabby finds $10,000 bracelet — gets $1 reward."

r and happier...

THIS Christmas, thousands of boys and girls will receive Corona portable typewriters, because they are probably the most useful, lasting gifts a parent could give.

Many eight year old children are ready for a typewriter . . . can easily and quickly learn to use a Corona for school and homework.

And all through life, in college, in business and practically all professions, a Corona portable will stand in good stead, aiding in building a career.

Coronas are not expensive and they last for many years. There are six different models to choose from, ranging from the lowest priced Corona Zephyr Regular model to the "finest portable of all," The Corona Speedline Silent.

Ask your Corona dealer to let you take a Corona home and try it out free. You can also buy a Corona on easy terms, for not much more than it costs to rent one.

Make this Christmas a happy one for "someone" in your family...see your Corona dealer today and order your Corona before the Christmas "rush" begins.

THIS CORONA ZEPHYR Regular model weighs about 9 lbs... fits in a desk drawer or even a brief case. It's the ideal portable for beginners. Has shift key for capital letters, figures and punctuation. Regulation standard keyboard, back spacer and other features. Fast, sturdy. List Price $29.75*.

THE NEW CORONA COMET DE LUXE. A brand new, medium priced portable that wins instant approval. Fast, lightning action, easy operating and sturdy. Only other Corona, besides the Speedline models, having famous Floating Shift. Carrying case and touch-typing chart are included. List Price $47.75*

Many find effective help in lemon and soda

In many cases, lemon and soda can take the place of stronger laxatives. It is usually the answer, also, to the problem of people who "aren't quite regular."

Upon arising or retiring, squeeze the juice of one Sunkist Lemon into a tall glass half full of water. Into another glass, put ¼ to ½ teaspoon of baking soda (bicarbonate). Pour back and forth, and drink as the foaming quiets.

Or you may be one of the many who prefer only the lemon juice-in a full glass of water.

Besides aiding digestion and elimination, lemons are an excellent natural source of vitamin C, the only known source of vitamin P (citrin), and help promote normal alkalinity.

Try this for ten days. See if you don't benefit when you make it your "regular" rule. Copyright, 1941, California Fruit Growers Exchange

On a narrow side street off the Savane he found what he wanted — a lop-sided, fenderless, rusted, unpainted sedan that bore some resemblance to what might have been at one time a 1929 Chevrolet. The driver slumbered in the front seat. Homer shook him until he awakened and then said: "How much for the car and a full tank of gas?"

"You are mad," said the driver.
"You are a mad American, and very likely a spy, and I want nothing to do with you."

Homer drew out his wallet, thick with hundred-franc notes. The hackman spat contemptuously on the sidewalk. "Go away," he said. "You will get me into the same grave in which you will doubtless end."

From his watch pocket Homer drew a neat little bundle of tightly-folded twenty-dollar bills, and slowly began to finger them. "In any case," the driver said, "I have no gas. How can one fill a tank on a ration of five liters a day?"

"THERE are others who have gas," Homer suggested. "They too can make a profit. If there is any trouble, you can say I stole it." He handed the driver a twenty-dollar bill, and allowed him to feel it. "Two of these," he said. "Two of them, and you can have the jaloppy back after. Also, here is five hundred francs to buy the gas."

The driver sucked in his breath. "In an hour you will find her here, filled with gas. The key will be in her."

Homer walked along the Savane towards the waterfront. The Bearn lay motionless on the water, flat and molten in the sun. Far out at sea he could see the raked mast and superstructure of the American destroyer. A small tanker, which he had not observed before, was proceeding northward. The tanker was deep in the water, hugging the shore. Even as he watched, he saw the destroyer change course and move in the same direction as the tanker. She's probably headed for Guadeloupe, he thought, but he knew she could be coasting around the island for St. Pierre. The destroyer would not molest her. She had a French flag up, and the destroyer was there only to observe what was going on.

"Bring another sugar bowl and two rolls that look like tanks"

He watched the little tanker round the cape, and then he stepped into the Cafe Normandie, frequented by the officers from the ships, and the staff from the Admiralty. He had ordered a rum and lime, and it was to his lips, when he saw her. She was sitting between the count and a slender man in the uniform of a colonel of French provincials. She was staring at him and her mouth was tight and compressed, and she tried, without much success, to smile.

"Hello," Homer called across the tables, "just dropped in for a drink." He knew it didn't sound right, and yet there wasn't anything right about the girl being there between the colonel and the count. The count looked up, and smiled at the corners of his mouth, and she waved. It was a firm wave, and it clearly said, "Get out!"

Well, if she isn't right, he thought, then I'm going to be sick all the rest of my life. When a man is on a touchy Department job he shouldn't have any emotions. He thought, you either know how people are, or you don't, and as he left he did a terrible and a daring thing. He whistled, "You take the High Road and I'll take the Low Road." She smiled swiftly at him, and he knew that she knew what he meant. She lifted her glass in an infinitesimal salute, and he noticed she held her thumb up.

He had travelled ten kilometers along the shore road before he met his first "No Passage" sign. He swerved around it. A bit further on he came upon a barricade. There was a sign on it that said, "No Passage," and explained that the road was washed away. He dismounted from the shaking sedan, moved the planks aside, and went on. Presently he overtook the small tanker. She was still heading north, perilously close to shore. Further out, the destroyer had had her look, and was steaming back to her job of sentry duty over the harbor.

The road stretched ahead, winding with the coast line, and there was no break in it. He was half way to St. Pierre when he came upon a dozen workmen laying concrete in a dip behind a dune. It was large as a tennis court, but it was round, and he knew it for a gun emplacement. He tried to memorize the landmarks behind it, without daring to slacken speed. The Navy would like to know.

Then ahead he saw a garrison, with the tricolor flying over wooden barracks. There was a sentry box alongside the road, and in its shade a corporal of provincials leaned back in a cane chair, reading. He leaped up as Homer rattled by, and shouted. Homer caught a glimpse of him, his mouth open, groping for his rifle. Homer bent his head close to the wheel. He didn't hear any shots.

He passed a stone marker that read, "ST. P.— 8 K.," and then he saw, on his right, a strange city of khaki tents. There were sixteen tents, neatly aligned in two rows, their flaps drawn tight.

He idled past, and would have stopped just beyond had not a man popped out of the nearmost tent. He was clad only in shorts, and he held a razor in one hand. He ran with a curious hopping motion, for the sharp, sun-baked rocks hurt his bare feet. He was shaven-headed, and his shoulders were burned a brilliant red. He called something, but Homer did not wait to hear what it was, for he called in German.

The road began to climb. It climbed sharply, and in erratic circles. Homer shifted into second, then into first. At last he reached level ground. He turned off the motor and got out.

A thousand feet directly below him lay the whitened bones of the city of St. Pierre, and on his right towered the volcano in its eternal vigil over the corpse. Lockhart had told him to study St. Pierre. It lay below him now, silent as Pompeii. No ships rode in its curved harbor, nor were there trucks, or a new warehouse, or any of the other signs he had hoped to see. Apparently nothing at all had disturbed St. Pierre's long hibernation.

He remembered, then, the tanker easing cautiously up the coast. He drove on until he saw above him a point which would command both the sea on his left, and the bay on his

He headed the sedan into the brush, and drove it until he could no longer see the road. He retraced the tracks to the road, scrambled up the rocks, and lay on a flat stretch of ground, watching.

He smoked, and battled the insects. and swore. In the early afternoon the tanker poked her blunt prow around a promontory. She then set upon a curious course, making no curve to reach the harbor of St. Pierre, but turning to starboard and heading directly for a small, green oblong of land jutting from the shore.

The tanker slowed, and then backed, and Homer believed she had run aground, but she came on again. Homer held his breath, for it was certain she was going ashore. She poked her nose into the green oblong. The prow, and then her whole length, even her aft superstructure, vanished, and all Homer Jones saw was the green oblong of land.

His heart was beating against the ground, for he knew that he was observing a masterpiece of camouflage. The Caribbean Patrol, flying its long beat from Guantanamo to Puerto Rico, and from Puerto Rico on to Trinidad, with a special look at Martinique, didn't have a chance in a million of spotting it. It was, he was certain, two long wharves with netting spread over them, and over the netting the fronds of palms, the great leaves of plantains. After a time, when his eyes had become accustomed to the deception, he could see the black shape of

He heard the sound of voices far up the road, and then he heard the scramble of rocks close behind him, and he lay very still. Then a voice said in English: "Get up. Get up slowly."

He rose, his chest hurting because he had been pressed to the ground so long. Three men were watching him. One cradled a sub-machine gun in his

The other two were the officers in French uniform who were not Frenchmen. They had pistols, but they did not deign to raise them.

They were not dressed in uniforms now, but wore khaki work shirts and boots. "Did you have a good look?" asked the younger.

Homer didn't say anything. He didn't think he was going to live very long, and saw no point in talking about it.

The older one spoke in German to the man with the machine gun. He was to stay behind Homer on the way back, and kill him if he tried to run. "All right," he then commanded, "march!"

THEY marched back to the road and put Homer into the back of a truck. "Sit there," the man with the machine gun said, pointing to piled slabs of cured rubber.

The road slanted downward, and they took a fork that did not lead to St. Pierre, but crossed a wooden bridge with its timbers unweathered and new. They came to the twin wharves, and Homer saw it was as he had suspected, but the black shape he thought was the tanker was not the tanker at all, but the largest submarine he had ever seen. The tanker was alongside in the wharf's shadow, pumping oil. "The Deutschland all over again," Homer remarked.

"That is correct," said the younger of the men with pistols.

"Shut up," said the older one.

Workmen in the same khaki shirts as his captors unloaded the slabs of rubber, and wrapped them with heavy cord, and took the bundles aboard the sub. They looked curiously at Homer, and the guns, but they said nothing.

On a contrivance like a heavy stretcher, two men carried from a truck, and up the submarine's gangplank, a wooden box. It was an exceedingly small box, and yet they staggered under its load. "I suppose," Homer suggested, "that that is gold." Then he wished he had not said anything, because the older man looked at him and juggled the Luger in his hand. "Where," Homer asked, "is the captain of the sub?"

"You are," said the older one, "the most inquisitive American I have ever met, and all of them are inquisitive. You call it nosy, not? But then you are a spy, so that makes the difference."

"Well," Homer persisted, "where is

"I am the captain of the U-boat," the older one said. "You want more details? She is two thousand tons, and our largest, and strictly a cargo carrier with only two tubes which we have not yet used. Cruising range, six thousand miles. This is our third trip. We keep our own stevedore crews here, as you have seen when you passed the camp, and also our own tanker. The French we do not trust. With good reason. If they could be trusted, you would not be here."

"Thanks," Homer said feelingly. "You are welcome. Perhaps I will tell you more, on the voyage.'

"Oh," Homer said, "you're going to take me with you?"

"For a short way," said the captain.

HOMER wasn't surprised when the count turned up, with the slender colonel, and they weren't surprised to see him, and didn't bother to speak. The sub captain wasn't surprised either, and returned their salute. Then the three of them began to argue over Homer Jones as if he were a prize tarpon hooked on two lines.

"How could your embassy be so stupid," the captain inquired, "as to grant visas to them? First one who calls herself Smith, and then one who calls himself Jones?"

"Do you think us pure imbeciles?" the count said, with dignity. "It was only that we wished to discover what they actually intended trying to do."

"Good night and pleasant dreams, dear"

"You stupid French!" exploded the captain. "You would people this island with so-called American tourists! Had not we left a man at the camp, we would never have apprehended him." "Not so," said the count. "He was observed at the lower garrison, and immediately traced."

MEET YOUR NEIGHBORS - THE GUIANAS

These European-owned lands have aluminum, diamonds, gold - and Devil's Island

by Carl Kulberg

ETWEEN Trinidad and the Amazon, on the northeast coast of South America, lie the only three countries in South America owned by European powers.

The Guianas lie side by side -Dutch Guiana in the middle, British Guiana to the north and French Guiana to the south.

DUTCH GUIANA figured in one of history's most spectacular trades and most spectacular blunders. In 1667 Holland gave New Netherland (roughly what is now New York State) to England in exchange for the colony that is now Dutch Guiana. Tropical colonies were more valued at that time than those in colder climates - and South America seemed more promising than North America.

Today the population of New York State is about 75 times greater than that of Dutch Guiana - and there are thirteen cities in the modern New Netherland which surpass Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana's largest city, with its 54.852 inhabitants.

Today Dutch Guiana figures again in history, for the world's major supplies of bauxite, principal source of aluminum, are located there.

BRITISH GUIANA is about the size of England, Scotland and Wales and has a population of 344,000.

The Mazaruni diamond fields are extremely rich but almost inaccessible. In one year — the largest thus far -214,474 carats of British Guiana diamonds were produced. That is more than $5,000,000 worth of sparklers.

British Guiana possesses one of the world's great natural wonders -Kaieteur Falls. It is only 150 miles from Georgetown, the capital, but has been seen by few white men. The trip from Georgetown to Kaieteur and return takes seven days and is made by rail, river steamer, motorcar and launch. The falls have a sheer drop of 741 feet, making them five times as high as Niagara!

FRENCH GUIANA is famous for its gold, its tropical fruit - and for Devil's Island.

Six years after California's gold rush, the yellow metal was discovered in French Guiana - and today gold remains its principal product.

Located very near the equator, French Guiana of course is a tropical country; yet the range of temperature all the year round is normally from 68 to 90 degrees.

Devil's Island, located just off the coast, is France's prison colony. After the criminals have served the term imposed upon them they are turned out of prison and serve a term as liberes, during which they cannot leave French Guiana, and must support themselves as best they can.

Six liberes are employed at the Pan American Airways base in Cayenne. They help to fuel and service Clippers - and share their wages with their less fortunate fellows.

Nature has provided guards for Devil's Island - man-cating sharks which infest the waters offshore and make escape extremely hazardous.

Almost one-third of French Guiana's population of 37,000 live in Cayenne, which is the capital of the country and its chief seaport.

RECORD IT WITH A CAMERA

Snapshooting can help with your hobby - or your business

by Fulton Williams

HEY used to say that if you want to master a subject, write a book on it. A more modern and equally efficacious method would be to train your camera on it.

To most people a camera is a toy: a means of recording the week-end visitors, the family picnics, the doings of the youngsters - all of which provide ample justification for owning a camera. But amateur snapshooting can be more than this. Absorbing as it is as a hobby, it can be even more fascinating and constructive as the tool for some other hobby.

My wife, for example, has a passion for flower arrangements and when a flower show comes around we need a truck to transport her entries. Conceding her genius in this field, her most helpful tool is our camera and the snaps we make of tentative arrangements. Reduced in size and confined within the borders of a print, the basic faults of a composition become ten times more apparent than they are in the original. Furthermore, the pictures constitute a really invaluable idea file for future reference.

Likewise, when I took up the study of wild flowers, the camera proved a priceless ally. And I notice that the ones which are engraved indelibly upon my mind are those I photographed rather than those which I merely looked up in a textbook and identified.

Others have had similar experiences in other fields. Forty years ago W. N. Jennings, of Philadelphia, began to make photographs of lightning. The first thing he discovered was that lightning flashes are not zigzag as represented by painters for generations. And the other things he has learned about this phenomenon through his photography have won him worldwide recognition from some of the most exclusive scientific bodies here and abroad.

And there are many more who have put their cameras to a dual use. J. Horace McFarland took an early fancy to flower pictures: today he has the greatest collection of flower negatives in the country, worth thousands of dollars. Father Bernard Hubbard, the "glacier priest," has won international fame by combining his snapshooting with his other hobby, mountain climbing. Dr. Arthur Allen, of Cornell, has done the same with birds; Dr. Francis Carter Wood, of Columbia, has brought his camera into cancer research with amazing results; J. V. D. Bucher has applied his to explorations of the moon; George Shiras, 3rd, to the perfection of trap flashlight pictures of deer and other wild game at night.

Zane Grey, following another angle, applied his camera to his passion for game fishing and once sailed to New Zealand for the sole purpose of snapping the giant make in action. On the other hand, Jacob A. Wagner, general manager of the Des Moines Union Railway, has cultivated the circus as his hobby - and has, over the years, compiled the world's largest collection of photos showing exciting goings-on under the Big Top.

Farther west is Wayne F. Fisher, of Los Angeles, a wealthy sportsman who teams up flying and amateur photography. So good has he become that when the California Institute of Technology wanted more data for their earthquake research, they asked Mr. Fisher to help. He did by making aerial photographs of the San Andreas Faultline all the way from San Francisco to the Mexican border. These people do things with their cameras - and why shouldn't we?

Recently I visited one of the most outstanding examples of this kind of activity: William H. Jackson, a pioneer photographer now approaching his 97th birthday. Back in 1870 Mr. Jackson took the first photographs ever made of our Western wonderlands - Mesa Verde, Yellowstone, Yose-mite, etc., and over 40,000 of his negatives are now preserved as historical treasures in

tography," he told me, "is the master tutor in the art of observation. From my own experience I know that the individual who gets a camera acquires another eye -- he begins to see things in the most familiar places that have been there for years unnoticed."

That, perhaps, is why so many people with fascinating hobbies come to add the camera as a tool for the first avocation. It gives them "another eye" with which to enjoy their pursuit - indeed, to enjoy

"It was I who found his car," said the captain.

"We will have to take him." the count said. "Otherwise there will be a scandal, for it is known that he stole a car. But we will not try him for that. We will try him for violating a military reservation. Thus we can bring him before a military court. Before he has a chance to see a lawyer, or his consul -

"The war will be over?" asked the captain.

'Good. Keep him well."

The colonel drew his gun and punched it at Homer's spinal column. 'Advance," he commanded.

They took him to a sleele gray roadster, sitting on the road back of the wharves, and Homer wondered, since there were only the two of them, and they were not very large, whether he could chance the gun and knock their heads together. The count slid behind the wheel, and then Homer got in, and the colonel followed, waving his gun. 'Mr. Jones," said the count soberly, "you are a very fortunate man."

"From what I have heard of your iails," said Homer, "I might as well have been fed to the sharks. . . . I hope," he added, as they swung up the road that led across the mountains and back to Fort de France, "that you haven't harmed the girl. She is perfectly innocent."

THE count began to laugh. "Did you hear that?" he asked. "She is perfectly innocent!

"You are so droll, you Americans," said the colonel. 'Where is she?" Homer demanded. He noticed that the colonel's gun was back in its holster. "She is waiting at Lido Inlet," said the count, "with your boat. You must be very careful. You must row straight out for eight kilometers, and then wait for the destroyer."

"You're not taking me to trial - to

The count shook his head. "Only the double-damned Boche," he said, will think you in jail. And those unspeakables of Darlan, in the Admiralty, will think the Boche fed you to the Homer began to breathe again. 'Eventually," he warned, "they'll get together."

"Only if that U-boat comes back," said the count, "and I doubt very much if the U-boat will come back once you are aboard the destroyer."...

She was waiting beside the skiff, and the beach was dug with many prints of tiny heels, for she had been nervous. She held out her hands to him. For a moment they stood close together. The count nudged the colonel, and said, "Regardez!"

"I shouldn't have let you do it," she said, "except that it was something a girl couldn't very well do. They did grab you, didn't they?"

"Yes, they grabbed me."

"I knew they would. You know ou re just an airedale, don't you?

"I suppose so. Do you care?" "No," she said, "I don't care."

The count was watching a raked mast, and a plume of smoke lying flat

'The pain is between the rattlesnake and 'Bessie, I love you'!"

against the far horizon, "Kiss her," he advised Homer Jones, "and be off!"

"A moment!" the girl said. "I've more to tell him. You see," she explained, "it wasn't until after you'd left, this morning, that I was sure the count and the colonel were on our on your side. When I was sure, we came after you, on the high road, but they made me stop here, at the boat."

"There is no more time," warned the colonel.

SHE reached far up and kissed him. Homer pushed the skiff out, jumped in over the stern and fitted the oars.

"When you get on the destroyer," the girl said, "tell them there'll be two York class cruisers at Bermuda! They'll know what to do!"

"All right," Homer shouted, rowing, "When will I see you?"

"I'll be in the States next week!" "Come to Washington!"

"Yes!" she shouted. "Where'll I call

"Department of State!"

LOCKHART was a relieved man. "That was a nice bit of work," he said, "and you'll go up a peg for it."

"Swell." said Homer, "I'm going to get married. That is, I think so. I don't know whether she knows it or not, but I wanted to get married."

"Now," said Lockhart, "you're finally showing some sense. A wife with looks, money, and a knowledge of protocol - that's what you need."

'Wouldn't it be all right," Homer said, "if she was just plain beautiful and very smart?"

"Speaking of smart girls," said Lockhart, "the British Ministry of Economics Warfare sent one to Martinique. Practically the same mission as yours. Name of Smith. Isn't it lucky Vichy didn't suspect a couple of tourists named Jones and Smith? She'll be in Washington soon. You ought to meet her."

"I hope so." Her eyes were level

He turned away to look out at the gulf and the gray curtain of rain that closed them in. When he went to light a cigarette his big fingers were trembling a little, and his mind kept saying to the rest of him, Don't be a fool, Mack. Don't be a damned fool.

Ann said, "You have another cigarette?"

"Excuse me."

He lit it for her, holding the match cupped tight against the wind, and she said. "That's a trick I could never do. Did you learn it in the army?"

'Before that, when I was working with a construction company over on the east coast."

"So you're an engineer?"

"Not much of one. I never got to college, but since the guard was called up I'm with the engineers, and the stuff I'm learning will help me when this is all over. You really get a chance to learn, too, if you work at it."

"And I'll bet you work at it." "I like it. And I'm learning stuff I'd have had to pay for in schools, and being paid to learn it."

SHE was quiet a moment. The rain beat its mellow drum on the thatch shelter, "Does Julian work very hard?' "In the army everybody works hard. I thought Julian had told you

"He has, several dozen times. But I was asking you."

"He does all right, and he's got more sense than the average. But he's not interested in sticking with the army or with engineering, like some of them."

"I don't think Julian is ever interested in sticking with anything." Mack said slowly, "You shouldn't be saying that, and you engaged to

"I'm not engaged to him. Not

"He's in love with you. He talked about you all the time at camp."

She did not answer that. The rain struck with a last heavy burst before it thinned away into the gathering darkness. Finally there was only the sound of the wind. Mack said, "I'd better be getting on back to the house. They'll wonder what happened to

"I've got to go, too."

As she swung down from the table her foot turned in the loose sand and she would have fallen if he had not caught her. After that he could never remember: a movement in his arms, her face close to his for a long instant, pale in the early darkness. And then he was kissing her, hard, his arms fierce about her.

He released her and stepped back. His breath made a torn noise in his throat. "I - I'm sorry. I couldn't-"

"Mack."

"Julian loves you. This is a hell of a way to repay a friend's hospitality."

He turned and went stumbling away through the sand. The wind pushed at him, and bits of spray hurtled in from the gulf.

I've got to get away from here, he thought. I should have gone days ago. I've got to get away quick!

He did not go out with Julian that night, pleading indigestion, and after Mr. and Mrs. Rogers had gone to bed he phoned in a telegram to a friend at camp: Wire me that I've got to come back at once. Mack.

His answer came at noon the next day. It didn't sound very much like an order, but Mr. and Mrs. Rogers didn't have to see the telegram. They had been very kind to him, and he didn't want to seem impolite. But he had to get away. Only now there was no train until the next morning, and Julian had already made plans for fishing that afternoon with Ann and

The redhead wasn't at Ann's, however, and although Mack insisted he should go back and pack, neither Julian nor Ann would hear of it. And so the three of them were fishing where Tampa Bay empties past the desolate point of Arrow Key into the gulf, when the storm gathered.

Mack saw the clouds gathering in the southeast, piling high and purplish-black, although the sun still sparkled on the water. He knew how suddenly squalls could strike at this season, what they could do to a small boat. He said, "I think we'd better head back." To keep from alarming Ann he added, "It's getting late."

He saw Julian look toward the southeast for a moment. "Maybe we had," Julian said.

Julian pulled in the anchor, and while Mack wrapped the pull cord on the outboard motor, the wind, steady without being heavy, pushed them toward the open gulf. Mack gave the pull cord a couple of tugs, and the third time the motor caught. The sound of it screamed upward until it seemed the motor would explode, but the boat continued to drift gently before the wind.

MACK cut off the motor. "The pin's sheared," he said.

Julian said, "I didn't bring an extra one."

"Oars?"

"I didn't bring them. I've never had trouble with that motor before." "Maybe we can make a pin out of something. Better drop the anchor until we do.'

But there was nothing in the boat from which they could make a pin. They tried fishhooks, clipping the barbs and heads of the hooks with pliers, but the hooks were not big enough to hold.

'What are we going to do?" Julian asked. His gaze shifted nervously past Mack to the southeast.

In the west the sun thrust at the gulf, setting off a vast fireworks display, and Ann was watching this. The shore was only a mile away, and she had not noticed the squall behind them. She said, laughing, that she didn't think much of two engineers who couldn't fix an outboard motor.

"I could fix it if I had anything to work with," Julian said. His voice was tight. "What do you think we'd better do, Mack?"

"Wait for the rescue party," Ann

Mack felt the strength of the wind. It was still no more than a good breeze; but if he and Julian tried to swim, pushing the boat ahead of them, the wind would carry them into the open gulf. The tide, however, was with them, would not turn for some time yet — and a man swimming didn't have the wind resistance of a flat-bottomed boat.

"Nobody lives at this end of the island," Julian said. "We can't signal for help."

HOLIDAY SEASON?

Not to Uncle Sam's post office, where Christmas means heavy work - with 300,000 pieces of mail pouring in every minute for 14 long days

by Theodore Pratt

OUR thousand years ago there was no Christmas and therefore no Christmas-mail problem. The earliest "postmen" ran through the streets of Babylon bearing heavy slabs of baked clay upon which messages were impressed. Today, letters aren't so bulky, but there are quite a few more of them — especially during the Christmas season.

Approximately seven billion pieces of mail are handled by the Post Office Department in the two weeks before Christmas. This is a quarter of the total business done for the entire year. tive of those to whom he delivers mail, and perhaps a handful of cigars.

The mailman's greatest satisfaction is knowing that he is an essential cog in the most extensive single business organization in the world. To make possible his part in handling the enormous amounts of holiday mail-which, after all, is just one of his duties there is an organization which exists not just for two weeks, but all year.

When you drop a penny postcard in the mailbox at the corner, you set in motion an 800-million-dollar concern. Government-operated, it is the most

The most important men in America's biggest business

Holiday greetings and presents are mailed at the rate of about 300,000 per ninute of a 24-hour day. That means 8 million per hour and over 400 milon per day. Which is quite a business urnover in any man's language.

As much as two months before Christmas, the traffic begins to get really heavy. It rapidly becomes so ormidable that most business organcations would not even try to face it.

Even such a smooth-running machine as the Post Office Department n't able to handle that new business with its regular personnel. It does, with extra exertion and longer hours, take care of much of the traffic increase but not all the extra 600 per cent.

175,000 Workers Added

At this time of year it is necessary to employ 175,000 temporary postal workers, making the number of employees on the pay-roll more than 600,000. That's why you often see a strange mailman without a uniform delivering your mail, and private trucks and even cars bringing your packages.

When Christmas bargains are ofred, the Post Office is right out there eving the best. Your card for one cent, your greeting in a sealed enveope for three cents, your present at a w cents a pound - all will be delivered to any of 140 million people. or very little more they will be sent to virtually any one on earth. If addressed to a specific prisoner of war your remembrance will be sent free of charge to any country belonging to the Universal Postal Union. And most ations do belong. The greatest mirtele is sending, by air, a letter 4,000 iles for six cents.

It isn't only by speedy plane, whizing express trains and sizzling underround compressed-air tubes installed some cities that the Christmas mail pes out. In the bayous of the lower Mississippi Valley it travels by rowboat. In remote Western sections it is acked on the backs of mules. In the North it rides a sleigh, and in Alaska it ravels by Eskimo kayak and dogsled.

Mostly, it occupies the often weary, but never protesting, back of the humde, everyday mail carrier. His backbone is the backbone of the postal ervice. Without him at the receiving nd, transportation miracles would be irtually useless.

Out of Christmas the mailman gets, or the most part, a headache and tired feet. At the end of those two hectic weeks his shoulder is pulled down just a little farther from the weight of the mail he has carried. His benefits, in material form, are comparatively insignificant. They consist of about 25 er cent extra overtime pay, a few dollars presented by the most appreciaefficient that has ever been devised. What's more, it is on a paying basis. In 1940 there was a surplus of over 18 million dollars from ordinary postal operations. (Because it was required to do 60 million dollars' worth of work free — such as government franking of mail and sending Braille books for the blind-there was a false operating deficit of 42 million.)

Other businesses can go in for impressive statistics, but none can equal those of the postal service. To make sure that your Christmas mail will be delivered at bargain rates, there are 44,000 separate offices or distribution units. These range from beautiful, towering, marble post offices to the humble counter in a remote country store.

Fourteen million mail sacks are used to transport the mails between these. If you have ever seen one of those sacks, perhaps you've noticed the stripes on it. If you counted them, you would find there are 13 - one for each of the original states.

To tie letters together in bundles so that they may be more easily handled while en route, over a million miles of twine are used annually - enough to circle the earth at the equator nearly 50 times. All the mail handled weighs six billion pounds. Four hundred million pieces of it are now air mail.

Millions of Dead Letters

TWENTY billion stamps are sold every year. This doesn't count metered mail or that handled by bulk without using actual stamps. Thirteen million dead letters, without deliverable - or returnable - addresses on them, are destroyed annually. But, first, the average of $100,000 found in them is retained by the Post Office.

In a round-up of statistics, you find unexpected things. Among such items are 10 million dollars' worth of gasoline for delivery trucks, $7,000 worth of mucilage, $50,000 worth of soap, 500 lawn mowers to cut post-office lawns, and 200,000 tons of coal for heating purposes. And, no matter what you may think of the quality of the pen points furnished in post offices, five million are bought each year.

It isn't possible to store in any one place the actual accounts of this business. So they are recorded on microfilm - nearly three million tiny photographs are made annually.

FOR THE

Delivering letters is not by any means the sole function of the postal service. It operates one of the largest banking concerns in the world. Postal Savings last year had deposits of a billion and a quarter dollars. Nearly a billion more of United States Bonds are sold annually over post-office counters. The postal service last year took on, and accomplished without a hitch, the job of registering and fingerprinting the more than four million aliens in this country. It also handles a good deal of the business of the Civil Service Commission and Social Security Board and posts their announcements on lobby bulletin boards.

The most amazing thing about this vast activity is, perhaps, the fact that it is all done on a strictly cash basis. It is also accomplished with only one important mechanical device - the canceling machine, which is able to cancel 25,000 letters an hour. The rest of the work is almost all done by hand. And there is a loss of less than 15 pieces of mail out of every million.

To look after this extensive enterprise, the service has its own detective force, in the form of 600 postal inspectors. Anyone thinking of committing a crime against the postal service may think twice about it after learning that of 4,945 indictments last year, there were 4,351 convictions.

The Post Office Department is-especially at Christmastime when good will is felt more than at any other time of the year-one of the best expressions of democracy that exists.

No other organization can be said to reach so far into every remote corner of the nation, or to mean so much to both the private and business lives of people. Joseph Holt, who was Postmaster General in 1859, wrote the most fitting tribute to the postal service. His words are inscribed on the west façade of the great main Post Office Department building in Washington:

"The Post Office Department, in its ceaseless labor, pervades every channel of commerce and every theatre of human enterprise, and while visiting, as it does kindly, every fireside, mingles with the throbbings of almost every human heart in the land. In the amplitude of its beneficence, it ministers to all climes and creeds and pursuits with the same eager readiness and with equal fullness of fidelity. It is the delicate ear trumpet through which alike nations and families and isolated individuals whisper their joys and their sorrows, their convictions and their sympathies, to all who listen for their coming."

Listerine-Quick!

Listerine may head off a cold before it gets serious

This wonderful precaution is worth remembering the next time you have the sniffles or feel achy.

In clinical tests made during 10 rears of research, regular twice-aday Listerine Antiseptic users had fewer colds, milder colds, colds of shorter duration and also fewer sore throats due to colds than non-users.

This impressive record is explained, we believe, by Listerine's amazing germ-killing power.

The moment you gargle, it starts killing literally millions of "secondary invaders" on mouth and throat surfaces . . . the very type of germs that so many authorities regard as responsible for so many of those mean, troublesome aspects of a cold. They breed in large numbers in the mouth and throat. When resistance is lowered by wet feet, drafts, fatigue-they may invade the tissues and set up infection.

Try keeping these invaders under control with Listerine Antiseptic before they get the upper hand. At the first sign of trouble gargle quick and often. Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis, Mo.

NOTE HOW LISTERINE GARGLE REDUCED GERMS

The two drawings illustrate height of range in germ reductions on mouth and throat surfaces in test cases before and after gargling Listerine Antiseptic. Fifteen minutes after gargling, germ reductions up to 96.7% were noted; and even one hour after, germs were still reduced as much as 80%.

WOODBURY FACIAL SOAP

SYMPATHY OR — WHAT?

ATBIRDS and wrens had built nests in my back yard: catbirds in a lilac bush under my window; wrens in a box close by. Both females were brooding eggs when tragedy struck twice. It left the catbird a widow and the wren a widower, who chirped plaintively about his empty house with its shattered eggs.

The end of the wren family, of course, and it looked like the end of the catbird's too. For now that there was no one to watch the nest with its unhatched eggs in her absence, the widowed catbird would not leave it. Even to eat and drink. In vain I placed food close to the bush. She merely stared with bright, hungry eyes and sat the tighter.

But about the fourth day of her martyrdom I suddenly heard the male wren give that snappy little alarm he had used when guarding his own nest and went out to find him back on the job again - guarding hers

After awhile the catbird left her nest and the wren stayed to guard it. He did that several times on each of the following days until the eggs hatched. And she, during that period, never left unless he was there.

As soon as the chicks were born, the wren assumed a father's responsibility. Although I never saw him feed the widow, he began feeding her young, carefully alternating with her so that the nest was never alone.

But he was such a tiny wren and the catbirds grew so fast their bodies were soon larger than his own. That fact obviously bewildered him. Soon he would approach them cautiously, hastily thrust his offering into the first vast cavity that offered and precipitously retreat, as though afraid of being swallowed, too.

Nevertheless, he stuck to his job so long as they were in the nest. I never did find out, though, if the widow and widower became full part-- GARNET K. TIEN

Doris Doe, of opera fame, gives us some old American recipes by Grace Turner

AINE-BORN contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, Doris Doe carries on the tradition of the great Schumann-Heink. She can sing any one of fifty-six parts at an hour's notice, learns two or three new ones every year, and yet manages to be as homey and domestic as homespun wool. She rates it the highest praise when critics call her the heir to Schumann-Heink's voice, and likes to be compared with her in matters of domesticity and cooking.

After the opera season and when not on tour, Doris Doe heads straight for "Rhythm Hill," her 110-acre farm at Bennington, New Hampshire. Her 1810 house up there was one of the first brick houses ever built in New England.

In the country, Miss Doe puts on farm clothes and works hard in her 'pet" rock garden; makes a pal of "Betty," champion-bred English sheep dog given her by Bill Sullivan. She also raises Siamese cats, of which she had seven at the farm last summer, and brought two to the New York apartment with her, when the opera season began. Whenever she's not otherwise busy, she knits.

But bread-making keeps her occupied summers. "I make all the bread for my family then," she says, "cloverleaf rolls, pocket-book rolls and just plain bread." Summer family is mother, grandmother, brother, sister, sister's two children and herself.

Miss Doe also makes meatless mince meat of green tomatoes, and turns out excellent pumpkin pie. "A marvelous recipe," she says. (See THIS WEEK's recipes.) She puts up beans and corn, makes grape and crabapple jelly, blueberry and blackberry jam; and brings home-made preserves for winter use in the city.

In town she cooks less, gives fewer parties. In New Hampshire she likes to have parties arranged for weekends. Most of the family friends are musical and the summer Sunday musicales at the farm are famous. Miss Doe's mother is a fine musician; her great-grandfather founded the Philadelphia Singing School. "I can't remember a time when I didn't hear music in my mother's household." she says. She can't remember, either, when she first began to sing. As a small child, when she wanted somethingsay, a spoon - she d.dn't ask for a "Spoon, please," but sang the words in scale. "Spoon! Spoon!"

HERE ARE THE RECIPES

Grandmother's White Bread

1 tablespoon sugar 1 teaspoon salt

2 cups milk, scalded

1 tablespoon melted shortening

2 tablespoons lukewarm water

Mix and sift flour, sugar and salt. Cool milk to lukewarm; add melted shortening. Dissolve yeast in lukewarm water; add to milk mixture. Add milk mixture to 15 of flour; beat well. Stir in remaining flour. Knead until smooth and elastic, adding more flour if necessary. Place in large greased bowl; brush with additional melted shortening, cover and let rise in a warm place overnight Cut down; mead; shape into 2 loaves; place in greased loaf pans and brush surface with melted shortening. Let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk (1-2 hours). Bake in a hot oven (375-400° F.) 15 minutes. Reduce heat to moderate (350° F.) and bake 40-50 minutes longer. Brush with melted butter. Yield: 2 loaves.

Pan Dowdy

6 large tart apples, pared and sliced

1 cup sugar

4 teaspoon nutmeg

2 tablespoons butter

11/2 cups prepared biscuit mix 1/2 cup milk

34 cup molasses

Place sliced apples in deep baking dish. Combine sugar and nutmeg; sprinkle on apples. Dot with butter. Pour in water. Combine biscuit mix and milk; roll out 1/2-inch thick on lightly floured board in shape of baking dish. Place over apples. Bake in a hot oven (450° F.) 15 minutes. Remove from oven. Break the biscuit cover in small pieces and stir into apples. Add molasses; mix well. Cover and bake in a slow oven (300° F.) 1 hour. Serve with whipped cream. Approximate yield: 6 portions.

Boston Baked Beans

3 cups navy beans

14 cup dark molasses

1 teaspoon salt teaspoon pepper

1 teaspoon dry mustard

Boiling water

1/2 pound fat salt pork

Soak beans overnight, drain. Cover with fresh water and simmer until just tender; drain. Place in deep casserole or bean pot. Combine molasses, salt, pepper, dry mustard and 1 cup boiling water; mix well; pour over beans. Add enough boiling water to just cover beans. Scrape rind of salt pork until white; score rind and press into beans, leaving only rind exposed. Cover and bake in a slow oven (250-300° F.) for 6-8 hours, add boiling water occasionally, to keep beans just covered. Remove cover 1 hour before beans are done. Yield: 6-8 portions

Pumpkin Pie

114 cups canned pumpkin 1 cup brown sugar, firmly packed

1/2 teaspoon nutmeg

1 teaspoon cinnamon

14 teaspoon cloves

1/2 teaspoon salt

2 eggs, slightly beaten 1 unbaked 9-inch pie shell

Combine pumpkin, brown sugar, spices and salt; mix well. Combine milk and eggs; add to pumpkin mixture; mix well. Pour into pie shell and bake in a hot oven (450° F.) 10 minutes. Reduce heat to moderate (350° F.) and bake 20-25 minutes longer or until inserted knife comes out clean. The approximate yield will be: 1 one-crust (9-inch) pie.

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL

blonde — half Irish, half Italian. It was a Manhattan courtship. Miss De Fina sang in a small night club. Bob, being in the chips, would call for her in one of those cars with glass behind the driver's seat. He'd have the driver park in front of the quiet midtown hotel where Dolores and her mother lived. Then he'd talk.

Mrs. De Fina was shocked at her daughter coming in at three or four in the morning.

"Just look out the window and down sixteen floors," her daughter reassured her. "You're our chaperone."

The young people met on December 21; they were married February 19. "Bob kidded through the proposal," Mrs. Hope recalls, "just like he kids through work;

but I could see he was serious underneath."

Following the last "Ziegfeld Follies" and the musical "Red, Hot and Blue," Rudy Vallee asked Bob to appear as a guest star on the air. In that field he was a quick wow.

Throughout all he did building gags, catching other fellows' shows to observe technique, studying timing, working, rehearsing — Bob's enthusiastic optimism never flagged. Everything is ducky; everything is getting better; nothing bad can happen
that's Bob.

He clicked quickly, too, when he went into the movies, but his screen career really moved into high when, beginning with "The Cat and the Canary," they gave him human, three-dimensional characterizations, in which being funny was only part of the role.

A Gag Every 30 Seconds

Jokes and gags, though, remain his specialty. In the funny line he's the champion heavy consumer. For his half-hour radio show each week he must have 120 gags. He uses 20 in his three-and-a-half-minute monologue. Besides men whom his sponsors and the studio hire, he keeps five writers constantly employed. He's a whizz at gags himself, and is one of two comedians allowed to ad lib before the movie camera.

One of the most effective forms of on-your-feet humor, Bob holds, is to express what an audience thinks but is too polite to say. Bob was invited to be the master of ceremonies at a dinner celebrating Jack Benny's tenth anniversary on the air. From the speakers' table he looked around at the sea of white shirts: big-shots, climbers, press and press agents. "It gives me great honor and gratification," he opened, "to be invited to share in this publicity stunt." The audience "really died" - as they say in radio - and no one laughed louder than Benny.

"PopularMechanics, please"

Not all Bob's movie action is as pleasant as kissing Zorina. In "Nothing but the Truth," he was dunked in a tank of live bait; then the tank, with him in it, was tossed into a soundstage ocean, just as wet as the real. After eight rehearsals and takes, Bob, gasping frantically, shaking minnows out of ears and hair, heard the director say: "That's it. You can go home."

"Go home, nothing," contradicted Bob in mock bitterness. "I'm going to see my lawyer!"

Golf provides the recreation that enables him to keep his strenuous work schedule, plus an incredible number of benefit performances. His other safety valve is a catlike ability to relax at any moment. He bet Bing

Crosby he could shade a certain score over Pittsburgh's most difficult golf course. Arriving at Pittsburgh late at night, he rose early. The mayor gave him a police escort to the course and Bob and two friends whammed through town, sirens screaming. One of them relates: "At the clubhouse I said, 'Okay, Bob. Let's get out.' My mouth dropped open. He was fast asleep!"

Bob, after winning his bet from Crosby by one stroke, slept his way back into town, and that afternoon and evening did five regular shows and two benefits.

Enthusiasm, hard work and personality have brought Bob money. The comedian's gross income during 1940, from radio, movies and personal two benefits.

sonal appearances totaled $454,166.78. Even after business deductions, Bob paid, for 1940, federal and state income taxes totaling $142,047.66. His 1941 gross income will probably rise to $575,000, but considering the defense rates Congress has approved, he may remind himself of his favorite joke about Crosby: "Bing doesn't pay a regular income tax. He just calls up Secretary Morgenthau each year and asks, 'How much do you boys need?""

But Bob pays taxes cheerfully.
"The servants may have to let us go next year," he quips. "They'll be hard hit, and we can scarcely expect them to feed the four of us."

Bob's $18,000 annual investment in insurance is partly due to Linda, aged two—blond-haired and blue-eyed—and Tony, aged one, brown-eyed and always laughing. Home life at the Hopes centers around these two. Mrs. Hope explains that Bob didn't name the boy Bob, Jr. because he didn't want to "type" him.

"What are Bob's faults as a husband?" I asked.

The Double Take

"Two," she answered promptly. "First, you're likely to ask him a question and get only a blank stare. Then, twenty minutes later — after he's worked out the gag sequence that was building in his head — he'll answer your half-forgotten question, without a word of warning. It makes you jump.

"Second, I find it hard to tell when he's too tired, or worried.

Cheerfulness is a religion with him."

Mrs. Hope has partly solved the latter riddle by noticing one of his relaxing tricks. "If he's really halfdead," she says, "he'll come in with a brown paper bag. He gets in bed, with all the day's newspapers around him, as if he were going to read. Then he takes two ice-cream cones out of the bag and starts in. About halfway through the second cone, he grins: 'Dolores, throw this away.' He's asleep!"

I complimented Mrs. Hope on Bob's being too smart to have a yen to do Shakespeare.

"But may I have a pint of cream?" "Madam," the grocer woman snaps, "are you shopping or are we talking politics?"

The anti-Nazi jokes which have been circulating during the past seven years would fill a number of thick volumes. Some of these jokes have typical national qualities and lose all humor outside of their border lines. Some are too rough ever to be printed. Others are subtle. And others are such good jokes that laughter almost ob-

which transforms the battle of wit

They Started Early

THE first good anti-Nazi stories were has kept on rolling all over Germany, just as it is rolling now over the continent. This summer, people in Berlin air-raid shelters tried to smile at the following story while British bombers were overhead:

Schmidt comes home, all excited. "Frau, get our baggage ready. We

"Good gracious - what has hap-

"A lion has broken loose at the zoo. The S.S. has been ordered to

"But, Fritz, we are not lions!"

"Frau, don't be foolish. How could we ever prove that to the S.S.?'

Another Fritz Schmidt story from Berlin tells how Schmidt meets his friend Schulze and asks how business

"Splendid, splendid. Never better. Sales increased ninety per cent. In two weeks I plan to take a four weeks' vacation. To the Alps. Yes, my wife and the children too. Yes. Never better . . .

"Listen," interrupts Fritz Schmidt, "is this a private conversation, or are we talking on the phone?"

In Germany, as in every other nation in Europe, there is a strong connection between the latest news and the latest jokes. Whatever lies Goebbels's papers print are quickly met by a new anecdote, verse or joke.

To the propaganda reports of the Russian campaign people in Hamburg reacted with a question and answer:

Maier: "Why has Leningrad not yet been occupied?"

Lehmann: "Our victorious armies have been halted by burglars." Maier: "How do you mean?"

Lehmann: "Gangsters hired by the English Intelligence ransacked the safe of the Propaganda Ministry and stole all the special communiqués that were to have been issued from the Fuehrer's Headquarters."

For many years the Nazis have tried to combat this flood of destructive jokes. At first, they relied on severe punishment for "anyone who seeks to ridicule the Party, the State, its leaders, insignia and symbols." Yet, while thousands were sent to prison because of this law, the wave of jokes only increased.

Funny Fellows

THE next step was a number of psychological countermeasures. Goebbels published an article proclaiming that the Nazi Party was composed of gay men, that they liked to laugh - to laugh even about themselves. "Put away the false fear" - the Propaganda Doctor exclaimed - "we want laughter as our fighting comrade! Don't whisper. Laugh openly!"

There was one unfortunate German who took this propaganda proclamation seriously. Three days after the article appeared, the well-known Berlin comedian Werner Fink - loyal to the Party but always ready for a good laugh -- walked out upon the stage of his little cabaret with outstretched right arm, crying "Heil . . . " He stopped suddenly. Then he threw his arm up again, cried again: "Heil . . . "

"I'm in a sort of a jam,

Dad — you see, I wrote some letters to a girl!"

Whereupon, quite desperate, he mumbled to himself: "For heaven's sake now I have forgotten that name."

The next morning Party Comrade Werner Fink, despite Goebbels's proclamation, found himself in the Sachsenhausen concentration camp.

In the face of all propaganda maneuvers, of pressure and threats and brutality, the men and women in Europe keep laughing. True, Hitler has been able to force most people on the European continent into a deadly silence in which no one dares to state openly what he feels and thinks; and millions are paying lip service to the oppressor. Yet as soon as the doors and windows are closed, as soon as there is no one around who is suspect, the storytelling begins anew.

In Berlin and Paris the stories are whispered, in Vienna and Oslo, in Rotterdam and Copenhagen, in every little town and community. The harder the Nazi hits, the sharper the whisper grows. It is never in the open - but it is always there, just underground. Anyone traveling today through Europe can hear it. The Nazis hear it, too. It laughs mockingly in their ears. But for every 10 joke-makers they catch, 100 new ones seem to appear out of nowhere.

Together, they play an important human part in the great wave of resistance which is surging over the face of Europe.

Printing Office. It tells them such practical things as how to dress and take care of their clothes for protection against the cold, how to build snow-houses and other shelters, how to prevent and cure scurvy by proper diet obtainable in the North, and how to guard against the greatest single danger of the Arctic traveler, carbon-monoxide poisoning.

Stefansson himself never had a narrower escape from death than when he first encountered carbon monoxide. He and three companions were in a snow-house, cooking supper on a primus stove. Somehow the ventilation got cut off. One moment the four men were all chatting gaily. The next moment two of them flopped over, unconscious. Stefansson hadn't felt anything, but he and the fourth man were just able to throw themselves through the ice-block door, letting the air in, as they also began to be overcome. A few seconds more, and all four would have been dead.

Uncle Sam's soldiers in the Arctic won't make the mistake of letting their snow-houses get blocked up tight. They won't build their shelters under the lee of a cliff, where drifts may cut off ventilation. They won't let frost on their clothing melt and soak in - to freeze later on. They won't do a lot of things which a novice, unwarned, would be almost sure to do. They will know better.

I remember the day in 1934 when I ran into Carl Lomen in Washington. Lomen, one of Alaska's outstanding men — you may have heard him called the "Reindeer King" - had just been talking to some generals about Alaska. What he had said, as he reported it to me, was substantially this: "The world is moving northward with dizzy speed. Sometime you may have to fight a war in Alaska. Yet you know very little about the North. Your soldiers know nothing about taking care of themselves there. Ignorance might beat you long before the enemy could get at you. You need to know how to meet the North on its own terms. live and operate there. And there is only one man in the world equipped to give you all that information -Vilhjalmur Stefansson."

I saw Lomen again not long ago. "Earl," he said, "I couldn't have served the United States better with a lifetime of work."

That speech had started the chain of events that put Stefansson to work for the Army. The North need no longer hold any terrors for American soldiers. For their scholarly Arctic schoolmaster, with his scorn of heroics and his unequaled knowledge, is the greatest Arctic-tamer of them all.

"One of us could swim in," Mack

Julian's face was pale as he looked across the long stretch of water to the beach. Ann said, "Somebody will be sure to come out for us. Why don't we just wait?"

Mack glanced toward the southeast again. The sky was a curtain of midnight blue, and against it white gulls flew like fragments of light. High overhead two frigate birds passed on swift wings. The squall might hit in half an hour, maybe an hour. And it might pass. Nobody could predict what a squall would do at this time of the year. But if it hit hard it would mean serious trouble-and Ann wasn't a good swimmer.

"I think I can make it," Julian said. His cheek bones made lines across his face. "Or do you want to try it, Mack?"

"Go ahead," Mack said.

ANN had turned and was staring at them. "Do you really think it's necessary to swim

"I think so," Mack said. He didn't mention the Julian stripped to his shorts. Ann said, "Mack, you're a better swimmer than Julian. Why

"I can make it," Julian said. He dived. He sliced the water cleanly, and when he came up his long, flashing crawl was taking him toward the beach a mile away.

Ann watched him; then, slowly, her head moved and she was looking at Mack. Her face was bloodless. Her eyes were dark with a look like that of a child who has been hurt and who cannot understand. She said, "You're a better swimmer than Julian. He looks fine in the water, but he can't hold out in the way you can."

He understood her meaning but he could find no words to explain. She turned quickly away. The water borrowed purple and scarlet dyes from the sunset. The breeze was stronger now, but not so steady. It came in gusts that made the boat pitch against the anchor rope. Mack could see the storm sweeping up the bay now, like the wake of some huge, fast-moving, and invisible ship. And he knew that Julian could never bring help before the storm struck.

He knew, too, that in this choppy water the boat would be almost certain to fill and capsize. The anchor would hold it under the water half the time after that; and if the anchor rope was cut, they would be swept out into the gulf. Looking west, he could see the frame of a big channel marker, a half mile or so away. The wind would tend to carry them inside of it, but . . .

He cut the anchor rope.

Ann was watching Julian's slow progress toward the beach and did not notice. Mack went past her and began trying to steer the boat as it drifted, using the top of a tackle box as an added rudder.

"Julian's made it," Ann said. "He's wading ashore."

"Ann -- " He wanted to tell her that he had known Julian could swim ashore, that they were in more danger now than Julian had been and this was why he had stayed with her. If they were both going to be drowned, he wanted to tell her that he loved her.

She turned to him, her face cold, tight-drawn despite its relief and with hurt and scorn in her eyes. "Julian made it," she said again. "We are safe now, because of him."

A sheet of rain swept over them like a wave, and was gone. For perhaps five seconds there was not a breath of wind. Then it came with a jolt, driving with fury rain and sharp whitecrested waves before it.

They crouched there while the water snarled under them which sliced their hands and legs.

He struggled to the surface but you won't fall out!"

He could see the channel marker's light flashing through the rain, and he prayed the boat would pass close. It didn't. They were drifting two hundred yards inside, and he knew the tide and the storm would sweep them on into the gulf. He put his head close to Ann's. He shouted, "Can you swim that far?"

She looked through the rain and tossing water. It was farther than she had ever swum. She looked back at Mack. "Is it the thing to try?"

"Yes."

She released her clutch on the boat.

For a moment after she was gone there was the stain of blood on the barnacles where her hand had been. Then the water washed it off.

It was not a long swim, as distance goes, but it was the most desperate of Mack Spencer's life. For the last half of the way he helped the girl, fighting against the waves, fighting against the pull of the water, until his throat felt as though he had swallowed raw acid, and his stomach revolted at salt water, and his arms were weights.

Then the channel marker loomed over them.

THEY crouched on the platform finally, while the water snarled under them and close overhead the marker's light flashed out its one second of brightness, three seconds of dark, one second of light ... The storm blew itself

"It may be several hours before they find us," Mack Spencer said. "It may be morning. But we are safe enough."

She moved a little and her wet shoulder touched his. She said, "You knew there was going to be a squall, didn't you? That's why you stayed in the boat with me."

"I've seen them come up like that several times before. But it might have missed us."

The waves pitched the little row-"Did Julian know it was going to storm, that it was more dangerous to stay in the boat than to swim ashore for help?" He took a breath. He said, "If he even noticed the squall, he thought the boat would take it. He did what he thought would help you."

She moved again, closer. "Mack-" "What is it?"

"I tried to tell you last night. Julian isn't really in love with me. Maybe he was for awhile, but not for long. Not Julian. He's already got his eyes on Louise."

"On who?"

She laughed, and he thought it strange that she should sound so pleased. "Louise. The red-haired girl you've had dates with."

He turned to stare at her. His blood was pounding, and overhead the marker light alternated its one second of brightness with three of darkness. "You mean - ?"

"If you want to finish what we were talking about last night under the shelter, you don't need to stop because you are Julian's friend."

Later she told him, "I don't care if they don't find us until morning," and settled closer under his arm.

WANTED - PET CONTROL

Do your dogs and cats annoy your guests?
No? Are you sure? Think hard!

by Elsie McCormick

Harold M. Lambert

BEGGAR. Don't let your pet get into the habit of begging tidbits from the table. He can ruin your guest's disposition, your dinner, and his digestion

T's strange that some people who wouldn't dream of letting their children beg food from guests at the table, or run down the street yelling at strangers, or wipe muddy feet against a neighbor's white crepe dress, beam complacently when their pets do such things. They even think that people who complain are testy souls, incapable of appreciating cuteness and good intentions.

Though I happen to love both dogs and cats, my affection for owners who are too lazy to train their animals is definitely microscopic. Such owners fail to realize that a badmannered pet may be almost as much of a reflection on them as a bad-mannered child.

You remember the hostess who seems to be a trifle disturbed when her dog crawls out from under your legs at the dinner table. You're ready to go to work on what promises to be a luscious steak. Rover says "No." He begins to make frantic passes in the air. The hostess says: "Oh, dear! Rover is so spoiled. Someday we'll just have to stop feeding him at the table!" But don't place any bets on that possibility.

Then there are the lovable four-legged creatures who like to scamper across flower beds, joyfully crushing delicate new petals and buds as they go. Or the pets who use a leash as a lethal weapon.

If a pet is annoying or bad-mannered, the chances are at least one hundred to one that the blame rests on the owner rather than the animal. Altogether, I've found five main types of offenders. You might look at them and see what you think. If they belong to you — well, why not try starting a little training course in your home? You'll be surprised at how quickly it will increase your popularity.

2. DIGGER. He won't strike oil. He will probably strike a root in your neighbor's garden. Then all of you will be unhappy

4. BUNDLER. Unpopular is the pet who sharpens claws on guest's wraps, sleeps on a best hat, snuggles under bed covers

3. PAWER. Have you a dog who chases passers-by, jumps up on your visitors, tonguewashes everybody in sight?

5. LEASH-TANGLER. A menace to health. Ever trip over a long leash or been wrapped in one by a dog chasing a cat?

FORTY? FACE IT FRANKLY

Drop ingenue roles - adult elegance is your cue, says this authority on styles by Sylvia Blythe

HE all-round smart woman of forty is frankly forty, and makes capital of the experience, proven taste and poise those years have given

Because it is always a help to know what other successful women are doing. I coaxed the tall, good-looking and chic Bijie Martin de Wardener, daughter of the well known Metropolitan opera star. Riccardo Martin, to tell us her formula. She is also head of the customorder salon of a swank New York shop; and until the debacle in France, she was directrice of one of the great dressmakinghouses in Paris, numbering among her clients such famous fashionables as Lady Mendl, the Duchess of Windsor, Mrs. Harrison Williams and others whose names have graced the lists of the world's "best dressed."

"At forty," she says, "it is far better to look the part of an American lady, a role for which age fits you so admirably, than it is to keep casting yourself in the role of an ingenue, in which you are likely to encounter some unfavorable competition."

For this part of an American lady, adult elegance is your cue. Hair must say goodbye to many of its youthful ways. Any girlish mane that drops like a shawl from the head must go; so also any shock of dégagé curls; or any confused frou-frou over the brow; or halo of cherubic curls, or flock of untended

The "Molded" Coiffure

REPLACING any such casual effects is a coiffure that looks as though it had been poured into a persuasive mold. Moreover, it must keep those impressions as the week wears on. The best way to achieve that soigné effect is to mould your hair close to your head, styling it simply and allowing nothing to interfere with regular trips to the shampoo-basin.

Mrs. de Wardener has her hair done regularly once a week and goes back to her hairdresser in-between times to have it reset. Her hair-do, if you analyzed it for coiffure-interest, would be nothing to write home about - it's very simple. She fits it almost turbanclose to her head, brushes it up sleekly from the temples, coaxes it to swirl up from her brow, and wears it in a neck-hugging roll, curved like a horseshoe, in the back. She says a simple, cleanly-outlined, brow-revealing frame of hair is more chic and infinitely easier on the face than a confusion of effects. As for tidiness, which she is so fussy about, she swears by a hair-net to cradle the roll in the back and to discipline willful strays. For make-up, Mrs. de Wardener says, turn right about face toward the natural. You've had your fling with eccentric shades, so you can retire these. Much more elegant are complexion-keyed powder-foundation and powders, rouges and lipsticks that blend undetectably with your natural creamy or pink skin tones.

Subtlety is your cue for putting on make-up, which for daytime wear must always pass the acid test of a merciless North light. For her final inspection, Mrs. de Wardener takes her hand-mirror out on her terrace to obtain an all-exposure close-up of the job she has achieved in front of her dressing table.

In order to pass that make-up test, she says, she usually has to err on the under-statement side. Otherwise, her foundation looks a trifle too pasty; or her powder a trifle too weighty; or rouge looks too stand-offish or lipstick-coats look too layered.

Lipstick rates all the devotion you care to give it - a good, clean job of application, and touch-ups as often as you chew off color, she says.

That color, of course, should extend over the pale rim of your lips, but not beyond the mouth's natural boundaries. The best applicator for spreading lipstick smoothly, for evening up color, and for softening outlines is your own deft little finger.

If you use mascara, use it as a finish for dusty lashes and brows - not for any femme-fatale effects. If you use eye-shadow, bend over backward to keep it subtle, and use it to accent your eyes, not your lids.

Now, let's take a look at figure needs. This is where the all-important and often abused girdle comes in. It is abused and so is your figure says Mrs. de Wardener, if you try to squeeze into an under-sized foundation, a mistake of which many women are guilty, and which gives them a figure so rigid to the sight and touch that it could pass for a statue.

Try a Larger One

It is far better, she says, to settle for a foundation that is an inch too large. If it is an allenveloping corselette, or a combination of long girdle and corset-cover type of bra, your foundation will both fit and at the same time improve your outlines. It will support your muscles, help your posture, knit flesh into smooth, compact curves, and give you more easy-going grace and a decidedly slimmer silhouette.

As bad as trying to squeeze a figure into fledgling proportions, says Mrs. de Wardener, is trying to hoist a mature bosom to a more youthful elevation.

As for clothes, the simpler and more classic you have them, the better you cast yourself in your fascinating new role. Just how extreme in style they should be, says Mrs. de Wardener. depends upon how youthful your waistline is. Where a waistline is no longer of hand-spanning size, the figure looks better-dressed in the more conservative type of clothes. But, for that matter, any figure is dressed for the utmost in elegance when the costume chosen is one of simple up-anddown lines, with a good neckline, a gracefully flaring skirt, and a faultlessly-straight hem of a modish length.

The day was mild but James Roosevelt, son of the President, came prepared for a change in the weather—with an ample coffee percolator.

Navy was getting the worst of it until the third quarter. Finding themselves, the Middies drove to their first touchdown in this play, Phil Hurt plunging over from the 1-yard line. They scored again in the fourth to win, 14-6.

At Jeast two were for Navy. Attending the game with Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox and Rear Admiral Russell Willson, superintendent of the Naval Academy, British Ambassador Lord Halifax (left) had to observe a diplomatic neutrality.

Secretary of War and Mrs. Henry L. Stimson had the weather, the spectacle and the sportsmanship to enjoy if not an Army victory. With them is the Secretary's niece, Miss Frances Daggatt of New Haven, Conn.

One of the numerous jobs of the Army's Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot is the repair of all musical instruments for the military forces. These horns are in the shop for various ailments, including dents this workman is removing with a rawhide mallet.

DRUMS, horns, every instrument that makes music for the Nation's growing Army and Navy, are being manufactured and repaired in record number these days. War and weapons have been revolutionized, but martial music still holds the important place in the life and fighting heart of the soldier that it always has. Life Begins Anew for Spanish Refugees

IFE has brightened a great deal for the first of 5,000 Spanish refugee families to accept the hospitality of Ecuador under a contract permitting that number to seek asylum there from the wreckage of the Spanish civil war. On a 740-acre tract, in the high country 35 miles from Quito, capital of Ecuador, the first families to arrive are slowly but surely building a future for themselves. It will never be a rich future, but it promises to be a happy and contented one. The colony has been named Simon Bolivar after the great South American liberator. Among other privileges the colonists enjoy is the right to become citizens of Ecuador.

Colonists build their own homes, with the help of neighbors. Here's a typical one in which lives the Cano family.

One of the first things the colony built was shelter for a saw mill. Since the mill was yet to be set up, there was no finished lumber for this job. Small trees cut from the forest form the crude framework.

Tents do for shelter until something better can be managed. And there's no particular hurry about that. The country is one of dense forest which has to be cleared as the colony grows. But the soil is rich for garden crops and to support livestock.

Architecturally this is the most ambitious building the colony has put up. It was first used as temporary quarters for new arrivals, but it's now reserved exclusively for bachelors, of whom the number is dwindling.

For the trip into town the chief and his wife hired a swanky car. It drove right up to the tepee door for them.

Red Cloud Woman soon caught onto the tricks of their swanky car. Even down to the cigarette lighter.

IT WAS the 25th wedding anniversary of Chief Spotted Eagle, sachem of Aiberta's Stony tribe, and his wife, Red Cloud Woman. The occasion called for some proper celebration. This, they decided, would be a trip into the city of Banff to spend the day, and spend it royally. It was quite a change from their quiet tepee life at Morley in the Canadian Rockies. Here are some picture highlights of the day.

First place the chief went in Banff was a barber shop. The barber's only kidding—he didn't lose those black braids. Just got his bangs straightened and tamed down a bit.

The Big Chief Goes to Town

Red Cloud Woman had her heart set on something for her feet that weren't moccasins. She has looked at everything in the shoe store by now, and those white ones she's admiring seem to be the answer. Eight-year-old daughter-Big Bird Woman-wonders if she's going to get a pair.
