O. P. M. Places Limit On Sugar Deliveries By the Associated Press.

The O. P. M. yesterday froze sugar stocks in the United States and limited new deliveries by importers and No. 5. issued yesterday, said: refiners to 1940 levels. The move was designed to "prevent possible hoarding or speculation."

assure normal supplies to industrial and civilian consumers and would 500,000 tons of sugar already built jobbers, industrial users and wholesalers.

Under the order, all such stocks resist. in excess of 60 days' supply are frozen immediately and no receiver may accept delivery of additional sugar from a refiner or importer if his stock on hand exceeds 30 days'

Further, no receiver can accept delivery of more sugar in any one month than he received during the corresponding month of 1940. The O. P. M. said normal sugar consumption in this country was about 6.800,000 tons, but that consumption this year was running about a million tons more.

Axis Armies, Lashed By R. A. F., Try for Stand at Derna

New Zealanders Reported To Have Hemmed in Nazis And Fascists at Gazala

By the Associated Press. CAIRO. Dec. 13.-Axis armies in Libya, cut into segments by the revitalized British offensive and lashed by the furies of the R. A. F. appeared today to be trying for a stand at Derna, oasis port 100 miles west of Tobruk. A considerable number of the German and Italian troops were reported hemmed in by hard fighting New Zealanders at Gazala, on the coast 40 miles west of Tobruk. Beyond them, far to the west, other Axis units were said to be trying to break through British forces impeding their retreat to Derna. With the R. A. F. and British and Allied warships harassing sea-borne Axis supplies sent from Greek and Italian ports, virtually the only supply line to these troops remained the Italian-built highway along the Libyan coast from Tripoli and that, British communiques indicated, was under merciless pounding of the R. A. F. and possibly subjected to land-raiding parties from the Brit-ish-held oasis of Gialo, on the desert 150 miles from the Gulf of Sirte.

Far behind, Australian fighters were said in a communique to have mopped up three more Axis border posts south of Salum. (An authoritative source in London said there were still well-entrenched defenses there, but the main battleground had swept so far beyond that their situation appears hopeless.)

On the desert south of Gazala, the British war bulletin reported that British forces had put some 3,000 Axis troops out of the fight there and at Gazala. Half of them were reported killed.

British troops and equipment brought from Ethiopia after the collapse of the last Italian empire defenders there were said to be boltering the Libyan offensive.

plans to provide approximately 38,000,000 masks of an approved design for distribution to everybody in the areas believed subject to gas attacks-300-mile-wide strips along the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf Coasts.

These strips include a population of about 50,000,000. Tentative plans had been made for evacuation of almost 12,000,000 women and children to the interior of the country. The designs of masks had been worked out by the Army's chemical warfare service. Everything was in readiness early in October to place experimental orders for 5,000,000 masks to get industry geared for a production of about 2,500,000 a month.

Because of lack of authorization. however, no orders have been placed and not a mask is available. Thus at present civilian gas dethe requisite number. The situation, however, is by no means as bad as it might seem, say civilian defense officials.

Both the Army and Navy have large reserve stocks which can be borrowed in case of any emergency. It is highly unlikely that a widespread gas attack would be launched. Bombing is more effective and economical for any "token" attack on the American coasts. The system followed in Europe at the start of the war provided masks for everybody in the endangered countries—but there the likelihood of as much as five times the normal gas attack was much greater than rate.

English Regulations Strict. In England masks of an approved design were distributed free to everybody by the municipal authorities. It was compulsory to have one and carry it at all times. Police enforced the regulation on the streets. In France it was necessary to purchase masks. It was compulsory, however, to have one when out of doors and a pedestrian was subject to arrest if caught without one. All the masks were of governmentapproved design, but the distribution machinery broke down rather badly at times and it was difficult to find a place where one could be pur-

The masks designed for American civilians are described by officers of the Chemical Warfare Service as "the best in the world.

The one intended for general civilian distribution will afford absolute protection from any known war gas for several hours. Special attention has been paid to the non-combatant service mask, of which a supply of 1,400,000 is contemplated, designed to give longer and even more complete protection to men and women, such as workers in the defense industries, wardens, neighborhood air-raid patrols, etc., who will be obliged to remain in an area of gas con-

Volunteers Overtax Recruiting Office Of Army Here

Enlistments Average 25 Daily; Marines to Open New Station

A rush of applicants since the declaration of war has taxed the facilities of the Army recruiting office here and forced its staff to exert every effort to keep pace with the work required of it, Capt. R. M. Peake, recruiting fficer for the District, reported yesterday.

So great has been the increase in applicants that an adjoining office had to be converted temporarily into an information booth. An average of 25 persons per day, ranging from boys to white-haired men, were signed up last week, swelling the total enlistments for the year to 1.500.

Meanwhile, announcement was made that a Washington recruiting district had been set up for the Marine Corps, removing the local area from supervision of the Philadelphia district. Similar action was taken in 1917, it was recalled. Three New Substations.

Under the new setup, Baltimore, Richmond and Norfolk will be substations under the Washington district. Headquarters for the district will be set up at 949 Ninth street N.W. tomorrow and will be under the direction of Maj. Weathered Woodworth, U. S. M. C. Reserve. An information station will be maintained at the present recruiting station at Seventeenth and F streets

In New York, it was reported, the Marines' success in repelling the Japanese at Wake Island had caused a surge of enlistments. The Marine Corps received 600 applications in one day and has been forced to augment its staff to care for the

Army Cites 6 Flyers Who Downed 10 Japs In Hawaii Combat

Wilmington Youth, 23, Bagged 4 Enemy Planes In a Single Battle

The names of six youthful flyers who downed 10 enemy planes in the Japanese attack on Hawaii last Sunday were inscribed by the Army last night on the war roll of air

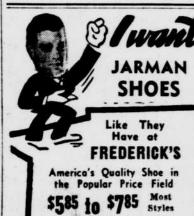

Their "spectacular feats of heroism" were said by Lt. Gen. Walter C. Short, Hawaiian department commander, to typify the "magnificent fighting of American pilots' which since has been demonstrated as well in the Philippines and at Wake Island.

Second Lt. George S. Welch, a serious-faced Wilmington (Del.) youth, was credited with downing four enemy planes. Thus, in a single combat he failed by only one plane of becoming an "ace." cording to 1914-18 tradition, a flyer attained that rating on accounting year. for five enemy craft.

Taylor Bagged Two. Second Lt. Kenneth M. Taylor of Hominy, Okla., destroyed two Japanese planes and four other pilots bagged one apiece. The four are First Lt. Louis M. Sanders, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Lt. Gordon H. Sterling, r., West Hartford, Conn.; Second Lt. Philip M. Rasmussen, Boston, and Second Lt. Harry W. Brown, Flying fast, single-seat pursuit planes, they fought in each instance against odds, finding their foes "decidedly clever and dangerous flyers, the War Department reported.

Lt. Welch's feat vied with the most spectacular exploits of British and Nazi airmen in the battle of Britain. Only Capt. Colin Purdie Kelly, jr., who gave his life in scorbattleship Haruna in the Philippines, has struck a harder blow learned about the importance of co-ordinating operations with the air arm in modern war.

The obvious counter to early Japanese successes, it was pointed out, is to blanket Japan's air force.

For security reasons yesterday's announcement gave no details of the numbers or type of British rein- ing three direct hits on the Japanese forcements being rushed to the two heaters. It was assumed, however, in view of warnings in some quarters, that withdrawal of much of the German air force from the Russian front presages a powerful air attack either on Britain or her Mediterranean forces, that the British would be careful about weakening their home defense or imperiling their North African superiority. Rely on U. S.-Made Planes.

Because of the distances involved in Far Eastern operations it was believed the British would rely heavily on American-made planes. British, Australian and Netherlands forces there already have large numbers of American type aircraft, such as Catalina flying boats, Hudsons and Brewsters.

The emphasis on air strength was seen in big appropriations for airplanes in the United States and United States seizure of the French liner Normandie which can be converted into an aircraft carrier in a short time.

Air Raid Wardens Complete Course in Identifying Gasses

Naval Officer Also Instructs Group in How to Use Masks

Sniffing poison gas to learn the odor and drilling with gas masks became a serious business yesterday for the first class of air raid wardens to "graduate" in the District since Japan's attack on the

About 50 wardens, who soon will be teaching their own classes, gave undivided attention to Lt. Comdr. John P. Wetherill, chemical officer at the Navy Yard. Comdr. Wetherill will be remembered as the defense officer who was putting Navy Yard employes through gas mask drills at least two years ago.

Gasses Easily Liquified. Any of the gasses, it was said, are readily manufactured in liquid form, and even a five-gallon container dropped from the sky could do a lot of damage to an unprepared population.

The gasses are heavier than air, and spread along the ground with the speed and direction of the wind as they are gradually dissipated.

A general defense, it was said, is to get at least two stories above the ground. The fumes are penetrative and in any strength would seep into houses tightly closed at doors and

Children in Schools Present Unsolved Defense Problem

Dr. Ballou's Suggestion of Evacuation Supported Pending Further Study

Gathering the city's 90,000 public | 3. Danger of the children being school children in the safest places cut to pieces by flying glass is in their respective buildings in case of air raid was urged eysterday by school buildings which have exfire department officials shortly after Supt. Frank W. Ballou sent to school officials detailed instructions calling for evacuating the children

Although the decision to avacuate to the homes was reached by school authorities last month after fire department advice that at least an to see that the children did not hour's notice of an air raid would be given, Capt. C. S. Peterson, at fire headquarters, said his depart- place pre-arranged by their parents ment has completely revised its for their protection. opinion on learning that perhaps only five minutes' notice of a raid might be expected.

Declaring that Fire Chief Stephen T. Porter has written Col. Lemuel Bolles, executive director of civilian defense here, urging that the children be kept in the buildings, Capt. Peterson said the time element was responsible for the change of view. "We don't want to turn loose thousands of children in the streets in an air raid," he observed. Ballou Playing Safe.

Asked yesterday which practice would be followed, Col. Bolles said all plans are subject to revision for the present the instructions issued yesterday by Dr. Ballou would be followed. Col. Bolles minimized the point asserting that teachers will have plenty of work ahead of them in carrying out the orders of Dr. Ballou up to the point where the children either leave or remain in their school buildings. "The fact that instructions which go out may subsequently be revised is no reflection on the wisdom of the people who prepared those instructions," he declared. "Dr. Ballou is not overlooking any bets." School officials readily admitted there was debate as to the advisability of moving children out, but indicated they were sticking to the original plan until otherwise advised by the civilian defense office, to which their plan has been submitted for approval. Dispersion Called Best.

Their position bluntly was that dispersion is still the better procedure from the point of view of reducing casualties because:

1. Experience indicates many frantic parents would descend on the schools in cars in case of emer gency, wanting to take the youngsters home and in so doing heighten the confusion and congestion of personnel. 2. The children are apt to be-come panicky if crowded in the clared. A special emergency com-Four-fifths of the cashew nuts out for home, despite the teachers, ing suggestions for air raid protec-

Alice Marble Warns Women Fitness Is Vital in War Work

Those Underweight and Tired Do No Good for Defense, She Says

By SHEILAH GRAHAM. Correspondent of The Star and North American Newspaper Alliance.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13 .- "What can I do to help?" From every corner of the United States women are asking this patriotic question. A reply that can be followed by all, men as well as women, comes from Alice Marble, tennis champ and assistant director of physical fitness in the Office of Civilian Defense.

"It is no longer a question of sell-ing physical fitness for a mythical emergency," says Miss Marble. "The time is now for women to get strong physically and mentally so thay can be of real help in winning this war. Women who come staggering on high heels into the different volunteer services, women who want to help but are underweight and tired and hysterical are a drag in the wheels of defense. They must first get 100 per cent strong before their willingness to do their share in this crisis can be of value."

Miss Marble is leaving tonight on a tour of the nine regions into which this country has been divided for military and civilian defense operations. Before Christmas she will visit Columbus, Chicago, Omaha and San Francisco and meet the Mayors and educational leaders of those cities to put into speedy action plans to raise the standard of health in this country.

Morale Important Factor. "Morale," says Miss Marble, "is a word I don't like using very much, but morale—which means calmness, good spirits and strong resolve, is an enormous part of winning any war. And all three depend primarily on how you feel physically."

The first thing every woman who wants to help should do, according to Miss Marble, is to have a physical examination from her doctor.

"She should have her feet checked-women at war have to do a lot of standing-and besides there will probably be a shortage of gasoline for civilian use which will mean she will have to walk more," she said. "Women should also have their eyes and teeth checked. Weak eyes and bad teeth were responsible for most of the rejections of men for the draft. "It would also be a good idea for women to learn what their proper weight should be for good health. They mustn't lose weight now through foolish diets. Those in civil cefense may have to stay up until A and 5 in the morning and we don't ant undernourished women droopig all over the place and getting in

Talks Given at Colleges. The youth group of the physical ness section of the O. C. D. draws nost of its recruits from schools and olleges. Miss Marble recently talked on her subject at Vassar,

Smith, Wellesley and Holyoke. "They were all very enthusiastic and lots of them wanted to quit college and work with us on a fulltime basis, but we can use them part time—if they give us an hour a day we can employ them as teachers for other groups of girls," Miss Marble said.

The Marble program originally had confined itself to the promotion of walking for health and gentle

"But that program died on Sunday when Japan attacked," Miss Marble said. "As Mrs. Roosevelt explained at our weekly meeting in Washington last Monday, we are no onger working on a short scale, we must do things in a hurry. The resident suggested to Mrs. Rooseelt that our best way now is to get very one to exercise in large groups. e must regiment them and I think e can, now that they are in a recaptive mood for our program of Lealth.

Army Drills Planned.

"We don't have to coddle women any more. They now are looking at life the hard way. Our plan is to put them through a regular Army drill. We will require large auditoriums, gymnasiums, large school buildings and any place where groups can be exercised. Large offices and stores can co-operate by allowing 10 minutes after work and a big room where employes can be put through the drill and be supervised by one of our teachers."

Also present at the drills can be A. R. P. wardens and other officers for civilian defense so that with the calisthenics women also can be taught what to do during air raids. "With enemy planes over San Francisco," says Miss Marble, "it is feasible to be prepared for them anywhere in the country. It is not enough to warn people to keep calm and lie flat on their stomachs. They must be trained for air-raid be-havior."

As in England, Miss Marble believes that women here will soon be asked to take on men's jobs. "The younger men will be in the armed forces and the country will require women in the factories and in the fields," she says. "Women will be doing the hard jobs, and that is only possible with good health."

As for the future of tennis and other sports, Miss Marble hopes they will continue as much as possible—"but all athletes in a position to help in the war effort should do so. Now, it's our country first, private aims second."

History of Indians Shows That Culture Survives Conquest

Hitler Can Never Wipe Out Traditions of Beaten Peoples, Say Scientists

UKIAH, Calif., Dec. 13.-The life of the Indians in this community test-tube of American civilization is convincing social scientists that the Germans never will be able to wipe out the cultures of the peoples they are conquering.

There now are less than 1,000 of these Indians left in Ukiah. They are members of the Pomo tribe, the best Indian basketmakers.

Once the exclusive, dominant inhabitants of the region, these Indians were figuratively overwhelmed, as the United States grew by other racial groups—white Americans, Chinese, Filipinos, Russians, Mexicans and Italians.

This mixture has given the community a new amalgamated culture of its own. The old Pomo culture no longer exists as a complete way of life for the Indians, but they still retain much of it piecemeal.

Corroborates Theory. This outstanding case history, the sociologists say, corroborates the theory that a dominant culture cannot wipe out a subordinate one, but necessarily absorbs it, and in absorbing it, is itself shaped by the original culture of the region.

This unusual example is one of the reasons Ukiah is being made into a unique permanent laboratory for scientists puzzling out the whys and wherefores of human beings.

A small community of 8,000 people in a valley 100 miles north of San Francisco, it was selected because it is a fine cross-section of American civilization which has developed relatively independent of other com-

It was "discovered" in 1934 by Dr. Burt Aginsky, New York University anthropologist. The first laboratory group to study the community was begun in 1938. Work now is under way to make it a permanent laboratory where scientists of all kinds can come for a convenient sample of the United States, past and pres-

Peaceful Tribe. Most of the study up to now has been on the Pomos and their relationship with the other racial groups that moved in on them. The Pomas are a distinctive tribe. Peaceful by nature, different groups of Pomos used to have periodic battles just to get rid of their excess energy.

They would line up opposite each other and start shooting arrows. As soon as somebody got hit, the battle was stopped. Nobody won.

Although some of their baskets are worth hundreds of dollars, and the Redwood Highway runs right through Ukiah, no one seen a Pomo trying to sell a basket to a tourist.

Women Led Men.

Pomo women have never been drudges, as women were in some of the warlike plains tribes, but in some community activities led the men. Pomos once were afraid to go anywhere in the dark because of ghosts. Deep religious convictions and the supernatural played a big part in Pomo life. Doctors had to practice a lifetime to become real experts, and "ghost singers" saved tribal clients from human and superhuman "poisoners."

The Pomos made money from strings of sea-shells, tribal bankers attained great prestige, and some men became big gamblers. The scientists found that the prevailing attitude among the white members of the community was that the Indians were lazy and worthless. The Indians in turn consider that the whites stole their heritage. However, there has never been open violence between them.

White and Indian children used to go to different schools. A court decision changed that. Now they study and play together and become Social Anomaly.

Social scientists have been interested by the results of the conflict between the Pomo culture and the culture of the white race. Their * present culture apparently is inconsistent with both the white and aboriginal cultures, something of a social anomaly. The past is linked vividly with the present in this little communityfor there are both Indians and whites who remember the Pomos' first contact with the white man. The oldest Pomo still can remember the ways of his forebears and some even now can recall childhood stories of cruelties by the Spanish conquistadores and doings of the padres. Large vineyards and orchards, wineries and canneries combine to make Ukiah both agricultural and industrial, a little world largely selfcontained economically, politically and socially.

The social scientists are curious to know how this strange community developed through the years and how the blending of the races shaped the people's unique culture. They believe the answers may point a lesson to the rest of the world . . . that no culture can be obliterated even by conquest.

I. C. C. Will Study Rail Rate Increase Plea Tomorrow

10 Pct. Boost Sought In Passenger and Freight Schedules

The Nation's railroads asked permission yesterday to increase freight and passenger rates to bring in an estimated $356,956,000 annually, telling the Interstate Commerce Comincreases and other causes.

The carriers asked the commission to act "promptly," and Chairman Joseph B. Eastman told re- Ayr Hill Club Plans porters the commission would meet tomorrow to consider procedure. He refused, however, to predict how long it might be before the commission made its decision, but other informed sources called three to four months a reasonable guess.

Leon Henderson, price control administrator, already has announced his opposition to higher rates, contending the railroads should pay their increased costs out of earnings. 10 Per Cent Increase Sought. Generally the carriers petitioned to increase freight and passenger rates by 10 per cent. In addition to revenues needed to meet the wage increase, the railroads said they needed additional funds to make readjustments in the wages of employes not covered by the wage award of the special mediaoperating costs "running into many millions of dollars" as the result of measures being undertaken upon He said the copper conference recommendation of the War Department to safeguard properties bers of military or naval forces traveling on furlough. There would be no increase in the extra fare charged on some trains.

2. Increase of 10 per cent in all freight rates except those on anthracite and bituminous coal, coke and iron ore.

In the case of anthracite and bituminous coal, the railroads proposed an increase of 5 cents in rates stated on a net ton basis and 6 cents where stated on a gross ton basis, except that rates from all origins to points west of Chicago and Milwaukee would be increased as follows:

Rates of 75 cents and less, an increase of 3 cents; rates from 76 cents to $1, an increase of 5 cents; rates over $1, an increase of 10 cents. 3. An increase of 10 per cent in all mission that additional revenue was accessorial charges except in demurneeded to meet higher operating rage, dockage, tippling or tollage costs resulting from recent wage charges or in charges for protective service against heat or cold.

Army and Governor Ask Rose Bowl Heads To Call Off Grid Game

Olson Expresses Hope Example Will Halt East-West Contest

By the Associated Press. SACRAMENTO, Calif., Dec. 13-Gov. Culbert L. Olson telegraphed that Japan must be prepared for Pasadena authorities tonight, for- long war and all the hardships that warding a request of the Army that go with it. He painted Japan's cause the Pasadena Tournament of Roses as one of "self-defense" and rightand the Rose Bowl game between eousness." Duke University and Oregon State College on New Year Day be cancelled.

Dave Foutz, secretary to the hardship," the Premier said. Governor, said the Governor telegraphed Pasadena's city directors Withdrawal From Kowloon that Lt. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commander of the 4th Army, believed Possible, British Say the tournament and the football game should be called off "for reaprotection."

Pasadena officials, called at once. Indicated they would comply with the request.

Hopes for Precedent. Gov. Olson expressed the belief for other scheduled holiday season football games on the West Coast. This would mean probable cancellation of the East-West game in Kowloon had fallen.

San Francisco New Year Day, the Governor said. Advised of the situation, Henry of the Shrine, said in San Francisco that no one had asked to have the East-West game called off.

"If such a request is received, we'll of course turn it over immediately to the committe in charge of the game," Mr. Boyen stated. Ninety per cent of the 60,000 East-West game seats already have been naval base, was said to be under an incessant rain of Japanese bombs (There was no direct word from Hong Kong, but London admitted the possibility that the colonial defense forces might have fallen back to prearranged positions.)

The Japanese now say the Arizona was sunk in the initial onslaught at Pearl Harbor last Sunday, along with the battleships Oklahoma and West Virginia. It took them nearly a week to claim the Arizona.

(It is familiar Axis practice to make extravagant claims of sea successes in the hope of learning the true results of attacks through reaction on the other side. The United States has acknowledged that a battleship capsized and a destroyer blew up in the Pearl Harbor assault.)

Breakdown of Claims. The Japanese now list in their tabulation of 140,000 tons five battleships, one submarine, three smaller surface vessels and two other ships sunk; an aircraft carrier probably sunk and four battleships, four cruisers, a submarine and 10 smaller craft damaged.

(Obviously the Japanese were crossed up in their figures since the battle cruiser Repulse, 32,-000 tons, and the battleship Prince of Wales, 35,000 tons, known to have been sunk, plus the West Virginia, 31,800, the Arizona, 32,-600, and the Oklahoma, 29,000, all claimed by Tokio, have a total tonnage of 160,400. What the other ships claimed might total is problematical.)

Premier Gen. Hideki Tojo himself cautioned Japanese against overoptimism based on Japan's early successes. He told a public rally

Attacking Hong Kong

CHUNGKING, China, Dec. 13 (4) -Chinese planes and troops moved today against the rear of the Japanese forces attacking Hong Kong in what promised to be a full-scale offensive aimed at recapturing occupied Chinese territory and relieving the pressure on the British.

(The British radio reported that outside Hong Kong crack Chinese troops have attacked Japanese forces around the Conton-Kowloon railway, N. B. C. said. The broadcast said violent engagements are in progress with Chinese demolition squads blowing up bridges and telephone lines in the Japanese rear.)

Bill to Permit U. S. Buildings In Nearby Areas

Action Expected Tomorrow on $25,000,000 Fund

New Federal office buildings to be erected with $25,000,000 provided in the third supplemental national defense appropriation bill can be located in nearby Maryland and Virginia as well as in the District under an agreement reached yesterday by House and Senate con-

As the measure passed the Senate Friday, it authorized erection of some of the buildings on the Soldiers' Home reservation and di-rected that all of the others also be built in the District. The joint conference committee at the insistence of the House members, however, agreed to allow some of the buildings to be located near the District either in Maryland or Vir-

In addition to approving $25,000,-000 for additional Federal office buildings, the conferees left intact in the bill items totaling in excess of $2,000,000 for emergency items in Washington. These include $1,-911,000 as the District's share of Federal-aid highway improvements, most of which is for removing traffic bottlenecks approachnig the Potomac River bridges, $130,000 toward completion of a 20,000,000-gallon covered reservoir near the McMillan Park filteration plant, $22,570 to administer the District's new rent control law and $7,700 to enforce the new industrial safety law.

Action Likely Tomorrow. The conference agreement on the bill which appropriates a total of about $10,500,000,000, is expected to be acted on tomorrow in both House and Senate. The House will consider it first, according to Chairman Cannon of the Appropriations Committee.

Testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee indicated that the new Federal office buildings would be both temporary and semi-permanent in character and designed to accommodate at least 25,000 defense workers. Construction, it was said, could be completed in from 45 to 60 days.

W. E. Reynolds, commissioner of public buildings, said the new buildings should be segregated from the downtown area for these rea-

"First, there is growing congestion of traffic in the downtown area and, secondly, it is subject to attack if the City of Washington is attacked by hostile forces. My thought has been that we might acquire some lands in the Northwest, Northeast and Southeast portions of Washington and the environs."

Rental Element. Mr. Reynolds described as "aning picture the apartment buildings rented by the Government for office purposes.

"We rented the Dupont Circle Building, which you probably heard something about," he declared. "I live out at the Westchester and I have even been asked when we are taking over the Westchester. However, we would like to get one or two of these apartments back for the use for which they were designed. They are not good as a rule for office buildings inasmuch as they are not designed for office pur-

Highway Projects. The projects that will be undertaken with the $1,911,000 for highway work follow 1. Grade separation at Fourteenth street and Maine avenue and a low level bridge across the Tidal Basin. 2. Elevated highway on K street from Rock Creek Parkway with connections to Key Bridge.

3. Extension of Independence avenue west of Fourteenth street to connect with Memorial Bridge.

4. Widening of Twenty-third street from Pennsylvania avenue to Constitution avenue.

Maas, Back From Britain, To Talk at Silver Spring

Representative Maas, Republican, of Minnesota, a member of the House Naval Affairs Committee, will speak on national defense at 8 p.m. tomorrow in Grace Church Parish of the Men's Club of Grace Church. Mr. Maas, a Marine Corps flyer in the World War, is now a colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve. He was a member of a party of House members who returned last week from a visit to England. On the return trip, the party found it necessary to fly first to Africa and then come across the South Atlantic to Brazil and thence to New York.

At that time Donald M. Nelson executive director of S. P. A. The nature of this program was well defined in Friday's an-

Defense officials pointed out yeserday no one cay say what steps may be necessary to cope with future problems in the building industry, but that at present no further restrictions are under consideration.

The new program for the Washington area calls for erection of 22,000 homes and apartments and 1,500 dormitory units by next July 1, and represents the most gigantic undertaking in the history of District building.

Private industry will be responsible for erection of 10,000 homes for workers earning generally above $2,200 annually, at shelter rents ranging from $35 to $50. In addition, if private builders demonstrate their ability to complete this share of the program they will be permitted to undertake the construction of part of the 7,500 apartments allotted to Defense Homes Corp. under the program. About 4,500 low-cost units also are included in the program for families in the $900 to $2,200 annual income bracket, at shelter rents below $35. These are proposed to be erected with funds appropriated under the Lanham Act now pending in Congress The dormitory units will be designed for single persons earning from $1,060 to $1,800 annually. Program Based on Survey.

The program is based on a defense housing survey which anticipates the arrival in Washington by next July 1 of 30,000 families and 37,500 individuals, or nearly 100,-000 persons, as a result of the war

Officials pointed out the new proram is geared to cope with housing needs only through July 1, indicating defense housing authorities anticipate the necessity of mushrooming the program later. Decision to make permanent the structures to be erected under the program apparently was based on the assumption that the over-all population of the District area will remain stable after the emergency.

O. P. M. Ruling Blocks Permanent Projects In War Crisis

Temporary buildings may be ected to meet a shortage of hospital facilities in Washington as a result of an Office of Production Management ruling that priority ratings would not be granted for materials for permanent hospital construction

The District Commissioners have been notified by O. P. M. not to hope for favorable action on requests for priority status in the case of permanent hospital projects, but they would not be blocked from undertaking temporary expansion, it was learned last night.

Attention was focused on the hospital situation yesterday with presentation to the Commissioners and private, non-profit hospitals of a long-range building program encompassing a $9,210,000 immediate project and $11,960,000 in deferred construction in the Metropolitan Area. The program, submitted by Health Security Administration, a Community Chest agency, declared there now is a shortage of 2,000 beds.

Mason Expresses Views. Commissioner Guy Mason said last night he had received the 40-page H. S. A. survey but had not had time to study it carefully. He expressed interest in the long-range aspect of the program but pointed out that "we're dealing now only with an emergency. We favor a movement to build additions to hospitals, but not construction which old structures now, or the diminution of a single hospital bed." Since private hospitals probably for construction intended to be only temporary, it might be advisable to ask Congress for outright grants to cover cost of emergency expansion, he suggested. The Commissioners already have taken steps to meet increasing demands on Washington hospitals, Mr. Mason added. Georgetown University is being expanded by addition of an old school building

Action Likely Tomorrow. The conference agreement on the bill which appropriates a total of about $10,500,000,000, is expected to be acted on tomorrow in both House and Senate. The House will consider it first, according to Chairman Cannon of the Appropriations Committee.

Testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee indicated that the new Federal office buildings would be both temporary and semi-permanent in character and 25,000 defense workers. Construction, it was said, could be completed in from 45 to 60 days.

Democracies' Union Advocated by Streit As Key to Victory

America Facing 'Toughest Problem in History,' He Tells Meeting

Warning that the United States faces "the toughest problem in our history." Clarence K. Streit urged last night an immediate federal union of the surviving democracies as the most effective means of defeating the Axis. In addressing a Citizens of the World rally at the Friends Meeting House he pointed out that the alliance between Germany, Japan and Italy is the first ever directed against the United States. "If there was ever a time to unite the democracies, that time is now," he said. Last night's meeting was arranged by the Citizens of the World, whose membership includes a number of students who have escaped from European countries conquered by the Nazis. O. E. Fang of the Washington Association for Union Now presided. Miss Susan Cornelia Jones, president of the Citizens of the World, introduced Mr. Streit. In meeting the threat of the heavily armed Axis powers, the democracies have a choice of two alternatives, an alliance or a union. Mr Streit declared. Britain and France he pointed out, in their war against the Nazis, chose an alliance. "At the first test the whole structure went down like a pack of cards,'

Cites Britain and France.

Before the collapse of her ally, Great Britain offered France a federal union, which was rejected, he continued. He expressed the view that if Britain and France had toined in a federal union early enough Italy would not have entered the war and the two countries would thus have been enormously strengthened.

In the light of the fall of France and other European victims of Axis aggression, the remaining democracies should now join to form a Federal union, Mr. Streit asserted.

"No ocean, no Gestapo, no Maginot line" can keep ideas from the world, he said. By offering to the Germans, Italians and the oppressed peoples of Europe the opportunity to join later a "United States of World," enjoying equal rights and equal freedom with other nations, the democracies have available "a lever to destroy the Axis from within," Mr. Streit asserted. For such a vista would effectively answer the arguments of Hitler and other war lords to their peoples that "if we don't win now, we are sunk." Millions of lives would thereby be saved, he predicted.

Missed Opportunity.

At the end of the first World War the United States had a fine opportunity to make the world safe for democracy on the principles on which our Federal Union is based. but we failed to take advantage of There is still time to end the chapter more heroically than we began it, with the American ideal of freedom through union" he added. Stressing the need for immediate action, he proposed, as the initial step, that either Congress or the American people ask the President to formulate an emergency program for the union of the democracies

It is now perfectly clear that the loss of the British battleship Prince of Wales and battle cruiser Repulse was directly due to the lack of fighter planes to protect these ships against attack by Japanese bombers. It is to be noted that the Japanese bombers in the attack on the two British ships could not be given a fighter escort because they were outside the radius of action of their own fighters.

The same thing applies to the Japanese ships and bombing aircraft engaged in attacking Luzon. Formosa, the nearest point from which Japanese fighters can be operated, is 600 miles away. Faith in Santa Claus Confirmed for 125 Needy Children

Mariorie Webster Schools Hold Annual Party For Underprivileged

There are 125 under-privileged children in Washington today who have reasons to believe everything they ever heard or read about fairy Godmothers who do good turns for deserving little boys and girls when they need help most.

For their faith in fairies and in Santa Claus, too, was confirmed Among 6 Commended last night under unusual circumstances at a Christmas party given for them by girls of the Marjorie At Naval Academy Webster Schools. Just like the tattered boys and girls in the fairy stories, they were transformed from rags to fine raiment in almost the

for the night. Greeted by Santa Claus.

From the mission, the children were taken to the school at 7775 Seventeenth street N.W. in buses donated for the occasion. At the door they were greeted by a cheery Santa Claus in the person of Miss Lulu Orr, a senior. Mrs. John S. Bennett, superintendent of the mission, had carefully given each of the girls in advance the name and requirements of a child.

Before the party in the gymnasfum began, the girls took their young charges in hand and in no time at all the youngsters were outfitted from head to toes in brandnew suits, dresses, hats and shoes. They could hardly believe the magic transformation until they saw themselves in the mirrors.

Victory Over Axis 'Barbarians' Seen by Malcolm MacDonald

Welfare Group Hears Address by Ex-Premier's Son

Expressing "horror" at the "treacherous attack by Japan on America," Malcolm MacDonald, High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Canada, last night predicted victory for forces fighting the Axis "barbarians."

The former Minister of Health in Great Britain greeted his audience at the American Public Welfare Association banquet at the Mayflower Hotel as "friends and allies."

"I sympathize with you." he said referring to the United States' recent entry into the war alongside Great Britain. "I sympathize with the agony you will pass through. Though there will be agony of body, there is no reason for agony of

Son of Former Premier.

Mr. MacDonald, son of Ramsay MacDonald, former Prime Minister of England, presented a vivid picture of the activities of the Ministry of Health in helping to fight the war against the Axis. He outlined its work of repairing bombed homes, mending broken water mains, burying the civilian dead, organizing hospital service, evacuating children and many other duties.

"And," he added, "you may be doing many similar things before the war is over.'

Experts had overestimated the number of hospital beds needed, Mr. changes taking place in England MacDonald said, but had badly particularly to the transformation underestimated the amount of food of many "lovely country mansions and rest shelters needed for civil- and ancient gracious manor houses" ians routed out of their homes by of rural England into nursery

Vice President Wallace will arrive at Gunston Hall, the Mason estate in Fairfax County, Va., where he will lay a wreath on the Revolutionary leader's tomb. Gov. Price will receive him and other high officials who have been invited, including the District Commissioners, and will then deliver an address. Veterans of United States wars, patriotic orders, civic associations and William L. Clemens, chairman of Women's football teams are playother groups have been asked to attend in a body.

Thousands of Ceremonies. Other notable exercises will be held at Faneuil Hall, Boston, and at Mount Vernon, N. Y., at the tomb of John Peter Zenger, the editor whose trial established the freedom of the press.

Thousands of local ceremonies will be held in schools, libraries and other institutions with the aid and sponsorship of local defense councils and the Citizenship Educational Service, an organization representing a broad cross-section of the nation's civic, fraternal and religious

In a statement yesterday. Senator Byrd, Democrat, of Virginia, urged all Virginians to honor the memory of Mason. He said:

"At no time in our history has it been so imperative for Americans to rededicate themselves to the Bill of Rights and I hope that every Virginian will honor George Mason, father of that historic document, onthe 150th anniversary of its ratification by their State.

Officials of the Northern Virginia Regional Defense Council, sponsoring the afternoon ceremony, said State police had arranged to handle traffic for the Gunston Hall ceremony. The Mason estate is about three miles east of highway No. 1 approximately 15 miles south of

HEALTH and ACCIDENT MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

We have just received word from our Board of Control, stating that all civilians carrying our Health and Accident contracts will have full and complete coverage during bombings, within continental limits of the United States. Ordinarily, such contracts carry a clause in which the assured is not protected against accidents such as bombings in time of war or any act of war. To the best of our knowledge, our association—the largest of its kind in the world, having paid over $85,000,000 in claims—is the only company to offer this protection, and we are proud to be the first to advise the general public of this

If YOU want this protection, now being offered by this 32-year-old organization, with millions of dollars in assets for payment of future claims, don't delay—contact us NOW, before catastrophe strikes, while there is yet time to take advantage of this liberal protection!

Youthful Chilean to Lend Authenticity to School Program

The broadcast by Alice Deal Junior High School at 2 p.m. tomorrow will have more than one authentic touch to it. Among the cast of the Deal students presenting the fifth program in the junior high series. "The Americas." will be a small youngster whose background is as Latin American as a flesta.

school friends will testify His part in tomorrow's dramatization on our oil-producing good neighbor, Colombia, is that of a jungle guide assisting agents of a North American firm to lay a pipe line from the Colombian interior to the sea coast.

The Deal School's young thespians, in fact, have a gripping sort of show for the half-hour broadcast, including attacks by Indians, an oil well fire and a plane crash. The story centers exclusively on the importance of the nation as producer of some of the best grade "black gold" in the world.

Miss Beverly N. Newton and Mrs. Claire S. Baum have prepared the program which will include such music as the Colombian national anthem and the series' theme music, "The Pan-American Hymn," sung by a school chorus.

"The Americas" is sponsored by The Star and the Junior High School Radio Committee, with the assistance of the National Broadcasting Co. For reference work a map of Colombia drafted by the National Geographic Society and published in The Star of last Friday is recommended.

Soviet Envoy Says Red Army Will Destroy German Invaders; Sees Russia in Full Accord With U. S. and Britain

handed by Maxim Litvinoff, Sov-

Here is the text of a statement iet Ambassador, to reporters at a press conference yesterday.

I am happy to greet within the walls of my Embassy the representative of the American press. I hope there will be many opportunities for further meetings in happier circumstances than today's. I left the Soviet Union precisely a month ago. During that short period important events have taken place, bringing in their train new problems, for the true understanding of which it may be useful to look back upon the history of the past six months. I will dwell upon this history as briefly as possible.

As you know, Hitler, having completed his campaign in the west, and then in the Balkans and on the Isle of Crete, and having taken up a defensive position in Libya, turned to the next item of aggression on his program, the object this time being the Soviet Union.

My government did receive warnings as to the treacherous intentions of Hitler with regard to the Soviet Union, but it did not take them seriously, and this not because it believed in the sacredness of Hitler's signature, or did not believe him capable of violating the treaties he signed and the oft-repeated solemn promises he made, but because it considered that it would have been madness on his part to undertake war in the east against such a powerful land as ours before finishing off his war in the west.

Hitler's Errors Cited. The easy victories he scored all over Europe lent wings to his madness, on which he is soaring toward his doom. But, though there was method in his madness, his plans were based upon a series of miscalculations, both as to our military strength and the morale within the country. The only thing that went according to plan was the advantage of keeping the initiative in his hands, the advantage of surprise.

Attack without the slightest warning and before declaring war, even sometimes under cover of diplomatic negotiations-such is the contribution of the Axis powers, the founders of the so-called new order, to the rules for intercourse between nations, their contribution to international life. Such tactics certainly give the attacking side considerable advantage at the start, and insure it easy victories.

few days ago, experienced on their own back what this means. Hitler did the same thing, when before declaring war he attacked almost all our airports and military bases just behind the frontiers. In this way he was able to destroy in a flash a very considerable quantity of our airplanes and tanks and, to a certain extent, throw into confusion our troops, taken as they were unawares tion of war.

It must, moreover, be added that, despite all that has been said, up till then, of the vast growth of German armed forces, this was underestimated by the whole world.

Nazi Army's Size Underestimated. Germany's war machine, as it now appears, considerably surpasses the highest estimates in the number of airplanes, tanks and other deadly weapons, and the whole of this monstrous machine was launched against the Soviet Union before we are able to get properly prepared for such for a long time to press back our and to penetrate deeply into our country

But these achievements cost Hitperate resistance, fighting to the last man over every ridge and streamlet, every hamlet, every town, every yard of earth and inflicting of the game, that our troops do Eastern front. not surrender when they ought to Hitler could easily recover from according to the book. moment's respite Despite this, and at the price of stupendous sacrifices, the Nazi troops have managed to occupy a considerable portion of Soviet territory, several big cities and not a few important industrial centers. But if Hitler counted on finding in them anything of value for the replenishment of his much-depleted supplies, he was greatly mistaken. Everything that his troops were in need of, the very machinery from the plants, has either been destroyed or removed. Hitler Made Good Losses. A situation nevertheless arose in which Hitler, with the whole powerful industry of Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Belgium, France and other occupied countries, untouched and at his disposal, was able with impunity to make good his losses of military materiel, while this became increasingly difficult for us, owing to the evacuation of industrial centers. Hitler makes good his losses in man power by drawing upon the youngest and oldest classes, and upon his armies of occupation in France, Belgium and elsewhere. Thus, for five and a half months, the Red Army has had to endure, without outside aid, the full pressure of the powerful military machine of Hitler's Germany, with its mighty reserves and resources, for during this period Hitler did not have to fight anywhere else. His dream of war on only one front had come true. We, naturally, would have welcomed the creation, somewhere in Europe, of a second front, which would have drawn away some of Hitler's forces and given us a moment's respite, enabling us to do a certain amount of regrouping of our own forces in order to pass to the offensive. We never complained, however, never made any demands upon our ally, England, that she should create such a front, but took into consideration her assurances as to the impossibility, difficulty or prematureness of invasion of the con-

There can be no doubt that the Germans in their scramble for territory, their hasty grasping at and without the slightest expecta- fortified towns, have lost their best military units, and have had to fill up the breaches with those of in-

The determined defense of the Red Army caused an atmosphere of hopeessness and apathy among the attackers, breaking down their belief in a rapid victory. This atmosphere was in its turn thickened by the German Army's reaction to Hitler's boastful and unfulfilled promises. Nazis' Morale Shaken.

Here we are confronted, beyond all doubt, by a considerable lowering an attack and to mobolize our own of the morale of Hitler's armies, if forces. As a result Hitler managed not by their complete demoralization. I am not inclined to believe troops, to force them into retreat that Hitler has during the last week or two transferred any troops from the Russian to any other front (existing or newly created). However this may be, the Soviet high command has no intention of falling in with this "plan" nor of allowing Hitler to hibernate. Founder Says U. S. Should Ask Release Of Eagle Squadron

Experienced Pilots Will Shortly Be Needed As Replacements

By BLAIR BOLLES. The American Government should ask England to release the flyers of the Eagle Squadron for American military aviation service in the Orient at once, Col. Charles Sweeny, organizer of the squadron, said here last night.

The Eagle Squadron is a unit of the Royal Air Force composed of American flyers. Official comment of the course Washington would take about getting the Americans in the Royal Air Force transferred to our Army Air Corps is unavailable as yet, but unofficially it was expected the administration would make the request of London.

The story from Manila of the heroic death of Capt. Colin Kelly, U. S. A., in the bombing of the Japanese ship Haruna has driven home the fact that the war in the Far East will take its toll of American flyers and that replacementsespecially men experienced in combat like the Eagle Squadron boysare vitally needed.

May Have Been Own Bomb.

The War Department had nothing to add about Capt. Kelly's death beyond the brief report from Gen. Douglas MacArthur relating that he died after dropping three bombs on the Haruna-but veteran air fighters here thought that he died a victim of one of his own bombs.

It is believed that he sent the Haruna down by a dive bombing attack and that he was so close to the Japanese battleship when his third bomb exploded that it meant amen for Kelly as well as for the

Col. Sweeny, an old hand at foreign fighting, organized another American air fighting unit in 1925 -for the French Army fighting in the Riff War in Morocco.

The Eagle Squadron flyers are American citizens, even though they belong to the Royal Air Force because they do not take the oath of allegiance to the British government. It has been flying as a squadron since last April, although Americans were fighting for the R. A. F. many months before then.

Indicating the broad experience of the Eagle flyers, Flight Comdr. C. G. Peterson, a Utah boy, recently disclosed in a statement made public here that between April and November he took part in 50 offensive flights from England over the European continent against the

Italian Plane Quits Brazil Without German Courier

RECIFE, Brazil, Dec. 13.-An Itallan Lati Line plane took off for Europe from Natal today, but a German diplomatic courier who was to have been aboard failed to arrive by German Condor plane from Maceio until 10 a.m., several hours after the Italian plane left.

A Lati plane from Europe is expected to arrive at Natal this afternoon at 3:30 p.m. The Standard Oil Co. stopped supplying gasoline to the Condor company today and shut off gasoline supplies to the Lati line Thursday under instructions from the American Embassy.

Saying he hoped to have the complete details of the buildings defense organization worked out by Wednesday, Mr. Lusk predicted breakdown of the District into three or four "areas" based on the concentration of buildings.

These areas, in turn, probably will be redivided into the same number of "divisions," with wardens in each reporting directly to him,

Pacific Becomes Grim Battleground as Far East Crisis Flares Into War

Japan Called Sure Loser

But U. S. Realizes War Will Not Be Any 'Picnic'

By Constantine Brown.

the United States with a well-prepared raid on its possessions in the Pacific. Hidden behind the smoke screen of diplomatic protestations of good will and friendship, their aircraft swept over Hawaii and loosed their bombs, inflicting losses on the American Army, Navy and

The war in the Pacific resembles a horse race in which a plug, ridden by a ruthless jockey, takes the lead against a thoroughbred. In a sprint the plug might have a chance, but in a long race he is found to trail badly, if he finishes

Japan is the plug and Herr Hitler the lockey. Hitler has dug his spurs deeply into Nippon's flank and started her a jump ahead of the United States. Then, in fulfillment of his tripartite pact, he has brought Germany and Italy formally into the fray. Suicidal Aggression.

Japan attacked the United States because the military leaders who control the destiny of that unfortunate country were terrified at the prospect of losing their grip. They plunged into a suicidal aggression because they feared that thinkers among Japanese politicians might take advantage of the country's distressed economic situation to wrest power from them and come to terms with the United States.

The raid on American possessions in the Pacific had many humiliating aspects. The Japanese performed their task without meeting the withering fire which our coastal batteries, the warships based at Pearl Harbor and our pursuit and interceptor planes could have unleased against them.

Japanese war plans apparently are made in Berlin. The raid on Hawaii and the other American possessions was aimed not only at military objects, but was intended to create panic among Americans, which, it was hoped, would compel the United States to concentrate

In this manner, Berlin may have figured that our help to Russia and Great Britain would be reduced to a minimum at a time when the German dictator desires to strike a fatal blow at the British Empire. Only by engaging the United States heavily in the Pacific and creating a sense of insecurity in the civilian population on the West Coast through a spectacular raid like that on Pearl Harbor last Sunday, could Herr Hitler hope to stop the flow of warplanes to Britain and to deprive merchantmen in the North Atlantic of the powerful protection of American men of war.

The Japanese accepted the war plans laid in Berlin and started the battle of the Pacific with every ounce of power at their disposal.

The United States entered this war only modestly prepared, with a fleet divided between the Atlantic and the Pacific, but with untold resources and reserves of man power, raw materials and perfectly-equipped factories, without which no modern war can be won.

U. S. Not Expecting "Picnic." Naval and military strategists who discussed the situation before the war actually broke out, were confident final victory would belong to the United States, but they all sounded the same warning: "This war will be no picnic. Our losses in men, material and pride are going to be heavy before we bring the little brown men to their knees."

In any event, there will be no slowing down in the flow of our artillery and tanks to that area during the next few months. The arming of merchant ships enables them to sail without convoys if they have a speed better than 10 knots. Slower ships still must be convoyed. This new system of shipping war material to Europe and Africa-part by individual vessels and part by convoywill make available for use elsewhere some naval units at present in the North

But even if this should prove impractical because of the number of submarine and air raiders in the North Atlantic, it is almost certain that most of the output of our Navy yards on the Atlantic coast will be free to reinforce the Pacific Fleet.

British Agree With U. S. Plans. Thus, the opinion of many military and naval experts in Washington is that the Brtfish, with assistance in manufactured material we send them, will be able to hold the Nazis back. The same thing may apply to the Russians. American supplies in any event could not reach the Soviet armies unless Vladivostok and the Trans-Siberian Railway were open and we could dispatch our ships without interference from the Nipponese.

The British appear to be in agreement with our basic strategy. They, too, realize that every effort must be made to break Japan's power in the Pacific.

Japan's chief problem remains raw materials. As far as these are concerned Japan is in far worse shape than her German and Italian allies. The stores of oil, gasoline and scrap steel and iron-all provided by the United States during the three and a half years of appeasement policy—are reported to be sufficient for 12 or 15 months of intensive warfare. When these are exhausted, Japan's offensive power will be wiped out, unless she is able to conquer the Netherlands

Indies. The Nipponese have staked everything

Grew in Tough Spots Before

America's Blunt-Spoken Envoy Argued Vainly

Crises are old stuff to Joseph Clark Grew, United States Ambassador to Japan. The outbreak of war was only the latest in a long series of "incidents" which have broken explosively around our blunt-spoken diplomat at Tokio.

Mr. Grew never has hesitated to talk bluntly to the biggest big shots in Japan. On October 19, 1939, speaking before the America-Japan Society, with government officials present, he proceeded to a blistering indictment of Japanese methods in the China "incident."

Last December 19, Foreign Minister Matsuoka, at a farewell party for present Japanese Ambassador to the United States, Kichisaburo Nomura, said the United States sympathy for China was 'largely sentimental." Mr. Grew popped up, and in language startling in its bluntness, told Mr. Matsuoka he was mistaken, at the very least.

Mr. Grew was Embassy Counselor and Charge d'Affaires in Vienna when the United States broke diplomatic relations with Austria in 1917. He was a veteran in the ways of diplomacy even

The Hepburn Board recommended extensive fortification of Guam in its report in 1938, declaring that the island was vital to the defense of the Philippines, Hawaii and the continental United States. Congress declined to appropriate the estimated $80,000,000 to $110,000,000 required to fortify it, however, on the ground that it might arouse Japanese anger and precipitate war in the Pacific. Last March funds finally were granted for improvement of the harbor for submarine and seaplane operations. Appropriations also were voted for development of air and naval facilities at Wake,

Civilian Gas Masks

The action of the Senate Military Affairs Committee in reporting favorably a bill to provide an ample supply of civilian gas masks, coupled with assurances that the Senate will take up this matter tomorrow, are welcome indications of a belated determination to deal effectively with this important problem.

Because gas has not been used heretofore in this conflict is no reason for complacently assuming that it will not be employed by the enemy at some stage of the fight. And we may be sure that if it is used at all the attack will be made without warning. Clearly, this is a matter in which it would be infinitely better to prepare for an attack that may not come than to risk inviting the disastrous consequences that would follow the use of gas against an unprepared civilian population.

The bill which the Senate committee acted on yesterday contemplates a supply of about 50,000,000 gas masks-one for each person within a 300-mile strip of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the Gulf of Mexico. This measure was introduced in Congress last September and at a subsequent hearing before the House Military Affairs Committee, which already has reported the bill favorably, Mayor La Guardia stated that a minimum of $100,000,-000 would be required for gas masks, fire apparatus, radio equipment and similar items necessary to an adequate civilian defense program.

Nothing more was done in Congress until after war had begun, but the Office of Civilian Defense, concerned by the fact that it knew of not a single civilian gas mask available for distribution in the United States, proceeded with preliminary preparations. These included the making of estimates of the number of masks needed in every community of more than 10.000 persons in the affected area and arranging with the Office of Production Management for the manufacture of masks as soon as money is available. It is now up to Congress to furnish the money and there should be no further delay, for, while O. P. M. already has contacted factories and is ready to start production, it will be several months at best before the requisite number of masks and the other equipment can

No less important than prompt congressional action on this matter is the imperative necessity of introducing more order and intelligent planning into the District's own civilian defense program.

Colonel Lemuel Bolles, local civilian defense director, was reported yesterday to have said that he believes we are "pulling out of the apparent confusion" in the local effort and that "we suddenly are waking up."

It is to be hoped that his estimate is correct, but it also is obvious that a great deal remains to be done before there can be any basis for satisfaction. It has not been decided yet, for example, whether children are to be kept in school or sent home in event of an air alarm, and in either event a detailed program remains to be worked out. There has as yet been no adequate program of instruction to familiarize the public with the things expected of them during blackouts. This should be carried into effect immediately. Some plans have been announced for protecting public buildings under the jurisdiction of the District government during air raids, but no comparable step has been taken in the case of commercial establishments. Yet this is another matter which should be attended to without

It is easy to understand, of course, why progress on these matters should have been slow prior to the outbreak of war. But now that the conflict has started, bringing an ever-present possibility of air attack, further muddling and confusion cannot be tolerated.

Unity in Prayer

When the historians of the future come to write about the ordeal through which America now is passing it may happen that they will be especially impressed by the solidarity of the people in their time of trial. Certainly, it has been a phenomenon vastly encouraging to many individuals during the past week. Wherever groups of citizens have met since the never-to-be-forgotten Sunday of Japan's attack upon the outposts of | the evacuation or protection of perthe United States in the Pacific sonnel in an emergency. there has been recognition of the condition of life have been eliminated by the impact of national crisis.

The power of cohesion thus achieved already has had convincing demonstration. One manifestation of it may be found in an interfaith service to be held at Washington Cathedral this afternoon. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, has sent invitations to all registered clergymen in the District of Columbia, soliciting their participation in a single act of prayer "for this Nation and the deliverance of the world." The Rev. Dr. Oscar Blackwelder, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, minister of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, it has been announced, are to share in the appeal for providential intervention.

Such unity of religious expression, of course, has nothing to do with sectarianism, nothing to do with denominational variation, nothing to do with any traditional separation of any sort. The congregation will be fundamentally American, and that is all that matters in the prevailing emergency. "A united people before God" stands forth in defense of civilization. It appeals for divine aid without regard for any circumstance save that of spiritual freedom and co-operation against organized evil and violence.

Censorship and Integrity

Censorship always has been famed for its stupidities and in a free country will undoubtedly maintain that reputation. But even the most violent critic of censorship will recognize the necessity for suppression, during the war, of any news of any kind which, if published, might bring aid to the enemy. That is the kind of censorship ordered into effect by the Government and, for the sake of the very freedoms for which we are fighting now, it should be the only kind of censorship with which our people will have to contend during the war.

Whether it remains the only kind of censorship will depend, to a large extent, upon the smoothness and success of its operation. The chief part of its operation is relatively simple, consisting of the suppression at their source-by the Government-of facts that otherwise automatically would become public property. The other part is more difficult and consists of voluntary suppression by newspapers and other organs of matter which, in their judgment, discloses information of value to the enemy. This is a difficult undertaking because of the differences of opinion as to what news is helpful to the enemy. The Government eventually may find it necessary to establish an office which will make the decision on doubtful questions.

For the time being, however, the Government is arbitrarily exercising censorship of news at the source. It is withholding all details of the Pearl Harbor incident and has gone so far as to announce the policy. without known precedent in this country, of indefinitely withholding casualty lists, except for private communications to next of kin. As the war progresses it will have the power to withhold many other matters of vital public interest on the grounds that to reveal them is to reveal military secrets.

The people will accept this censorship as long as they are confident that the facts have been suppressed for the security of the Nation. But this same censorship will breed distrust, will undermine public confidence and destroy morale the moment it is suspected of use for ulterior purposes, such as the prevention of just criticism. The corollary of censorship must be integrity that remains unquestioned and above suspicion.

Federal Raid Plans

The announcement by Federal Works Administrator Fleming that an air-raid warden organization on a twenty-four hour basis is being put into effect in Government buildings in the District and that guard and mechanical forces have been augmented provides gratifying evidence that plans had been prepared, in advance of our entrance into the war, to protect Federal buildings and employes against air attack and

Early in July, the Public Buildings Administration established a security division to work out a program for safeguarding Government buildings in the event of an attack on Washington. As explained by W. E. Reynolds, commissioner of public buildings, 1,400 building guards, who have already received special training by experts in the technique of civilian defense, will constitute the backbone of the protective organization. A staff of air-raid wardens is being recruited in each Federal agency. These will be under the direction of Charles A. Peters, building manager of the Federal Works Agency, who has been designated as deputy air-raid warden for all Government buildings in the District and Consideration also is being given to additional safety measures. Under the direction of Commissioner Reynolds, a committee has been studying for several months the structural features of individual buildings and has prepared plans for improving their protective qualities. This committee also will determine the safest places in each building under present conditions. These recommendations should facilitate the United States is in the war, the possibility of an assault on the Capital, with Federal buildings among the probable targets, cannot be ignored. The safety measures taken by the Federal Works Agency seem well devised, and should go far toward achieving their objective-the protection of Federal buildings and Government workers against an enemy attack. It may be added that these seemingly wellconsidered preparations set an example which those charged with working out the District's civilian defense plans might profitably emulate.

Hemisphere Solidarity

President Roosevelt's stirring call for hemisphere solidarity against dangers threatening all alike in the New World foreshadowed the call sent out by the State Department inviting the Latin American republics to a Pan-American meeting at Rio de Janeiro early next month. At that momentous gathering common policies against Japan and its Axis partners undoubtedly will be worked out. That will be the natural complement of the principles and policies of common defense and mutual aid laid down at the Pan-American Conference held at Havana in the fateful summer of 1940, when the German sweep across Western Europe and the collapse of France had for the first time revealed the full menace of totalitarian power.

Even before this call to Pan-American unity had been issued from Washington, the spontaneous reactions of Latin America to Japan's dastardly aggression has clearly revealed the spirit of solidarity with the United States. Nowhere in Latin America is there anything which could be classed as pro-Japanese sentiment. Everywhere, the predatory Empire of the Rising Sun is looked upon with suspicion and latent fear. Considerable numbers of Japanese are settled in parts of South America, especially in Bolivia, Peru and Brazil, but their clannishness and aggressiveness has nowhere made them liked. Even Brazil, so hospitable to agricultural immigrants to populate its vast virgin spaces and so tolerant of racial differences, has felt it imperative to restrict Japanese immigration.

It is therefore not surprising to find that a number of Latin American countries, mostly in the Caribbean and Central America, have joined up completely with the United States in the common cause by declaring war Latin American neighbor, has broken diplomatic relations with Nippon, and President Camacho, publicly declaring that Mexico is "in danger." pledged that the United States could rely on Mexican "solidarity and cooperation." Those nations which have decided to be at least technically non-belligerent, have all waived the technical requirements of full neutrality by considering the United States also a "non-belligerent" and thus entitled to the use of port facilities by our warships, together with other privileges.

Even should most Latin American countries eventually join the war against Japan, now enlarged to include Germany and Italy, their military and naval establishments will be necessarily restricted to local defense needs. Only Argentina, Brazil and Chile have navies with capital ships, and those are uniformly old. However, the Latin American countries, besides furnishing us with base facilities, will be of great assistance in the economic sphere. Bolivia can furnish us her tin to replace supplies probably interrupted from Malaya and the Dutch Indies, while Brazil may supply us with increasing quantities of rubber. Extensive experimental plantations have been established in various parts of Brazil during the last few years, while the supply of wild rubber from the Amazon valley basin remains a minor source. It is regrettable that Congress did not act on a recommendation to appropriate funds for Brazilian rubber development when the proposal was made a year or so ago. Tin and rubber by no means exhaust the list of vital raw materials which Latin America can send us to replace sources temporarily cut off by war. With all Latin America eagerly falling into line, and with our good neighbor, Canada, and the British possessions elsewhere entirely leagued with us, the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere seems assured.

Restaurant Rembrandts

A Chicago restaurateur has tackled the problem in a realistic spirit. He has officially recognized that doodling is a legitimate art, not to be suppressed. The Cost of Victory Will Be High

By Owen L. Scott.

The Army and Navy, in rough outline, have described the size of the forces that this country probably must contribute to win the present war. On the basis of that outline, the planners have engaged in heavy pencil work, and are ready with a rough approximation of the cost of the job.

Briefly, the resulting picture of the forces needed is this: An Army air force of 2,000,000 men; a land army, heavily mechanized, of just under 7,000,000 men; a Navy of 1,100,000 men, including air force; a merchant marine, to transport and to supply forces in operation, roughly twice the size of that now planned.

The cost in dollars: Approximately $150,000,000,000, with the biggest expense centered in the Army, the air force and in lend-lease aid to other armies.

These are very big and very important figures. Also, they are very far from being translated into reality. The Army and Navy base their estimate on the size of forces needed upon the premise that full offensive operations can be set under way by mid-1943. That gives barely eighteen months to create an Army and an Army air force four times the present size and to bring the equipment of the Army and air force to full strength. In the same time, the Navy must be greatly enlarged and the merchant marine must be expanded immensely.

Few of these plans, other than those of air force and Navy, touch directly upon war with Japan. The Japanese problem is considered to be one calling for air and naval action. It is not considered probable that any large American forces could be used to conduct an invasion attempt. Rather, emphasis is upon aid to the very large Chinese armies that might do far more offensive work if properly armed. This country's record of preparation for war, to date, is not impressive.

The figures suggest that emphasis has been upon appropriating money rather than upon translating appropriations into actual weapons with which to wage war. There is appropriated or about to be appropriated, a total of about $73,-000,000,000 for the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission and other defense agencies. That is approximately half of the amount that is considered by the Army and Navy to be sufficient to do the job.

But of this amount, barely half has even been contracted for and less than $15,000,000,000-or one-fifth of the money available and one-tenth of that regarded as necessary-has actually been spent. This is the record after 18 months of effort. It means that the United States with an industry nearly five times as great as that of England and at least twice the size of Germany's has been making a war effort smaller than that of against Japan. Mexico, our nearest England and far smaller than that of authorization, displays in his office a flag Germany.

In fact, the United States during the past year and a half has devoted itself to talking a great armament effort while struggling in every way to maintain business as usual. Now that the shooting is started, the country will wish that its attitude had been different.

But that is water over the dam. The job ahead is perfectly immense and one that is going to demand many sacrifices on the part of civilians, as well as of soldiers and sailors and flyers.

First of all, it is going to be necessary to speed the production of arms.

It does no good to vote appropriations of dollars and then to sit back and take it for granted that those dollars already are guns and airplanes and other weapons. Congress actually has appropriated more than $25,000,000,000 for the Army. Yet barely $15,000,000,000 of that amount has been placed under contract and only $6,000,000,000 has been spent in 18 months. The record for the Navy is $18,000,000,000 appropriated, $14,000,000.-000 under contract and only $4,000,000,000 spent. For lease-lend it is $13,000,000.000 appropriated, $5,000,000,000 contracted for and about $600,000,000 spent.

Those look like big figures, but in relation to demands of modern war they are small. Except for airplanes, only a trickle of weapons has come from the production lines. Now, if American soldiers and sailors are to be able to do the job assigned them, there must be a vast effort on the part of American industry. Otherwise this country is due for some very costly surprises.

Then, with a step-up in production, it is going to be necessary for civilians to tighten their belts.

The people of this country no longer can expect to go on demanding record production of automobiles and houses and clothing and all of the things that go to make a high standard of civilian living while they expect to win a modern war. The two don't go together. If the Army and Navy and their air forces are to have the equipment that they require for their task, then civilians are going to have to go without many things.

Up to now the country has resisted a shift out of civilian into arms production. Its demands have caused arms production to be made secondary, with results that now probably will be measured in terms of Army and Navy losses, on the land and in the air.

After belts are tightened, it is going to be necessary for this country to settle down to a long period of struggle.

The task of defeating Japan alone is not an easy one because of the distances involved and because of the fact that the Japanese right now are at the peak of their strength while this country is only making up its mind to develop its own capacity. The task of defeating Japan's ally, Hitler, is even greater because Hitler has land and air power which the United States lacks.

This country's Army and Navy strategists figure that even with an immense effort, started now, it is going to be mid-1943 before the United States is ready to undertake any sort of a land offensive or air offensive. It will be 1945 before the United States has its Navy operating on a two ocean basis with full strength

As a result, there is not the slightest reason at this time to feel that the present war is going to be won without straining every resource that this Nation possesses. Instead, there is reason to believe that the war will be lost unless every resource is strained. As to time, the present talk is that a short war would be one of three years; a long | ing the arms that are required in a war. war, one that may last much longer compelled to turn once again to our fundamental law and to consider it in the light of our obligation to it. Recipients of great gifts too often regard them carelessly or indifferently. It is characteristic of a people that too often they fail to look unto the rock whence they are hewn. A world catastrophe tends to "stab them broad awake." Such a catastrophe faces the free people of America today. Privileges and blessings long enjoyed have been threatened and a startled Nation is called upon to re-app. aise its virtues and its vices. Few have adequately appraised or regarded with reverent devotion their great inheritance in the Constitution and particularly in the Bill of Rights. The rights have been assumed without due regard for the cost and sacrifice which they entail. They are accepted, frequently abused by prodigal and unthinking men and women.

What do these accepted freedoms mean to us? Can they be maintained in perpetuity unless we are ready and prepared to defend them at any cost? Can they be transmitted to our children unimpaired, if we permit elements within or threatening influences from without to treat them with contempt or to violate their rich provisions? Apart from my Christian convictions and, indeed, as an expression of these convictions, I regard my citizenship under the Constitution and Bill of Rights as a treasure and as a blessing greater than that enjoyed by any citizen of the world, ancient or modern. Freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, freedom of worship and what comes to me through freedom of the press, constitute a heritage of incalculable value. They lay upon me responsibilities and obligations that call for all that I possess of moral courage and Christian virtue. They compel me to be considerate of the rights and privileges of others. They prescribe generosity, kindness and tolerance in all human relationships. They admonish me that here in free America, every citizen is a sovereign whose rights and privileges cannot be infringed by any act of mine. While they accord me freedom of speech they do not permit me to employ it to the hurt of others. While they permit me to enjoy freedom of worship, they in-

Under the pressure of events we are | culcate in me a charitable attitude toward those whose traditions and training cause them to pursue a way different from my own. It is a Bill of Rights that, without discrimination or favor, guarantees to every citizen life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Any attempted abuse or infringement of these rights, any attempt to put restraints upon their free and consistent exercise should deny to the offending citizen the priceless privileges they confer. With this affirmation of devotion to our basic law must we not be reminded that laws of themselves, however reasonable and perfect they may be, do not execute themselves? High praise of them is not enough. Acceptance of their implications is inadequate.

We affirm that the ideals on which the fathers builded the Republic were spiritual, and that they found their sanction in the express teachings of Jesus Christ. Whenever these Christian ideals have been subordinated, the Nation has declined. To lift the ideals of a people means to insure high-minded obedience of laws, hence we contend that the present world crisis must call forth from every citizen a freshened devotion to ideals that in turn he may enjoy his freedom. When a nation is seized with the conviction that in God is its trust, it quarantees to itself the blessings which that trust insures. A deep spiritual revival, a widespread recognition of our dependence upon God and a strong determination to obey His law, is the pressing need of our people today. To put it in a few sentences: Americanism at its best is complete and unqualified loyalty to the ideals of government set forth in the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. It is a respect for and ready obedience to duly constituted authority and the laws of the land. It is freedom without license, religion without bigotry, respect for all nations without entangling alliances, Christian charity without bias or race hatred, love of flag and a readiness to defend that for which it stands against every alien and subversive influence from without or from within This. I believe, is Americanism, and Americanism based on Christian ideals.

Chairman Lanham of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. who put through the $900,000,000 defense housing and community facilities picture which many members of Congress say is the most beautiful picture of the United States flag they ever have seen. The artist, Fred Tripp of Beloit, Wis, was 71 years old when he painted the original, and he never had taken a painting lesson. After a long illness in McCleary Clinic and Hospital, Excelsior Springs, Mo., he went home with the of the Arlington estate near Washington thought in mind of presenting to the hospital such a painting as would inand for the construction of a bridge spire and give hope to the many persons thereto.' who come and go through the hospital lobby. He took a 6-foot flag and hung it from the ceiling of his room as a model and produced a masterpiece. Most flag pictures are of battle flags; his is a Flag of Peace. Although hanging idly from its staff, the Stars and Stripes are clearly visible, giving every semblance of a full view of Old Glory. The artist in presenting this masterpiece to the hospital said: "We can very well imagine that everything we Americans have, all our hopes and aspirations, our joys and sorrows, are wrapped within the folds of this beautiful emblem. It reminds us of the love of peace within the heart, that peace which the world does not give, but which may be had within, even amid the tumult of these eventful days." The McCleary Hospital has had full-color lithograph reproductions printed and sent them to each of more than 40,000 former patients, with this message: "The flag of destiny rests, waiting. It symbolizes the soul of America. It is the morning prayer of the American people, the prayer that arms them to problems of the day with courage and cheer. Before it. American stands in reverence

Fifty Years Ago In The Star

Fifty years ago the Fifty-second Congress, convened the week before, was tackling a flood of bills. Two especially were of local interest. Said The Star of December 14, 1891: "SEN-Bills in ATE. Among the departmental and other Congress communications laid before the Senate by the Vice President and referred were the following: By Mr. Squires-For a monument to Gen. U. S Grant in the city of Washington. . . By Mr. Daniel-To make a public park

It was not until 1901 that a site was fixed for the Grant Memorial. The huge bronze equestrian statue and supplementary groups at the eastern end of the Mall were not completed and dedicated until 1922. At And Bridge that time there were two bridges to Virginia, the old Fourteenth Street Highway Bridge and the Aqueduct Bridge, now the Key Bridge. The Arlington Bridge was completed in 1932, largely as a result of the Armistice Day traffic fiasco of 1921, when automobiles were jammed for countless hours and thousands never even got to the ceremonies.

The war alarms of half a century ago seem trifling now, but they did exist. The Star of December 12, 1891, reported: "DOES IT MEAN A WAR? That is the question that False Englishmen are now asking War themselves wherever that When the news of the fighting on the Pamir frontier · · · was flashed around the world, there was a responsive thrill of warlike expectation among the Queen's subjects from north to south, from east to west. Brazilians were greatly incensed that any honors at all should be given Dom Pedro, and indignation meetings were held in Rio de Janeiro in protest, calling the funeral ceremonies an unfriendly act. Portugal paid no attention to this unofficial demonstration.

Japan's Design for Living

By Frederic J. Haskin.

When Japan began her undeclared war on China many people commented that whatever the outcome might be it was a foregone conclusion that if it came to a battle of starvation. China would win. Such thoughts were based on the long understanding, which is true, that many Chinese can and do live at a cost of 3 cents a day.

Now that Japan is at war with the United States, the question has arisen as to the general living standards of the Japanese, and if it comes to a longdrawn-out struggle, can they hold out against the economies which they will be required to practice? The whole answer to that inquiry lies in what Japan accomplished during the trying days of the recent world-wide depression. When other nations were economically grounded, Japan had the largest export business of any country in the world, and her workers were earning wages.

An alliance of cheap and intelligent labor with modern machinery and largescale vertical capital organization gave Japan this booming export business. The foundation of her competitive power is the practically unlimited labor force, accustomed to economical ways and able to live well and cheerfully on money wages which would mean grinding poverty to Americans with their more complex wants. Thus the war lords of Japan know that they can borrow, or even confiscate, the accumulated funds of the working masses to keep the war machine going without creating living conditions which would cause a revolution in most other countries.

These Japanese workers, upon whom the industrial life of the nation depends, are neither illiterate nor coolies, but a highly developed group of people, as ambitious and as determined to rise in the world as the Scots, whom they emulate in their love for education. The habit of keeping an eye on the clock as the time approaches to cease working is little in evidence among them, for they have become docile tenders of the machine.

These methodical, studious habits constitute the living of every Japanese family, and the food problem is always easy of solution because the Nipponese are simple, almost stoic, in their needs. The main items on the annual food bill for one person are 512 bushels of rice and 95 pounds of fish. A more luxurious diet includes wheat and meat, and a more economical one substitutes barley for some of the rice.

An examination of a Japanese housewife's menu for a day's food for a family of five shows a total cost of only 55 cents, to which a trifle must be added for salt and pepper and the excellent shoyu sauce which enters all Japanese cooking. And contrary to what is the custom or habit in the United States, all classes in Japan eat the same kind of food, although quality and price may vary to a slight degree. It is the pride of practically every industrial magnate to boast that he eats the same food as that consumed

A Japanese gentleman can be well dressed in summer for what a pair of gloves costs in a fashionable store in Washington or New York, for he can present himself in the best society at a cost of less than $5. If he is vain about his appearance, he can add a smart gray hat for 75 cents more. Of course, for more expensive garments the cost is higher, but a good-looking blue or gray overcoat, such as would sell in a fashionable American store for $30 to $50, can be bought for from $5 to $10 in Japan. Even the work. ingman can dress himself for the whole season for less than the price of an inexpensive pair of shoes purchased in any store in the United States.

Food is cheap because the farmer, Japan's really forgotten man, is underpaid and because the seas are swarming with fish. Clothing is cheap because the cloth is made by modern machinery, and the garments, when not made in the home, are manufactured by industrial labor which knows no code. Housing is cheap because the capital outlay is small. Labor, which enters into everything, is cheap because it is abundant.

Simple as the habits of Japanese living are, especially dietary, they give evidence of a rising standard of living. For example, since 1900 the consumption of fish has increased by more than 180 per cent. The Japanese eat almost four times as much fish as Americans do, but the annual per capita consumption of meat in Japan is only four pounds, compared with 145 in the United States. Sugar, which is considered as an index to a high living standard in the Western countries, is not used by the Japanese in any large quantities, the annual consumption being computed at less than one-eighth of the per capita annual consumption in the United States. Economists agree that the great increase in population in Japan during the past half-century has been accomplished without the sacrifice of the standard of living of the people. That conclusion is important since it shows that Japan's power to make and sell cheaply has not been gained at the expense of the welfare of the masses, whose standards of living have risen as industrialization has progressed. It is a low standard in the sense that it is simple and based on food and clothing which are cheaply produced and distributed. But it is not a degraded standard involving physical privation.

The simplicity of the Japanese standard of life is due largely to the climate. Nature has tempered life for the Japanese, for half the year their houses, flimsily built of wood, are heated free of charge, even to excess, and they reduce their clothing bill to a negligible

Such are the conditions which give Japan her power to produce cheaply and live by the same pattern. It is rationalization carried to its highest point, and where the dreams of the efficiency expert come true. And it is the combination of cheap labor, cheap living and higher development that has enabled Japan to develop to a formidable position in the world.

The wars of the world are being fought mostly by machines, but behind these machines are vast resources of food and other supplies essential to carry cn. As combat progresses machines will be in greater demand, and that demand can be met only by all types of sacrifice which the various populations will be and disciplined in a Spartan school.

Omen of Things to Come?

America's First Week of War (119th Week of World War II)

By Blair Bolles.

The United States now is a formal participant in a foreign war for the fifth time since the close of the Revolution. Our entrance into the world-girdling conflict that began September 1, 1939, was forced by Japan at 7:35 a.m. last Sunday, when Japanese naval airplanes bombed the American citadel of Hawaii. On Monday the United States declared that war was on with Japan. On Thursday the United States declared the existence of a state of war with Germany and Italy, who a few hours earlier declared war on us. So, since the last chapter in this review appeared, the face of our Nation has changed. The land at war is wholly different in spirit, in will, in purpose, in attitude and in demeanor from the land at peace. The difference is sharply reflected here. An old mood is dead. Unity is here. Organized isolationism has collapsed.

Eight days ago we were a rather unneutral neutral, helping England and Russia and their associates in the war against Germany and Italy and their obedient satellites, negotiating with Japan for settlement of the sources of trouble in Asia and the Pacific. Today we are a belligerent, victims of unannounced attack by the negotiating Japanese. Today already we have our military heroes of the new war. We have lost ships and sent ships of our enemy, Japan, to the bottom. We are fighting on the land in the Philippines, and the Japanese have invaded Malaya, above Singapore, despite the efforts of the British to keep them from landing. The marines have been gallant in defense of the tiny island of Wake. We have had in our country air raid alarms. Labor disputes sleep. The draft age limits are being expanded, $10,000,000,000 is in the process of being added to the mountain of money spent in a year and a half to prepare ourselves for the war we hoped would not come and to aid our friends, Great Britain and her friends, in pursuing their course in the war.

We stand active now with those other nations using blood and iron to thrust from the earth the menace to stability, dignity and freedom that is inherent in the Fascist idea. The first week, indeed the first day, brought shocking losses at the hand of Japan to the United States and England, but it is satisfying to remember that the United States has never been on the losing end in a war, whether the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Spanish-American War or the first World War.

The Score

What damage the Japanese did at Hawaii we still do not know in detail. They sent planes estimated in number by observers at from 50 to 150 in six attacks on the island of Oahu, which is the chief island in the Hawaiian group, the Pacific fortress guarding continental United States from Oriental menace. The invaders, whose planes apparently were brought to the Hawaiian vicinity on airplane carriers, attacked Pearl Harbor. the Hawaiian naval base; Hickam Field, the Army air base, and the city of Honolulu. Japan boasted that her men had sunk three American battleships and an aircraft carrier and damaged other battleships and six cruisers. The White House admitted that "one old battleship" had been lost with a number of lesser vessels. Secretary of the Navy Knox was sent to Hawaii to bring back a report on exactly what happened. The country wondered whether the Navy was asleep in Hawaii. The White House put the Hawaii casualties at 3,000-1,500 of them dead.

by the White House Sunday at 2:25 p.m., Japan declared war. After War the Hawaii attack, also, the two Japanese negotiators, Ambassador Nomura and Saburo Kurusu, went to the State Department for a final talk. They presented a document explaining Japan's rejection of the American basis for peace in the Orient. The note infuriated Secretary of State Hull, who scolded his visitors in downright Tennessee mountain language.

Before war was declared, Japan attacked Hong Kong (British) and Guam, Wake and Midway (American). Japan bombed Singapore. Japan on Wednesday drove a fierce blow home against the British, and the Americans, by sinking in an air raid with torpedoes the British dreadnaught Prince of Wales, on which Roosevelt and Churchill met last August, and the British battle cruiser Repulse. The ships went down off Malaya, 100 miles north of Singapore, in China Sea. United States Army airmen sank the Japanese battleship Haruna in a bombing attack off the Philippines, and the United States naval airmen crippled, perhaps sunk, the Japanese battleship Kongo. Marines defending Wake Island sank a Japanese cruiser and a Japanese destroyer, and a Japanese transport approaching the Philippines was sunk. Japan on the opening day sank an American Army cruiser carrying lumber, 1,300 miles west of the California coast.

Japan captured the Kota Bahru airport in Malaya and sought a toehold on several portions of the island of Luzon, Philippines. Thailand surrendered to Japan after a day's token fighting and then signed a treaty of belligerent alliance with Japan. Japan claimed Guam and Midway Islands, but the War Department announced Friday that the American flag still waves over Midway and Wake and perhaps it waves over Guam. China, with more than four years of experience in fighting against Japan, sent an army to the border of Japanese-dominated Indo-China and moved other forces toward Burma to aid the defense of that British colony, which lies adjacent to Thailand on the west.

By the week's end the world was well divided into two warring groups, with few neutrals left.

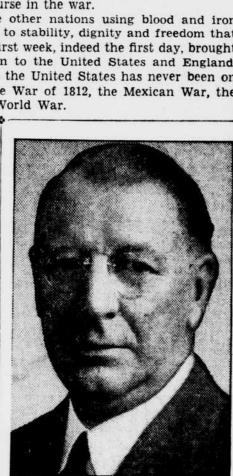

The allies of the United States are these: Great Britain, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czecho-Slovakia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Free France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Union of South Africa, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The allies of Japan against the United States are these: Germany, Italy, Slovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria.

Pacific Front

The war with Japan is a war both of land and of sea, but sea power is a paramount consideration because Japan is an island and dependent upon naval strength for survival. The sea on which the Oriental aspect of the mighty war is being decided is the largest ocean and it was named because it seemed so peaceful to Balboa, who saw it before dangerous commerce of wartime. As island stepping stones from Japan to the Philippines, Japan has the Ryukyu Archipelago and Formosa. The Japanese islands themselves have been immune to attack thus far. outside Japan. Thirty-five years ago Japan's fleet surrounded the feet of Russia, and that action just about ended the Russo-Japanese war. Some inquiry into the course of that war might throw light on the present naval war, but histories of that war, of course, will say nothing about the use of air power in naval combat. the side of American democracy.

There has been lately a swing away from the old supersensitivity about territorial sovereignty in Letin America, and toward a continentalization of sovereignty insofar as it applies to military bases. separating the Axis allies and thereby maintaining a constant threat against both Germany and Japan. Moreover, Russia is in a position to sustain China if initial Japanese successes close the channels of aid to Chungking heretofore open to American shipments.

On the other hand, and by the same token, the dangers for Russia are simulaneously aggravated. A Japanese attack in Siberia would weaken Russian resistance to Germany and would threaten the eventual solidification of the Axis into an unconquerable bloc stretching across Europe and Asia from the Rock of Gibraltar to the shores of Alaska.

Precarious Balance of Forces. Russia and Japan reflects this precarious balance of forces, and indicates that

The present uneasy peace between neither Moscow nor Tokio at the moment is at all confident of how war between their respective countries would work

It is this precarious balance which makes the recent Russian successes against the German armies of such great importance, obviously to beleaguered Moscow and the Russian people but not less definitely to Washington and the future of the United States. The Nazi retreat from Rostov and the stalemate before Moscow represent the first failure of Hitler's armies to win a campaign embarked upon. To the Russians goes the historic credit not merely of stopping a "blitz" but also of throwing it into definite reverse.

But much more important than minor changes in the swaying battle line which stretches across the entire width of Russia is the question of the resources be-

Russia's "War Potential." Fortunately, through the enterprise of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, a scientific, comprehensive and reliable estimate of "Asiatic Russia's War Potential" is now available. The compiler is Andrew Grajdanzev, a Russian economist of high repute. His analysis, published in the mid-November issue of the "Far Eastern Survey" of the Institute of Pacific Relations, was, of course, made before the start of hostilities between Japan and the United States. It is not for that reason any the less interesting and important. Mr. Grajdanzev's analysis is conservative, since it examines the war potential which would be left to Russia if that country should lose Moscow, Leningrad, the entire Donets Basin (now largely evacuated by the Germans) and all the as yet uninvaded territory north of the Caucasus Mountains and west of the Volga River. But it follows that if his conclusions are optimistic for the hinterland which he regards as immune from occupation, they are much more so for the actual situation now that the German tide of conquest seems to be re-

Within the part of Russla now regarded as absolutely secure from any immediate attack Mr. Grajdanzev estimates a population, including refugees, of around 90,000,000. This area, he says, is by itself "capable of supplying most of the essentials for military effort and civilian livelihood." He adds, however, that there are "a few important deficiencies which must be supplied from abroad if Russia's potential capacity as an ally of the democracies is to be realized to the full."

Production Possibilities.

In agricultural resources, which this economist rightly regards as the most basic factor for protracted Russian resistance, the area under survey is found to be more than self-sufficient. It contains about half the cultivated acreage and more than half the livestock of all

In mineral wealth the picture is even more favorable. All of the Russian oil production is in a territory as yet uninvaded and even if the Germans should eventually capture the area north of the Caucasus, less than 17 per cent of this production would be in their hands.

More than sufficient iron ore and nonferrous metals, excepting only aluminum, is now in full production in the immune area. The same applies to coal, while since 1938 the development of heavy industry, including chemicals, beyond the Urals has been phenomenal. Close to one-third of all the electrical power generated in the Soviet Union is also said to be similarly safe from external interference.

Nevertheless it is easy to understand why Russia, no less than Japan, is "at the present moment"-to quote the words used by Ambassador Litvinoff in presenting his credentials to President Roosevelt-strictly maintaining the neutrality agreement concluded between Moscow and Tokio last spring. Neither government desires to assume the risks involved in starting an additional war.

If Russia is to be counted on to bring pressure on Japan, now aligned as a deadly and hard-hitting enemy of the United States, it will be necessary first to strengthen the Soviet Republic until it feels impervious to further German aggression. Thus, in a struggle as unified as is the present world-wide disaster, the defense of the Philippines becomes one aspect of the defense of Moscow, and

If the job is properly done, it would seal that passage to hostile craft.

That would be very important for interocean communication, especially if the Panama Canal were not accessible for any reason. But it is far from complete protection. Even the east base of Admiral Byrd, 850 land miles from Ushuaia, is within the reach of the bombers. It should be borne in mind that we have bases in Greenland and in Iceland at a higher latitude than that part of Antarctica. Some Argentine naval officers, obviously with the consent of their superiors, have published studies about the possibility of establishing bases on those Antarctic islands. There is, of course, pack ice around them in winter, which renders navigation difficult. The pack ice is not a barrier for aircraft, which could land easily on their skis. Sir Hubert Wilkins built, a few years back, improvised air bases nearby for his exploration flights. Used During World War.

Lincoln Ellsworth did the same on Dundee Island, on the northeast end of Graham Land, a short distance from Deception Island. The British expedition led by John Rymill in 1934-1937 used the same facilities in several localities nearby. There is no reason why warplanes could not utilize those islands now for patroling and protecting the gray expanses of the Strait of Drake. Japanese, German and British warships used the myriad islands dotting the Straits of Magellan as a hiding place during the other war. As a lair for submarines the deep waters around those islands, surrounded often by lofty, sheer crags, are excellent, and probably before much time elapses some news of this kind will be heard. Air patroling would be invaluable in spotting enemy ships. This can be done with ease from Ushuaia. But the patrols guarding the southern waters of the Strait of Drake would operate much more advantageously from the islands near the western shore of Deception Island offers, besides, a magnificent anchorage for a whole fleet. This island is the top of a sunken, extinct volcano, and the rim has a passage connecting the round interior with the open sea. At the right of the entrance are Hektor Whaling Co., a Norwegian concern. Or perhaps it might be wiser to say "were," instead of "are," because the rumor has been going around in South America for quite some time that the German raider Tamesis which sunk the Zam-Zam a few months ago, made a tour of the Antarctic whaling grounds, sinking ships and shelling shore installa-

Possession of these islands, supplemented possibly by occupation of some place on the South Orkneys (Argentina owns Laurie Island, one of them, where she has had a weather station for decades), would go a long way toward assuring control of the vital waters of the Strait of Drake. Ushuaia, in turn, could be used as a naval base, with Argentine assent, and this would give support to the British base at Port Stanley, in the Falkland Islands.

With the Straits of Magellan defended by coastal batteries, according to the Argentina-Chilean plan, and the Antarctic islands in the right hands, passage from one ocean to the other could be controled by a combination of sea and air forces.

The Galapagos archipelago plays, in relation to the Panama Canal, the same role that the Antarctic islands play in the defense of southern interocean communication. In view of the attitude taken by all of Latin America in this conflict after the entrance of the United States, it is fair to say that the political problems involved in the cession of bases on the Galapagos have almost vanished, and that Ecuador now can lay aside the old worries about the lessening of its sovereignity rights. Many Japanese in Peru.

A possible complication, in connection with the Galapagos, lies in the large number of Japanese living in Peru, Ecuador's southern neighbor. The Peruvians have shown on more than one occasion how they felt about the Nipponese in their midst. In May of last year, for instance, there were riots in Lima against the Japanese, and many of the foreigners' shops and residences were stoned, set afire or otherwise damaged, and the number of Japanese skulls cracked was so large that Tokio demanded an indemnity running into the millions-which it now has no chance

The Death and Burial of the First President

By John Clagett Proctor.

This date, 142 years ago, was undoubtedly one of the saddest days in American history, for on this day passed into the beyond our greatest citizen, soldier, patriot and President-George Washington. He who was "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

The first President was born on February 22, 1732, and died at Mount Vernon, his home in Virginia, December 14, 1799. George Washington's passing was, indeed, mourned by a grateful people, whose Republic he so ably and materially assisted in founding and establishing, and to whose hearts he had so sincerely and affectionately endeared himself.

December in the District of Columbia is a very uncertain month, so far as the weather is concerned. Upon more than one occasion the writer has seen roses blooming here in the public parks as late as Christmas Day, and at other times December has been severely cold throughout. It always has been a good month for contracting colds, for, in addition to the freezing weather, we are equally likely to be treated to some wet and rainy days, as well in the assortment handed us before the month has nassed and gone.

December, 1799, was no exception to the rule, and the day Washington caught the cold that terminated his earthly existence was such a day as we ourselves have seen upon many occasions in this vicinity. George Washington, too, had experienced many such days, had endured the hardships of Valley Forge, had crossed the Delaware when it took the bravest and stoutest hearts to do so, and why now, perhaps he thought, should he refrain from going out doors, even though the weather was threatening, as it undoubtedly was that fatal day. Indeed, the first President's diary contains a positive statement regarding the weather for December 12. It says: "Morning cloudy, wind at northeast and mercury at 33. A large circle around the moon last night. About 10 o'clock it began to snow, soon after hail and then settled rain. Mercury at 28 at night."

Frequently Inspected His Farms Washington was always active and industrious and, like all successful men, left little to the imagination, but saw for himself what was going on about him. For years it had been his habit frequently to inspect his farms, his rides taking him over a stretch of 8 to 14 miles. His adopted son, George Washington Parke Custis, said: "He usually moved at a moderate pace, passing through his fields and inspecting everything, but when behind time the most punctual of men would display the horsemanship of his better days and a hard gallop bring him up to time, so that the sound of his horse's hoofs and the first dinner bell should be heard together at a quarter to 3 o'clock." That writer added that upon these occasions he presented the picture well mounted, eitting firm and erect in his saddle.

So it was that during one of these inspection visits over the farm, on Thursday. December 12, 1799, Washington contracted the cold that resulted in his death two days later. Upon this occasion, as was his practice, he took to his horse about 10 o'clock that morning and did not return until five hours later, although the weather was cold and a slight snow was falling when he left home, which later turned to hail and rain with the addition of a cold wind that even aggravated conditions. When he returned home it was observed that he was wet and snow was hanging from his hair. His secretary, Mr. Lear, called his attention to this, but Washington said his greatcoat had kept him dry.

Some letters being brought to him, he franked them, but would not let the servant take them to the office, as he said the weather was too bad to send them that evening. Soon thereafter he went to dinner without changing his damp clothing.

The next day, Friday, he was prevented from going out early, but a hoarseness had developed overnight which was quite noticeable and, undoubtedly, the result of getting wet the day before. He made rather light of this, however, and in the afternoon went out into the grounds between the mansion and the river to mark some trees which were to be cut down by way of improvement to the place.

Not So Optimistic

In the evening, when the papers were brought from the post office, he sat with Mrs. Washington and his secretary, reading to them until Mrs. Washington retired, about 9 p'clock.

When he retired he seemed very cheerful, and when Mr. Lear suggested that he take something for his cold he replied: "No, you know I never take anything for a cold. Let it go as it came."

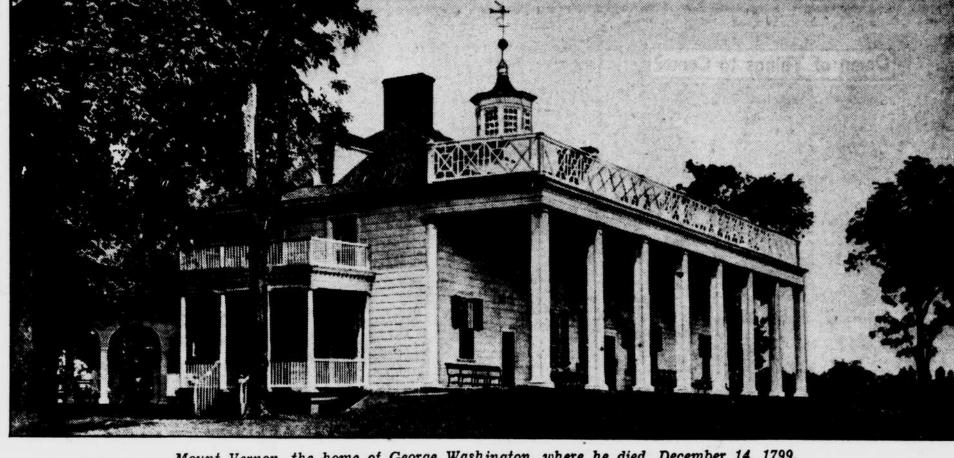

Mrs. Washington, as it would seem, was not quite so optimistic over her husband's condition at this time as he appears to have been, and had become alarmed at not hearing the accustomed sound of the library door as it closed for the night, and which was the signal for rest in the well-regulated mansion. She arose again and continued sitting up, in much anxiety and suspense, until, at length, we are told, the well-known step was heard on the stair, and upon the general's entering his chamber. Mrs. Washington kindly chided him for remaining up so late, to which Washington made this reply: "I came as soon as my business was accomplished. You well know that, through a long life, it has been my unvaried rule never to put off till the morrow the duties which should be performed today."

His adopted son and Mrs Washington's own grandson, George Washington Parke Custis, who built the Arlington mansion, and resided there for so many years, and who is buried there in the cemetery with his wife, said:

"Having first covered up the fire with care the man of mighty labors at last sought repose, but it came not as it had long been wont to do, to comfort and restore, after the many and earnest occupations of the well-spent day. The night was spent in feverish restlessness and pain. 'Tired nature's sweet restorer. balmy sleep,' was destined no more to visit his couch; yet the manly sufferer uttered no complaint."

He then breathed with considerable difficulty and could scarcely speak above a whisper. Mrs. Washington wanted to call a servant, but the general would not permit her for fear that she herself might take a cold in doing so.

However, as soon as it was daylight a servant was sent for Mr. Rawlings, one of the overseers on the place, to bleed him, a practice then generally followed in illness of this kind. Another servant was dispatched for Dr. James Craik in Alexandria, and in the meantime a mixture of molasses, vinegar and bitters was prepared by those around him, but he was unable to swallow.

When Rawlings arrived preparations were soon made for the bleeding and Washington's arm was bared for the purpose, as well as his throat would permit. Observing Rawlings' nervousness. Washington said to him, "Don't be afraid," and even insisted upon making the incision larger. Mrs. Washington, not knowing whether bleeding was proper, desired that it be stopped, but the general insisted on continuing the bleeding, as he said, "More, more." However, at Mrs. Washington's urging, it was stopped after about a pint had been drawn.

About 4:30 o'clock, at his request, Mrs. Washington was called to his bedside, when he requested her to go down into his room and take from his desk two wills which she would find there. "Bring them to me," he said. And when they were brought he continued: "These are my wills-preserve this one and burn the other"-which was immediately done.

About 5 o'clock Dr. Craik came again into the room and, upon going to the bedside, the general said to him: "Doctor, I die hard, but I am not afraid to go. I believed from the first attack that I should not survive it. My breath cannot last long."

The doctor pressed his hand, but could not utter a word. He retired from the bedside and sat by the fire absorbed in Between 5 and 6 o'clock Dr. Dick and Dr. Brown came into the room and, with Dr. Craik, went to the bed, when Dr. Craik asked him if he could sit up in bed. He held out his hand and was raised up. He then said to the physicians: "I feel myself going; I thank you for your attentions; but I pray you to take no more trouble about me. Let me go off quietly. I cannot last long." He lay down again, and all retired ex-

While all was silent in grief, Mrs. Washington, who was sitting at the foot of the bed, asked Dr. Craik in a firm and collected voice: "Is he gone?" The physician was unable to speak, but held up his hand as a signal that he was no more. "Tis well," said she, in the same voice. "All is now over; I shall soon follow him; I have no more trials to pass through."

And thus the noble spirit of the illustrious Washington took its noiseless flight.

The Rev. Thomas Davis of the Episcopal Church conducted the burial services. Dr. Dick conducted the Masonic rites. Three discharges of arms by infantry, artillery and cavalry paid a last tribute to the American liberator. A vessel in the river fired minute guns during the services. The sun was setting as the sorrowing people turned from the tomb. The bier upon which the coffin was conveyed from the mansion to the tomb was in the Alexandria Museum, and was destroyed in the fire of 1871. It was of oak, 6 feet in length, and painted lead color. The handles hinged to the bier had leather pads on the under side fastened with brass nails. Upon the outer lead coffin was a silver shield 3 inches long, on which was inscribed.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, Born February 22, 1732,

Died December 14, 1799. This burial took place in the old vault on Wednesday, December 18, 1799, and here rested the body of Gen. Washington and other members of his family until April 19, 1831, when they were placed in the new vault, and six years later the remains of Washington and Mrs. Washington were moved from the rear of the new tomb to the sarcophagi at the front of the same

The statement made that when the coffin of Gen. Washington was moved from the old to the new tomb, that the body was seen floating in alcohol, was discounted by Harrison H. Dodge, who for many years was superintendent of Mount Vernon and who, in writing on this subject, said:

"The most reliable authority, I have had many occasions to quote, was an old man, William Burgess, a stone mason of Alexandria, whom I employed at Mount Vernon from 1885 until he died,

"Burgess was an apprentice bricklayer and helped build the 'new tomb,' and was present when the remains of Gen. Washington and others were moved. April 19, 1831, from the 'old tomb' to the new. Only a few members of the Washington family were present then, and this 18-year-old lad (Burgess) was with them when they determined to open the leaden casket to assure themselves of the identity of what it inclosed. They all expressed astonishment, when the face of the general was revealed, to observe how little his facial expression (judging from portraits) had changed in the 30-odd years since his death.

"Burgess' oft-repeated testimony was to the effect that after the face had been exposed for a few moments there was an appreciable change noticed by all: a falling in of the features quickly occurred. If there had been alcohol used this wouldn't have occurred. No alcohol was subsequently put in the casket, I know!"

Resolution Passed

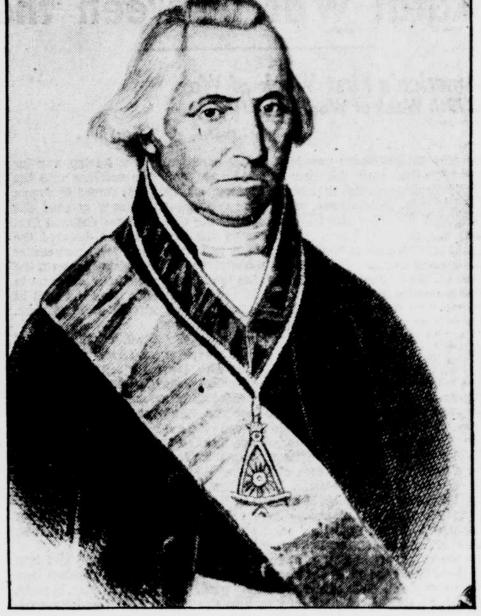

Apparently, it was not the wish of Congress to have the body of Washington remain at Mount Vernon, for nine days after the death of the first President, a resolution was passed by this body, and approved by President John Adams, December 24, 1799, providing that the family of George Washington be requested to permit his body to be transferred from the vault at Mount Vernon to the United States Capitol and deposited in a space beneath a monument also provided for.

Mrs. Washington granted permission for this transfer, and when the central portion of the old Capitol Building was constructed during the years 1818-1829, space for the tomb was provided. But nothing seems to have been done with the resolution of December 23, 1799, until February 22, 1830, when a House resolution was passed for the purpose of formulating plans for carrying into effect the provisions of the earlier resolution.

A further resolution of February 14, 1832, directed that application be made to John A. Washington and George Washington Parke Custis for the remains of Martha Washington, that they also be removed and deposited in the Capitol with those of her late consort, George Washington. Mr. Custis gave his consent, but John A. Washington declined to do so, on the ground that it was Washington's wish that his remains "Reader, whoever thou art, in whatever part of the world resident, mourn with us the death of the friend of liberty and man; the savior of his country, the defender of her rights-the warrior, the statesman, and the private citizen; who never swerved from the paths of rectitude in the hour of duty, never arrogated to himself unwarrantable power, though placed in situations to command it, and whose every action tended to the public good, from his early days to the end of his existence.

Many fine tributes have been paid to the Father of His Country, but one especially worth recalling was printed in the Mercantile Journal of December 21, 1799, as follows:

a private individual of the community. he commanded universal admiration and esteem. In every sense of the word, he was a man whose like we shall probably never again be permitted to see, and whose virtues will be held in everlasting remembrance."

To this might well be added Lincoln's beautiful words:

"Washington is the mightiest name on earth-long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty; still mightiest in moral reformation. On that name no eulogy is expected. It cannot be. To add brightness to sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name and in its naked. deathless splendor, leave it shining on."

The journal sums up by declaring vitamins are like oil in a crankcase. A certain amount is necesary, but there is

For point one, the new American Army is a good start.

At a great medical meeting in Boston late this year, the surgeons general of the Army and the Navy, Gen. James C. Magee and Admiral Ross T. McIntire. sat together at the head of a long table, answering questions. An ordinarily well informed layman, who had heard that the British Army was taking to vitamins, and that maybe the Germans take a victory vitamin, asked:

"What vitamins are added to the Army and Navy diets?" "Not any," said Magee. "Not any," said McIntyre.

Such flour or bread is officially called "enriched." The history of that single word is a whole sermon on the vitamin

When synthetic vitamins became available, there was a rush of propositions to "fortify" food. That meant to add vitamins. It meant to add them whether of 1941" by the journal of the American the food contained them naturally or

> No, said many nutritionists; no, thundered the A. M. A .- you should "restore" vitamins, where food processing had taken them out. That is enough, they said, by all the standards of both health and safety.

Fortification, said the doctors, adding unnecessary vitamins, would cost the poor many millions of dollars-uselessly. The A. M. A. made this stick.

The national defense meeting of 1941 which decided on pepping up the white flour, adopted the principle of restoration. But restoration can't be exact, because even nature varies in vitamin content. The authorities therefore agreed upon a reasonable, and, they hoped, not too costly addition of vitamins.

So the name was changed from restoration to enrichment. The latter is probably more accurate. It also is better for advertising. Furthermore, it best fits American psychology about names, and-make no mistake-psychology here is an important factor. A warning already has been given by Dr. Russell M. Wilder, chairman of the Food and Nutrition Committee which steered the enrichment.

"Curative claims for enriched flour and bread are unwarranted," he wrote in a November issue of Bakers' Weekly, a magazine of the baking industry.

The miracles published about vitamins' Vitamin concentrates are added in effects are really true. What the reader does not usually note is that the miracle can happen only to persons deficient in that vitamin. There are 1,001 reasons for feeling ill.

Only one comes from vitamins, and that one is all that can be helped by vitamins. There is a great misunderstanding about vitamin B1 and morale. The public seems to believe it has been told that B1 builds morale. That was not the story at all. America's Strategic Islands Are Keys to Victory in Pacific

The curtain rose a week ago on the long-awaited, historic tragedy of the Pacific war. The stage is the surface of the world's largest ocean, and upon it untold numbers of men will die fighting for the possession of a few great bases and thousands of small islands.

The clashing fleets will pivot upon ness of the watery arena and the limited radius on which warships can operate. Neval strategists agree that no major fleet engagement should take place more then 2,000 to 3,000 miles from repair docin, into which crippled vessels can and after battle. Yet, it is 6,000 miles on Alaska and New Zealand; 8,000 miles between San Francisco and Sing-

At some sacrifice of speed and maneuverability, our warships were built with the greatest possible cruising range, and they were designed to be the most ruggedly armored, heavily gunned and self-sufficient of their type. American fighting ships are accompanied by unusually large fleet trains—the repair ships, cargo ships, tugs, transports, oilers, minesweepers and net layers. In largescale action the train frees the fleet, to some extent, from dependence on fixed shore establishments.

Strategic Bases

This country's Pacific mainland bases are at San Diego, San Francisco and Seattle. Its outlying bases are at Sitka, Kodiak, Anchorage and Dutch Harbor, in Alaska; in Hawaii; in the Philippines and on a dozen or so islands as far south as Samoa.

The home bases of the enemy are at Yokosuka, Maizuru, Kure and Sasebo; and his outposts are at Formosa, Bonin, Camranh Bay in Indo-China, and, it is believed, on many of the mandated islands which lie between Hawaii and the Philippines. To the south are the bases of this country's allies, in New Zealand, Australia and in the Netherlands East Indies. At the extreme west is Britain's mighty island base of Singapore, almost touching the southern tip of Malay Penin-mainland, the only major repair bases on the Pacific are at Pearl Harbor, Fort Pettit, at Zamboanga, the Amer-Hawali, and Singapore. There the largest capital ships can be docked and put in order. Some of the other bases have repair facilities, but their capacity is

Some Americans have argued in the past for making this inner defense line a naval frontier, beyond which American and high waves on the Pacific side of forces would not be permitted to operate. In addition, the American land, air and of warplanes all the patrols, convoys, sea forces there have been greatly augmented. The President gave Gen. MacArthur expressed the opinion a short time ago that it would take "one and one-half million men. $10,000,-000,000, tremendous casualties and three years' time successfully to invade the Philippines." Admiral William D. Leahy, Ambassador to France, also has contended that the islands can be successfully defended.

The weak points of the Philippines are that their 7,082 islands have 10,850 miles of coast line; that they are within striking distance of the Japanese Fleet and of land-based bombers; and that they lie behind the Japanese mandate islands, from whose submarine, small craft and airplane bases communication lines might be severed.

The Japanese started the encirclement of the Philippines when they seized Hainan Island and the Spratly Islands in 1939 and Camranh Bay last Manila, on Luzon Island, is the stronghold of the commonwealth, and it is believed capable of withstanding a long seige and a frontal attack. Within 9 to 60 miles are the troops at Fort William McKinley. Fort Stotsenburg and Fort Wint, which guards the entrance to Subic Bay.

Few Landing Points

It has been conceded by many experts home of about two-thirds of the islands' 29,000 Japanese, they would be 550 miles by air from Manila.

On Luzon, the possible landing points are few and highway communication between them and Manila is limited. If nized or armored forces would have to cross swamps, jungles and rugged mountains. > Meanwhile, the question of Philippine independence, which for so many years was the chief political issue in the islands, has merged completely into the larger issue of life and death. President Manuel Quezon, when renominated last August, said:

"Independence is no longer in the hands of Filipinos, or any man, for that matter. It is in the hands of God." If the democracies are defeated, he said, "Filipinos might as well bid good-by to independence."

The history of United States military plans and activities in the Philippines epitomizes this Nation's attitude toward the whole Western Pacific defense problem: Repeated determination to fortify them as strong Pacific outposts; then, with the growth of pacifism and isolationism in the 1920s and 1930s, a tendency to relinquish all thought of taking a stand in the Far East; and, finally, in the past year or two, feverish efforts to prepare the islands against attack.

The story of Guam parallels that of the Philippines. Guam, less than 1,500 miles from the Philippines and an equal distance from Yokohama and 225 miles in area, could have been transformed into a powerful naval and air base. capable of operating against fortified bases in the surrounding mandated islands and thus keeping open the supply lines to the Philippines. Bombers from its fields might also have struck at

Plans to fortify Guam, which was taken from Spain during the war with that country, were laid in 1919, but were abandoned in 1922 in accordance with the treaty limiting naval arms. In 1938 a special naval board, headed by Rear Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn, in a report to Congress on Pacific defenses, recommended spending $280,000,000 to convert the island into a fleet, air and submarine

This large Japanese cities. work was in progress when the war started.

The importance of the small islands in the scheme of warfare in the Pacific has grown with the development of the airplane. The United States has owned some of its dozen or more little Pacific atolls and coral reefs for generations, some it acquired in the Spanish-American War. But the Government took practically no notice of any of them, except Samoa, until the commercial air lines in 1935 constructed landing fields on them.

When it was seen that flyers could use them as stepping stones by which to hop across the Pacific the Government began to take notice. As air bases they would be invaluable aids, it was realized, in detecting the approach of an enemy; air fields and naval bases on them, moreover, would make it easier to blockade Japan. Conversely, if they were unfortified and fell into the hands of the foe they constituted a danger to this country.

At the war's start naval air bases were being constructed on Midway, Wake, Johnston and Palmyra Islands. Channels were being cut through the coral reefs and coral heads were being taken out of lagoons to provide taking-off areas for fully loaded planes. From these outposts United States planes could patrol a front of more than 4,000 miles west of Hawaii between Unalaska and Samoa.

Midway and Wake Islands

Midway lies 1,134 miles northwest of Hawaii, and Wake is a little less than halfway from Midway to Guam.

Palmyra, 960 miles south of Hawaii, is on the route to Samoa. In the Samoan group, at Pago Pago, Tutuila Island, this country has had a minor naval station since 1900. It is now of great importance as the southern terminus for patrol squadrons. Being on the direct air route from Hawaii to New Zealand, it also would be particularly useful to the fleet and its air force if the Navy wished to maintain a southern route for communication with Australia, New Zealand and Singapore.

The Pearl Harbor base on the Hawaiian Island of Oahu is a vital stronghold against the operations of the Hawaii, and the westernmost, the Palau Japanese fleet in the Pacific. It is the home station of the fleet, and the most intensively fortified area under the American flag. Within Pearl Harbor are enough anchorages for the whole American navy, although Lahaina Roads, bounded by the islands of Maui, Lanai and Molokai, are regularly used naval anchorages

All the main fixed defenses are connected in a system of wide, hardsurfaced highways, and a railway extends three-fourths of the way around the island. Tanks, infantry, railway artillery and other mobile guns can move to any part of the island within two hours and cover every practicable landing

Problem of Food

Believing that the defensive weakness of Oahu was the proximity of outlying islands in the Hawaiian group, the Army and Navy lately pushed work on fortifications of those islands. Out-island airports have been developed; barracks and with fog-chilled winds howling over grassy moors.

Of the hundreds of volcanic islands, many are mere surf-andwind-scoured rocks. Largest is Unimak Island, which measures 65 by 22 miles. Unimak also has the highest peak — the symmetrical 9,387-foot Shishaldin Volcano. Most of the islands are bold and rocky. Not a tree grows in the group; natives depend on driftwood and animal oils for fuel. There is verdant growth of grasses and flowering plants, however, and on Umnak Island an American operates a sheep ranch with about 15,000 head.

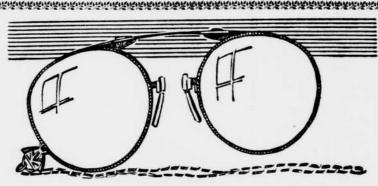

Average annual temperatures are remarkably uniform in the Aleutians, seldom dropping below freezing in winter and rarely reaching 60 degrees in summer, due to the warm Japan current. Fogs and gales are regular fare. The warm air from the Japan current mixing with the cold air of Bering Sea makes the Aleutians a "Northern weather-kitchen" which brews storms that affect the climate of the United States.

Most important and one of the miles of Japan's northern Kurile archipelago extends beyond the Dutch Harbor, on the shore of a Remote as the Aleutian Islands ing line which is the International United States is constructing defense America.

Islets Appear and Disappear. West of Unalaska is Bogoslof Island, famous for its jack-in-thebox antics. Its volcanic peaks and naval station and air base are being and vanishing again as mysteriously, outlying islets have appeared and ticularly between 1900 and 1907.

Win, Lose or Draw Harris Believes By FRANCIS E. STAN.

Hey, There, Colleges, What About This? There are any number of effective ways of becoming a first-class bore and one of the best is to start telling somebody else how to spend his money. And now that this monumental confession is over, isn't it about time that college football decided to fall in step with the rest of the sports world and co-operate a little bit

At a time when major league baseball, boxing's heavyweight champion and, his No. 2 challenger, duckpin and tenpin bowlers all over the country and the cream of the professional golfers are busy at national philanthropy, the colleges obviously have formulated no policy.

We are reminded of this by the various Bowl games coming up. Many thousands of perfectly lovely American dollars will be whacked the to schedule to shake up his up by the teams participating. But, as these lines were written, we had sixth-place Washington Nationals not heard whether the Bowl colleges had decided to turn over any im- yesterday when he traded with the portant proceeds to buy Defense bonds or swell the U. S. O. treasury or spend in any way to help entertain the boys in the service of the land.

Baseball Voted Not Once, but Twice

This is not to suggest that Mr. Whiskers' soldiers, sailors and marines trade, expected for the last few days, have been going around begging for alms. They haven't. But it comes under the heading of simple logic to assume that any constructive aid in providing recreational facilities would be welcome.

Apparently baseball feels this way about the matter. Last year the American and National Leagues volunteered to sponsor another ball and bat fund, reviving the fashion of 1917. A hunk of cash was offered to the Army; it was declined. "When various commanding officers make because of his vast natural slab requests for equipment," the baseball people were told in effect, "we assets, Griffith listened to Harris' would appreciate your helping them. But don't give us a lump sum." plea on behalf of Spence, whom the

This might have been interpreted by the ball folk as a snub but it | Washington pilot believes will dewasn't. Baseball didn't figure to gain by currying the favor of the armed velop into a fine center fielder and a forces. From his own special fund, Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis will turn over $20,000 to the Army and Navy to use as they see 2t. Even the Baseball Writers' Association of America, which annually collects $2,000 to apply to charities within their profession, have alloted $1,000.

In some ways the Joe Louis-Buddy Baer fight on January 9 at Madison Square Garden for the heavyweight championship of the world will be the greatest pugilistic match in history. The last time they fought Louis was knocked out of the ring and Baer finally was stopped in brutal fashion in the sixth round. It was one of the most spectacular title defenses Louis has made but next month Louis and Baer will meet again for expenses only. The profits will be turned over to the U.S.O. and the man who will turn them over is Mike Jacobs, who is supposed to be a dime-loving old guy with a heart of stone.

Nor have the bowlers of the country been bashful about helping son, appearing in 86 games. out. The Star's own duckpin tournament, now under way, set the style.

For the first time in the tourney's 14-year-old history the pin-shooters

Nat several springs ago when he have been asked to plunk down an entry fee. The rap is $1. The prizes, of the American Association. In two of which there are many, will be Defense bonds. In asking for an entry fee The Star almost automatically accepted a drop in entries. But these are times when the number of bowling entries are dwarfed.

When the Amateurs, Jones & Co., Played Golf

In other words, something more important, something bigger, is at stake. Old Man Whiskers has a fight on his hands, possibly a tougher fight than he waged in 1917 and 1918. Originally it was held that an Army of something over a million men was all that was necessary this time. Now it may well be that within another year the Army will have swelled to 5,000,000. This would indicate that if American people are behind their new, enlarged Army they will go all out to help smooth the way.

The professional golfers have seen their way toward helping. In the last two years the pros have raised $100,000 for the American Red Cross and the U. S. O. Back in 1918 a precedent was established. Five crack amateurs-Bobby Jones, Perry Adair, Chick Evans, Ned Sawyer and Warren K. Wood-played the ranking professionals and raised $150,000 for the Red Cross. Already the pros now are within reach of that figure he won only four games while losand word from the headquarters, where Freddie Corcoran presides, tells ing 13. Whether he will be one of of a bigger and better program on the books for this year.

The point we are trying to make is that if professional baseball and the golfers and the bowlers and a pair of fighters like Louis and Baer are willing to spit on their hands and play ball, what's the matter with the colleges who specialize in football? Even if the Rose Bowl game is off, the list still contains the Sugar Bowl, Orange Bowl, Cotton Bowl and Sun Bowl tilts from which fully a quarter of a million dollars will go to the contesting teams. Is it out of order to suggest, then, that some of those colleges fall into step? After all-and this does not exclude the football pros-what are our sports except a means toward conditioning the greatest place on earth?

Last Call Sounds for Entries In Defense Bowling Tourney

Deadline in 14th Annual Evening Star Event Will Fall at 12 O'Clock Tonight

By ROD THOMAS.

Last call sounds today for bowlers who would fire for many and fat prizes in The Star's Defense Bond Tournament.

At midnight tonight falls the deadline at all Metropolitan Washington maple plants. If you have an urge to bowl today or tonight consult your alley manager before beginning your exercise. Once again the bargain:

The entry fee of $1 is the lowest ever levied in a major duckpin for men and 120 for women.

Bowlers without league averages, and these in the main are concerned with this, the final day of the qualification round draw handicaps based upon an average of 115 for men and 100 for women.

Half of Entrants in Roll-off. Seventy-five cents of every entry fee accrues to the prize fund. One half of the participants at each alley qualify for the roll-off and bowl in this without cost. Lengthy prize lists for men and women are capped by a $1,000 defense bond for men and one of $500 for women. Awards for best performances in the 3-game preiminary are enticing but most of the melon will be split in the 3game roll-off, to take place at all maple plants hereabout, during the Yuletide. Prospective qualifiers should watch these columns this week for roll-off dates. Names of all qualifiers will be published in The Star.

The principal object of this year's Star Tournament, the 14th annual, is to boost the sale of defense savings, in which all awards are being made. The tournament here is the forerunner of hundreds to be held throughout the country in which bowlers will enjoy their sport and at the same time give Uncle Sam a lift. Slogans Say it All.

"Keep 'em rollin'!" shouts tournament poster designed by Gib Crockett of The Star staff. "Keep 'em rollin' to keep 'em flyin'!" expands Jim Berryman in a Star cartoon now going the national rounds with the poster.

There was little wonder fans were so worked up over this game-almost to a point of dismissing talk on next week's titular struggle. Not only are the Packers and Bears always ready to put on a grand football show, but also they have engaged in some terrific rivalry this season in two previous meetings.

Rivalry Is Keen. In their first game, the Bears took a 25-17 decision at Green Bay. In their second joust, the Packers beat the Bears, 16-14, for the Chicagoans' only defeat since November 17, 1940. Ban on Big-Time Competitive Golf by U.S.G.A. for Duration of War Expected

National Group's Curb Would Not Affect D. C. Links Play

Pros' Rich Winter Meets Scheduled for Coast May Be Abandoned

By WALTER McCALLUM. It seems pretty well established that competetive golf of the bigtime brand will go into a tail spin for the duration of the war, although local tournaments and possibly the sectional championships in this territory probably will be held as usual, but without some of the crack young performers of past years. The United States Golf Association hasn't formally said so, but undoubtedly the fathers of the national game, at their January 10, 1942, meeting, will give the national open and amateur tournaments the brush-off for 1942. They may retain the women's championship although it is probable they'll go the whole way to call them all off.

The Professional Golfers Association, facing its biggest and best winter campaign, is in a hot spot. The boys are winding up today at Miami the first big affair of the winter tour. They are scheduled to move into Texas for two $5,000 affairs around Christmas and then jump to California for four events

California Now Is Hot Spot.
California, however, happens to be in considerable of a dither about the war. Japanese planes have been seen reconnoitering over San Francisco. It wouldn't be healthy for a big crowd to be following a couple of links stars when enemy planes are overhead, whether it be at Los Angeles or San Francisco. Machine gunners and bombers have a fondness for targets of that na-

Presidents of the District and declared they see no reason to call third meeting on the charity card. that later events may necessitate attempting to collect top money in some changes. So, barring the national championships which probably will be canceled, golf will go on. And after all, while golfers are interested in the national affairs, they also are interested in their own brand of game and scoring. Golf Apt to Boom Here.

Probably golf will boom around Washington next year, the individual brand, that is. There is certain to be an even bigger expansion in the government service and many of the newcomers will be golfers. They may or may not have competitive golf, but they'll be able to play their personal, individual games and the clubs around town can well enter a new period of prosperity.

The women are going ahead with plans for their 1942 campaign, although many are studying for Red Cross duties or are engaged in other wartime activity. The whole picture as we see it now is that normal golf locally will go on as before, with probably increased tempo, but that the national tournaments will

Zunic Leads Colonials To 52-27 Triumph In Season Start

Matt Cages 19 Points Against Deacons, Who Wilt in Last Half

By BILL DISMER, Jr.

It took George Washington's bas- | ket ball team 10 minutes to warm up in its 1941-2 debut last night at Tech gym, but once it did, it turned on the heat in earnest to make Wake Forest its first Southern Conference victim in any sport by the lopsided score of 52-27.

Not until the half-way point of the first half was reached was G. W. able to register a field goal, but when Matt Zunic did, he not only launched what was to be more than a pointa-minute attack, but a field night for himself as he began his senior year with the Colonials.

Zunic was withdrawn from the fray with more than 5 minutes to play in the last half, but not before he had scorched the cords for 19 points with seven field goals and five free tosses.

for the final stages of first-half competition and by news of the war ing from a sport to something more Henry on Mat in Turner Show

Ed (Strangler) Lewis, one-time heavywegiht wrestling champion of the world, will return to the mat Thursday night at Turner's Arena in the old, familiar role of a contestant, meeting Jim Henry in the feature bout.

A massive old gent with huge oaken arms, a bulging midriff and a beam as wide as an office desk Lewis still commands the respect of muscle-bending racket and retains much of the power in his famous headlock—the strangle hold.

Currently embarked on a refereeing tour, Lewis has tossed a couple of belligerent artists in sly tests with an eye to a comeback. He gave Henry the heave ho last week after the latter lost to Sandos Szabo and so injured Jimmy's pride he promptly challenged the old warrior to a real match.

Lewis, whose best weight was 245 pounds in his hey-day, tipped the beam at 295 last week but expects to shear off an average of 5 pounds weekly until somewhere near his working size. One advantage of being corpulent, as the Strangler has pointed out, is that nobody can give him an airplane spin or even get their arms around him in a good, substantial hold. But if he ever gets the headlock on the other guy it's curtains.

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies

CIVIC NEWS.

Unified Recreation Bill Delayed; Many Opportunities for Service

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Entrance of the United States into the great war necessitates many a modification in the plans for handling the District civic problems by the organized citizenry. Those not definitely linked up with winning the war, civilian defense or maintenance of the morale will have to be shunted aside until a more favorable time.

There has been some just criticism at the seeming lack of enthusiasm over the civilian defense program, but the opening of hostilities has changed the picture completely. The voteless and unrepresented citizens of the District have never been found shirking the bearing of any burden for our country. In war or in peace they have always compared more than favorably with other communities. They are now ready and willing to make all sacrifices which may be necessary and will regard it, not as sacrifice but as a high privilege to serve for the safety and perpetuation of our country and its highest ideals.

The District legislation has gone forward in both House and Senate during the past week. The President's appearance before the joint session of Congress on Monday and the passage of the declaration of war on Japan displaced the usual District day, but was replaced by time given on Tuesday. The Senate also considered and acted upon District measures on Tuesday.

The House passed a joint resolution directing the Commissioners and the Public Utilities Commission, jointly, to conduct a preliminary survey to determine the feasibility of a subway system in the District for both rail and vehicular traffic. A report to Congress is required not later than March 15, 1942.

The House passed six and the Senate five bills, all of which have had the approval of the civic and other groups. Included was the bill to authorize the Federal Works Administration to advance $2,500,000 to the Commissioners for emergency work incident to the national program. This amount has already been earmarked for the District by F. W. A. The Senate withheld action on a similar

Other bills passed by the House empowered the Zoning Commission to require all new construction to provide off-street parking facilities at the building or elsewhere; require new Federal buildings to provide off-street parking accommodations for between 10 and 20 per cent of the employes therein, and the bill to prohibit parking on private property without the consent of the property owner. Among the bills were the charity racket bill and the one placing the Public Welfare Board employes under civil service. This latter is required to meet conditions imposed by certain Federal aid laws.

Four of the bills passed by the Senate go to the President. These authorize ground course of training in avistion in the District public schools, restore to the Health Department authority to summarily condemn food found unfit for human consumption, fixing penalties for introducing contraband articles into the District penal institutions and authorizing the assistant clerks in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to sign certain papers as Unified Recreation System and Control Delayed.

The bill to reorganize the District recreation system which the House passed last summer is held up in the Senate District Committee by two proposed amendments. These would make the District Commissioner member of the proposed Board of Recreation its chairman and would require the signatures of the District Commissioners to all appointments made by the board.

The bill as passed by the House is a compromise measure approved by the Board of Education and the Office of National Capital Parks. It has also a rather general approval by the various organizations of District citizens. This latter approval was, in many instances, difficult to obtain.

The School Board and park office are opposed to the amendments as are many of the citizen groups. It is the feeling that these powers given to the Commissioners will put them in a position to dominate the Recreation Board. The amendments are understood to be a part of a plan to bring all boards under the control of the Com-

The consensus appears to be that such a course might well be followed as to a number of the boards. Citizen boards, however, like the School Board, Public Library trustees and proposed Board of Recreation all have such close contact with the public and render a service of so general a character that it is thought by many they should be independent bodies. They are required to handle too many details, it is thought, for the Commissioners to

The Commissioners are considered to have enough to do without undertaking functions which can be handled so efficiently by the voteless citizens. The amendments are therefore considered to be unwise and unnecessary. This legislation is badly needed. It has taken a long time and much hard work to get as far as the House bill carries it. All will be lost of this effort if these changes are insisted upon.

Opportunities Are Abundant for Defense Service.

With defense and the successful prosecution of the war as the biggest and most pressing problem there is practically no limit to what organizations and individuals can do to help. Careful and systematic organization of the civilian defense program is going forward. This will cover every neighborhood and every anticipated need and a niche can be found for every volunteer in some capacity. The neighborhood citizens' and civic associations are doing a fine job in setting up the air-raid warden system, fire-fighting, police protection and other related activities. The Board of Trade and the business and veteran organizations are undertaking other

Aside from each citizen doing his assigned duty in the program there are many ways in which the individual may help in addition. Some of these are mentioned here at random as follows:

1. Do not call up Civil Defense Headquarters or officials, unnecessarily, to find out who is your air-raid warden. Lists of these are carried in the newspapers together with other information which every individual should know. All should remember that if the time of defense officials and headquarters staff is spent answering unnecessary questions they are seriously hampered in the completion of their work of organization and training.

The civic-minded citizen would help a great deal by keeping informed and able to answer questions and to give accurate information to those with whom they come in contact.

Carry out immediately any instructions given out by the civilian defense authorities for the safety of your home or community.

2. Money is required by the Government to meet rapidly mounting cost through the sale of Defense stamps and bonds. Money is also needed badly by the American Red Cross and the Community Chest. Self-denial can enable nearly every one to buy bonds and also contribute to the Red Cross and further help the Community Chest. We can each do something along that line and Vast sums could be made readily available if the money now spent on cocktails, highballs and other alcoholic beverages could be turned into defense stamps, bonds and Red Cross and Community Chest contributions.

Athletes when in training deny themselves indulgence in alcoholic beverages and many other things. They train rigidly to win any contest they enter. The American people are entering a contest, the duration and severity of which cannot be estimated. If they go into training as true sportsmen it will put them in better position to win and make the money they are thus enabled to divert to also work for victory. Sound bodies, steady nerves and clear brains are a need of the hour

3. Every one should avoid the spreading of rumors, many of which are without the slightest foundation of fact and only tend to create a littery condition among many people. The President has wisely cautioned against this.

Rumor, constantly repeated, grows as each person adds amplifying details until the imaginative person who started it is really convinced of its authenticity.

4. The United States is "the arsenal of democracy" from which is going equipment and ammunition to its Allies and now is to be drawn heavily upon for our participation in the war.

There is another arsenal or armory available, from which can be drawn entirely different kind of equipment and ammunition than is produced in the great manufacturing plants. That armory is none other than the church.

Here one can find the solace and spiritual guidance which is always needed and more especially in these trying times. In the services of the church we can get fresh ammunition and brighten up our armor and equipment. The church and the religion we find there can help us keep our feet on the ground and sustain us in any trials or hardships which we may have to bear.

The idea is that we should each for ourselves go to this armory for our spiritual supplies and use our influence to induce others to do likewise. Religion is a necessary weapon against the barbarians who would destroy our civilization. If we can fill the churches at every service all will be the stronger for it. It was not the intention of this observer to go to sermonizing in the discussion of our civic affairs, but the thought of George Washington at prayer at Valley Forge was the inspiration. If our great Washington recognized the need and was helped through religious devotion why should not the Americans of this day of threatening disaster follow his example?

P. J. Ableman Talks of Coming Member Drive

By THOMAS G. BUCHANAN.

P. J. Ableman is a publicity mar who hates publicity—about himself. He can work up a real enthusiasm when discussing the Federation's approaching membership drive, of which he is the publicity director, or the Hampshire Heights Chronicle, which he edits each month with painstaking care. But speak to him of his personal activities and he tells you, "Now I realize how it feels to be on the other side of the fence!"

Mr. Ableman was one of the original members of the Hampshire Heights group, organized in 1938 by citizens who felt that neighboring associations no longer were in a position effectively to serve their rapidly expanding community. His efforts in publicizing the infant association were instrumental in securing for Hampshire Heights ad-

"This war situation has upset calculations. At the same time it will probably benefit citizens' associations that are doing most to protect the people of the District."

He is a member of the Civilian Defense Committee for Hampshire Heights in addition to his other civic work, and handles publicity for the local defense unit. The December edition of the Chronicle will contain a complete map of the area, with the zones and sectors into which it has been divided. Like many other civic leaders, he is indignant over the failure of Congress as yet to appropriate funds the District.

Two Subway Plans Outlined In Trade Board Unit Survey

Routes Suggested by Roberts and Myers Described; Experience of Other Cities Cited in 1937 Study

With the D'Alesandro resolution calling for a report on subway feasibility before March 15 now before the Senate District Committee, the Board of Trade is fishing out of its files a comprehensive study of the subject made by a board committee under John J. Esch in March of 1937. The resolution, sponsored by Representative D'Alesandro of Maryland, alls for the inquiry to be made by the Public Utilities Commission and In its 36-page study the Esch committee went into detail on the operation of subways in New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities before going into two subway plans suggested for the District—one by William A. Roberts, former people's counsel, and one by Col. C. E. Myers, consulting engineer of Philadelphia. Plan Covers 4 Miles.

Mr. Roberts is described as favoring the following plan:

"A routing which would intercept streetcar traffic north of Dupont Circle on Connecticut avenue and proceed underground south along this avenue and Seventeenth street to D street N.W. Another branch would intercept the streetcars north of Thomas Circle and proceed south along Fourteenth street to E street N.W. The east and west tube would be entered in the vicinity of Fourth and E streets, pass parallel to the shopping centers into Pennsylvania avenue and the north quarter of the Government triangle and thence to the south of the White House to I wenty-first street N.W. in the general line of E street. A surface line would enter the subway from the Twenty-first street end and offer a connection with the Georgetown-Persisylvania avenue lines now existing."

Mr. Roberts is quoted in the report as believing his plan, which would involve about 4 miles of subway, would permit the by-passing of a large percentage of the rush-hour operation. His estimate of cost, including adequate stations, was $16,000,000.

Myers' Plan Described.

The committee felt this estimate of about $4,000,000 a mile would be Recreation Measure of about $4,000,000 a mile would be ample in comparison with the experience of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, particularly since much of the route would be under park area and wide streets and avenues with only a two-track subway.

The plan advanced by Col. Myers bill to establish a recreation board was described as contemplating use for the District were still reported of surface cars in two-car trains underground. He suggested two short north-south surface car subto the measure by Renah F. Camaways on Fourteenth and Sevenlier, counsel for the Senate District teenth streets merging into a single east-west route on E street. The E street line was to be extended under the park area in approximate line of E street south of the White House to Seventeenth street. A short diagonal branch was to run west on Pennsylvania avenue from Seventeenth street. The E street subway was to have run as far east as Fifth street N.W.

Both of these plans were cooly received by the Public Utilities Comtion facilities and personnel which for the past decade have been under mission at the time they were offered, it was pointed out.

Because the Federal Government is responsible for the congestion of people in the downtown area, it was suggested that a large part of the cost be borne by the government.

"In the last analysis," the committee observed, "Congress holds the key to the solution of the subway Strong opposition to the amend- problem.'

All-Out War Expansion 3 to 4 Times Present Arms Rate

Business Faces

Giant Task in

Reported Necessary By FRANK MacMILLEN. NEW YORK, Dec. 13 (Wide World) -America is in an all-out war now-but it is not in an all-out war economy. Industrial men, economists, financiers, all agreed today that, with the country menaced in two oceans, we were far from the total organization for war which the conflict ultimately promised to demand.

They said England and Canada had advanced much closer to the "ideal" war situation in which the demands of the struggle had 100 per cent priority over any other call on

Canada, it was pointed out, already had clamped ceilings on the prices of all kinds of goods; had frozen wages and granted a wartime "living allowance" bonus to wage earners to take care of rising

England, in addition to roughly similar steps, had met a shortage of man power for the factories by a bill, expected to become law within a few days, registering all ablebodied man and woman power, some of it destined eventually for armed service use, some for the plants and

Surpluses Near End. Yet, industrialists here said, we appeared to be approaching the point where the whole advantage of surpluses-of men to work the factories, brains to direct them and materials to keep them goingseemed about to disappear. The magnitude of the effort was read by management men, when it "Today, our war effort is running at the rate of $1,500,000,000 a month. That is 10 times what it was when France fell, but it is only one-third to one-quarter of what will be necessary to attain victory

"Today, 20 per cent of our national energies are going into war; before we get through, one out of every two man-hours of work, one out of every two miles of transportation will be going, directly or indirectly, into the war effort-50 per cent of the country's production and distri-"And even that may not as the country entered the new phase of active combat included 1. A cessation of war production stoppages by voluntary agreement between labor and management, as in the last war; by legislation or by a combination of the two. President Roosevelt day before yesterday called a conference of labor and management groups for considering this problem.

2. A further limitation on profits. by corporate taxation, by rising costs, by reduced consumer spending in many lines because of higher individual taxes, and by sheer inability in some businesses to obtain the materials to produce for sale. 3. A further sharp expansion in facilities to produce war goods, piled on top of the already heavy new construction under way. Steel, alu-

Early Price Curb Foreseen. "Until last Sunday it looked as though Congress would pass nothing more than a flaccid form of price control law-and that so tardily that inflation would have already made serious headway, but now administration leaders believe they will get about what they want, and a little sooner," states Business Week. "Organized labor will continue to resist wage ceilings, farmers will continue to fight for high floors and no ceilings, and both interests will almost certainly win out. An increase in rail rates, practically certain to follow the rail wage boost, will give all prices a new upward lift. "Pending enactment of pricecontrol legislation, O. P. A. will extend its present control over industrial raw material prices to finished goods in the hands of manufacturers, wholesalers and-in acute situations-retailers. However, until adequate enforcement provisions are vested in O. P. A., control over prices will become inreasingly precarious.

"Don't look for a huge new tax bill immediately. The administration may ask for the moon, but congressional leaders expect to have their hands full in delivering a bill of the proportions originally proposed last month by the Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau-in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000. This is $1,500,000,000 larger than any previous single levy. Later next year when war needs have sunk home, supplementary taxes may be votedbut that possibility is clouded by the congressional elections.

War Now in Command. "The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor did not change the pattern of things to come in the United States, but it did—and does—intensify and vivify that pattern," says the magazine "Ever since the fall of France in June, 1940, war has been gradually taking command over our economy. Now war is in command. For business, the meaning is instantaneously clear. Henceforth, production will be dictated primarily by military and naval requirements. "What happens in sea and land battles will determine how much of what type of goods industry must turn out.

Rapid Strides to Pass Goodrich Chief

Special Dispatch to The Star. ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 13.-The United States has made rapid strides wresting the synthetic rubber leadmany, John L. Collyer, president

Recalling that it was in June, 1940, that the first auto tire made of synthetic rubber was offered for the sale to the American public, Collyer said the "rubber position of the United States at that time was one of the biggest question marks on the blueprints of national defense plan-"Spurred by the Nazi war lords," he declared, "the Germans had attained a synthetic rubber capacity of 20,000 tons a year, according to estimates of the United States Department of Commerce.' New Plant Rushed. "In contrast to the almost negligible 1.750 tons of synthetic rubber which the entire Nation turned out in 1939, the privately financed synthetic facilities developed by B. F. Goodrich now have a capacity of Ameripol," the article stated.

"Upon completion next year of a beginning January 1. ernment's Defense Plant Corporation, a single American firm, the Hycar Chemical Co .- a straightsynthetic rubber production unit organized by B. the synthetic rubber output of the entire United States last year, Collyer said. Other Firms Busy. "Paralleling this development have been the results achieved by a number of other companies both in and out of the rubber industry proper,

"Estimates are that these companies, which include Du Pont, Standard Oil, Goodyear, Firestone end of next year, have developed privately financed production of thetic rubber per year. In addition, Firestone and United States, are plants similar to that which B. F. Goodrich is building at Louisville The Government-owned plants will be in operation in from 15 to 18 months, it is expected. "All in all, the total American production of synthetic rubber of various types is expected to approximate 70,000 tons a year by the end of 1942, and thus the United

Commodity Price Changes in Week

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13 .- The average price of important commodities advanced to the highest levels since April, 1937, during the first week of United States participation in the Second World War.

In the case of many commodities the new advances were merely continuations of a trend under way for months. Other staples, the production or transportation of which were linked to combat areas throughout the world advanced in direct response to war developments.

On the whole, price changes were orderly and there was scant evidence of furious speculative buying. A. P. Index Jumps.

The Associated Press commodity index, based on 1926 as 100, jumped to 94.92 from 92.54 in the preceding week and 77.43 a year ago. The index is comprised of 35 wholesale staples sold in spot cash markets.

Food and grains and cotton components of the index reached new nighs for the year. The full index has advanced seven out of the past Federal officials placed price ceilings on several commodities when there were indications quotations might get out of hand, but some were almost immediately removed. Comment. BALTIMORE.—The upturn in trade accompanying the Christmas buying rush was slowed somewhat early this week by consumer uncertainty following the outbreak of war. Retail trade gains over 1940 were smaller than in the preceding week. Unit turnover in wholesale circles has fallen below last year, but price increases maintain dollar volume above 1940 levels. Bank clearings registered a gain of 32 per cent over a year ago.

CHICAGO.—Consumer reaction to the first shock of war news was varied, but on the whole retail sales declined slightly early this week, following good volume gains last week. Sales decreased sharply in some gift lines, while sales of other merchandise such as radios and special foods da's allies. shot upward. Stockyards experienced a wave of buying but wholesale markets generally remained dull. The steel rate advanced to 102 per cent $1,217,000 in November as against of capacity. First scrap allocation award was received in the area; supobservers in view of what happened plies are still tight, with most mills reporting less than a month's supply available. Bank clearings were 22 per cent above 1940.

CLEVELAND.—Retail spending continued at exceptionally high levels, although gains over 1940 tended to narrow, sales remained well above last year's level. Building permit value and outgoing freight traffic were lowest since last March and April. Manufacturing activity continued at Bonds of New South Wales and peak levels. A survey of the large industrial concerns indicates that 8 per Australia recorded some wide swings cent will decrease forces during the next few weeks, 57 per cent anticipate either way but foreign loan deals no change, and 35 per cent will hire more workers. Bank clearings were

25 per cent greater than 1940. DETROIT.—Despite mild weather which caused duliness in ready-totic list were Southern Railway 4s wear departments, retail sales expanded smartly in the week as Christat 57%. Wabash 5s at 21%. Utah mas purchasing increased. Merchants reported consumer buying generally Light & Traction 5s at 100, Nickel unaffected by the declaration of war. Sales gains over last year were moderately higher than 1940. Wholesale markets were seasonally quiet; activity was 20 per cent better than 1940. Automobile production declined to 90,205 units from 93,495 last week. War activity is steadily increasing, with an estimated 10,000 workers hired monthly and about 95,000 now em-

INDIANAPOLIS.—Retail spending increased very substantially over munications concern with foreign the previous week as buying neared the holiday high, but dollar volume was Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., will submit only 10 per cent above 1940, compared with a 25 per cent gain last week. Wholesalers continue to report activity about 30 per cent ahead of last year. Under the impetus of war work, manufacturing activity held at an

KANSAS CITY.—The impetus of increasing holiday purchasing moved retail sales totals higher in the week, but dollar volume gains over 1940 were small, and unit turnover lagged behind last year. Wholesale activity also expanded and compared favorably with a year ago. The volume of check transactions was 30 per cent larger than 1940.

LOUISVILLE.—Record-breaking Christmas purchases kept retail sales totals well above 1940 levels as volume approached the year's peak; outbreak of hostilities apparently had little immediate effect on consumer buying. The large influx of defense workers has sharply stimulated sales BALTIMORE. Dec. 13.—Live poultry went through another week with only a few items affected by chances in quotations. Canadian War Shipments Boosted in November

OTTAWA, Dec. 13 (Canadian Press).—Canadian supplies rolled to her allies in increasing quantity during November and export figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics today showed a gain in value of 381/2 per cent in comparison with the same month last year.

The dominion's total exports were $162,435,000 compared with $117,-452,000 in November, 1940. For the 11 months of 1941. Canadian exports were $1,470,531,000 against $1,081,333,000 in 1940.

Exports to empire countries rose to $85,059,000 compared with $67,-484,000 in November last year and to foreign countries $77,376,000 against $49,968,000.

The bureau said a feature of the November export was the rush "of presumably war supplies" to countries engaged in the war as Cana-nothing in the previous year.

The value of exports to Egypt, the base from which British armies have struck at the Axis forces in Libya was $10,394,000, an increase of five times over the total for November, 1940.

Exports to British India, where Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell is in command of a great army, were $3.519.000 or twice those of a year

Canada Dry Plans Vote On Financing January 12

pecial Dispatch to The Star. NEW YORK, Dec. 13.-Canada ating a new issue of convertible preferred stock to its stockholders at an annual and special meeting to be held January 12, 1941, according to a letter mailed to stockholders last night.

Stockholders will be asked to authorize the creation of 30.208 shares of new preferred stock which will have a dividend rate, to be fixed by the directors, of not less than $5 and not more than $5.50 annually. The conversion price, likewise to be fixed by the directors, will be not less than 10 per cent above the market price of the common stock at the time conversion price is determined Subject to market conditions and to registration under the Securities Act, rights to subscribe for the new convertible preferred stock for limited period, in the ratio of one share of new preferred stock for each 20 shares of common stock held, will be issued to stockholders shortly after the meeting. It is contemplated that the offering will be underwritten by a banking group headed by Union Securities Corp. and G. M.-P. Murphy & Co.

materials shortages into the war effort, and that implies that general manufacturing companies may find it increasingly difficult to obtain equipment, such as business machines, cigar and cigarette-making machinery, shoe machinery, textile machines, food-packaging devices,

"And one thing is certain. This is no one-or-two-month trend. As President Roosevelt said, this will be a long, hard war."

Czecho-Slovak Minister Visits In New York

The Czecho-Slovak Minister and Mme. Hurban are spending the week end in New York with the latter's mother and sister, Mrs. Bozene Boor and Miss Vera Boor. The Minister will come back to Washington the 100th anniversary of the great musician's birth and will take place in the house where Dvorak lived

The room where the dedication will be held is the one used by the composer as his study and where he wrote his "New World Symphony." The Minister will be among the speakers at the ceremony and are Mayor Fiorello La Guardia and Prime Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, M. Jan Masarvk.

York announces the engagement of her younger daughter, Miss Mary Harrison Reisinger, to Mr. Albert Edward Oelschlaeger, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Oelschlaeger of Carmel and New York City. The formal announcement was made at a dinner last evening which Miss Reisinger's grandmother, Mrs. Busch Greenough, gave at the Hotel St. Regis in New York, where Mrs. Greenough makes her home

Miss Reisinger's mother, who formerly was Miss Mary Lodge McKee, was presented in Washington by her parents, Mr. James Robert McKee and the late Mrs. McKee of New York and Greenwich, Conn., and after her first season in Washington returned each winter for a visit until after her marriage to Mr. Curt Reisinger of New York. The late Mrs. McKee acted as hostess for her father, the late President Benjamin Harrison, after the death of her mother, Caroline Scott Harrison, first presidentgeneral of the D. A. R., in the White House shortly before the close of that administration.

Miss Mary Reisinger Capital Hostesses Decide To Continue Entertaining As Far as War Permits

Debut Parties for Misses Baker And Cutler, and Merry Dance For Miss Rizik Set Tone

By MARGARET HART,

"Of course, it is difficult to put my heart in planning gayety now, but, on the other hand, I do believe that a bit of lightness is needed to lessen the strain of worry," remarked one of Washington's leading hostesses yesterday. "I can do my part," she continued, "by encouraging my friends to carry on in as normal a manner as possible." And this seems to be the opinion of a number of others who are headliners in the social news, for there has been much entertaining since war was declared. However, it must be admitted that little enthusiasm over frivolity was evidenced, smiles seemed forced and the usual chitchat was replaced by serious discussions of how one could best serve the country.

Mrs. Parker W. West and other members of the Friday Evening Dancing Class are leaders in the growing movement to carry on and will continue their dances as long as possible. The next dance is scheduled for January 23. The committee has requested the members of the class to simplify whatever festivities they arrange before the dances, which will be less formal this year. The remaining dances will be given as scheduled unless a greater emergency arises.

Miss Patricia Baker Bows To Society at Informal Tea.

Parties for members of the younger set are expected to high light the calendar throughout the holiday season, but these affairs, too, will be simple and without much fanfare.

Yesterday the spotlight centered on two attractive debutantes who omade their formal debuts very informally at late afternoon parties. Miss Patricia Baker, the daughter of Capt. Charles Adams Baker, who is on duty at the United States Embassy in London, was introduced to society by Mrs. Herbert Feis, wife of the adviser on international affairs at a tea in her home in Georgetown. The party was from 5:30 until 7:30 o'clock, arrangements were quite simple and the guests were mostly young people with only a few of the (See HART, Page D-6.)

Miss Skinner Is Bride of Mr. Slibeck

Gold and white was the color motif of a wedding yesterday afternoon in the Woodside Methodist Church in Silver Spring, Md., when Miss Barbara Skinner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lew T. Skinner, became the bride of Mr. Howard E. Slibeck, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Slibeck of Clarendon Hills, Ill.

Masses of gold and white chrysanthemums were banked at the altar and garlands of the flowers marked the pews and white lighted tapers in tall brass candelabra illumined the church for the 4 o'clock ceremony, at which the Rev. Ralph D. Smith officiated. A program of nuptial music, which included the traditional wedding marches, was played by Mrs. Dorothy Eniery.

Miss Agnes Elliott, the bride's only attendant, preceded her in the procession to the altar Her gold color dress was of silk jersey trimmed with matching braid and made with a fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline, short sleeves and full skirt. She wore a coronet of talisman roses and carried an arm bouquet of the same

Society Clubs Are Turning To Emergency War Work

Wives and Daughters of Congress Planning Active Aid; Junior League Helps Red Cross

Washington is a city of many varied social organizations, but in this time of emergency each little circle already is busily making plans to work for the general good. Among such organizations are the Congressional Club, the Senate Ladies Luncheon Club, the Junior League, the Senate Daughters, and the Daughters of the House. Many of these already have begun Red Cross work, while others are making plans for their group to take part in the relief activities suggested by the American Red Cross.

The Congressional Club has never been a purely social organization, for the members have always devoted much of their time to Red Cross Junior League Takes work, lectures, and studies of the arts. Since Mrs. Roosevelt's suggestionin early fall-that elaborate entertainments be curtailed, many of the formal receptions, such as that which the club annually gives for the wife of the President, are expected to be missing from next year's program. The Galleries Put on Style Show As President Asks for War: Mme. Litvinova Wins Admiration

By ROBERT CRAWFORD.

It is doubtful if a joint session of Congress ever witnessed a more elegantly dressed body of women than turned out Monday to hear President Roosevelt ask a declaration of a state of war with Japan. It was one of the most brilliant and representative audiences the Capitol has seen in some time and the eyes of Secretary Ickes must have opened wide when he looked toward the gallery and saw that display of sable and orchids, mink, sealskin, silver fox and even a touch here and there of royal ermine. And speaking of sealskins, Secretary Ickes' Wildlife Service reported that up to August 8, the take of sealskins at the Pribilof Islands was 95,-013, and that 15 per cent went to . Japan under terms of an existing reaty.

Silver foxes are reported much Manassas more exclusive as the take amounted to only 632 skins. Young Mrs. Students Back
James Roosevelt's lovely mink coat with orchids was a pretty contrast to Mrs. Roosevelt's silver fox furs and orchids. . . . and by the way the year's 43,700 mink skins brought only an average of $8.50 apiece at the Government auction.

President of P.-T. A. Congress Outlines Group's Defense Role

For Any Duty Nation May Demand

By MRS. P. C. ELLETT,

The question has been asked of me-and of other officers of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers: "What part will the Parent-Teacher Association take in the defense program?" Because that question has been asked a number of times, by people from various walks in life, I feel it is only fair to make some public statement.

When the National Congress of Parents and Teachers was organized on a bleak, cold day in February, &

1897, its very wise founders set up day. Mrs. M. B. Pettit, president, "objectives" which they proposed to will be in charge of the group of will be in charge of the group of activities. These five objectives are practically the same today as then; only a slight change in wordage has been made in one, which in nowise alters its meaning. For the benefit of those unfamiliar with the objectives, I submit them: "To promote the welfare of children and youth in home, school, church and community. "To raise the standards of home

"To secure adequate laws for the care and protection of children and

"To bring into closer relation the home and the school, that parents and teachers may co-operate intelligently in the training of the objects should convince any reader that the program of the Parent-Teacher Association has been one of conservation; one of construction; one of welfare; one of defense.

For it has conserved the youth of our country by elevating health standards, food habits, mental habits; by teaching personal and community responsibility; it has furnished many types of adult education courses, attended by thoua century that its summer round- Cracker Suite," by Tschaikowsky, up has been in force, and through will be presented by pupils of the these examinations has been able to school. direct attention of parents to remediable defects, which in the majority of cases have been corrected; to provide the means for teaching proper oral hygiene to school children; it has been a pioneer in the supplementary milk lunches and in the free school lunch program; it has cared for thousands of children through its Student Aid Committee work; it has never failed to align itself with accepted educational methods and programs; it has cooperated with other organizations in bringing to an effective conclusion legislation which would operate to the benefit of children.

These and many other instances may be cited as evidence of the effectiveness of the parent-teacher program as a defense contribution.

Mrs. Matthew Stirling Likes Card Party Jungle Housekeeping Job

Wife Serves as Camp Maker on Trips With Smithsonian Chief To Seek Olmic Indian Relics

By GRETCHEN SMITH.

Housekeeping in tropical jungles which involves carting supplies in a station wagon over the rugged roads of Central America is Mrs. Matthew W. Stirling's idea of a good time.

The attractive, brown-eyed, dark-haired wife of the chief of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution has been preparing to Society from 2 to 5 p.m. tomorrow leave with Dr. Stirling for an archeological survey of several countries at the home of the president, Mrs. of Central America. Although plans are now indefinite, the Stirlings expect to leave as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

Last May they returned from a scientific expedition into Mexico, where at the little settlement of Cerro de las Mesas, south of Veracruz, Dr. Stirling sought relics of the Olmic Indians, whose culture and civilization is supposed to have existed. before that of the Mayans. On such scientific trips, Mrs. Stirling said, it is her job to see that the camp functions satisfactorily and that provisions and supplies of every kind are available.

Description of Camp

In Jungle Is Given. "I must see there is everything from soap to can openers," she continued, "because after we are once established in camp it is difficult to get anything but native foods

On the last expedition Mrs. Stirling provided for five people in addition to herself for a period of three and a half months in the jungle. The party included the photographer, Richard Stewart, an assistant anthropologist, Philip Drucker of the Smithsonian, and two Mexican foremen. Domestic help was secured locally.

The scientist's wife described the establishment of a camp. First, natives clear away the thick jungle growth at the location they plan to excavate, she said, and from the high palm trees cut hundreds of large palm leaves used to cover the cottage roofs. These buildings are waterproof and comfortable, Mrs. Stirling declared. In addition to lodgings for the explorers, there is also a cottage used by the photographer as a dark room, another for a storeroom and others for domestic help and kitchen.

To really enjoy these "jaunts into the jungle" one must learn to like native foods and pastimes, Mrs. Stirling remarked.

"I have learned to make most of the native dishes," she continued. Mrs. Ehrlich "The tamales, tortillas and enchilladas are really delicious. In Cerro de las Mesas we made these dishes from corn, beans and chile grown in that part of Mexico."

The campers also enjoy the local

This condition is being rapidly corrected by the Mexican government, she added, and young men teachers are now being sent to the active in the work of training and most remote parts of the country. Mrs. Stirling also assists with archaeological work of the expeditions. She explained how she remained in the camp to check the baskets of potsherds, or broken fragments, excavated from the ruins as they were brought by carriers from the places where the anthropologists supervised the digging. Each basket is properly tagged, its

To Benefit Needy

Sunshine Society Will Entertain Tomorrow

A benefit card party will be given by the Sunshine and Community Maurice A. Emerson, 3057 Porter street N.W. Proceeds will be used by the Benevolent Committee for its work among needy families as well as for gifts and messages of cheer to men, women and children in hospitals or homes.

The benevolent works of the society include provision of bedside bags, magazines, playing cards, cigarettes, chewing gum and similar items to patients in Walter Reed and Mount Alto Hospitals under direction of the Hospital Committee. The group also dresses dolls, makes scrapbooks and fills stockings for little patients in Children's Hospital. The Child Welfare Committee cooperates with the students' aid project by collecting clothes, contributing cash and outfitting children for graduation.

Needy Families Aided.

Needy families not on relief are upplied with shelter, fuel, food, clothing and furniture. Frequently, immediate assistance is given persons who would otherwise suffer before such necessities as food, shelter or fuel could be obtained through regular channels.

New Junior D. A. R. Magazine Edited by Local Member

By FRANCES LIDE.

Junior Daughters of the American Revolution now have their own official publication—a magazine called Echoes, with headquarters in Washington.

Edited by Edna Boyden Millward, a member of the Mary Washington Chapter, it made its bow with a national defense number. And the opinions it expressed proved to very pertinent and up-to-date.

In its lead editorial Echoes emphasized that it was a privilege, rather than a sacrifice, to work to keep America's freedom. Although in striking harmony with a passage of the President's fireside chat, the editorial was not an "echo," having been published several days before our entry into war.

"So I can't be accused of plagiarizing," the author remarked. The daughter of Russell Hastings Millward, explorer and former member of the American consular service, Miss Millward's principal interests lie in the literary field and she frequently assists her father in the preparation of magazine articles.

The family-father, mother and daughter-have a hobby printing press which they call the "Press of the Three Bears." It gives each an opportunity to dash off literary pieces whenever the muse

Active in D. A. R. work as long as she can remember, Miss Millward said her dues were paid for life when she was 2 years old. She was enrolled with the Children of the American Revolution until she outgrew it, and has served in several capacities as a Junior D. A. R. Last year she was chairman of the junior program for the national congress and chairman of the Mary Washington Juniors. Circulation manager of the magazine also is a Washington girl, Miss Mary Louise Fry, a member of the Army and Navy Chapter

In her campaign to make America "physically fit for defense," Alice Marble, former world tennis champion, urges a daily routine of exercise for every man, woman and child. Naturally she considers tennis about the ideal form of exercise and recreation but Miss Marble also is an enthusiastic advocate of walking.

Walking played a major part in her own physical comeback from a two years' illness resulting from sunstroke, she recalled last week when she spoke to the Women's Athletic Association of George Washington University. She believes that her "background of bad health" was partially responsible for her appointment as assistant director of civilian defense in charge of physical training for women.

Although the war will doubtless prevent some of its scheduled speakers from participating, the midwinter board meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs promises to be an exceptionally interesting session.

The program, as announced on the eve of war, featured several forums on defense, with a galaxy of distinguished men and women invited to take part.

Three cabinet members-Secretary Morgenthau, Secretary Knox and Secretary Perkinsare listed for addresses. William S. Knudsen, Leon Henderson and Donald Nelson are others down for discussions.

Arrangements also were made to present Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, Dr. L. S. Rowe, Paul V. McNutt, Dr. Thomas Parran, J. Edgar Hoover and many others

Legion's Defense Chairman Calls for Aircraft Spotters

Post Commanders Urged to Classify Membership for Volunteer Duty

Don Stanley, chairman of the National Defense Committee of the District of Columbia Department, the American Legion, last week issued a call for Legionnaires not serving as air-raid wardens to enroll as aircarft warning observers. They should contact him at American Legion headquarters.

All post commanders are urged to classify their membership by area, telephone numbers and availability for defense call. They should report to the department adjutant, Michigan 1044, or to Legion headquarters when completed.

The National Legion will present awards of $100, $50 and $25 to winners of the national post history contest. First-prize winners of previous years are not eligible, but any other winner may enter. Entries are due at national headquarters on May 1, 1942.

-and to many recreation means travel-is a necessity for all workers, and it becomes even more of an essential to clear thinking and maximum efficiency when nerves are jagged and the "ravel'd sleeve of care" is even more in need of knitting than in ordinary times. In a recent radio broadcast, ar-here. Newton B. Drury, director of the National Park Service, was asked if he advocated travel in emergency times. Mr. Drury replied: "Of course, I cannot speak as to official policy, but if people cannot travel they will miss a great deal of just the sort of inspiration they and this country need.

Variety Lies Within Range of National Capital.

The inspirational phase of travel is positive, and while Mr. Drury's opinion was voiced before the actual declaration of hostilities, it is as true today as it was then. Motorists cannot travel across the country, or even from one section to another, without being all the more impressed with their American heritage of natural and man-made wonders. They "see what they defend."

Washingtonians are fortunate in that their city is located within easy driving distance of many distinct "sections" of our great country. A couple of hours or so to the eastward and they may be on the Eastern Shore, with its salty flavor. Steamship Travel Somewhat Curbed In Wake of War Ocean voyages, one of the more alluring phases of recreational travel and a dim reminder of prewar trips to Europe, have been restricted relatively little as a result of the series of stunning blows dealt by last week's declarations of war. Foremost casualty, as far as the ourist is concerned, is the temporary halt of pleasure travel to Bermuda, the famous bit of England off the Carolina coast. With other places where the United States is building a line of hemisphere defense bases, Bermuda has been crossed off the availability list by the State Department, which for the present, at least, is clearing passports only for defense workers. Other lands to which this restriction applies include Jamaica, British Guiana and Trinidad. Travel for purely pleasure also has been discontinued for the Panama Canal Zone for the immediate future.

It is emphasized that the situation is in a state of flux, and restrictions will be relaxed as conditions warrant. With the initial shock of war, the State Department acted to protect Americans against travel that might prove unwise, and at the same time safeguard America's defense effort.

No restrictions have been applied to Canada, Mexico or Cuba.

Another major casualty was reported in the cancellation of the Caribbean cruises of the Swedish-American Line's Kungsholm, one of the last "name" ships to desert the subtropical waters so popular be-fore September, 1939. Notice that the company would not carry out its winter schedule of sailings reached local travel agencies late last week. Earlier in the week, the Merchants & Miners' line announced that its ships, touching American ports, had discontinued passenger service.

Other steamship companies are. in general, accepting reservations for future sailings and travel to Latin American ports continues. In some cases the State Department is orts, but has not adopted a policy of refusing to grant clearance for ports in the continent to the south.

Travel and Morale

ments, but Americans are free to travel to wherever they desire to go within the United States and this freedom applies generally to countries of the Western Hemisphere. It is true that the United States Maritime Commission has ordered the suspension of the publication of sailings as a wartime precaution, but bookings continue to be made at the offices of steamship lines serving the West Indies, Central and South America. In view of a seven-day week for plant facilities in defense Paid vacations continue in Germany and Great Britain. With World War II in its third year, the practice followed by

Despite the war, the importance of vacations has thus peen realized. In Great Britain paid vacations stopped in 1940 owing to the emergency following the fall of France. This year, however, the British government favors the observance of paid vacations and is reported as announcing "granting of paid vacations is believed to assure efficiency in war production and other essential business." In the United States, the importance of industries providing vacations with pay for all workers has long been recognized. Vacations with pay to every one not only promote better help, better morale, greater patriotism and more loyalty, but they stimulate confidence in the minds of workers who have the opportunity of seeing more of their country.

The war may well bring the American people to the realization that it is necessary to stagger vacations rather than every one attempting to take a vacation during July, August and September of each year.

Many of our resort and recreation areas could operate the year around if vacation schedules permitted workers to visit them. When that is done, it is my belief that vacation cost will decrease because it will make it possible for the resort and recreation areas to spread their operating and capital cost over a period of 12 months each year rather than over a period of three or four months. health, wealth and unity, many Americans are making plans for winter vacations.

One of the oldest pieces of winter sport equipment is the snowshoe. Years ago it was the main means of transportation during the winter for Indian, trapper and settler. At one time the pleasures of snowshoeing were indulged in by thousands, many clubs were formed and had huge memberships. There is a twinkle in the eyes of old-timers as they speak of torch-light parades, tossing in a blanket, and gay suppers after a tramp on the webbed shoes.

Much good ski terrain is passed in jumping from Winnipeg, in Manitoba, where curlers gather from all over to attend the annual bonspiel, to the slopes of the Rockies in Alberta and British Columbia, Alpine skiing of limitless extent, the like of which is accessible in few other parts of the world, has made the Canadian Rockies famous to skiers everywhere.

Winter is fun in Canada, and the citizen of the United States who wishes to test its possibilities will find no difficulties in his way when crossing the harbor. The 10 per cent premium on United States currency will permit of a profitable holiday whether it is spent at one of the luxurious resorts or at one of those clean, comfortable and homey farm dwellings which are always to be found near and seem to fit in so well with winter sport country.

they are: Don't scorn the Spanish language. Learn Spanish before you go to Latin America, if you can. It will enable you to understand the Latins and their customs in a way which is impossible without knowledge of the language. If this is impractical, try to learn enough words of Spanish to explain to your Latin hosts that it is not disinterest which accounts for your ignorance, but that the briefness of your visit is at fault. By all means don't go around saving loudly and proudly, "English is good enough for me; you'll have to talk

You wouldn't do it at home so don't said that the expert chooses the upset the local economy by trying simple things, the novice selecting to show how much largesse we fortunate North Americans can throw around in Latin lands. Remember, most of those among whom you live on your trip must stay there: they can't afford to hold year round the pace you set for a few weeks. Tip 10 per cent.

Don't try to change Latin America overnight. Jawing the Latins on what you think may be faults of their social and political system will help no one. If you really want to change their system settle down and go to work there.

Don't laugh at their money. You may feel like it when you see how many Latin dollars your dollar can buy. But in the Latin's eyes this is a cheap form of boasting. Don't laud or belabor neighbor nations. There is a great deal of jealousy among the Latin countries, much like that which existed between our States in the early days of the United States. To praise Ecuador while in Peru, or Brazil while in Argentina, or Bolivia while in Paraguay, is to risk trouble and almost certain to hurt feelings Don't run down neighboring countries, but limit your comments to approval of Latin comments on the friendly side.

Making Date With a Girl Is Serious Business.

Don't try to date all the girls you meet. Woman's place in Latin America is a distinctly different one than in North America. Her friendships with men are carefully guarded, especially in the better families. Try to make a date and you may find yourself on the wrong side of the social fence-the other side of the railroad tracks, which in Latin America are very wide.

Don't plan your itinerary too much in detail. Leave a little time at each stopping place, and give your Latin hosts a chance to suggest where you should go to understand their country better. Trains Ready For Usual Service

Travel Other Than in Holiday Season Advisable

The men who guide the Nation's ransportation facilities realize that schedules now in effect are subject to sudden disruption by emergency requirements of the war effort, yet they feel that those fortunate enough to be planning winter vacations can count on stand ard, even de luxe, service. As usual, they urge early reservation of space. The Christmas season is not recommended for travel by persons able to choose earlier or later departures. Yuletide is the usual occasion for a heavy flow to visit "the home folks," and this year railroads and bus lines are geared to a Christmas rush accentuated by large numpers of soldiers granted leave.

Airlines' advertising in recent months has concentrated on the advantages of high-speed business travel in view of the rush keynote of the defense program. However, some Southern schedules have not been taxed to the extent experienced on the routes from the Capital to industrial centers of the East and Midwest. The winter vacationer can use the airplane if he makes arrangements well in advance of planned departure but in some cases may be asked to relinquish his reservation in favor of some one on a particularly urgent Gov-

the most difficult courses in the East. Guntertown is 140 miles from Washington and New Germany about 150 miles, both on Route 40, and both are reported to be in readiness for outdoor sports with the first fall of snow.

A little farther away and in a different direction is the "Pocono Country" up in the highlands of Monroe, Pike and Wayne Counties in Northeastern Pennsylvania. Pocono Manor, center of winter sports activities, is about 15 miles northwest of Stroudsburg and only 224 miles from Washington. Pocono Manor offers winter sports in one of the most scenic locations in the beautiful Pocono Hills. The inn itself is located on a high mountaintop, surrounded by winter sports attractions

There are many other snow sport areas in Pennsylvania-Champion, near the Donegal interchange of the Pennsylvania turnpike; Deer Valley, at Meyersdale, 40 miles northwest Cumberland, Md., on United States 219; Eagles Mere, off United States 220, just 36 miles northeast of Williamsport; Kane, 29 miles dozen others, all with various types of skiing facilities and provision for other winter sports.

Moderate Weather Found In Carolinas and Georgia.

There are few provisions for winter sports in Shenandoah National Park, closest national park to Washington, since the fall of snow in these mountains, as in the Great Smokies, farther south, is something of a "catch as catch can" proposition. There are two good ski slopes in the Senandoah-when there's snow. They are located at Big Meadows and the Pinnacles, but you have to bring your own equipment Many Washington motorists will want to get away from the wartime Capital sometime during the winter for a rest, whose preference is for the warmth of the South.

Although they do not combine the magic "sun, sea and sand" of Florida, the resort cities of the Carolinas and Northern Georgia offer a letdown for taut nerves, recreation aplenty and a much more moderate climate than is found either at the snow resorts, or even in Washington in wintertime.

Polo, horseback riding, hunting and golf characterize these resorts. in general. Northernmost of them are the twin cities of the North Carolina sandhills—Pinehurst and Southern Pines-where hundreds of Easterners "winter," or spend one, two or three day vacations whenever the opportunity presents itself. A little farther to the west is Sedgefield, N. C., not far from Greensboro, where the winter clientele may enjoy (and participate in) golf matches and other sports. And then, of course, there's Asheville, near the Great Smokies, where the climate is sort of "in-between"neither winter sports nor tropical sports-and where the cold, clear air of the mountains brings vigor and a refreshed outlook on life. A little farther south are Aiken. S. C., and Augusta, Ga., a bit more than a comfortable day's drive from Washington, but attractive, with their moderate climate, fox hunts, golf and polo, of course, and a hundred other attractions for the tourist. And there are dozens of other recreation spots near Washington which have in common with the place mentioned these points: Distance from the activities on the seaboard and from the tremendous surge of defense activities in the cities and industrial areas. That, of course, is a major consideration in recreational travel.

It has been said that "the national morale must be maintained at the highest standard to achieve ultimate victory. Travel strengthens America by building its health, wealth and unity."

Historic Places Recall Birth Of Freedom

It is a source of pride to Virginians that in the present world-wide struggle between the ideologies of democracy and dictatorship, many of the fundamental principles of democracy were formulated by native sons of the Mother State.

Because of this fact, the homes of great Virginians of years gone by have become historic shrines. Carefully preserved throughout the years by loving and appreciative hands, these buildings are the travel objectives annually of thousands who come to pay homage to these sons of the past and to gain new inspiration for the American way of

The Nation was born in Virginia on May 13, 1607, when a courageous band of Englishmen, having been tossed hither and yon on a rough and stormy sea, dropped anchor at Jamestown and established the first permanent English settlement in America. Here, too, in 1619, was set up the first representative assembly in the new world-the beginning of our system of representative government. Thus, the Virginia Legislature, which met first at Jamestown and later at Williamsburg, and which meets now at Richmond, holds the distinction of being the oldest legislative assembly in the Western Hemisphere.

Mexican Truckers Name Vehicles

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 13 .- The Mexican truck driver who has swapped his burro for the most modern implement of transportation, the truck, still retains his affection for the vehicle he drives.

This personal feeling is exhibited by the names which he bestows upon the trucks-just as he did upon the ancient burro. "My Little Sweetheart" is the name inscribed on a huge truck which plies in the Mexico City suburbs. "Guadalupe," "Hope," "Mickey Mouse" and "Zapata's Ride" are some of the names recently spotted here.

One truck making regular trips between Mexico City and Acapulco tops them all for nomenclature: "Vengan borregos," which, freely translated, means: "Gangway, goats!"

Pictures of the Year

4. "The Philadelphia Story," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

8. "The Stars Look Down," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer,

Take it all in all, than which there is no other way, the movies have dealt kindly by those of their critics who feel a compulsion to end the year by selecting the 10 screen plays which they regard as the best of 1941. It was not always thus. Inevitably in a year in which even 11 pictures are produced there is such a thing as a 10-best list. But in many years of 400 to 500 productions it has been difficult to find 10 that were unreluctantly deemed worthy of being set apart from the mass of the cinema output. It was so easy to find a flaw that marred the choice, that left the selector on the defensive. Thus when he came to his seventh picture, or perhaps at some higher level on the list, he had a sense of making a fool of himself or being made a fool of by Hollywood.

Not this year! "Citizen Kane" Tops List.

Even a timid fellow could stand his ground, for instance, on his choice of "Citizen Kane" as the prize bit of screen storytelling in 1941. It is true that Orson Welles' "rosebud" symbolism may have been somewhat obscure—drama depart- may have been startled to find ments did receive calls asking them to explain—but it was a fascinating dramatic character he created and a refreshing method that he devel- Foxes." Entirely apart from its inspiring excellence as a piece of Americana, "Sergt. York" was as fine a piece of entertainment as Hollywood has found in the well-thumbed library of heroic biography. HOLLYWOOD. Taking their cue from the successful Liberty Loan drives of the World War days of 1917, the United States Government and the motion picture industry will shortly launch a Nation-wide Defense bonds and stamp sales drive through the personal appearance of leading stars of the screen. This became known today when studio heads were informally adcontrived play. The sleeper picture of the year, or of all the years since "The Informer," was "Night Train," British-made thriller, which public literally jammed down the throats of distributor-critics who scorned it when it first appeared in this country. Its nine-week downtown run in Washington and its subsequent months of running in neighborhood houses established it as a screen play of universal appeal. In its obedience to the first law of screen entertainment-that a movie must move-it set a standard that other pictures may shoot at for years.

"Flight From Destiny," which Warner Bros. deemed not quite suitable for general audiences on the ground that its story was too intellectual, turned out to be one of the most brilliant character studies yet achieved by Hollywood. Its hero, an elderly philosopher with six months to live, who decides to accomplish a socially useful murder, gives Thomas Mitchell a chance to win that major acting award which heretofore has eluded him while winning prizes for best supporting performances.

Montgomery Scores Again. There will be those whose enthusiasm for the brilliant fantasy of "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" will dispose them to argue for it a higher place than seventh on this department's list. If they were here right now they would not need much argument. Rarely has a studio dared to be as bravely capricious as Columbia in making this picture, which introduced Robert Montgomery as a prize fighter who was killed destiny. Handled with less skill, the film might have been nightmarish instead of a brilliantly ordered, fascinating adventure into fantasy Social significance is a theme that studios do not accept with relish, which makes it all the more admirable of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to have made an excellent piece worth-while entertainment of Dr. A. J. Cronin's "The Stars Look Down." Their Names Mean Little Today, but—

They'll Be Spelled in Lights Soon, Say Directors Who Have Selected Six 'Bonfire Starlets'

By Harold Heffernan,

HOLLYWOOD. "Bonfire starlets of 1942." That was the burning brand imprinted last week on half a dozen of Hollywood's prettiest, shapeliest young actresses - girls whom 25 leading motion picture directors voted the most physically attractive young women to come before their gaze during 1941.

Inaugurating movietown's annual riot of roundups and year-end "polls," the directors decided to ballot themselves a slate of six girls basing their selections on physical appeal rather than acting abilitywho might be expected to cut the widest swath in celluloid glamour circles during the coming 12 months.

The "delectable six," as voted by the men who make pictures by day and study screen tests by night, are: Suzanne Ridgeway.

Ava Gardner. Faith Dorn. Janis Carter. Alaine Brandes.

HOLLYWOOD. From a young friend who spent an afternoon and evening in the Harold Lloyd home, as the guest of his two daughters, I have some idea what life is like in a gilded cage. The young friend, who attends a private school where Mildred and Gloria Lloyd also go, said the Lloyd mansion certainly is a keen place to visit, but she is very certain she wouldn't trade places.

The youngster was impressed before she even got onto the Lloyd rounds. A guard first had to know her name before he could open the about the number of stars that gate. There was a long drive from the gate to the house, past a golf course, tennis courts, a waterfall Sam Speagle) got this idea: They

In reality the title of assistant director is a misnomer. According to William Tummel and William Mc-Garry, first and second assistant directors, respectively, for Ernst Lubitsch in the filming of "To Be or Not to Be," an assistant director has to be a walking encyclopedia, trouble shooter, mind reader, alarm clock for the stars, buffer for the director and front office, lawyer,

AMONG THE STAMP COLLECTORS

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People—Review of the Stamp Press—List of Local Meetings

By James Waldo Fawcett. The first World War had a stimulating effect upon stamp collecting, and there is reason to believe that the present conflict may have similar constructive influence upon

Of course, the preoccupation of the whole population of the United States in labor identified with the national cause is apt to put a halt to the systematic acquisition and study of stamps so long as the struggle continues.

But that does not mean that the philatelic hobby will languish. The campaign which is to end with America's defeat of her enemies-it cannot terminate until that victory has been achieved—is of such a character os to increase popular interest in the world at large. Soldiers and sailors serving in the Orient will retain memories of their experiences which will remain a cultural asset throughout their lyives. The same may be said for those who participate in the fighting on other fronts. It is natural that stamp collecting should prosper in the circumstances.

Meanwhile the absence of boys and men fro mtheir homes promotes correspondence. Each wartime cover is a "collector's item" of a sort. It is unnecessary to repeat that every envelope should be preserved intire. One additional factor deserving of mention in connection with contemporary philately is that even during military and naval operations of the most notably important significance there are long hours of leisure which in at least a small way are so many opportunities for cultivation of the hobby. More than a few have been the stamps picked up on battlefields. The chance to used to full advantage by many a in book form with illustrations.

Collectors who have covers postmarked at any Hawaiian post office on Sunday last are to be envied. But still more interesting will be the envelopes of the siege on Wake and Midway Islands and the Japanese invasion of the Philippines.

One of the mistakes of collectors In the period 1914-1918 was that of boycotting the postal issues of Germany, Austria, Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. Especially in England there was an hysterical movement to destroy the stamps of those countries. Hundreds of thousands of specimens were burned. When the semblance of peace was destored the victims of the error were sorry. They realized that the stamps they had destroyed were innocent of offense in themselves and, therefore, should have been exempt from un- Paris in 1878. reasonable intolerance.

> The National Aquarium Society meeting for December was held one week early due to the proximity of Christmas. The decision to change the date came too late to include notice of it in last week's column.

The January meeting will take the form of a visit to the Baltimore Society on the occasion of their annual party, which will be held on the 13th. Members expect to go by special bus, tickets for which may be obtained from Fred Orsinger, director of the aquarium in the Commerce Building, or from Theodore Schmid, 712 Twelfth street N.W. Advance purchases of tickets is necessary so that the committee will know how much bus space will be required.

The Dollogy Club members declare the December meeting was their best so far. The speaker, G. Lawrence Kibler, had with him some 36 authentic American Indian dolls. His talk on the costumes and customs of the tribes represented by the dolls was extremely interesting.

Attendance at the meeting was above average and included several prominent guests.

Notes on a Variety of Subjects of Interest in Washington and Vicinity

By R. R. Taynton.

Peter Pan's Rebel, a Welsh terrier bred by the Peter Pan Kennels of Upper Marlboro and owned by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Mullock of Silver Spring, is the first dog of its breed and one of the first of any breed in this area to attain the distinction of Companion Dog Excellent degree. Rebel is 21/2 years old and was trained entirely by his owner in local obedience test classes. In competing for the first obedience title, Companion Dog, Rebel placed first every time shown in the novice class. He was shown at Baltimore, Norfolk, Old 'Dominion and Pikesville, all hotbeds of dog-training groups so his competition was the keenest His qualifying scores for the second title were made at Westchester, Harrisburg, Reading and Washing-

In addition to his participation in shows, Rebel has acted for the movies in a Red Cross feature called "Marching with Old Glory,"

This is the day of the National Capital Kennel Club's sanction match. Judging will start at 2 p.m. at 525 New Jersey avenue N.W. There are classes for puppies from 3 to 6. 6 to 9 and 9 to 12 months, as well as for novice and open dogs. There are ribbons in all classes and trophies in all breeds, and popular judges to say which shall get what. Entries will be taken at the gate from noon to 1:30 p.m.

Newly elected officers of the National Capital Kennel Club are Dr. Charles Davis, president; John Anderson, first vice president and chairman of the Bench Committee; William Klimkiewicz, second vice president; Beatrice Nesbit, secretary: Henri Mackle, treasurer; Nan-Woolner, chairman of Membership Committee, and Harvey Brown. chairman of the Auditing Commit-

The first Northern show of 1942. unless canceled by war conditions, will be the Newark fixture on January 11. Baltimore's show will take place the end of the month, and then comes the Westminster show at Madison Square Garden, New York City, February 11 and 12. Next year's Garden show will be patterned after that of last February. Entries will be accepted only for dogs that placed first, second or third at a licensed show before January 12, 1942. This means dogs may be qualified at Newark, a controversial issue at the last Garden show. Puppies may be shown in any class for which Leaside Patsy is an English bull- they are eligible without previous have had an appreciable effect upon a grand slam in no-trump. was in progress. Oswald Jacoby, Among his hobbies are dancing and swimming, and in the latter he has won several medals. At Western Don plays No. 2 board on the varsity chess team and has been a member of the team for the last two years. At the age of 5 his elder brother taught him the elements of chess around the family hearth.

He prefers close games and overthe-board play. As to theory he relishes actual battle, and his prowess comes from practice. Each Tuesday at 3 p.m. in room 216 at Western the Chess Club meets, and Don welcomes you to a game, or he may be reached at 4411 P street N.W., his home for the past three years.

In this four-session classic there were 130 pairs entered, two more than ever had participated before. At the opening of the finals, two contestants from Warren, Pa., Dr. R. H. Israel and Dr. Ridelsperger, were the leaders, but whether from the effect of the war news or otherwise, they ended in 14th place, while Mrs. R. C. Young and Sidney Silodor, both of Philadelphia, who were second at the start of the fourth round, advanced to first place to win the covered prize. Their score was 687 out of a possible 1,203 match points, which was a comfortable lead over their facted hight in the eclests. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Reddy, Mrs. Freel Surguy, Gene Herman. S. G. Churchill, James G. Stone, Dr. E. B. Churchill James G. Stone, A. I. Westrich. H. R. King, Lewis Tubbs, Mr. and Mrs. W. de St. Aubin. Mrs. Dora Schwartz. Mrs. Breckenridge Long and Mrs. Georges were victors in the amateur pair same. Other Washington players. however, showed at various points along the line in most of the qualifying rounds.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year. Morsan Howard of Pasadena and Pitsburgh, Pa., president: Osward Jacoby of Dallas. Tex., and Washington. Vice president: Osward Jacoby of Dallas. Tex., and Washington. Jeroscope were victors in the amateur pair same. Other Washington. Jeroscope and Mrs. St. Albin Rutheroff. Baltiman. Jeroscope and Mrs. C. Young and Sidney Silodor, joined O. P. M.

Churchill playing with Cecil Head of New York, were the only Washingtonians to qualify for the last session. The defending champions, Mrs. A. M. Sobel and Charles H. Goren, had what amounted only to an average game.

In the team-of-four championship game there was a new set of winners, Mrs. Sobel, Simon Rossant, and Peter Leventritt of New York and Mrs. Wilkinson Wagar of Atlanta. Their margin of victory, however, was the smallest in the history of the event. They finished just 12-100ths of a point ahead of the more favored five-member team of Walde-Barnes, S. G. Churchill and Charles Lockridge. This team entered the last round with a comfortable lead over the other foursomes, with the exception of the former three-time champions, Messrs, Goren, Solomon, Silodor and Mrs. Young, with whom they were tied. In one set of six boards, however, they won only one point and in the end had to be content with second place while the Goren team fell below them. In one of the championship games

Dick Skinner, who spends so much of his time in Washington that he is often rated as a Washingtonian although his home is in Massachusetts, had an interesting and fortunate experience on the following

The Federal Bridge League completed 10 games in its team-of-four series last Tuesday night at the Wardman Park Hotel. This brought to a close the first half of the season, and playoff games will be held on December 16 (Tuesday), January 6 and 13. Each of the several teams will retain its position now held by reason of percentage ratings, and the three sections each will play for different prizes. The scores made will be added to the aggregate to determinte the first half winner. There will be no game on December 23, but the usual pair game for master mar von Zedtwitz, Lee Hazen, A. Roy Mason Exhibits Paintings at National Museum | Washington

Water Colors and Oils Show Ability And Assurance

By Leila Mechlin.

Rarely does one come across a more engaging exhibition of paintings in oil and water color than that of works in these media by Roy M. Mason, national academician, which during December is set forth in the foyer of the National Museum under the auspices of the National Collection of Fine Arts, Smithsonian In-

Mr. Mason lives in Woodchuck Hollow, Batavia, N. Y., where, with his brother, he engages in business as an engraver and maker of signs. His first teacher of art was his father, but, for the most part, he is self-taught. For inspiration in his painting he has obviously gone direct to nature, and that he has been emotionally moved by its beauty none who sees his works can doubt. They are landscapes, but often peopled. When, however, he introduces figures in his pictures it is with such skill that they invariably seem to be a part of the composition.

In both oils and water colors Mr. Mason paints broadly. In fact, his manner is that of the water colorist at his best rather than the painter in oils. He simplifies his compositions and transcribes them with great spontaneity, eliminating the nonessential but retaining the spirit which gives significance, To be able to do so this requires exceptional ability and assurance. There is more than little of both Winslow Homer and John Singer Sargent in these paintings by Roy Mason and yet they are essentially his own. As a chance visitor remarked, "The more often you see these pictures the more they mean to you."

The subjects which Mr. Mason has painted apparently have been found, not in New York State alone, much less in Woodchuck Hollow, but from the East Coast to the West, from repeats an old oft-told tale, but as auspices as this year. a discovered rejoicing in discoveryhis confreres is evidenced by the long list of awards which he has received at their hands, as well as by his election to membership in the Philadelphia Water Color Club, the American Water Color Society, other similar organizations.

His exhibition here comprises 23 oil paintings and 20 water colors

It was not until about 1905 that Mr Myers seriously took up painting in oils, but when he did his success was almost immediate. Of the 29 pictures in this medium included in the Whitney Museum's memorial exhibition, the majority were lent by museums and private collectors. One came from the Corcoran Gallery-"Life on the East Side," which was painted in 1931—and one from the Phillips Memorial Gallery— "Seward Park," painted about 1923.

The foreword to the catalogue of the memorial exhibition was written by Myers' colleague, Harry Wickey, who not only valued his art, but understood his approach to it. To him, it seemed that Jerome Myers, because of his own youthful experience, had no desire to expose the conditions under which the East Side lived, but, rather, to manifest its transformation through sheer humanity into something betokening beauty. It is this in all of his work regardless of medium, makes most strong appeal. The exhibition, which will continue through December 28, has been arranged by Mrs. Myers, who, while in attendance during the first week, of Art.

Soloist on today's concert will be the eminent Dutch pianist, Egon Petri. The program opens with "Noel," the second in four symphonic sketches by the American composer, George Whitefield Chadwick. "Noel," the National Symphony's recording what its composer described as "a little Christmas song." The concert will also close on a holiday note when, by request, the orchestra plays three excerpts from Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker" suite-"Arabian Dance," "Russian Dance," and "Waltz of the Flowers." The suite is taken from the famous Petipa ballet that tells of the dreams a little girl has after the excitement of a Christmas party. In between the Christmas divertissements will come the two major offerings of the afternoon—the Beethoven "Concerto No. 5 in E Flat" ("Empror"), with Mr. Petri as soloist; and the Brahms "Symphony No. 3 in F Major," another work that the National Symphony has successfully recorded for Victor. Mr. Petri started violin lessons under his father, Henri Petri, at the age of 5, and soon supplemented these with piano lessons from Teresa Carreno and Richard Buchmayto embark on a career as a concert

Preoccupation With Biology Is Reflected in Volume Shared With Edward F. Ricketts

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Sea of Cortez

By John Steinbeck and Edward F. Ricketts. The Viking Press,

John Steinbeck's preoccupation with biology has been noted by critics of his fiction more than once. Superficially, such critics have observed that he is fond of writing about animals and often gives an animal a place of significance in his narratives. Less superficially, the commentators have remarked that Mr. Steinback's treatment of the humankind is based on biological considerations and that he obviously regards the race simply as one more species. In this book written in collaboration with Edward F. Ricketts, however, he gives over his romantic and symbolic treatment of biology as a factor in what passes in popular fiction for life, and undertakes to write as a speculative thinker drawing his thoughts directly from biological phenomena. The pair went on an expedition into the Gulf of California, having for their object the collection and observation of the forms of invertebrate life which inhabit those shores, and, out of that experience, they have produced this book. It is impossible to know, from the published volume, how the collaboration was worked out for the finished thing has a fine unity. The trend of the thinking, however, is in harmony with much of Mr. Steinbeck's past work.

The pair set out from Monterey in a fishing boat converted into a laboratory and manned by a master and a crew of three. They made a circuit of the gulf, stopping at points which they thought would be good collecting stations, mostly uninhabited coves, but sometimes the ports of towns. The book is a combined record of their scientific findings, their life on shipboard, their contacts with people ashore and their speculations on what turns out to be, after all, the old wheeze-the Nature of Things. They are precise and detailed about the findings, whimsical (naturally) about life in their cramped quarters and also about the interest shown in them by the curious shore dwellers. But it is on the N. O. T. that they let themselves go. Man, they say, should use a non-teleological approach to his problems. Man should get over his rigid habits of thinking. Man should realize that he is but one in a multitude of life forms inhabiting this globe and understand that biological and not ideological balance shapes his fate. They argue, in short, for a broader and lower mental horizon. They think that that would be both more sensible and more comfortable. Having observed the invertebrates obeying the laws of their beings in the station in which God has been pleased to put them, they have been irresistibly impelled to make analogies.

Almost all books of travel which deal with journeyings under inconveniences into solitary places contain the elements which one finds in this book. Robert Louis Stevenson gave a perfect example of the blend. He made great copy out of his struggles with his donkey pack, and he touched prose immortality in describing his adjustments to his Modestine's mysterious temperament. And then, alone beneath the stars, his comedy attended to, he would fall a-philosophizing. Messrs. Steinbeck and Ricketts follow pretty much the same formula. They had an outboard motor called the Sea Cow which filled for them the place of the recalcitrant Modestine. It was, they record, a thing of malign and obstructive nature. It thought, and its thoughts were all against them. It would take them out on the tide and then refuse to run and force them to row back against the current. By their own words the Sea Cow harrowed their souls to the breaking point and wrought them to frenzies of emotion-and their words are delightfully entertaining. Similarly, in the three fishermen of the crew they discerned fine provocative qualities of temperament. And also in personalities of their illian fact that the great war Prime occasional visitors-silent Indians, exquisitely courteous Mexican officials, lonely ranchers—they found what one can only call (but in true defer- against tradition for tradition's ence) "material." All these characters and the slight and unsubstantial sake, an original thinker and a felepisodes deriving from them (one of which, dealing with a little Indian low of brilliant initiative in action. boy who wanted a job, is as fine a tale as any written) are woven into a basic running narrative with a well-nigh perfect technique. And then, from the perspective of their microscopes and out of the fume of formaldehyde, the authors derive their philosophy, from which they proceed only to expound the errors of the teleological approach.

It hangs together. It makes a book which is frequently very beautiful. There are enough Indians in it, in short, to bear the philosophy

Four Years in Paradise

By Osa Johnson. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

This is Mrs. Martin Johnson's story of the four years which she and test at faculty rulings which he felt sees life and love and death and her famous husband spent at Lake Paradise, the game sanctuary in Brit- were unfair. So he was considered marriage from the safe harbor of a ish East Africa where they set up an elaborate permanent camp and something of a photographic laboratory, their most ambitious undertaking. It is, as in the army in India broke unsaid, Mrs. Johnson's story. It tells little or nothing about the work of written laws by seeking transfers to photographing wild life which Mr. Johnson carried on. It is devoted scenes of action, instead of staying delight from Stella Benson's "Junior land family there is born a child so almost exclusively to the job-or jobs-which fell to her.

The division of labor between the pair seems to have been clearly made. Mr. Johnson took the pictures which were the reason for the expedition and developed them. Mrs. Johnson did the rest. She planned the camp, oversaw the laborers, planted the gardens, hunted and fished for food, tended the sick among their helpers, cooked, washed clothes, made furniture, maintained a small zoo of pets, stood guard with her gun over her husband while he photographed charging elephants and lions, and generally kept the home fires burning, even to rustling up the fuel. When one considers that their camp included a home, a laboratory, a garage, huts for a dozen or more natives and 4 acres of garden which first had to be cleared, one realizes that the "woman's work" in this jungle establishment was at least a fair share.

As Mrs. Johnson tells it, she came well prepared for the undertaking. She had brought seeds from Kansas for all kinds of vegetables—she introduced the East African natives, she says, to American watermelon and found that they liked it very well. She had also brought flower seeds, and cultivated numbers of Kansas blooms. She had studied manual training at school, and so was able to design and make chairs and tables. She was evidently a superb cook and also seems to have understood the peculiar needs of first aid in tropical conditions. That she was a crack shot is well known. She makes little of telling how she dropped a leopard just as its claw was reaching her husband's helmet, or of how she finished charging buffalo with so little to spare that it fell in reach of her foot. Her book consists of no more than a series of episodes dealing with her various duties, a mingling of human domesticity and jungle wild life. The setting of the former is so bizarre that it gives it the interest of shock, and the latter is, of course, irresistible. The book therefore is very easy to read. Notwithstanding, one could wish that Mrs. Johnson were a little less naive in her literary style. When a person has as many tremendous accomplishments as she does, it seems perhaps grudging to complain of any lack. But she has been unfair to herself in adopting a coy manner of

Forty Million Hoofbeats

By Frank M. Heath. David Turet, New York.

This is a book about a horse, or, if you wish to be biologically exact, about a mare. Its heroine is Gypsy Queen, owned by the author, who lives in nearby Silver Spring. And the plot, sub-plot, the counter-plot, the dra- Hitler. matic interest, the solution and denouement-they, too, are Gypsy Queen. It is, as said, a book about—well, but there you are.

Mr. Heath, it seems, has his own ideas about transportation. In 1925, he decided to make a trip through the United States, including every State participants, and John, the father, in his itinerary, and to do so on horseback. In writing of his journey, he disposes of any reason for this wish, except for the part of it which sale of his mystery thrillers, reprehad to do with the horse, in very few words. "I had a strong desire to give sent the English appeasers because the undertaker a run for his money," he says, "and, too, to add something of memories from the first World to my desultory education." So much for himself. The rest of his volume -462 pages-is devoted entirely to Gypsy Queen. Seldom has a writer of a travel book shown such a self-effacing temper.

Gypsy Queen, with her biographer in the saddle, started out from the Zero Milestone and made a circuit over the country which added up to able for his nonchalant youthful 11,356 miles. It took her something over two years. Mr. Heath kept a diary of her progress, and it is a tribute of love, if ever there was one. It records not only her daily mileage but her daily diet, the accomodations refugees, and Judith, lovely and which she had at night, the kind of roads she covered, the gait she used, the weather, her health and everything else which an exacting mind might | middle-class family, with its differcall pertinent. When she did not feel good, Mr. Heath brooded over her, and doctored and nursed her-and wrote down symptoms and treatment. When she was well, which was most of the time, he used a stoic's pride in noting it. A horse-lover (born, that is) probably will be moved to the conflict becomes a certainty, predepths of his soul by the volume. A mere outsider to the horse-lover's world can only feel a solemn awe.

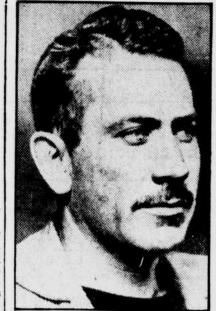

Gypsy Queen survived her odyssey by nine years. When she died, she was honored with a bronze memorial tablet in a pet cemetery in Maryland, and her bones were given to the State University. She holds, says Mr. which will give the reader a better Heath, the world's record for "endurance, durability and adaptability." One can only say, "May the good creature rest in peace."

The Opinions of Oliver Allston

By Van Wyck Brooks. Dutton, New York.

The "Oliver Allston" of the title of this book is an imaginary person into whose words Mr. Brooks puts certain opinions of his own. Pretending that Allston has been a well-known American critic and that the job of editing Allston's notebooks has fallen to himself, Mr. Brooks plays a double game with his readers. He offers the so-called opinions of the non-existent Allston on various aspects of intellectual life in America and then, in his own name, assumes the role of commentator. In other words, he presents himself as the critic Allston, and then, in the person of the critic Brooks, he criticizes his criticisms. You could hardly tie a

It is a pleasant little work and not, as one might expect, on the basis of Mr. Brooks' other volumes, a formidable analysis of the whole of American intellectuality. It reveals that Mr. Brooks has regarded himself from youth as a "predestined writer" and that he is not, as the proverb has it, a critic because he failed at some other branch of writing, but because he deliberately chose criticism as his field. It affirms his faith in American literature as a body of letters which has its own valid tradition and which cannot but suffer from imitation of foreign schools of writing and thinking. It inquires into the nature of "basic literature," by which it means the literature which has endured, and discovers that such writing derives its vitality from its preoccuption with the basic human wirtues. It states that Allton (Brooks) is a socialist in politics, but with no inclination toward any foreign form of socialism. It suggests that Americans do not appreciate the worth of their own achie deplores expatriatism, Gertrude Steinism and the general practices of "coeterie literature" and literary snobbism. It is full of epigrams and good wit. It is also optimistic and expressive of a sound faith in human nature. On the whole, one can take it as a benevolent gesture toward less literate humanity to come from Mr. Brook's crossus like fund of Fudition.

The Young Churchill

By Stanley Nott. Foreword by Lord Halifax. Coward-McCann, Inc., New York.

This is the story of the boyhood and youth of Winston Churchill. Beginning with his school days, it repeats again and again the Church-Minister has always been a rebel These things have been said of him before, of course, but Mr. Nott supplies the concrete instances. Churchill at school would not apply himself because he was not interested in the studies which tradition compelled him to take. He was considered stupid and obstinate. He did not like to play gamesheresy of heresies in an English educational institution-and he founded comfortably in quarters. Consequently, he was regarded as too adventurous. But in following his own hand, he seemed always to be able to vindicate himself, and his critics is a series of sketches about a nor- mal child among normal people, she had to concede his ability. Repeatedly, the pattern is demonstrated-the apparent upstart confounding his elders.

The book makes a point of the number of times the Prime Minister took an active part in military engagements and was under fire or in hand-to-hand combat, and ends with a detailed description of what s probably the best-known incident in his history-his capture by the Boers and his subsequent escape. It is all naively written; it sometimes reads, indeed, as if intended for children. But it serves to show why Winston Churchill was the man to whom Britain turned in her hour of need. He had been building a name for originality and an ability to think fast in tight places since he had had a name at all. He was no accident, but a man prepared as if by destiny, for the peculiar place he has had to fill. M.-C. R.

Shadows of Wings

By Stella Morton. Harper & Bros., New York.

With the Manners family, this novel presents a picture of England during the tense uncertainty of pre-war days and the purposeful period of all-out effort to defeat

Caro, the mother of the five Manners children, who will be participants in the war or else wives of who barely keeps them going on the War. Tony, the eldest son, is with the R. A. Be Angry at the Sun

By Robinson Jeffers. Random House, New York. In this new volume of verse, Mr. Jeffers reveals an overmastering preoccupation with present world conditions, obviously seeing in the war a vision of the doom of our whole system of civilization. For the tone of his entire book is one of foreboding and the theme of disaster runs through all the poems, no matter what their subject. But it is no more than a corollary that Mr. Jeffers clothes this theme in appropriate beauty. He writes in the colors of the apocalypse-catastrophic, burning, merciless, awful. And he uses in his harsh rhythms the music of despair. The volume contains a long narrative poem, "Mara," a masque, "The Bowl of Blood," and a number of shorter pieces.

The narrative poem is on the theme of purity, a man's struggle to remain pure in heart while he is tortured by jealousy. The scene is a California ranch where the wife of the owner is carrying on an intrigue with her brother-in-law. The neighborhood knows of the situation; gossip reaches the husband's ears in its ugliest form. In the ranch house there is sickness, death and insanity; in the world outside, there is mockery and the defilement by corrupt tongues of all the rancher cherishes. He refuses to doubt, but is not strong enough to carry the refusal, and so, finally, puts an end to his life.

In telling this story, Mr. Jeffers uses a wealth of miscellaneous Alfie and Vi'let, twins; Flossie, Bert, violence—a dirigible is wrecked, a car falls from a bridge into the canyon, a dance ends in a fight, the rancher's mother kills her invalid husband. The rancher, surrounded by such manifestations, looks into his heart and sees despair, and then casts his eyes farther abroad, to the world at war, and sees the end of all things.

The masque is a forecast of the war. Hitler comes to seek counsel from a secress. She encourages him with false advice, lying because: "The war must grind on, and grind small. It must not end when France falls, nor when England is beaten. It must not end when the ends of the earth are drawn in. God is less humane than Hitler, and has larger views.' The shortest poems breathe a similar despair. A grim and agonizing beauty-the phrase sums up the volume.

The Armies March

By John Cudahy. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. The next peace must be a peace without victory, backed by the united force of every great power in the world, Mr. Cudahy believes. The former Ambassador to Poland, Minister to Eire and Ambassador to Belgium, who saw the German armies roll over the Lowlands, has no which they could very easily be confidence in the ability of the democracies to "stop Hitler." The cause of democracy in Europe was lost in the Rhineland in 1936, he says.

Mr. Cudahy takes a gloomy view of the future. The world we know now is gone forever, he is certain. Farewell, he says, to comfort and ease, Mabel. Mrs. Barton is the unto any leisure class, to the inheritance of large possessions, to any assurance of continuity.

Perhaps, he adds, the firing of the last gun will be followed by an orgy of anarchy which will reduce man to the level of animals, and every understanding of the widespread standard we have known will be overturned.

A high point of Mr. Cudahy's story is his exclusive interview with Hitler, which created a storm of controversy in this country. Ignoring the fact that its publication obviously served the purposes of the German Ministry of Propaganda, the interview itself is objective reporting of a talk with a world leader at the peak of his career. Mr. Cudahy himself was not overly impressed by Hitler whom he characterizes as a man who might have been a waiter, but not a head Mr. Cudahy has seen war's ravages at close hand and has felt them deeply. Many Americans will disagree with his conclusions. But his moving personal report leaves no question of his sincerity and integrity, and it raises questions which, sooner or later, must be answered. C. BELMONT FARIES.

London Pride

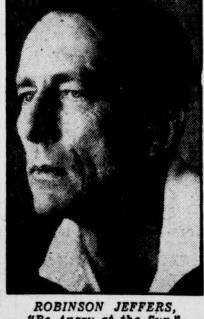

By Phyllis Bottome Little. Brown & Co., Boston.

Miss Bottome has written a significant and sympathetic story of children under bombs. The characterization is concentrated mainly on the Bartons- a poor but proud family which consists of Mrs. Barton, a charwoman; her husband, a docksman with communistic leanings, and their numerous children, Ben and Mabel.

Ben is the favorite of both Miss Bottome and Mrs. Barton. His mother named him Ben because he was born as Big Ben struck on a wet midnight in September, 1933. When the bombs begin to fall in Beulah street, Dockland, the 10year-old twins are evacuated, and it is young Ben who must take care of baby Mabel while the other members of the family earn their exist-

The adventures of the group are told with a real knowledge of the poor Londoner's problems, point of view and humor. Miss Bottome is to be commended for not making her children the objects of pity, under the distressing circumstances. All are believable, from the wouldbe-glamorous Flossie to the infant schooled but shrewd and loving mother, while Mr. Barton is the brawny and sullen father. But the book is primarily about children, and the author knows what goes on in their minds and hearts. "London Pride" is an eloquent tribute to a peoples' strength.

Yugoslav Patriot Certain of Victory Over the Axis

Author Who Broadcasts From Boston Relates History of Chetnik Revolutionaries

Free Yugoslavia Calling

By Dr. Svetislav-Sveta Petrovitch. Greystone Press, New York, Contrary to the impression conveyed by the title, this book is not devoted exclusively to Yugoslavia's continuing fight against Nazi subjugation. It is much more than that. It is a call to battle, a clear-sighted and well-informed narration of events leading up to the outbreak of World War II and the invasion of the Slavic lands, and a confident prophecy of victory not only for the Yugoslavs but for the Czechs, the Poles and all others who live under Nazi tyranny.

The Yugosiavs' determined struggle to restore their country is presented as part of the movement of free peoples everywhere—both in their own lands and in exile-against the Axis. But led by the veteran Kosta Pechanats and his famous Chetniks, the Yugoslavs are giving the Germans more real trouble than they are meeting anywhere else among the 50,000,. 000 Slavs whose territory they have conquered.

These Chetniks have filled a glorious role in the history of Southeastern Europe, and when the German invasion occurred, it did not take the descendants of the earlier "hajduks" long to take their appointed places. With their government in exile, they carry on a more and more intense guerrilla struggle against the Germans.

The history of the Chetniks began when the Turks, tightening their corrupt and despotic hold on Southeastern Europe, incited the people of Serbia to form revolutionary bands devoted to the freeing of their country from the Ottoman yoke. It was a struggle which went on everywhere in the Balkans, and early in the 19th century these "hajduks" united with Greek and Bulgarian revolutionaries to form the "komitadjis." Subsequently, the Serb component of this organization took the name Their work against the Germans is now well known, as are the great losses they have suffered fighting not only the Nazis but the Nazisponsored regime of Ante Pavelitch in Croatia. With their women, who daily risk their lives to keep the growing Chetnik army supplied with food and information, these fighters of the hills are a seething volcano beneath the ruthless German oppression.

Thus, the fight in Yugoslavia goes on with accelerating tempo. It is a fight in which the Yugoslavs feel certain of victory. Dr. Petrovitch, who won for himself the nickname "Yugoslav Paul Revere" with his short-wave broadcasts to his country from Boston since before the German invasion this year, is the prophet of that victory and the voice of a new free Central European regionalism.

He presents a peace program which echoes much that already has been said about the shape the new post-war world should take. He also presents a large number of new stories of passive and active resistance to the Germans in the occupied countries, as well as some new slants on the killing of King Alexander and French Foreign Minister Barthou at Marseille in October, 1934. And he gives some fresh details on the collapse

The book is full of sidelights on European personalities, most of whom the author has known during a long career which has carried him through various official and journalistic positions in his own country. The work has suffered in translation and is somewhat repetitious in theme, a fault It is hard to tolerate the evangel- which is pardonable, perhaps, in view of the author's intense enthusiasm CRESTON B. By George R. Stewart. Random House, New York. A novel about an atmospheric disturbance is not unique. There have been others—Joseph Conrad's "Typhoon," Richard Hughes' "In Hazard," Nordhoff and Hall's "Hurricane." In all these, the author selects a group of persons and shows the storm's effect upon them. Mr. Stewart reverses the process; he begins with the storm itself, and it remains the central "character. The book covers 12 days. On the first, the junior meteorologist at the San Francisco Weather Bureau notices the first stirrings of the storm in the South Pacific. And, because he is sentimental as well as scientific, he gives it a name, "Maria," and sits back to watch it grow. There are other people in California watching, too. They include the load dispatcher at the power company, who knows what rain and snow can do to his transmission lines; the district traffic superintendent istence with a bourgeois husband. at the telephone company, who also is line-conscious; the chief service Daughter Rosemary is a sincere and officer of an airline; the general, who is flood-control co-ordinator; the good evangelist who teams up with superintendent of the Highway Department. Maria meets them all, and a Bible-bitten cowboy to run a many others, with a cold, wet hand: an airplane pilot, a telephone linestraveling revival show. Daughter man, a girl from Reno, a hog named Blue Boy.

In choosing to give personality to a storm, Mr. Stewart hands himis the one near-normal child, but self a difficult task. For atmosphere is not only inanimate, but invisible. she treats her no-good brother as That he makes the storm alive and real for the reader is one of the chief virtues of the book, a Book-of-the-Month Club selection for December.

The book is further distinguished by a craftsmanship and planning made understandable by the two years of research which went into its writing. There is no slap-dash here; there are no loose ends, "Storm" has no plot in the accepted sense; the storm itself is the hero, or rather, heroine. The main objection is that, though it moves in the manner of a tragedy, most of the seemingly inevitable tragic effects are averted almost miraculously at the last moment. But, then, the author is dealing with phenomena. The book is reminiscent of "Moby Dick," not only because of its unifying, never-forgotten theme, but because it contains the same exhaustive explanations of natural forces, the same philosophical comment. Yet George Stewart is not, like Herman Melville, a mystical poet. He is, rather, a skilled artisan. "Storm" will not be just another best-seller; it contains too much good, solid reading for that. RICHARD J. MURPHY, Jr.

By Carl Glick. Whittlesey House, New York.

Here is a merry account of our fellow countrymen, the Chinese-Americans. In "Shake Hands With the Dragon," Mr. Glick paints a vivid picture of the Chinatown the casual visitor seldom sees, but frequently pictures as a place of mysterious deeds. The author uncovers, however, a friendly, courteous people whose sense of humor is boundless.

Mr. Glick was introduced to the Chinese when appointed athletic director of the Chinese Church of All Nations during the early days of the depression. He admits he knew little about athletics, and certainly even less about his tactiturn pupils, the young men who seldom smiled. It finally took 11-year-old Quan-Ling to break the ice between the East and the West, and one day Mr. Glick found himself on his way to meet Quan-Ling's family and the new baby. Quan-Ling received a rattle (it was the little fellow's idea), the baby a new football and Mr. Glick an introduction to a remarkable race. For the most part, "Shake Hands With the Dragon" is a series of character sketches of the most delightful people you can meet between book covers. There are Ah-Pau, grandmother of her clan, knitting sweaters for the babies and bossing all Chinatown; kindly Mr. Wu, scholar and philosopher, who begged the judge to send him to prison in place of his truant son, and the moon-faced youth whose first words in English to the author were "What do you think of Einstein?" There are many others, all secure in their own philosophy, all self-sufficient even in a foreign land. Mr. Glick writes a great deal about Chinese customs; he explains their tongs and hatchetmen (one hatchetman he met wrote poems and bought his ties at Macy's); he goes into their solution of labor problems and the never-failing courtesy of their business dealings. It is a book the reader should thoroughly enjoy for its freshness and humor, and when it is finished, you will have a warm understanding and deep sympathy for the Chinese in America. The book is illustrated amusingly MALCOLM D. LAMBORNE, Jr. by Donald McKay.

Song of Ariran

By Kim San and Nym Wales. John Day Co., New York. The modern history of Korea is here interwoven with the life of one of its most indomitable revolutionary leaders, Kim San, in an autobiographical sketch translated and edited by the wife of Edgar Snow, an authority on Chinese affairs. The people of Korea have known the terror of Japanese domination since the turn of the century. Hundreds of thousands of them have climbed the Hills of Ariran and crossed the Yalu River to seek refuge in Manchuria. In the beginning there were many who had faith in Woodrow Wilson and the League of Nations, professed champion of small nations. When these hopes faded, politically-conscious Koreans like Kim San turned first to anarchism and later to Communism as the means through which an oppressed people might find freedom. At last Japan's attack on China brought unity between the two main Korean revolutionary groups, the Communists and the Nationalists, in a common front against Japan.

Kim San participated in the Canton Commune, the Hailofeng Soviet and other phases of the Chinese Revolution, but he is, first of all, a Korean. It has been his mission to prepare the Korean underground movement for the day when, either through Japanese involvement in Siberia or defeat at the hands of China and her allies, circumstances will be favorable for armed rebellion. Kim San expresses not only the fierce determination of his people, but a fundamental historical law, when he says: "Who shall know the will of history? Only the oppressed who must overthrow force in order to live. * * * Oppression is pain, and pain is consciousness. Consciousness means movement. Millions of men must die, and tens of millions must suffer before humanity can be born again. THOMAS G. BUCHANAN, Jr.

Education on an International Scale

By George W. Gray. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York. This is the story of spending $28,000,000 for the benefit of mankind-for education, for medical care and for scientific research. Essentially, this sum has been spent by the International Education Board, established in 1923 by John D. Rockefeller, jr., and financed entirely from the Rockefeller fortune. The establishment, Mr. Gray explains, was a postwar measure intended to mitigate, so far as possible, the devastation of educational facilities left in the wake of that titanic struggle. Already, some of the largest gifts have been destroyed, such as the rebuilt University of Louvain. The money, of course, was a trifle. It wouldn't keep the present war going a single day. The uses to which it was put have added a few months to the average duration of human life, have immeasurably reduced pain and sickness, have brought about new insight into the mysteries of the universe. The money has built up more than any war can destroy. It has established gains that are indestructible. Perhaps it was against nature, since, it would seem of late, man's primary mission on earth is murder and destruction, and the way of the life of the race into pain and darkness. But, it may be, this is but a THOMAS R. HENRY. passing phase.

the most important naval base in Charles reported that the population of Hawaii is made up of many nationalities, including native Hawailans, Americans, Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese and Filipinos. In some schools 40 or 50 races or interracial mixtures are represented. The public schools charge $11 per pupil for each year's tuition. Some of the smart Japanese students go to American schools from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and then go to Japanese schools from 3 to 6 p.m.

Some of the boys in Hawaii go to school barefooted, and even wear no shoes when they play such games as football and basketball. Football, as in America, is one of the most popular sports, Charles

English is the language of all public schools, and the subjects taught are about the same as in the United States, with few exceptions. Much attention is given to agriculture, trade, vocational training and home economics. In Honolulu are many stores which sell trinkets, while the food markets sell fish of all sorts. The owners live over their stores. In the country, most of the farms produce sugar cane, Hawaii's most important crop. Pineapple ranks next in importance.

The Hawaiians Islands are very mountainous, with many craters and volcanoes. Charles related, and the temperature and rainfall vary greatly within small distances. In some of the low altitudes it is very dry, while on some of the mountains the rainfall is probably the greatest of any place in the world.

After having heard so much about grass skirts, I was disappointed to learn that they are not worn in everyday dress in Hawaii. Charles said that they were worn chiefly at entertainments. I put Hawaii at the top of my list of interesting places I would like to see after hearing Charles-after the war is over, of course. Perhaps you will want to put it on your list,

Just Between Ourselves

By Philip H. Love-

Four days before the Japanese began their treacherous attack on Pearl Harbor, a young stenographer at the United States naval base wrote to her friends back home in Washington

"Mele Kalikamaka (Merry Christmas) and much aloha from . . an Isle of Paradise."

Sent by Clipper mail, the letter was delivered here last Monday morning, little more than 24 hours after the Nipponese bombs had begun to rain on Oahu. By that time, of course, the island was anything but a "paradise."

It was a long letter-nearly two pages of single-spaced typewritingand its author, Mary Margaret Osterloh, had illustrated it with several little pen-and-ink sketches. She had mimeographed it because she wanted all her Washington friends to receive a copy before Christmas.

Miss Osterloh's first-hand account of life in Hawaii just before the outbreak of the war ought to be of interest to every reader of The Junior Star who has never had an opportunity to visit the Pacific islands What could be more interesting to the average American boy or girl, for instance, than watching a group of Hawaiian spear-fishermen carryopen sea off Oahu?

The daring fishermen described by Miss Osterloh speared 40 fish in about four hours. Included in their catch, she wrote, was "a striped razor fish with a fin under his tail sharp enough for a man to shave

"The fish were strung on a line, the letter continued, "and towed through the surf by a beautiful Hawaiian girl-her long black hair floating a yard behind her. She laughed and said she was the fishermen's 'shark decoy.'

Even more thrilling, perhaps, were Miss Osterloh's attempts to ride a surfboard along the famous Waikiki Beach, "I could write you about the graceful Hawaiian surfboard-riders." her letter said, "and how hard I'm trying to imitate them-standing up on my board and catching a wave just right and balancing on it and including high school age are for a quarter-mile in to shore. There she "rode horseback through the fern forest, hiked up volcanoes, down into craters and number (if any) and school of the through a lava tube." She also "drove around the island and photothe first page of every written congraphed the Japanese children going tribution and on the back of every barefooted to school, each carrying his standard equipment, a Japanes parasol and a school satchel."

Another interesting experience was attending the wedding of an American sailor and a Hawaiian girl. The colorful ceremony was followed by a feast at which the guests ate raw fish, liver and seaweed, and eggs that were said to be 1,000 years old.

Miss Osterloh went to Pearl Harbor last June, after spending about five years in Washington. While here, she worked for the Department of Justice, the Office of Education of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Consumer Research Division of the National Defense Advisory Commission. She asked for a transfer to the Navy Department because she wanted to live in Hawaii. A Navy transport gave her "a grand trip" across the Pacific. An "interesting job" awaited Miss

cluded, "and wish you could be here enjoying it with me."

There's No Special Trick To Making Holiday Candy

Some people may tell you that candymaking is an art, requiring a certain knack not possessed by ordinary mortals like you and me. But don't believe it! Other clubs in both large cities and small towns have adopted similar plans.

In glider flying, several boys often band together to buy a glider and pay for training in the same way. Not long ago E. F. McDonald wrote in a national magazine: "If 20 boys contribute $65 each for the purchase of a sailplane and another $5 to $10 each to finance their chosen instructor while he is taking lessons, they can maintain their club with dues of about 50 cents or $1 a month thereafter. The only expense would be for the operation of a tow car used in conjunction with a small winch for launching the glider." Co-operative effort ought to work for those worried student pilots as well as it has done for others.

Plymouth

PRIZE CONTRIBUTION By ANNA E. MOORE, 15,

On some unknown day in December, 1620, believed by some to be the 11th and by others the 21st, a group of 102 Pilgrims who sailed on the ship Mayflower from England landed at Plymouth Rock. These people were Separatists from Yorkshire who were seeking religious

They had lived in Holland for a time, but were not satisfied there. They feared they might lose their language, there was no opportunity to educate their children, and many thought that the Dutch were too lax in their observance of Sunday.

Before the Pilgrims landed the men met in the cabin of the Mayflower and wrote the Mayflower Compact which served as a constitution for Plymouth Colony for 70 years. Upon landing they explored the coast for several weeks and then founded their colony at Plymouth, named after the last town they left in their native About half of the Pilgrims who landed survived the first winter. This was probably due to the extreme cold weather and the lack of adequate shelter while they were building their homes. In the spring, however, the mortality decreased greatly and the Indians became friendly with them. They planted corn and amassed a supply of beaver. Gradually more and more thus the little colony grew.

The Mississippi: A River Scatters Its Vast Riches

This is the tenth of a series of informative articles and maps on the fascinating geographic background of world areas in the news of today. At the request of The Sunday Star, the National Geographic Society, as a part of its many educational activities, has prepared the basic data and accompanying maps from its rich resources of geographic knowledge and surveys. By clipping this series from week to week adults and school pupils may acquire a gazeteer for permanent reference and interpretation of of news dispatches.

(Copyright, National Geographic Society, From the Appalachians to the Rocky Mountains, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, stretches the valley of the Mississippi River-one of the largest and most productive valleys in the world. More than one scientist has called it an ideal home for man.

Its broad, fertile fields of corn and wheat and cotton furnish food and clothing for millions of people. Its busy industrial cities, grown great because of convenient raw products and good transportation, turn out about half the Nation's manufactured goods. Hernando de Soto, the Spanish explorer, little dreamed of the extent of his discovery when he first came upon the Mississippi River in 1541, near present-day Clarksdale, Miss. His interest was gold; he and his men merely crossed the river and pushed westward.

It was more than a hundred years later that Marquette and Joliet paddled down the Mississippi from the Wisconsin River to the mouth of the Arkansas River. In 1682 La Salle followed the Mississippi to its mouth.

What did these men and later explorers find?

The Mississippi has its source in the lakes and streams which empty into the clear cold waters of Lake Itasca, in Minnesota. Between the Falls of St. Anthony, at Minneapolis, and the mouth of the muddy Missouri the river flows through bluff-lined land of natural beauty. Below the mouth of the Ohio the river is higher than its surrounding plain, for sediment has built up its hed There the river must be confined by artificial banks or levees. The sediment, too, has created a muddy, swampy delta as the Mississippi empties into the Gulf of

Colonial Estate

If you can imagine a stout old plantation house, built by a refined and prosperous Virginia gentleman of the 1750s, you will appreciate the background and atmosphere of the residence on this estate. If you will visualize such a house, restored by loving hands to have such essentials as gas heat and modern plumbins, while preserving the mellowness and beauty of the Colonial, you will set the house as it is today. It has a beautiful center hall, at the ends of which are massive doors with the original brass locks, a drawing room about 25x35. library and dining room, each about 22 ft, square, and kitchen on the first floor; on the second floor are three master bedrooms and two baths; on the third floor are one large and one small room. The woodwork and manteis are original and are unsurpassed in beauty in Northern Virginia. There are seven fireblaces. seven freplaces.

The outbuildings consist of a stone servants house, probably older than the master house; outside kitchen with two enormous fireplaces, barn and other buildings. On 70 acres.

STORY IN SNOW

by Paul Schofield

II ON, I didn't look at anything else!"

Those seven words, spoken by an old man to a ten-year-old boy, were to be the strongest single influence in the life of that boy, never to be forgotten by him. And that was 40 years ago. . . . I know. I was the boy, and the old man was my grandfather.

It happened one cold November day just before Thanksgiving. When I awoke it was snowing gently, and the rolling New Hampshire countryside was fast becoming pure white. After breakfast I hurried into the woodshed. I had found a fine piece of hickory among Grandfather's lumber and was keen on making myself a bow. Lying on the floor was a sled frame, lacking the top. Grandfather had told me that when I had finished it he would take it to the blacksmith in town and have thick steel runners fitted to it. On the bench was the half-whittled hull of a toy sailboat. If I would complete the job, Grandfather had promised to rig it for me. And as I started work on the bow I was quite sure that Grandfather would feather the arrows for me.

I had just stuck my piece of hickory in a vise when Grandfather entered. He watched me for a moment. Then:

"What is it this time, Son?"

"A bow, Grandpa . . . I found a great piece of stock for it." And then I added eagerly, "You'll feather some arrows for me, won't you?"

"Yes," he said, quietly. "I think it's safe to promise quite safe."

"Gee, thanks." I said, entirely missing the irony in his tone. "But how about your sled? You'll be wanting it soon."

"Well, I'll finish it," I told him. "Sometime." He picked up the little hull. "And your boat?"

"Oh, I won't need that until spring now. I'll finish it then." "Ummmm." And he went on out.

After lunch my grandfather pulled on his mackinaw coat. "Would you like to take a walk with me?" he asked. Yes, sir," I agreed eagerly.

We walked out past the barn and down the hill to the lower meadow. The snow stretched out in front of us; a pure, unsullied expanse of crystalline beauty. Grandfather stopped, looked down at me. "Would you like to play a game, Son?"

I nodded enthusiastically. "But what kind of a game?" "We'll see which one of us can walk the straightest line to that big pine across the meadow."

"That'll be fun. Let's go!" I exclaimed.

We took our places, about 50 feet apart. "Ready . . . Set ... Go!" called Grandfather. And away we went.

Under our feet the new snow crunched and creaked with that unforgettable sound. But I was not conscious of that. I watched my feet carefully, putting one square-toed boot precisely in front of the other, so that the prints were in exact

I glanced over at Grandfather. He was trudging along, not very fast, but already he was a little ahead of me. I started to hasten my stride; then I remembered. This was not a race of speed. I must concentrate on that straight line. And so, when I finally arrived at the pine, Grandfather was waiting for me, smiling. As I took the last step I laughed up at him. I knew without looking that I had beaten him. I had been so careful of each step. Then I turned - and gasped in unbelief.

There were the two tracks, converging in a long letter "V." But one side was as straight as a surveyor's line; the other mine - was almost serpentine.

"But how . . . ?" I stammered. "How did you walk so straight, Grandpa?" He chuckled and, like the Yankee he was, answered me with a question:

"Tell me first — why is your trail so crooked?"

"I don't know. I was very careful . . . honest I was!" He chuckled again. "Tell me, Son. Did you ever look at the pine tree?

'Oh, yes, Grandpa . . . every once in a while. Did you?" That was when he said those seven words. He still smiled, but his voice was serious as he answered me:

"Son, I didn't look at anything else!"

I still didn't understand. "You mean . . . you never looked at your feet - ever?"

'I didn't need to," he told me. "You see, I had an objective - a destination: the pine. I kept my eyes on it from the moment we started."

"You got there first, too," I reminded him.

"Yes," he nodded. "I came faster because I came straighter. That is always true. Now look back there.

I followed his pointing finger.

"That meadow is like life. We started it on the other side. We both had an objective. Your path wavers because you watched three things. Instead of two feet and a pine tree, we might call them a sled, a boat and a bow. I had only one objective — a pine tree. And I never took my eyes from it until I reached it. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," I told him. I didn't, quite - then. But later, when I did understand, Grandfather's seven words were to help me across the most difficult meadows of my life.

WRONG. We know a young lawyer who recently went to Washington to see a big dollar-a-year man on a business matter. They met in the lobby of the Mayflower Hotel and drove from there in a taxi - whose fixed fee for that distance was 20 cents — to the Navy Building. Arrived at their destination, the d.a.y. man reached into his pocket and brought forth two dimes, which he dropped into the extended palm of the cab driver.

For a minute or so, the cab driver sat staring at the coins in his hand.

"Isn't that correct?" asked the d.a.y. man. The cabby closed his fist on the two dimes. "It's correct," he answered cryptically, "but it ain't right."

WEATHER. Each week the "Brewery Gulch Gazette" of Bisbee, Arizona, prints a slogan, inspired by civic pride, right at the top of its first page. A miniature weather report, it

"The sun shines on Brewery Gulch 330 days in the year, but there is moonshine every day."

HANDS. Some weeks ago we told the story of Florence Pearsall, the girl who has made a profitable career out of modeling her hands for photographers. The result of that article was a stream of letters all asking the same question: "How can I, too, put my hands to work for me?"

We went to the country's leading model agencies and photographers for the answer. The result of that research is interesting: the maximum number of good hand models in New York, the world model center, is 15! And there isn't enough demand for hand pictures to keep all of them busy. Manhattan, too, has girls who make a specialty of modeling their ankles, feet and legs. But statistics prove that this specialized modeling doesn't offer much chance of a career: odds are about a million to one against you.

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

worked on to be kept Luman. That is because they are running into one kind of wolf one day and another the next, and pretty soon they begin to think there is nothing but wolves in the whole human race.

So they turn into sour cops, which means they are always looking for trouble. And the next thing you know they turn into thick cops, which means they always find the trouble they are looking for. Of course, a cop that has a wife to come home to and a baby to bounce on his knee is not so much exposed. You can't be bothered with the human race when you are talking baby talk and dinner is coming up.

But the unmarried cops usually need working on. And right here is where Plainclothesman Dan McGarry is different. Before he has a chance to turn sour or get thick, someone is sure to sing Mother Machree on the radio, or he will find a little lost kitten on his way home, or he will drop in at Charlie's place and Charlie and he will chin about the good old days when they were kids together. Whenever anything like this happens, Dan will trot off to see this mouse Kitty that he is going to marry, and sing out cheerfully, "Life is a grand old racket, ain't it? It's a swell little apple we live on, so why don't you get over to the piano so I can sing Danny Boy and put a sob in that high note like John McCormack in his records?'

Whenever he talks like this, Kitty always looks worried. Any time he wants to go sentimental after working hours it is all right with her. But she is scared to death he will go off on a regular eight-day binge of sentiment and she knows a cop in this condition ain't worth his salt. So she tries to harden him up.

"There are a lot of mugs living on this little apple," she says, "and they make an awful mess of things. You can sing Danny Boy all night long if you want to, if you'll only remember tomorrow morning that a crook is a crook."

"You are a cynical little mouse," says Dan.

SHE puts her hand on his arm and says gently, "Please don't get sore, Inspector. I'm glad you're a sucker for this sentimental stuff. It makes you sort of nice. But you've got to learn to take it or leave it alone. You never heard of Sir Galahad on the plainclothes squad, did you?"

"Must have been before my time," says

Dan, shaking his head.

"Galahad was a knight of the Round Table," explains Kitty. "He was a right enough guy, but a little on the soupy side. If a lady fluttered an eyelid at him he went out and stabbed a dragon for her, and he always carried his girl's handkerchief when he went into battle. Galahad was tops as a knight, but he'd be too sentimental and dreamy to make a good cop today."

She goes on like this, making a bum out of poor old Galahad, hoping to steer Dan down the middle of the road. She is sure she makes progress. But when he kisses her good night and goes home she can't find her best handkerchief anywhere.

Still, he keeps in line. Then it gets to be mid-December and Kitty is worried. Christmas is coming up, and there is no telling what Christmas will do to a sentimental guy like Dan. And two days before Christmas it begins to snow. It is one of those picture-postcard snowstorms — big flakes fluttering down and putting a blanket on the streets that gives traffic the old hush-hush. The wreaths in the windows are pretty in the snow, and the stacked Christmas trees in front of the stores downtown are crusted with white like a marshmallow layer.

Dan walks along with Kitty on his arm, doing the last of his shopping. "Jingle bells, jingle bells," he hums, and he drops a quarter into the basket of an old guy on the corner who is dressed up like Santa Claus and ringing a bell.

Kitty holds tight to his arm. "Christmas is wonderful, I know," she says. "But save carfare home, won't you?"

"Oh, we can walk home," says Dan. "Who wants to ride on a night like this?"

He drags her over to a store window that is filled with toys. Right next to them is a little kid with big eyes, and he is pressing his nose out of shape against the glass. It is too much for Dan. He says, "Oh, gosh, look at him!" and then he fishes around in his pockets for his last buck and makes the kid take it.

DON'T BE SOFT, McGARRY

The good old Christmas spirit is all very well,

Danny — but a cop has got to be hard-boiled.

At any rate, that's what Kitty says . . .

by Matt Taylor Illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg

They start home again, and, "Sleigh-bells!" shouts Dan all of a sudden. Sure enough, there is a tinkle of bells coming through the night, and pretty soon along comes a real old-fashioned sleigh, with bells on the horses and a Santa Claus in it, waving to everybody. Next to him is a nifty blonde in a red ski suit who does some waving on her own account. Across the side of the sleigh is a banner, and Dan reads — "Merry Xmas Everybody! Dirk Bros. Department Store Will Present $1,000 to — "

A truck cuts in between, and Dan can't read the rest of the lettering. But he stands there with his eyes sparkling and his mouth open. "Christmas!" he whispers. "Sleighbells! Holly! I feel just like that Tiny Tim kid, on the radio with Lionel Barrymore!"

"Steady, Inspector!" says Kitty. "We'll go home now. Tomorrow is another day. You may have some tough detail handed to you at Headquarters."

KITTY doesn't sleep much this night. She is too worried about this knight of hers just before Christmas. She knows it will be a mighty dumb crook that can't break Dan down and talk him out of making an arrest on Christmas Eve. So it is a big relief when Dan calls up in the morning, like she makes him promise, and tells her what goes on. It sounds like routine investigation work that can't possibly leave Dan out on a sentimental limb.

"It is just one of these hit-and-run things," Dan explains. "A roadster sideswipes another car downtown at two o'clock this morning, and the roadster doesn't even stop to say excuse me. The guy from the other car is in the hospital; all he knows is the make and the color of the roadster, and there are about a million of them in town. But, anyway, all the boys are being sent out to look them over and see if one has nicked fenders from bopping into someone. I'll be home as soon as I can, to help trim the tree."

"I hope you don't find that hit-and-runner," sighs Kitty.

"Maybe none of us will," says Dan. "There ain't so much to go on. Just the make and color of the car, and the kind of tires. They found the tread imprints in the new snow."

Dan has a whole list of addresses that he has to visit, and he sets out in a police car pretty content with the world, because it is a nice day to be outdoors. He is covering the suburban district, and a very pretty sight it all makes, with the snow deep on the roofs, and smoke curling from the red chimneys, and guys climbing ladders in front of the houses to string electric lights on pine trees. At a lot of the places where Dan stops, the people ask him in, and they say sure he can look over the car, but first doesn't he want a spot of sherry to warm him up? So he goes in and there are Christmasy packages scattered around and children running all over the place and holly on the mantels and mistletoe overhead.

Altogether, Dan doesn't feel like a cop at all. Never does he meet such nice people in the course of a day's work. As to the cars, not one of them shows any sign of a bump. and not many of them have the right kind of tires, which, according to the marks left in the snow, were pretty expensive tires to be used on a small car.

Dan crosses one address after another off his list, and along about five o'clock he has only three left. He's glad, because he has snitched a piece of mistletoe from one of the houses and is anxious to get back to Kitty with it. Then, when he is almost finished. a terrible thing happens. He finds the hitand-run car.

It is in a three-car garage in back of a stone house on a hill, and because the garage door is open, he goes back there first and looks over the roadster, that is bedded down between two big sedans. There is no doubt about it. The tires are the kind he is looking for; in front the right fender is dented and scratched a little, and one headlight is cracked. Dan goes around to the front door and rings the bell. He feels almost sick because he has to arrest some guy on Christmas Eve.

The butler who opens the door is as snooty as a movie butler, and Dan has to flash his badge. The butler then disappears and comes back in half a minute and says Mr. Courtland will see Dan in the library. This library turns out to be a paneled room with a high ceiling and a fire in the hearth that throws cheery flickers on the rows of books. At first Dan thinks there is no one in the room except the big moose who is sticking his head out over the mantel and giving Dan the eve. Then he sees Mr. Courtland, who is stretched out on a divan in a red lounging robe that blends with the landscape. He is a handsome young fellow if you don't mind circles under the eyes, but he hasn't got the Christmas spirit.

"What do you want?" he barks at Dan. "Do you drive that blue roadster in the garage?" asks Dan.

"Sometimes," says Mr. Courtland. "Sometimes my chauffeur runs around in it."

'Were you driving it at two o'clock this morning along Adams Street?"

"This morning? That must have been my new chauffeur," says Mr. Courtland, reaching for a drink on the table near him. "I had a guest here last night and my chauffeur drove him home."

Bring the aforementioned chauffeur in here," says Dan.

Mr. Courtland shrugs and picks up a phone and presses a button. "Downes to the library," he snaps, and in another minute in walks the

HE IS in a chauffeur's uniform. At first glance Dan thinks he isn't old enough to have a driver's license, but then he sees he's grown up, after all. He's maybe twentythree. Another thing Dan sees is that the kid is scared. You don't have to make many arrests before you can tell when a guy is expecting to be picked up and when he is really surprised. This chauffeur kid isn't surprised. He's been waiting for it to happen.

"Did you come home along Adams Street last night about two o'clock?" Mr. Courtland asks the kid.

The kid wets his lips. "Yes, sir," he says, and his voice shakes a little. "It's the shortest way back.'

Dan sighs. "Then I guess you'd better come with me to Headquarters," he says.

The kid turns white. "What charge?" he says. "Speeding?"

"I don't know how fast you were going," says Dan. "If it was ten miles an hour it was too fast. The charge is failing to report and leaving the scene of an accident. In plain English, hit-and-run."

The kid lets out a whimpering cry. He looks at Mr. Courtland, then at Dan, and then back at Mr. Courtland. "Hit-and-run!" he cries.

"I'm sorry about this, Downes," cuts in Mr. Courtland. "Since you've admitted you were driving, there's nothing much I can do." He turns to Dan and says, "That's the trouble with hiring a man you don't know much about."

Dan nods at Mr. Courtland. While he's doing this, the kid Downes makes a break for it, and Dan has to chase him all the way to the kitchen to nab him. So he slips the bracelets on the kid and says, "No sense in doing that. You're in enough trouble already."

He takes the kid out to the police car and shoves him in. It is dark by this time, and every house in sight is blazing with lights. You can see whole families inside trimming Christmas trees. Away off somewhere church chimes are batting out Holy Night. The sky is deep purple, and studded with a million stars. Dan drives slowly through the quiet snowy streets, and there's a lump in his throat

He looks over at the hit-and-run guy. The poor kid is cringing off in the corner, his locked hands in front of him blue with cold. His face is awful white and he keeps biting his lips. He is either too sullen or too scared to talk, and Dan thinks he knows which it is. "Buck up, kid," he says. "You look like you ain't used to cops. We don't murder guys even guys like you. Anyway, not on Christmas Eve."

"You leave me alone," whimpers the kid. "I know what I'm doing."

"Sure you do, kid," says Dan. "Maybe they won't set the bail too high. The guy you bopped ain't going to die."

town. I can't raise bail."

of Bethlehem. Dan is gritting his teeth, you didn't stop after the accident."

be your best girl, or your mother, or - '

a year."

"Well, what do you know?" says Dan, getting real friendly. "I bet maybe you got a baby, too."

"Baby!" the kid sobs. "What are you talking about a baby for? Why can't you leave me alone?"

They ride on some more without talking. They are at the edge of town now. The stores are open for late shoppers, and the streets are filled with people. Dan looks over at the cringing kid beside him and beads of sweat come out on the big guy's forehead. Even if the kid is a wolf, it's Christmas Eve and and -

"You wouldn't let me stop and see her first, would you?" the kid pipes up all of a sudden in a thin weak voice.

Dan frowns. "Your wife?" he says.

THE kid nods. "I'll never be out on bail, and she ain't been well. If I had a chance to get someone to stay with her -

"You tried to make a break back at the house," Dan says. "I ain't taking chances."

"I was so scared back there I didn't know what I was doing."

"I suppose you ain't scared now?"

"Yes, I'm scared," the kid says. "But I won't try to run away. I swear it.'

"It's against regulations," snaps Dan. But he is thinking hard. He thinks what if he is an hour or so late getting back to Kitty? He'll have plenty of time to be with her later on. This kid isn't going to see his wife for a long time. If he wants to say goodby to her on Christmas Eve. . .

"Well, where do you live, kid?" Dan growls. It turns out the kid lives in a cheap rooming house on the north side. Dan parks in front and unlocks the kid's bracelets. "I'll go up with you," he says. And he adds, "I'll wait in the next room."

"We only got one room," the kid says. "Fourth floor rear."

The church chimes are faint, but Dan can still hear them. They're playing Come, All Ye Faithful. "You swear you won't cross me," Dan says, "if I let you go alone?"

"I swear I won't cross you!" the kid cries. "If you'll only let me see her!"

Dan looks at the kid. He has sort of nice eyes. Besides, he's too scared to try a getaway. "Get out," Dan says. "I'll knock at the door of the fourth floor rear in an hour."

The kid thanks him and runs up the steps. At first Dan plans to wait in front in the car, but then he thinks why shouldn't he run over and see Kitty for a bit? So he does. They work on the tree and Dan doesn't mention a word about his prisoner for an hour. Then he lets it slip out, and Kitty pumps him. In two minutes she has the whole story.

"Do you mean to say you trusted him - a hit-and-run criminal!" she cries. "You simply took his word - '

'Oh, he's not like you think," Dan explains. "He's just a scared kid."

But Kitty is already out in the hall getting into her coat. "Come on!" she says. "He'll be gone, of course. But we'll go and see, anyway."

They don't say a word all the way back to the rooming house, and they don't say a word as they climb the three flights of stairs side by side. Dan stops in front of the fourth floor rear and he grins at Kitty and gives her a "now-you'll-see-I'm-right" look. Then he pounds on the door. "I'm back, kid," he yells out. "Come out and show yourself."

What's worse? Well, a barracuda is, says this daredevil swimmer, who fights man-killing sea monsters for fun by Wallace Caswell, Jr.

F ALL the fish in the sea, none bears a blacker reputation than the octopus. And yet I'd rather fight an octopus than any of several other sea creatures.

Now, I certainly don't mean to say that an octopus is harmless. If even a thirty- or forty-pound octopus gets its tentacles on a man underwater, his chances of surviving are pretty slim,

as told to VEREEN BELL

unless the victim knows how to fight the creature; and — in all modesty — I've never heard of anybody besides myself who does know how.

But the octopus is not the ferocious man-eater he is painted. He skulks in caverns and around old wrecks, all right, but he is not lying in wait for some unsuspecting prey. As a matter of fact he is hiding, for to the larger fishes the octopus is first-class prey himself.

When I was a boy, I used to catch small octor uses which, unlike their parents, inhabit shallow water, hiding in old conch shells. Around Key West fishermen catch these small ones for food. Whenever I caught one, though, I took him home and put him in a tub of water. Then I would play with him all day, experimenting, watching his reactions. I discovered that, contrary to legend, this mollusk appears to be just a touch slow-witted. His reflexes are not immediate. This knowledge was to be extremely useful to me later.

Another thing I learned is the location of the vital spot, always an important piece of knowledge to me.

The octopus looks and acts like a sort of vacuum cleaner. The central sac that looks like his head actually includes his head and body. The mantle continually pulsates, drawing water over his gills and pumping it out so he can breathe. The water can be forced out so rapidly that the beast is propelled backwards at a good clip whenever he is frightened and can't crawl out of the way.

After the octopus has made a kill, he draws the victim close, enveloping water, burns a man's eyes like liniment.

The octopus is a formidable foe, but I have fought many sea creatures that put up a tougher battle. However, that fact doesn't make me a reckless daredevil or a hero. For I never deliberately fight a sea monster without first figuring out my plan of attack. If I can't decide how to make myself a match for him, I don't fight him.

The vicious barracuda, for instance, is something I steer clear of. He is one of the fastest fish in the sea, and possibly the most sinister. I'm afraid an attacking barracuda would move too fast for the eye to follow.

Once out at Key West, where we had built a corral, I was fighting a saw-fish. Twenty or more barracudas, attracted by the commotion in the water, gathered outside the wire, which, at high tide, was only a foot and a half out of the water. Suddenly one of them leaped over the fence into the corral.

A slender knife is the only weapon Caswell uses it with the mantle and tentacles, and tears it apart with the hard, horny, parrotlike beak he has.

When I was convinced that I had devised a method of successfully fighting an octopus underwater, I searched rock holes and pilings for a contestant. Finally I found one lying with one tentacle stretched up a piling. He seemed to have about an eight-foot spread.

With an eight-inch knife in my teeth, I went overboard. Down I swam, straight to the bottom of the piling. Without waiting for the octopus to decide what it was all about, I seized one of his tentacles. He retaliated by fastening an arm onto my right leg. Another tentacle went around my middle, and another across my shoulder. Anchoring himself onto the piling with the two other tentacles, the octopus slowly drew me down toward him with alarming strength.

For thirty seconds or so I jerked and plunged in what I intended the octopus to construe as dying panic. Then suddenly I wilted, became limp in feigned death. The octopus stopped fighting me, and started hungrily pulling me to him. I gave no resistance.

The Kill

When he had me a foot from that parrot beak, I came abruptly alive. But instead of fighting away from the enemy, I lunged toward him, literally betting my life on the tardiness of his reactions. Before his brain could signal the tentacles to start pushing instead of pulling, it was too late. When I moved toward him, the tentacles were no longer taut; I had enough freedom to plunge my knife straight into that pulsing sac and sever the muscle upon which his life depended.

Since then I have killed many octopuses, always using the same method, whether they weighed 50 pounds or 300.

My method has disadvantages. For instance, the octopus is not particular where he fastens his sucker disks. My left eyeball once attracted one of the disks, and the pain was almost intolerable; I was lucky to keep the sight of the eye afterward. Sometimes complications arise, but if you act quickly enough and unexpectedly enough, you are master of almost any emergency.

Even after you have subdued the monster, there is still danger, for once the octopus perceives that things are going badly for him, he squirts his ink. This fluid, even though diluted with

Even now I get shaky when I remember being in a corral with a furious sawfish and a bloodthirsty barracuda. Before the barracuda reached me, one of the boys hurled his gig. Those Key West men are deadly with a gig, and for that I am very thankful. The barracuda was cleanly spitted.

Of the fish I fight, the mighty sawfish is the toughest. He is long — up to 20 feet — and lean and active. I'd rather fight ten tiger sharks than one sawfish.

The sawfish is a sort of connecting link between rays and sharks, resembling both in some respects. Most of my experience with sawfish was gained in the days when I was a net fisherman. A sawfish in a fishing net is the marine equivalent of a bull in a china shop. The jagged saw gets hopelessly tangled in the meshes; whereupon the sawfish lunges and rears until the net is in shreds and the mackerel or mullet are hurrying away. One night we had made a set in waist-deep water, and were hauling in when a commotion began. A sawfish was fouled in the net. I drew my knife and waded out. The instant I touched the sawfish he began to thresh so furiously that he tore loose. Instantly my position had become dangerous. I knew that there was only one place for me to be so that the terrible saw could not reach me and that was on the fish's back! And the moment I felt the sawfish lunge sideways, free of the net, I plastered myself to him. He struck at me with his tail, then his saw slashed the water. Missing me, the sawfish rushed ahead, and never have I gone through such a dizzy two minutes.

Underwater Battle

By now I had recovered from my first frightened stupor, and began stabbing and twisting my knife in the lean belly. Before long, my first saw-fish was dead. Since then I have fought and killed 50 or more sawfish up to 16 feet in length, but I still respect his fighting ability. He is amazingly supple. He twists and turns like a snake. He lashes at me with that tail, exactly like an alligator, his aim being to throw me into his saw. So to avoid exploring eternity before I'm ready, I must not let a sawfish strike me with either extremity.

Always f must cling to him like a tick. To explain, if I could hold Joe Louis's fist pressed against my cheek, he could not possibly hit me with that ong before dawn, Jim Travers was out of his eider down, shivering in the bitter cold. The dogs were still bushed from yesterday's grind, but his tongue-lashing shook them up and it was still dark when he reached his first cubby, a mile down river from the camp.

"My last chance," Jim whispered, tightlipped. Eleven miles of trap line to cover. If he were to be back at Nanuk Lake for Maureen's birthday, he must make a start for it and keep going without rest.

There was nothing in the first four trap houses. In the fifth he found a snowshoe rabbit, worthless, and in the next a mink. It was not mink he wanted; at ten dollars a pelt, no man could make the money he must make by dumping mink fur before the Hudson's Bay man.

It was fisher, at fifty dollars, or a silver fox

— these were his need now, after six weeks of luckless labor.

It had been a poor season. Plague had killed off the rabbits, and the fur bearers had fled elsewhere in search of food. Jim Travers had used every wile of the veteran trapper, yet his store of fur was lean. This morning was his last hope.

His thoughts were six months old, sixty miles south in Nikatuk, as he rode the sled over the glittering snow crust. His fears and hopes were for the girl who had journeyed north to be his wife. Poor lass, she hadn't known what that would mean!

How petite she had seemed, in contrast to the trappers' wives and sturdy Indian squaws in the settlement! How big-eyed with wonder and trepidation as she stood, his arm around her, and gazed at the bare one-story hotel, the supply store, the plain weathered houses. Maureen in her Ottawa finery, her silk stockings, her picture-book hat, fear and disillusionment in her eyes.

It had been summer then, the poplars green and the ground lush and soft. But with November the log house he had built for her on Nanuk Lake had become another world, a world of dogs and snowshoes, with winter howling promise of thirty-below-zero weather, and the white silence creeping closer day by day.

Jim Travers had been afraid for her in all that loneliness, for during most of the next two months she would be by herself in a frozen wilderness, trembling at the howl of wolves, at the explosive cracking of big trees back in the bush. Would she stick it out? Could she? Some of the other men's wives had not. That was why Nedley Grimm had wed an Indian girl, why old John Fulson's boy, Paul, was building a house for the swarthy daughter of Iroquois Charlie Clee. . .

Jim drove his dogs relentlessly, sparing no time to mend trap houses broken by the weight of snow. The sky read storm, and thinking of the long journey back to Nanuk Lake he was suddenly panicky. Now was the time to start, if he were to get there as he had promised. This last desperate tour of his trap line was foolhardy and dangerous.

But his fears were with the wide-eyed girl who in six short months had come to mean more to him than life. If he could lay a fine catch of fur before her, to bring pride into those eyes, she might learn to love the North Country as he did. If he could give her the fine things she was used to. . .

Luck smiled. In the last cubby of all he found a sleek, prime fisher, and on the return trip, miraculously, he found another. "Still one more," he prayed. "Just one more . . . please God!"

One more. Half a mile from the camp he stilled the dogs with a command and left the sled standing. At a run he passed through a muskeg and frozen tamarack slough, to a trap he had not visited in weeks. The heavy sky bent under its weight of snow, and wind numbed his lungs. He fell to his knees before the cubby, his eyes wide with incredulity. "God be praised! A silver!"

The storm hit before Jim Travers had covered a third of the homeward sixty miles. One moment the giant spruces leaned in the wind's howling breath; next they were lost in white fury.

For one panicky moment he thought of the safety that lay in the last of his line camps, only a few miles to the east. "Worst storm of the winter," he muttered, as the wind whipped his back and the whimpering dogs cowered in their harness. Then: "I've got to get back," he said defiantly. And to the dogs: "You hear, Pete? You hear me, Chuck? We've got to get back to her! She'll be scared! Up, now!"

THE snow deepened swiftly underfoot. Now the dogs were no help but a hindrance, floundering as the hard going sapped their strength. He could do better without them, but they'd perish if left, and so he broke trail, slogging along in the teeth of the wind, head drawn into the crouch of his shoulders.

Up the frozen Mink River he fought all that afternoon, pausing only when the dogs were too gone to pull the laden sled after him. To lighten their burden he stripped the sled, saving only food for the dogs and himself, his rifle and the bundles of fur. At dusk he reached Lac Bierce, and found the wind too strong for crossing.

He fed the dogs then, and himself gnawed on a strip of frozen moose meat. Then after half an hour's rest he cursed the dogs to their feet again and circled the lake to the trail beyond. He knew now that he must keep on without rest if he were to be home on time—indeed if he were to reach home at all. With three more lakes to cross, and one treacherous portage, he would be all night and most of the next day breaking trail.

The wind brought him the anguished howl of a scared wolf, and in it was the tremulous voice of Maureen, saying as he showed her Nanuk Lake for the first time: "Do you have wolves up here, Jim? I think I can get over being afraid of everything but them." Fear clutched at his heart. The wolves this year were lean and hungry, traveling far for food. If the gray ghosts had not appeared at Nanuk this winter it would be a miracle.

That night was interminable. The storm raged unabated, and he slogged along like a machine. The dogs kept up only because they were afraid of being abandoned to the gray marauders whose howls now were louder.

"Please God," Jim muttered, his fists clenched in his mittens, "give her courage!"

At dawn he knew he could never make it—not with the dogs. His legs were numb; great lumps of wet snow clung to his shoes and made each step a torture. And he had covered so few miles in the night! Before him lay Endless Lake, its warm springs creating treacherous patches of mush ice, now hidden under the white blanket.

The light was too weak for seeing. The snow had fallen too thick for the soft spots to eat up through and reveal themselves. Without warning the ice caved behind him, as he broke trail just ahead of the dogs. His

"She's sure pretty," one of the men says. His name is Ruskin.

The others nod, look at the large photograph propped against a desk lamp. "We could feed her arsenic," one says. His name is Wilson. "We could have her take it by mistake, in the hospital, and — bingo! She's bumped off."

The third man yawns. "It might be better to push her off a roof," he says wearily. "Or," he adds, glancing at the clock, "just throw her in the ocean and have it over with."

"Wait a minute," Wilson says. He turns to a typewriter on a stand beside him. "I think I've got it." He starts to type. The others wait. In a couple of minutes he jerks the paper from the machine and tosses it on the table. The others look at it between them. They read:

FADE OUT.

The men nod approval. . .

All of which brings us up to the tragic but convenient death of Nurse Mary Lamont, which takes place in "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Day," recent release in that series of movies. There is a rumor in Hollywood that Laraine Day wept real tears when she saw the character she had created bumped off by the truck, but the truth is that Miss Day was one of the deepest-dyed planners of her own demise: an event representing the most drastic means ever taken in Hollywood to elevate a young actress to great stardom.

Slated for Success

THE Kildare pictures, while sound entertainment, are a type of vehicle which can serve only as a steppingstone for a young player tagged for the top. And there was a further threat to Miss Day's career in the fact that she had become so associated with her characterization that it seemed she was not being true to Dr. Kildare when she made eyes at other men in her occasional non-Kildare pictures.

This isn't good business for an actress who has been chosen by a vote of fifty movie critics as the youngster most likely to reach full stardom, and who was selected by a nation-wide poll of theater owners as the best bet to reach a box-office pinnacle during the coming year.

One thing's a cinch: if Miss Day justifies her present position as Challenge No. 1 to the established stars, her success will show up the Hollywood press agents' school of glamor and leg-art. She just hasn't time for all this monkey business. In fact, when you first hear of Laraine Day's activities around Hollywood, you get a first impression that she might be rather too much of a busybody.

Laraine is a Mormon girl from Utah. Upon her arrival in Hollywood to make her picture bid, she not only brought her church activities with her but found time and opportunity to increase their scope. As soon as she got into pictures, for example, she organized the Wilshire Players Guild among the younger members of the Mormon Church in Southern California. There must be a couple of hundred members. Miss Day is coach, counselor, and general factotum — including, upon occasion, playwright.

I first met Miss Day in her dressing room on the set of "Foreign Correspondent," where I went, with some misgivings, to interview her. The interview was a failure—but only for the reason that Miss Day asked me all the questions. She was young, beautiful, gay and witty; not at all the seriousminded fussbudget I had expected to meet. She wanted to know if I had a script. She needed a script.

"What for?" I asked her. "The Guild?" "Creative Pictures," she said.

A new one on me. She explained that it is a small group of actors, actresses, technicians and others actively engaged in motion pictures, who on their own time and at their own expense produce movies in 16 mm. size. They do it for experimental purposes — to try out their own ideas of writing, acting, camera work, lighting, direction, and so on. They already had produced a full-length movie. Miss Day, who is a vital element in that enterprise, took the lead in the movie.

I outlined a script for her and she said it was no good, which was precisely correct.

These activities, entirely outside her daily work — which is arduous enough in itself — add up to a good working blueprint of Miss Day. Very few dates for this beautiful young girl. Her spare time is just one long busman's holiday. She seems, if you'll pardon an obvious conclusion, to have her mind on her career.

In fact she's had it on her career for a good many years. Her current blooming in the films is the culmination of a long and carefully planned campaign that began back in Roosevelt, Utah, when she was a small girl. Her efforts then were strictly amateur—the backyard variety. With her family, she moved to Long Beach, California, about thirty miles from Hollywood, when she was around twelve years old. In this migration she followed the path trod by her greatgrandfather, who was sent to the Coast by Brigham Young to establish a Mormon colony there. The colony was unsuccessful, Miss Day was not.

A Bit Player

SHE joined the Long Beach Players Guild. a little theater group, and was coached by the late Elias Day, a noted teacher. From him, by the way, she ultimately took her movie monicker (her real name is Johnson). As early as 1936, as a result of her work in Guild plays, a talent scout gave her the nod and she got a small part in a movie called "Scandal Sheet." But nothing came of this, so our heroine went back to Long Beach for more coaching and plenty of hard work. After a modest tour in a Guild play along the coast, she got parts in three Western movies of no importance. In 1938 she was signed to a term contract by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio and played opposite Wallace Beery in "Sergeant Madden." This sounds important, but her part, she ruefully admits, was not very exacting.

She was cast, somewhat casually, in the first Dr. Kildare picture, of which a long series was not then foreseen. Then came her performance as Maeve in "My Son, My Son," which won critical raves for her and established her as a player of exceptional promise. Although this was a supporting role, Hollywood agreed that she had stolen the picture.

This brought her the feminine lead in "Foreign Correspondent," and things were looking up.

But meantime the Dr. Kildare pictures had emerged as a very successful series, and Miss Day was a fixture as Nurse Lamont. This became a pain in the neck, as we have seen. A number of dodges for easing her out of the medical melodramas were discussed, a few actually were tried, but nothing clicked. So they simply decided to bump her off. Thus the truck, and the happy result desired by all.

Since her death she has played in "Unholy Partners" opposite Edward G. Robinson, and with Herbert Marshall in the current Shirley Temple picture, "Kathleen."

Future plans for her are ambitious, but so is Miss Day.

I saw her last on a studio sound stage, to which she had invited me to watch the shooting of a trick process shot. She was not working that day, but had come to the studio anyway in order to study the mechanics and the camera technique employed to create the illusion.

Miss Day and the others present watched the proceedings with absorbed interest. Being smarter, I watched Miss Day.

INCREDIBLE MR. BATT

"Who in blazes is Batt?" they asked when he first came to Washington. Now everybody knows. He's the man who dared to jolt industry out of "business as usual"—and touched off history's most amazing arms-building race

by Ray Tucker

BIG BILL BATT: He surprised Knudsen, delighted Knox, shocked America

TODAY he is responsible for providing the raw materials for the most fantastic arms output in all history. He is Uncle Sam's Quartermaster, by virtue of his job as Director of the Division of Materials of the Office of Production Management. And every official in Washington, every big businessman and industrialist over the country, knows William Loren Batt.

But two short years ago things were different. There was the time President Roosevelt asked W. Averell Harriman to select a new head for the Business Advisory Council, that semi-official agency which serves as liaison between government and industry. The Council went into a huddle over the problem. Harriman recommended his candidate. And with one voice the businessmen demanded: "Who in blazes in this man Batt?"

And there was the time a few days later when Mr. Harriman took his protégé to the White House to meet the President. They found that a Presidential subordinate supposed to know every big shot in America had scheduled the appointment for "Mr. Harriman and a Mr. Blatt."

This "Mr. Blatt," in the two years since that White House call, had been given two tremendous jobs to do. His first job was to build the machines with which to build our armaments.

And, with that job pretty well licked, he was called upon to handle the far more difficult task of supplying those machines with the raw materials for building planes, tanks, guns, ships.

This genial, broad-shouldered man with the deep-set black eyes and the infectious grin — who rose from a Wabash farm and an Indiana roundhouse to be head of the vast S.K.F. Industries, who rests his feet on the desk and tells folk stories to put his points across, who looks forward to the day when he can spend as much time as he likes "tinkering with old clocks" — is regarded as one of the dominant figures of OPM. And Washington expects him to rise still higher.

For he has the sparkling zest, the energy, the boldness, the assurance, the optimism of the true executive. He is never stumped. He is never morose. He is willing to cast theory aside in the face of a contrary fact, to take advice, to try new things. And he is big enough and tough-minded enough to admit it when he has made a mistake, and to reverse himself completely when he is convinced that he was wrong.

Warned the Nation

He was the first high official in Washington to warn the American people of the great shortcomings of our national-defense preparations. And he braved rebuke and possible dismissal to do it. When most of his associates were still insisting on a cautious, go-slow policy, he sought to shock America out of its complacency by paraphrasing Winston Churchill's language of "blood, sweat and tears."

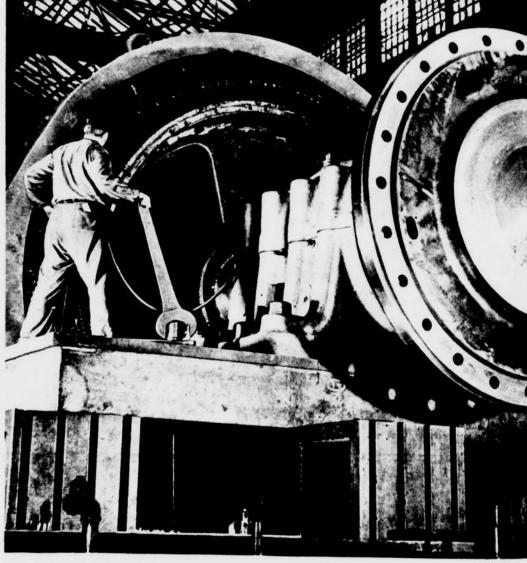

In two bold speeches that startled the Capital, he castigated the labor leaders, the politicians, the businessmen and the people, who refused to get worried about preparing for a possible showdown with the dictators.

Those warnings represented a complete reversal of his original feelings. In fact, the story of the rejuvenation of OPM, from its original "business as usual" doctrine to its present program of "armaments before everything," is very much the story of Bill Batt.

When Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., brought him into OPM in May, 1940, Mr. Batt did not see the immensity of the task. Nobody did. So he opposed drastic curtailment of industries supplying civilian wants and also excessive expansion of defense industries. He was an advocate of "business as usual," not for the sake of business but out of consideration of the customers, who would be hit by any radical changes.

Johnston & Johnston

SECOND JOB: to find raw materials to feed the huge machines he built

FIRST OF BATT'S JOBS: to build the machines to build our armaments

"We have to do this defense job, yes," he said. "But the best defense is a happy people and a sound economic system."

Then, following the collapse of France, as he saw the pitiful meagerness of our aid to the democracies, Batt's ideas began to swing around. He realized that defense industries must be given the green light. "You can't stop a fleet of tanks with a row of electric iceboxes!" argued Mr. Batt.

A little more than a year ago there was a hitherto unpublicized conference of thoughtful, frightened members of OPM. The hour had arrived, they agreed, to jar the people out of their lethargy, to awaken the nation to the need for greater sacrifice. Batt was picked for the job.

He turned it down cold—at first. Then, suddenly, he changed his mind. Without warning, he hopped a plane for New York, and delivered an address to the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, of which he is a past president.

"Too many leaders of American enterprise," he warned in that memorable speech, "are still thinking of their individual competitive positions instead of gearing their capacities to the united effort of a whole industry. Too many labor leaders are still engrossed with organizational rivalries. Too many taxpayers are complacently viewing the cost of this program as something that somehow will be met without any personal inconvenience."

Batt Gets Action

This daring speech had a profound effect at the Capital and elsewhere. William S. Knudsen invited him to lunch next day, but not in the clubby OPM dining room where they usually ate. They taxied to a distant hotel. In soft but chiding tones the motor magnate suggested over the soup that it might not be discreet to voice such fears.

But even as Knudsen shush-shushed, Navy Secretary Frank Knox slapped Batt on the back and whooped: "That was a swell speech, Bill! Hit 'em again soon!" Army and Navy bigwigs and Cabinet members, whose lips were sealed, rejoiced that one man had the "guts" to go out and blow the lid off

The long winter dragged along without perceptible improvement, while Panzer divisions overran Greece and German parachutists conquered Crete. Mr. Batt "hit 'em again" on May 15, 1941. He went on the radio and warned that "if we are to make good our promises to the defenders of democracy" we must act instead of talk.

It was after this second blast that President Roosevelt sent Harry Hopkins to London to observe the war picture and prospects. When the Lend-Lease Administrator returned and begged the President to "go the limit," Mr. Roosevelt likewise decided that the day of "business as usual" had passed. He reorganized OPM. Mr. Batt was rewarded, first by being sent on the Harriman Mission to Moscow with the temporary rank of Minister Plenipotentiary and Extraordinary — and then with the promotion to the job of Director of Materials of OPM.

A large part of Batt's success is due to his innate cheerfulness and informality. His business—the Swedish-owned S.K.F. Industries, Inc.—is one of the world's largest manufacturers of the ball bearings that make our automobiles and our trains run more smoothly. And Batt's calm, cheery nature has served as a sort of super ball bearing at OPM during

"I've never seen anything like it," I breathed. "It's beautiful, Niels!"

VEN one glance — and one glance was enough — at that still, golden face was sufficient to convince me that Flora Young in life had been lovely. But no woman is beautiful after she has been strangled.

"Terrible," I whispered to Niels Jorgensen. "Who was she?"

Niels shook that big head of his in that bearlike way he has when he is puzzled. I've always said that Niels has gotten where he is on the homicide squad because he's never afraid to admit he doesn't know all the answers

"I can tell you that, and everything else I know about the case in a very few words. my lovely but inquisitive sob sister!" He held up his left hand and checked off the points on his fingers. "First, she's been here only a week. She was a strange mixture of bloods: her father was English, her mother French and Chinese. She was rich. She has an uncle named Edwin Young, and one servant, a stringy, monkey-faced old woman named Al-lang. And that's all."

I looked around the room, carefully avoiding the corner where Flora Young's slender body lay sprawled upon a sofa, a short, plum-colored robe, intricately embroidered with flowers and butterflies, at least partially covering her golden loveliness.

The furnishings were a strange hodgepodge of very commonplace modern and exquisitely colorful Oriental pieces.

"She had some beautiful things, didn't she?" I commented. "I guess that Oriental blood in her was pretty strong."

"SHE'D lived in China all her life," Niels said. "She just rented this place, furnished, and fixed it up with some of her own things."

'She loved them; you can see that. And I don't blame her."

Niels looked at me quizzically, and reached in his coat pocket.

"I want to show you something," he said, and produced three carved, yellowish fragments which he fitted together on the dragonencircled top of a low ebony table. "There! What do you make of that?'

I knelt so that I could examine the object closely. It was a nude female figurine, perhaps six inches long, exquisitely carved from ivory, yellowed and worn smooth with age. The proportions were lovely: there was grace in every line of the reclining body. On one tiny breast, directly over the heart, was a round black mark.

"I've never seen anything like it," I breathed. "It's beautiful, Niels; whoever carved that was an artist. What a pity it's broken!"

"Yes," Niels said dryly. "What a pity.

I found the pieces on the floor." "Perhaps there was a struggle - it was knocked off - "

"I think not, honey. Ivory would not break by falling on a carpeted floor. I think it was broken by being flung against that brick fireplace; the fragments were at that end of the room."

"Queer," I mused.

"Very. Particularly the black mark over the heart. I think the little figure is very old; it certainly looks like it. But the black mark was made with a soft pencil, and I'd say it was put there recently - very recently.'

"Ah!" said Niels. "That's the question! I wish I knew the answer. If I did, I think I could answer a lot of other questions."

"Including who killed her?"

Niels shrugged, and put the pieces back in his pocket. "Perhaps even that," he

Al-lang, as Niels had said, was a stringy, monkey-faced old woman - how old, it would be impossible to guess. One of those ageless creatures, quick and strong as a cat.

She talked, when she would talk at all, a high-pitched sing-song pidgin English that was just barely comprehensible. Niels kept at her until we added at least a little to what we already knew.

Al-lang had been Flora Young's maid for many years. They had come here only a short time ago; why, Al-lang did not know. I gathered from Al-lang's attitude that a Chinese lady did not discuss such things with a maid.

She made a sharp, angry hissing sound between her teeth when Niels showed her the broken ivory figure, but all Niels could pry out of her was that the thing had belonged to Flora Young, and that it was very wrong for him to have it in his possession.

Miss Young had had only one visitor: her uncle, Edwin Young. Al-lang did not care for Uncle Edwin; she made that very evident.

"He all time want money b'long Missy," she said, her black eyes snapping. "Missy say no; go way now. Missy say " - Al-lang frowned over the word - "par'site. Missy, she talk 'Merican plenty good."

The night before, there had been a phone call. Miss Young had answered it, talked for quite a long time. Al-lang had not heard anything that was said. "Missy" had told her to go upstairs and to bed early in the evening, that she expected someone, and was not to be disturbed. When Al-lang came down in the morning she had found her mistress dead. That was all she could tell us.

NIELS motioned Tim to take the old woman away. Tim is the uniformed cop who works with Niels, and a swell person he is, too.

"Well?" Niels challenged.

"Well, Al-lang has no use for Uncle Edwin. Apparently, the girl didn't either, if she called him a parasite."

"Check. I knew something about Uncle Edwin from reading a number of letters he'd written Miss Young. Parasite was too good a word for him. Gilmore and a couple of the boys are sobering him up now; found him in a little hotel on the edge of the badlands, dead drunk and ugly. I — Tim came in just then. "There's a guy on the phone," he said in a stage whisper. "Asked for Miss Young. I told him to wait, thinkin' mebbe you'd like to be talkin' to him.'

"Nice work!" said Niels. The phone was in the hallway; I could hear Niels's voice, but I couldn't understand what he was saying.

"We're going to have company," he said when he came back, looking very much pleased. "A Dr. Exter and his wife. Old friends of the murdered girl. They should be interesting. And while we're waiting, honey, rustle around in the kitchen and see if you can find an egg, will you?"

"Sure. Why?"

"I want a bit of the white; I think I read somewhere that it can be used to mend broken china and such."

"Ah!" I said.

"Exactly," agreed Niels, and started arranging the pieces of the broken ivory

DR. EXTER was a younger man than I had expected; about thirty, with blue eyes that were strikingly accented by a deep tropical tan. A handsome, charming, carefully-groomed society doctor, was my snap judgment.

His wife was the thin-faced aristocratic type, with long, feline dark eyes and very white teeth. They arrived shortly after the boys had removed the body.

"This is - I can't tell you what a shock this is," said Dr. Exter. "I can't understand who could want to do a thing like that to Flora. She was practically a stranger here; she couldn't have made any enemies. You are sure robbery wasn't the motive? She habitually kept large sums of money on her person, or around the house."

"I'm sure it wasn't," said Niels. "Her jewelry was on her vanity, untouched, and there was a big roll of bills in her bag several hundred dollars. You knew her well?"

"Why, of course! We entertained for her just - let's see. The night before last, wasn't it, dear?"

"Tuesday night," said Mrs. Exter. "The night before last.'

'She seemed perfectly normal, happy; nothing on her mind? She didn't seem worried about anything?"

"Flora?" Dr. Exter smiled briefly. "You didn't know her! She was always gay, volatile heart a stopped clock, he lumbered about on his weighted shoes, hoarsely cried out as the sled slid from sight before his eyes.

He flung himself to his knees and seized the harness; the white fangs of Chuck, the leader, chopped at him and the frenzied pawing of the doomed brutes wrenched his heart. Then they were gone, and Jim's mittened hands clutched only the weighted tangle of straps.

It was not terribly deep here, but there was a current. Sled and dogs were under the ice, a steady drag on Jim's arms as he lay hauling. His teeth clicked together, breath plumed from his nostrils as he heaved. The loaded sled came slowly to his hands.

For a quarter-hour his life lay in the balance while he fought the sled's weight and tugged at the lashed bundle of fur. Nothing else mattered. The dogs were gone; part of the soul of him had gone with them, for dogs were human in the loneliness of a trapper's winter. If the fur went too, his winter's profit would vanish—and lovely Maureen also. Rising at last, he stood weak and unsteady, with the fur piled at his feet.

He was alone now, trudging on with his fur bound to his back. His strength was slow returning. He shut his mind to the loss of the dogs and thought ahead through the last leg of his journey. He was not hungry, but his legs were leaden, and soon the wet sleeves of his parka were frozen stiff. "Ought to stop — thaw out." But he kept on.

THE wolves followed him to Nanuk Lake, and onto the lake itself. He turned at the point of spruce and cursed them. A moment later he rounded the point and saw home.

"Maureen — darling — wait! I'm coming!"

His cry was despair. He tried to run, fell, got up and did run — but why he was running he didn't know. There should have been a wind-bent plume of wood smoke rising from the cabin chimney, but there wasn't, and its absence meant that she was gone.

The loss of the dogs was now but a small ache in the greater wound that overwhelmed him. They'd been right, the old-timers, the youngsters who had sworn off white girls and were set to marry Indians. They'd known.

The storm had hidden all signs of her going, but the sled was gone, and the two dogs he had left with her. He let his fur fall to the floor in the kitchen, and walked staring through the cabin. It wasn't home now. He had built it for her, and without her it was a bare, strange, silent place. There were clothes of hers in the bedroom, but those she had needed for the journey to town she had taken with her.

The bed was unmade. Her small personal things she had not bothered with, nor had she plucked up any of the knickknacks with which she had prettied the place. Just the essentials, he guessed, because she had left in a hurry, left in fear of the storm, or of the wolves which must have made this place a winter-long nightmare for her. And she had left but a short while ago. There was still warmth in the stove.

is my husband?"

Jim made a fire and remembered that he had not eaten. He tried to put food into himself, but was not hungry. Just tired. And beaten. He stared blankly at the fur for which he had risked his life. Good fur. Good money. "But money wouldn't have kept her," he said bitterly. "I should have known." To add to his greater emptiness was the small hurt that she had left no line of writing to explain her departure.

HE SLEPT through the night, and at daylight strapped the fur to his back again and started for the settlement. It was not the same now, but the Hudson's Bay man came to Nikatuk but twice a season, and to be turned into money the fur had to be put before him. There would be other winters, and a man had to go through the motions of living, even though no longer alive.

The snow had stopped. He saw wolf signs, confirming his belief that the gray marauders had terrified Maureen into flight. In the settlement he went straight to the drab one-story hotel, and stared in stony silence while the fur buyers fingered the fisher and silver fox which now meant so little.

"Five hundred and twenty dollars," the man said. Jim pocketed the money, nodded, went out. It was good money, but what good was it?

He drank whiskey until the taste of it sickened him, then went across to Bascom's store. She would have left the sled and the dogs with Bascom, and he would need them to haul supplies back to the empty cabin. Men spoke his name. He passed with only a nod for answer, and went around back of the store to hunt up his property.

Her voice came to him before he caught sight of her. Incredulously he halted.

COMPETITION. First-night jitters are common among composers and playwrights, but what happened the night one of Richard Wagner's operas was getting its first airing was justification for a Grade-A nervous collapse. The leading tenor forgot most of Wagner's new music and kept filling in with pieces from other operas—by other composers!

REASON. The manuscript of Buffalo Bill's first novel was entirely without punctuation and capitals. "Life is too short," said Bill with complacence, "to make big letters where small ones will do."

THOROUGH. It took Thomas Gray 13 years to write his famous "Elegy." The poem contains 32 four-line stanzas, which means that Gray averaged fewer than three stanzas (12 lines) a year! PARADOX. John Burroughs, who spent most of his life teaching others to know and love the great outdoors, actually spent 20 years indoors—working in a vault of the U. S. Treasury Department in the nation's Capital SOLUTION. Rossini once found himself stuck with a contralto who had only one good note in her voice— B-flat. But did that discourage the composer? Not much! He just wrote her an aria in which she did nothing but sing B-flat while the orchestra carried the melody.

DISTANCE. The Spanish painter Velasquez was one gentleman who didn't believe in burying his nose in his work. The artist's brushes had handles 8 feet long!

troublous days. When generals and admirals and manufacturers and politicians pound desks and shout across the table, he turns on a broad Hoosier grin. His eyes sparkle. He enjoys the clash, but never engages in it. He has a homely way of dispelling tension. He tells folk stories with a skill matching such a raconteur as President Roosevelt himself.

He snipped the red tape which threatened to strangle OPM in the early, experimental months. He persuaded colleagues to abandon formal, crowded conferences for small, friendly, chatty huddles. Haloed in clouds of smoke from his inevitable cigar, and sprawled on a divan or with his feet on the table, he humanizes stand-offish businessmen and industrialists. He transformed OPM from a regiment into a family.

When he must consult a superior or a subordinate, he never forwards a memo. He hurries through the halls to the other fellow's hideout. He is a great believer in face-to-face technique.

When OPM's airplane expert pokes a head into Batt's office to sing out that the instrument board of a new German plane downed by the British has arrived for laboratory inspection, Batt drops everything with a boyish whoop. He scurries to the aviation section one flight down to tinker with the mechanism. And he doesn't return to his office until he has mastered the details of the whole works.

He has a frank simplicity, almost a humility, which begets the same qualities in all who deal with him. A Swedish director of S.K.F. says: "I have done business with him across 3,000 miles for years, and trust him to the limit. How can you help but trust a man who tells you of his mistake before you know of it, and when you might never learn of it?"

To a reporter who wrote a sympathetic story, he sent a self-deprecating thank-you note. The article, he said, reminded him of the woman who sat mystified in the pew while the minister eulogized her dead husband. When she could stand it no longer, she whispered to her boy: "Son, go up and take a peek in that coffin! That ain't your pappy the preacher's talkin' about!"

Tactful Bill Batt

ONE incident of early OPM days illustrates how diplomatically but effectively he operates in his human relationships. It was not long after his arrival at the Capital that he realized the Army had greatly underestimated its needs. The military men, long used to a Congressional policy of slow starvation, did not know how much raw material was needed for the manufacture of various weapons.

Some OPM-ers insisted on rushing to the President—to Secretary Stimson—to the newspapers—with word of the delinquency. Mr. Batt counseled caution. He pointed out that the Army could not be held responsible because they were like beggars at a feast. Meanwhile, he and the equally diplomatic Donald Nelson persuaded the War Department to modernize many of its purchasing and contracting methods.

It is fitting that Uncle Sam's Quartermaster in a struggle that will be decided in large part by men in overalls in the machine shops of America should himself have been a day laborer. He has a practical faith in the ancient virtue of hard, honest, plodding work.

He was one of the nation's first industrialists to insist that employers must recognize the human rights and dignity of the workers. He moved S.K.F.'s offices from New York to the Philadelphia plant, although New York offered greater advantages from a selling standpoint. He wanted to be where he could have face-to-face talks with his men about their problems and troubles.

Not even Bevin, Britain's Cabinet labor member, has paid a more glowing tribute to the heroism of England's workingmen, and the part they should play in a postwar society. "The social and financial aristocracy that has directed the affairs of the British Empire for so long has seen its day," Batt said in that exciting New York speech. "The British workingmen—the wage earners of the lower and middle classes—are the ones who have borne the brunt of this war's terror, and in those hands now rests the fate of the Empire. It is they, not the old leaders, who cry out: 'This war will bloody well be fought to a finish...' And they are in the saddle. When the fighting is over and Britain has won, they will remain in the saddle.''

As a leading figure in numerous business organizations, he has preached the doctrine that industry must recognize and assume its social responsibilities. Discarding technical lingo, he insists that there is enough wealth and work and happiness for everybody, if somebody doesn't snitch more than his share through paying low wages, exacting unjustified prices or making swollen profits.

The fundamental explanation of these convictions may be found in his own career, which has been an old-fashioned American drama since his birth at Salem, Indiana, 56 years ago. His family was poor. He never had his shoes half-soled by a cobbler until he left college; he nailed the leather on himself.

He's a Hard Worker

His father was employed in the Monon Railroad shops, and the son followed in his dad's footsteps. After high-school hours and during college vacations, young Bill did repair work in the roundhouse, and there he mastered the machinist's trade. There were nights when he was so weary that he fell asleep on the front porch while courting the future Mrs. Batt.

At Purdue University he was a star student, despite outside work and a daily six-mile hike from farm to campus and back. For three years he won the highest scholastic honors in the engineering school. The class magazine said that "his capacity for work is unlimited, and his willingness to help others has gained him an enviable reputation."

Upon graduation he remained at Purdue as research assistant to an illustrious engineering professor. But when his hero shifted to Illinois University, young Batt got a job with a Philadelphia firm. When that company and several others merged with S.K.F., he was made vice-president and general manager. He was no lily-fingered boss. He did the research on and installed the first ball bearings ever used on a train, and they are still in use twenty years afterward. In 1922, only 15 years off the campus and 37 years old, he became president.

He had fallen in love with Ruby Burroughs, a beautiful, bright-eyed girl, while still in grammar school. Today, although small and slender, Mrs. Batt mothers her big, black-haired, red-faced husband as if he were still a boy. She bought and installed tea things in his OPM office—a safeguard against fatigue resulting from overwork, light lunches and late diffners.

His Sons Help

FRIENDS classify the Batt family as a "splendid institution." He is inordinately proud of his two sons - 25year-old Bill and 21-year-old Bob. The older, whose six feet, six inches require him to carry his own divan with him wherever he moves, was graduated from Harvard several years ago. He immediately entered the Department of Commerce, starting at the bottom in the National Income Section. He is now on Mr. Harriman's staff in London, but his ambition is to write or enter politics. (The father himself pleads guilty to a faint ambition to sit in the Senate some day.) Bob helps at his father's office, and has abandoned plans for a career during the emergency.

Mr. Batt has other reasons for being a family man. Although he works from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M., with numerous night conferences, he manages to fly to Philadelphia frequently for a look-see at S.K.F. And on those trips he always tries to pay a quick visit to his estate at Wyncote, 12 miles outside the city, where the children of his three married daughters greet him at the station with shrill cries of "Bumpy!"

He no longer has time to carve furniture for their bedrooms, as he did for his own youngsters, but sometimes he steals a Sunday to fly their kites.

One reason he wants to lick Hitler in a hurry is so that he can have more hours to play with the kids—and "to tinker with old clocks."

The End

How high is up?

PEOPLE sometimes come to us and say something like this: "I make $40 a week. How much life insurance should I own?"

We wish we could answer that question. But, frankly, it is a little like asking: "How high is up?" or "How long is a piece of string?"

The only answer we know is: "It depends."

The amount of life insurance a man should own depends on a great many things. Each man's case is a strictly individual problem. For example: Is he married? How many children has he? How old are his children? Has he other dependents? Does he own a home? Is it mortgaged? What is his occupation? What are his other assets?

If a man is not married, he may not require so much protection as a man making the same income who is married and has four children. A man who owns a home may want to provide additional insurance to enable his widow to pay off a mortgage. These and a great many other considerations make it impossible to lay down any one rule or set forth statistics governing how much life insurance any particular man should own.

An average figure should never be taken as a guide in determining the insurance needs of any given individual. For instance, one man may find that a certain per cent of his income will buy the kind and amount of life insurance that he should own, under his circumstances. His neighbor, on the other hand, may find that this same per cent of income provides more than adequate protection.

That is why the question: "How much life insurance should I own?" can be answered intelligently only after a trained, experienced life insurance agent has made a conscientious study of each individual problem.

as ether. She was the life of the party wasn't she, Rita?"

"Oh, absolutely!" I wondered if I only imagined a trace of bitterness in the woman's voice.

"How long have you known her, Dr. Exter?'

"About five years, I'd say. You see, my father was a missionary; he wanted me to help him in his work. I joined him in the Orient as soon as I finished my interneship. Flora was interested in my father's activities, and a very capable nurse, I may add."

"You lived in China before you went to school?"

"I was born there. I speak the language as well as a native. If I can be of any assistance to you -

Niels produced the figurine with the dexterity of a magician. "Can you tell me what this is?" he asked.

Dr. Exter glanced at the bit of ivory with no apparent interest.

"I'd say it was Chinese, and a very good piece of ancient ivory carving." "Why, how lovely!" exclaimed

Mrs. Exter. "Much nicer than anything in your collection, George." "Older, I imagine." Dr. Exter shrugged. "The old boys did better work.' "That's usually the case," said

Niels. "I've had a little talk with Al-lang; I gather that she's been with Miss Young for a long time. Is that correct?"

"Over here we'd call her Flora's mammy," Dr. Exter explained. "I think she loved Flora like a mother, although Al-lang is old and crotchety, now. Flora had a temper, too; her mother died when she was an infant, and her father spoiled her. She was all he had in the world, you see; his only living relative in the world was his brother, and Bret Young, for all his money, wasn't a man who made many friends."

"His brother? You mean Edwin Young?"

"Why, yes." Dr. Exter looked surprised. "You know him?"

"He's here in town. Followed Miss Young here, apparently."

Dr. Exter nodded understandingly. "He would. He used to pester Flora with begging letters. He seemed to feel that as Bret's only other living relative, he should have been remembered in Bret's will; instead of which, the whole fortune was left to Flora.'

"I see," said Niels. "Thanks for coming out so promptly, Dr. Exter. I'm sorry I had to ask you all these questions, at a time like this."

"If I've helped at all, I'm very glad. If there's anything else - could I help you question Al-lang, for example? Her English is rather sketchy, I remember."

"I've already talked to her," Niels said. "She's quite a character. I'm turning her over to my old friend, Lee Sing; he's the smartest man in the Chinese colony here, and he'll see she's taken care of."

"Then I guess there's nothing I can do just now, at least," said Dr, Exter. He glanced at his wife. "Ready, dear?'

The woman's dark eyes swept the room, with its sharp contrast of Occidental and Oriental furnishings, and again I caught that impression of suppressed bitterness.

"Yes, George," she said quietly.

Just as we were leaving, the phone rang again. Tim answered it. His face was red when he came back. "Sure, and it's a fine bunch of rookies we're havin' on the force these days. That was Gilmore, who was helpin' to sober up the uncle. Gave 'em the slip, the drunk did, slick as a whistle. Went to the bathroom - and through to the connectin' room, and by the time them geniuses tumbled, the guy could be in London shakin' hands with Churchill!" . . .

It took a few minutes to explain things to Al-lang, but at last we had her ready. She rode up in front with Tim; Niels and I sat in back. He tried to hold my hand; as a matter of fact, he did hold it. He picked up my left hand by the tip of the third finger, looking at it — the third finger — and shaking his head. "What it needs, honey," he said,

"Perhaps he didn't intend to kill her; just quiet her"

"is a ring. A neat diamond solitaire." We rounded the corner just then. and almost ran over a tall man with a stubble of gray whiskers. Tim paused long enough to make a few remarks about jay walking, and we drove on, but the romantic moment was gone. My boy friend had become a cop again.

"I'm playing a hunch open at both ends," he said. "Would you mind keeping your fingers crossed?"

"Gladly. Tell me more." "Not now," said Niels. "It's bad luck to call a hunch in advance!"

I TRIED several times that evening to get in touch with Niels, but without any luck.

But just as I was getting ready to cold-cream my face for the night, he called. "Remember I told you this afternoon that I had a hunch open on both ends? Well, I filled. Would you like to see the showdown?"

"You're wasting time." I said. "Where?"

"At the scene of the crime. 'Bye now; I've got another call to make."

He hung up and I started hanging clothes on myself. A pat or two of powder and five seconds with the rouge, and I was ready to go. An obliging taxi driver made the trip in exactly seven minutes.

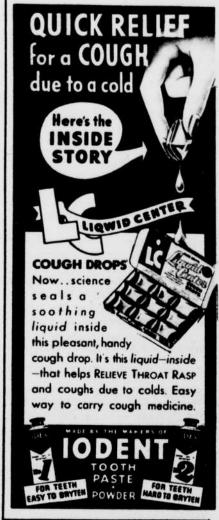

Niels opened the door. "Come in," he invited. "I want you to meet a not-unexpected guest." He indicated a tall, unshaven man slouching in a chair . . . the man we had almost run over earlier in the day.

"This," continued Niels, "is Uncle Edwin; Edwin Young. I had an idea he might show up here this evening, so I waited. And he obliged - thus picking up the last loose end in the

Mr. Young moved impatiently in his chair.

"I've told you repeatedly, that I am entirely within my legal rights," said the tall man in his unpleasant,

Inside there is a bed, a couple of chairs and a bureau. The drawers of the bureau have been pulled out and emptied and the closet door is open and there isn't a thing inside. "Gone!" Dan moans. "He's gone!"

"Of course he's gone!" cries Kitty.
"What did you expect? He did a quick

Dan looks sick. "Chicken, I would have sworn that kid wouldn't —"

She turns and is gone. Dan sits on the bed in a cold sweat. He can tell when Kitty means a thing, and she means this. For half an hour he sits here, holding his head. He even forgets it's Christmas Eve.

rent and she is only waiting until after Christmas before she throws them out anyway.

There is no one in the neighborhood who knows anything about them.

Dan walks up and down the street, turning hot and then cold and mumbling to himself. Finally he figures it out like this: If the kid wants to double-cross him, he is double-crossed for good, and there is nothing he can do. But if the kid is on the level, where does he go with a wife that ain't well?

All of a sudden Dan snaps his fingers. It is all perfectly clear. What happens is, the kid goes upstairs, finds his wife awful sick and takes her to a hospital. All Dan has to do is find out which one.

In three hours he covers twelve of them, asking at the desks for a kid named Downes that brings in a sick wife. The nurses give him bored looks and turn to the records and shake their heads. Finally there is only one hospital left. This nurse is the most bored of all. She says, "Downes? He might have been here, but we're filled up. Try the annex. It's out in back over the garage."

Dan tries the annex. The nurse there says, "Downes? Of course. Last door to the right."

Dan runs down the hall. He pushes open the door without knocking and there is the kid Downes bending over a bed, looking down at a white-faced little mouse who has her eyes closed and a kind of tired smile on her lips. Dan stares at the kid and he can't believe what he sees. He isn't the same kid. He's smiling and happy. His eyes are shining. His shoulders are back. Why, that kid ain't scared any more!

"I was coming to find you, copper," he says to Dan.

Dan mops his forehead. "So you didn't cross me!" he whispers.

"I had to get her here in a hurry," the kid says. "You weren't in front in the car. I couldn't stop to leave messages."

Dan nods and sinks into a chair and the kid comes over to him. "I got something to tell you," he says, and his voice rings out loud and clear. "I wasn't driving that roadster at two o'clock this morning. Mr. Courtland was. I was walking along Bruce Street when he drove up alongside of me.

"I'd been out all night looking for work—wrapping packages or washing dishes or anything. Mr. Courtland was drunk, but not too drunk to be scared. He said he'd been speeding and a cop yelled at him to stop and he wouldn't. And he was afraid this cop took down his license number. He said he'd been fined so often for speeding he'd lose his driver's license this time — and then he said any guy that would say he was the Courtland chauffeur and take the rap for him could earn a thousand dollars."

THE kid leans over all of a sudden and pokes Dan in the chest and his face is all twisted up. "I said I'd take the rap for him," he says, and he is so excited his voice cracks. "Even if he told the truth and I knew it was hit-and-run I guess I'd have taken the rap for a thousand bucks, copper. You know why? I was scared — that's why. She - she was hungry. We were getting kicked out of our room. When it gets that bad you begin to be really scared. You get so scared your teeth chatter and your bones ache. You can't sleep and you get icy cold even in a hot room. You get so scared but you don't know about that, do you?"

"I can sort of guess." Dan nods. The kid doesn't seem to hear him. He turns and walks back to the bed, and the little mouse opens her eyes and smiles at him. Then the kid pulls down the covers a little and Dan sees a tiny head that is round and red and homely, sticking out of one end of a white bundle. The kid points to it and he looks at Dan and he laughs. "But now I ain't scared any more!" he shouts out. "He did it! He gave me back my guts!"

Dan leans forward. The little round ball is the funniest looking thing he ever sees. It has a little button nose and two slits above it and a wider one underneath.

"He did it!" the kid sings out again.
"That little guy! Just by being born he did it!" He fumbles around and finds the little mouse's skinny hand and he gives it a squeeze. "I ain't ever going to be scared again — and all on account of him. They can kick me around if they want, but we'll lick

People who have to rescue themselves from tension - and that includes just about all of us - have a choice of two methods, says Norman Dine, a relaxation expert. One method makes you relax without effort on your part, and is for the man or

The procedure is to work on one group of muscles at a time. Devote several practice periods to that one group, then progress until you have made the muscular rounds. Then you go into your whole routine.

To ready yourself for practice, you lie stretched out at ease on your back with your arms out beside you on a bed or a couch. Have your room as free of disturbing light, noise and family invasion, as possible.

Then you tackle your arms and legs first, beginning, say, with the right arm, and going progressively to the other arm and then your two legs. Begin now by lifting the limb about twelve inches from the bed. For the first movement, you stiffen it and let it go, repeating the movement many times. Next, stiffen and relax the individual parts of the limb. For the arm, bend at the elbow, force the hand forward at the wrist, and stretch your fingers apart. For the leg, bend at the knee, force the foot forward at the ankle, and stretch the woman who wants instant, if only temporary relief. The other method is for the more persevering, who will take the time and pains to cultivate the ability to relax at will. When you master that, you master a skill, like fencing, boxing or playing a good game of golf.

Quickest and best way of the temporary muscle-relaxers is exercise especially walking. But you must really walk, not dawdle. Cover enough miles to give you a work-out, Next, try stretching: lock your toes under the footboard of the bed and pull toward the headboard with your hands. Do it again and again until you feel the tautness easing out and a sensation of opiate bliss sneaking in.

Shaking - the way a dog does to put himself in fine fettle - is a trick any tense person can use to advantage. To do as good a job of it as your pooch does, stand up, bend over, drop your arms limply, and swing into me

If you can't or simply won't do these things, the best substitute is massage, either the persuasive gallops of an expert's hands or the soothing whirr of a vibrating cup, electrically plugged in and self-applied. Temporarily helpful is heat therapy, such as a prolonged soaking in a warm tub, or a quick sun bath in your altogether under an ultra-violet lamp.

AND now for the second and more loudly cheered method of muscular control. You have to make up your mind to practice a few minutes every day for weeks, perhaps months to train all the muscles of your body to operate as an harmonious whole.

In order to master this art, you must get acquainted with your muscles and be able to track down tenseness wherever it exists. Learn how to flex and unflex all your voluntary muscles - about 400 of them - and find out where the tension is. Once you know, you can ease it out, as a violinist releases tautness from his fiddle strings. Of course, you can't get to all of the 400 muscles directly, but you can reach the major ones, and thus get a sympathetic response from the little, out-of-the-way ones.

toes apart. Complete the movement of tensing and untensing many times.

The next region you tackle - say at the beginning of the third week is the trunk. Use the same technique of tensing and untensing muscles and do one completed movement repeatedly before going to to the next: (1) Draw in the abdominal muscles; (2) Bend upward and forward at the waist; (3) Arch your back; (4) Inhale deeply. When you have control over this new portion of your body, spend another week of practice on the trunk in addition to arms and legs.

Shoulder Exercises

THEN it's time to go on to the shoulders. The movements here are as follows: (1) Swing right arm to the opposite side of your body, stiffen it and release it; (2) Do the same thing with the left arm; (3) Hunch shoulders forward and return to position; turn to position.

Spend a week on the shoulderregion, all the time continuing practice on the other muscular groups.

Then, you tackle the neck-area. Incline the head in three directions: (1) to the left and back to position; (2) to the right, and back to position: (3) forward, and back to position. Specialize for another week on the neck muscles, while you keep up practice on all other muscular groups:

By this time you are almost a proficient, for you have come to the last of your muscular rounds. You are going to concentrate now on the smaller muscles of the head. You locate these and are able to control the creating and releasing of tension in them by: (1) squinting your eyes; (2) baring your teeth; (3) gripping your jaws; (4) curling your tongue and rolling it back; (5) swallowing deliberately; (6) wiggling your ears if you can.

From now on you can go through the whole routine and relax those 400 muscles you didn't even know you had. As you become the master of your nerves and muscles, relaxation becomes as involuntary as the action of the muscles of your hands and feet when you drive a car.

hand; but if I allowed him to withdraw his fist six inches, he could jab me unconscious. A sawfish has several times the shocking power of Joe Louis's fist.

I found this out in Key West. In those days I was beginning to think I was big stuff, Tarzan of the Sea. To show how cocky I was, I fastened on a sawfish without a knife, just showing off. The sawfish doubled back and forth, whipped and twisted and rolled, and I stayed with him. After a minute or so of it, the sawfish seemed to realize that I could not be thrown off. He quit struggling. Naturally I relaxed too, thinking it was over. Instantly the sawfish's body smacked me with a stunning force, and I was knocked loose. Then the tail struck me, throwing me forward - into the toothstudded saw. The saw whipped around sideways, slashing savagely, and landed upon my leg, burying two of the teeth to the bone.

I've never been so cocky since then: a big fish is dangerous as long as he's alive.

To me it has always been interesting that one of the fastest creatures in the sea isn't a fish but a mammal. This is the dolphin, or porpoise. Few fish can outswim him.

merely go along for the ride. And it's usually a wild ride. The hide is smooth and hard to hold. When I dive upon an eight-foot porpoise, I lock my legs around him, clasp my hands on to each pectoral fin, and fasten my teeth on to the dorsal fin. And the porpoise is away like a crazy thing. At such terrific speed, the water pressure against me is tremendous; it feels like standing under a waterfall.

If the porpoise sounds (dives downward), I stay with him, for he must come up for air the same as I. But the trouble is, he usually sounds to get a running start for a jump. And let me tell you, when he comes out of the water, he makes the upheavals of an outlaw bronco seem tame. I can usually stay on him for two successive jumps, but if he jumps three times in a row, we return to the water separately.

Another sea creature I handle without my knife is the sea turtle. When I've spotted one, I go overside and swim down to him, approaching him from behind and grabbing one of his rear flippers. (The sea turtle has flippers instead of feet, and they can't be drawn into the shell.) He starts swimming away, and I pull myself up onto his back. Then I get my hand under the front edge of the shell and throw my weight back, so that the turtle's front end is raised. Thus he is forced to swim up to the surface. To go down, I lessen the upward pull on the front edge of the shell, and down we go, to rise whenever I am ready. Again on the surface, I send him to the left by holding his left hind flipper, which causes him to make a neat turn. In this manner I can ride a turtle for hours.

The tail end of a turtle is the safe end. With the rays, the tail end is the one to avoid, because in most of the Gulf species, the ray's tail is armed with venomous, bony, serrated barbs. I've had the unhappy experience of being "stung" with one of these barbs, and the shock and pain is almost unbearable. A man who steps on a sting ray can lose his leg and maybe even his life as a result of the wound.

The grandpa of the ray family is the devilfish, or manta, who grows to 4,000 pounds, with a "wingspread" of 20 feet or more. I used to harpoon devilfish and let them tow the boat for an exciting ride. One Sunday morning I had a fishing party out and suddenly saw a great shadow moving on the reef. "Yonder's a devilfish," I yelled to my helper. "Put the boat over him!"

Bull's-Eyel

When the bow of the boat was almost over the ray, I threw the harpoon, and saw it make a direct hit. The devilfish made a short run; then, to my astonishment, he sank to the bottom. I had harpooned many of them, but I'd never seen one do that before. When we discovered that he was dead, my puzzlement increased, because these monsters are notoriously hard to kill. I dived over the side, cut a hole in one of the wings, and ran a warp line through the hole. Then we towed the devilfish ashore.

In the broiling sun I carefully dissected the carcass. The job took hours, but I found out what I wanted to know. The harpoon had pierced a strange, spongy mass. And that had killed the ray almost instantly. I noted the exact location of the mass.

A few days later in Panama City I had a harness made for my shoulders. I cut my harpoon off its line, and attached the end of the line to the harness.

Next day my tender and I went out for devilfish again. After several fruitless hours, we saw one moving down the beach. He was close to the surface, so that the tips of his wings came out of the water.

The devilfish has a huge mouth, big enough to slip a suitcase into, containing flat, crusher teeth. The bottom jaw is slightly undershot. At the sides of his mouth are a pair of muscular flaps, somewhat like arms, with which he scoops in fish and shrimp. After some studying, I had figured a way to avoid that big mouth.

As we neared the devilfish, I said, "Listen, Roger, get out your watch. If I'm not up in three minutes, haul me in on the harpoon line."

Hugging Danger

When we were several yards from the devilfish, I jumped in, feet first, directly in front of him. Immediately the ray caught me with his flaps, pulling me tightly against him. I threw both arms over the fish's head and drew my legs up under his jaw, holding my body stiff against his mouth. That big mouth snapped shut, the undershot jaw scraping the skin on my stomach; but he couldn't get me into his mouth, for the same reason that you cannot bite the palm of your hand. With a mighty swirl of water the devilfish ran under the bow of the boat, narrowly missing banging my head against it.

For half a minute my only thought was to hold on and keep my body stiff against the horizontal mouth. The water rushed past my ears at a terrifying speed. I reached over as far as I could and raked toward myself with the knife, trying to find that vital spot. I brought the knife forward until it struck the bony plates of his head.

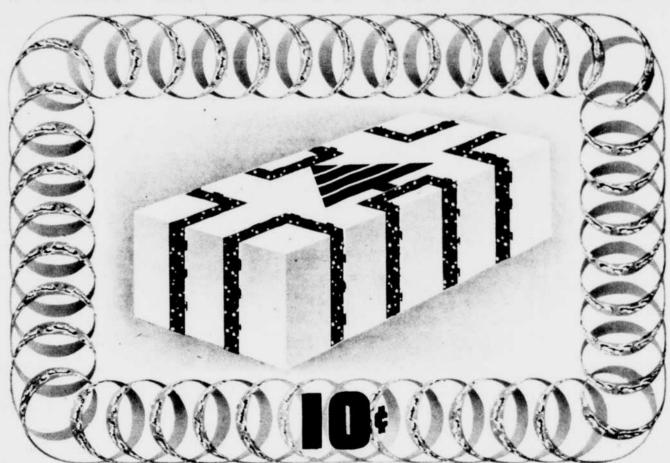

Then I raked again.

The second time, I got it. I felt the powerful flaps go limp. The rush of the water slowed, and my feet dragged bottom. The devilfish, all two thousand pounds of him, was dead.

Somewhat hampered by the harness (which, although I've fought dozens of devilfish since, I never used again) I sprang to the surface. Roger was coming toward me in the boat, and I swam to meet him.

GETTING AHEAD WITH COURTESY

Even bright students need good manners to hold important jobs

by Emily Post

Author of "Etiquette: The Blue Book of Social Usage"

HAVE always maintained that etiquette is a practical need in everyone's life. But I have never had clearer proof than in a letter sent me by a faculty member of an important school of engineering. He is now serving on a committee to advance the employability of this school's graduates.

"Among our students," he writes, "are the brightest sons of the least well-to-do families within a forty-mile radius of this city. These boys are all here on scholarships. At the end of four years they will be well-equipped technically, but at a disadvantage socially, to compete for positions with graduates of the more exclusive colleges. So far they have needed only to prove superior to others in competitive examinations. This very fact breeds in them a lack of that consideration for others which is the whole basis of courtesy.

"In your article of January 26, 1941, you quoted a delightful blue paper on table manners written by the Dean of a Midwestern College. This so much impressed us that we are trying to meet the good-manners problem here by the preparation of our own 'Blue Paper.' We hoped to make this virile enough for engineers ... humorous enough to interest college youth . . . and adjustable to the problems of their economic situation as commuting students in an urban environment.

Be Tactful

"Discussions with personnel officers of industry reveal that applicants more often fail to obtain jobs or, having obtained, to keep them because of tactlessness or bad manners, than because of deficiencies in skill or intelligence."

This letter ends by asking me to name the essential subjects of courteous behavior with the elimination of non-essential trimmings.

Before attempting to answer this letter I talked with two experts: one a professor of aeronautical engineering; the other, an executive of a leading chemical concern. The latter made the etiquette requirements even more fundamental than did the faculty member. He said:

"Ordinarily it is taken for granted that the highest scholarship automatically wins the top job, but this is not quite true. Highest scholarship wins a job, of course, and a good one; but the job that holds out the best promise of opportunity is given to the man whose engaging personality and accomplished manners in-

I asked him whether he could tell me the definite qualifications that he considers essential to an "engaging personality."

The Simple Approach

HE ANSWERED promptly: "Simplicity of approach, that shows the candidate's freedom from fear about the impression he is making... He neither tugs at his tie nor smooths his hair nor twists anything in his fingers . . . nor does he try to sell himself in the manner of one exhibiting his self-confidence... No - you feel his thoughts are not on himself but on you, and upon giving the clearest and briefest answers to your questions." He paused and then added: "I've interviewed many men whosetechnical proficiency is high. All too many of them recite a list of the courses they have taken, with their rating . . . facts of no real interest to an examiner. I am interested in his recital - not for the information it contains, but for the manner in which it is presented. The men I look for are the hardest to find... In addition to specialized skill, they show qualities of leadership. The point that you can help solve is how to give to students lacking in early advantages sufficient training in the amenities."

This young man makes a good impression because he's poised

So now, in reply to these men, I can't help expressing my pleasure at being told that etiquette is as important to men who are to work in a laboratory, or at a drafting table in a factory, as it is for executives who come in contact with many employees as well as with the public.

But surely - the intellect, which can master higher mathematics and advanced chemistry and memorize chemical formulas, can hardly have difficulty in mastering the essential rules of good manners. The reason the students described fail to meet the social requirements may be the American tendency to overlook the fact that lack of cultivated speech and of social polish is actually a lack of an elementary branch of education. We all look down upon a man who has to make an "X" mark in place of signing his name. But sometimes people entirely discount the fact that offenses against good taste are also a mark of ignorance.

A Vital Asset

It is not in order to shine in society that grace of manner is an asset... Comparatively few people in a community care a rap about "Society" anyway!

But a fundamental knowledge of etiquette is an asset in any contact with people, whether in business or public life or in "Society."

Yet how to impress this fact upon boys still young enough to learn good speech and behavior easily, is no small problem. For instance, kindness of impulse is always essential to good manners. But it is not always enough. For example, take the fable of the bear who, trying to kill an insect on his sleeping master's head, dropped a heavy rock and crushed his skull. A good intention gone amuck!

Similarly, sensitiveness to what may be perfectly apparent in the manner of another is not present in those whose social perceptions have never developed, as they would have done had they been given the opportunity.

Returning to the Blue Paper written by the Dean - I can't think of better advice to those who are interested in training young men in good manners, than to follow this humorous, but practical blue-paper method of interesting students in whatever branches of etiquette they may have personal need. It may be in greeting people. It may be in overcoming crude speech. It may be in correcting behavior. I cannot outline specific subjects. That would need a book. Better to pick the subjects out to suit the particular locality and students and adapt the materials to what you have observed to be their special courtesy failures.

But there is one main point that must be scored and underscored. The young men must not be groomed merely to be interviewed by some personnel director, nor to meet any other single and particular occasion. Good manners are the same always, every day, to everyone - even for yourself alone. You cannot put manners on, as you put on a hat and coat. They must become an instinctive daily habit, everywhere and to everyone.

In fact, the unself-consciousness of easy, courteous behavior marks out real manners from those which, assumed upon occasion, are virtually always misfit.

RESINOLINIMENT

Britain's Prettiest General

She's 33-year-old Jean Knox, boss of 100,000 trained and uniformed women who do everything from driving trucks to aiming antiaircraft guns

by C. Patrick Thompson

THE alarm had sounded, and the girls in steel helmets with gas masks were grouped round the huge, complex instruments in the pit, peering through lenses and adjusting dials. The men gunners at the heavy antiaircraft guns waited for the staccato orders that would indicate the girls had found the sky target and ranged it. Number One girl at the big predictor began to talk, passing back data to the gun officer, and the long gun barrels swung round and upand breeches thudded behind shell

The gun officer glanced at his watch. "Good work, girls. I can report you're the fastest fire-control crew we've had on this post. That ought to please your general."

Escorted by brass-hatted elders of the artillery staff, the general was coming at a swinging stride across the field - 124 pounds and five feet, four inches of slim young woman, as neatly assembled as an airplane engine, with dark-blue eyes wide-set in a tanned aquiline face, a red-banded peaked cap crammed on her dark hair.

Jean Knox was out inspecting one of the new mixed heavy antiaircraft batteries - men handling the guns, and girls the fire-control instruments. Officially she is Chief Controller of the Auxiliary Territorial Service. But the army calls her General Knox. (Her subordinates call her Jean.) The A.T.S. helps the regular military forces in every conceivable department of warfare - as lorry drivers, mechanics, teleprint operators, cooks, map read-

Forgetting Boadicea, Mrs. Knox is the first woman general in British history. She is also, at 33, Britain's youngest general. In even more striking ways she epitomizes total war as it has hit conservative Britain, smashing a crust of old ideas and ways and prejudices, bringing the women into action alongside the men. Three years ago Jean Knox was just a civilian wife and mother, living in a Hertfordshire village, and with no idea in the world of becoming a major general commanding 100,000 uniformed women. (Next June it will be 200,000.)

War Ahead

HER story properly begins one day in the late summer of 1938, when her husband, George Knox, architect and flier in the Auxiliary Air Service, sat with her on the sun terrace of their hillside home. Normally they would have been talking and laughing, but they were a bit thoughtful that evening, watching the rooks homing to the tall elms.

Chamberlain was somewhere up in that sky, flying for the first time in his life to play diplomatic poker with Hitler in the latter's swastika-plastered stronghold in Bavaria. It was Munich-time, and George and Jean, who knew army and air-force folk, knew as well as anyone how weak Chamberlain's hand must be in any showdown play. The navy, as usual, was all right. But the army and the air fleet?

Jean said: "I feel I ought to do something. But what?"

"There's this Auxiliary Territorial Service," suggested her husband. "It seems tailored for you."

Jean's immediate reaction was: "Me? I'd be no good. Of course I can cook, drive a car, ride a horse, but there must be stacks of women who can do that, and who'd be glad to."

Jean was 30, had an 11-year-old daughter to look after, her husband to tend, and around her was her smooth life. It seemed astounding and incredible that a savage horde led by an Austrian paper hanger could disturb, much less destroy, the Knoxes' chosen and comfortable nest in this peaceful seagirt land. Anyway, what was the hurry? Wouldn't it be best to wait for something really to hap-

Suddenly Jean realized she was arguing the way Hitler must hope all England would go on arguing. He'd got the Rhineland again, then Austria, now the Czech Sudeten defense belt. One of these days he'd pluck England itself like a ripe plum. Why not, if they all just sat around, sipping a drink after a pleasant day, and murmuring: "War? Oh, there may be some trouble and readjustment in Europe; but we're all right!"

Three years ago being a wife and mother was her only job

That revealing flash changed Jean Knox's life. Straightway she drove off to Watford, the county town, and went into the Territorial Army headquarters to enroll in the women's auxiliary branch.

The county T.A. officer, a colonel who was an acquaintance, gave her a first shock by resisting her offer to chauffeur an army car, drive an ambulance or handle horses - jobs she thought she could do. He told her that what they needed really badly were a few good "regimental officers," women who'd work hard and who had the ability to handle other women. Jean Knox looked like good officer material to him. She balked. But he talked her

Inside a month she had run through the local T.A. course for potential officers, gone through the Londonheadquarters course of lectures and barrack-square drill, been examined, inspected, approved and appointed an officer of the A.T.S. They gave her the three pips of junior commander (captain) right away. It was October,

She still had to qualify in action, and the colonel back at country headquarters told her her troubles now began. She was a company commander with no company. Her job was to raise and train an A.T.S. company.

Jean put in some fast work, drumming up recruits, interviewing applicants, learning to judge character at a glance, finding out that paper data about an individual means little, discovering how and why young women work or shirk, give zestfully or sulk.

By the spring of 1939 she had her company recruited, trained, disciplined and lively. It was reckoned the smartest company in the new corps at the 1939 summer under-canvas camp. That was the first service-conditions-get-together. It was also the last. A few weeks later Hitler slipped the leash off his new war machine, and as Armageddon Number Two exploded, Jean Knox got her mobilization notice and took her company to its war station. The A.T.S. was less than 18,000 strong when it mobilized. The army wanted more women auxiliaries quickly. Jean Knox, summoned to London headquarters to help get them, closed her home, packed Julie off to school and settled down to a new job - which turned out to be tough. She was used to open-air life. Now she worked 12 and 14 hours a day in a Whitehall office. Later she crawled back through the nightly blitzes to a little house she'd taken on the rim of town. Sundays she recuperated by working in the garden.

She was having a rough passage because the A.T.S. was still bumping heavily over the cogs. Planned in haste, on militia lines, the corps suffered from an overweight of titled inefficients. The senior officers' list was long on distinction and short on dynamism. Then a parliamentary committee broke up the log jam charging bad feeding, insufficient medical care, waste of ability, wrong system of promotion.

A Tough Assignment

THE War Office chiefs went into a huddle. They sent for Senior Commander (Major) Jean Knox, and handed her her toughest assignment so far. She had to tell the army's political and military chiefs to change the A.T.S. into a model corps.

She visited every camp and station, contacting the girls, probing conditions. She returned with a blueprint for making over the service. It was adopted. The service improved. Resignations thinned the rows of titles in the senior officers' list. The recruiting curve turned up. Under a new age scale the 63-year-old Chief Controller, Dame Helen Gwynne-Vaughan, relinquished her command.

Who could succeed "The Dame"? They gave Jean Knox the A.T.S. command.

She put on the rank marks of a major general, because meantime the A.T.S. had been granted military status, an honor - and obligation formerly denied. All the other A.T.S. officers got full regular army markings. This, incidentally, caused some brief confusion. The army officer commanding in one corps area ordered salutes

'em somehow. We'll tear 'em to pieces. Won't we, honey?" he says to the little mouse.

"We'll lick 'em, Tom," she pipes up in a thin little voice.

The kid shouts and shakes his fist at Dan like he is fighting mad. "I've got twenty-eight cents left and no job and no friends! So what? Mr. Courtland can keep his grand. Copper, no one can stop me now! I'll make 'em give me a job. I'll take care of this little guy, all right. I don't know how, but you'll see. He's a swell little guy! He's going to be proud of his old

A young doc all dressed up in white comes busting in at this point, rubbing his hands and chuckling. "Big news!" he shouts out. "We won, by

"Who's we?" says Dan, a little sore at the way the doc busts in.

"Why, the hospital, of course," says the doc. "I called up every other maternity ward in town and we won by three minutes!"

"Won what?" says the kid Downes, to the doc.

"We had the first Christmas baby," says the doc. He points to the little bundle on the bed. "That little mug," he says. "He was born at two minutes after midnight, and the next best was colored twins at St. Luke's at five after."

He goes over to the kid Downes and slaps him on the back. "Lucky boy!" he says. "It's a thousand dollars in the bank for you!"

"For me?" says the kid. "What

"DIDN'T you know?" says the young doc. "It's been advertised enough. There's a Santa Claus sleigh been driving all over town with a sign on it. Dirk Brothers Department Store is presenting a thousand dollars to the very first baby born on Christmas day!"

The kid looks at the little mouse in the bed and she looks at him, but how they can see each other you would never know because their eyes are filled up with tears. "You hear, darling?" says the kid in a shaky voice. "You hear?"

"Tom!" says the mouse. "Oh, Tommy dear!"

"But I wouldn't have been scared anyway!" says the kid. "I wouldn't, I wouldn't!"

He falls down on his knees and grabs hold of his mouse's hand and puts his head on the pillow next to hers, so that their foreheads touch. Then, from in between them, comes the tiniest squeak Dan ever hears and that makes three of them crying. This is much too much for Dan; he fumbles for a handkerchief and the count is four. Then the young doc, hard-boiled as he is, starts coughing and blowing his nose, and that makes it unanimous.

It is four in the morning before Dan and Kitty finish trimming the tree. The reason it is so late is because it takes Dan some little time to get Mr. Courtland, the real hit-and-runner, downtown and behind bars. The two of them are sort of subdued while they

Then, when the room is dark except for the Christmas tree lights, they walk together to the window and stand looking out.

It looks like just another crisp, starlit winter night outside, but of course it ain't. You can practically smell Christmas in the air. They are silent, holding hands for a long time. Then Dan sighs. "It's funny," he says. "A guy selling himself down the river so his mouse can eat! Who would believe it?"

"I wouldn't," Kitty says softly. "And I was terribly wrong. Terribly wrong!"

"And then a baby gets born over a garage because the other place is full up, and that changes everything. A scared beaten little guy gets strong and brave and full of hopes all of a sudden. You wouldn't think it could happen!"

"It couldn't, except at Christmas," says Kitty. "It's a Christmas story." She stands next to him, looking out at the night. And then she says, 'Oh, Dan! It's so wonderful!"

"What is?" says Dan. "Everything!" she says. "You. The world."

He gives a kind of embarrassed laugh. "You got the old Christmas spirit," he says.

"I caught it from you, you big oaf!" she says. Then all of a sudden she throws her arms around him. She is such a tiny little mouse the best she can do is circle his big barrel chest. "Hold me tight, Inspector!" she whispers. "Hold me tight!"

He holds her tight. He's seen his Kitty serious before, but never like Never so serious and so sort of reverent at the same time. The funny part is, he feels the same way. And he doesn't know what to do about it. He can't think of a thing to say. Then he solves everything. "Jingle bells, jingle bells!" he sings out.

Mr. Bascom! They're the smartest dogs in Ontario! Don't you worry!" There she was, busily harnessing the dogs while Bascom packed the sled! self.

The dogs sensed her every wish before she voiced it. Jim's eyes bulged at the eagerness with which they sought to please her.

He drew back quickly, his heart sledging. "Seven wolves I got," Maureen said to Bascom. "And with the bounty twenty-five dollars a head, that's a hundred and seventy-five dollars. Pretty good for a beginner, don't you think?"

"Never in my life heard of so many wolves around Nanuk Lake," said

"Well, they were there. I mean they were back in the bush. I brought them out of hiding by hanging rabbits out for bait, and shot them from the cabin."

"You're a brave woman."

"A needy one." She smiled. "All set, are we? Goodby, Mr. Bascom! I'll be home before Jim, after all, thanks to the storm!"

JIM TRAVERS stepped from the shelter of the building, his arms out, his mouth shaping her name, and the eyes of him big with wonder. "Maureen," he whispered. "Maureen!"

When she got over being amazed, she then ran swiftly past the two yelping dogs into his strong embrace.

He held her fiercely. Wide-legged, he held and looked at her, marveling. "I thought you'd been scared out!"

"I came," she gasped, "to get money from the meant to be back on time, Jim, to surprise you. One hundred seventy-five dollars - and some extra for the pelts, though I skinned them badly!"

His eyes clouded. He was aware now of Bascom's presence, and resented it. "I can earn the money we need," he muttered.

"Yes, Jim. Oh, yes! But this is extra. For me - ' Blinder still, he looked away and answered under his breath: "I know. The pretty things you want. I could have bought those, too, the fine things you're used to. I promised them and I keep my promises.'

The dogs bellied forward to look up at them, and Bascom was frankly waiting on every word. Now the girl gripped Jim Travers's arms and smiled at him, standing taller and straighter than he had known her.

"You don't understand, Jim. I was lonely enough to go mad in that cabin. I'll not spend another winter there alone - not for all the fine things you could buy me."

She paused to get her breath.

"There'll be a son or a daughter of ours to keep me company next winter, Jim Travers. And here's the money to pay for it!"

rasping voice. "This place is rented in Flora's name. I'm her next of kin, and —"

"You've gone into all that!" rapped Niels. "Why were you here?"

"That's my business."

"And that business was to find and destroy a number of letters which you had written Miss Young; begging letters, which used some pretty strong language. Right?"

"So you've already found them and read them! I was hoping I might get them first. With Flora dead, murdered, those letters might suggest a motive — which, as it happens, would have been utterly misleading."

The man looked like a bum, and talked like a gentleman, and some-how I was inclined to believe him. Apparently Niels did, too.

"True," he said. "A man should be very, very careful about what he puts down in black and white. But you need not have worried, Mr. Young. You see, I —"

The doorbell rang just then, and Niels hurried to answer it.

The newcomer was Dr. Exter. "Good evening," he said. "I came as quickly as I could. You wished me to identify someone, I believe?"

Niels closed the door carefully.

"I think I did say something of the sort," affirmed Niels. "This gentleman here — do you know him?"

"Certainly. He's Edwin Young,

Flora's uncle. Is he the man who — murdered her?"

"No; he was just a missing person, and I don't like to have missing persons in a case. Sit down, please, Dr. Exter."

The doctor sat down. Earlier in the day, when I had first met him, with his wife, he had seemed affable, perfectly poised. Now his eyes were cold and hard, and his face was the wooden mask of a gambler. "Thank you," he said. "Anything else I can do?"

"Why, yes," Niels said. "You can sit there and listen. Later, if you wish,

you may talk!"

Dr. Exter's poker face hardened, and paled perceptibly under the deep tan, but he said nothing.

"Flora Young," continued Niels, "was an Oriental, despite the fact that three-fourths of her blood was Occidental. She had fallen in love with a man; not wisely, I think, but — too well. He went away. He came back to his own country, and married a wealthy woman — no more wealthy than Flora, but a woman of his own race. After a time, when he would not answer her letters, Flora followed him. She met him, tried to talk to him alone, but he wouldn't listen.

"So, in desperation, Flora sent him something she knew he would understand, something she thought would touch him. But it didn't work out as she had planned.

"The man was enraged. He phoned her; told her he must see her, alone. He brought back the token she had sent him, and dashed it to pieces before her eyes.

"It was too much. She threatened him; threatened to tell his wife, to break up his home. The man tried to quiet her, but she wouldn't be quieted. Not easily. Perhaps he didn't intend to kill her; just quiet her — is that correct, Dr. Exter?"

Dr. Exter just stared, and shook his head.

"It isn't necessary to talk, Dr. Exter," Niels said quietly. "The facts speak for themselves. The message was for a doctor, and a doctor only. A doctor who knew the Orient, and old ivory. Can you think of anyone else who meets those requirements, Dr. Exter?"

It's a queer thing about the hard, poker-faced people; Niels has often commented on it. They don't soften up. They crack up suddenly, like — like a bit of old ivory.

That's the way it was with Dr.

Exter. They questioned him at headquarters for nine solid hours. Ten seconds before he broke, he was as flinty, as poker-faced as he had ever been. And then, Niels told me, he was just like a shattered blob of jelly, Pitiful . . . disgusting . . .

"So you're a hero again," I said, as soon as I could corner him. "I still don't see how, or why."

"Well," said Niels, grinning, "it seems that the ancient Chinese ladies were much more modest than young women of your day and age and country. Women of good families couldn't even reveal their persons to a doctor. So, according to my good friend Lee Sing, these honorable ladies were provided with a figurine of carved ivory which, incidentally, was handed down from mother to daughter, generation after generation. Medicine dolls, or doctor dolls, they are called.

"The lady, when ill, told her father, husband, or brother, about her trouble. The man of the house went to the doctor with the figurine, and pointed out on it the seat of the lady's trouble. Very delicate, eh?"

"Well, I'll be — jiggered," I said.
"Of course," Niels went on, "I've put the cart before the horse. I was sure the figurine had something to do with the murder. You'll remember that there was a mark — a fresh mark, in pencil — over the heart of the ivory figure. I wondered about that.

"She and Dr. Exter had been together for years in China. Flora was beautiful. The doctor looked to me like a man who would hardly overlook a pretty face. And the doctor collected ivory, and had lived in China long enough to be familiar with its customs, ancient and modern.

"When Lee Sing told me what the figurine was, the picture was pretty clear. She had marked the piece of ivory, which represented herself, and sent it to him. It said, to anyone who understood, 'Doctor, this is where I am ill' . . . and the mark was over her

"He understood, all too well, and he was afraid. What if the thing should have fallen into his wife's hands? She was jealous, with good reason. So he decided to have it out with Flora, once and for all. And he did just that!" Niels added grimly.

"Poor Flora," I said. "Sometimes I wonder about love, Niels; it's at the bottom of some of the ugliest, wickedest —"

He interrupted me quickly, with a tender, bearlike shake of his big blond head. "That's only when you mix the wrong things with it," he said gently. "Don't you know that, honey?"

I hooked my arm through his, and gave it a little squeeze.

"Sure," I said. "You sold me that bill of goods long ago!"

GOOD SPORT - AND GOOD COOK . . . by Grace Turner

HE best place to spend Christmas is up at Lake Placid in New York's Adirondacks," says New Yorker Ted Collins, nationally known sportsman and famous partner-manager of Kate Smith. Though his own camp up there is not accessible in the winter, he is counting the days now until Christmas eve when he will pack up his wife, himself, twenty-year-old daughter Adelaide, the family Christmas presents, and get off to the Lake Placid Club, center for winter-sports lovers of the East.

Ted Collins likes sports of every kind. Fishing is his big hobby. He has fished for as many as seventy-eight consecutive days. . . But also, he is always buying professional teams of this and that. Last year it was a basketball team. This year it's a Long Island football team. His aim: to build up a terrific community spirit for the home team. And then to go on and build other teams and other community spirit - all over the United States, if possible. . . Is it possible? "Of course," Ted says. . . "It has been done... Look at Green Bay, Wisconsin, with its 28,000 inhabitants. They built a stadium seating 40,000 out there... Successful? A sell-out every season; people come from everywhere around."... But does Ted make money or lose it? Don't ask embarrassing questions. He loves it, anyhow.

Some other things he loves are cooking, his camp, and Christmas at Lake Placid. "Let's take them one at a time," he says. "I got into the cooking business, when I began going off by myself to fish many miles from civilization. I've fished every lake and stream and brook in New York State, part of Canada, and Florida. . .

Ted Collins caught doing his stuff last summer at his own camp

Why do I like it? I'm crazy about wild country for one thing. . . For another, the unexpected always happens... For instance, I hooked a fish one day - had him for twenty minutes - the leader broke - I lost him. Next day I was back in the same spot and landed a fish - he had my yesterday's fly in his mouth."

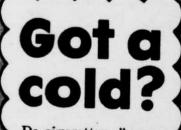

"Stay in outdoor or camp cooking and I'll do anything you want. Fact is, camp food is the best wherever you are. . . Want a good breakfast or late supper dish? Here's one of my camp specialties, guaranteed good anywhere, any time." (See English Sunday Breakfast in THIS WEEK'S recipes.)

Ted says further: "For chickens, fish, any kind of broiled stuff, I have a revolving spit that I put in front of the fire. . . You can use that indoors as well as out. . . But wait, let me give you my recipe for a full-meal sandwich - that ought to come in handy for readers... They'll like the shrimp Creole recipe, too, I don't care who they are." (Again see THIS' WEEK's recipes) ... "And I'll tell you how to cook coffee in an open receptacle so that it will never boil over... Take two live twigs and lay them crosswise over the top of the kettle, and the coffee will bubble to within one-half inch of the top and never go higher... Scientists and suchlike wise people may tell you that's nonsense, but I know from experience it's true."

Of all places he's been Ted loves the Lake Placid region best. "When there's snow, you haven't lived until you've spent a few days there," he says. "You walk fast, you laugh, you love the snow. Clean, clean snow. ... Nothing ever happens to spoil it... Christmas Day we get up early there's a ceremony up there. They still believe in the Yule log; so a lot of sophisticated people go out with a lot of unsophisticated people and find the Yule log, and drag it back, and dry it out, and put it in the fireplace. . . And there's a Christmas tree in the big hall . . . and a punch bowl that tastes wonderful and hasn't a drop of liquor in it; they don't allow even beer up there... And Santa Claus gives out your presents and the presents for your family. ... and you go out on skis or with dog teams or sleighs . . . you sit down to an old-fashioned Christmas dinner, with fat, corn-fed turkey, and sweet potatoes and white potatoes and onions and cranberries and mince pie and plum pudding ... and after awhile you go out in the snow again."

SWITCH TO KOOLS

Three of these recipes are straight Ted Collins specials... The other two came to us from the cranberry canners of Cape Cod . . . interesting, because they indicate other ways to use that warm red fruit of winter days. And there needn't be a separate operation with the fruit . . . just take a short cut and get a few cans of the canned sauce to use as suggested in our recipes

Shrimp Creole

- 2 medium-sized onions, sliced 1 medium-sized green pepper,
- chopped 2 tablespoons fat or salad oil
- 1/2 clove garlic, minced
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 1 No. 2 can (21/2 cups) tomatoes 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Dash of pepper 2 bay leaves
- 1/4 teaspoon celery seed
- 2 teaspoons minced parsley 1 No. 2 can (21/2 cups) okra,
- drained 2 cups cleaned cooked or canned
- shrimp

2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce Sauté onion, pepper and garlic in fat or salad oil until soft but not brown. Add flour and blend; add tomatoes, and seasonings and simmer 1/2 hour. Add water if necessary. Add okra, shrimp and Worcestershire sauce; cook 15 minutes. Serve on fluffy cooked rice. Yield: 6 portions.

Ted Collins Favorite Sandwich

- 2 cups chopped cooked or canned chicken
- 2 stalks celery, chopped
- 1 carrot, diced
- 3 stuffed olives, chopped
- 2 tablespoons mayonnaise
- Gherkins
- Parker House rolls

Mix chicken, celery, carrot and olives and mix with mayonnaise. Serve either as an open sandwich on rye or white bread or as sandwich on Parker House rolls. Garnish with gherkins. Approximate yield: 8 sand-

English Sunday Breakfast

- 1 3-oz. package cream cheese
- 1 tablespoon butter
- 34 cup top milk, scalded 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/8 teaspoon pepper
- 1/4 teaspoon paprika
- 6 eggs

BRITAIN'S PRETTIEST

- 1 tablespoon dry sherry (optional)
- 12 cocktail sausages, sautéed

Melba toast Melt cheese and butter slowly; stir in milk. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. When hot, break eggs into sauce and when whites are slightly set, stir with fork over low heat until thickened. Just before serving add sherry. Place in serving dish and garnish with sausages. Serve on toast, muffins or biscuits. Yield: 5 portions.

Cranberry-Orange Salad

Cut canned cranberry sauce in 1/2inch slices. Place each slice on heart leaves of lettuce, allowing one slice for each serving. Arrange orange sections on the slice of cranberry sauce in petal fashion. Place spoonful of cream mayonnaise in the center of each. Sprinkle mayonnaise with grated orange rind and then pour a spoonful of orange juice over each salad. Chill. Serve with either roast pork or

Cranberry Coffee Ring

- 2 cups prepared biscuit mix 34 cup milk
- 2 tablespoons melted butter
- 1 17-ounce can cranberry sauce 1 cup confectioner's sugar
- 1 teaspoon grated orange rind 1/3 cup finely chopped walnuts

Combine biscuit mix and milk. Roll out 1/4 inch thick on lightly floured board, in an oblong shape. Spread with melted butter. Crush cranberry sauce and spread over dough. Roll up like jelly roll and cut in 1-inch slices. Place slices cut side up in greased ring mold and bake in a hot oven (450° F.) 12-15 minutes.

Mix the confectioner's sugar and orange rind; add enough water to make soft icing; spread on ring. Sprinkle with chopped walnuts. Yield: 1 coffee ring.

Fighting a Monster With Rod and Reel

OUT of the darkness of Pacific waters has come a monster to add a new zest to big-game fishing.

Michael Lerner, noted deep-sea fisherman, led two expeditions from the American Museum of Natural History to fish along the coast of Peru. Primarily they were out to extend studies of broadbill swordfish and marlin. One night the anglers' lines were hit with strikes they had not hitherto experienced. Reels whined as the lines streaked in all directions then went limp. Steel leaders and swordfish hooks had been cleanly severed.

Once the quarry was surfaced—a fighting mass of tentacles lashing at the line. As the boat captain lunged with a gaff the expedition members were deluged with ink and water, and a giant squid shot back into the depths.

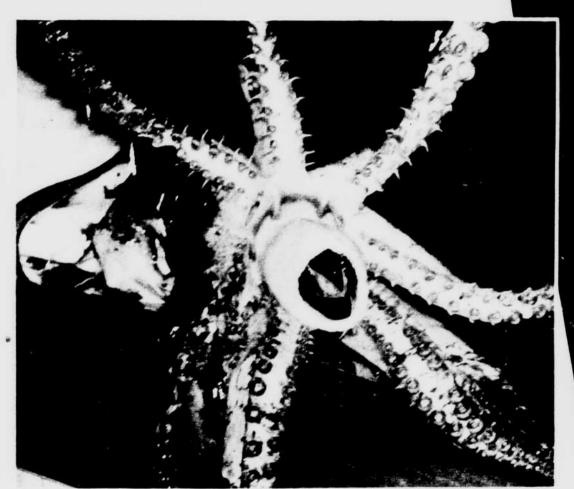

At their base the party devised special rigs of multiple hooks arranged in clusters along a double steel leader to snare the tentacles of the squid as he took the bait. Protection from the deadly accurate spray of ink was improvised from pillowcases worn as hoods. That night the expedition set out to hunt down one of the ocean's most grotesque creatures.

Squid are extremely cannibalistic and more than one victim of the hook was lost to another's tentacles and sharp beak as it fought to escape. They swim at a speed estimated to be 35 miles an hour, propelled tail first by means of water taken into the mantle (body) and ejected through a vent near the head.

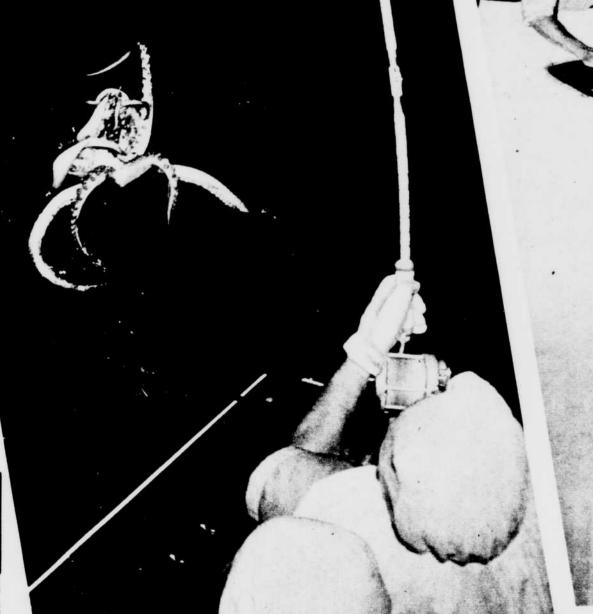

Mr. Lerner, wearing a hood as protection from squirted ink, fights a giant squid on rod and reel. The squid has just broken the surface and is slashing at the line with its tentacles.

Mr. Lerner examines a night's catch on the wharf at Cabo Blanco, Peru. The largest weighed 137 pounds and measured 9½ feet from tail to tip of tentacle.

After being boated the squid's tentacles are held apart, exposing the huge beak capable of cutting steel leaders. The cups of the tentacles are edged with sharp teeth. Normally used to hold prey for the beak to kill, the tentacles are themselves dangerous weapons.

Two expedition members coat a captive with olive oil, preparatory to making a plaster cast. Later the squid was placed in a preservative and shipped to the American Museum of Natural History for study.

Mr. Lerner and assistants bait a multiple hook. All squid fishing is done at night when the denizens of the deep come nearer the surface.

THE SMOKE of battle blackens I the headlines and "peace" may seem an unattainable ideal. But you will find a tranquillity at the Hotel Dennis to rest your soul and refresh your spirit, punctuated by the tambourine notes of children's laughter. So, pack up your worries in the old Gladstone bag and park them at the Dennis this Christmas! Renew your youth in the piney fragrance of evergreens, as the Yule-log glows and sputters on the open hearth. Regale the inner man with the fine food for which this hotel is nationally famous.

Planned entertainment every evening, December 24 through January 1. Carols by vested choir on Christmas Eve, followed by Santa and his pack; vocal and instrumental artists on other evenings, including a oneact opera; music, dancing, floor-show, and a midnight supper on New Year's Eve at a nominal charge.

Winter rates on both American and European plans are most attractive. Make your reservation early. And remember the saying of informed people everywhere: "We always stay at the Dennis."

49 YEARS AT 935 F STREET

OUT on the icy walls of Mount Rainier, in Washington State, picked American soldiers are learning the ways of the Alpine fighters of Europe. To be known as the 87th Mountain Infantry Regiment, the new outfit starts with a nucleus of about 500 men, recruited mostly from the ranks of the famous 155th ("Can Do") Infantry stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash. Expert skiers and mountaineers are training the men in climbing and making their way over difficult terrain of snow and ice. The regiment will be prepared for the same sort of fighting the Alpine soldiers of Europe specialize in.

Walter Prager, noted mountaineer and former ski instructor at Dartmouth College, is a corporal in the Mountain Regiment. He has plenty to teach the men and they have plenty to learn.

Don't look down, soldier! This kind of terrain is tough enough for a man to conquer without an enemy to figure on. But think what a drop he'll have on the theoretical enemy once he gets to the top of that cliff.

Wooden Ship Builders Swing Adz for Navy

Neat-looking ships are these two minesweepers nearing completion for the Navy. As seaworthy as they look and a credit to the wooden shipbuilding trade of the Maine coast that dates back to before the Revolution.

WARTIMES have launched a boom in the old wooden shipbuilding trade at Rockland, Me. Specialists in the wooden ship crafts, whose skills have been in less demand in this day of steel ships, now have all the work they can do. The ring of the time-honored adz on oak ribbing sings out again as it used to as the yards there add to the Navy's fleet of minesweepers. And they are tough ships they are turning out, built for any sea and hardship in their wartime function of keeping the American coast and shipping lanes

THE CONTACT MAN BETWEEN THE DOPE RING
STUFF IS A PATIENT
HE'D TELL HER
IT BY WRITING THE
INSIDE OF A CIGARETTE PACKAGE!!

MR. MYSTIC, AN AMERICAN INVESTED WITH AMAZING POWERS OF MAGIC, AND HIS HANDYMAN, CHOWDER-HEAD, GO BACK INTO TIME, TO ANCIENT EGYPT

NO!!

NO!!!

NO!!

YOU MARRY HIM, BUT BY GEORGE!!! I'LL SEE THAT YOU DON'T ...!! GOOD

LATER ... AT THE PHAROAH AKH EN-ATEN'S PALACE

BUT HE ISN'T THE FIRE-GOD!! IF YOU SLAY HIM, THE PEOPLE WILL HAIL YOU AS A GREAT MAN...THEN YOU CAN MAKE THE QUEEN YOURS!!!
