Greenslade Tells of Subs Preying on Shipping

Enemy submarines are prowling off the East and West Coasts of the United States, the Navy Department revealed yesterday, and hinted that some American shipping had been attacked.

This report, coupled with the news that an American submarine had sent a torpedo home in a Japanese transport in Pacific waters, indicated that both this country and her enemies had sent long-range undersea craft into action in attempts to tighten blockades.

No direct report came from the Navy Department on actions by or against the enemy submarines which lurked off the Atlantic or Pacific The revelations, in both cases, were made in the course of statements by Navy officials appealing for co-operation with the Rear Admiral John W Greenslade in a formal statement issued in San Francisco, told of the presence of enemy craft in the Pacific waters. Admiral Greenslade, commandant of the 12th Naval District, made the statement in connection with an appeal to West Coast welders to stay on the job in shipyards, instead of carrying out a threatened strike.

Subs Preying on Shipping.

He said the Navy had definitely confirmed reports that submarines -which observers presumed to be Japanese-were preying on shipping off the coast. He told the welders that shipping which was lost to enemy submarines had to be replaced

The fact that he said the submarines were "preying" on shipping contained the hint that some attacks had been successful.

The news that submarines were hunting shipping near the Atlantic Coast was also given out indirectly In a statement issued by the Navy Department here, radio stations were cautioned against weather forecast broadcasts, even when they involve only isolated areas far from

Canadian Chief Recalls Warning.

In Ottawa, Vice Admiral Percy Nelles, chief of the Canadian Naval Staff, commented on the United States announcement of undersea activity in the Atlantic by recalling his own warning on November 5 that German U-boats were operating off the coast of Newfoundland.

"I said at that time that Nazi submarines would be operating shortly

The American submarine's successful attack upon the Japanese transport was the second time last week that the Navy announced a sinking of a transport. In addition, it had been stated earlier in the week that one of our submersibles had "probably" sunk a destroyer.

Blockade Effort Began.

These submarine operations were widely taken as an indication that tries and of food to her over-

Bridges, Brooks and Taft Say Criticism Can Help in War

'Loyal Opposition'

By the Associated Press. Three Republican Senators, representing as many shades of the minority viewpoint, agreed yesterday that their party must maintain "constructive criticism" of the administration's policies in prosecution of the war.

They drew the line against any attempt to "run the war in Congress," but all three—Bridges of New Hampshire, Taft of Ohio and Brooks of Illinois-contended in separate interviews that a "loyal opposition" was wholesome and necessary.

Senator Bridges, who gave full support to the defense program long before Japan attacked the United States, took the view that the Republicans' informal platform should be upholding the minority's right to question inefficient methods of producing the materials and gathering the manpower needed to fight

Hopes to Avoid Mistakes. "That word 'efficient' is where we try is to have a vocal minority that is on the alert to keep us from making costly mistakes. "I don't think we can fight the war from Congress, but I do think that we can criticize national policies constructively." He predicted that Republicans, looking ahead to the 1942 congressional elections, would demand drastic reductions in non-defense expenditures as well as the elimina-

Chinese Forces Attack Rear of Nippon Army Besieging Hong Kong

By the Associated Press. CHUNG KING, Dec. 20 .- The International Air Force, composed exclusively of flyers who resigned from United States air forces to defend the Burma Road, had its first clash with Japanese warplanes today and shot down four of them, it was reported here tonight.

The American flyers were said encountered 10 Japanese planes detailed to raid Kunming, important terminal on the Burma Road, and shot four of them out of Yunnan Province skies without a loss to themselves.

At the same time Chinese army neadquarters announced its forces operating at the heels of the Japanese attacking Hong Kong had penetrated to Shumchun on the Canton-Kowloon railway right at the mainland frontier of Hong Kong

Apparently the thrust was only a raid, for the Chinese said heavy fighting subsequently developed about 10 miles northeast of Shumchun after the Shumchun railway station and Japanese defense works had been blown up and destroyed.

Japanese Forces Diverted. However, the attack had the result of forcing the Japanese to divert some of their forces from the atack on the hard-pressed defenders of Hong Kong to defend their rear, the Chinese said. Present area of the fighting, as described in Chinese dispatches, would be in the neighborhood of Pinghsan where the Chinese have been reported active previously. Details of the first action of the International Air Force were not Josephus Daniels of Raleigh, N. C., former Secretary of the Navy, told a small group permitted to attend the launching that the late Benjamin Ryan Tillman of South Carolina, after whom the destroyer was named, had carved a place for himself in the political history of the Nation. It was Senator Tillman, he said, "who piloted through the Senate the then biggest naval construction program in the history of the world." At that time Senator Tillman was chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. A few minutes later Mrs. Charles Sumner Moore of Atlantic City, N. J., daughter of the late Senator, christened the destroyer.

Rear Admiral William H. Allen, commandant of the 6th and 7th Naval District and of the Charleston Navy Yard, spoke briefly during the launching of the Beatty and was in charge of the general program.

The Beatty was christened by Mrs. Charles H. Drayton of Charleston, daughter of Rear Admiral Frank Edmund Beatty for whom the destrover was named. She chose as her matron of honor her sister-in-law. Mrs. Frank E. Beatty, Maid of honor to Mrs. Moore was her daughter. Miss Minnie Moore.

President to Light National Yule Tree Wednesday Evening

Ceremony to Be Held At White House for First Time

Washington's pre-holiday celebration will be climaxed on Christmas eve when President Roosevelt turns on the lights of the Nation's community tree and delivers his Christmas message to America by radio. At approximately 5:10 p.m. Wednesday the Chief Executive will pull the switch lighting the community tree. For the first time in this series of ceremonies, the celebration this year will be held in the White House grounds.

President Roosevelt will make his appearance on the south portico of the White House at 5 p.m., while a choral group, under the direction of Mrs. Eva Whitford Lovette, will be singing the carol "Joy to the World." The program will get under way at 4:30 p.m. with a concert by the United States Marine Band, directed by Capt. William F. Santelmann. Others in Party.

With the President will be Mrs. Roosevelt and other members of his family, and the Most Rev. Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of Catholic University; Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor of the Church of the Reformation and president of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Commissioner Guy Mason

The community tree will be decorated with patriotic red, white and blue colors. Special stands will be built for the invited guests and choral singers. An area between the south fence and the south drive in front of the south portico will be roped off for the public.

After the presidential party has taken its place, Msgr. Corrigna will deliver the invocation. This will be followed by introductory remarks by Commissioner Mason, who is chairman of the program. ## As Moscow Armies Hurl Back Nazis

Other Russian Gains From Finland to Sea Of Azov Reported

By the Associated Press. MOSCOW, Sunday, Dec. 21 .-Plunging forward with accelerated momentum, the Red Army's grand offensive has captured the key industrial and rail center of Volokolamsk, 65 miles northwest of Moscow, and registered other gains from Russians announced today.

The town of Voibokalo, south of Lake Ladoga on the northern front. and dozens more villages on the Moscow front have been re-occupied in flercely contested battles, the Soviet Information Bureau communique announced last midnight.

With Soviet forces counting vast new spoils and mounting numbers of German dead, pursuit of disordered Nazi divisions routed in the Kalinin sector, 90 miles northwest of Moscow, was declared gaining momentum. There the wreckage of German transports and war material littered the snows, the communique said.

Winter Excuse Mocked. Mockingly referring to German claims that the weather largely was responsible for their reverses, the official announcement said:

"The Germans still are complaining about the snow on the Russian front which, however, makes no difference to the Russians The Russians asserted the rout of the Nazis in the Kalinin sector was being matched by similar Red Army pursuits west of Moscow and on the southwestern front. Volokolamsk, a cotton textile manufacturing center, was occupied late in October by the Germans. It had changed hands numerous times in some of the bloodiest fighting of the Moscow front.

Six German planes were destroyed yesterday and Russian flyers reported destroying or damaging 4 German tanks, 170 trucks with troops and supplies, 7 field guns with crews, 2 anti-aircraft batteries, 100 ammunition cars, setting fire to five railroad trains and blowing up an ammunition dump.

Sevastopol Attack Repulsed. Russian reports said retreating Germans had lost more than 40,-000 men in two weeks, while the now bent back. Leningrad forces and a half deep and hampers the reported a successful three-day at- action of Soviet tanks. tack upon its one-time besiegers.

The Leningrad fighting netted s large quantity of provisions and war material, recaptured an unidentified Russian railway station and killed 2,000 Germans.

Southward along the vast field of battle, Russian newspaper dispatches said 1,600 Germans met death before advancing Russians, who took back 30 villages in the Donets Basin area. The Soviet garrison at the surrounded Crimean naval base of Sevastopol was reported to have flung back an attack by German motorized forces. Soviet artillery and planes assisting the defenders were said to have cost the Ger- normal Sunday morning at home or KUIBYSHEV, Dec. 20.-I took part in the battle for Moscow, which has shown that the German Army is extremely sensitive to flank maneuvers, to envelopment movements and to threats of encirclement. Before this battle, the German command was very proud of its system of wedges and pincers, but the Soviet flanking operation upset Finland to the Sea of Azov, the these wedges and pincers at Moscow.

The Germans not only have lost the battle for Moscow but they have suffered a severe and ever-growing defeat. What we are observing is not a series of isolated counterattacks but systematic, methodical general offensive by the Red Army attended by ever-increasing success.

The Germans approached closest to Moscow in the center front, in the direction of Volokolamsk and Mozhaisk, but it was not there that the fate of the German offensive was decided. It was decided on the flanks in the region of Klin and German Failures Cited.

If the Germans had succeeded in forcing the Moscow-Volga Canal, in pushing east of Dmitrov and enveloping Moscow from the North, if they had succeeded in seizing and holding Kashira Ryazan and then developing a thrust northeastward, the great city would have been menaced by encirclement.

Even this would not have decided the fate of Moscow as a city, because it would have defended itself to the last breath, but it would have made things extremely complicated for the Soviet command.

To smash the ends of the pincers closing around Moscow ment winning the battle as a whole. The Soviet offensive accordingly took the form chiefly of operations on the flanks. This is a new feature in operations on the eastern front.

Retreat "In Earnest" Claimed. What is the general position on the Russian western front today? The Red Army offensive is proceeding uninterruptedly. The Germans are retreating in earnest. Soviet reconnaissance planes report retreat westward not only of troop columns but also of troop trains. But the enemy continues to hit back fairly hard. The snow is of German arc against Moscow was to us. At some places it lies a foot

Capt. Elliott Roosevelt

Graduates as Navigator

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Dec. 20 .-Capt. Elliott Roosevelt, second son of the President, was en route tonight to join a unit of the air force combat command as a navigator. He was graduated today from Kelly Field's Air Corps Aerial Navigators' School and departed by air for duty with a long-range ocean-going patrol unit. Fourteen aviation cadets and one student officer, Capt. Roosevelt, heard Brig. Gen. H. R. Harmon, training center commander, assert: "As fighters of a people's war, your class shows democracy in action. Capt. Roosevelt came here expecting no special consideration. He got none. I single him out simply as a symbol of democracy versus dictatorship

"In the United States, the President's son is one of us.' Classmates of Capt. Roosevelt are expecting assignments to similar active units almost immediately.

Two Jap Cruisers Hit Off Sarawak, Dutch Airmen Report

Transport and Carrier Also Claimed by Pilots Of U. S.-Made Planes

By the Associated Press, BATAVIA, Netherlands Indies. Dec. 20.—Direct bomb hits on two Japanese cruisers, a transport, and another warship presumably used as an aircraft carrier were reported officially tonight by Dutch airmen operating big American bombers off Japanese-occupied Miri,

Other explosives rained alongside the Japanese ships as the Dutch pilots twice attacked the invaders. who are seeking to reinforce their toehold on the Sarawak coast, which is adjacent to British and Dutch Borneo, the agency Aneta said.

Another Japanese cruiser was reported hit last Wednesday, hence the Dutch asserted three enemy cruisers had been put out of action in less than a week by their flyers.

Russian Freighter Bombed. At the same time Aneta reported that 17 Japanese planes bombed and sank the 4,200-ton Russian freighter Perekop in Dutch waters, an attack which "may lead to serious consequences," since Russia thus far is a neutral in the Pacific war.

Eight Russian crew members were killed, while 32 others, including the captain and three women, were rescued from the ship, which was running between Vladivostok and Surabaya, Java, the agency said.

The Russian flag and registration mark were clearly visible from the

The Exchange Telegraph agency reported in London that one of the Japanese cruisers hit today subsequently sank, and Reuters announced from Batavia that a cruiser and transport were left ablaze by the Dutch airmen.) Seaplane Shot Down.

Japanese planes immediately took to the air at Miri in an attempt to ward off the Dutch flyers, but it was announced that one enemy seaplane was shot down and another was enveloped in flames when

Meanwhile the Dutch announced that the death toll in Terempa Anambas Islands, had risen to 65 as a result of two Japanese attacks Wednesday and Thursday, but said little damage resulted.

In Pontianak, Dutch West Borneo the civilian population was evacuating the city after a series of Japanese attacks which killed 20 persons and injured 150.

Base Not Direct Threat. Pontianak is a defenseless town. officials said, and Japanese planes apparently taking off from their newly established Sarawak base dropped 50 bombs on it.

One explosive wiped out a Dutch-Chinese school, another razed the Chinese market, it was said. The Japanese landing in Borneo was regarded here as "nuisance base," and not as a direct threat to the Netherlands Indies because of the difficult intervening terrain. Australian and Dutch forces are nunting down Japanese fishing boats and secret settlements in remote sections of the thousands of islands in the South Pacific, the B. B. C. said in a broadcast heard by C. B. S. The Australian Air Minister, A. F. Drakeford, was quoted as saying that many Japanese fishing boats had been rounded up in Australian waters since the

Text of Hitler's Admission That Nazis Face a Superior Foe on Russian Front

NEW YORK, Dec. 20 .- The following is the text of German

Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels' address today as recorded and translated by N. B. C .: Our soldiers are in Belgium, France, all over half of Europe, and Africa, and from Finland to Klin. All people can meet the Christmas holidays with gratitude for the accomplishments of our army. Qur soldiers in their tasks on all fronts went through with the problems which were given to them, and gave good account of munitions and other war supplies which were supplied to them by our hard-working factories and plants.

This Christmas we owe to our soldiers who could not come home for Christmas the same gratitude we have owed to them for the past two years. But we have to make them feel, every one of them on the front, that we owe an unlimited gratitude at this time when Christmas is approaching, to make them feel that they are not alone. Our soldiers still need a lot for this winter. Our wehrmacht today on the front totals so many millions that it is possible with great difficulty to send them from one single point all those things of which the single man is in

But for this very reason the homeland must not have one quiet hour as long as there is a single soldier left in the East, in the Southeast, in Norway or especially on the top of Finland. who is not as yet equipped to withstand the rigor of winter

All That Can Be Spared Already Has Gone.

I know that at the last collection the German people have given all they could spare in consideration of the tense situation regarding textile supplies. Nevertheless, there are still in the homeland countless objects of winter equipment of the civil population which the population admittedly cannot very well spare but which, however, the front needs at this time without a doubt to a greater degree than the Fatherland.

We certainly have to deprive ourselves at home to a large extent, but one would not do justice to the front if one would compare such small curtailments with the sacrifices made at the front during this winter cam-

At home everybody has a roof over his head and a bed to sleep in. The nutrition is admittedly limited, but compared with that of all other European nations, still sufficient. At home one is still in a position to get such relaxation as newspapers, theaters, concerts, visits to movies, radiothe relaxation which the population needs pressingly in consideration of the strain which it bears during its process of work. Almost all this does not hold ern front. That cannot be changed. But in one thing the Hinterland can help. It can give to its sons and fathers protection against the wrath of the wintry climate.

Civilians Cannot Replace, But Must Give Anyway.

As long as a single object of winter clothing remains still in the Fatherland, it must go to the front. I know that also in the Homeland the individual can spare such equipment only with great difficulty. He is not in a position to replace it. But a thousand times more urgently do our soldiers need such equipment, which they cannot replace either.

It would be an exaggeration if I talked of sacrifices at this time. What the Homeland has suffered in the war are only inconveniences, and little curtailments, compared to what our front bears daily and hourly, over two years. Thanks to the actions of our front, the Homeland still enjoys an internally safe life. The front, for its part, must stake health and life almost in all of In Europe does our front stand guard for all of Europe, and thereby above all, for

As our soldiers have suffered during the summer months continuously and without complainpours, subsequent dust or mud in their superhuman effort on the march to victory, so do German soldiers now stand in the wintry defense positions in snow, ice, rain, sleet, frost, and cold, as a safeguard of the homeland. The front could hardly protect itself against cold. Only the entire homeland can help our

Helmets to Overshoes. The front needs the following badly, and above all: Overshoes, if possible lined-ones, or furlined ones; warm woolen clothing, socks, stockings, heavy, underwear, vests, or pullovers, warm, especially woolen, underclothing; undershirts, chest and lung protectors, any kind of headgear protection, earmuffs, wristlets, woolen helmets, furs in all senses of the word, fur jackets and fur waistcoats, fur boots of every kind and every size, blankets, especially fur covers, thick, warm gloves, again especially furlined leather ones, or knitted gloves. and wool mittens, altogether everything of wool is needed urgently on the front and will be doubly welcome.

Desired are further quilted or lined undervests, woolen shawls, neckerchiefs and scarfs, altogether everything which serves to keep up the battle against the winter cold, which has arrived so early this year.

The party with all its auxiliary and allied organizations has been instructed to be at the disposal for collections of these items needed so badly right now at the front.

The collection starts on December 27 and ends on the eve of January 4, 1942. members will make the collection from house to house or from apartment to apartment. Dear volksgenossen (peoples. rades), make it easier for those collectors while they are at their work.

Germany Has Seen Little of War Herself.

The collectors will immediately bring the given objects to central points and the army has provided facilities which will bring them in the shortest possible time to the most distant point in the front. They must be put to use by our soldiers as soon as possible and with the utmost speed. Germany has only seen little of the war in spite of air raid attacks. Nevertheless, this is a war which will decide the existence, or non-existence, of the German nation. Our soldiers in the front have taken from us for the most part the burdens of this war by their actions.

I believe that now, during the third wartime Christmas, the homeland will have the urgent wish to show to the front its gratitude in a more visible form than in mere words. This festival, which is known in the entire world as the most German one, is now approaching. For the first time in this war our soldiers are deprived of a return to the homeland, deprived even of extended furloughs. Now it is time that the homeland proves its closeness to the front in true National-Socialist peoples' unity. We must now thank our soldiers. I would therefore like to call this collection the Christmas present from the German nation to the

If the German people should all desire to give their soldiers a Christmas present, then they should do without all articles of warm clothing which they can spare during the war, and which can at any time be replaced again in peace.

For whatever the command of the German forces, and of their various branches have placed in readiness, every soldier would deserve even more. The other German people at home can help. The soldiers on the eastern front, will therefore realize that the national community for which they are fighting is no empty phase in National Socialist Germans.

Many May Not Go. The calls yesterday, it was reported, seemed to be equally divided among persons wanting to stay in Washington, those who wanted to transfer out and others who simply wanted information.

Just how many workers would to stay, was a question that some agencies said could only be established by a personal survey. When the H. O. L. C. shift was directed, only about 400 employes out of 800 went to New York.

Murray W. Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board. whose 1,600 employes are scheduled to go to Chicago, said yesterday that when he was at the House Decentralization Subcommittee hearing Thursday, he expressed the conviction that not more than 50 per cent of the board employes would make a move if one were ordered. In addition to the pension work, the board also administers an unemployment compensation fund for rail workers. Besides the headquarters office, the board has 10 regional offices and 25 district offices in various parts of the country, and also maintains intermittent service in other sections where it is not necessary to keep a permanent staff at

Plans Complete For $1,600,000 Home for Aged

D. C. Soon to Submit Project to Budget Bureau, Congress

Plans for construction on Districtowned land at Glenn Dale, Md., of a $1,600,000 new home for the aged and infirm, which would include a 150-bed hospital, will be placed before the Budget Bureau and Congress in the near future, the District Commissioners announced ves

After months of study, the city heads finally have agreed upon abandonment of the old institution at Blue Plains, which has been found inadequate and outmoded by Mrs. Roosevelt, congressional officials and welfare officials, as well as the Commissioners.

Site Held Most Suitable. The site at Glenn Dale was selected as most available during studies of various possible Government-owned locations. The institution would be a group of cottagetype buildings, except for the hospital, and these would be built around a central plaza. The whole development of 14 structures would be at a considerable distance from the buildings of the District Tuberculosis Sanatoria, located on the same general tract. The city heads are concerned over the question of priority ratings for steel and other materials which would be needed for the new plant. While welfare officials recently reported they had advices priorities would not be granted, the Commissioners have said they believed they could be obtained in view of general agreement that the Blue

Plains plant is a disgrace. Congressional approval of funds is expected since the Commissioners say the addition of $1,600,000 to the District budget for next year still will leave District finances balanced without the elimination of any other essential projects.

Hospital Need Stressed. Need for a hospital for residents of the Home for the Aged was one of the fundamental findings during studies of the old Blue Plains plant. As planned for the Glenn Dale site this would cost about $445,000. A domestic service building has been planned at a cost of $50,000. There would also be a recreation building at $100.000, a heating plant at $60,-000 and roads, walks and grading costing $44,000. This would be in addition to the cost for four cottages of 50 bed capacity each and six other cottages of 25 bed capacity. This would total $1,411,900, to which would be added $210,000 for utilities, making the whole cost $1,- present plans calls for accommodations for 350 persons in the new plant, plus 150 in the hospital section, thus 500 in all, about 100 less than the number cared for at Blue Plains until recently. In the past few weeks some patients of the home have been transfered to hospitals and others have been placed on Government care in their

Final Action Delayed On Defense Housing Bill

House adjournment until Tuesday has delayed final legislative action on the Lanham bill authorizing an appropriation of $300,000,000 for continuation of the emergency housing program in defense areas. Unwilling to accept Senate changes in the measure, one of which would allow the Federal Works Agency to use some of the money to build homes in the District for civilian defense employes of the Federal Government, the House vesterday sent it to conference. The $300,000,000 already has been appropriated, but cannot be allocated until the bill authorizing the appropriation has been passed. Ordinarily legislation authorizing appropriations precedes the actual appropriation, but Congress, in a war tempo, reversed the procedure. An original appropriation of $300,-000,000 for defense housing already has been allocated.

The House named as its conferees three ranking members of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee headed by Chairman Lanham. The others are Representatives Bell, Democrat, of Missouri and Holmes. Republican, of Massachusetts. The Senate conferees probably will be appointed

Plans Legislation If Keech Fails to Define 'Domicile'

Either by legislation or regulations promulgated by the Commissioners, the District income tax law will be clarified as a result of the recent complex decision of the Supreme Court with respect to the definition of "domicile," it was announced yesterday by Representative Hunter, Democrat, of Ohio. As chairman of the Fiscal Affairs Subcommittee of the House District Committee, Mr. Hunter already has conferred with Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech as to the need of legislation to bring about the desired clarification.

Mr. Keech, he said, is now drawing up regulations which may that purpose without amending the law.

Representative Hunter plans to hold a conference early in January with representatives of the Attorney General's office to consider the proposed regulations and decide whether legislation is necessary to put them into effect. The indefinite principles set forth by the court for determining whether a person is domiciled in the District, it was said, form the basis for the need of specific rules. The court held that the question of domicile should be determined in general by actual habits, family ties, living conditions and employment of the taxpayer.

As a result of the ruling, Mr. Hunter said the regulations may subject a person whose income is derived in the District to payment of a tax on it if he maintains a permanent residence here, has per-manently located his family here and has no direct family ties elsewhere, has continuously lived here over a period of years and is permanently employed here and shown no expressed intent of returning to his home State.

County to Give Residents Sand To Fight Bombs

Suburban Officials Hope to Avoid Holiday Blackouts

As a safeguard against fires from incendiary bombs, truckloads of sand were to be dumped at strategic locations in Montgomery County, Md., today as nearby Virginia and Maryland communities announced plans for acquiring 10 new sirens and compressed-air horns.

Air-raid wardens tomorrow are to distribute handbills telling county residents where to go and how to obtain their quotas of sand. Those not receiving this information are urged to call their air-raid wardens. Along with the handbills each airraid warden will distribute sand quota tickets, without which householders will be unable to obtain sand. County civilian defense officials emphasized this point.

After obtaining their sand quota tickets, residents may go to the points where the sand has been piled and obtain their quota of 50 to 100 pounds free of charge. It was explained that the county has obtained most of the sand from its own sand and gravel pits.

Distribution Begins Tomorrow Distribution of the sand also will begin tomorrow and residents are urged to bring cotton bags or buckets with them when they apply.

In the handbills, residents are asked to keep the sand dry and to keep it available at all times in case of emergency. If an incendiary bomb strikes your home, this is what you are instructed to do, according to county defense offi-

Pour a bucket of sand on the ground or floor beside the bomb. Then, shove the missile on top of the sand and pour another bucket of sand over it. This is designed to smother the bomb completely and remove any chance of its eating through the floor.

Plans Complete For $1,600,000 Home for Aged

Plans for construction on Districtowned land at Glenn Dale, Md., of a $1,600,000 new home for the aged and infirm, which would include a 150-bed hospital, will be placed before the Budget Bureau and Congress in the near future, the District Commissioners announced yes-

After months of study, the city heads finally have agreed upon abandonment of the old institution at Blue Plains, which has been found inadequate and outmoded by Mrs. Roosevelt, congressional officials and welfare officials, as well as

Site Held Most Suitable.

The site at Glenn Dale was selected as most available during studies of various possible Government-owned locations. The institution would be a group of cottagetype buildings, except for the hospital, and these would be built around a central plaza. The whole development of 14 structures would be at a considerable distance from the buildings of the District Tuberculosis Sanatoria, located on the same general tract.

The city heads are concerned over the question of priority ratings for steel and other materials which would be needed for the new plant. While welfare officials recently reported they had advices priorities would not be granted, the Commissioners have said they believed they could be obtained in view of general agreement that the Blue Plains plant is a disgrace.

Congressional approval of funds is expected since the Commissioners say the addition of $1,600,000 to the District budget for next year still will leave District finances balanced without the elimination of any other essential projects.

Hospital Need Stressed.

Need for a hospital for residents of the Home for the Aged was one of the fundamental findings during studies of the old Blue Plains plant. As planned for the Glenn Dale site this would cost about $445,000. A domestic service building has been planned at a cost of $50,000. There would also be a recreation building at $100,000, a heating plant at $60.-000 and roads, walks and grading costing $44,000. This would be in addition to the cost for four cottages of 50 bed capacity each and six other cottages of 25 bed capacity. This would total $1,411,900, to utilities, making the whole cost $5 .-

The present plans calls for accommodations for 350 persons in the new plant, plus 150 in the hospital section, thus 500 in all, about 100 less than the number cared for at Blue Plains until recently. In the past few weeks some patients of the home have been transfered to hospitals and others have been placed on Government care in their own residences.

Requests for Advice On Safe Spots Swamp Fire Department

School authorities reported yesterday they were making progress in completing the defense organization against air raids.

They are still awaiting individual reports from the principals of the nearly 200 school buildings on how the official instructions of the Office of Civilian Defense, requiring that the children be kept at schools in case of a daylight air raid, can be adapted to their buildings. In addition to the public schools, Supt. Frank W. Ballou has been asked by District civilian defense chiefs to organize the protection of private and parochial schools.

Meanwhile, Dr. Ballou said he understood the Fire Department has been swamped with requests from school principals to advise on the safe spots in the buildings. The O. C. D. plan involves keeping the children at the school buildings. Eastern High's Plans.

Principal Charles Hart at Eastern High School has reported the Eastern students will use the corridors of the office and library floors, the assembly hall and balcony, in event of an air raid. The first floor at Eastern is not the street floor but is above the street. Including the basement. Eastern is a four-story

A report has also come in from MacFarland Junior High School where Principal H. P. Safford said numerous test drills have been held.

Dr. Ballou said the top floor of the school would be vacated in an air

Haycock said informal reports from principals in some of the old eight-room elementary school buildings Since Pearl Harbor indicate the children will be gathered in the center foyer on the first floor of the schools. These buildings are two-stories with a class room in each corner. He indicated it was the belief the children, though crowded, would be safe in the foyer from flying glass and also free from possible gases in the basements, The basements of this type school generally contain boys and girls lavatype school are located in Northeast Washington

Probable Procedure. The newer type of elementary school is a long building with corridors running the length of the building on the first and second floors into which the classrooms open. #### Association Stresses Opportunities for Nurses

Stressing the acute need for more nurses, the Graduate Nurses' Association yesterday pointed out opporor to attend refresher courses.

"Now that we are at war, the Army and Navy, through the Red Cross, have appealed for additional nurses," Mrs. Elizabeth D. #### 7,000 Here Volunteer To Be Air Raid Wardens

About 7,000 persons have volunteered for air raid warden service in the Washington metropolitan area, Chief Air Raid Warden Clement Murphy reported yesterday. He estimated that between 11,000 and 12.000 will be needed to complete the service in every community of the metropolitan area.

Of the 7,000 who have filled out cards about 2,000 deputy and assistant wardens have been sworn in and are active in the work.

Mr. Murphy, whose full-time job is that of battalion fire chief in Washington, said the warden service was the most fully organized of any of the essential volunteer divisions of civilian defense and already was equipped to do efficient work in case of an emergency.

Volunteers are arriving at the precincts daily in considerable number, so that the chief anticipates no great difficulty in obtaining enough men.

Some women are being taken to aid the small force at the Women's Bureau in carrying out emergency police work affecting women. Maj. Kelly is aided in enrolling and training the auxiliaries by Capt. John H. Fowler and Lt. John Scott.

The recruits will be trained in routine police work and in airraid procedure. Thus far they carry only cards of identity, but distinctive arm bands or other insignia are expected to be provided. At air-raid drills, as in actual attack, the auxiliaries will help the regular police direct traffic and

Official Says Walkout Of Chemical Workers Perils Acid Production

Chemical Co. threatens to stop TNT production at the Govern- bon, and of course, on Madrid. ment's $40,000,000 Plum Brook ordnance plant near Sandusky, Ohio.

Asserting that the strike, called vesterday, "is preventing shipment of sulphuric acid" to the Plum Brook project, A. N. Oehlschlager, General's work superintendent, added: "There is no other available source to supply this ordnance

"The strike has also held up the construction program at the chemical plant which was being undertaken for producing acid to meet the Government's urgent requirements," Mr. Oehlschlager continued.

McElroy Trout, regional director for C. I. O.'s United Mine Workers Union, said the walkout by the union's chemical workers was without district officers' permission, but added that the company had not been negotiating in good faith since the union won bargaining rights.

Mr. Oehlschlager said the company's 125 hourly wage employes average $1.01 an hour and had received four pay increases since November, 1939, the last being a flat 7 per cent on October 29. He said the union demands another 20 cents an hour, a closed shop, a bonus of time for any overtime in excess of

There are certain difficulties to be overcome. A major air attack on the British fleet and bases, coupled with air reinforcement of Gen. His father, Gen. Arthur MacArthur, the first American military governor of the Philippines, was the first American to fight them during the insurrection.

The Moros charged entrenched positions of the senior MacArthur's troops, using only bolos for weapons. Spurred by fanatical zeal, they stormed through veritable hails of bullets to reach the American positions and swing with deadly effect their razor-sharp knives, before dropping dead themselves with scores of bullets in their tough

Alien Examining Board Will Take Oaths Tomorrow

Dr. White, Horn and Flannery Will Act on Cases in This District

A three-man board, including an educator, an attorney and a local businessman, will be ready tomorrow to act on alien enemy cases in this judicial district for the Department of Justice.

The men, prominent in local and civic affairs, are the Rev. Dr. Robert J. White, dean of the law school at Catholic University; A. F. E. Horn, civic leader and manager of the local branch of the General Electric Co., and John Spaulding Flannery. local attorney.

The men were named by the Attorney General yesterday and are expected to be sworn in for their new jobs tomorrow. District Attorney Edward M. Curran is expected to give the oath in his office. The men were notified by telegram that their acceptance was "gratifying because of the national emergency. They will be carried on the Justice Department pay roll as dollar-a-

Powers of Board. Specifically, the board will be empowered to recommend that an alien be interned for the duration of the war, be released unconditionally or Hearings will be conducted under supervision of Mr. Curran, who will present the facts in each case, it was announced. Also present at the hearings, it was specified, will be representatives of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The alien may be accompanied by a friend, relative or adviser, but may not use an attorney, it was stated. Though generally an alien will be present at the hearing, in cases where confidential information of possible aid to an enemy is involved he may be barred.

Aliens classified as dangerous to the Nation by the Alien Enemy Hearing Board and the Attorney General will be turned over to the Army for internment for the duration of hostilities. Those paroled may be released with or without bond but with the obligation that they report on parole officers at stated intervals. Those aliens not considered dangerous will be unconditionally released, the announcement stated.

Dr. White said he had been informed that the board would require full-time work for at least two weeks or more, depending on the number of accumulated cases for the District.

Author of Law Books. Dean White, a native of Concord,

Mass., was named head of the Catholic University law school May 20, 1937, after serving on the faculty for six years. He is the author of several law books. A resident here since 1927, he is a past national chaplain of the American Legion During the World War he served in the United States Navy Transport and Foreign Service.

For his work in the cause of peace he was awarded the Legion of Honor in 1935. He also edited the "Handbook on World Peace."

Mr. Horn, a native of Wilmington. Del., long has been active here in the Rotary Club and the Boys' Club. He came here for General Electric shortly after the World War following service in the Army as a captain in the Coast Artillery. He is a past president of the Electrical Institute of Washington and has been active in national electrical societies.

A native of Baltimore, Mr. Flannery has been a Washington resident for many years. He received his LL.B. and LL.M. degrees at Georgetown University. #### Art Gallery Construction Drawings on Exhibition

Drawings showing stages in the construction of the National Gallery of Art are on exhibition in the central ground floor gallery of the buildings. More than 100 drawings have been selected from the 2,655 submitted by the architects, Daniel Paul Higgins and the late John Russell Pope, both of New York.

The first group of drawings, made in 1936, convey the general scheme of the architects for the building, then slated to be erected on the Jefferson Memorial site. A second group show studies for a building to be placed on the Mall. Studies for the interior of the building, made from 1937 to 1939, are hung in sequence. Comparative studies show the relationship of the gallery to the Archives Building and the National Museum.

Also shown are designs for the gallery without its low dome. These were prepared at the request of the Commission of Fine Arts when working plans of the present design were already under way, but were never adopted.

Legal Battle Ended in 1937. The two-year legal battle to save Miss Maxwell from prison for the slaying of her coal miner-blacksmith father, Trigg Maxwell, at their plain little home in the Pound (Va.) section near the Kentucky border, came to an end on Armistice Day, 1937. She was tried twice. In the first the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals voided a first-degree murder conviction and 25-year sentence and remanded the case for Miss Maxwell, defended by a battery of attorneys, contended her father in a drunken rage had threatened to run her mother off the place and had threatened to beat her. She struck him with the heel of a slipper she snatched up during a scuffle, Miss Maxwell testified, when he came at her with a knife. Second Trial Found Her Guilty.

The State argued, however, that the 21-year-old girl had wielded a heavy instrument to make the wounds on Trigg Maxwell's headpossibly an electric iron.

At the second trial, which had been ordered by the Supreme Court on the ruling that no evidence to support the first-degree charge had been introduced at the first hearing, another Wise County jury returned a verdict of second-degree murder and fixed her punishment at the maximum-20 years. This verdict was upheld by the Virginia Appellate

Rationing of Power For Four Sections Of U. S. Considered

Defense Authorities Believe System Is Essential for War

Necessity of rationing electric power in at least four sections of the country during 1942 and possibly 1943 is virtually certain, defense authorities revealed yesterday.

The District of Columbia area will not be on the "critical" list but Club, meet front of National Thethere is a possibility that much of its power supply will be "pooled" and relaved to a shortage area, it was understood. Power pooling has been found to be one of the most effective methods of solving power shortages, officials said. The procedure consists in hooking together power systems of a large section of the country so that power not needed in one part of that section can be sent to another part where it is needed. Besides aluminum, other war materials requiring tremendous amounts of power to produce include magnesium, some types of steel, copper, zinc, chlorine, explosives and many others. The power branch of the O. P. M.

has advised that householders throughout the country may look forward to "a few simple rules" to relieve power shortages. These rules include: Use the hot-water heater sparingly; if you cook with an electric stove, use the thrift cooker; open refrigerator doors as seldom as possible; turn out lights when leaving a room; use other electrical devices as little as possible and don't keep the radio turned on when you aren't listening to it.

Prof. Talbert said such men might be persuaded to take up gardening as their part in the war effort. Speaking in the Agriculture Department auditorium, he also urged that more vegetables be planted between rows of fruit trees in orchards.

Schools Are Best Medium. Dr. John W. Studebaker, United States commissioner of education, told the conference the Nation's schools are "in a strategic" position to direct dietary habits toward better nutrition, because the pupils can carry such information into the Flower gardens and lawns should not be permitted to deteriorate because of the vegetable and fruit program, Dr. Samuel Hamilton of the United States Public Health Service declared. Preservation of such beauties is valuable from a mental hygiene standpoint in time of crisis, he explained. M. L. Wilson, assistant director of defense health and welfare services, emphasized that consideration for the country's health makes imperative that all citizens "make a conscientious effort to eat meals on the basis of what is good for us. as well as what we like." He said a recent Ohio study showed that all members of two-thirds of the families surveyed disliked such vegetables as eggplant, squash, cauliflower, kohlrabi, parsnips and tur-

Program Is Outlined. The conference closed with the unanimous recommendation of delegates calling for a "national victory garden program." Such a project would include the following points:

Efforts be made in each State to set up standards for an adequate "ictory" garden and recommendations as to varieties and kinds of vegetables that would best meet nutritional defense needs. State-wide meetings of horticulturists, home economists, seedsmen and representatives of land grant colleges and the Agriculture Department to formulate specific plans for garden programs in the State.

Garden demonstrations to teach people how to plan, plant and handle farm gardens for the greatest use in the defense program. The conference also adopted a recommendation of a subcommittee that accepted standards of processing and the use of tin and glass containers be set up in view of the canning equipment.

Area Surrounding Brookland Campus Included in Plans

To co-operate in the city-wide preparations for adequately protecting the population against hostile attacks, Catholic University and the adjoining neighborhood have been constituted as an independent civilian defense area, the Most Rev. Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of the university, announced yesterday.

The territory assigned for protective measures to authorities of the Brookland institution include the university property and all the adjoining religious houses of study, including Trinity College and the Catholic Sisters College at Tenth street and Bates Road N. E.

More than a year ago the Catholic University Committee on National Defense was organized and has been dealing largely with student problems, including the operations of the Selective Service Act and the special defense training courses which have been pursued in several of the schools of the univer-

The new problems arising out of the civilian defense program are to be met by a Catholic University Civilian Defense Committee, including seven members of the faculty and one senior student. Headed by Dr. Martin R. P. McGuire, dean of the graduate school of arts and sciences, who also is chairman of the university's National Defense Committee, the directing staff of eight members are now being trained as air wardens for the university area.

All Buildings Surveyed. Anthony J. Scullen, dean of the school of engineering and architecture, is having made a careful survey of all the buildings in the Catholic University area from the viewpoint of fire hazard and shelter. The Rev. Dr. Thomas V. Moore, head of the department of psychology and psychiatry, and Sister M. Olivia, dean of the school of nursing education, are now organizing a program of health service. The Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, dean of the school of philosophy, likewise is planning a program dealing with civilian morale and related questions. As speedily as possible, the committee in charge will see that all members of the university faculty and the student body will undergo intensive training in first aid and in the other protective measures prescribed by the District of Columbia civilian aid officials.

As chairman and co-ordinator of civilian defense in the university area, Dean McGuire is well equipped to direct the task. He served as a second lieutenant of infantry in the first World War and was a member of the Infantry Reserve Corps for five years. "The university committee." Dean McGuire said, "will co-operate in

Singapore Defenders Organize New Line In Northern Malaya

Japanese Are Inactive After Brief Clash on Mountain Highway

SINGAPORE, Dec. 20. - British imperial defenders of the distant approaches to Singapore methodically organized a new line today in Northwest Malaya without hindrance from the Japanese invaders, after smashing an enemy stab on the main road which winds through the mountainous interior.

The new line was being reorganized well south of the Krian River in Perak State, some 300 miles above Singapore. The tactical problem involved a slight further withdrawal. (It seemed likely reorganization of these defences might include bringing up of some of the reserves not yet used in the fighting in Malaya.) Today the Japanese left the British strictly alone, following yesterday's clash at Grik, a highway settlement in the mountains northeast of the main British line.

In this sharp encounter, a com-munique said, 60 Japanese were killed. There were 15 British casualties

At Singapore a council for coordinating the British defense effort in the Malayan theater was being organized by Alfred Duff Cooper, British Cabinet minister for Far East. It includes the British governor-general of Malaya, Sir Shenton Thomas; Air Chief Marshal Sir Robert Brooke-Popham, commander in chief of all British Far Eastern forces; Vice Admiral Sir Geoffrey Layton, commander of the Far Eastern fleet; V. G. Bowden, representing the Commonwealth of Australia and Sir George Sanson, Britain's foremost expert on Japan.

Replenishing War Machines Has Become Urgent Necessity

Raw Materials of Two Regions Declared Essential If Germany and Japan Are to Continue in War

By Constantine Brown.

The Japanese raid of December 7 on Pearl Harbor-and it is definitely ascertained now that the action was nothing but a raid—has had one major consequence: To compel the Allied naval command to revise its plan of action.

The first inevitable attack of nerves in this country is over. Those responsible for winning the war have settled down to earnest work with determination, and relative optimism, regarding the outcome and duration of the conflict.

Despite the spectacular achievements of the Japanese air force, most American naval and military officers believe nothing but overwhelming superiority in numbers and material, on the part of the Japanese, can give them victory over the A. B. C. D. forces.

The position of the defending forces

While we must expect some further & territorial gains by the Japs during the next few weeks, there is a definite feeling in Washington that the enemy can be stopped before long. This estimate is not wishful thinking or super-optimism, but is based on facts which cannot be revealed because they are the secrets of the armed forces.

The Japs and Germans have two principal objectives: Singapore and the Netherlands Indies for the former; the Near East for the latter.

Must Take Raw Materials.

It must be emphasized once more that these robber nations cannot hope to win the war or even prolong it unless they can take over the principal oil and 1aw material sources in the East-Mosul in Iraq and Java, Sumatra and Borneo in the Pacific. All their other activities, all their other successes are

The Axis may gain more territories, may capture more important cities, but if they cannot control the oil supplies with which to propel their ships, fly their planes and move their mechanized forces, they have no chance of winning this war.

All the other theaters of operations, including the British Isles and the Eastern front, are really of secondary importance. The Allies' principal effort, in the next few months or years, must be concentrated on preventing the Axis from obtaining the liquid gold which is the vital force of every fighting army.

There is evidence to indicate that the Germans, supported by their satellites, the Italians, Bulgarians and Rumanians, are now preparing a blitz in the Eastern Mediterranean. This offensive is reported to be scheduled for some time between now and February. Other possible developments, such as extension of Nazi domination in North Africa, a demonstration against the United States with increased submarine activity in the Atlantic, or even possible action by German naval or air forces off the American coast, are mere incidentals. Expect Attack in Near East.

The main drive-some say the last drive-of the Nazis must take place in the direction of the Near East, military experts believe. Details of the operating plans of the German high command are. of course, unknown, but it is believed that the best fighting units from the Russian front have already been withdrawn and are being relocated for action in the Near East. So is the bulk of the Nazi air force.

According to the few reports received here by way of Turkey, the Greek, Bulgarian and Rumanian airdromes have been filled recently with German planes. The occupied islands off the coast of Asia Minor are seething with activity. War material, including large quantities of gasoline, barges for a possible landing expedition and small torpedo boats of the type used to protect such landings are being massed in the ports adjacent to Asia Minor.

Winter, which frustrated Hitler's aims in Russia, likewise may prevent the Soviet armies from developing their victories against the Nazis much further. Hitier is reported to be satisfied that his battered forces can hold a line somewhere near Smolensk. The troops in the rear have been working like beavers to organize a powerful line of defense against the Russians. Reports from Vichy, Unoccupied France, indicate that it is in the Smolensk-Kiev region that the Germans will establish their main #### line of resistance to the Soviets. Meso, Main Objective.

The major battle of this war will be fought on the plains of Mesopotamia, with a sideshow in North Africa, where the Germans hope to have complete control before the end of the year. The British imperial forces in that region are strong enough, according to all estimates, to withstand a Nazi attack. The British high command realizes that it will be a tremendous struggle, but the army is in good shape. It has enough war material for several months, but it is considered essential that American faccontinue to pour into that region all the war material they possibly can. If the German plans are foffed the war may be much shorter than is generally anticipated. The Near East, then, is the principal objective of the Germans because of its oil. Japan has a similar objective—the attraction being not only oil but rubber, too. The Japanese must reduce Singapore and conquer the Netherlands Indies, otherwise all their brilliant successes of the first week of war will be of little Japan has sent a large force into Indo-China and Thailand. This force is estimated at 250,000 to 275,000 men, well equipped and provided with all the latest war paraphernalia, and German staff officers are giving their Japanese allies the benefit of their experience.

The geographical situation of the April 2 President Wilson British and Dutch possessions is advantageous for the Allies. The narrow neck which separates Thailand from the Malay Peninsula is a difficult passage-

A Good Soldier in a Tough Spot Gen. MacArthur May Become Real Hero of Pacific

By Marquis W. Childs

Manila Bay is a name to conjure, with. Out of the Battle of Manila Bay in the Spanish-American War came the national hero of that generation-Admiral George Dewey. And now, with another war raging in the Philippines, it is possible that a new national hero is on the Pacific horizon

If the Japanese are driven out of the islands and Manila is saved, then Gen. Douglas MacArthur will be able to write his own ticket. For it will be his planning, his persistence, his soldiership that will have preserved this key to the Pacific defenses.

Six years ago, after he had retired as United States chief of staff, Gen. Mac-Arthur went to the Philippines at the request of President Manuel Quezon to build up a Philippine army. Last July President Roosevelt made him head of the United States Army in the far Pacific. Friday the President promoted him to full general. Events seem to have proved that his flair for showmanship and his love of personal display-the source of much criticism in the pasthave been added assets among a people with an Oriental love of splendor.

Gen. MacArthur has many firsts to his credit. He was youngest head of West Point. He was the youngest chief of staff and the first chief of staff to be asked to serve an added year beyond the traditional tour of duty in that post. He was the first field marshal of the Philippine Army. He is the first officer to bear the rank of commander of the United States Army Forces in the Far East. And he is likely, if the Army prevails over the Navy, to be the United States generalissimo in the Pacific, representing both the Army and Navy on the allied council that is now being

Father Served in Islands. The irony is, of course, that in this war the Philippines are only one piece on the vast chess board of the Pacific. And sometimes a good chess player sacrifices one piece to preserve another and thereby achieve final victory. Such a decision would be a bitter one for Gen. MacArthur to make, since his roots go so deep into the rich tropical earth of the Philippines.

Arthur, who as major general of volunteers in the Spanish-American War captured the town of Malate, which prepared the way for the taking of Manila. Later he commanded a division against the insurrectionist leader, Aguinaldo, and finally he was named military governor charged with the task of restoring order to the war-torn islands.

In the son's mind there was apparently never any doubt about his career. He entered West Point and was graduated with highest honors in spite of the competition he got from a runnerup. Ulysses Grant, 3d, who would have been head of the class under ordinary circumstances. But Gen. MacArthur was no ordinary competitor. He was out to write his name in the sky in capital

Besides an alert mind, he had other equipment. For one thing, he was spectacularly handsome and, for that matter, still is. Equally important, he developed very early a political skill which has helped him to steer through Army and civilian jealousies and rivalries and with this went a strong sense of the dra-

Won World War Glory.

The first World War was for Douglas MacArthur the same kind of chance for glory that the Civil War had been for his father, who enlisted at the age of 16 and rose to colonel at 20. And he took it in his stride. As commander of the Rainbow Division he made a sensational reputation. One of his citations in 1918 read:

"As brigade commander, Gen. Mac-Arthur personally led his men and by the skillful maneuvering of his brigade made possible the capture of hills 228, 242 and the Cote de Caatillon. He displayed indomitable resolution and great courage in rallying broken lines and in reforming attacks, thereby making victory possible. On a field where courage was the rule, his courage was the dom-

Such citations are seldom given to general officers. In fact, there was some apprehension that Gen. MacArthur was for a commanding officer almost too heedless of his own personal safety. Returning in a blaze of glory, he was named superintendent of West Point. from which he had been graduated only

From West Point he was ordered to the Philippines for his second tour of duty there. Straight out of the Point he had gone to the islands as a young second lieutenant in the Engineer Corps to supervise the building of docks and wharves. During his second tour the new brigadier general was so successful that he was returned in 1928 to be commander of the entire Philippine Department of the United States Army. Up to the time of his appointment as Chief of Staff the record of his career is an improbable success story. All the good fairles in the world were perched on his shoulder to guarantee him health, wealth and happiness. In 1932 at the bottom of the depression, when the tide of reaction against the first World War and the evils that came out of it was strongest, Gen. MacArthur had something of a comeuppance. President Hoover, who had unhappily

failed to lure prosperity around that | missed the entire problem. Those little corner, was plagued by the bonus march- dots on the map in the far Pacific ers. They camped in Washington, a constant reminder of his troubles and, moreover, Mr. Hoover was told by his advisers that they were inspired by Communists and similar troublemakers. On the other hand, the pitiful plight of these men and their families had stirred wide sympathy on Capitol Hill.

Into this highly charged situation the showy MacArthur was precipitated. Orders came from Mr. Hoover to drive out the bonus army. Gen. MacArthur, as Chief of Staff, carried out those orders with tanks, tear gas, bayonets. A ragged rabble fled before a dapper general who. according to current legend, had put on an immaculate new uniform with medals for the occasion.

The Battle of the Bonus Marchers served to obscure Gen. MacArthur's achievements during his tour of duty as Chief of Staff. He worked day and night for modernization and mechanization of the Army, preaching everywhere the need for greater defense. It was a period when a normally peace-loving Nation was bent on ignoring the very word war. Nevertheless, Gen. MacArthur established the General Headquarters Air Force and developed the four Army organization of our land forces, thereby taking a long step out of the traditional past. Almost as great an achievement was the fact that he stood as high with the buoyant Mr. Roosevelt as he had with the dour Mr. Hoover. It was Mr. Roosevelt who took the unprecedented step of extending Gen. MacArthur's tour of duty as chief of staff. And it was Mr. Roosevelt who approved the loan of the retired chief of staff to the Philippines. It is possible that the President foresaw exactly the crisis that now exists in the Pacific. And he knew that Gen. MacArthur would do all that could be done to make the islands defensible.

Planned Island Defenses.

The prevailing view when the general went out to Manila in 1935 was that little or no consideration should be given to defense of the Philippines in event of a war with Japan. Time and energy should not be wasted in that effort, it was argued. With the background of his long knowledge, Gen. MacArthur began an intensive study of the military

In a short time he presented President Quezon with a plan for making the independent Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands "invasion proof." This plan called for compulsory military training for all youths, the formation of an efficient air force and the organization of an offshore patrol of small, swift motor torpedo boats. Within 10 years approximately 499,000 partially trained men would be available for service on short notice. The program was to cost $8,000,000 a year. At the outbreak of the war there were approximately 150,000 Filipino reserves.

Shortly after Gen. MacArthur got the program started, President Quezon made him field marshal of the Philippine Army. A golden baton weighing 11 ounces was conferred on him at just such a dramatic ceremony in Malacanan Palace as the general deeply loves. In response to a speech from President Quezon, Field Marshal MacArthur delivered himself of some lush passages of the rhetoric purple that he cultivates. But even such a dynamic figure as Field Marshal MacArthur found it difficult to sustain interest. Factions grew up, with opposition from left wingers. A greater handicap was American inword of the torpedoing without warning | 50, and this country was in the war. | icans, including some in high places, dis- role in which he will do his utmost.

Important American residents of the Philippines were inclined to laugh in private over the field marshal and the drama he played out with himself. They were a little jealous, too, perhaps, of the marshal's handsome penthouse atop the Manila Hotel and his charming young wife, the former Jean Faircloth, whom he met and married in 1937.

A striking change occurred last summer. Shortly before he named Gen. Mac-Arthur commander of the Army in the Far East, President Roosevelt apparently decided that the Philippines could be defended in the event of war with Japan. The general had won his long argument. Not Britain, not even the Panama Canal, had so high a priority rating as the islands. A procession of ships loaded with war materials moved across the Pacific to Manila Bay.

Takes Realistic View.

The irony is that within such a short time-a matter of months perhaps even weeks-the defense of the Philippines would have been even stronger than it is today. And likewise one of the tragedies of the Japs' treacherous attack is the loss of an unknown number of cargo ships with their burden of precious ma-

But in this moment of peril it is certain that the general himself will not be looking for alibis. He has argued repeatedly the importance of defending the islands even at great sacrifice. When critics declared that the position of the Philippines was hopeless, the general replied that it would take "half a million men, $10,000,000,000, tremendous casualties and three years' time successfully to invade the Philippines."

The final issue may turn on the relative importance to the Pacific allies of Singapore and the Philippines. If the decision should go against the islands. this romantic soldier would find it hard to accept. Never given to "orderly withdrawals," he is one of your derring-do fighting men.

Knows His Business.

A strategist himself, he would probably come around to what was agreed to be the realistic view. Newspapermen and diplomats who have talked with Gen. MacArthur in passing through Manila in recent months all agree about his love of showmanship and his passion for rhetoric. But they also agree that beneath that surface he knows his business as a

On January 26 Gen. MacArthur will be 62. He is lean and hard, still handsome and considerably younger looking than his years. This battle of the Philippines is the culmination of his career and into it he is putting all that he has learned of soldiering. It is a part of the world that he knows and loves and of his own choice he is making his stand on ground where the clan MacArthur made history. Sometime ago the question arose as to whether he should send his wife and 3-year-old son back to the security of the States. MacArthur said no. Not all wives and children could make the trip back and therefore he would not ask for this special privilege. After the outbreak of the war in Europe in 1939, friends of Gen. MacArthur found him in what was for him an ex-time at any rate, the continent of Europe, and he regretted his decision to retire when so much was happening. Now the whirligig of war has shifted dramatic night session of Congress, at- the war resolution, 82 to 6. A few min- difference. Disagreement on Types of Information That Will Aid Enemy Sure to Be Source of Frequent Misunderstandings

By Blair Bolles.

the Bill of Rights. Two days later he appointed a national censor, whose business it is to infringe on the Bill of Rights' guarantee of freedom of the press. Nobody protested. War is paradoxical, and we accept the idea that even in a war fought to protect the system of which the Bill of Rights is a part, free publication of information must be restricted.

"All Americans hate censorship as much as they do war," President Roosevelt said when he announced that Byron Price, executive editor of the Associated Press. was the wartime director of censorship, and he probably was right. One of our proud national boasts is that our people enjoy a freer flow of information through newspapers, radio and magazines than any people in the world. But wide freedom of information already is a casualty of war.

Our own history in the first World War and the experience of Great Britain in this war serve to throw some light on what we can expect in the way of censorship. One thing that is certain to come out of the censorship arrangement is a ceaseless inner battle between the press and the Government over what should be censored and what should not.

Source of Irritation.

Mr. Price has been on the job here since Friday. "The only news that should be kept secret is news that will aid our enemies," he says, and there lies the crux of the whole censorship battle. No one ever agrees completely on all the types of information that will aid our enemies. In dispute over this question the British Ministry of Information has three times been reorganized during the war, which is less than three years old. Before the French surrendered. Paris newspapers used to appear with large blank spaces where the editors had planned to print news that the censor would not permit.

We already had censorship of outgoing and incoming cable and wireless communications before the appointment sor. The Navy Department is in charge of the outgoing and incoming censorship, and already its red-tape slowness has resulted in a 24-hour holdup of a message in Spanish to the Buenos Aires Nacion, a newspaper favorably disposed toward the United States. The slowness with which censorship operates is a source of irritation wherever censorship

The President indicated, however, that our wartime censorship will be aimed at controlling the fountains of news rather than the manner in which newspapers handle the news. A system of that sort makes it unlikely that all dispatches to papers and all broadcasts over the radio will have to be submitted to a scissorsand-blue-pencil official before the papers print the dispatches or the radio stations send out their broadcasts. The Nazi policy with regard to correspondents writing for newspapers outside Germany has been to suggest limits beyond which the correspondents should not go and to let the writers act as their own cen-

Emotional Factors at Work. This semblance of voluntary censorship prevailed here during the first World War, when George Creel, chief of the Committee on Public Information, was the chief censor in fact if not in name. Mr. Creel, who recently wrote a magazine article in which he aired his view that his mission had been a failure, had to work in a time where powerful emotional factors were at work to cry "outrage" against the publication not only of information but of opinions which then were looked upon as subversive and disloyal but which now we have learned to accept as commonplace.

"Many public men and many of our prominent newspapers who have always bitterly fought socialism, the I. W. W.s. and even labor unions." Mr. Creel was told during the war, "are taking advantage of the present crisis in an effort not purely patriotic to squelch all of those more or less radical organizations without regard to the effect upon the future of our country, to say nothing of the effect in the present war.'

Even newspapers, then, have been guilty in the past of trying to censor opinion and information Congress Toned It Down.

The statutory instrument of censorship in the World War was the Espionage Act, which, upon its introduction into Congress, contained stringent censorship provisions providing for life imprisonment for whoever during the war without lawful authority should "collect. record, publish or communicate" military information, which was broadly defined. Congress toned down the bill, but the press never welcomed it, and a figure now familiar on the American scene, Piorella H. La Guardia, was one of the members of Congress who remained skeptical of the act's value until the last.

The final wording of the Espionage Act on the censorship question for the other war was found in section 3, which

"Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies; and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall ferred to the committee before it was forces of the United States, or shall wil- | deal with.

One day last week President Roose- fully obstruct the recruiting or enlistvelt made a speech about the glories of | ment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years or both."

On the surface this seemed a law from which newspapers, which seek to print the truth and the facts, would be wholly safe. But this was not the case. A history of the Creel Committee by James R. Mock and Cedric Larson, (Words That Won the War"), says of section 3:

"This is what gave teeth to the Committee on Public Information. Without questioning the loyalty of the great majority of American newspapers, it may fairly be said that this was the big stick behind the 'voluntary' censorship of the press. In certain cases it was actually used for control of the press, and in countless others the shadow of its authority fell across the desk of the country's editors.'

Controls Undecided.

The present day statutory foundation for censorship is in the broad war powers bill which Congress hurriedly passed last week and which the President signed Thursday. It gives an authority in general similar to that in section 3 of the Espionage Act, which is still on the books. It also states the Government has the power to censor outgoing messages, whether on wires or through the mails-a power which the Navy Department and the Post Office Department already had been exercising.

What direction the censorship actually will take, what general rules Mr. Price will lay down and what mechanical controls he will establish are questions to which he himself does not yet know the answer. For several months a special cabinet committee has been conferring on what sort of censorship we in this country should have. It is understood that newspapers and radio officials will be invited to confer with the committee, now that the censor has

One difference between Mr. Price and Mr. Creel is that Mr. Creel was both high censor and high propagandist. The foundations for propaganda in this war have been laid long ago in other quarters than the censor's office, principally in the Office of Facts and Figures, which is still in the process of organization, and in the Division of Information of the Office for Emergency Management. which sounds the bell for the industrial side of the war effort.

Preliminary Restrictions.

News restriction in Washington was growing before the war's precipitate arrival. An outstanding example was the Navy Department's long-time request that no news be printed of the arrival of British ships for repair in American harbors. When the New York Daily News took an air photograph of the British ship Malaya in New York Harbor, the Civil Aeronautics Authority grounded the News' photograph plane. This incident took place last March. The British themselves subsequently made it public knowledge that their ships were here by disclosing in a press release the presence of the Illustrious

A good example of how withholding the news may prove more damaging at home than hurtful to the enemy was provided by the Hawaii incident that began the war. The story which Secretary of the Navy Knox brought back to Washington disclosed widespread harm to our naval force. But the rumors which were spreading on every side in the absence of an official report said that the damage was far greater than the actual facts warranted. Absence of information can injure the civilian morale. Supporting war without information is like fighting in the dark.

Releases Regulated.

Besides planning to set up rules about what may and may not be printed, the Government has made a start toward controlling sources of information. Correspondents at the War and Navy Departments must get information through the press relations bureaus of those departments. The State Department insists that a correspondent wishing to speak with a member of the department staff make a request through the Division of Current Information and declare the topic he wishes to discuss.

The United States never has taken well to censorship. The strictest laws governing censorship in this country were passed in 1798, the Sedition Act. and the popular disapproval led to abandonment of its enforcement after a period of strict application. The Sedition Act was a peacetime statute, passeu in order to insulate the United States from the European turmoils set in motion by the Directoire period of the French Revolution. One of the reasons the Federalists lost the White House in 1800 was the dislike for the Sedition

Some editors went to jail during the Civil War because the Secretary of War thought they ought to be there, and the Postmaster General barred a few antiwar Northern newspapers from the mails. But that war brought no co-ordinated censorship plan. Mr. Creel approached censorship from the class angle. He listed 18 types of news-including troop and ship movements-about which there must be no mention in print; another category of "doubtful" news to be re-

A Drastic Step

The transfer of governmental agencies from Washington to make room for incoming defense workers, a step involving great hardship for those who will be forced to break up their homes and separate from their families, can be justified only on the ground of absolute necessity. If it be granted that this element of necessity exists, then it follows as a matter of course that the utmost care should be exercised to move agencies whose transfer to other cities will result in the least interference with the functioning of the Government and the least hardship to the individuals affected by the change. Certainly there is room for doubt whether these points were given adequate consideration in the transfers announced Friday night by the Budget Bureau.

The order for the removal of the Patent Office, which has been located in Washington for more than 100 years, is the most questionable of the twelve shifts now under way.

This agency is engaged in a highly specialized work. Virtually every man in the office is a scientist or an expert in some particular field. They are career men whose roots go deep into the community life of the Nation's Capital. There would be little opportunity for adequate employment of their talents if they should elect to remain here instead of following the Patent Office to New York, and, by the same token, it would be extremely difficult to fill their places with new employes. Including the families and employes of the six to seven hundred patent attorneys, it is estimated that at least 20,000 persons would be affected, directly or indirectly, by the removal of the Patent Office. That, on its face, involves a dislocation of civilian life wholly out of proportion to the advantage which may be expected to result from recovering the office space used by the 1,450 persons actually employed in the agency.

There are also physical problems connected with moving the Patent Office which may not have received adequate consideration. Some four months were required to move the office from the old building at Seventh and F streets to the new quarters in the Commerce Building, which, incidentally, were specially designed for the Patent Office. The job of transferring the agency to New York certainly would prove more difficult.

A few figures on this point are significant. There are 109,086,635 patents, weighing 4,114 tons, in the office. All these would have to be moved. The transfer also would involve moving 23,500 items of furniture and equipment, six to seven thousand tons of patent storage cases and from ten to twelve thousand tons of other storage equipment. If these physical obstacles were not enough to raise serious doubts as to the wisdom of this move. there is the further problem of what the office is to do about its printing, which now must be handled by the Government Printing Office, and the question of appeals to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals and suits against the Commissioner of Patents, which must be heard at this time in the District. Despite all these considerations, it may be taken for granted that the | 44. In terms of resources, America employes of the Patent Office, as and her Allies are considered to have well as those in the other agericies | 64 per cent of the available wheat, affected, will move and move willingly if their sacrifice really is necessary to the war effort. But employes in the older and more 78 per cent of the petroleum. firmly rooted agencies should not be compelled to pull up stakes and move if that involves greater sacrifices for them than would be the case in some of the newer agencies. Nor should they be transferred if other agencies, from the standpoint | miles with a density of 214 persons of efficiency, could be moved more easily, and on this score it seems self-evident that the removal of a century-old agency would involve far greater problems than in the year or ten years ago. It also might be asked whether all possibilities of securing relief by transferring employes from nondefense to defense agencies have been exhausted. Certainly there is nothing in the record to indicate that this has been done. Another pertinent inquiry involves the question of whether these transfers are obviously, is a vital matter to em- | material significance have been the | enemy possessed.

ployes scheduled for removal who own their own homes and who must now decide whether to sell or lease them. If those responsible for selecting the agencies to be moved have not even considered whether they are being sent away temporarily or permanently, that fact alone is sufficient to raise serious doubt as to the thoroughness with which all the ramifications of transferring the Patent Office were studied before it was added to the list.

When to the agencies already slated for removal there are added those yet to go, it is quite probable that upward of 50,000 Washington residents will almost literally be moved overnight out of their homes and into a new environment. The decisions as to who shall go are made without advance notice to the affected parties and upon the basis of unspecified considerations. Whether they are to be brought back after the emergency is over seems to be in the lap of the gods.

All of this suggests a hurried and none too well thought out effort to meet a condition which was not adequately anticipated. If it is necessary it will have to be done. But if hasty decisions can be improved upon, the President and his subordinates should not hesitate to reconsider them.

In his remarks to the laborindustry conference last week the President told how Russian workmen, in the face of the German advance, were loaded onto freight cars with their tools and shipped hundreds of miles into the interior, not even being permitted to tell their families good-by. He said he wondered what the average American would do if this Government were to employ similar methods, and expressed the hope that "we won't have anything actually happening like that over here."

There is, of course, a vast difference between the transfer of the Russian workers and the removals which have been orderd in Washington, but the latter, so far as the individuals involved are concerned, constitute a real hardship which should not be made unnecessarily onerous.

Sensible Compromise

In voting finally to approve a onecent increase in the District gasoline tax, the House wisely has receded from its original insistence upon a two-cent boost, which was both unnecessary and inequitable. The onecent increase, having already been approved by the Senate, becomes effective on January 1.

It is estimated that the higher tax rate will raise $1,500,000 annually for necessary highway improvements directly related to the Nation's war effort. This sum, with the $2,000,000 which the Federal Public Roads Administration has agreed to allocate for these purposes, is expected to be adequate to finance all projects for which priority ratings can be secured. And that is all that should be undertaken at this time. Certainly there could have been no justification whatsoever for a two-cent increase, which would have resulted in an accumulation of funds that could not be spent because of inability to secure materials for projects not deemed to be immediately necessary.

The debate in the House at the time the two-cent increase was approved, contrary to the recommendation of the House District Committee, made it clear that many members voted for the higher rate because they desired to bring the District's tax into line with rates prevailing in nearby States. That motive, which bore no relation to the needs of the Capital, was plainly unfair to local gasoline buyers, and the final decision to adjust the tax to the actual needs is one which will be welcomed throughout the community.

Statistical Line-up

The Bureau of the Census has prepared a recapitulation of the forces involved in what it unhesitatingly calls the "greatest war in the world's history." Estimating the population of the earth at 2,133,000,-000, the table gives the total inhabitants of the anti-Axis nationsthe United States, the United Kingdom and possessions, Russia, China and the Netherlands Indies—as 1,302,997,000. The area controlled by the democracies is judged to be 29.783.000 square miles with an average residential distribution of about 51 per cent of the sugar, 34 per cent of the potatoes, 67 per cent of the coal, 63 per cent of the iron ore and

Listed as the "Axis belligerents." Germany, Italy, Japan, Finland. Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania and Manchukuo are credited with a total population of 306,281,000 in an inclusive area of 1,433,000 square per square mile counted. The principal handicap of the combination of aggressors and their associates is suggested by the Census Bureau's finding that they have only 3 per case of one which came into being a | cent of the world's petroleum supply—the oil fields of the Carpathians.

A further striking circumstance indicated by the compilation in regard to lubricants is the fact that although the Axis has occupied Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, Estonia, France, Greece, Latvia, Lithuania, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Yugoslavia, French Indo-China and Thailand-a total of to be temporary or permanent. In | 1,282,000 square miles supporting an official circles it is said that this aggregate population of 182,878,000 limited iron ore deposits of France and the problematical potato crops of Poland.

The Bureau of the Census avoids any effort to "compute the proportion of normal Russian resources now controlled by German occupation nor the proportion of Chinese resources controlled by Japan as a result of occupation." It does take into account, however, the resources "more likely available to the anti-Axis group" of nations—the balance of North America (excepting the United States and Canada), South America, Egypt, Iran and Iraq-166,650,000 people in 9.838,000 square miles of "living space." From these territories, 8 per cent of the earth's supply of oil and gasoline customarily come. On the other hand, 9 per cent of the world's iron ore is of Swedish origin-conceded to the Axis in the computation of the Census Bureau, which also grants to the same combination the scant sugar production of Spain.

The only first-class country omitted from the calculation is European and Asiatic Turkey—297,000 square miles with 17.870,000 men, women and children to feed on 2 per cent of the total wheat crop of the earth.

The Bureau of the Census has provided convincing evidence of the superiority of the nations opposed to the Axis in human power, land, food and minerals. But this superiority in material resources will be unavailing in the struggle for freedom unless it is speedily translated by unremitting effort and sacrifice into that actual military superiority essential to success in war.

New Service Law

In agreeing to fix the age limits of those liable to active military service at from twenty to forty-four, inclusive, Congress has struck a balance between the previously recorded views of the House and Senate on this question. As a compromise, it should at least satisfy our military requirements as they exist today.

Whether this will hold good for the future is a question which depends entirely on the course of the war. The President, acting on the advice of his military counselors, strongly urged that the minimum age limit be lowered to nineteen, and the Senate concurred in this view. The House, however, for reasons which seem not to have been related to the military outlook, voted for a minimum age of twenty-one and stuck to that figure until the conference compromise was accepted.

There is, of course, no doubt whatsoever that all members of Congress | happen. would vote to lower the draft age if security demanded such action. Thus, the real question obviously concerns the extent to which Congress, in time of war, should be guided by the recommendations of our military leaders, and it is evident, judging from the vote on this matter, that the House still prefers to exercise independent judgment on certain matters pertaining to the military establishment. The future will determine the wisdom of such an attitude, and, if the verdict of time is against the House, it does not appear that irreparable damage will have been done since the Army will have its hands full for some months with the problem of equipping and training the men who will be made available under the law

In this connection it is pertinent to recall that Secretary of War Stimson has served notice that voluntary enlistments will be stopped as soon as the present rush is over. This should be done—at least as to men within the new age limits-without delay-for, as President Wilson pointed out when a similar ban was invoked during the first World War. the volunteer system is defective in that, under it, "men may come (into the service) who ought not to come, but ought to stand back of the armies in the field and see that they get everything that they need, and that the people of the country are sustained in the meantime."

Morpheus Scorned Many people, after a restless night, complain next morning that they have not slept a wink. They should hark to the case of Al Herpin of Trenton who for ninety years has never slept, night or day. For most of a century night has meant nothing to him but a chance to get away from the rest of mankind and read to keep from being bored. There is not even a bed in his little home.

Doctors from all over the world have examined him; freak shows have bid for his services, and hundreds of women have offered to marry him, he says, to no avail. He proceeds quietly at his task of furnace tending in winter and lawn mowing in summer and no one has yet caught him napping. Nor is it likely that any one ever will. He passed the almost incredible test of going to Philadelphia at the invitation of a pair of doctors, and actually spent several days there without sleeping. He claims to be the only man on earth who can read through an entire copy of the Congressional Record at one sitting. What a national asset he would have been had it been possible to have imparted his secret of non-stop operation to those in charge of the defense program back when the five-day, forty-hour week was considered plenty good

In view of what Secretary Knox had to say about the almost 100 per cent efficiency of the Japanese fifth

Victory Needs Action, Not Useless Talk

Bu Owen L. Scott.

The prospect now is improved for some decline in the volume of talk coming out of Washington and for some increase in the amount of action. There is real ground for encouragement in this trend, if only it can be maintained.

Just before Japan delivered her surprise blow at the American Navy, the output of words here had reached a new high. There were speeches telling how the Navy had become so strong that it was ready for instant action. There were other statements about how this country would produce 1,000 big bombers a month, without telling that the time for this output would be late 1943 or 1944.

High officials were going around the country making people feel secure and happy by telling them that production of this or that weapon had risen by 400 or 1,000 or some other per cent, but not telling them that this output increase came from some fantastically low base. If, for instance, four anti-aircraft guns had been produced in November and sixteen in December the increase would be 400 per cent, but still the number would be unimpressive.

It was the same story all up and down the line. In fact, the urge on the part of officials to make speeches on every subject and at the slightest provocation, became so great that it actually interfered with work. Key men in the defense program were spending days on trains riding to and from speaking engagements when they might have been trying to solve a few of the many problems that inundated their offices. The suggestion was made that if some of these men wrote their own speeches they wouldn't have time to do anything else, and if they didn't, then the thought was dropped that maybe the ghost writers could become ghost speakers as well.

This whole situation is far from unimportant. The reason why is that both in Great Britain and the United States there has been a tendency to mistake promise for performance.

People are soothed with stories of immense production of this or that weapon and of great preparation for this or that enterprise. Then the battle starts and invariably it is discovered that the enemy has the edge in weapons and preparation. There is defeat or near defeat, and the whole process starts over again.

The time for speeches and talk will come when, on some occasion, the country has a greater concentration of superior planes and guns and tanks and ships at the spot where the enemy is encountered. When that happens, and the other side is the one that is defeated, the victory probably will speak for itself. Until it happens, official energies probably best can be spent trying to make it

It is true that the United States, potentially, is the most powerful military and naval and air power on earth. But potential power is not actual power unless it is mobilized. The British and French, potentially, were far more powerful than Germany. They possessed the raw materials and the man power that could have assured superiority. Yet the British and French talked so much about their resources and did so little to mohilize those resources for war purposes that their armies were a pushover for

The danger is that the United States will develop the same sort of over-confidence. Officials talk so glibly about the battleships and aircraft and tanks and armies that they are going to have anywhere from two to five years from now, that the country readily may think that they are talking about what will be the situation tomorrow or next year. The hard fact is that the United States has made only the barest beginning in the task of organizing its industry and its man power for the difficult task of war.

Take the matter of merchant shipping. There is an immense amount of talk about a bridge of ships across the Atlantic and Pacific. Yet the real fact is that this country's shipbuilding program is only now starting to turn out a sizable volume of ships and it will be two years. according to present plans, before there will be shipping space enough to transport and supply a large army operating overseas. That is figuring without losses. If submarines and aircraft cut into the available ships the task will be delayed even further. Or take aircraft. The aviation industry in this country has performed a miracle in production. Even so, due to the head start of Germany, it is going to be many months before this country and Britain and Russia overcome this lead and start to gain a possible superiority. As a matter of fact, it has only been in the last few months that this Governmen made up its mind concerning the type of aircraft upon which to specialize. The problem isn't simply one of grinding out airplanes but of producing the exact type of aircraft that will be most useful in gaining a particular objective in a particular kind of a fight.

Then there's the Navy. It is true that the Navy is far along with its program of expansion. But it also is true that the Navy permitted Japan to get the jump on it in production of aircraft carriers which are turning out to be highly important in sea warfare. The Navy was badly hurt at Pearl Harbor and it now faces the task of development along lines that will assure it dominance in the air over the sea as well as on the surface of the sea. That end can't be achieved by talk about the power in the punch that the present fleet could deliver in an old-fashioned type of sea

Take the matter of tanks. It is true that tank production now is getting under way on a fairly large scale. But it was only after Hitler's invasion of Russia that this Government granted priority in material to permit a rush job in tank production. Germany has had a long head start and today is using not only her own factories, but those of all Europe to turn out immense numbers of tanks. Some officers now are talking about how American industry can produce tanks like it once produced buckshot. Whether or not that is true now will be determined in battle and not in conversation. And so it goes. Today, with war under way, the United States has not solved its problem of ammunition production. | least 60 per cent of the nation's effort is phase of the matter probably has people—it has gained no petroleum appear that the Hawaiian Islands in Little Canada may have to supply am- centered on war. #### CHRISTMAS, 1941, THE HOPE THAT WILL NOT DIE

By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

"The time draws near the birth of Christ: The moon is hid, the night is still; The Christmas bells from hill to hill Answer each other in the mist."

Whether men heed its deeper meaning or not, the message of heralding angels on that first Christmas morning still persists. This message, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, to men of good will," seems to find little response in a world of armed conflict. The nations once again are engaged in mortal combat, and hate and ill-will have seemed to silence the Christmas message and to make obscure the figure of Him who was proclaimed the Prince of Peace. The cynic and the pessimist see in the strife of nations little of hope or promise for a peaceful world. To such, like nature itself, man's hand is incarnadined in blood. The picture thus presented casts dark shadows across the fair scene of the Mother and Child attended by reverent shepherds, as we behold them in the quaint and homely setting of Bethlehem's stable. Despite man's failure to realize and appropriate all that Bethlehem and its lowly Mother and Child are designed to teach, the mighty message of that first Christmas morn still bears to a distracted world the promise of better days to come. All the wickedness and hate, all the conspiracies and malevolent designs of ambitious leaders cannot put out the light that was kindled in Bethlehem or take from the hearts of men the longing for the richer, fuller, more abundant life which the Saviour proclaimed. A resurgence of hope fills even the hearts of those who struggle on far-flung battle lines, as they contemplate the deep meaning of the Christmas message and recall happy days when, with loved ones now far removed, they experienced the rich joys which this holy season brought.

To attempt to reconcile the bitter passions and generated hatreds of war with the joy and peace which the advent of Christ proclaimed, is to indulge in fanciful and vain speculations. They cannot be reconciled and yet there is the persistent cry of the human heart, that will not be silenced, even while the

Organization of Japanese Army

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Should the fighting forces in Japan suffer defeat, it probably would be a greater blow to the morale of the people than if their country were taken by an enemy. This is because the army in Japan is rooted in the hearts of the people and from their faith it draws political power.

In the United States the Army is thought of as a separate fighting force from that of the Navy, and to an extent it is, as are other units of the country's defense strength. Japan has its military divisions, but when the word army is used it means all of her fighting forces.

It is the fighting services which have written Japanese history in the past 10 years. Manchukuo was the creation of the Japanese army and the navy willed the abrogation of the Washington treaty. The public encouraged by the press, acclaimed each of these actions. It is not supposed that some 65,000,000 people ware of one accord, but it is undeniable that not one of them opened his mouth in opposition.

The fighting forces in Japan are entrenched in the nation's constitution in a manner not peculiar to any other country. The legal weapons granted by the constitution enable the army and navy to terminate the existence or prevent the formation of any internal government of which they may disapprove. This power has been used on two occasions during Japan's cabinet government.

This legal authority imbedded in Japan's constitution relating to the army and navy is simple. An imperial regulation provides that only a lieutenant general or a vice admiral can serve as minister of war or marine. Thus, an administration cannot be formed without the consent of the higher naval and military authorities and can be broken up by resignation of the war and navy ministers if that consent is withdrawn. These weapons have also been used to frustrate the will of political groups.

When the policy of the government is not in accord with that of the army and navy, a compromise must be found or the cabinet will fall. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in the United States automatically relinguish office when the administration under which they are serving is voted out of office. But this is not the case in Japan, or at least not always so, for the minister of war and the minister of the navy can, and do, serve in cabinets irrespective of the politics of the administration. Thus, it can be said that Japan's fighting forces have a stranglehold on all administrations. The war minister is looked upon as the army's agent in the cabinet, and a like thought is attached to the presence there of the minister of the navy. So there is a greater control over the cabinet by Japan's fighting forces than is the control over these by the cabinet.

Japan's constitution was written by enlightened bureaucrats who purposely intended to divorce the military force from political influences. They, however, did give the elected house power to control finances and furnish it with a means of restraint on the army and navy. However, this provision has come to test on several occasions and the outcome has made the provision meaningless. About the only function the cabinet has relating to Japan's fighting forces is to decide between issuing bonds or uncreasing taxes to support the war machine Theoretically at least, the supreme command is in the hands of the emperor. Politically and constitutionally, however, the Japanese army is deeply entrenched and is in an impregnable position whenever circumstances, opportunities or waves of sentiment impel it to carry out a policy. In reality it has the power to make any government of the country

The reason for all this might be said to be twofold. In old Japan only the samurai, or hereditary warrior caste, nad the right to defend and govern. But later when conscription created a classless army, the so-called common Japanese were so fond of the opportunity of serving their country in military effort that it was like giving them a new freedom. In the meantime, the military spirit in the hereditary class did not die

The law which makes every man between 20 and 40, when physically fit, irrespective of social conditions, liable for military service, is the foundation of the army's organization. In the early days of the new army French and German military instructors were obtained, and German thoroughness left a deep impress on the new military regime. Its exalted idea of its place in the state bears a Prussian resemblance. Every Japanese officer, whether in the army, navy or air force, takes a personal interest in every man serving under nim. Discipline is not only instilled, but there is built up a confidence in the Japanese army which is carried into civilian life. If, for example, in a rural district some improvement project is needed the farmers will consult the colonel of the nearest regiment. They go to him because, having served in the army, they trust him and they do not trust local political officials. They know, too, that when the army approves a proposition it is almost assured that it will come to

Training of the soldier's morale is an important part of military education. It begins the day the conscript enters the barracks. Conscripts, relatives and friends are addressed by company commanders as a first step. Conscripts are told what an honor it is to have been selected. Forming a regiment is a colorful event, and even when the rifles are handed out, each conscript is called by name and the rifle is delivered personally to him by the captain who impresses upon the future soldier the sacred duty of keeping the weapon clean and in good

Japan's army is organized in 17 divisions, the strength of each division in peacetime being about 10,000 men. The war minister provides the army, the inspector general of education trains it, and the chief of the general staff uses it. All three have the right of direct access to the emperor, a privilege which means that the advice of each is final on matters within his sphere.

Every step in army life in Japan is considered not only a high honor, but a acred duty. It is the very embodiment for it and are willing to die for it.

Japs Wage 'Blitz' War in Far East as Axis Partners Retreat in Russia and Libya

America's Second Week of War (120th Week of World War II)

By John C. Henry.

Two historic military theories have been upheld in the 28 months which thus far have elapsed in the Second World War. In whole or in part, virtually all other arbitrary or dogmatic measurements by which the experts on war have lived have been discredited or shaken so severely that their reformation has been essential.

As of today, however, these truths have been established anew: (1) That Russia's winters are too formidable for any invader, regardless of his initial striking power, when combined with the "scorched earth" policy applied to attenuated supply lines and the human bravery of defending forces reasonably well armed, and (2) that the dead weight of China's gallant millions likewise are impossible of conquest.

Fortunately, the sustaining of these theories has been wholly to the advantage of the anti-Axis bloc, of which the United States now is a full-fledged and active member.

For, while our immediate concern is the battle of the Pacific and direct conflict with Japan, there is unanimous realization that the single fundamental requirement for victory of the anti-Axis arms rests in the defeat of Nazi Germany. When that is accomplished, an already tired Italian Fascism will subside into its last sleep and a jingoistic Japan will find itself hopelessly pinned within the encirclement of nations possessed with the essential sinews of war and the room in which to employ them. As for the remaining sycophant partners of the Axis, they will fade and vanish as political or military entities with as little impression upon the pages of history as their very birth created or their accomplishments warranted.

Perhaps, of course, before this strangest of all world-encircling conflicts is ended there will be new disillusionment for those who have sought to apply ancient formulas to the modern combination of fighting men and machines. Perhaps, in fact, this disillusion will come eventually to those who now cite Russian and Chinese resistance-and liken it closely to invincibility.

Be that as it may, Berlin scarcely can be taking satisfaction today from reports of Nazi armies hastily backtracking through the cold and inhospitable reaches of Central and Northern Russia, with revitalized Red forces slashing at their rear guards. Nor can Tokio look with equanimity upon these reverses of its Axis big brother, the harassments of Chinese units which many times have retreated, but always have returned to drag an international "incident" into more than four years of bitter war, and the heroic defenses of American-manned Pacific ships and islands.

Heartening to Americans in particular, naturally, is the manner in which this country's land, sea and air fighters have bounced back after the treacherous surprise battering launched at them by the Japs on December 7.

A recounting of this week's developments pertinent to this phase of the world's war properly begins with a "hangover" of bad

Out of this incident came other history-making developments during this

First, reflecting the determination of highest Government authorities not only to fix responsibility for this defensive laxity but also to guard against any recurrence, came appointment of a Presidential Board of Inquiry headed by Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts. Four inactive Navy and Army officers completed the tribunal.

And hardly had this group held its first meeting, preparatory to leaving for Honolulu, when three officers vested with command Command

Besieged then by land artillery, with Japanese naval units making relief or reinforcement by sea impractical, and with supply needs for the defenders and an estimated 1,500,000 civilian Chinese posing a major problem, defending troops scornfully rejected surrender demands at midweek and were actually battling Jap invasion squadrons

United States, Great Britain and Russia, Physical Difficulties Loom Large.

What form this new co-operation will take, whether an inter-Allied general staff, a supreme war council with political as well as military powers, or some combination of both, remains for the future to tell. The past will clearly show, however, that the road to unity of action can be long and rough. The problems of World War I, vast though they seemed at the time, pale in comparison with those of the present conflict. Desirable as unity of action is in the abstract, experience during the first World War and since has shown how difficult of accomplishment it may be. It may prove our most complicated

The physical difficulties facing such a unified command on battlefields encompassing the major portion of the globe are gigantic. War, Marshal Foch said, may be described as an "affair of communications," attacking the enemy's and defending your own. Taking communications in the larger sense of supply nothing like the present "affair" has ever been seen, either as to the size of the opposing forces involved or their geographic distribution. Equally great, however, is the problem of translating unity of purpose, achieved at one stroke by the unprovoked Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor two weeks ago, into unity

The Allies in 1914 had unity of purpose. Four years of bloodshed and disappointment were required to transform it into unity of action. When the vanguard of the British Expeditionary Force landed in the continent, it was thrown into the thick of the battle for Paris in the midst of the French troops, but after the battle of the Marne it gravitated toward the Channel flank and for the st part remained there throughout the And being talked authoritatively was war. mented with staff talks of military renresentatives of the signatories before the war, little in the way of central authority was developed for more than a year.

What 15 months of disappointment failed to accomplish, the immediately pressing problem of the British force in Salonika brought about. In November, 1915, the first effort at establishing an inter-Allied council was undertaken at an Anglo-French conference in Paris. It did not solve the Salonika situation. Nor did the addition of representatives of Italy, Russia, Japan, Serbia, Portugal and Belgium by March, 1916, accomplish its avowed purpose of insuring "unity of action upon unity of front," which was to include the economic front as well as the military. But there was considerable co-operation between the British and French in the west in 1916, which saw the repulse of the Germans at Verdun and victory in the battle of the Somme The high hopes held by the Allies for 1917, however, vanished in a series of reverses which not even the entry of the United States into the war could forestall. The year ended with defeat of the Italians at Caporetto and the

The battle of Caporetto brought about the conference of Allied leaders at Rapallo early in November, 1917, at which it was decided to establish a supreme war council at Versailles, with military representatives of the principal powers permanently attached. On the way home, Lloyd George at a luncheon in Paris to announce the plan made a speech which almost caused a cabinet crisis. Bluntly he said:

"We have gone on talking of the eastern front, the western front, the Italian front, the Salonika front and the Egyptian front and the Mesopotamian front, forgetting that there is just one front with many flanks, that with these colossal armies the battlefield is continental.

"There have been many attempts to achieve strategic unity. Great generals came from many lands to Paris with carefully and skillfully prepared plans for their own fronts. In the absence of a genuine inter-Allied council of men responsible as much for one part of the battlefield as another, there was a sensitiveness, a delicacy about even tendering advice, letting alone support for any sector other than that for which the generals were themselves directly respon-

Powers Made Only Advisory.

So great was the opposition in England at that time to relinquishing control of British armies to a higher authority that the Prime Minister was able to avoid a cabinet crisis only by promising that the supreme war council should have only advisory, not executive, powers. But as Germany began to withdraw troops from the eastern front in preparation for a spring offensive in 1918, for which she would have numerical superiority for the first time, it was obvious something would have to be done. No one could say against which army the main blow would be directed. When the supreme war council met at the end of January, 1918, it was decided to abolish the policy of having the British and French each maintain their own reserves, and to pool them and include the newly arrived American troops. A committee of the council's military representatives, headed by Marshal Foch, was set up for the distribution of Allied reserves and it was announced that the advisory powers of the council had been enlarged to include executive powers as well.

This action threatened to provoke another crisis, which this time the Prime Minister determined to face. If the opposition wanted to know whether this action of the council meant that control of British troops, if only reserves, would be removed from the imperial general staff, the answer was yes, he told the House. The military situation demanded it. If the Commons could not trust the council to manage affairs to the best interests of all, defeat this proposal, but accept the responsibility in case of #### further defeat. The German Push Is Halted.

Opposition wilted and the proposal was approved. A month later, the Germans launched the offensive which carried them to the Marne a second time before they were thrown back, and Marshal Foch was placed in supreme command of the Allied armies in France.

While obviously we cannot take up where we left off 23 years ago, in many respects we are better prepared for the huge task ahead than we were then. In the economic field, which never received adequate attention during the first World War, co-operation already is many months old. Our armed forces are far in advance of their condition at the time of our entry into the conflict in 1917. Most important of all, our aware-

GOOD-NEIGHBOR POLICY PAYS DIVIDENDS

Nine-Year Effort Bears Fruit in Hemisphere Solidarity Against Axis

By Felix Morley.

Whatever its deficiences elsewhere, the diplomatic success of the Roosevelt administration in the field of Latin American relations has been outstanding. Nearly nine years of patient, intelligent and continuous planning is now bearing fruit in the solidarity with which the American nations are backing the course of the United States as a belligerent. All of the six Central American republics, in addition to Cuba and Haiti, declared war on Japan within a week of the attack on Pearl Harbor. It is true that eight Latin American states, including Brazil, similarly followed the lead of President Wilson when war was declared against Germany in 1917. But this time there are vital differences, symbolized by the fact that El Salvador, the important little country with a Pacific shore line close to the Panama Canal, remained ostensibly neutral throughout the last war. By unanimous vote of its Congress, El Salvador is now lined up with the

There is nothing accidental in the change of attitude on the part of El Salvador. Ten years ago Gen. Martinez, now president of that country, assumed office after a coup d'etat. From December, 1931, until January 26, 1934, the United States refused him recognition. On the latter date diplomatic relations were resumed, under the Roosevelt policy of avoiding any semblance of dictation in the internal affairs of our Latin neighbors. The net result is that El Salvador is no longer a potential enemy, but an important ally of the United States.

A Co-Operative Partnership. There have been unfortunate exceptions to this insistence on non-interference in the domestic affairs of the Latin American republics. But with increasing emphasis it has become an integral part of President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy. In addition to Insistence of non-intervention another attitude has been instrumental in replacing suspicion with friendship among the nations to the south of us. This is interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine as a co-operative partnership, not as a bor policy, conscientiously followed by President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hull. Undersecretary Welles and their subordinates, go far to account for the striking and encouraging solidarity with which the Western Hemisphere faces

In respect to two very important Latin American nations, Argentina and Mexico, the policy of the Roosevelt administration is now seen as particularly discerning. Both of these countries are strategically located and rapidly gaining in physical power. Both maintained strict neutranty, if they did not actually lean toward the German side, during the last war. Either of them could be a source of grave anxiety, or even actual danger, to the United States in the much more desperate struggle in which this country is now engaged.

Mexico and Argentina.

It is therefore of great significance that within the last few weeks, on October 14 in the case of Argentina and on November 19 in the case of Mexico. agreements of far-reaching character have been reached. Without those two accords Pan-American solidarity would be far more vulnerable to enemy efforts than is now the case.

In the words of Secretary Hull, some of the problems settled by the agreement with Mexico "have defied solution for generations." Moreover, in the claims with regard to expropriated petroleum properties, there has been powerful resistance by American interests to the settlement now reached. Yet on the whole, and considering the many factors involved, the arrangements arrived at seem reasonable and fair to all.

If so, it was a diplomatic triumph of the first magnitude to achieve this accord with Mexico less than three weeks before Japan attacked Hawaii. One immediate result is the move of President Avila Camacho to give the American Navy the use of Mexican harbors and to permit the passage of American troops through Mexican territory.

A volume would be necessary to summarize the whole story. But even within the compass of a brief article emphasis must be placed on two broad policies of the State Department which underlied all the separate achievements.

Cultural Interchange Stimulated.

In the first place, the network of confacts and agreements now operating among the nations of the New World has not been planned wholly, or even primarily, from the commercial and military viewpoints. Every one has had occasion to notice the wide range of Pan-American cultural co-operation, from well-organized orchestral tours to exchange visits by newspapermen, which has been developed under the guidance and with the good will of the various

A second vital aspect of Pan-Americanism as developed by the Roosevelt administration is the evident desire to have the process forwarded mutually by all American countries, rather than pushed by the United States alone.

Canada, for Instance, has recently concluded important trade agreements with Argentina. Chile and other Latin-American nations. These undertakings have been accomplished not in rivalry to, but in co-operation with, similar moves by the United States, which is simultaneously improving its relations with Canada in a hundred different

The mutuality apparent in the recent strengthening of Pan-Americanism is one of the chief reasons for regarding it as an enduring force, destined to be of the greatest political importance both during and after the war. By John Clagett Proctor.

Throughout our lives there are many interesting things worth recalling, and which frequently come to our minds, but nothing appeals to us more than the scenes of our childhood days, and the people who once resided in our vicinity, many of whom we still remember with increasing pleasure the older we grow.

In 1871, when the writer was quite young, his father sold his home not far from Logan Circle and purchased a roomy cottage, with ample grounds, at the southwest corner of Florida avenue and W street, which avenue here lies between Ninth and Tenth streets and, as is the case with so many corners in the city, is now occupied by a gasoline

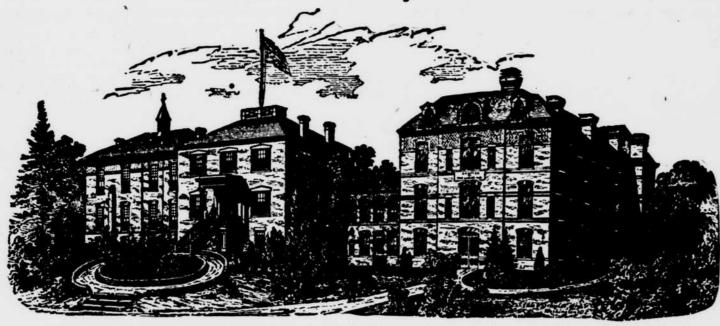

Like practically all suburban localities, we had a pump in the yard, and there was a public pump a block away. But no Potomac water or sanitary improvements for some time, for then Washington was just digging out of the mud, and Alexander R. Shepherd, later governor of the District of Columbia, was then just becoming conspicuous in his capacity as vice president of the Board of Public Works, and one of his earliest improvements was the macadamizing of Florida avenue, then known as Boundary street, so-called because it encircled the northern part of the city, as designed by Mai. L'Enfant.

The macadamizing of this roadway was an excellent job, so good, indeed, that it invited sportsmen with good horses to test their speed, and many an unscheduled race took place on Florida avenue from Fourteenth street around to U street, and many a driver was caught in the act and taken to the old second police precinct, then about where is now Georgia avenue and W street.

Part of House Destroyed

This neighborhood was then certainly in the outskirts of the city, and there were still quite a number of squares entirely vacant. In the square in which we lived, on the Tenth street side, there was but one house, which is still standing, which was built, and for years octhen conducting a grocery store at 2100 Eleventh street, but who had a confectionery store in the 60's at Tenth street and Massachusetts avenue. The former kept a private school at her father's residence, which the writer and his sister attended for awhile. She finally gave up teaching when she married Joseph E. Johnson. Next to the Lynch home once lived Louis Mundheim and his sons Reuben, Samuel and Simon and his daughter Cecelia. Samuel died recently and was buried here. He was the father of the wife of Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld of this city. Cecelia married William Elkin of Philadelphia. She is now a widow and resides in Norfolk, Va. Louis Mundheim was a member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

For some years after 1871, the square between Florida and Vermont avenues, U and V street was vacant ground, and on it the boys in the neighborhood played ball, and called their team the Cincinnatis. When the square became built up, here lived on the Florida avenue side, Bob Odlum, who was killed in jumping off of the Brooklyn Bridge.

Received Honorable Mention

In the block between Vermont avenue and Tenth street, U and V streets, where is now a large school building for colored children, was, in the early days, where the Douglass baseball team played ball. It was composed of the best colored men of this section, and as no rowdies were permitted on the nine. the games were always conducted in an orderly and interesting way. Washington, Braxton, Alexander Smoot, Sam and Clinton Lincoln were among the players. Sam Lincoln died some years ago, when he was probably the oldest route carrier for The Star and received honorable mention in its columns at the time of his death. Though his family name was always known as "Lincoln," yet this pronunciation was only similar in form to his real name, which the writer does not recall. All this section was early known as Goose Level, and even Cowtown was not all built up for some years subsequent to 1871, and it was not necessary for one to confine himself to the sidewalk-if there happened to be one. In most cases, the paths were just as good and in many cases better ,and decidedly more direct. Indeed, when the writer attended school for awhile at Fourteenth and Q streets, he went by the way of paths the entire distance, crossing one common after another. But about Cowtown. This was not a large place at all, being of rather limited area, only extending from Seventh street road, now dignified with the name of Georgia avenue, westward to Sherman avenue, and from Grant avenue-now Barry place-northward for several blocks. Here, everybody had one or more cows and as many pigs and geese as they could afford to keep, and as for dogs and goats, it would have taken some one with a tabulating machine to have arrived at the correct number. There were many horses, too, in this community, for where a few peddled their milk by hand, the majority, with very large routes, were compelled to rely upon teams.

People who lived in Cowtown were as law-abiding as citizens of any other section. They knew how physically to protect their own interests, and never hesitated to do so. In this connection, it was always an interesting day-and that day was a frequent one-when Poundmaster Sam Einstein swooped down on the animals running at large here. They then forgot their loyalty to Government and just blew the lid right off.

One of the sights one will never forget were the great droves of hogs, sheep and cattle which were driven through the streets of Washington to these slaughterhouses, sometimes even spreading out beyond the curb line onto the sidewalks. Legislation finally cured this evil and everybody was better off and happier thereby. One of the sights, however, which many will recall while these slaughterhouses were in operation, was the large number of ox tails commonly seen thrown over the shoulders of the colored men who helped to do the killing. No doubt they were given them as part of their pay; but now they are sold for making ox-tail soup, considered by many as a delicacy.

Another sight we used to see around Cowtown, in the early days was the cutting of ice by the butchers for their icehouses. Henry Ruppert, who had two meat stands, one in the Center Market and another in the Northern Liberty Market, was one of those who provided his ice in this way. Sometime after securing the L. H. Schneider holdings the hospital directors saw that more ground was needed, and so the property to the west-extending to Eleventh street-owned by the Christian Schneider heirs, was purchased.

It's Oriental Chess

In the classical openings of the game of Oriental chess there is no conflict between the opposing pieces.

The first three moves are made, as it were, in silence, the aggressor feeling out the defender, in the dark.

Suddenly a "flying chariot," the most powerful of the pieces, strikes across more than half the width of the board and threatens to paralyze the defense of the opposing king.

This is the pattern the Japanese followed in their opening attack on United States territory. The long, surprise thrust at Hawaii was a "flying chariot" move, coming on the heels of a "feelingout" maneuver by the two Nipponese envoys in Washington.

The defender in the Oriental chess game always answers the long-range attack with a shorter counter thrust which the aggressor cannot face without risking almost certain loss of material. And then the aggressor flees to a

That is what happened when the United States Navy met the Japanese Navy after the first shock of the war was past.

No one but the Japanese general staff knows, of course, whether the Japanese are in this war following the tactics of their famous old game. But there is no peacetime pursuit more comparable to war than chess. Chess is taught as military instruction in many schools. The same factors are involved in it as in war -time, space and material. The battle of Waterloo has been fought out, move by move, on the chessboard.

So it is something more than a mere play on words to observe that if Japan continues to play the game she has begun in this war, it is doubtful that she can win. Because chess players at West Point play by different rules.

In Occidental chess a captured piece is dead. It no longer plays any part same way for hundreds of years before the turn of this century. Feudal war lords sparred with each other in what often was a game of bluff, and then fell in with the one who seemed certain to win. It was not a question of individual treachery, it was a custom. And the fighting men went wherever the warlords In other words, onetime enemy pieces from Japanese newspaper friends during the first years of Japan's invasion of China. The game baffled me for months because I could not get accustomed to thinking out a defense against pieces which were not at the moment on the board but might be at any time. After I got fairly proficient at the simpler openings, I challenged the Japanese to switch and play the Occidental game, They did and they were even more helpless than I had been with them in their game.

I asked them whether, in playing western chess, they were not perhaps up against an unaccustomed directness and finality. They agreed.

I suggested, then, that the Japanese in invading China may have found themselves up against the same thing; after being accustomed to take enemy armies and put them into battle for their own cause, they were confronted with a China which did not ak into such parts and which did not yield.

To my surprise, my Japanese friends, extremely well informed on events in the Far East, conceded it was so.

In the present war with the United States, the Oriental game may succeed insofar as position is concerned. Islands and other strategic points of land may be seized by the Japanese and used against the country which once held them.

But that will be accepted by the United

United States Navy. Retired. Does the Japanese soldier or sailor scorn death, even desire it in battle? Does he refuse to be taken prisoner, perishing in preference?

Often there have been claims to all these alleged virtues, but the record does not bear them out entirely, although the fanatical bravery of the Nipponese is well established.

The Japanese soldier's contempt of death is illustrated by one who held a stick of dynamite against an iron gate that barred the progress of his battalion. He then smashed a hammer against the explosive. He was blown to bits, but the gate was open, and his battalion marched on.

This actually happened in the forced march of allied American, British and Japanese troops in the Chinese Boxer Rebellion 41 years ago.

There are other such instances cited in Japan's modern military history. You hear also that no Japanese prisoner of war ever are taken. But the records contradict this, as we shall see. Japanese tradition does seem to have a horror of seeing subjects of the Mikado taken prisoner. It has been the custom in past wars to list such soldiers as "Disappeared."

Japanese troops have been credited with a sort of suicidal complex in combat-a readiness to go through hari-kiri. the ceremonial suicide of their country, if it will advance their cause in any way.

The Japs, however, have no monopoly on "bravery to the point of desperation" in the face of overwhelming enemy numbers, despite the stories told of the code of the warrior Samurai and the Bushida. In comparison with American and British instances of meeting certain death to achieve a definite war purpose, some of the Japanese examples of self-sacrifice without sufficient military excuse take on the aspect of death sought in atonement for something or other. There is, for example, the exploit of 3 American naval lieutenants and 12 seamen during the trouble with the Corsair pirates in Tripoli. These men volunteered to blow up enemy men-of-war and forts. They turned their craft into a floating magazine of explosives, knowwith their guns and blew up the floating arsenal, the Intrepid. No trace of the ship or the men ever was found. The the bravest deed in naval history.

thing Nippon history can offer. The difference is that there always was a purpose in the extreme courage of Americans, not the mere disregard of life as an end in itself.

During the Civil War, Lt. William Cushing, U. S. N., in 1864 towed a torpedo against the anchored hull of the Confederate ironclad Albermarle in North Carolina waters. Fifteen volunteer seamen went with him. None expected to survive. Confederate lookouts sighted Cushing's men towing their spar torpedo close to the stern of the ironclad and opened fire. Cushing ordered full speed. Smashing over a protecting log raft, he exploded the torpedo against the Confederate hull. He and his men jumped into the water. As luck would have it, all but two swam to safety.

The two were drowned. The Japanese suicide complex is a dramatic gesture rooted in an ambition to be revered after death by their children and their children's children for eternity. This seems to have been in the mind of the Japanese naval commander Hirose, a torpedo boat officer in a group that made a surprise attack on anchored Russian warships at Port Arthur, touching off the Russo-Japanese War early in the century. Hirose took his life. While he lay dying, he wrote in blood: "I shall come back to earth through nine cycles of existence until I can see that my work has been accomplished by those I leave behind." The Japanese conception of suicide is entirely different from that of the Western world. Japanese fighting men for countless generations have killed themselves on the battlefield for the glory of their Emperor and to do honor to their forefathers. According to the code of the warrior Samurai, death by one's own hand is the path to eternal divinity, provided, of course, it is done for a good cause. In such cases, says the god Buddha, the spirit lives on. It is near, can see, knows all that goes on, especially evil things. It is that spirit which is worshipped ever afterward by the family of the dead man and their descendants. Gen. Nogi was one of Japan's heroes in the war with Russia in 1904-05. But ing they had no chance to return alive. Nogi and his wife committed hari-kiri Before their powder ship could reach its when told of the death of their beloved destination, the Corsairs found the range Emperor. The Japs obviated the necessity of hurling their planes and bombs directly on the decks of our ships by the surprise factor, which they employed expertly in their devastating attack. Similarly, the Japanese planes that sank the two British capital ships last week did not have to fly into certain death. Since there were no British planes to fight back, the Japs had only to take chances with anti-aircraft guns on the ships, and no pilot had to immolate himself in sinking the Prince of Wales and the Repulse. Whatever attitude it may take in the present war, there has been in the past a tendency for Japan to deny that prisoners of war were taken. The only Japanese war records in existence, those of the Russo-Japanese war—issued in Japan and reprinted in United States War Department reports-do not list a single man as taken prisoner. The word "prisoner" seems not then to have been in the Japanese vocabulary. The official Japanese account of the war, admitted killed and wounded, lists no prisoners. The nearest thing is an entry listing 5.081 as "disappeared" from the army. When or how is not revealed. As a matter of fact, prisoners were taken in the Russo-Japanese war. Russia's official records of the war disclose their capture in a number of battles. An unknown number of Japanese soldiers chose to go down in a transport which the Russians sank-but not until they had allowed the Japs an hour in which to surrender and be taken off. Some of their buddies, however, did surrender and were taken on board the Russian man of war. The Russian record which mentions no figures, reads: "Those Japanese troops on board the transport who had not taken advantage of the one hour granted them to leave their ship were drowned." (If that is what is meant by fanatical bravery, then soldiers of all nations are fanatical). Japanese prisoners released by Russia after the war are said to have been sullenly received on their return to Japan. Some, it is claimed, were shunned by members of their own families; they were refused jobs and pensions, if one can believe unofficial records. Some Japanese prisoners, on the contrary, were royally feted after they had been turned loose by Russia when peace came. These "heroes" made a triumphant roundabout trip out of Russia to Japan by way of Berlin. They numbered in excess of 2,000 of whom 58 were Japanese officers.

In honor of these ex-prisoners (who forgot to be fanatics), Berlin was en fete, the Kaiser leading the royal proclamation of "hoch" and welcome, mixed with banzais. Pretty German fraus passed chocolate and cigarettes to the sons of Nippon who had been marked as having "disappeared" during the war. Japanese diplomats in Berlin smiled all over the palace and sucked through their

The Kaiser, seeing no disgrace in soldiers who surrender, gave personal orders that his royal grooms should be at the command of the Japanese officers.

The only white men who have ever made war prisoners of Japanese soldiers and sailors were Russians. One Russian officer has made a report on his observations of Japanese troops in combat; their behavior when taken prisoner and other pertinent characteristics.

Capt. L. Z. Soloviev, East Siberian Rifles, states (See War Department archives in Washington); "Japanese soldiers when taken prisoner have been seen to bite their captors. . . . The Japanese differs from the Russian soldier in his fanaticism, which is his hatred of the enemy. This has been instilled into him from childhood. Some Japanese soldiers fight with rage and will fire a bullet into the back of an enemy who has shown him mercy. "This is why our Russian soldier does not show mercy when attacking. Our Russians have no hatred, no fanaticism. They are kind to prisoners, give them tea and cigarettes. But the Japanese they display a cruelty never seen among Russian soldiers. Eyewitnesses have said they have seen Japanese officers shoot down our wounded; Japanese deem all means good if they attain their ends; they show no mercy to their own men or to ours. They have even fired into their own soldiers.

"Japanese officers do everything in their power to excite their troops. The officers walk up and down in rear of the soldiers, driving them on with revolvers and swords."

Capt. Soloviev also asserts that the Japanese depend heavily on ruse to help gain their objectives. Without ruses, he says, they hesitate and are not sure of themselves

"Strong drink as an incentive to Jap soldiers at the beginning of a battle nue, or perhaps paralleling it in places, is a common thing," wrote Capt. Solo-"Hanshin, a stupifying, strong drink of long duration, is frequently located. This stream had its source somefound in the canteens of their soldiers when taken prisoner. Some of these east side of Sherman avenue in a prisoners were drunk."

aviation's foremost artist, contrasts by story and pictures his own experience of being shot down behind the German lines in an airplane in 1918. with the experience of a Canadian flyer in the present war.

By Clayton Knight,

Wide World News. How does it feel to be shot down? I've heard that question a thousand times since that day in 1918 when I got mine. I know how it felt in the first World War but I was curious to compare notes with somebody who had been shot down in this war.

I asked a young Canadian ace who got his over England and was recuperating on leave in this country:

"How does it feel to be shot down?" "You tell me and I'll tell you," he countered.

So I told him about how we were flying behind the German lines at a height of 15.000 feet. He had to smile at that because most of their fights today are twice that high and their planes go about four times as fast.

My crash? I was piloting a two-seater D. H. 9 and our squadron was on its way to bomb an ammunition dump in occupied Belgium. We did bombing only occasionally. Our real work was for the Intelligence Corps.

We should have kept our eyes open everywhere, I suppose, but we were so busy watching the ground for the target that we forgot to look up and around. Forgetting to look above and behind you was as fatal then as it is today. A fellow with a stiff neck had better stay on the ground.

All of a sudden, hell broke loose, A flight of German single-seater fighters had been hiding in the sun above us, and before anybody spotted them they were on our tails and the machine gun bullets were buzzing around our ears like

I could see the tracers going into the wing alongside of my head and I instinctively ducked my head to keep from getting that one in the back of the neck. For some reason or other that's where you always expected it.

Cockpit on Fire

I felt the motor lose power. It had probably been hit at the first burst. When my observer's guns stopped I thought he had been hit too. I didn't have much time to worry about him because just below me, in the cockpit which was usually dark I noticed a strange glow.

The floor of the cockpit was on fire! And one thing we fellows feared most was getting "cooked." A tracer, I realized, must have ignited the fabric, and although I knew I was falling in a spin and that three or four of the Boche were following me down, to get in a finishing shot, I went to work on that fire and stamped and slapped it with my gloved hand for all I was worth.

The other fellows told me after the war that when they saw the smoke trailing me down they thought it was curtains for us both. They even reported that we were shot down in flames.

We must have fallen 5,000 feet, getting peppered all the time, when somenow or other I got the fire out. Then, I knew I didn't have much chance to get but of the thing with a whole skin, but at least I wasn't going to cook. So I at up and looked the situation over. I felt pretty cool and detached now, as though I were sitting apart watching an exciting show.

Just then, I saw a fokker on my tail and another diving head on, at me. My observer's guns had jammed and there was nothing I could do about the fellow on my tail, so I got the nose of the ship up and watched the fellow in front through my sights.

I'll never forget how he looked-getting bigger and bigger until his plane filled my sights. We were both shooting. His bullets were hitting all around me. I felt one rip my leg, but I could see my tracers going into him, too. Still he desperate attempt to finish him off I decided to crash into him. He was right on top of me now. I closed my eyes and waited that split second for the end.

But it wasn't the end. When I opened my eyes he was gone. Maybe I got him. I never did learn. The next thing I knew, the ground was coming up at me awful fast. I remember thinking that I had missed the bullet in the back of the neck, missed the cooking and now was going to get in the third way-in a

But I guess my number wasn't up. I crashed all right, but instead of "going west," I went east to a few German hospitals for the rest of the war. My observer got out with a few scratches.

"That's all there is, brother." I told the Canadian, "except I was scared

"I don't blame you," he said sympathetically.

Then he told me his story: "We were in a dog-fight about 30 feet

"A Mae West is a rubber vest life preserver. If you fall in the water you just pull a key and it fills up with gas and keeps you affoat. We call them Mae Wests because they give you a gay second and I was lucky enough to get him. Then another loomed up and 1 was just going to give him a burst when it happened.

Able to Slide Cover

"The whole front end of my ship suddenly blew right up in my face! It was the most uncanny feeling. My motor and entire front part of the fuselage had disappeared into thin air. I thought for a moment that I was dead and didn't know it. I had been hit by one of those 23-millimeter high-explosive shells, I learned afterward. Like you, I hadn't looked over my shoulder and one of the jerries had scored a perfect hit. "The next thing I knew I was falling upside down and what was left of my plane was on fire. Unless I got out of my green house fast I would be roasted like a chicken in an oven. I gingerly reached up an arm and to my great joy was able to slide back the cover.

"If it had jammed I wouldn't be here telling you this. But it worked and I fell—or rather drifted—out because I was falling at about the same speed as the plane. I had to push the plane away with my feet and gave myself a hot foot doing it.

"But I got clear and started on my long trip down. I didn't open my chute right away for two reasons-some ambitious Nazi might give me a burst for luck or my own plane might fall on me.

"And then began the strangest sensation of my life . Falling wasn't unpleasant at all. It was more like floating in water. Breathing was slightly more difficult than it is on the ground, but not very much. I found myself breathing like a swimmer does-by turning my head to one side and gulping the air.

"Falling is a lot like swimming. You can change your position, as you can in water, by twisting around. When I started to get my bearings I swung my body around and watched the fight still going on above me. To one side and a little above I could see my plane zigzagging crazily down in a trailer of smoke. Nobody was following it down. They must have thought I had been killed in the explosion. Guess I should

"Then I swung around again and saw that I was falling into a heavy cloud bank. So I decided to wait until I had reached it before pulling my chute cord. They wouldn't be able to see my chute in the mist. But when I had reached

Extension of the battlefront to the farthest corner of the globe has thrown new stress on air navigation. Where sofa pillow or two, and enough chicken hundreds of miles were involved heretofore, thousands are commonplace since the outbreak of war in the Pacific two weeks ago. Finding a ship, or one of the countless small islands in the newest war theater, often a difficult enough feat on a slow-moving surface vessel, is somewhat akin to looking for a needle in a haystack from a 300-milean-hour airplane.

He not only acts as pilot, manipulating the trainer by artificial means in the same way he would if he were piloting a student in the air, but he also controls the conditions under which the "flight" is made. Lack of a cross wind never bothers him. He can create a cross wind on the Navitrainer by pressing a

This machine consists of a wooden frame about 7 feet square, mounted on wheels two feet off the ground and supporting a navigator's "cockpit" so constructed that it revolves through 360 degrees around a metal drift meter tube extending up through the center.

The wheels supporting the wooden frame are operated by an electric motor which can be speeded or slowed to simulate speeds of from 150 to 400 miles map laid out beneath the frame. If you now and why?"

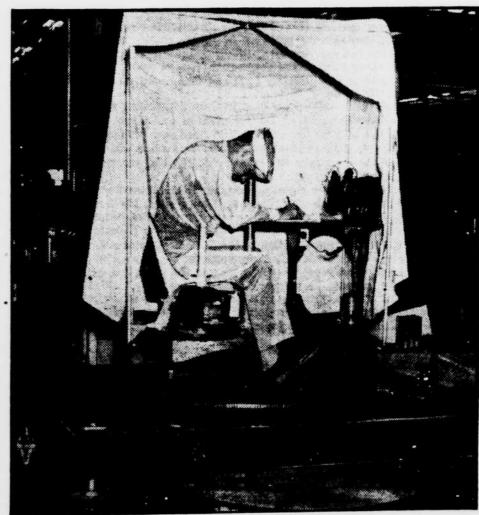

the scale is 10 miles to the inch, and the problem calls for a speed of 300 miles an hour, the Navitrainer will move 30 inches in an hour. With a little patience, a sandwiches, the student could cross the Pacific, bomb Tokio and return the same afternoon, all without running off the hangar floor.

In front of the student navigator are the radio, a direction finder, a plotting table and an instrument panel with an air speed indicator, chronometer, drift meter, compass and thermometer, the essential navigating instruments. A navigator compass is mounted near his seat. Below the wooden frame is suspended a "windtroducer." which at the whim of the instructor produces all the rections from the instructor, and a transmitter to give orders for changing course,

During the class period, the instructor, or an assistant if the instructor is supervising several students at once, manipulates the radio compass signals, the windtroducer and other instruments to illustrate conditions facing the student on an actual flight. The student navigator takes his drift measurements from a high or low altitude, compares it with instrument readings on his panel and computes his position. If he is off his course, he communicates the necessary compass bearings to get back on. Exchanging his role of professor of winds and weather for that of pilot, the instructor corrects the "heading" of the "plane" by turning the round platform on which the student is seated in his "cockpit." and makes whatever other changes in the instrument readings that naturally would

Thus the instructor can "track" his student and watch how he employs all the little tricks of the trade to answer the all-important question, "Where am I?" Night and instrument flying with their special problems in celestial navigation and dead reckoning can be simulated by covering the student with a canvas tent. Precomputed data is given the student from which to solve his problems. He performs all other operations except actual taking of a sextant sight, one part of the training which is better practiced in the air, where he will experience rough air, minor turns and such hard realities not easily simulated.

Aside from teaching air navigation, the Navitrainer also can be used to show how to install and test instruments. It operates in any kind of weather and costs less in time and money than instruction in a plane. Those who have tried it claim it is realistic enough to an hour in any directon of the com- cause beads of perspiration to dampen pass. # The New Watchdogs of the Fleet

The United States' new destroyers, the watchdogs of the fleet, are swifter, harder-hitting and farther ranging weapons of war than their predecessors in the first World War.

They're still the slender, agile speed-

Naval officials were critical of the ship's "tactical diameter," the 180-degree swing off course, and demanded changes. #### Civic Problems, Civic Bodies Community Chest Still Short of Goal;

Bills Pending Before Senate Group By JESSE C. SUTER.

Last week while District civic organizations of all kinds concentrated on the big civilian defense job, to which they have been assigned, a number of important civic events were happening.

On Thursday the President sent to the Senate the nomination of James H. Flanagan to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission. He will fill the vacancy caused by the death, last February, of Riley E. Elgen. The nominee, supervising analyst with the Securities and Exchange Commission, appears to have a technical background which may make him a valuable member of the

Another notable event of the past week was the announcement by the Public Utilities Commission that a crosstown bus line will begin to operate January 25 next, through Michigan avenue, Porter street and intermediate streets to Westmoreland Circle. Rock Creek crossing will be over the Klingle road bridge.

The indications are that another crosstown line, within a reasonable time, will be established over the northern route through

The District Commissioners have announced the appointment of Robert F. Cogswell to be rent administrator and Louis Laudick to be deputy rent administrator. Mr. Cogswell is a native of the District of Columbia.

The Senate on Wednesday passed the bill for an increase of the gasoline tax to 3 cents while the House, two months ago, passed its bill for a 4-cent tax per gallon.

The conferees on Friday agreed to the Senate proposal for an increase of 1 cent. The increase becomes effective January 1. The 3-cent rate, it is estimated, would yield $1,500,000 additional revenue which is all the Highway Department can use in the next year. The new rate, as proposed by the Senate, would continue until June

Awaiting the President's signature are the amendments to the child labor law to permit minors over 14 years of age to take part in professional concerts and theatrical productions and one authorizing the District Commissioners to receive an advance from the Federal Works Agency of $2,500,000 for emergency construction work. In addition there is the bill authorizing the Commissioners to require a blackout and exercise broad emergency powers. This bill, which has been recalled for correction, authorizes the borrowing of $1,000,-000 for such emergency use.

High Court Decision Solves Problem in Part Only

The Supreme Court of the United States on Monday sustained the appeal of the District government from the decision of the Court of Appeals, which would relieve two Federal employes in particular and thousands of others, from the payment of the District income tax. The litigants had both paid the tax, under protest and chal-

It is estimated that about 20,000 District residents heretofore exempt from the payment of the local income tax will be brought under the law by the action of the court.

The much discussed and confused question of domicile is somewhat clarified by the reasoning of the court. "The place where a man lives is properly taken to be his domicile until facts adduced establish to the contrary," says the court and continuing, "The taxing authority is warranted in treating as prima facie taxable any person quartered in the District whose status it deems doubtful. It is not an unreasonable burden upon the individual, who knows best whence he came, what he left behind and his own aptitudes to require him to establish domicile elsewhere if he is to escape the tax."

The burden to make such a showing, to the satisfaction of the tax authorities, is thus placed squarely on the person who would evade paying the District income tax. Arguments by the counsel for the litigants contended as their clients were voters in Michigan and Pennsylvania, respectively, "that of all criteria as to domicile, the exercise of the right of voting is most important." This argument was brushed aside by the court.

While the decision is very helpful and will add materially to the District revenues there is considered to be a need for Congress takmore realistic view of the situation and through appropriate legislation bringing under the taxing authority vast numbers of others who are privileged to enjoy all of the municipal services without contributing their share, according to the rule of ability to pay. This is one of the forms of fiscal inequity under which the District suffers because of its political inequity.

District residents, who can claim domicile nowhere else, are voteless and unrepresented in the Government which taxes them and imposes upon them all of the burdens and obligations which are borne by all other Americans who possess the ballot and have full representation in the councils of the Nation. The Supreme Court of the United States has partly solved the problem of the tax-free segment of the District population, but the fear exists that a complete solution is possible only through fiscal equity established by a Congress in which the District citizens have voting representation.

Community Chest Still Short of 1942 Goal

At last report the Washington Community Chest was still some $20,000 short of the $2,000,000 needed to meet the 1942 budget. Really more money than that is actually needed because of the

The burdens on the Chest agencies are sure to be increased through the existence of extraordinary conditions. The Red Cross and Federal funds may, as last resort, be called upon in an emergency, but the Chest should by all means reach the amount set for

It is believed that surely there are many who overlooked doing their bit for the Community Chest and others who either underestimated their ability to give or overestimated the purchasing power of the dollar for a Chest agency. Civic leaders are needed to discover such persons and induce them to contribute and thereby reduce the shortage. As a matter of fact, self-examination might even convince some civic workers that they can make additional contri-

Important Bills Pending in Senate D. C. Committee

The Senate District Committee has before it three bills of special importance which are generally approved by the citizens of the District. They are the court merger bill, the so-called "charity racket" bill and the bill to create a board of recreation for the

The court merger bill, which would merge the Municipal and Police Courts, provide a supervising chief judge, enlarge the jurisdiction of the court and provide an intermediate appellate court, has had thorough study by the Department of Justice, the District Bar Association and the judges of all of the local courts. It is generally indorsed and will afford the United States District Court much needed relief.

It will also contribute largely to the administration of criminal justice and speed up the work of the courts through increase of their efficiency. There are no known opponents of this legislation and its enactment into law is regarded as an immediate need.

The bill to eliminate the operation of certain charity rackets in the District has had long and careful study by the welfare groups, the Better Business Bureau, the corporation counsel and others, It is believed to be in a satisfactory form and that it will cure the ills at which it is aimed.

The operation of similar laws in other jurisdictions has made the District a lucrative field for the operation of individuals and organizations who prey on the charitably inclined and get money which is largely for the individual use of those who solicit. At the same time legitimate agencies are probably deprived of contributions they would otherwise get.

The third bill, in which the civic groups are much interested is the board of recreation bill. It is generally acceptable in the form passed by the House but not so popular with the proposed Senate Committee amendments. These amendments undertake a beginning to bring about a reorganization of the District government so far as the powers of the District Commissioners are concerned. But, as some one has recently put it: "Why pick on the recreation bill as a starter for so general a reform?" And another "why," which has been heard is "why wish any additional burden on the District Commissioners when they are now loaded to the hilt with a multitude of additional duties by reason of the national emergency and the civilian defense?"

Civilian Defense Organization Goes On

As all organizations which concern themselves over District civic affairs hold their meetings the local defense plans and organization setup are considered to the exclusion of all else. It is a gigantic task to get all units set up and properly instructed. Volunteers are enrolling in great numbers in the air-raid service, fire-fighting and additional police. More workers are required in all of these and

Some citizens are encountered daily who appear to know little or nothing of what is required of them in this community service or for the protection of their own homes and families. They seem any knowledge of the information which has been daily published in all local papers. One of the first duties of every citizen is to acquaint himself with the details of the civilian defense program, particularly as to what he, the individual citizen, Traffic arrests during November dropped more than 15 per cent below the October total, indicating that motorists have taken cognizance of the Commissioners' order drastically increasing the collateral requires for many traffic violations. The order went into effect November 5.

The figure for November, while under the previous month's total still was one of the highest on record. A total of 12,473 arrests-2,256 less than October's total-were made by the officers of the traffic division and the 13 police precincts last month. records for October, every precinct except the first and twelfth showed fewer arrests in November. The traffic division alone dropped more than 1,000 below its October total.

Inspector Arthur E. Miller, head of the traffic division and the accident prevention unit, commented that the higher collateral requirements probably accounted for part of the decrease. Many motorists probably didn't take any chances when they discovered they would have to geposit, perhaps, $20 instead of $3 or $5 collateral, he said. The inspector said he was far from satisfied with the record of arrests for moving violations which cause accidents. There were nearly 700 less arrests for this type of vio-

The officers of the traffic division will be urged to concentrate their efforts on moving violations, rather than on minor violations which de not contribute to accidents, Inspector Miller said. He pointed out that five persons were killed and 435 injured in accidents last month. while the number of arrests for moving violations which cause traffic mishaps totaled only 3,452. There should be at least 10 arrests for moving violations for every single injury case, he declared. Violations for disobeying official signs, which led the field in October, dropped to sixth place last month with 675 arrests. In the top spot this time were the 990 arrests for violations of "no parking at any time" regulations. Speeding came second with 943 arrests, and overtime parking violations were third with 733 arrests. For parking less than 50 feet from an intersection and less than 20 feet from building line, 707 drivers were given tickets.

materially in speeding up the process by bringing with them their birth certificates or some other evidence of their United States citizenship, as only citizens of the United States can be taken into the service. There will be a brief respite in training divisions during the current week, becaust drills have been called off for Christmas Day, which happens to fall on the regular drill day. There was some doubt about having a New Year drill night holiday, the plan being to shift the drill to another night, but this has not been decided.

Academy Unit Intact. While the Naval Academy candidate unit will be kept intact, because these men have to perform a specified number of drills in order to take the examination for entrance into the naval school next July, there was some indication that the war had forced some curtailing of the numbers who could drill in the specialist division, which is made up largely of petty officers who have been taken into the service because of their special knowledge. Among these are the yeomen, or stenographers, typists and clerks of the naval service. It was announced that because of the demands on officers on duty at the Navy Department, the planned formal inspection of the divisions on duty here had been called off for some time. It had been planned to have a formal inspection right after the first of the year, but unless there is a decided change in the naval situation, this probably will

Draft Registrants Are Eager to Fight With U. S. in War

Dozen Men Interviewed And Not One Expresses Desire for Deferment

When Uncle Sam gave his selectees something to shoot at, their attitude on going in the service did an about face.

At least that's the impression you get in conversation with Washingtonians about to be called up for duty.

Of at least a dozen registrants interviewed at Garfield Hospital Friday night while they were in the midst of their physical examinations, not one expressed a desire to be deferred and the vast majority were "rarin' to go."

Joe Cooper, an employe of the Agriculture Department, who was once a sergeant in the District National Guard, summed up the situation rather adequately: "When you haven't anything to shoot for, you naturally want to stay at home in your job, but all that changes once you have an objective. We've got one now. All Set to Go.

John W. Davis, statistical draftsman in the Treasury Department, was taking his physical examination merely to "keep the local board from getting its records messed up. He has volunteered in the Army Air Corps and is all set to go. "I didn't think so much about this business before," he said, "but now it's different. I'm ready."

Oliver Roach, a cook in a cafeteria at Fort Myer, Va., figured it this way: "There's nothing to be said except just go ahead and shoot it out with them Japs."

ready to get back in. "I'm all for it, he said. "Let's give those Japs hell." Mr. Curtis was placed in class IV-A as having completed his service, but

Hearty Laughter on the Carolina Coast

Down on the blustery coast of North Carolina with his Marines, Lt. Col. Harvey Miller must be enjoying a good laugh these days. Great Rivals After writing 1,374 letters embracing 10,359 double-spaced pages, or 5,179,500 words, to the general effect that his National Boxing Association guys can and always have been able to lick Mike Jacobs' rulers, Lt. Col. Miller has lived to see his argument proved.

Sammy Angott was the latest N. B. A. champion to lick one of Uncle Mike's personal, private champions. To the best of his ability, which even Lt. Col. Miller admits is not considerable, Mr. Angott took Lew Jenkins apart the other night to win the undisputed lightweight | By the Associated Press.

There are more difficult feats to accomplish than taking Jenkins apart, of course. In the first place, Lew was almost apart when he went into the ring. Ever since the night he knocked out the washed-up Lou Ambers to win Uncle Mike's private lightweight championship, Jenkins has fought like one of those wooden come-apart toy figures with worn-out elastic tendons. With pardonable pride, Lt. Col. Miller and his associates have claimed the discovery of Henry Armstrong as the logical No. 1 featherweight contender back in the days when it was held by Petey Sarron.

Of all the fighters the colonel has touted, probably the worst was Tony Galento. And yet from Tony the N. B. A. Ranking Committee got its biggest bang. Just in case the reader isn't up on the big industrialists of the anybody that the Packers might country, George Stanley Halas of Chicago is a jeweler, a laundryman, a real estate tycoon and, among other things, owner and coach of the Chicago Bears. By nightfall Mr. Halas should be a bigger industrialist than ever because today his Big Bad Bears will play the New York Giants, champions of the Eastern division, for the pro title.

The last time the Bears went into a playoff, which was a year since the interdivisional playoffs ago in Washington, they won over the Redskins, 73 to 0. Today they hardly figure to triumph by such a score, but the Bears should win. Mr. Halas' organization is just as far out in front in pro football as are the Yankees in major league baseball.

Granting the Giants little or no chance, and assuming by the New Yorkers winning on an icetime one turns on his radio the score will be 20-0 in Chicago's favor, it covered field in the Polo Grounds, still will be interesting to see how the Bears handle this year's Eastern 30-13. foes. Pannell Is Among Stars Who Will Contest in Handicap Tourney

Paul James of Middleburg, Va., and a full-fledged District League bowler this season with Henry Hiser's Bethesda club, will be the defending champion in the second annual Christmas Handicap Open which gets under way at 2 this afternoon at King Pin.

Excepting a record field of approx-imately 120 rollers, Manager Jimmy Moore, who originated the sevengame event last season, also has scheduled squads at 4, 7 and 9 o'clock.

Among the topnotchers lured by the top prize of $125 will be Cletus Pannell, the recently appointed assistant manager of the new Colonial Village Recreation, who will be seeking his fourth tournament victory of the season. After their second triumph in the money events will be Lou Jenkins, Fred Murphy, Billy Stalcup and Ray Watson.

Runner-up in two major events Al Wright looms among the favorites, who include such famed sweepstakes rollers as Hokie Smith, Tony Santini, Ed Blakeney, Karl Gochenour, and Ollie Pacini Among the missing in the tournament will be Astor Clarke, who left this morning with his wife and daughter Barbara for Clearwater, Fla., on a two-week vacation trip. Arrangements are under way by the National Duckpin Bowling Congress to have Clarke roll several exhibition matches in Florida in conjunction with the National Defense Bond tournaments being sponsored by half a dozen newspapers in the

Brooklyn Is Strongest Club in Attack, Just Beating Out Cards

By JUDSON BAILEY,

NEW YORK, Dec. 20 .- The first rookie ever to win a major league batting championship is Harold (Pete) Reiser, the sensational centerfielder of the Brooklyn Dodgers who hit .343 last season in the National League

The long-necked St. Louis boy came up to the Dodgers for the last six weeks of the 1940 season as a shortstop, but in his first full season as a big leaguer he became the outstanding middle gardener of the circuit and collected a variety of

The official National League averages released today confirmed the end-of-season figures that showed Reiser not only the leading percentage hitter, but also first in scoring runs, 117; hits for most total bases, 299; most three-base hits, 17, and tied for most two-base hits, 39. He had the longest batting streak of the season-18 games in mid-season.

of Chicago, 186 to 184. Reiser maintained a steady pace at or near the top of the hitting leaders throughout the season and Af Congressional was an important cog, naturally in propelling the Dodgers to their first pennant in 21 years.

Arrayed behind him among the regulars who played in more than happens to be one of the top links-100 games were the veteran John Cooney of Boston, 319; Joe Medwick, Brooklyn, 318; Stan Hack, Chicago, .317; John Mize, St. Louis, .317; Floyd (Arky) Vaughan, Pittsburgh, .316; Nick Etten, Philadelphia, .311; Fred (Dixie) Walker, Brooklyn, .311; Enos Slaughter, St. Louis, .311; Jimmy Brown, St. Louis, .306; Danny Litwhiler, Philadelphia, 305; Johnny Hopp, St. Louis, .303, and Dick Bartell, New York, .303.

George Washington, playing a couple of intersectional games, and Columbus have the collegiate court scene to themselves this week. The Colonials start the ball bouncing against Oklahoma tomorrow night at Riverside and then lay off until Indiana comes to town on Saturday. Columbus, sporting a couple of brightly colored plumes in its bonnet, will try for its third straight victory in a game with Davis-Elkins Tuesday night before recessing for the holidays.

Oklahoma, which played St. John's of Brooklyn last night, decisively trounced Southern Methodist in its opening game and will be an odds-on choice to humble G. W. tomorrow night. The Sooners have tled for the Big Six championship twice in the last three years and are rated outstanding contenders in the current title race.

Californian Is Only One to Get More Than Expenses

Jacobs Is Hard-Boiled Mogul Who Is Quiet About His Charities

By GAYLE TALBOT,

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.-With Joe Louis and Buddy Baer safely installed in their rural training quarters. Promoter Mike Jacobs is beginning to work up an impressive head of steam over the charity battle he is engineering between the ebon champion and the tall Californian at Madison Square Garden the night of January 9.

Orders for choice seats at $30 a copy are pouring into Mike's Broadway office and it appears likely the fund for the relief of naval families will receive a check for more than $100,000 when the excitement subsides. The only other beneficiary will be Baer, with Louis receiving his training expenses

"There ain't been anything like it since the old days," said Jacobs impressively, referring to his happy association with the late Tex Rickard back in the era of million-dollar fight gates. "You ought to see the names we're getting. We're getting names so big they ain't even in Who's Who

Next to the children. Mike is fondest of the flowers and vegetables and other products are given away. Nothing ever is sold.

Though Mike employs a squad of expert gardeners, he fancies himself as a top hand in the field and potters around contentedly when he is at home, no doubt getting in the way of the hired help.

"There isn't anything we can't raise," he challenges. "I got gardeners that can raise any flower or rose you ever heard of. Why, we've got whole trees of roses that have to be dug up every winter and buried. We've got plants there ain't any others like them in the country."

Lions, Eagles Staging Only 2 Hockey Tilts Here This Week

Hornets Invade Uline's Tonight, Skeeters Visit Riverside Friday

Only two ice hockey games are listed for local consumption this week, with the Washington Lions of the American League meeting the Pittsburgh Hornest tonight at Uline Arena at 8:30 o'clock and the Washington Eagles of the Eastern Amateur League facing the River Vale Skeeters on Friday night at Riverside Stadium

The Eagles also will view action today, battling the New York Rovers at Madison Square Garden, while the Lions' only other game of the week will be against the Barons on Saturday night at Cleveland.

Lions' Trudel Must Idle. Beaten by Cleveland and Buffalo in their last two appearances, the Lions will be performing against the Hornets tonight without the services of their leading scorer, sleek Lou Trudel, who also is setting the league scoring pace. Trudel is nursing a damaged houlder.

Shut out 6 times in 22 games, including a 1-0 defeat by Buffalo here on Wednesday night, the Lions will be tangling with a team they twice have beaten. Washington has whipped Pittsburgh, 9-2 and 3-1, while dropping a 3-2 decision to the Hornets.

The Lions, who have won four games, lost seven and tied one on Uline Arena ice, will be favored over Pittsburgh. The Hornets are last in the league's Western division. which boasts such powerhouse clubs as Cleveland, Indianapolis and Hershey, while the Lions are third Coach Redvers Mackenzie and Defenseman Art Lessard of the Eagles will entrain for Montreal after today's game at New York. Mackenzie will spend the Christmas holidays at his home, while Lessard is returning to the bedside of his mother, seriously ill following an operation.

Included among Pittsburgh standouts are rugged Pete Bessone and Mickey Blake, Defensemen Chuck Corrigan, Harry Currie and Lloyd Roubell, centers, and Glen Birdson, Squee Allen, Cecil Dillon, Norm Schultz and Johnny Sherf, wingers.

Aboyne, at Long Odds, Scores in Inaugural At Tropical Park

Rain Cuts Down Crowd, But Betting Is Close To Opener in 1940

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 20.-Mrs. G. C. Winfrey's Aboyne splashed from out of the pack to a hairline victory in Tropical Park's Inaugural Hand.cap today. It gave the long-shot players a happy sendoff for Florida's winter racing season. There were other thrills as well for the opening-day crowd of 9,382off 1,099 from the start of last year, but nevertheless heartening to the track's new owners because dripping skies were not conducive to a day at the races Pari-mutuel betting - the turfman's measure of the success or failure of a meeting-promised to equal the $252,833 wagered for the 1940 opener. The fleet field of 11 was rounding the turn into the stretch in the 6furlong $2.500 Inaugural Handicap when Jockey J. Skelly made his bid with Abovne. The horse just nipped Mrs. A. M. Creech's De Kalb in a photo finish to return $71.60 to the $2 win bettors. The $2 place price was $28.80 and even the show players got back $12.30 De Kalb paid $25 and $11.20. Maechance, only favorite to run in the money, showed for $5.40. The sloppy track held the time to 1:124-24 off the track record. The 21-day meeting got off to a rousing start when J. Freedman's Liberty Sand and Mrs. E. B. Carpenter's Ginocchio ran to a dead heat in the first race. Hunch players who like boxcar figure payoffs got a taste of things to come in the second race when Mrs. A. Carroll's Marny came through to return $98.30 for a win ticket, $43.40 to place and $17.80 to

Three Powers Occupied Islands Prior to U.S. Annexation in 1898

By Wide World News.

HONOLULU, Dec. 20.-British, Russian, French and Hawaiian flags rippled above Hawaii for a brief century of history before the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes in 1898 over the protest of the Japanese.

First came the British flag, planted on the islands by Capt. George Vancouver.

Then the Russians erected a fort on Kauai Island, bringing 200 Eskimos to the tropics from Alaska in 1816. With the Russians was a German fifth columnist-long before the expression came into existence. He was a secret German officer, Dr. Georg Ano Scheffer, who commanded the erection of the fort and passed as a naturalist.

Officer Shot Up Town.

About the first shooting in Hawaii by outsiders was by "Madcap" Lt. John Percival of the U.S. S. Dolphin in 1826.

Angered by the refusal of officials and missionaries to allow Hawaiian women aboard his vessel, he shot up the former capital of the islands, Lahaina, on Maui. Missionaries protested to Washington and his promotion was held up.

Admiral Lord George Paulet landed British troops in 1843 and occupied the islands for 160 days. Capt. Lawrence Kearny, crusading American naval officer after whom the destroyer Kearny was named, arrived in the islands as Admiral Paulet was negotiating a treaty to make Hawaii British and protested Speeds Learning to vigorously. His protest brought Admiral Richard Thomas, commander of the British squadron, who ordered Lord George to haul down the Union Ski, Loosli Holds Jack and run up the Hawaiian flag.

French Troops Landed. French troops landed in 1847 and occupied the islands for seven days because of religious and treaty difficulties. They shot up Fort Oahu and sailed off with the private yacht of King Kamehameha the Third.

The American flag was raised lution overthrew Queen Liliuokalani. Thereafter United States troops, on their way to Manila, landed and Admiral Tojo, aboard the man-ofwar Naniva, protested vigorously with a written note.

LONG BAY, British West Indies, Dec. 20.—"Sam Lord's Castle," a famous show place of the West Indies, is soon to be converted into a modern hotel, according to a report recently received.

The mansion stands on Long Bay erected by Samuel Lord in 1820, on the site of a house built 40 years earlier by "ship wreckers" who lured ships to their doom on Cobblers Reef, just off shore, by hanging lanterns in the coconut trees along the beach. The pirates then gained a handsome revenue by stripping the wrecked ships of their cargoes.

The present house, an imposing structure crowned with battlements. stands on a 13-acre eestate commanding a magnificent view of Long hurricane of 1831.

More Than 300 Yachts Aiding Coast Guard In Defense Work

Number Is Expected To Be Doubled Soon; Serve on All Coasts

More than 300 cabin cruisers, ishing craft and yachts, forming a inique part of this country's inshore ine of defense, are now on active duty with the Coast Guard as a portion of its new Reserve, Coast Guard headquarters disclosed here vesterday.

Officials estimated that "within the very near future" the 312 converted craft guarding Atlantic and Pacific coast lines as well as the Gulf of Mexico and Great Lakes would be doubled in number Before the outbreak of war the service had commissioned approximately 270 yachts and small commercial craft for 24-hour duty at vital defense areas. Since December 8, however, the Reserve program has been stepped up considerably. In addition to these Reserve vessels, a large number of the more than 4.000 boat owners forming the non-military Coast Guard Auxiliary, have been giving valuable assistance to Federal authorities, according to the headquarters announcement. Many auxiliary members have volunteered their boats without compensation, and in some instances boat owners have remained with their craft until regular Coast Guard personnel could be placed on board.

District Owners Lauded. Officials cited the "outstanding" performance of several Washington vachtsmen, who, without prior instructions, placed their boats on patrol of important bridges crossing the Potomac River the night after war was declared against Japan. Later in the week the yachts were relieved by reserve vessels rushed here from Chesapeake Bay.

At the present time three Reserve boats-two of them converted yachts and one an ex-fishing trawler-are guarding the Potomac bridges.

Coast Guard headquarters points out that all boats have been volunteered by their owners and there has been no need of commandeering craft as was reported from the West Coast in the opening days of the Some yachtsmen have even offered their boats as outright gifts to the Coast Guard and Navy.

With President Roosevelt's signature on a bill Tuesday authorizing the Navy to accept such yachts as gifts, the two services are now considering offers already received, officials said.

Help With Recruiting. In addition to volunteering their boats, auxiliary members are rendering valuable assistance in the 35 recruiting of Coast Guard enlisted men. Officials told of a Detroit businessman, a member of a Michi-14 gan auxiliary flotilla, who set up a recruiting office in his place of business. In one day 400 men ap-20 plied and were sent to recruiting officers in that city. Headquarters said ments through the country are averaging 100 a day.

The Reserve, not yet a year old. is patterned closely after the Naval Reserve, it was explained, and is open to qualified citizens between the ages of 17 and 64. Commissions to the rank of lieutenant commander are provided for, in addition to warrant, chief warrant and regular enlisted personnel.

Officials explained the Reserve had provisions for both regular and temporary members. Regulars are being taken on for the duration of the war, while the temporary membership, usually for a year at a time, is provided for those owners who enroll with their boats.

The auxiliary, which originally was organized under the name of Coast Guard Reserve, but changed with the creation of the military reserve, is more than two years old.

Tourists 'Collect' Mobile's Old Buildings

MOBILE, Ala., Dec. 20 .- Many old public buildings, some of them reflecting the influence of French and Spanish rule in Mobile, are among the thief points of interest for tourists visiting the city. Together with old homes, these venerable public buildings make Mobile a treasure store for those who like to view the relics of years long gone.

One of Mobile's most cherished old buildings is the first courthouse and jail, a quaint structure. The old courthouse was saved from the wrecker a couple of years ago when the Historic Mobile Preservation Society stepped in at the last minute and purchased it for a museum. It has been restored to its orignal appearance and houses many interesting relics of early Mobile.

Abandoned long ago in favor of more spacious quarters is the old Mobile customhouse, which carries on its massive gates graphic proof on the island of Barbados. It was of its antiquity. United States shields incorporated in the design of the gates bear only 21 stars, revealing that 27 States have been admitted to the Union since the gates were erected. # Careful Study Of Tax Losses Issues Gain

Many Citizens Fail To Realize Importance Of Capital Clauses

By FRANK MacMILLEN. NEW YORK, Dec. 20 (Wide World).-So you're worried about your Federal taxes?

Is Advised

Nearly everybody is in these times but, if you own land or securities, are you sure you have done everything possible legitimately to hold your taxes down?

There is nothing wrong with approaching the problem this way, even in wartimes. The Treasury has long recognized that no citizen or corporation is expected to pay more than the law requires, just as it is not permitted to pay less. For weeks past the stock and bond markets have given evidence that many big holders of securities have been selling to establish what was the somewhat discouraging Wall Street calls "tax losses" to cut news from the Far East, including their income taxes.

For example, if you had a shortterm gain of $2,000 on the sale of one lot of securities and a short-term loss of $3,000 on another lot, you could deduct only $2,000 of the shortterm loss-that is, just enough to offset the short-term gain. Long-Term Different

Special Dispatch to The Star. NEW YORK, Dec. 20 .- The change-over to an all-out war economy proceeded grimly and briskly both last week and this week, according to Business Week today

Orders from Washington, the Army and the Navy, it is stated, were directed toward (1) curtailing all uses of critical materials which do not directly contribute to the building up of America's defenses and offenses and (2) protecting civilians from potential air raids on either coast.

Here, summarily, is a flashback of some of the things that happened: Passenger car production quotas were further reduced-to 25 per cent of January, 1941, levels; the Office of Production Management ordered manufacturers of stoves to cut use of iron and steel by 35 per cent; pending the taking of an inventory, all automobile tire sales were banned; the use of aviation gasoline was restricted: 10 airplanes were diverted from civilian transport routes to the Army for a special mission. O. P. M. requested steel companies to speed up expansion of new plants, and the Rose Bowl football game (which definitely comes under the head of big business) was transferred inland-from the Pacific Coast to Durham, N. C.

Pattern Is Clear.

From now on, business is going to be moving in two directions at once. Production and distribution associated with the war effort will expand -airplanes, tanks, war and merchant ships, guns and ammunition, etc. On the other hand, output of goods which do not directly enhance the country's military strength and which consume critical material is bound to be curtailed. Already ample evidence is at hand: automobiles, refrigerators, stoves, residential building materials, farm implements, tin cans, and so on,

On balance, however, the total volume of business will be up. As indicated by Business Week last week, production during 1942 may increase as high as 15 per cent over this year. And though industrial gears may not mesh with perfect smoothness in the peace-to-war production transition, aggregate employment throughout the Nation will tend to expand fairly steadily. That applies even though passen-

Businessmen know only too It was discovered that when even well that depreciation has a way of the most discolored cotton fibers going on relentlessly whether plants are idle or working.

> Price Controls Tightened. In the near future price control is bound to assume ascending importance in business planning

As a consequence, workers in war industries may become the economic elite. ## Industrial Bonds Dip To New 1941 Lows In Light Trading

Utilities Also Down; Rails and Foreign Loans More Stable

By the Associated Press. NEW YORK, Dec. 20.-Industrial bond prices, on the average, declined to the year's lowest levels today on mild weakness in the industrial group and small losses among utilities. Rails and foreign loans showed more stability. The Associated Press average price of industrial liens dropped to 103.2, a 1941 low, from 103.3 Friday. Traders said that, while the market appeared to have recovered balance after the initial war shock, the lightning changes in the American economy presaged by this week's Washington legislation made buyers and sellers alike wary.

Turnover was $3,766,600, face value, compared with last week end's brisk turnover of $4,982,800. Bonds of the New Haven Railroad, in rapid trade, rose seveneighths of a point to nearly 2 points following Federal approval of pay-on them. Other issues up, mostly by fractions, included International Hydro-Electric 6s at 21, American Telephone 3s at 10814, Third Avenue adjusted 5s of '60 at 1312. Pere Marquette 5s at 66 and Consolidated Edison 3128 of '48 at 10514.

Special Dispatch to The Star.

BALTIMORE Dec. 20.—In spite of the approach of the Christmas holiday season, only a few items of live poultry increased during the current week. Most slock was steedy with last week and in one instance prices showed a slight decrease.

Some young chickens were a little above a week earlier and some turkeys also advanced a few cents. Guineas were a little easier. However, prices on most slock were a few cents above the quotations of comparable items just before Christmas of the easier and the property of the college of the calls were for the better grades.

District Business Barometers

Five leading barometers reflecting business conditions in the Capital during November recorded notable gains over November 1940, The Star's monthly survey disclosed yesterday. Check transactions in Washington registered a sharp gain of $15,878,-498 over the same month a year ago; telephones in service reached another all-time peak, while average daily calls broke all former records for any month, continuing a long upswing.

The retail trade index made a new November record; postal receipts in the Capital exceeded November 1940 by a surprising margin, while kilowatt hour sales were 10,680,952 or 14.76 per cent ahead of last year in the

Commodity Price Changes in Week

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.-Prices of Sales. table foods in wholesale cash markets dropped sharply this week as traders saw that the Government meant business in efforts to curtail a war-inspired rise in the cost of living.

More controls went into effect and in some markets came almost to a standstill as quotations swung into line with Government orders or as traders waited further action from Washington.

Average Off Slightly. While table food prices declined however, raw foodstuffs and industrial staples held about unchanged and the general price average, as measured by the Associated Press index, declined only slightly.

The index dipped to 94.38 per cent of the 1926 average from 94.92 per cent a week earlier and 77.47 per cent a year ago. The index is comprised of 35 commodities sold in spot cash markets.

The general average of these prices has been advancing for months and despite this week's setback is now around the level of early 1937.

Eggs and Flour Down.

Widest declines were noted in eggs and flour. Cocoa, lard and butter also dropped, along with hogs, wheat, oats, rve and wool. Moving against the main trend were cotton, corn, lamb, cattle and turpentine. Others were unchanged. Analysis of the index follows:

Watch Your Step America!

There will be those who will object to this warning.

There will be those to say we are wrong. To them, we answer—our published words show we have been consistently RIGHT about this War—as far back as 1929, when we first predicted it! From the day Hitler's legions smashed into Poland, we have consistently made it known that no Neutrality Act, no wish for peace could stop America from entering this War. A Power greater than any man or state has made this America's War.

There will be those to say we are injuring an ally, because Russia is now fighting Germany. To them, we answer—the facts of recent history alone would justify any man in believing that Russia fights Germany today only because it is in her interest to do so—she would change overnight if it were to her advantage. But we who send you this message have a far greater reason than the lessons of Poland and Finland for so doing. WE HAVE THE FACTS—from the highest possible Authority!

And finally, there will be those to say our warning will not be heeded now—that we are only injuring ourselves by printing it. To them, we answer—it would be safer to call attention to our prediction after the Betrayal has occurred. We know we face short-sighted criticism and condemnation for doing so now. But we also know that the event we warn of WILL TAKE PLACE. It is our plain duty as patriotic Americans to tell ALL AMERICANS of the coming attack, so we may not be caught unprepared.

Read the warning. Heed it or not, as you wish—but read it anyway.

And remember it in the days so soon to come.

-A Warning To All Americans-

Within the next three years, Russia will be fighting the United States and Great Britain. The exact date cannot yet be determined, but it will be well within the three-year period. It may be within a few months, or even days.

Unless you have faith in God, it will do you no good to read further. We wish to explain why the prediction above is correct. The explanation cannot possibly mean anything to a man or woman who does not sincerely believe in God.

If you do have faith, let us remind you of a fact which you may have forgotten:

The Bible states that the Prophecies in it were made by God Himself, and transmitted to mankind through inspired Prophets. God has said the events the Prophets described WILL TAKE PLACE!

Surely, every Christian must believe the Word of God!

The plain facts are-many of the Biblical Prophecies have already come true. AND THE GREATEST OF THEM ARE BEING FULFILLED NOW!

The prediction about Russia is not of our making. It comes directly from the Prophecies of the Holy Bible. It is an event which God Himself has said will occur.

Proof of Accuracy

You probably know, if you have read the Bible, that the Prophecies are seemingly impossible to understand. They were designed to be. The Bible says that men will not understand them until the right time comes.

THAT TIME IS NOW!

The Proof?

Bible authorities associated with DESTINY Magazine have predicted many events of this War in advance, basing their predictions on what they have learned from the Prophecies. THESE PREDIC-TIONS HAVE COME TRUE!

For example, DESTINY Magazine published a prediction of the fall of France in June 1936—nearly 4 years in advance. DESTINY published a prediction of the 1939 Russian-German alliance that precipitated the War in November, 1938—8 months in advance. DESTINY published a prediction of Japan's attack on the United States and Great Britain in September, 1941—3 months in advance.

All these successful predictions were taken directly from the Prophecies of the Bible. What better proof could there be—that the men who made them understand the Prophecies—AND THAT THE PROPHECIES APPLY NOW?

Who Will Win The War?
How — When — Where?

DESTINY is a non-profit monthly Magazine devoted to giving all Americans knowledge of what the Bible says will happen. It brings to its readers month by month the results of latest researches into Biblical Prophecy.

DESTINY now is carrying a continuing story of what the Bible reveals about this War and its aftermath. Already such information as who will win the War—how, when, and where—has been presented. Already the tremendous change that will come to everyone after the War has been described.

But much remains to be told. Many of the Prophecies are related to one another; as each comes true, it helps cast more light on events yet to come. When the Russian Betrayal occurs, for example, it will confirm the time when the War will end.

Please understand—DESTINY's authors do not have any superhuman ability to read the future. Every bit of their knowledge comes from penetrating study of the Holy Bible. It is knowledge open to all men who will read and study it.

If you have the time and inclination for exhaustive research, by all means turn to your own Bible and pore over the Prophecies until you see their real meanings. You will find the work long and hard, but immensely fascinating, and well worth your while.

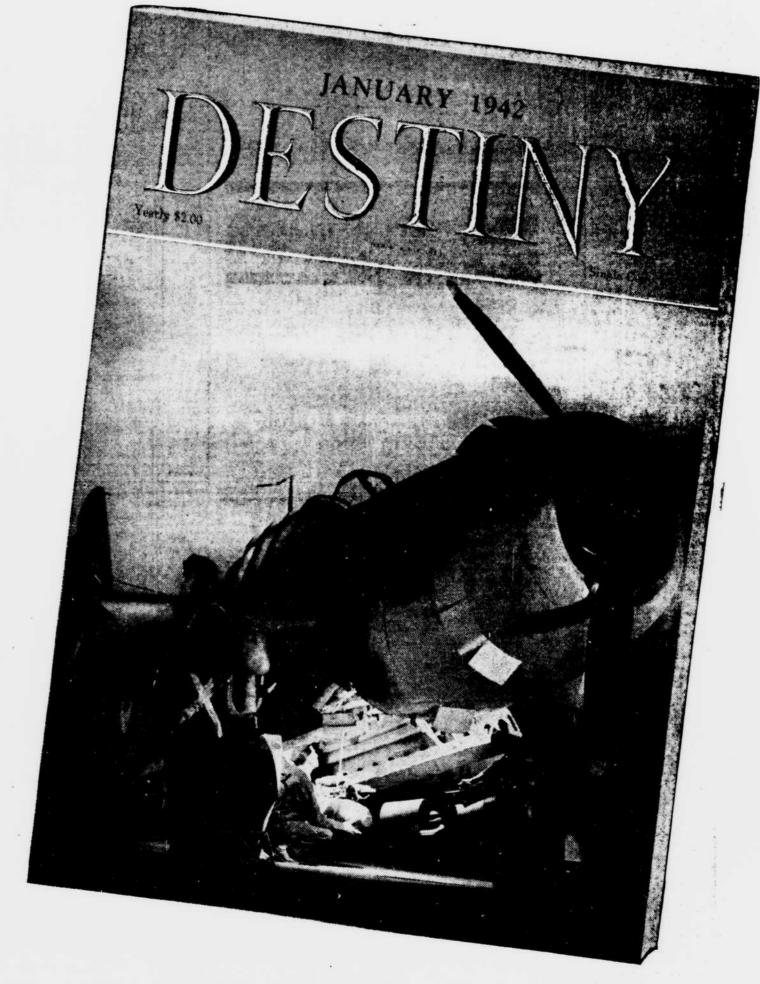

But many people today have too many demands on their energy to devote the necessary time and effort to understanding the Prophecies. If you are one of these—a sincere Believer in God, but without the time for Bible study—then we invite you to do the next best thing—Read DESTINY. See what Bible authorities have discovered about the present-day significance of the Prophecies.

Not only did the spotlight shine brightly on debuts in the Capital yesterday but it shifted its rays to New York to sparkle on a coming-out party that is of much interest here. Yesterday's debuts, however, were not as elaborate or heralded with as much fanfare as others in the past but apparently were enjoyed as much as those lavish in detail. This was especially noted in the debut in New York of Miss Nedenia Hutton, daughter of Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, for her party was in marked contrast to the brilliant balls given to present her sisters to society. The debutante made her bow quite informally, with the former United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union and Belgium and Mrs. Davies introducing her to close friends at a simple tea in their home. Flowers in abundance, of course, were sent to the bud, an orchestra played for dancing, but Mrs. Davies stressed informality in arranging and announcing the party.

Parents and Miss Hutton In Receiving Line.

The guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Davies and Miss Hutton and a group of the debutante's close friends.

Several members of the receiving party were also members of the house party which Miss Hutton is entertaining, including the Misses Katharine Van Pelt of Philadelphia, Ruth Hurley of Washington, Mary

Miss Mary Henry Is Bride Of Mr. Delbert De V. Ruch

Home of Her Parents Is Scene Of Ceremony; Sister, Ann, Is Maid of Honor

The wedding of Miss Mary Caroline Henry and Mr. Delbert De Villo Ruch, which took place last evening, is of much interest here. The ceremony was held in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Henry, at 3817 Woodley road. Only members of the immediate families

For her marriage the bride chose a pale gray-green crepe dress made with a draped skirt and simple bodice. Her accessories were black and her corsage, worn at the waistline, was of gardenias. .

Sister of Bride Is Maid of Honor.

Miss Anne Henry, sister of the bride, acted as maid of honor. She was gowned in a becoming dress of rose taffeta and wore accessories of black. Her corsage was of carnations.

The bride was introduced to Washington society several seasons ago. She was a student at Mile. Bouligny's School in Warrenton, Va., and at the French School in New York City.

Mr. Ruch is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Carlton Ruch of Beverly Hills, Calif. He attended the school of foreign service at Georgetown University, and now is on active duty with the Army.

Informal Supper Parties And Gatherings Mark Today's Social Calendar

Clarence A. Aspinwalls Plan Fete for Younger Set: Miss Frost to Be Hostess

There are at least a dozen parties of special note on today's calendar. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Aspinwall's supper party tonight at their home will be for 50 of the younger set and will honor Mrs. Aspinwall's niece, Miss Carol Franklin. Guests will be drawn from the debutante and postdebutante groups, and many of the men will be members of one of the services. Mrs. Aspinwall's son, E. Brooke Lee, jr., will be home from Fort Meade, Md., for the party, and her younger son, Blair Lee, 3d, also will be present. There will be singing to accordion music, games and dancing at this informal gathering.

Progressive Party Planned By Chevy Chase Younger Set.

Then there's the progressive party for the young people of Chevy Chase, which begins with cocktails at the home of Miss Jean Wickliffe on Delaware street: Southern style turkey-and-trimmings at the home of Miss Louise Forbes on Brookeville road, salad at Miss Betty Taylor's home on Van Ness street and dessert and dancing at the home of Miss Joyce

Other parties for today include Miss Betty Frost's cocktail party for Miss Elene Essary and Mrs. Ernest Eden Norris' luncheon for the same debutante, Miss Barbara Putzki's luncheon for bride-elect Joan Dodd, the cocktail party at which the Misses Edith and Joanna Huntington will be hostesses; Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Brand's reception for Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Grady, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Tompkins' buffet supper for Miss Beverly Covell and Mr. Louis G. Caldwell's cocktail party for Judge Eugene O. Sykes.

MRS. ROBERT DANFORD AND MISS MARTHA WOOD. Two energetic workers for the Civilian Defense Canteen, which is to be open every evening from 6 to 9 o'clock, are Mrs. Danford, who will have canteen duty on Fridays, and Miss Wood, who is in charge on Mondays.

Mrs. Lloyd P. Shippen Gives Dance for Subdebutantes; Dinners Precede Affair

By MONA DUGAS

This week end marks the beginning of a perfect whirlwind of gayety for both the younger set and their parents. The debutante contingent seems to have taken over the Christmas season for its own, and the "grown-ups"-although mainly interested in giving their boys in uniform a gay holiday to remember-will not be without festivities themselves. The round of parties won't slow down until well after the New Year, which will be ushered in in a variety of ways, but few people will sit quietly at home on the last evening of this momentous 1941.

Dance for Subdebutantes. Even the subdebutante group is having its fling, and last evening was probably one of the gayest of the year for this set. Mrs. Lloyd Parker Shippen gave her annual Christmas dance for the subdebutantes. and a number of dinner parties preceded this affair. The dance was held in the new ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel, where Mrs. Shippen received, assisted by Mrs. Albert H. Lucas and Mrs. Charles Carroll Morgan. The hostess wore a brocade gown of lavender shade, trimmed with fur to match the muff she held.

Mr. and Mrs. William McKee Dunn gave a dinner before the party, honoring their daughter, Miss Lanier Dunn, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin entertained for their daughter, Miss Hope Erwin. Miss Elizabeth Lyon, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James Alexander Lyon, was another young lady honored at dinner before the dance, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul S. Devine were hosts at dinner for their daughter and son, Miss Patricia Devine and Mr. Paul Devine. Mrs. Fred Ward also entertained at dinner before the dance, her party honoring her son, Mr.

About 150 children were entertained at Mrs. Elizabeth B. Coleman's annual Christmas party which she held yesterday at the Kennedy-Warren. Gifts this year were in the form of Defense stamps. Miss Louise McNutt Gives

But the debs and subdebs weren't the only ones entertaining or being entertained yesterday. There was Miss Louise McNutt, daughter of the Federal Security Administrator and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, who gave a buffet supper for her post-debutante friends last evening. And there was the dinner given by Mrs. John Anthony Ireland, who entertained at Woodmore, her Maryland home. Her honor guests were three sergeants who have recently come to Fort Meade, Md., from Fort Cheraw, N. C., Mr. L. Norfleet Pope, Mr. William Kenealy and Mr. Justin V. O'Conor. jr.

MRS. LIONEL ATWILL AND MRS. WILLIAM P. MacCRACKEN.

Mrs. Atwill was hostess to the group which met to complete arrangements for the canteen which dispenses hot meals to members of the office force who must work overtime in the Dupont Circle Building. Mrs. Atwill is chairman of the Canteen Committee and Mrs. MacCracken is in charge on Saturday nights.

Diplomats to Celebrate Christmas Much as They Have in Other Years

Ambassador and Senora de Espil To Fete Members of Staff; Chileans to Be Entertained

Christmas will be celebrated among the diplomats in Washington this week much as they have celebrated in other years, though a few fetes will be less elaborate. The Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil will follow their custom of entertaining members of the Embassy staff and their wives at a buffet supper Christmas eve and accompanying them to midnight mass. The Spanish Ambassador and Senora de Cardenas will be with the members of the Embassy staff and their wives at the midnight service Christmas eve and later will entertain them at breakfast. The Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels, however, will be hosts to the Embassy group and Chilean residents in Washington Christmas afternoon and early evening, when the gayly lighted Christmas tree will be the center of the festivities. The Cuban Ambassador and Senora de Concheso will have a similar fete on Christmas eve.

Minister From Iceland To Entertain His Staff.

The Portuguese Minister and Senhora de Bianchi also are observing this form of celebration, with a brightly decorated tree in their Wardman Park apartment. The Minister will be accompanied by his daughter, Senhorita Marie-Joao de Bianchi, to church Christmas morning before the party. Guests at the party will be members of the Legation staff and Portuguese citizens living in the Capital. The new Minister from Iceland and Mrs. Thors are here for their first Christmas, having established the Legation within the last six weeks. They will follow their own Yule customs, which are similar to our own, and will entertain the staff and their families and a few Icelandic residents at dinner Christmas eve. A larger party will be that at New Year, when they will entertin a group of Icelanders who at present are visiting in New York and will come to Washington early next week.

Luxembourg 1 egation

The Luxembourg Minister and Mme. Le Gallais will have quite a gay Christmas with their small son and the children of the Grand Duke, Prince Felix, and the Grand Duchess Charlotte. The heir apparent to the Luxembourg throne, Prince Jean, with his brothers and sisters, Princess Elizabeth, Princess Marie Gabriel, Princess Marie Adelaide, Prince Charles and Prince Alix, will come from Canada, where they are staying through the war. They will join their grandmother, the Dowager Gra Marie Anne, who has been at the Legation since the early autumn. The Grand Duke Felix and Grand Duchess Charlotte are in London, where the government of Luxembourg has been established. The Christmas

About Well-Known Folk In Books, Art, Politics

Representative Randolph's Foresight Vindicated by House in District Defense Plans

By ROBERT CRAWFORD. "Fore-warned, fore-armed" is the motto of Mr. Jennings Randolph, member of Congress from West Virginia and chairman of the House On April 28 the gentleman from West Virginia, believing that it was inevitable that America would be drawn into the European war, introduced his bill to authorize blackouts in the District and to arrange for other measures looking toward the defense of the National Capital. His bill was defeated by a vote of 171 to 117, some memoers going so far as to pronounce it "hysteria." Others exclaimed "spinach," but on Friday, December 12, after the tragedy of Pearl Harbor, the bill was passed without a dissenting voice.

While Mr. Randolph takes an unusually sunny view of life-he was too young for service in the first World War-he is now ready for his country's call in any capacity in which he can best serve. He is not a warmonger but has always been strong for preparedness, and five years ago advocated, and so suggested to the President and to the Secretaries of War and Navy, that there should be a minister of national defense. At the same time after having thoroughly studied the situation he came to the conclusion and suggested that instead of building giant battleships at a cost of millions of dollars, fighting and bombing planes and

Mr. Randolph, who is one of the juniors of the House, passed his 39th birthday last March. Because there had always been a West Virginia member on the District Committee, he asked for the assignment. and since becoming chairman of the committee he has done yeoman service for the voteless inhabitants of Washington. At the National Democratic Convention in Chicago in 1940 he succeeded in getting a plank inserted to give the District the franchise-national and local.

In addition to being an M. C., Mr. Randolph is now an M. P., a voluntary auxiliary major of police with orders from Maj. Kelly, superintendent of police, to be ready for duty whenever he is called. Active in carrying out all regulations for the defense of the National Capital, Mai. the quotation, "Fore-warned, forearmed to be prepared is half the victory," was found. This quaint little copy in four volumes bound in red morocco softened by age and tooled in gold which is still untarnished after 113 years is illustrated with exquisite little engravings as frontispieces. The book first saw the light of ownership in a delightful old library in Kentucky in about 1828, the year in which it was published by H. Adams of Philadelphia. It is not known whether Scrooge and the Ghost and Tiny Tim and Bob Cratchit and the entire Cratchit family will visit the White House as usual on Christmas night, as it is reported that none of the Roosevelt grandchildren will be there, and the supposition is that Grandfather Roosevelt will not follow his custom of years and read "Christmas Carol."

Rather than dwelling on the stitution in which we now find ourselves let us, instead, dwell on the story of the star of Bethehem; let us paint the picture of that holy night in language so clear, so understandable, that it will be a living memory to our children and through them to us, as long as we live.

Even though battles may be fought to more. Let us show by our unifaltering faith that there is still something good, something worth-while left in life.

And so, for this Christmas Week, may we be as cheerful, as happy, as optimistic as it is possible for us to be. May we share our Christmas gayety and our Christmas largeses with the less fortunate in our city; may we, indeed, if there is opportunity, invite into our homes the friendless and lonely. And may we, by so doing, receive a greater joy by than any we have ever known before. May we, above all, voice the hope, that sooner than we think there may be established that peace on earth, good will toward men which shepherds heard in the song of the start of the song and the song of the solution of of the solution

Christmas Season Brings Many Gay but Informal Parties to Bethesda

SOCIETY.

Hostetlers Invite Friends to Cut Trees for Holiday at Gathering On Their Glen Road Estate

The annual "Christmas-tree-cutting party" yesterday at Gatton Adventure, the Minier Hostetler place on Glen road, was one of those gay informal parties of which it could be truthfully said that "a good time was had by all." Guests were invited to come at any time between dawn and dusk, to help themselves to the prettiest tree each could find, and to stop at the farmhouse for a bite to eat before going home.

Yesterday's party was the seventh event of its kind since the Hostetlers moved out to the county from Washington. It began with a few guests who came to get their own trees and each year the list of guests has grown larger until now the gathering is one of the largest parties of the Christmas season. Among the guests yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. F. Moran McConihe, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Semmes and Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Horgan, who are neighbors &-

Former American Resident of Rome Declares Mussolini Is Hated Now; Says Hitler Slapped Count Ciano

By GRETCHEN SMITH.

Italy now is as Nazi occupied and dominated as any of the nations conquered by Hitler, according to Mrs. J. Clyde Marquis, who arrived in Washington recently from Rome. As a resident of the Italian capital for many years, Mrs. Marquis personally witnessed many of the most dramatic happenings in the nation's history. #### Occupational Council To Continue Job Clinic.

Declaring that "war does not solve the problem of the older worker," the Women's Occupational Council announces that it will continue its job clinic for unemployed mature women. Council officials believe that the industrial expansion resulting from our entry into war will increase job opportunities for mature workers in certain fields. Older women in Washington, however, have not so far found the labor market receptive to them, it is said.

"They are securing poorly paid jobs in the stores and a few have obtained clerical jobs in the Government," according to the organization's latest reports. "If older women are to take advantage of the openings that may become available, they will need counseling about job-finding techniques and help from em-still in pictures?

Ladies and gentlemen, class is in session. Maurice Evans has been invited as visiting lecturer.

Mr. Evans, as you no doubt know, is this generation's leading exponent of Shakespeare and is currently appearing on Broadway as "Macbeth." It has been called even by aged critics the best "Macbeth" in living memory and is certainly the most successful one at the box-office. It arrives at an unfortunate time. The passionate and terrible drama of a world at war holds the stage. Continents are being hurled against continents. Oceans are battlefields. A whole generation of man has taken up guns to arrange a violent settlement of the future. Yet, at exactly this moment, when people grab up newspapers to find out what the rest of their lives will be like, other people step aside in voluminous numbers to watch an ancient louse stick an old dagger into an antique back and then defend himself fruitlessly with a tin sword, blunted at the business end by a button.

Sounds peculiar. Are there any questions? Question: "Why?"

Answer: (By Mr. Evans, who was prevented by modesty unbecoming an actor-manager from replying briefly that his was the century's most successful production of "Macbeth" because it was the best.)

"Well," began Mr. Evans, "we are getting a curious audience for Macbeth.' As you know, I have done 'Romeo and Juliet' here and through the country with Katharine Cornell, 'Hamlet,' 'Richard II,' 'Henry IV' and 'Twelfth Night' with Helen Hayes, but this is the first time we're getting this kind of audience.

"Brokers are selling our tickets. Ordinarily, one looks out at a Shakespeare audience and sees classical features embellished by eyeglasses. Now, there is the extraordinary spectacle of white ties in the

Playing the Title Role Is a Thankless Job.

"Of course, there is a reason and I know the reason but I think I shall save it for last. Actors are not like newspapermen and cannot hold their audiences unless they save the best for last.

"I can't say I've always wanted to do 'Macbeth.' It is rather a thankless job in the name role. The lady always walks off with the play. But Shakespeare is always good. You know why an actor likes to do Shakespeare? For the same reason that a girl likes to go away to the beach In the summer and take off her girdle. This realistic theater, drawing room theater, full of repressions and understatements and polite discourse, corsets an actor's libido.

Last season Miss Hayes and I got together in a company of 'Twelfth Night' as something of a rest for us and it was very successful for a while. But, when the war got grimmer for Americans, when the Nation sweated to the news in the papers, we could feel all the success going out of our play. We could feel the thought coming up at us from out of the audience: 'Oh, I say, look here, cutting capers at a time like this, having a lark and larking around at a time like this."

Next Time He Was Told, Make It "Macbeth."

"We felt that everywhere we went in the country and finally I decided that what people wanted in a time like this was something with real guts to it, with groaning in it and sweat and toil, blood and tears." Incidentally, Miss Hayes seems to have decided the same thing. She is now appearing in Maxwell Anderson's "Candle in the Wind" and will tour this moving anti-Nazi play through the country beginning January 10. "It wasn't until I got to Columbus that my mind was made up on 'Macbeth.' " resumed Mr. Evans. "Bob Boder, manager of the Hartman Theater there, made up my mind for me. 'If it has to be Shakespeaere for me next season,' I said to him, 'which Shakespeare shall it be?' 'Macbeth,' he rumbled back at me, thinking of all the past personages he had seen in it, 'Macbeth, Macbeth and nothing but Macbeth.'

"It's a regular finx play. There is a superstition in the theater that no 'Macbeth' is ever produced without a death in it or a disaster. And you

Year's Cinema Sensations Find the Corn Is Golden

Abbott and Costello Still Use Gags Grandfather Laughed At, But It's Paying Them Well

By Harold Heffernan.

When all the statistics for Hollywood's crazy 1941 are finally rounded Even Undeserving Miss Field up, two crazy figures will stand out. One is tall and trim, the other short and squat. Yep-Abbott and Costello, of course!

Unquestionably, this comic pair, springing from nowhere, bags top talent honors for the year. personalities. We visited the pair at M-G-M, where they're engaged in the new musical film version of "Rio Rita" and saw a typical low-down Abbott-Costello sequence.

Playing roles of unwelcome, uninvited guests at a big desert resort hotel, they throw some tiny radios disguised as apples out a window. A big dog is seen swallowing one. The two saunter down the street, the dog following. Costello pauses to ask a guest if he knows who won the Cubs-Giants ball game, while Abbott walks on. The guest doesn't know, but the dog shakes himself (and his radio) until a news broadcast is tuned in. The dog says,

'The Giants won today, 4 to 3." "Thanks," says Costello to the dog, and hurries after Abbott, who, in, turn, inquires of his pal if he got the score. Costello gives it and Abbott queries, "Who told you?"

"The dog," says Costello, and upon Abbott's incredulous protest, does a double-take, realizing for the first time that it was the dog-or seemingly so-that told him.

Corny, isn't it? Sure thing, but Bud and Lou make a side-splitting scene out of it. That set us thinking of all the bad gags and jokes the pair have told-and which they consider their best crowd-pleasers They didn't have time to ransack their distant past, but they did come up with the 10 gags they think are their top 10 for 1941. ## Psychiatry and the New Lady Macbeth

Judith Anderson's Interpretation of the Role Is Result of Scientific Approach

By John Ferris, Wide World News.

NEW YORK. The most highly praised piece of acting by a woman on Broadway today is indubitably Judith Anderson's playing of Lady Macbeth in the Maurice Evans production of the Shakespeare tragedy.

There is nothing accidental in this success, for Miss Anderson approached the part as scientifically as was possible and, being a woman not only of searching intelligence but more than ordinarily honest judgment, she is the first to give credit where credit is due-in this instance to a psychiatrist.

This anonymous gentleman is a friend of Miss Anderson's whom she consulted when she began preparing for Lady Macbeth's sleep-walking scene. Actresses traditionally have played this scene by walking airily around the room, stopping occasionally to wring their hands to wipe away the blood. Miss Anderson played it in this manner in 1937 in London with Laurence Olivier.

Inspiration in Hypnosis. Now she might have done the same thing here and perhaps no one—save psychiatrists and possibly nurses—would have been wiser. But our Lady Macbeth wondered and questioned herself and then asked her friend, the psychiatrist, could he possibly arrange to have her go down to Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore to see a sleep-walker?

The psychiatrist had a different idea. He arranged with a group of other doctors to have a woman patient brought to an apartment in New York and to have her hypno-know, if any one comes into a dressing room and quotes 'Macbeth'-why, it's as bad as whistling and he gets thrown right out of there.

"But it had to be Shakespeare because I couldn't find a modern play that spoke to the audiences of our time. The playwrights don't want to write them, can't compete with the newspapers, and the pace of events is dating topical plays too rapidly. Can't write frolicking plays because their minds don't run in that direction. So it had to be Shakespeare.

Not Even Nostradamus Could Predict More Clearly.

"I could have done practically anything of Shakespeare and found myself talking the language of today. "This England never did nor never shall lie at the proud foot of a conquror. Come the three corners of the world and we shall shock them.' King John says that in the last scene and who would mind hearing it now? And if you'd like to hear about fifth columnists, well, Julius Caesar says, 'For we are at the stake and bayed about with many enemies. And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear, millions of mischiefs.'

"But, if it had to be Shakespeare, then equally it had to be 'Macbeth.' What manager could resist at a time like this a well-written script-oh yes, a quite well-written script-that told the following parable of modernday Germany

"A man, lusting with ambition, sells himself to evil, brings horror and terror to the world around him in doing so, until finally the good a-chick all the time. people band together and make an end of him.

"No, the story was irresistible. Nostradamus himself could not have it. looked 300 years ahead of him and seen our world so clearly. And that was what I was saving for last: The reason for Shakespeare's success today is that he tells us about ourself, just as it has been the reason for his success in any generation."

They Asked Her So She Tried to Act

And Vera Zorina Became a Dancing Comedienne

By Carroll Arimond,

Wide World News. CHICAGO.

Blond Vera Zorina's transition from a classical dancer exclusively to a dancing comedienne was born in a real life version of this antique

He-Can you play the piano? She-I don't know: I never tried. In London in 1937 producers of "On Your Toes" were scouting for some one to portray a temperamental Russian ballerina. Miss Zorina was a top-flight dancer appearing there in Col. De Basil's Ballet Russe, so they asked her if she could act. "I told them, 'I don't know; I never tried," Miss Zorina relates now with a laugh.

Accent Was Pleasant. She tried and found she could. It all was as easy as that, she vows, although she never had spoken a line on the stage before in her life. Her experience as a dancer had given her stage presence not likely to be found in an out-and-out beginner and her European accent on precise English grammar was pleasant to the ear. The eye long had been pleased by her graceful figure, attractive face and golden hair.

The part was hers and she deserted the formal ballet and the life of an agile but mute mannequin for musical comedy, where she has been a star ever since.

In the two last named musicals her roles have capitalized on her highly personalized type of comedy, founded principally on naivete, which has no imitators in the theater today. They, too, allowed ample room for display of her talent for dancing, an art she says she's been pursuing since learning to walk. But her desertion of the ballet hasn't moved her to abandon the rigorous training schedule to which the classical dancer must adhere. The theatergoer might assume reasonably enough that the dance routines she performs eight times weekly in the show would keep her

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People-Review of the Stamp Press-List of Local Meetings

By James Waldo Fawcett. The stamp division of the Pan-American Union announces an exhibition of Latin-American stamps and covers to be staged in the main lobby and north corridor of the Pan-American Union Building, Seventeenth street and Constitution avenue N.W., beginning tomorrow. Arranged according to a new conception of philatelic display, the show will include historical documents illustrative of the development of Western Hemisphere solidarity during the past hundred One feature of the exhibition is to be a copy of the original circular distributed by Philippe Bunau Varilla, Minister of Panama, during the congressional debate on the Panama Canal. The proposal to dig the "ditch" between the Atlantic and the Pacific along the so-called Nicaragua route was defeated by his dramatic distribution of copies of the Mount Momotombo stamps of Nicaragua, the design of which mistakenly suggested that a volcano was active in the region through which the canal was to pass.

Philatelic literature of many different South and Central American countries likewise will be displayed. Hours of admission are: Monday to Friday, inclusive, 9 to 4:30; Saturday, 9 to 12; Sunday, closed.

A letter from Marjorie Ann Chambers, Bethlehem, Md., reads in part: "This year I am making a special effort with my Christmas cachet, hoping to instill in the minds of as many people as possible the importance of the peace which at last must come.

Of special interest to students of the history of communications, this fine portrait of Sir Brian Tuke, Governor of the King's Postal Service during the reign of Henry VIII, was painted by Hans Holbein the Younger about 1526 and is one of the prized treasures of the National Gallery of Art. Born in 1469, the subject was, in effect, from 1517 until his death in 1545, the first postmaster general of England. He also was a patron of learning and a friend to artists. His letters and many of the state papers for which he was responsible are in the British Museum, available to be consulted by scholars even in wartime.—National Gallery of Art Photo (Mellon Collection).

Some six years ago, in 1935, The Star through its chess column lent every encouragement to youth in local high schools who wished to form clubs and learn how to really play chess correctly. The result is that today Washington has seven fine chess clubs in its local high schools and the semi-annual team tournaments attract great interest.

This column now proposes to render college chess players every possible aid with the purpose of establishing a local college chess league that will conduct all manner of chess activities for the entertainround-table assembly. Then send meeting when it is announced in following January 1.

Units in Design There never has been, in the deassociation as here between words and pictorial decoration. The quotations from Jefferson's writings are clearly printed on the paintings, three lines deep, and these inscriptions are employed as units in the design. The murals are in four panels - two very long, running without interruption almost the length of the room, with a lunette at the north end over the platform and a rectangular one with a clock as focal point on the south wall. The lunette shows Jefferson standing against a stone wall at "Monticello," the mansion being seen in the distance. The panel at the opposite end has its inscription at the top rather than at the lower margin as do those on the side walls, and is given over to the living generation's priorities and freedom of

William Calfee Exhibits

It is not often that an artist is at one and the same time a sculptor and a painter, as is William Calfee, an exhibition of whose work may now and until the end of the month be seen in the Whyte Gallery, 1707 H street N.W. This is an uncommonly interesting showing and well arranged. Paintings in oil occupy three walls, drawings made boldly with a brush

Facts and Figures Fail to Blast Hollywood Legend

Leo Rosten Deals With Popular Misconceptions About Movie Colony and Its Producers

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Hol!, wood

By Leo C. Rosten. Harcourt, Brace, New York.

In this new work about America's movie capital, Mr. Rosten takes for his thesis the idea that Hollywood exists in the public imagination rather than in the three-dimensional world. Hollywood is a legend, he says, and he insists that the realities of the place itself bear to this legend very little relation. In the interests of truth, he has made the realities

He has gone after them in a rigidly fact-finding fashion. He has marshaled there into statistics and compiled them into tables. He has analyzed them and synthesized them. And the result is a paradox. The public is going to read his book-but not for its mine of factual material. It is going to read his book because it is about Hollywood. And anything at all about Hollywood is fascinating-even facts. Mr. Rosten's admirably compiled tables, one feels, are simply going to add to the legend which they are designed to explode.

Takes Up Popular Misconceptions.

He has, nonetheless, done a thorough-seeming job. Dividing his material into two parts-the movie colony and the movie-makers-he has taken up the popular misconceptions which exist about each part and dealt with them in turn. Under the first head, he deals with social concepts—with the psychology of picture people, their reactions to success their morals, their politics, their habits in spending, their superstitions, and so on. Under the second head, he makes analysis of the careers of a chosen number of producers, directors, writers and actors designed to show the average state of age, income, length of employment, experience and nationality in each group. He has not made the two divisions mutually exclusive, however, and considerable material which appears in the first is repeated in the second.

His opinion of Hollywood's social development is that the colony gives every evidence of being a repetition of an old American phenomenon the phenomenon of the new rich. Comparing the conduct of the movie elite with that of suddenly wealthy groups which appeared earlier in our history, he finds that the Hollywood manifestations are precisely what might have been expected.

"To a detached observer," he says, "the private life of a movie star is hardly more lurid than that of the railroad magnate, Jim Fisk. . . . The parties for which Hollywood's nabobs are famed are not wilder than were the yacht parties of William Astor, with which all New York rang. If the business offices of Hollywood provoke smiles, one might recall the offices of the Erie Railroad, which were situated in a converted opera house and were used for nightly gambling and historic carousing. And one might balance the divorces of the movie stars with those of the Vanderbilts and the Manvilles; or the tax evasion of a Joseph Schenck with the defalcations of a Richard Whitney.

Four Hundred Goes Hollywood.

Mr. Rosten, indeed, goes beyond likening the movie group to other American nouveaux riches; he extends his comparison to the nouveaux riches of history. Those of "Egypt and Greece, Rome and Antwerp and London," he says, "also built marble swimming pools and tiled gymnasiums, gorged themselves with rich foods and took on the physical dimensions of importance. They tipped lavishly, entertained on a fabulous scale, and were fond of risque stories. There were scandalous corners in the avenue of their living. They gambled freely, kept beautiful mistresses (or gigolos), bred costly horses, and fed useless dogs. And the notoriety of their spas and their pleasure resorts crept into the gossip and verse of their time. * * * Were it not for chronology, one would say that every Four Hundred has 'gone Hollywood.'

He makes the point, however, that the movie people are situated differently from other similarly wealthy groups, in that their prosperity has continued and increased during a period wherein the rest of the Nation was suffering losses. This, he thinks, explains to a considerable degree, the conspicuousness of Hollywood's extravagances. "It is not that things which are happening in Hollywood are really unique," he observes. "They are simply happening in Hollywood at a time when they are not happening anywhere else in our society.

He makes it a point, too, that, for other industries, the ideals concerning wealth have changed. In most fields, the man who gets rich quickly is now more likely to be regarded with suspicion than with the adulation which was once felt to be his due. Movie stars, however, remain exempt from the new conscience. On them falls the worship which once went to railroad kings, lucky gold prospectors, great motor manufacturers and earlier types of tycoon. And they, aware of their special position, suffer from the knowledge that it is a precarious one. "Hollywood." says Mr. Rosten, "is uneasy, uncertain, possessed by apprehension of the future-and with good reason." .

Players Are Settling Down.

This theme runs through the whole part of the book which deals with the social implications of the movie colony. The summing up, in this part, holds that there is a growing sobriety in the once wide-open town, and that, through social fear and the natural action of maturity, the screen plays boys and girls are gradually settling down. The second part of the volume upholds this contention. It shows, by statistical analysis, that divorces are actually much rarer among the stars than is generally believed; that incomes, when measured in terms of years instead of on a weekly figure, lose their imposing proportions; that the majority of the producers, actors, directors and writers are American born and not, as popularly supposed, Europeans; that the beloved Cinderella tale of the extra who becomes a star takes on reality so rarely as to be almost non-occurring; that, instead of being densely illiterate, as the Hollywood legend always assumes, the majority of the important movie people have gone to college. But, as said, it is not to be expected that this sturdy smashing of myths will affect the current beliefs about Hollywood at all. For the beliefs are rooted in desire, which is always superior to knowledge. And this does not mean that people are not going to read Mr. Rosten's book. They would read it even if it were more iconoclastic. Because, in and around and among its legend-shattering facts, it contains anecdotes about the stars—about Clark Gable, Norma Shearer, Errol Flynn, Deanna Durbin in the original production of "Mayand the others. The names alone would float a work much dullerand Mr. Rosten's book is not dull, but is consistently amusing.

The Doctors Mayo

By H. B. Clapesattle. University of Minnesota Press, Minneap-

It is not necessary to explain to any reader who "The Doctors Mayo" are. That is the most remarkable thing about their history. Books in most successful season last year with plenty about men of medicine have appeared in recent publishing seasons, Jane Cowl in "Old Acquaintance." and the heroes have included great figures in many fields. But, usually, the names of doctors have been unknown to the general public. Their work has been carried on in scientific institutions; the results of their good play, they can manage to oblabors have been publicized and assimilated, but their personalities have tain a role which runs the gamut not taken hold on people's imaginations. There is, in general, such a from youth to old age with plenty of feeling of austerity associated with the scientific worker, that ordinary make-up and wigs, there is practimen and women, though they revere his achievements, are almost afraid | cally no obstacle between them and of the scientist himself. This has not been so of the Doctors Mayo. their success. They have been known throughout the land, and their names have been household words not only in cities, but in villages and on farms. Representing a combination of high scientific achievement and warm humanity, they have been almost unique in the history of their profession.

The present book, a history of the brother team, William James and Charles Horace Mayo, makes the point that this rare combination was the flowering of a century of devotion to medicine in the Mayo family. There were, says the author, really three "Doctors Mayo." The father of the famous brothers also was a doctor and a pioneer in vitamins, the harmones sulfanilascientific research; he also had the human feeling for his patients which mide-these are the battle names of later characterized his sons. These drugs, so essential history was never lacking, and their actual establishment in a hospital to daily living, are not just so many of their own derived from two accidents described by Miss Clapesattle as names on an apothecary's shelves, "an act of God and the Sisters of St. Francis." The act of God was the some time or other dropped miracuhurricane of 1883, which devastated Rochester and brought the brothers, lously from the sky to save suffering then young in practice, into the limelight for their treatment of the injured. The part played by the Sisters of St. Francis of the Rochester convent was the nursing of the doctors' emergency patients: when the emergency was over, it had left, as Miss Clapesattle says, "an idea in the founding plished journalist, he has delved the mind of the Mother Superior." The idea took form in the founding deep into medical and pharmaof the hospital of St. Mary's, with the "old Doctor" Mayo in charge and his sons his assistants.

The book, after tracing the careers of its subjects so far, takes up the state of surgery in the 1880's, and discusses the additions made to understood. surgical practice by the brothers. It is evident that the author is well grounded in the subject, but her discussion, though sometimes technical is handled so as to be comprehensible to the ordinary reader. The Mayos studied with Dr. Halsted at Johns Hopkins and with Drs. Mixter and Richardson at Massachusetts General Hospital, undertaking the journeys at their own initiative and in fear lest, in the great cities of the East they would seem "too woolly and hayseedish"-"they got fresh haircuts and provided themselves with dress suits," says Miss Clapesattle, in order to offset such an effect. Then they went to the Ecole de Medicine of "Seventeen" and "Gentle Julia," of Paris. young people by the Public Library is Antoinne de St. Exupery's "Wind, Sand and Stars," an account of aviation pioneering in Africa and South America. The formative years in Abraham Lincoln's life are recounted by Carl Sandburg in his "Abraham Lincoln, the Prairie Years." #### The Battle of Waterloo Road

By Diana Forbes-Robertson and Robert Capa. Random House, New York.

This is one more picture of the humble people of England under bombs. The author, daughter of a great actor, Sir Johnston Forbesof the Atlantic, it has not been in Robertson, and, in private life, Mrs. Vincent Shean, has taken for her material one section of one street in London. Waterloo road near St. John's Church. By writing up a single average day in the lives of a number of the inhabitants thereabout, she has undertaken to make her readers understand what many thousands of Englishmen and women are enduring. She has taken real individuals for her examples, and the photographer, Robert Capa, who has collaborated with her, has followed out her narrative with a fine series of pictures.

Waterloo road is a street of the poor. Miss Forbes-Robertson has chosen typical citizens from its roster-a policeman, his wife, a charwoman, an air warden, an officer in the Home Guard and the Vicar. Father Hutchinson, who, she says, is known to everyone as "Hutch." She tells how Officer Gibbs puts in a stint of "digging for victory." or volunteer vegetable growing, after each day's work, and tops off with firewatching of a night. She describes Mrs. Gibbs' efforts to feed her large family adequately on her limited budget and food cards, and to do her bit in war work by tending to the shelter opposite her home and taking French politics. The period covtea each evening to those who spend the night there. And so on through the catalogue of humble lives which, for the present, have but one objective-to help their country win the war. The longest section of the book has to do with Father Hutchinson, whose church, St. John's, was bombed while 150 people were sheltering in its crypt—and without injury to a Plato's Republic, Pascal's Pensees soul. Pressed as they are by their war duties, the parishioners have and The Provincial Letters, John found time to clean the building of rubble and, though with no roof over- Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath, head, they have resumed services. But, providentially, it struck a beam of the ceiling and was detonated in the air.

The book is calculated to move the sentimental, as are most volumes of its kind. But it also will rouse the thoughtful, for its picture of the life of the London poor is full of stuff for thought. As Miss Forbes-Robertson puts it:

birth of the children through the various youth groups until the boys are ready to die in Hitler's armies and the girls to produce additional cannon fodder, whether in or out of wedlock. It is highly improbable that Hitler has been able to do what he wanted with German education long enough to produce the complete Nazified youth-that is, one who was taken from birth and educated according to the Nazi plan to present maturity. But these boys and girls now will be the men and women of a few years hence. Mr. Ziemer's book makes excellent British propaganda, and in more peaceful times probably would be taken with a grain of salt, as being possibly not the full picture of German education. But it is good reading, and if true, certainly education for death.

Red Cross Traveler Tells Story of War's Victims

Former Correspondent Saw Effect of Conflict on Plain People of the Continent

Let There Be Mercy

By John Maloney. Doubleday, Doran, New York.

In our absorption with the war-its spectacular developments, its grand strategy and its final outcome-we have been prone to overlook the little people of the world, who have been scattered before the cyclons

Mr. Maloney's book tells the story of the plain people of Europe who have lived through two and a half years of it. He tells the story simply and well, basing it on his experiences during one of the most remarkable odsseys of the war. The author has made his headquarters in Washington in recent years, and from this city he has left on trips that have carried him far. He says that, by the time he was 25, "he had seen enough human hate, unrestricted warfare and mass slaughter" to last many life times. This he had seen in China and Ethiopia, where he had traveled as a correspondent. But what he had witnessed was nothing compared to what he was to see when, shortly after the start of the present war, he left for Europe as a representative of the American Red Cross.

Expedited U. S. Mercy Shipments.

His task was to survey conditions in countries hit by the war, to estimate their relief needs and to do what he could to expedite the mercy shipments from the United States. Armed with Red Cross credentials, he had entree everywhere and had access to information that was available to few. His book carries the sub-title "The Odyssey of a Red Cross Man." and its vivid chapters recount not only the activities of a mercy worker but the impressions of a sharp correspondent

His first stop in Europe was in France, during the "sitzkreig." Already, the ineptitude and indifference that was to cost France its national life was evidenced by the callousness with which the government regarded the plight of Frenchmen uprooted by the war. Mr. Maloney was to return to France in the hours of the death of the Third Republic and see the bitter harvest reaped.

Through Central Europe-to Poland, dying; to Hungary, honestly and decently trying to take care of the 40,000 uninvited guests who had poured across her boundaries when Poland fell; to Slovakia, where the people of another broken country bravely pretended they were still a nation; to Rumania, where perplexed young Prince Michael strove to meet the crisis, and to Yugoslavia, where courageous people were preparing for the worst, the Red Cross representatives traveled. Always, he saw the plight of the Mannerheim's Last Order Was Ominous.

Then, he received orders to go to Finland. Four chapters of the book are devoted to Finland, and they constitute one of the most remarkable accounts of that little nation's tribulations. He reprints the final order of the day in which Field Marshal Mannerheim told his troops that the war with Russia was ended. It is interesting to recall the ominous final sentence of that order of the day: "We know that we have paid to the last penny any debt that we might have owed to western democratic civiliza-

Mr. Maloney was in Norway during the German invasion and then went to Germany, where he saw, in great, black circles around the airdromes, the bombers which, a few hours later, were to be leveling Rotterdam. He followed in the wake of the torrent of death which poured out of the Siegfried Line, through the Low Countries and into the heart of France. His last look at Europe was in Spain, the pitiful wretch of the continent-the first country to be hit by the scourge which swept on.

This is a remarkable book, which tells better than anything this reviewer has read what has really happened to Europe. For those who have given to or toiled for the Red Cross, it is "must" reading-because it reveals what is done with bandages sewed in Washington and with dollars hart)—An informative description donated in Middletown. And for all of us, it is a sobering absorbing record of the courage with which the little people faced the darkest hours ALFRED TOOMBS of modern history.

By John Robert Quinn. Kaleidograph Press, Dallas. Mr. Quinn, a Washington poet, here demonstrates a delicate but sure talent. He is a writer of short verse in conventional forms and on seemingly conventional subjects. But he has an ironical mind, and his poems are not described by mention of forms and subjects. They clearly carry individuality. Mr. Quinn's irony, however, is not of that kind which is so commonly met among the poets-an irony deriving from the obvious faults of the social system, the plain follies of the day. It is, instead, the more truly poetic irony which is drawn from contemplation of the constant failure which exists between man and his visions. In Mr. Quinn's work, the vision is inspired by nature's phenomena. In the beauty of the physical world, he sees his dream of perfection, and placing the dream beside the reality, comments accordingly. He hymns the pain of beauty in other words, but touches his strings lightly, indicating rather than emphasizing. His work is frail, but there is the quality of the true minor poet in much

One of the sights that attracts much attention is a group of figures of angels high on a hill. The hill remains dark, so they appear to be in the sky. They slowly come into view as the lights turn on one by one. Then they slowly fade away as the lights switch off. During all this change, one can hear the best loved Christmas carols being played softly near the angels.

As one drives slowly through town, he sees many Christmas scenes on every side. One that is always remembered is a small shed with life-like statues and live sheep. The scene is that of Mary holding Baby Jesus as she sat on the first Christmas in the stable outside of the inn.

On a hill in the distance a star shines down and completes the workmanship of the people of this happy little village.

People from many miles around gather to enjoy the beauty of this display and to share the real spirit of Christmas. They forget their everyday troubles and think for a while of Baby Jesus and of God, who made all this possible.

tops from the nearby woods. String the acorns or even the tops and then tie them with a gay piece of wool. This will make a nice and inexpensive bracelet or necklace for any high school girl or for a woman. If in between each acorn you put small beads of different colors you will be able to wear them with any number

Or maybe you have some pieces of goods of which you know you could make something, but you just don't know what. Why not make a gingham dog or a calico cat? You can embroider eyes, nose and mouth for these animals. These are the gifts that will catch many a young person's eye. I know almost every one has an old inner tube in the garage that is usually left around to decay. If you try you will find that you can cut out a very attractive dog or cat which you can stuff, and then out of darker pieces of inner tube you can cut eyes, nose, tongue and feet, My little inn was full-each room; which can be glued on with tire glue. ## Radio Turns On as Alarm Clock Sounds in Morning

Switch in Bedroom Serves for Lights In Other Places

PRIZE CONTRIBUTION By Billy Kramer, 16, George Washington High School, Alexandria, Va.

A practical youth, and an ingen-turn on the radio for him. He likes to listen to music in the morning when he wakes up, but he is generally too sleepy to turn on the radio. Since his awakens him, he Billy Kramer. decided that the clock could be put to good use if gather together it woke the radio, too. Therefore, he devised a sort of lever which socket. When the alarm went off, rent to the radio.

But that's not all. While on the subject of clocks, Danny disliked pine tree in front. Thousands of the chore of having to wind an old timepiece every day. (A pendulum through the center of town and affair, by the way.) Inventive genius again came to his rescue. He purchased two magnets and set one on each side of the pendulum. Then he swung the pendulum, and the magnets did the rest. When the pendulum approached one magnet, it was pulled toward the other. The clock kept running for several weeks without being wound. Danny claims that he thus discovered the secret of perpetual motion.

His clever work was destroyed however, when he decided to take the clock apart to look at the insides. This he did, but unfortunately he didn't know how to reassemble right one sees Santa Claus and his had become demagnetized of old age, so the clock was sent to a repair shop. It now runs by springs. Light switches are impractical, Danny says. He is annoyed by the fact that each light has a separate switch. Why not have one switch for all? That's what Danny has. Tired of being made to turn out his little sister's bedroom light when she had gone to bed, or having to turn out the hall light when his parents were going out. Danny connected all the lights to one switch which he placed in his bedroom Now, when he wants the lights to go on or off, he has only to press a floor button with his foot.

And still another device. Danny likes to listen to the radio after his family is asleep, the only catch being that it has been too loud. He immediately got busy and hooked up a set of earphones to the receiver. The idea worked beautifully for a time, but the extra strain on the tubes eventually proved too great. The radio is now in the repair shop with three blown tubes aret, you would try to find (a church; and a damaged condenser.

In the future, Danny wants to rig up another set of earphones to his radio, but this time they will be for broadcasting. He claims that if a phonograph can be hooked up to a loudspeaker, so can earphones. He says he is going to try out his idea some time soon. Danny lives at 727 Timber Branch drive, Alexandria.

YOUNG MARRIED MAN. YOUNG MARRIED MAN.

I need an energetic and responsible young man to associate with me in business. I prefer a married man over 21 years of age; a man who will do the things I have done for the past few years, can build his income up gradually to $5.000 per year or more within a reasonable length of time. The work itself is pleasant, and puts you in contact with a great many important people. The man who qualifies will be given the benefit of my experience and co-operation and actual field training if he wishes it. No investment of money, only consistent and serious application to work that will pay worthwhile returns. You need not have sales experience, but the right kind of character references will be necessary. Apply between erences will be necessary. I RAN AWAY FROM CHRISTMAS .... BY CHANNING POLLOCK

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

QUICK CHANGE

RECENTLY a stranger passing through Union, Oklahoma, stopped at the Bank of Union to get change for a $20 bill.

He asked the white-haired, friendly woman cashier where the nearest drugstore was: he needed razor blades.

"Right next door," she said.

When the man glanced at the clerk in the drugstore his eyes involuntarily popped wide. She looked exactly like the woman who had just given him change in the bank. A bit nervously he bought the blades.

"Where is the post office here?" he asked. "I want to mail a letter."

"Turn right when you leave the drugstore," the woman told him courteously. "It's directly next door."

IN THE post office the man took one look at the woman behind the stamp window and his mouth fell open.

"Excuse me, lady," he said shakily, "but did you just wait on me in the bank and drugstore or am I nuts?"

The man wasn't nuts. And if he had happened to need medical care when in Union or wanted to buy some insurance he would have been doing business with the same woman. For in Union, 54-year-old Mrs. D. P. Richardson is bank cashier, postmistress, drugstore clerk, doctor's assistant, insurance agent. On the side she's a housewife.

The secret to her multiple activities lies in an ingenious door system she arranged in the back of the long brick building which houses bank, post office, drugstore and doctor's office.

She can stand in the bank and hear when a customer enters the drugstore. Or get a signal from the doctor — her husband — that she is needed in his office, at the building's other end.

FIVE years ago Mrs. Richardson thought her varied career was in its last minutes. Armed bandits scooped up $200 from the bank tills. One of them stuck a gun in her back, ordered her to open the safe.

"That's impossible," she said. "It's under a time lock."

"Open it or I'll plug you!" the man barked.

"Well, I guess you'll just have to plug me," she replied calmly.

I RAN AWAY FROM CHRISTMAS

by Channing Pollock

and I wearied of Christmas and decided to "get away from it all." We had had a couple of very dull holiday dinners with relatives who didn't think of us much — or think much of us — the other 364 days, and we had revolted against the janitor and the delivery boys and what-not along the avenue of itching palms.

"I'm tired," my wife said, "of fighting crowds in shops, and wrapping things in tissue, and addressing hundreds of envelopes. I'd like to go where we could just have each other, and something really resembling 'peace on earth.'"

"There is an ancient and honorable hymn," I reminded her, "that runs, 'Peace, perfect peace, with the loved ones far away.'"

So we spent that Christmas in Taormina — and we shall always remember it as the drabbest, loneliest, most generally wretched 24 hours of our lives.

Not that we didn't get all we bargained for - and then some. Taormina, near the foot of Mount Aetna, is one of the quaintest, loveliest towns in the world. It has, or had, a palatial hotel that used to be a monastery, and is the coldest, most utterly impersonal of all possible places to spend the Yuletide. My wife and daughter and I rose at the usual hour and wished one another Merry Christmas -but there was no merriment, or anything that even remotely suggested Christmas. When we said Merry Christmas to the waiters and chambermaids, and crossed their palms with silver, they thanked us impersonally. Secretly we longed for our postman, who always rang twice at Christmas, and for the delivery boys, and for the two or three old servants who used to have Christmas dinner in our kitchen.

Nobody phoned, of course. At 10 o'clock we went to church in the biggest, most impersonal church I ever saw, with only strangers about us, and the service in a strange tongue. By then we were fairly aching for contacts with those we loved, whether or not we loved them or they us the other 364 days. So we strolled down the main street and sent vearning cables to all our sisters and cousins and aunts. No one replied; we had told them we wanted a quiet Christmas, and we got our wish. We opened the gifts we had bought (missing all the foolish tissue and tinsel and mess) and it seemed somehow odd and idiotic to be giving things to one another in big, empty, stone-floored rooms.

By night we felt like God's step-children, and we sat alone at a huge table in a vast dining room, ate antipasto and ravioli and duck with olives, and listened to a string quartet. On the way out, at the other end of the hall, we saw a Christmas tree, trimmed and lighted and surrounded by a gay group of holiday-dressed children and grown-ups. "That's nice of the hotel," we thought, and rushed for the tree as though it were an oasis in a desert. We were within a few feet of it when the doors were closed in our faces; this was a private celebration, and no strangers wanted. After that, none of us troubled to hide our depression. We clung to, and were glad — so glad — we had one another.

For the rest of our lives we shall spend the Yule season shopping, and wrapping, and calling Merry Christmas to everyone we see, and being warmed and happy that they call Merry Christmas to us.

THE truth of the matter is that we all need the hurly-burly of Christmas, when the world is open-house, and gay and openhearted. Those other 364 days we are remote from most of our fellows, thinking of ourselves and our business and humdrum preoccupations. We have been thinking of dreadful things, too, those 364 days - of marching men, and dead and dying men, and desolate and hungry women and children. For one day, it is blessed to retreat into childhood, and simple faith, and kindness and generosity, and all the memories and traditions of a festival born with the gentle Jesus. Scrooge may call it "a shopkeepers' holiday," but you and I know that something more precious than money goes into those shops, and something more wanted and needed than socks and slippers and rings and perfume comes out. The things we wrap in tissue and tinsel are not toys and ornaments, but tenderness and love and the wish to bring happiness to others.

All the spirit of Christmas, to me, is in that exquisite story of O. Henry's, "The Gift of the Magi," about the man who sold his watch to buy side combs for his wife's beautiful hair, while his wife was selling her hair to buy a gold fob for his treasured watch.

Since our own cheerless Christmas journey, I've found a good many other people who have tried to spend Christmas in Taormina, in some manner of speaking. But I've never known one who will ever try it again. A dear, wise woman I know had a letter from a friend who said he'd decided "Christmas is a nuisance" and was asking all his friends to ignore him on that occasion. At Christmas, the woman wrote him: "I'm disregarding your request, so that you may have one message of love and remembrance on what you are going to find the emptiest day you have ever experienced." Before night, she received an almost tearful telegram saying she was right.

Christmas, when you come to think of it, is an annual miracle; an annual rebirth of Christ. At the sign of clock and calendar, millions of us who give little thought to religion the rest of the year find ourselves remembering the Star and the Wise Men. For a time, the meanest of us become generous, the most relentless become forgiving. Even the men in tanks and bombing planes pause, if only an instant, to remember home—to realize that there are such things as homes.

No, Christmas in Taormina is no good, unless you belong in Taormina and your heart dwells there. That goes for Timbuktu, Tasmania and Tillamook, Oregon, too. For when you really escape Christmas, you escape humankind.

SIDELINES

PROBLEM. Recently the editor of a prominent newspaper in southern Norway was confronted with a serious problem. The Nazi-controlled press bureau sent him an important dispatch. Accompanying were strict orders to display the story prominently with a striking headline on Page 1.

The editor read the story, recoiled at the first sentence: "During recent weeks there has been an utterly fantastic increase in the membership of the Nasjonal Samling (The Norwegian Nazi party) in and around Oslo."

There was no way out: he had to obey orders. He thought for a while. Then, with instructions to the printer to set it in large, black type, he wrote this headline:

"UTTERLY FANTASTIC!"

LUCK. Paul Kearney, whose "The Parachute's Parents" appears in this issue, was in the other day and told us a story he picked up while gathering material for his article:

At Mitchel Field this summer a flier made a practice parachute jump. Making sure that he'd clear the plane, he jumped too high, cracked his skull on the top of the door — plunged out, unconscious. But just as he twisted and turned over, a part of the plane's tail brushed across his chest—and snapped the rip cord! The chute opened normally. The pilot landed safely—and still unconscious!

DEDUCTION. A group of five-year-olds were being taken through a baking plant as part of their school training to familiarize them with the processes involved in producing foods. For half an hour they watched dozens of loaves of bread popping out of a chute. Then a workman had to adjust something on the chute and went around the machine, out of sight of the children.

One of the youngsters asked, "Where's he going?" Before the teacher could explain, another came out with: "I don't know where he's goin', but I bet he comes out bread!"

NAMES. Iowa is well represented in our new Army. Recent draftees from that state include Robert E. Lee, Robert Burns, Woodrow Wilson and Herbert Hoover. All are within the maximum age limit, though.

PARVEY stopped kissing Sue so that he could look at her. He looked and breathed deeply, and in tones more ecstatic than even Sue believed possible he gave out, "Now we're engaged!"

Even in the romantic dimness of the country club porch he saw doubt on Sue's lovely little face. He clutched her. "Aren't we?"

"Yes. Except — '

"Except what, precious?"

"There's Daddy."

"Well, sure. I suppose I'll have to speak to your father about us. But he ought to be used to your getting engaged by this time. Oh, but Sue, this is entirely different, isn't it? You never felt like this before, did you? Tell me I'm the only man you ever really loved!"

From the deep experience of her eighteen years Sue murmured, "Oh yes, Harvey. Except," she added in the interests of truthfulness, "my father, of course."

Premonitions washed over Harvey. He took Sue's hand firmly. "You know when a girl loves a man and he's her fiance like I am, well if it comes to a showdown or anything between her fiance and her father, why naturally a girl has to go and choose her fiance. You believe in that, don't you, precious?"

"Why, I — "

"Don't you, Sue?" he anxiously pressed. "I guess so."

Harvey breathed easier. "But why shouldn't your father be simply delighted? I mean everyone in town knows he always wants you to have what you want."

"Only," Sue pointed out dismally, "if it's good for me."

"Mean to say he won't think I'm good for you?" "Well, of course, he just barely knows you, Harvey. "You know something, Sue? I kind of feel he doesn't like me." The same idea had struck Sue.

"Precious" — he reached for her again — "you've just got to remember what I said about a girl cleaving to her fiance if, for instance, it was a case of choosing between him

Sue nodded, knowing that direct cleaving was far too direct a method for her to bother with. Her life had been prolific with embellishments that eventually achieved her purpose. "What I'll just do," she announced, "is make Daddy like you."

Harvey had not known Sue for almost six weeks without learning (and hearing) a thing or two about her. Practically everything was in the class of solid platinum; but sometimes when he was shaving or eating an oyster or otherwise not completely concentrating on her charm, he realized that Sue held no stock in the old adage about the shortest distance between two points being one straight line.

An unmarried woman in Southport who had her widowed father's best interests at heart had reported to Harvey's aunt that poor, dear Mr. Summers had simply been inveigled into presenting that clock, with its maddening six P.M. siren, to the town so that Sue would know when to tell Princess to put the potatoes on. There were other things

"I'll make him like you," Sue repeated meditatively. "I'll throw you together a lot."

"Now we're engaged, I expect I'll be around your house a great deal. We can sit with your father evenings before we go places."

"Yes, but I'd also be there to take your mind off Father, Harvey. Now in New York it would be different, and you are both in New York day after day!"

"But I have to work during the day," Harvey recalled morosely. "And I suppose they keep your father pretty busy too.' Why, Harvey Brown, you know my father's a broker!' 'Well, he works days, doesn't he?"

"He says hardly - in recent years. Besides, he owns the firm. But this is my idea: Do you really have to take a train as early as the seven-eight every morning, Harvey?'

"Yes, because I have to get to my office early. By doing that, I can get off early twice a week to go to my egg farm."

"Father has been leaving later and later," Sue reflected. "He says since Roosevelt but I'il just have to make him go earlier. I'll see that he makes the seven-eight. Then you can sit with him all the way in to Grand Central and get really acquainted. See?"

"Fine. I'll tell him about my hens. That ought to impress him. Because what other fellow my age owns property like that?' He could tell that Sue was impressed, so much so that she lost track of the orchestra playing inside. And if she was impressed to that extent, why not Mr. Summers? She and her father generally thought alike, if Sue put her mind on it.

"First thing I did when I got that inheritance from my uncle, I bought that little ole egg farm," Harvey told Sue, not for the first time. Until he had met her he had been well content to spend two nights a week and all his week ends out there with his feathered friends and, of course, their caretaker. Even now, when he was with his beloved, he frequently thought of the busy, happy scratching on his property with something akin to outright nostalgia. As he had remarked to Sue, soon he would be running the farm out of the red, breaking even. .

"SHALL we go in and dance?" Sue asked softly, all her plans well-laid.

"Precious," Harvey responded dreamily, "have you ever considered the egg?"

"I don't think I quite - " "It is not only the greatest food possible for man, but it is the cleanest."

Sue gathered up her frothy skirts. "Shall we go in and da —

"Hermetically sealed by nature, the egg comes to you - "

"Isn't that fascinating! But I've just thought, Harvey, maybe I'd better go home. If I have to get Daddy up in time for the seven-eight, I'll have to be up too."

Mr. Summers was awakened the following morning by Sue's singing. He bounded out of

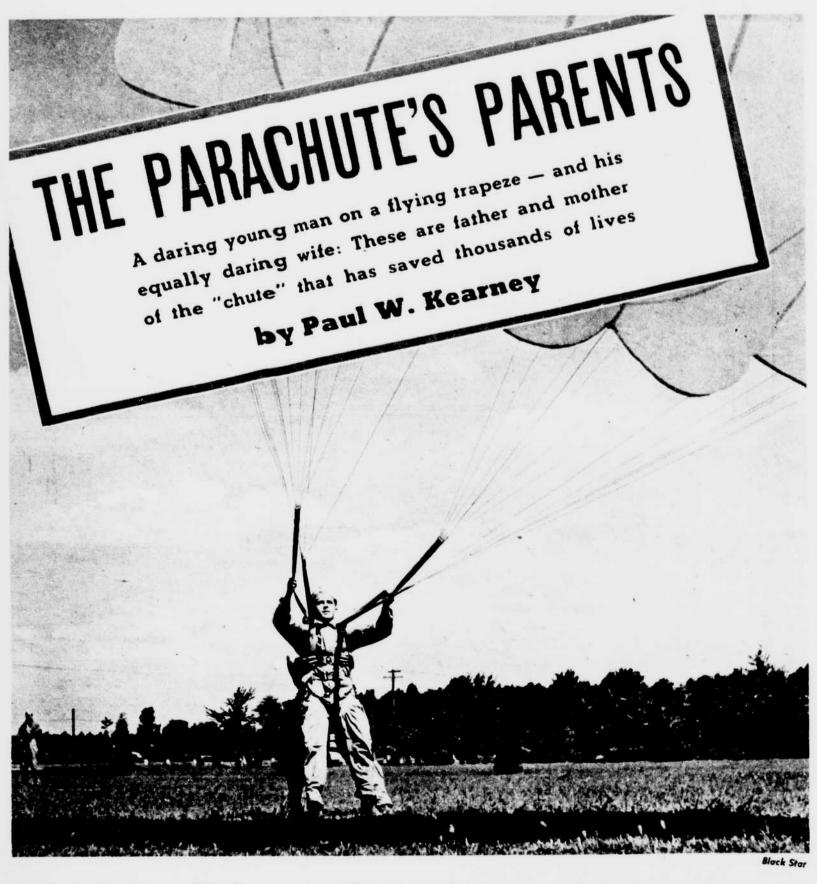

"Sue!" he called over the banister, girding his bathrobe tightly. "What's the matter?"

The singing stopped. Her face tipped up from the lower hall. "Matter, Daddy?" "You up and around and it's barely six

"Well, I had an idea, Daddy."

Mr. Summers shuddered. If Sue was to start having ideas at six A.M., there was no telling what might happen. He grasped the PP IN Manchester, Conn., one Floyd Smith chuckled reminiscently when he read in his newspaper this October that Arthur Starnes, veteran parachutist, had just achieved a "free fall" of 28,500 feet before pulling his rip cord.

Starnes's feat was no stunt but a scientific test in the interest of Air Corps research. And Floyd Smith chuckled because it was not so many years ago that aviation bigwigs scoffed at his crazy notion that any man could jump from a plane and retain consciousness long enough to open his own parachute.

Approaching 60, Smith is a unique figure in aviation. In fact, his whole family is unique. A former circus aerialist who married his partner in the act, Hilder Youngberg, he is the man who perfected today's parachute. Quitting the circus, he and his wife built a tractor biplane in 1912 which Smith taught himself to fly in six easy lessons! A month later the dauntless couple flew 47 miles in 67 minutes to break the existing speed record for airplanes. Several years later Floyd himself set three altitude records for seaplanes.

Settling down to this new game in earnest, the one-time trapeze artist became a test pilot for Glenn Martin. And after a nervewracking crack-up from 1,500 feet in a disabled plane -- from which he was lucky enough to walk away - he added parachutes to his interests in a serious way.

Buying one in preparation for the next crack-up of a test ship, he made three or four practice jumps to see what it was like. Intrigued by his description of this new thrill, his wife took a fling at it herself. Her first jump went off all right. But her second was the last she ever tried: getting fouled in the lines, she dropped to within 400 feet of the ground before the recalcitrant chute finally opened — in the nick of time.

The shock of that incident convinced Smith that the idea of the attached chute which then prevailed was all wet. Ever since Leonardo da Vinci had designed the first one, chutes had always been fastened with a light cord to the balloon or, later, the plane from which a man jumped. When the silken canopy was pulled from its rack overhead by the jumper, the cord helped jerk the chute open, then was snapped by the jumper's weight.

Aside from the great risk of fouling, however, there were certain spin conditions in a plane in which a man couldn't get his chute free. "So," reasoned the former aerialist, "the thing to do is to carry the chute on your back and open it yourself when you're clear."

This, remember, was only 23 years ago yet everybody snorted at the outlandish idea. They got their pencils and showed him that a man who jumped from a plane would fall 119 miles an hour. "You couldn't stand it," they said. "Your faculties would fail. You'd lose consciousness. You'd be dead before you got the chute open.'

"Baloney!" said Smith quietly. "I've nosedived faster than that in an open cockpit plane. I've fallen from the top of a circus tent to a net scores of times, and I never lost my faculties.'

A Fool-Proof Parachute

Our of that conviction came the first radical change in parachutes in two centuries: the back-pack, free chute. But it didn't come easily. Months of effort to get a sure-fire device were interrupted by our entry into World War I, during which Smith served as final inspector of all Army aircraft production in the 1st District.

Ultimately, however, the renowned General Billy Mitchell heard of his parachute pioneering and ordered him returned to that field exclusively. And early in 1919 he was finally convinced that he had perfected a foolproof rip cord and spring combination - and was ready to prove it.

Much to his chagrin, however, a young man of 22 named Leslie Irvin arrived at McCook Field on the day set for the first live jump with word from H.Q. that he was detailed to make the test. Irvin turned out to be former circus high diver and a balloon jumper who obviously knew his way around in the air. So, with Floyd Smith at the plane's controls and the new parachute strapped to his back, young Irvin, on April 28, 1919, made the first "free jump" on record.

Thousands who gathered below to watch the "nut" commit suicide were amazed to see him land safely. More important, a score of top-ranking officers in military aviation were convinced, albeit reluctantly, that it could be done. And on that day the parachute really became the "life preserver of the

To us sedentary folk who consider parachuting the last word in personal risk, it is interesting to note that the man who designed the first free parachute and the man who made the first jump in it are both alive and very healthy 22 years later. Irvin is chief engineer of a British parachute factory; Smith is the same for a friendly American rival.

And, due to their pioneering, over 2,000 fliers in this country alone have escaped from disabled ships and lived to tell it.

The services of the Smith family to parachuting, however, by no means end with the contributions of husband and wife. A new figure appears on the scene now in the person of their son, Prevost. A graduate aeronautical engineer, Prevost Smith has joined his father on the research angle and has developed the world's first parachute-testing tower. From a boom on this 50-foot structure a chute on a dummy can be whirled at any desired speed, opened at will, and the action studied at leisure in slow-motion movies made by a camera on the tower arm.

"A great thing," says Smith the elder, not without pride. "In the past we've tossed dummies out of planes and tried to watch them on the way down - which has limitations. Now we can actually see everything a chute does, repeated fifty times if need be. This is just like the wind tunnel for airplanes and will prove just as valuable."

The point he makes is that while there has been a lot of jumping in the past 20 years. there has been little scientific thought about it. The vast majority of jumps have been in a crisis when the act seemed a slightly lesser evil than death. And those who have made the most jumps - old-timers like "Stub" Campbell and John Tranum with 2,000 or more - were stunt men, not engineers.

Now the engineering mind is going to find out some things. For instance, they want to know why one test chute will explode while another, under more severe conditions, will operate perfectly. Or why one turns inside out and the next one becomes a "streamer" (doesn't open) while 10 more in the same batch of silk all behave beautifully.

Only the good ones go to market, of course, for all chutes are "drop tested." And when you consider the difficulties under which they are used (usually without previous experience) and note that the vast majority of the relatively few fatalities have been among stunt jumpers, you realize what a sterling record the life preserver of the air has.

They've Got to be Good

It's such a good record, in fact, that we take it for granted - yet this superlative performance doesn't just happen. The parachute represents generations of trial and error and its operation encompasses far more practical physics than is apparent to the eye.

In early Army tests, for example, they had men jumping off ladders with ropes tied around their chests to see how much shock they could stand when brought up short as when a parachute opens. They found that a 12-foot drop was enough to knock a man unconscious - and on that basis that modern harness was designed to dissipate and distribute the shock of the opening impact.

That was no problem for the old balloon jumpers, but it became a real one when planes began to move fast. And it reached its ultimate a few weeks ago when a test pilot with one of Floyd Smith's chutes bailed out of an Airacobra diving at more than 300 miles an hour. Without scientifically designed harness, the shock of being jerked from a speed of over 300 miles an hour to about 12 miles an hour would be fatal.

The parachute has come a long way since da Vinci - thanks to the Floyd Smiths.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Smith

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HAD CONWAY dropped the shafts attached to the water barrel, then sat down on the barrel. He always rested before dragging the barrel up the steep pitch ahead. This, invariably was the period for depressing thoughts — when a man almost doubted himself. He thought of his bride, Margie, seventeen, Massachusetts-bred, and her love of the old-fashioned New England Christmas.

"This is going to be one hell of a Christmas," he grumbled. He got between the shafts again and pulled like a horse. The heavy barrel of water fought him every inch of the way up the hill. He just barely made it, and the muscles in his legs were trembling from the strain.

He sat down on the barrel again and gasped for breath, while his heart pounded against his ear drums. Chad could see his hundred and sixty acres now, and the ten-bytwelve frame shack. The patch of white on the prairie was Margie, gathering buffalo chips for fuel.

Before sour-faced Eli Fleming had foreclosed the Riddel mortgage, Riddel had loaned Chad a team once a week to haul water the mile and a half. But after the foreclosure, the generous rancher had loaded his family into his wagon and gone on.

If ranchers kept failing, Eli Fleming would soon own the whole country. Many insisted that was his purpose, but Eli claimed he would deal generously with the right men. He loudly argued that he was a banker, not a rancher, and the right men in a community could do more for him than he could do with the soil. And his stern-faced wife, who really had the money, always nodded.

The Conway mortgage was due December twenty-fourth. Chad might pay it off if his spuds brought in any money. If not — Well, Fleming would own another homestead.

He hauled the barrel to within a half mile of the shack before resting again. He could see Margie's washing hanging on the line—dirty brown sheets, and underthings of the same color. A man can't haul wash water a mile and a half, so she had used water from a buffalo wallow.

HE HAD found her sobbing after she had hung it up to dry. "Never mind," he had said, "some of these days this shack will be a big white house with trees around it. You'll have a kitchen like Peg Marshall's over at the Lazy-M. You'll have running water, from a deep well, not a buffalo wallow. You'll have a machine to do your washing — maybe they'll hook up a washing machine to a steam engine sometime and make a woman's work easier."

Margie had smiled through her tears. "Chad," she had said, "you're the most hopeful person I ever did see. You think nothing's impossible. The next thing, you'll be saying men will travel in flying machines."

"I hadn't thought of it before," he had answered, "but I don't see why not."

Whenever he sat on the barrel and rested, he wondered if he was really a practical man. He wanted those he loved to have the best of everything, and he made them promises which he was confident of keeping. But facts seemed forever knocking his plans into cocked hats. This country needed hard, ruthless men. Sentimental, soft men would never win the approval of those who counted — such as Eli Fleming.

Well, he had been warned of all this in advance. A week after his wedding, Fred Davis had come over and said, "Goin' to Kansas, eh? Figgerin' on homesteadin' eh? To succeed out there, you have to be harder'n the hubs of hell and have imagination."

- "I've imagination," he had said.
- "But you're sickly."
- "Kansas will build me up, I'll grow hard."
- "Kansas will kill you."
- "I'll find that out," he had said, remembering Kansas had beaten Davis.
- "You're only a kid."
- "I'm twenty-one."
- "And your bride is only a kid."

"Her sister Kate was sixteen when she married, and sister Lucy was fifteen. Margie's seventeen. She's a grown woman."

"She came darned near bein' an old maid," Davis had dryly observed. "But I see I'm wastin' my breath on you. Just wanted to save you goin' ou't there and gettin' licked. Some men stay licked. It seems like they never can get started again. You're a fool, Chad, to risk it."

Ten days later he was in Kansas staking

"Eli," Mrs. Fleming said sharply, "state your business. Don't sit there like a bump on a log"

his claim, putting in a spud-and-corn crop, borrowing money from Eli Fleming to build a shack, and realizing that a man with the dust of a New England factory in his lungs wasn't much of a resource as men go.

There had been bright spots — Margie's arrival, and that night when cowpunchers had scared her out of her wits with a horse fiddle and shooting twenty-six guns into the air as fast as they could empty and reload. There had been a ring of empty shells around the cabin next morning.

The Lazy-M dances were another bright spot, with extra men dancing together, and all the girls and even the old ladies chosen each number. Old man Buck sawed away on his fiddle, kept time with his heels and called. You could hear his, "Gents salute! Ladies salute! Let 'er go, lickity scoot!" a mile off on still nights.

Chap hauled the water to the shack, rolled the barrel to a platform, pulled the plug and let the fluid trickle into the open barrel with the tin dipper hooked on the side. Smoke was pouring from the open door, and Margie was shifting the stove pipe from the north to the east window because the wind had changed. She came out, coughing and flushed.

He started to say, "Some day you'll have a real good stove with a pipe that'll draw right." But he decided it was time there was less promise and more performance in his life. At twenty-one a man should face facts as they are, and not live in the clouds.

Margie said, "Dave Lawton rode by while you were away and left this letter. I think it is payment for the potatoes."

His fingers trembled as he tore open the envelope, and he looked at the bank order. "Not quite three hundred dollars," he said.

"Three hundred dollars is a lot of money," she cried excitedly, and began thinking of the thing she needed. But she wouldn't think of mentioning them. A man, older and wiser, naturally handled the money.

"We owe Eli Fleming nearly two hundred," he said. (She was thrilled that he used "we" instead of "I.") "Then we'll need sugar, flour and things like that."

"Do you suppose we could squeeze out a little for Christmas?" There! It was out before she could check it.

"I don't see how we can," he answered after a moment's thought. "There are so many things we need. You see, we aren't just going to prove up and sell out. We are living here until we die."

He saw a shadow fall across her face, and he sensed something of her loneliness and heartache. "But it won't be like this," he said. "You'll have a big house, good water, a stove that will draw and — things." There he was promising again.

"And a well, with a windmill so you won't break your heart hauling water," she added, "and a horse and wagon. You won't always be carrying things from town on your back. But—Christmas! Could we spare two dollars do you think, Chad?"

Two dollars. That would be about the price of the new hat she had looked at in Sadie Lyman's window — the little one with the two red roses on top. "What could you get for two dollars?"

"I could get a chicken and eggs at Trent's, a quart of cream at Deering's and a pumpkin at Sherwin's," she said. "That would take care of most of the dinner." It meant walking nearly eleven miles to call at the three places. "It'll be our first Christmas, Chad, and we'll never know a sweeter one."

A dinner, he thought, and nothing more. Then he recalled she had hidden something several times when he came in unexpectedly. She was making him a gift. He wished he could do something handsome for her.

"Take money out of the bean can for the chicken and cream," he said, nodding at their treasury on the top shelf. "I'll walk to town first thing in the morning. Eli will know the spud money has come, and it is a wonder he isn't out here now, waving the note under my nose."

"Perhaps he has learned from bitter experience he must get his share quickly or not at all," she said. "Maybe he doesn't enjoy foreclosing."

"He wants the whole country, they say," Chad answered. "The Riddel place is the best he's picked up yet.

I'd like to own it." There! That dream had slipped out of his mouth, too.

"Chad! Do you really think we could own one like that — ever?"

"It's nothing. We'll have one bigger, a lot bigger, with a fine house and barns, gravity water and —" He broke off abruptly, very much disgusted with himself.

"If we could afford cigars for you I'd be happy. You've missed them."

Women were funny, he thought. They knew more about a man than he ever guessed. Even brides. He had missed his cigars like the very devil. But she didn't know he hoped to make a deal with Eli for the Riddel place. That would be a step up — their first. That wouldn't be promising. It would be performing...

The wind changed twice before bedtime, and Margie had to shoot the stove pipe through different windows. She was really getting expert at it.

She pretended to be sleeping after they went to bed, but he knew she was awake there in the lower bunk, planning their Christmas, and at the same time picturing the preparations back East—the wrapping of gifts, the packing for the short railroad trip to the old home. Sister Kate would bring the new baby along, proudly displaying it to the neighbors who dropped in. Aunt Rhy would be conjuring miracles in the kitchen, chasing small boys away, then relenting and calling them back to lick spoons and dishes.

Jams and jellies would be brought up from the cellar. Mincemeat, made weeks ago and half frozen, would be opened up to thaw. People would be sleeping everywhere, and everyone would hang up his stockings. Around five o'clock Christmas morning, or even earlier, the children would be up. Some of the old folks would be annoyed because their sleep had been disturbed, then someone would say, "Christmas is for kids," and that would make everything right.

Chad Conway wasn't any kid, but the pictures memory conjured filled him with nostalgia. "Gosh," he asked himself, "am I just a darned kid after all? It's time I grew up if I expect to beat this country." He would have found comfort if he had touched Margie's shoulder, but he knew she was fighting it out with herself, and sympathy might start her crying.

He fell asleep because pushing the water barrel a mile and a half had made him dog-tired, and when he awakened, Margie had a fire going and the coffee pot on. There was no wind stirring and the stove didn't draw well, but she managed to get breakfast.

Chad walked into town — four miles — after breakfast. He loafed around until the bank opened, then he dropped in. Fleming was sitting at a desk facing the window. Folks said he could see where everyone spent the money they drew from the bank. His window covered the stores and saloons on the opposite side of the street.

His wife, a big woman with wide hips, large bosom and heavy, determined face, sat nearby, going over the records. "I see you're on time," Eli said. "Annie, hand me his note."

The woman handed over the note without comment, but she studied Chad openly. The latter drew a deep breath and took the plunge. "I'd like to make a deal with you on the Riddel place, Mr. Fleming," he said.

"Got any more money than this?"
He picked up the bank order.
"No."

Fleming was shaking his head negatively before the answer was out of Chad's mouth. "You'll be deeper in debt, Conway," he said. "Can't do it."

"Sure, deeper in debt," Chad agreed,
"but I'll be worth more. It's a step upward. I could turn in my place on the deal, though I'd rather keep it."
"Why?"

The woman was missing nothing, pretending to be reading a paper.

"Good soil. In time, I would figure to buy the land in between."

"That's a large order for a man with a shoestring."

"Land is one kind of security," Chad argued. "Why shouldn't a man be another kind — worth making a loan on?"

"Not yet. You're only a kid." Fleming spoke without emotion.

Chad raged inwardly, but there was no sense in flying off the handle.

Chad said, "Then I'll pay off the note, but I'll leave feeling I'm standing in my tracks when I could've taken a step ahead."

Fleming made some notations, marked the note paid, and shoved the remainder of the spud money at Chad. There was less than he had counted on, by seven dollars. He had forgotten several months' interest. He left feeling sick over the entire transaction.

The seven dollars was important. He crossed to the store and stared a long time at the cigar display. He started to enter several times, changed his mind and finally went down the street, to Scott's store. He ordered needed staples and counted his money, then stepped onto the walk.

A man was smoking a good cigar.

UNEXPECTED STORY

You planned to fake the editor's assignment, didn't you, Chuck? But things didn't turn out just that way

by Sewell Peaslee Wright
Illustrated by John Scott

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

THEN Tolman yelped "Say!" in that tone of voice it meant he had an idea — and a city editor's ideas usually mean leg work for somebody. Chuck looked, and sure enough, there was a glitter behind Tolman's steel-rimmed spectacles.

"Now what?" queried Chuck.

"Story!" Tolman was grinning happily. "The Spirit of Christmas in Lanesburg.' You know: Human-interest stuff; heart throbs; the joy of giving; happy faces; excited children, bright-eyed with expectation; parents laden with presents; the clink of silver in the Salvation Army kettles, and the smiling Santa Clauses. Go get it, Chuck — and bear down on it!"

"Nuts!" said Chuck. "That's old stuff."

"The spirit of Christmas is old, but ever new," Tolman said, sounding as though he were quoting something; for that line had appeared in at least ten million editorials, Chuck was positive. "Go get it, Chuck!"

Chuck sighed, and stretched wearily. "Whatever you say, boss. But remember it was your idea, not mine."

"Make it good," ordered Tolman. "We'll splash it on page one, with a by-line."

"Better wait till you see it," Chuck advised, and went out into the bright afternoon sunlight.

A thin, pinch-faced Santa Claus paraded up and down in front of a store, sandwiched between two blatant signs. His sleazy costume hung in folds; the false beard was on crooked, giving him a rakish look which still missed being funny.

Chuck nodded, and the man merely looked at him with incurious, faintly-antagonistic eyes. A woman, her arms filled with bundles, bumped into Chuck as he sauntered on.

"Try lookin' where you're goin', why don't you?" she snapped. She looked worried, harassed; a strand of hair hung out from under one side of her foolishly youthful hat.

"Sorry. Merry Christmas!" Chuck said sardonically, but she didn't hear him.

He elbowed his way into a shop. A shop for men, crowded with women. There were five clerks selling neckties. Chuck groaned as he studied the racks of ties.

At the knitted-goods counter a woman was unfolding sweater after sweater, and throwing them down on the counter. "Funny thing," she said, "you don't have a forty-four in the place. What's the matter?"

The clerk shrugged his sagging shoulders "I'm sorry, madam," he said wearily.

Chuck shook his head and shouldered his way out of the shop. He wasn't doing so well. He had known he wouldn't do so well. No one with an adult mind, not hypnotized by pages of pretty advertising, the radio, the decorations, and the senseless chatter of the juvenile mentalities who went for anything and everything, would be taken in by this high-powered annual effort to move a vast amount of merchandise — much of it junk.

Not that he was bitter; Chuck told himself emphatically that he was not that. He had merely insulated himself against the senseless hysteria of the season; he had retained a normal perspective. It was like arriving, cold sober, at a drunken brawl, and remaining cold sober.

A couple of blocks farther on, Chuck saw a plain-clothesman he knew standing on the curb, with the nippers on a ratty-looking man in a threadbare overcoat.

"Doing any good?" asked Chuck.

"Waitin' for the wagon," laughed the detective. "Got a dip here." He glanced at the ratty-looking man. "Great time o' the year for the leather lifters, you know."

The ratty-looking man glanced up, looking meaner and rattier than ever. "You got nothin' on me, flatfoot!" he said.

"They didn't want me to cook," Mrs. Gaines said, "but I didn't want men messing around in my kitchen — and I won!"

"Well, Merry Christmas to you," said Chuck. "So long, Ben."

He was wondering, as he moved away, what old Tolman would say if Chuck handed in the real story of his search for the spirit of Christmas. Fire him, probably.

Thank heavens, this was the kind of assignment you could fake — if you had a good imagination. Chuck grinned secretly.

He had a good imagination.

Chuck went over to the public library, favorite hangout of reporters with special assignments of this sort. It was warm and quiet there, and the chairs in the reading room were reasonably comfortable. And one could always alibi he was looking up some references, if the worst came to the worst.

He nodded to the good-looking blonde behind the desk. "Pretty quiet today," he

"Business always drops off around Christmas. Although we still have our regulars." She indicated the listless, weary figures of the bums in the reading room.

Chuck recognized a few of them: the huge Russian whose thick, battered lips moved constantly as he read; the pale, pinch-featured, redheaded young fellow with a tic which kept one side of his face twitching; the fat man with the horsy vest; the old woman in black. Week in and week out, you could find them at the same long tables — battered old derelicts in this quiet literary backwash.

Chuck considered that phrase with some little pride. It wasn't bad. Some day he would write that novel . . .

He wandered off and flopped down at one of the big tables. He fished out an envelope from his breast pocket and an automatic pencil with a funeral home ad on it.

Let's see. A little girl with a nickel for candy, putting the coin in a Salvation Army kettle... That would be good.

A man and his wife who have lost a little boy invite a dozen waifs to have Christmas dinner with them — a tree, and presents the things they would have had for their own little boy . . .

That was nice going. Old Tolman would eat it up. Chuck felt he could really get going on that one.

And there ought to be a man-behind-themask story: The real story of a street corner Santa Claus when he goes off duty, takes off his red-and-white uniform, the whiskered mask... That one was always good.

Chuck could feel the story coming: "We'll call him John Smith. That's not his name — but it will do. You probably passed him time after time on the streets of Lanesburg, hardly noticing him. But the kids did; they told him their secrets, their dearest wishes, and John Smith — Santa Claus — patted them on the back and chuckled, and promised them in his husky voice that he'd remember, and do the very best he could for them. But you didn't know, and the kids didn't know, that at John Smith's home were — "

There was a sudden disturbance, and Chuck looked up, frowning. A guy just gets a good idea cooking, and then somebody knocks it for a loop.

THE woman in black had fallen on the slick linoleum floor. She still lay there, not moving. Just breathing, and making clawing motions with one outstretched hand.

The blonde behind the desk was staring; Miss Wittmer, the assistant librarian, was coming with a purposeful stride. The fat man was already bending over the sprawled figure; the Russian and the redhead had pushed back their chairs and risen.

"Stand back, please," ordered Miss Wittmer. "All of you." She bent down and pushed the fat man away. "Just what is the matter, madam? Are you injured?"

madam? Are you injured?"

The old woman tried to lift her head. "I'm — all right . . . Just — wait a minute — "

Miss Wittmer smiled brightly. "Of course," she said. "As soon as you get your breath. I know — I slipped on the ice last winter —"

"Not her," said the towering Russian in a voice that rumbled even though he was obviously trying to keep it down to a whisper. "She's hungry, that one. Starfed. I haf seen it too many times."

Christmas Leave

Did you ever hear of the White Glove Test? The neatest home in America would flunk it - but a U. S. warship has to pass it every single week!

PEXT time you clean house, madam, I should like to give you a taste of Navy housekeeping. Dressed in an immaculate uniform with a pair of freshly laundered white gloves, I'll appear at your door shortly after the crack of dawn. With a brusque nod, I shall stride rapidly from room to room, from cellar to attic, scowling fiercely at everything from floor to ceiling. And whenever I spot a door, a molding, a beam or anything else above eye level, I'll ruthlessly run my white glove all over it.

If the glove comes down smudged, you'd better start praying!

Having studied the whole subject of Navy housekeeping lately, I could impress you with a lot of other hints on everything from rolling a blouse so it won't wrinkle to budgeting food purchases down to four decimal points. And lest you make the common housewifely error of thinking that budgeting means skimping on the size of the portions, I'd like to show you a typical Navy mess. It is an impressive thing at any time - but at Christmas dinner, especially, it would make you wonder how both ships and men can stay affoat with such a cargo of provender!

We'll come back, presently, to food in general and Christmas dinner in particular. Meanwhile, that whiteglove stunt is an eloquent sample of Navy Housekeeping, its Principles and Practices. For of all the habitations of man, including homes of the Pennsylvania Dutch, not one is cleaner, neater, tidier than an American warship.

Besides being scrubbed down every single day with fire hoses and stiff brushes (none of that "lick-and-apromise" stuff!) a warship is forever being inspected. And after six successive days of relentless cleaning, comes "Field Day Friday," when everything gets specially scrubbed, scoured, shined and polished in anticipation of the serious inspection on Saturday

How the Navy Keeps Neat

THERE are over 1,000 bluejackets on a modern "battle wagon," yet if you paid them a call, you'd think they hadn't a stitch to their names except the clothes on their backs. The average housewife will find it simple to multiply Daddy, Junior and Uncle George by 333 — and envision mountains of sweaters left on newel posts, trousers draped over chairs, socks "put away" on the bedroom floor. But not in the Navy. True, there is always somebody going around picking things up after you. Only on shipboard anything you leave "adrift" is promptly confiscated and put into the "lucky bag" - and the only way you can get it back, even if it's your only pair of pants, is to pay a penalty for your carelessness in the form of extra duty of some sort.

Wouldn't a scheme like that work in your house, Mrs. Reader?

In the Navy the landlubber soon learns that the term "shipshape" means meticulously tidy. And no matter how good a home a recruit comes from, the Navy's toughest job is teaching him to keep trim - not so much from the hygienic standpoint as from the angle of neatness with his belongings and his working gear. The whole Navy attitude is epitomized by the coil of rope you see on a deck as contrasted to the way we jumble it up in our basements. It all simmers down to plain efficiency: there is no space to waste on a ship, hence any disorder is inexcusable. And when you consider that disorder is the leading mechanical cause of our 4,850,000 home accidents, there is a significant tip there for the householder!

This efficiency and space-economy is apparent in every phase of naval housekeeping. Take a 10-by-15 room, for example; if two civilians had to use it for a bedroom, they'd find themselves pretty crowded. But on a modern destroyer, 12 men and their belongings would practically rattle around in that space, and 15 would just about fit comfortably. It's all done with triple-deck cots suspended from the walls - or "bulkheads," as they say aboard ship. These cots, which are rapidly displacing hammocks, have springs, a mattress and two blankets. Pillows are eliminated by the expedient of rolling your outer clothing in a neat bundle and placing that under the mattress cover at your head.

Spare clothing and "personal gear" are stowed in a locker 24 inches square by 18 inches deep. The recruit is dismayed at the insurmountable problem of getting everything in that tiny area, but when he learns to fold and roll, Navy style, he finds that everything does just fit.

Water, Water, Everywhere

NEATNESS, naturally, extends to the person as well as to the gear. Even on a compact "tin can" (destroyer), there are ample shower-bath facilities and rows of stainless-steel washstands, all with hot and cold running water. Lest you take such things for granted, remember that scads of contemporary sailors recollect when each man got a half-bucket of water in the morning. With this he cleaned his teeth, washed his face and hands, took a sponge bath and laundered his clothes!

The ultimate application of economy of space is in the galley and scullery kitchen to you, lady. The old-fashioned kitchen in my own house, for example, is 18 by 20. The architect certainly did not design it to accommodate more than a dozen householders. Yet on the training ship, U.S.S. Prairie State, itself an oldtimer, they prepare food for over 500 men in a galley smaller than that feeding the whole gang in two shifts, cafeteria-style, in 55 minutes flat! The same efficiency, in ratio, extends to feeding 1,200 to 1,500 men on a battle-

Being an old hand at dishwashing myself, I hadn't expected that the boys could teach me anything in this line, but they did. Even the newlywed, of course, knows that water which is too hot cooks certain residues, such as egg, on the dishes - hence the preliminary cool rinse beforehand. What surprised me, though, was to see them dip very greasy plates into water chilled with ice before putting them in the washing machines. The idea is to cake the grease hard first so that it will whisk off quickly in the machineand I don't see why the same principle wouldn't work in hand washing at

Be that as it may, the thing which interests the bluejacket (don't call them "gobs") is the product of these galleys, not the methods. And if you want to know what that product's like, just ask the next hundred sailors you see, "How's the chow?" It is safe to bet that you'll get 100 answers and they'll all add up to SWELL.

Right now they are saving space for the best feast of the year - Christmas dinner. The menu on every ship in the fleet will be every bit as luxurious as you'd get in the best hotels.

And Christmas dinner isn't any exception to the rule. The rest of the year Navy chow is A-1, too. From the standpoint of cooking and from the standpoint of quality, quantity and variety, these housekeepers with the rolling gait leave absolutely nothing to be desired.

Coming from a seafaring family, I can assure you that it was not always thus. Back in the glorified days of frigates like the Constellation, it is a matter of record that the seaman got one pound of hard bread, one and a half pounds of salt beef and a half a pound of rice for a day's provisions -

"Starved?" asked Miss Wittmer, horrified.

The redhead cut in briskly: "Sure. Not enough to eat. You wouldn't know about that. You get lightheaded, and your knees don't work right."

The fat man with the horsy vest nodded sagely. "I am inclined to believe this gentleman's diagnosis is correct," he said. "If you will permit me to examine the patient, I'll -

"Are you a doctor?"

"No," said the fat man. "Not exactly. Not any more."

"Then I'll call one." Miss Wittmer straightened; started for the desk.

"Just a minute," interrupted the redhead. "I know what that means. A city doctor in a hurry, a charity ward, a bunch of nosy people asking questions. Maybe the old dame don't care for that. Why not give her a break? Look, she's better already."

The Russian lifted her to her feet.

"She's okay," said the redhead. "Well — if she's perfectly all right," hesitated Miss Wittmer. "She'll have to — to go somewhere, though — the library isn't the place - '

"My car's only a block away," said Chuck. "I'll be glad to take her home." The librarian cast him a grateful glance. "That's awfully kind of you."

CHUCK glanced in the breast pocket of his coat to make sure he hadn't forgotten his notes in the excitement. Give those ideas a little blowup, and he'd have a yarn worth a by-line and a box on page one!

The Russian helped the woman into the car, and sat down beside her. The redhead got in the back seat with them, and the fat man sat down beside Chuck. "Where to?" asked Chuck as he turned the car away from the curb, the ice cracking under his tires.

The woman gave him an address, and Chuck nodded. It was on the wrong side of the tracks; a long way out on the wrong side.

It turned out to be a dreary little cottage with loose clapboards and a tiny, sagging porch. Chuck stopped the car, and they all piled out.

"Thanks - so much," said the woman. "I'm all right now."

"You guys run along," said the redhead. "I'll make a fire for her."

"Oh, there's a fire; don't bother, please. I'll manage very well," she protested.

"No smoke coming from the chimney," observed the fat man.

"There's no coal," she said. The big Russian nodded sagely. "I haf guessed it. No food, no coal." "Well, what are we standing around out here for?" demanded the redhead impatiently. "It's cold. Talking about it won't help." He took the woman by one arm, the Russian took her by Chuck motioned to the fat man, and drew out his billfold. There was a five in it, and two ones. He drew out the V and slipped it to the man with the horsy vest, who wasn't a doctor any more. "I'm sorry," Chuck said, "but I've got to go. Take this and fix her up with what she needs most." "Thank you, sir," said the fat man. "This is most generous of you."

"How does Mrs. Claus feel about this sort of thing?"

"That's all right," Chuck said, feeling very foolish as he got into his car. 'A very Merry Christmas, sir!"

"Oh, sure," said Chuck. "Merry Christmas!" . . .

He drove over to the Elks' Club and pawed through the magazines for an hour. It wouldn't do to get back to the shop too soon - and he already had the notes for his story.

It was dark by the time he got back to his desk again. He ran a sheet of copy paper into the mill and lit a cigarette. He started to write, slowly at first, and then at a speed which made the typewriter rattle. After a while he stopped and glanced through the pages he had finished. Pretty good.

The little girl with her nickel had delivered a very touching performance. It had the right ring; the feel of a December day, of neon lights and the shuffling feet of crowds, of wreaths and decorations and the noise of heavy traffic and the sharp-voiced bells ringing on every corner.

Chuck lit another cigarette. He didn't smoke them - just a quick puff at long intervals - but he had to have one burning on the edge of the desk. Then he started in on the yarn about the mother and father who had lost their little boy and were feeding the waifs in his stead. Good stuff, all of it; tried and true - old but ever new, as Tolman had said.

But it didn't go so good after a few minutes. Chuck kept thinking of his five bucks and the fat old duffer who had snapped it up so quickly. Probably had converted it, or a goodly part of it, into liquid refreshments by now.

If he'd been smart, he would have ordered and paid for some coal, and sent out a basket of groceries, and then given her name to one of the organizations that attend to people like that. What with taxes where they were, and the Community Fund on top of the taxes, nobody ought to be cold and hungry. Unless, of course - Chuck ripped the half-finished sheet out of the machine, gathered up the other sheets, and tucked them in his pocket.

Old Tolman spotted him. "Hey!" he said. "Where the hell are you going?" "Out," said Chuck, hurrying.

THE windows of the little cottage glowed with the yellow light of kerosene lamps. It looked warm -

Chuck rapped sharply on the door. The redhead opened it. "Oh! It's you. You sounded like a bill collector. I was going to have Mikhail throw you in the street. Come in."

Chuck entered. It was warm inside, and there was the rich, steamy smell of chicken stewing. In the center of a table covered by a threadbare redand-white checked cloth, was a tiny Christmas tree. The fat man was spotting it with tufts of cotton; the Russian - Mikhail, undoubtedly was trying to hang a few bright ornaments. His huge fingers made it a difficult task.

Chicken, thought Chuck, and a Christmas tree and ornaments! Just like a bunch of children. Maybe they would have champagne, too - a case of beer, anyway.

"Come to share our Christmas cheer?" asked the fat man. "You're very welcome, I'm sure. Mrs. Gaines is engaged in the culinary department at the moment, but—ah! Here she is!"

The woman came in from the kitchen. She had changed to a faded blue house dress, with a patched apron. Her eyes were bright, almost gay.

"Merry Christmas!" she said. "They didn't want me to cook, but, on the other hand, I didn't want men messing around in my kitchen - and I won!"

"A quart of milk will work wonders. sometimes," the fat man observed softly. "Won't you sit down, sir?"

"Call me Chuck." he suggested. And then, to Mrs. Gaines, "Whatever you're cooking smells awfully good."

"Chicken!" Mrs. Gaines said proudly. "Doc brought it. And the rest of the things - well, everybody brought something. It'll be a regular feast.'

The fat man nodded happily. "I ran across a gentleman who had many (Continued on page 13)

SAFETY BEFORE FUN

The Yuletide rush paves the way for accidents. Don't let them happen!

Safe now — but be careful when you set it up inside. If you use worn or substandard tree lighting, you flirt with danger

POTHING curdles the Christmas spirit like an accident. And, with all the rush and bustle and excitement, there is no season when it is easier to have one of these unfortunate mishaps in the home.

Here are a few simple ways to help keep the Christmas season happy in your home:

Use only non-inflammable decorations for the tree.

When you start opening gifts, bring in an empty carton to use as a trash box so the floor won't be cluttered with wrappings, ribbons, boxes and other things to trip the unwary. Keep a pail of sand or ashes handy for icy steps or walks.

Get rid of excelsior packing quickly: with smokers about, it's dangerous.

If Pop's going to dress up as Santa, use non-inflammable whiskers or have the whole costume fireproofed.

Be scrupulous about the wiring of the Christmas-tree lights: use only standard, approved circuits that are in A-1 condition.

In New York City alone there are 50 to 60 Christmas-tree fires every year - and a fireman doesn't make a very good Santa Claus!

banister for support, drawing back. Her cheery voice wafted up again: "Don't you want to know what my idea is, dear?" "No, dear."

"You're not very encouraging." "I'don't intend to be, dear."

However, since he was thoroughly awake, there was no sense in going back to bed. He ate his breakfast omelette between conversational dodges destined to keep Sue's mind away from ideas. She responded to his suggestion about a lapel watch with enthusiasm, and Mr. Summers thought fondly what a good little sport she was; once he had made it clear he 't interested in any of her new notions, she didn't harp. He wondered why on earth people thought he spoiled her. Anyhow, if you couldn't spoil your motherless little girl, what could you do?

Then, before he knew it, she had him in the car, and to his infinite astonishment he found himself on the 7:08 being hustled into New York. Well, he would have a look at the headlines and catch a little nap -

'Good morning, sir.' Mr. Summers looked up. He recognized the young man standing beside him as one of Sue's latest admirers. He had just time to ask himself again why a girl as attractive as his daughter seemed to attract only nitwits, before this one was edging himself into the seat beside him. "Well, sir," Harvey beamed, "I've been hoping we could get better acquainted, sir." There were few things Mr. Summers detested more than being called "sir" by whippersnap-

"I figured you might be interested in hearing something about that little ole egg farm I have, sir."

"Passionately."

"I've got three hundred beautiful hens, and well, sir - "

The following morning Mr. Summers' slumbers were interrupted by a lilting radio voice: " - Now I know all you homemakers will want to write down this lovely reci-

He was bleary-eyed at breakfast, and dark Princess, bringing in bread and no sign of a muffin, had that I'mgoing-to-give-you-notice look. Sue, he saw, was bleary-eyed too. It slightly heartened him. The half-formed suspicion that these crack-of-dawn risings might not have been incubated in his child's brain with entire innocence, occurred to Mr. Summers. He gazed at his omelette with disdain. The word "incubated" had too much of a hen ring after yesterday's confab that gosling Harvey. gested sausages for the following morning, and while Sue went ahead of him to get out the car, he slipped Princess a five-dollar bill.

HE WAS quite fearful Sue might fall sound asleep at the wheel driving home from the station and he was worrying about it when Harvey's sociable voice resounded above the noise of the rushing train. "There you are, sir. Nice running into you again."

"Do you always take this train?" "Oh, yes, sir. Early to bed and early to rise - Just like my chickens, sir!"

Wearily Mr. Summers moved over. But next day, Sue was so far behind on her beauty sleep that the entire household slept until long after the 7:08 had borne a disappointed Harvey into New York. He telephoned Sue at eleven-thirty.

"How am I going to impress your father if I don't get to see him?'

"I think I'm going to have to figure out something besides that early train, Harvey. Or else I'll have to buy an alarm clock and," Sue went on virtuously, "that would be an expense. You know I have a budget."

Harvey, with his mind on the future, did not quite like to suggest that Sue disregard her budget. He just said plaintively, "If your father doesn't take to me soon, you remember what I have said, precious?"

"About your hens?"

"No, about how if a girl really loves her fiance, she chooses between him and her father."

'Yes," said Sue, uncertainly.

"I was figuring on telling your father this morning about my Black Leghorn hens," Harvey confided. "Not the Whites, mind you, but my wonderful Black Leghorn hens -

Sue took a new hold on the receiver. "Harvey, why do you always talk about your hens? I mean, why don't you ever say anything about your roosters?"

"What's a handful of roosters?"

"A handful?"

"I've only got six roosters. But those three hundred hens -

A lump came into Sue's throat. Then she had an idea. Quick as a wink she had another. "Harvey!"

"What?"

"Harvey, don't you come around tonight like we planned. Instead, you invite Daddy and me to your farm Sunday. Will you?"

"Well, I should say so!"

"Because when Daddy sees you there being capable -" She hesitated, wondering just what Harvey did about chickens when he was being capable with them. "But anyhow, you'll see my father honestly likes you. You'll know he does Sunday."

"You mean when he sees me on my property -

'You'll know before he sees you there. It's one of two ideas I just got."

She couldn't wait to hang up and call to Princess that she had to go into New York and wouldn't need lunch. "And there's enough for you and Rodeo, isn't there, Princess?"

"No'm."

"But there must be something left over from last night."

"Souffle," Princess replied glumly.

EGGS, it occurred to Sue, might be hermetically sealed, but they couldn't be made into a stew next day. But because she was so happy, she wanted everyone to be happy too. "I'll stop at Max's for fryers. And uh, Princess, save some for Daddy's and my dinner, will you?"

"Well, I'll try, miz Sue." . . . Sue had never spent a day in New York like that one. She just made the four o'clock train back to Southport by the skin of her teeth, and then she had to wabble through five coaches before she saw her father. He was rather spread out on the double seat, wedged in beside him. "Oh, gosh!" Mr. Summers muttered. Then he saw it was Sue "What are you doing here? I didn't know you were coming into town today.' "I wasn't. But I had to."

"Not ah -- planning anything special, are you?" "No, I've finished."

"And I wasn't even requisitioned," Mr. Summers remarked thankfully, handing tickets to the conductor.

Sue sighed. She wondered if she cleaved to Harvey how often she'd be able to see Dad. Life seemed hard until she remembered the difficult day she had spent so that it wouldn't be. She said, "You're so wonderful, Daddy."

"I know."

"I admire you a great deal."

"I know."

"Why do you say 'I know' like that when you don't mean it, dear?"

Because I gave up disagreeing with you about anything, dear.

"You mean you just positively agree with anything I say, dear?"

"Anything, dear."

Sue took a long breath. She couldn't believe her luck. "We're going out Sunday to spend the day on Harvey's egg farm."

'Great jumping leapfrogs!" "Now, Daddy, you vowed you wouldn't disagree with anything -"Touché! Or hoist by my own petard or, as my old aunt Emaline used to say: 'When someone gets the best of you, why make the best of it!" "

Sue concentrated on love almost entirely until it was time to leave on Sunday. She ate eggs with the mixed feeling that she was helping Harvey's career and that it brought him nearer to her spiritually. It was from this period that Princess's aversion to the fruit of the hen in any form could be dated, and it was directly responsible for her later fame for eggless cake. "Daddy," Sue had remarked casu-

"Fine," he nodded. "Glad you take these social burdens off my neck."

She was going further into the matter when she thought he might be thinking of the new income taxes and shouldn't be bothered. But in the car that ideal Sunday morning, she tried for thirty miles to decide whether to go thoroughly into Daddy's present to Harvey, or just to let nature take its course. Nature won.

"Take it easy," Mr. Summers rasped as they whirled around a corner.

Sue slowed down resentfully. Maybe it would be all for the best if she had to cleave solely to Harvey for a while. He never fussed about her driving, at least.

Mr. Summers began to be depressed by her silence. Gradually it frightened him. What had come over the child? He stole glances at her with mounting fear. She looked different, she looked in love! Everything became clear to him in a flash. Those sunrise departures with that hen fellow talking him to death - Sue had planned them.

She was in love with that gosling with feathers on his brain!

Mr. Summers plunged into a mighty gloom. He'd always expected Sue to marry some day; only natural. But it was hard. You raise a girl singlehanded and just when she's about perfect, along comes some squirt and away she goes. He wondered miserably if he'd made things as happy for her as he could. He remembered hundreds, thousands of things he wished he hadn't said.

"It's down this road." She broke the silence. He caught something happiness, excitement, impatience in her voice that wrenched his heart. "What a lot of dandelion stuff blowing around, isn't there, Daddy?"

Disconsolately Mr. Summers brushed some fluff from his coat.

"I never saw so much." Sue brushed vigorously too. "Why it isn't dandelion, it's -

"Feathers," Mr. Summers offered, as the car stopped on a dime. Nothing appeared to the naked eye as they alighted but tossing, clucking, rushing bundles of feathers, until the figure of Harvey swam up from their midst, But was this Harvey? This baleful, angry, gesticulating fury waving its arms and shouting above the squawking fowls?

"You - you - " Harvey's sputter gained momentum as he neared the two Summerses. "A man your age doing a thing like this! Did you think it funny? Did you think it was a joke?"

Hearing himself addressed so belligerently, Mr. Summers turned inquiringly to Sue. Her blue eyes were wide with astonishment. "Why, Harvey, what's the matter?"

"Matter! Your father tried to ruin me! He sends down here three hundred roosters with his card tied to every

"Ah," Mr. Summers observed, flicking fluff from his sleeve.

"OF ALL the bonehead things for a man to do!" Harvey came close to Mr. Summers. "I should think any man'd have more sense than - '

"Stop that!" Sue wiggled herself between the pair. "How dare you talk like that to my Daddy? He didn't send those darn roosters. I did! But I've certainly found you out in time, Harvey Brown! If you think you can talk to my father like that, you were never more mistaken in your life! He doesn't have to stand that from any - any hen man! My father's worth eight million of you. Daddy Feathers drifted on them all. Mr. Summers propelled Sue gently to the car. "Goodby," he called gaily to Harvey from the driver's seat, "If forever, then forever fare thee well."

Sue sobbed, "The very idea of his talking to you like that, dear." Mr. Summers went into high, "Of course three hundred adds up to quite a lot of roosters, dear." "There were only two hundred and ninety-four, dear."

'Why, dear? What restrained you?" "He already had six. And I knew he only had exactly three hundred hens." Mr. Summers did not even smile. Nor did he consider this an occasion for instruction.

"You always tell me to be practical," Sue sniffed.

"It was practical, Sue; practical and beautiful." She swallowed. "About the bill.

Daddy. I - I don't know just where to put roosters on the budget." "Under amusements," Mr. Summers suggested. "And very cheap at

IF SANTA BRINGS PERFUME

Use it carefully and you'll enjoy it more by Sylvia Blythe

ET's talk about perfume, in anticipation of what almost every woman expects to find weighting the toe of her Christmas sock.

When you slip the bottle out of its ennobling case, think of your perfume as a tiny world of floating enchantment. Finger it dreamily, and thank yourself for winning perfumepraise from beau or husband. Smile, and wonder at its seductive name. Lift your eyebrows at its top-lofty label. But think of it as one or the other of two kinds of perfume that you need to complete your wardrobe. And know what you are up to when you wear it.

This sound advice comes from a man. He's Herbert Scott, a successful young perfumer who knows his subject as an artist knows paintings, who has learned it from the flower fields and from the test tubes. He talks it so well that he has been drafted again and again by college girls and club women to appear on the lecture platform to tell them MORE.

Perfumers think up scents, says Mr. Scott, as designers think up clothes, to satisfy two distinct uses needs for daytime and for evening. A daytime perfume is a light and delicate floral, truant enough to give any nose a tantalizing chase. An evening perfume hits an opulent note and has come-hither, like a décolletage gown or dinner dress slit to the knee.

Major Felten

So, to that one important bottle which we hope you find in your Christmas sock, add the other-occasion perfume, even if you have to give it to yourself, and even if it comes in a bottle no larger than your lipstick.

How to apply perfume? To the pulse areas where gentle body heat touches it off, and not only intensifies the fragrance but holds it longer, thus necessitating the use of only the stingiest dabs of the precious stuff. Besides, most outer clothing is never too friendly to perfume. The exception are furs and tweeds, which can take it, if perfume is sprayed on.

But friendliest and most responsive is your own skin at these spots: the palms, inside the wrists, on the shoulders, at the base of your throat, and along the hair-line from the temples to the backs of the ears. But don't apply perfume to the hair itself unless hair is pretty fresh. Perfume oils and hair-oils don't always take to each

There Are Exceptions

THIS suggestion to apply perfume directly to the skin is by no means absolute. If your skin is quite dry, it may try to slake its thirst with your perfume oils, leaving you nothing much in the way of fragrance to waft about. If that is the case, spray your perfume on the lace of your undies or on your handkerchiefs. Or perfumesoak little cotton pellets, and cache these inside your dress, your purse and your hat band.

To get the most out of your perfume — that is the definite note you want it to strike and hold - and to keep the liquid line high in your bottle, use one or more of the perfumesatellites to surround your important scent. These are toilet water, eau de cologne, and sachet, all three of which you can use if you will ensemble them properly with your perfume.

harmonizing your scents. Toilet water, which is a dilute of

By ensembling, I mean matching or perfume and which can be matched to your important scent, gets localized application, just as perfume does. Confine it to the neck and shoulders. But it also lends itself to other ingenious uses: a spray for your hair, a sweetening rinse for your lingerie, the glamorizing of the paper with which you line the drawers of your clothes chests, the perfuming of the water in your bathtub.

A Good Substitute

COLOGNE, which can be harmonized with your perfume, can be substituted for toilet water and, since it is usually less pronounced, can be used much more lavishly. In fact, you can slather it all over your body to emphasize freshness and to help prolong the note of your perfume.

Sachet, matched to your perfume, does its bit in a more remote way by invading your clothes as they lie in drawers or lingerie cases or hang in closets.

There is something to be said about taking care of your perfume, guarding it against the petty larceny of light, heat and air. Best protection against the ultra-violet thief is the deluxe little cardboard box which houses your perfume. Lacking that, keep your perfume in a dark place. That spot should also be one where the temperature remains static, since changes in that won't do your perfume any good.

But the worst thief to be on guard against is air, since evaporation will filch more perfume from you than leakage will, though you usually watch out for that especially. To prevent evaporation, return the stopper to the bottle after you use your perfume, and screw it tight. The stopper locks, and air can't possibly sneak in, if you turn it so that the ground surfaces of the stopper and the bottle are lined up properly. Don't worry about being unable to open your tightly-turned stopper. The stubbornest one lets go of its grip if you will tap another piece of glass against it lightly. What does the trick is the vibration that comes when glass hits chickens and no inclination to shovel snow," he explained, and glanced at the reddened palms of his hands. "The elementary principle of barter still functions," he added.

"Oh," said Chuck. "Nice little tree you have there."

"Ain't it a dandy?" exclaimed the redhead. "A little skinny and lopsided, maybe, but at this time of night on Christmas Eve what can you expect for a nickel?"

"A nickel?" asked Chuck.

"It was all I had," said the redhead, "and I talked the guy out of the other twenty cents."

"You could talk the devil out of his pitchfork, couldn't you, Red?" asked Doc, winking at Chuck.

"I could try, now," admitted Red cheerfully. "Them ornament things are kind of busted here and there, so I got him to throw them in for good measure. He couldn't sell them, so what the hell?"

"Why, Red!" said Mrs. Gaines. Red colored up and looked foolish. "I slipped," he said. "Sorry."

"You were very lucky," commented Chuck, "to get a delivery of coal so quickly, on Christmas Eve."

Mikhail started laughing, and the windows rattled. "You got a good back, you haf coal when you want it," he said. "To the coal yard it is not a mile, quite." He shrugged.

"He made two trips, and there's coal enough in the bin to last a week, at least," said Doc. "But you didn't tell Chuck about that little matter of your treasured samovar, and the antique dealer, Mikhai!."

Mikhail looked darkly angry, and moved his huge shoulders uncomfortably. "Oh, that! It was in my way."

Chuck nodded, and sat down. He had felt quite like Mr. Bountiful when he came in. Now he felt small and insignificant. He was here; he knew them all by name: Doc had called him Chuck, but still he was not one of them.

Doc came around the table to where Chuck was sitting, and bent over his chair. "Here's your money," he whispered, tendering a folded bill. "You can give it to her yourself, now; we were saving it as a little surprise — a Christmas present. We couldn't do much, of course. Red is a bit of an artist, and he's giving her a water color - rather a good one, I'd say. Mikhail is giving her his father's uniform. His father was an officer in the Tsar's forces — the uniform is of very good material, and very large; Mrs. Gaines will be able to make herself an excellent warm suit from it, I'm sure." Chuck looked up. He felt like looking up to all these men - these bums.

'And you, Doc?" he asked softly. "Nothing very useful, I'm afraid. Just an old copy of Omar - rather well thumbed. My - my wife gave it to me, a good many years ago. Mrs. Gaines - likes good things.

"It won't add up to much - except your gift, of course. But the poor woman has really fallen upon evil days, Chuck; her husband died last year, and this is her first Christmas alone. We've been trying, Mikhail and Red and I, to fix things up so it would be at least a little like a real Christmas. With your gift, and what little we've wangled here and there, it should - you're not leaving, Chuck?"

"For just a little while," Chuck said curtly. "An hour, maybe." "Shall we wait? The chicken?"

"If you don't mind," said Chuck, gratefully. "I wouldn't miss it for anything!"

CHUCK walked slowly toward the Press building. It was getting late, and there weren't many pedestrians on the street. The people had left the business district, and had gone home. A phrase came to him; something he had been groping for: "Home for Christmas." That was it. That was the thing he had not understood.

Christmas was not in the stores, the crowds, the decorations, the corner Santa Clauses, even. Those things were just the shell, the case, the outward token.

It was like the case of a watch. It looked like a watch, even without the works - but unless the works were there, ticking away, it was just a useless shell.

For an instant it seemed to Chuck he had made a great discovery. Then he realized that he was only seeing clearly what millions of others had already learned, each for himself.

He drew in a deep breath of the cold, clean air. It was good in his lungs. It seemed to give his brain a great clarity and that queer, electric quality which he knew meant he was about to write quickly and fiercely and well, each word as purposeful and cleancutting as a scalpel.

The head he used was not the head old Tolman had suggested. Chuck wrote his own head: "THE THREE WISE MEN OF LANESBURG," and below it the story grew without ceasing, to the sound of the rattling type bars and the slam of the carriage as it shuttled back

by Grace Turner and Dometria Taylor

HRISTMAS on Thursday! A long week end after it! Holiday appetites at home! Folks dropping in — funny, old-fashioned, homey word "folks." We like it, especially now, especially this year, full of harsh words like guns, ships, tanks, planes, taxes and priorities. We list our own priorities, domestic ones: - a rull pantry, hospitality, and the "folks," whether they're our boys from camp, our sailors from the sea, our men from the factories, our Bigwigs in Washington, or just the people next door.

So trim the house! Set the table with fine, red linen and glass and silver, amusing Xmas choristers and flametipped candles. And above all fill up the cake boxes and "goodie" shelves.

THIS WEEK'S cranberry conserve, for instance, is brand new, with an interesting flavor-combination... These brownies have dates in them. Ever hear of that before? Cooked slower and longer than usual, they have a special texture with all the soft virtue and none of the soggy fault of which brownies are sometimes guilty. ... As for the frosting - it looks pretty, studded with gem-like bits of diced fruits, especially between layers of a white cake. . . Finally here's another new one, sponge drops! They're not quite cookies and they're not exactly cake; but they're wonderful. ... Come into the kitchen, "Folks," and try your hand at something baked, something new for an old-time Christ-

THE RECIPES

Cranberry Conserve

2 cups cranberries

1/2 cup orange juice

11/2 cups sugar

1 cup seeded raisins

1 teaspoon grated orange rind 1/2 cup sliced blanched almonds

Wash and pick over cranberries. Add orange juice. Cook over low heat until skins burst. Rub through coarse sieve. Add sugar and boil slowly 10 minutes. Add raisins, orange rind and almonds. Chill. Approximate yield: 214 cups

Xmas Frosting and Filling for Cake

21/2 cups sugar

34 cup boiling water

1 teaspoon baking powder

2 egg whites, beaten stiff 1 teaspoon lemon juice

2 3-oz. packages mixed, diced, candied fruits

Combine sugar, water and baking powder. Stir over low heat until sugar dissolves. Cook to 238° F. or until syrup spins a thread. Pour syrup slowly on beaten egg whites, beating constantly. Continue beating until frosting holds its shape. Add lemon juice. Add mixed fruits to 1/3 frosting; spread between 2 layers of white cake. Cover top and sides with remaining frosting. Decorate top with candied cherries and citron, if desired. Yield: enough frosting to fill and frost a 2layer cake 10 inches in diameter.

Date-Nut Brownies

1 cup sugar

2 tablespoons melted shortening 2 squares (2 oz.) unsweetened chocolate, melted 1 cup pitted, sliced dates

1 cup broken walnut meats

14 cup cake flour

1 teaspoon baking powder

1/4 teaspoon salt

Combine eggs and sugar, mix well. Add shortening and chocolate; beat thoroughly. Stir in dates and nuts. Mix and sift flour, baking powder and salt; add; mix well. Spread batter in greased and floured pan 8"x8"x 2". Bake in a slow oven (300° F.) 11/2 hours. Cut in squares and dust with powdered sugar. Approximate yield: 16 squares.

Sponge Drops

1/2 cup powdered sugar

2 egg yolks, well beaten

1/2 cup sifted flour

1/4 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon vanilla 3 egg whites, beaten stiff

Add sugar gradually to egg yolks. Mix and sift flour and salt; add slowly to first mixture. Add vanilla. Fold in egg whites. Drop by teaspoons on baking sheet lined with waxed paper. Bake in moderate oven (325° F.) 10-12 minutes, or until golden brown, Approximate yield: 36 sponge drops.

and forth on the ancient typewriter. Page one . . . page two . . . page three . . . Chuck rolled the fourth page into the machine, snatched a puff from a cigarette, and started to wash up the story:

"And so it was that the three wise men came bearing gifts. Poor gifts, perhaps, as you and I would judge them on the shopkeeper's shelves, or under our own Christmas trees - but these gifts came not from shops, but from the heart, and they were placed beneath a tree which a man had bought with the last small coin he owned in all the world.

So long as Christmas can awaken in men this spirit of giving and of sacrifice, so long as the hearts of men open, and the faces of men are unashamed of that softness and sentimentality which is part and parcel of Christmas, so long, I think, shall mankind be justified in asserting its kinship with Deity."

Chuck ripped the final sheet out of the machine and slipped it under the others. He dropped the story on Tolman's desk.

"That's it," he said.

"'Bout time," grunted Tolman. He started to skim the story, but in a few seconds he slowed down. When he had finished, he glanced up at Chuck.

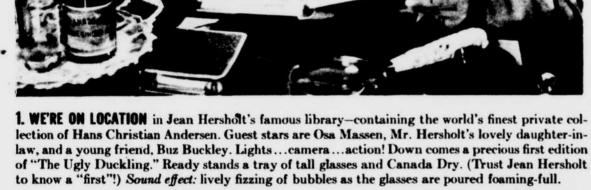

"Not bad," he said. That was the best Tolman ever gave anything. "You got anything to do, you might as well shove off, Chuck." He scribbled for a moment, and yelled for a copy boy.

"Thanks, boss," said Chuck. "If you don't mind - I'm having a Christmas Eve dinner with friends."

Tolman nodded. "Merry Christmas!" he laughed.

"Merry Christmas!" said Chuck. There was a ring in his voice, and the smile on his face felt a mile wide.

WHAT'LL YOU SAY?

Here are some Christmas thank-you letters. Think well before using!

ETTER WRITERS' guides have strangely neglected a discussion of missives expressing gratitude for Christmas presents. This season, therefore, we are happy to offer forms to cover three fairly common contingencies. First, a sample letter from a young nephew to his bachelor uncle who has thoughtlessly presented him with a large box of blocks:

Dear Uncle Frank -

I am only a little boy and cannot write yet, so my mother told my father he would write to you for me. I think my blocks are fine. There must be four or five dozen of them, Father says. I delight in flinging them around, especially under the sofa. Father spends a lot of time picking them up, which amuses me no end. He says to tell you he hopes that next year you will give me something that will stay put - and he doesn't mean a bass drum, either.

The other night he missed picking up one of the blocks and when he came downstairs barefooted in the dark to see if the windows were locked, I heard him step on it and what he said. Gee, did I laugh and learn some new words!

Your little nephew, Willie

HERE'S a form wives may find helpful in writing to friends of the family:

Dear Gordon -The bottle of Christmas cheer you sent, addressed jointly to my dear husband and me, was marked "Do Not Open Before Christmas." Somebody — guess who — disobeyed.

This thank-you note of mine goes to you corked up in the empty bottle and set adrift at sea. It may never reach you but neither did what was in the bottle reach me.

Dryly yours, Mildred

THE third form will come in handy for a married son writing thankfully to his mother:

The pair of bedroom slippers you sent me for Christmas are the most comfortable my wife has ever worn, she says. Their color matched my bathrobe perfectly. For a while that bothered Mildred, whose kimono is a different shade, but she has resourcefully solved the difficulty by wearing my bathrobe.

It is getting pretty cold around here at night. I realize it when I am aroused to go see if the children are sleeping as soundly as I was. An oak floor feels pretty frigid to bare feet.

If I report that the children are restless and fail to quiet the little ones, my wife has those slippers right at the bedside handy to step into and come to my assistance. She says I can't thank you enough for them.

I hope you are well. I am, except for a cold.

BEAT OF YOUR HEART

Chad moved beyond the smell of it. The brightest object on the street was the hat with the red flowers in Sadie Lyman's window. Chad looked at the price and tugged thoughtfully at his jaw a long time. Unconsciously he swayed toward the door three times as he muttered, "Two dollars." But she didn't need a hat, really. Now was the time to be hard - practical. He went into Wilson's hardware store, his fingers running through the money in his pocket, his ears conscious of the tinkle of several gold pieces. "What are you asking for your well pumps?" he inquired. Wilson told him.

"I'm trying to make a little spud money go a long way," he explained. He examined the pump carefully.

He thought of pushing the water barrel, and half drew the money from his pocket, then put it back and went on to a washing machine.

It was constructed of wood, and by turning a crank a disc studded with pegs rotated back and forth, sloshed the clothes. Beyond that stood a stove. "What are you asking for the stove?"

Wilson told him.

He examined it at length, removing the lids, peering into the oven and commenting on the place for hot water. "Stove pipe go with it?" he asked. "Yes."

He walked back to the pump again and scratched his head. He could see Eli Fleming sitting facing the street, two hundred feet away. Eli was smoking a fat cigar and it made Chad mad. "If he'd back me," he growled, "I might smoke a good cigar now and again." He turned to Wilson, adding, "Eli knows what's going on, don't he?"

"He never misses a trick." Chad went back to the stove. "Does the price include delivery?'

"That will be three dollars extra." "Three dollars, eh? I wonder if I could back pack it four miles?"

Wilson looked at Chad, but he was no moose for strength. "You might," he said, "if you rested often. I'll loan you a pack board."

He was anxious to make the sale and he lashed the stove to the board. It made a heavy pack, but Chad could stand up under it. "It'll get heavier every mile," Chad said. "I think I'll ask Sam Johnson, the liveryman, what he'll want to drive me out."

"Go ahead," Wilson said.

Chad crossed the street to the livery stable, which was a hundred yards below the bank. "You and the stove," Sam said. "That will be two dollars."

"I'll be back in about an hour." Chad said. He was crossing the street again when he saw the hat. He changed his direction from the hardware store to the milliner's. "Two dollars," he reflected, and was quiet a long time. "I can't do both, so what the hell - " He went inside and dropped two dollars on the counter. "Wrap that hat

"Did you see a lady coming out of here with a pair of shoes just like mine?"

Wilson held the door wide open and Chad walked out. He saw Eli Fleming sitting in his chair, finishing the cigar.

His wife had stopped her fussing with papers and was looking over his shoulder. "Look and be damned," Chad muttered. "I bought that hat and it's no skin off of your nose."

He hadn't gone a quarter mile before the sweat was running down into his eyes, but he didn't want to rest until he was behind a little rise in the prairie. Too many people were busy watching

When he did rest it was hard to get up again, but near the end of the first half mile he got his second wind and that carried him along two miles. The stove was dead weight, and the pack straps cut deeply into his shoulders. But when the pain was almost unendurable, he thought of the hat and Margie's surprise and felt better.

A mile and a half from the shack he saw Margie coming to meet him. "Chad!" she cried. "A stove! Oh, Chad, you shouldn't have bought it. You needed a deep well and pump." She ran around behind and took part of the weight from his shoulders.

He panted, "Margie, you crying?"

"Gosh - don't. It is almost Christmas," he said.

When they reached the shack she helped him shed the pack, then built a fire and put on water from the buffalo wallow to heat. "You're going to take a bath and rest," she insisted.

AFTER awhile he got into the wash tub and bathed, then turned in, but in a couple of hours he was up again, putting the new stove in position, cutting a hole through the roof and guywiring the tall pipe. "You should be tired," he said.

"But I'm not," she insisted. "The excitement is buoying me up, I guess." She started a fire in the new stove.

"Wait!" he said. "It isn't ready. Go outside and see - and see - if the stove pipe is straight."

She went outside and he opened the oven, pulled out the hat and thrust it under the bunk.

"It's straight," she said.

They built a fire and the smell of stove polish filled the shack. When the fire died down she said, "You couldn't make a deal for the Riddel place?"

"Huh? How did you know?"

"By the expression in your eyes and the beat of your heart when you held me close," she answered. "I'm sorry, so sorry, Chad. And I hate Eli Fleming and his horse-faced wife." She was silent, then said, "No, that is wrong. I'm the happiest girl in the world and I should hate no one. Nor do I. We'll be patient, and the big house, gravity water, horses, cows and wagons will come our way."

"Sure," he answered. "Well, let's hang up our stockings and turn in."

After she had turned out the light he heard her fussing around his sock, and when she was asleep he climbed down and put the hat near her stocking. Into the stocking itself, he dropped a silver dollar.

He woke up first, but he didn't stir until she got up and ran to her stocking. She opened the box first, then sat there in the cold, speechless.

"Don't cry," he warned sharply.

"I couldn't cry," she said, sniffing, "and spoil such a dream of a hat. But Chad, you were extravagant. With two dollars you could - Chad! Sam Johnson would have brought the stove out for two dollars."

"Sure," he said cheerfully, "but there's the stove, and there's the hat." He jumped down, opened the package pinned to his sock. "Bedroom slippers! And you knitted them. Golly. And I've needed them. You hop back into bed and keep warm. I'll join you as soon as I build a fire.'

He did odd jobs about the place that morning. She roasted the chicken and baked pies in the new stove. Other things, in pots and kettles, steamed, and she sang at her work.

They ate dinner and thought of the gathering back home, and afterwards he wished he had a cigar, even a cheap one. He helped her with the dishes, and just as they finished a rig stopped out in front. She glanced through the window. "Chad! The Flemings. Golly! What now? And on Christmas, too."

Fleming knocked and Chad opened the door and said, "Come in!" The Flemings came in and accepted the chairs Margie offered.

A painful silence followed.

"Eli," Mrs. Fleming said sharply, "state your business. Don't sit there like a bump on a log." Then she beamed on Margie.

"Merry Christmas," Eli said stiffly, handing Chad a box of his own brand of cigars, and Margie a box of candy. "That takes care of the Christmas part of it. The rest is business, I don't hold with transacting business on Sundays and holidays, but Jacqueline, here, overruled me in this instance. She said, 'Eli, Christmas is for kids, and after all, they're only kids."

"Yes," Jacqueline said, "I did." She beamed on Margie again.

"About the Riddel place. I'm prepared to accept your place as part payment, and loan you enough more to buy a horse, cow and some chickens," he said. "Later, if you want to buy this place, I'll consider it. No sense in loading a good horse with too much right at the start. You're a good horse, and Jacqueline and I are putting our money on you. I guess that's all. Come in in a day or two and we'll fix up the papers. Might as well own the horse and wagon before you start moving."

"Thank you," Chad said, weakly. "You'll never know how much I appreciate - "

"The candy and cigars are gifts from the heart," interrupted Fleming in a brisk, businesslike tone. "The rest is strictly a commercial transaction. You're hard and tough. You know what you want and you go after it. You can measure the worth of a man by sitting near a window and watching the way he spends his money."

"Yes," Mrs. Fleming echoed. "Hard and tough, but soft at the right time and place." And she looked at Margie's hat with the bright red flowers.

A COLD IS AN INFECTION TREAT IT AS SUCH WITH GERM-KILLING ACTION

Tests showed that Listerine Antiseptic reduced surface germs as much as 96.7% even 15 minutes after the gargle; up to 80% one hour later.

Here's one reason why, we believe.

Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill millions of the 'secondary invaders' which, many noted laryngologists say, are responsible for so many of a cold's miserable symptoms.

We feel that Listerine's quick germkilling action explains its amazing test record against colds during a period of 10 years.

Remember that in clinical tests made during these 10 years:

Regular twice-a-day users of Listerine actually had fewer colds, shorter colds, and milder colds than those who did not gargle

So, when you feel a cold coming on, gargle with full strength Listerine Antiseptic-quick and often. You may save yourself a long siege of trouble.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL Co., St. Louis, Mo.

NOTE HOW LISTERINE GARGLE REDUCED GERMS

The two drawings illustrate height of range in germ reductions on mouth and throat surfaces in test cases before and after gargling Listerine Antiseptic, Fifteen minutes after gargling, germ reductions up to 96,7% were noted; and even one hour after, germs were still reduced as much as 80%.

Gargle LISTERINE—QUICK!

More than any other gift, Whitman's has a wonderful way of saying "Merry Christmas" to those you like . . . to those you love . . .

... the friend next door and the aunt you see so seldom and like so much.

... the secretary in the office and the cop on

...the milkman who comes without clatter, the postman who rings only once (and softly!) kind and friendly service through the year.

Whitman's is ideal too as a last-minute gift for friends you've "forgotten" but never intended to overlook. And be sure to have a box of Whitman's at home . . . for the enjoyment of your family and the folks who come to call.

Typical of the hard fighting men of the new Philippine Army are these coast artillery gunners. Shoulder to shoulder with American forces they are making a gallant defense of the islands against Japanese incursions.

Swift little torpedo boats of the American Navy show their speed in lower New York Bay. Traveling at 70 miles an hour, they pack an awful sneak punch in those four torpedoes they carry.

Sixty tons of fighting steel. Here's the ultimate—for the present—in American tank size. The 60-ton monster is the first of a fleet the Baldwin Locomotive Works is building for the Army. It mounts plenty of fire power in a wide range of calibers.

A chance for the best Christmas gift of all! To that Red Cross War Fund of a minimum of $50,000,000 President Roosevelt appeals to all Americans to contribute. Here he launches the campaign with a view of the poster. With him are, left to right: Claire Hobart, nurse; Mrs. Hendrick Eustis, associate director of volunteer service; S. Sloan Colt, chairman of the war fund drive; Norman Davis, chairman of the American Red Cross. and Mrs. Dwight Davis, national director of volunteer service.

Keeping Trim for Defense

down. Suit gait to yourself for 3 minutes.

MOST American women do not anticipate having to lift a sandbag. And while they feel secure in their faith in the Nation's defenses, surveys indicate they are less certain about their own roles in the present emergency. So, with Uncle Sam's blessing, the "physical fitness" movement is under way at a time when British women are being registered for defense work. An agency cooperating is the American Women's Voluntary Services. Its program in the New York area is directed by Catharine Van Rennsselaer.

"Our own war emergency may be for the women no more than a maid's walking out to get more pay making parachutes," she says. "It may be much more than that for them. The point is, to avoid strained muscles and injuries, American women should be prepared. Prepared for the worst that may come in this war. And, besides, what woman doesn't want a trim figure?"

Miss Van Rennsselaer helped French women during the last war. She believes these exercises undertaken carefully (half portions the first week, less if too tiring) would be a health and morale builder for the stern days ahead.

The woodchopper is a muscle puller clear to the ham strings. Start with arms above head, palms together, feet apart. Bend at waist, "dive" between legs. Back and up, 10 to 15 minutes.

For a pick-up—and a good head-to-toe stretch—this sandbag exercise demonstrated in these three photographs can be adapted to many a household task. Reading with the arrows: Back straight, lower body to floor by knee action. Next, pick up bag, keeping it close to body as you rise again on toes. Then carry bag on hip or shoulder (alternating) when going up ladder or stairs. Lift knees high. It's a favorite routine in women's gyms.

Manhattan's towering skyline, its deep canyons, seem somehow impregnable in their very vastness in these views that swing with the compass from the 850-foot height of the observation tower of Rockefeller Center's R. C. A. Building. For the view above, the camera points due south to sweep the world's densest area of giant skyscrapers.

Due north from the R. C. A. tower the massing skyscrapers border, by arresting contrast, the open spaces of Central Park.

Marines Prepare 'Poison' for Air Raiders

A barrage balloon of the American type being hauled to earth at Parris Island. A motor winch provides the horsepower for the hauling-in job, while husky marines hang onto steadying ropes as the bag nears the ground. The winch cable permits an altitude of more than 8,000 feet.

View through a shelter at the training field as a balloon is being "gassed up." The tanks in the foreground contain helium. Hydrogen also is used to inflate the balloons.

In the barrage balloon shop marines learn how to repair the giant bags. The corporal at the sewing machine is making a "finger patch." Man in the center is learning how to braid hemp.

A. P. and Wide World Photos.

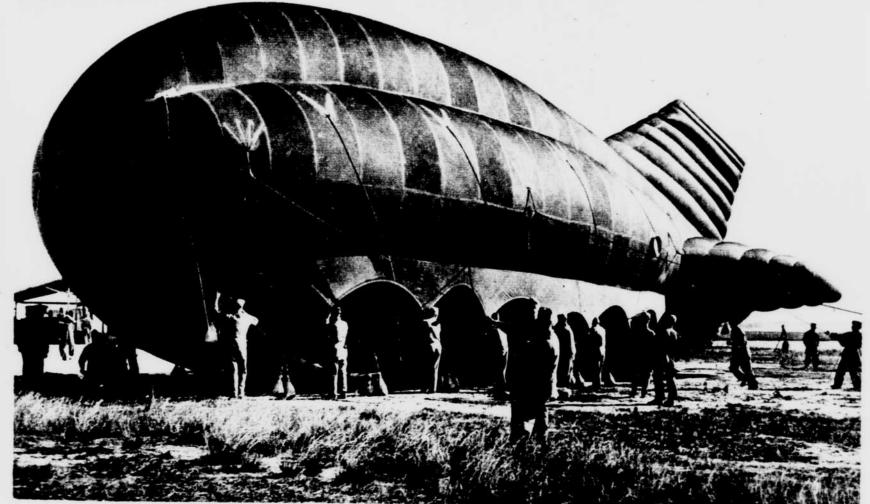

NIGHTMARE of the low-flying or dive-bombing air raider is the balloon barrage with its fatal web of mooring cables. For the "stratospherical" bomber they have no meaning, but for the dive bomber seeking to swoop down and "plant" bombs on a particular objective, they are plain poison. London's famous balloon barrage has proved its value in failing the divers and wrecking some that thought they had clear sailing.

So we are probably going to see a good many barrage balloons floating around in our skies—and it'll be a friendly presence if you'll remember how the dive bombers hate 'em. The Marine Corps and the Army have both been training barrage balloon crews for some months, teaching them all the tricks of handling the sometimes obstreperous gas bags. Here are pictures of the training at the big Marine Corps base at Parris Island, S. C.

Inflating the American-type balloon. Helium is used for inflating during the training. During actual operations hydrogen is used and is manufactured on the spot. The balloon has a capacity of 2,500 cubic feet of gas.

Putting a barrage balloon "to bed" is a man-sized job for a swarm of marines. The delicate part of the job is steadying the big bag as it nears the ground with sand bags tied to its skirt. "Ground gusts" of wind often start it bucking like a broncho.

HERE are scenes in a studio of Argentina's young but fast-growing film industry, now the most important producer of Spanishspeaking films. Stars like Senorita Alicia Barrie, shown above as she prepares to go on the set, are becoming famous throughout Spanish-speaking countries. # Smart Styles Easily Made

If you're looking for a new, fresh idea in a costume for holiday festivities—and to wear straight through the season—here's an original straight from Hollywood where it was designed for Anna Neagle, who wears it. It has a wide, flaring skirt made on a deep, close-fitting waistband, a simple blouse, and a bolero with just that right South American influence! Pattern No. 1414 is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15, 17 and 19 (29 to 37 bust). Size 13 requires, for skirt and bolero, 4½ yards of 35-inch material, or 23/4 yards of 54-inch; 11/4 yards of 35-inch material for contrasting blouse.

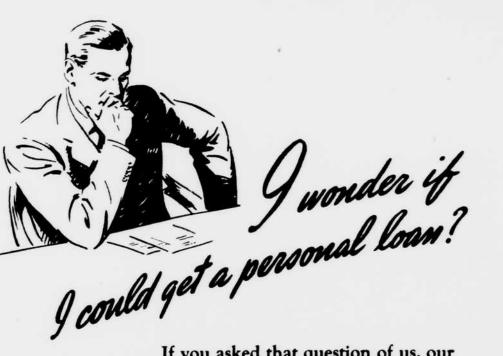

It's ideal for that winter cruise—but you don't have to be one of the fortunate few slated for just that good luck this winter to want to fit this smart suit into your wardrobe. With the new longer jacket it expresses the last word in tailored smartness. It lends itself perfectly to so many materials—heavy linen, pique, a wool gabardine, flannel, or men's wear fabric. Send for Pattern No. H-3045, designed for sixes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20 (30 to 38 bust). Sixe 14 requires 4 yards of 36-inch fabric, 31/4 yards of 54-inch.

Nautical lacing at the belt and up the front makes this little sailor frock a true interpretation of the bluejacket's very own. Make it for your growing daughter in serge, gabardine, poplin or linen. Pattern No. H-3480 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8, with short sleeves, requires 21/4 yards of 36-inch material, or 2 yards of 54-inch.

If you asked that question of us, our prompt reply would most likely be, "Why, of course you can."

The reason we would tell you that, is because our experience, over the years, has been that out of every 100 requests received, more than 90 are approved . . . which means it is practically certain we'll say "yes" to you too.

So, should you ever want a personal loan for any worthwhile purpose, the chances are better than 90 per cent that you can obtain it at the Morris Plan Bank ... and promptly, too.

MILLIONS LOANED EVERY YEAR

We are always glad to advance money to those who can use it in constructive ways. In fact, every year the Morris Plan Bank lends millions of dollars to men and women in the Federal and District governments, the professions, stores, offices, and in other private employment.

This banking service is available to you too, and we hope you will use it whenever it can be helpful to you in solving your financial problems.

Personal loans, secured and unsecured, may be made from $60 to $10,000 . . and over.
