Japanese Will Find Singapore Harder to Win Than Hong Kong

$400,000,000 Fortress Farther Away And Is Not Nearly So Vulnerable

By the Associated Press.
Japanese invasion hordes will find the citadel of Singapore a vastly tougher nut to crack than the British crown colony of Hong Kong, which fell on Christmas Day after a siege of less than three weeks.

has at least four main air fields and numerous auxiliary landing grounds, and air support is possible from the nearby Dutch island of Sumatra.
Nearly twice as many people were packed into Hong Kong's 32 square miles, as are today in Singapore's 200 square miles, which means the food problem during the siege will be less acute.

Pittsburgh Mayor to Attend.
Mayor Cornelius Scully of Pittsburgh and members of the City Council have accepted invitations to be guests of the 176th Field Artillery, which will combine regimental and professional talent in an entertainment program Tuesday night.

Hong Kong virtually was surrounded by hostile Japanese after their treacherous attack December 7. Canton, the large Chinese metropolis nearby, was taken by the Japanese early in their China war and served as an effective base for the assault by at least 50,000 invading troops.

The surface of Singapore Island is undulating and broken by low hills, the highest of which is 500 feet. Crystalline rocks, shale and sandstone form the core of the island.
Coral reefs fringe the southwest shores. The soil is chiefly red clay and is not exceptionally fertile.

Second Mate Melvin Hays of Baltimore, 32-year-old former Navy radio operator, related that during his watch on the bridge wing during the afternoon of January 27, he sighted the crane off the starboard bow, and, upon training a telescope on it, detected a submarine's periscope nearby.

Ten miles south, across the Straits of Singapore, are the islands of the Rhio archipelago, and 80 miles to the west is the low, marshy coast of the Dutch-occupied island of Sumatra, whence small boats may be able to carry some supplies at night.

Vegetables and eggs already are scarce but the island should be able to produce enough to meet minimum requirements.
The vegetable supply formerly came from the fertile areas of Central Malaya and from the Netherlands Indies.

Most of the population is concentrated in the city of Singapore at the southern end of the island, but many Malaysians and Indians and some Chinese live in villages and hamlets which dot the rubber plantations and coconut palm groves covering large areas of the central part of the island.

Pointing to the east, west and south, are the permanently emplaced big guns, some of them 18 and 16 inch bore to ward off any sea-borne attack.
But these guns, pointed seaward, were never intended to fight off an attack from the land side from which the British now face their greatest menace.
The Japanese now have a continuous route of supply the length of the Malay peninsula, while British reinforcements will be under the danger of air bombardment unless the local bases are able to maintain a strong umbrella over such operations.
Ninety persons were killed and 246 injured yesterday and 12 were killed and 116 injured Thursday by air raiders, it was announced today.
Singapore's food supplies are ample for a considerable time. Anticipating a disruption of trade and shipping, authorities began accumulating reserves of rice last year and started encouraging people to grow their own vegetables.

Of D. C. High School Holds 64th Reunion

Four Members From Original 51 Meet for Dinner at Cosmos Club

Members of the first graduating class—that of 1878—of the first Washington high school (which was known then as the advanced grammar school) celebrated their 64th annual reunion last night with a dinner at the Cosmos Club.

The class members have met every year since their graduation. Only four members of the original 51 were able to be present last night. They were Cavour Bohrer, superintendent of Convention Hall and the market there, prominent worker in the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, now retired; John H. A. Fowler, employe of the Government Printing Office for 34 years, now retired; Frank B. Noyes, president of The Evening Star Newspaper Co., and former president of the Associated Press for 38 years, and Rear Admiral W. E. Reynolds, retired, United States Coast Guard.

Many Attained Distinction. Many of the graduates of this class later attained distinction in the civic, business and cultural life of Washington and other communities to which they moved. Among those who were recalled in the reminiscences last night were:

A. T. Hensley, member of the real estate firm of Swartzell, Rheem & Hensley; Dr. Arrigier B. Hobbs, medical director with the New York Life Insurance Co.; Howard L. Hodgkins, dean and acting president of George Washington University and secretary of the class of 1878 until his death; Charles W. Holmes, controller of George Washington University, who also was a secretary of the class until his death; Harry S. Jones, connected with the United States Signal Corps, a prominent member of the National Union Fraternity.

Others in Class. Andrew J. Lamb, an official of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad with his headquarters in Birmingham, Ala.; William J. Palmer, a prominent architect of the District; George A. Frevost, a well-known lawyer of Washington; Clarence B. Rheem of Swartzell, Rheem & Hensley.

Casleary, connected with the International Bank in Paris; Cornelius W. Clum, an editor and publisher in Kennington, Md.; John F. Connor of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and John B. Espey, prominent hardware dealer in Washington, now retired.

Plans of Two European Kings To Visit Washington Collapse

Roosevelt Frowns
On Royalty's Calls
As Too Exacting

By HELEN LOMBARD.

King George of Greece and King Peter of Yugoslavia have been "on their way" to Washington for months. Both the Greek and the Yugoslav Legations have begun preliminary preparations, several times for the reception of the monarchs. But the expressed desire of the two Kings to meet President Roosevelt is not likely to be fulfilled in the foreseeable future.

On his return to London, Prime Minister Churchill conveyed diplomatically to the Greek King, who was waiting for the British to arrange transportation to America, that the trip was not timely.

The chief preoccupation of the members of the Greek Legation in Washington is food for the starving citizens of Greece. They had pinned great hopes on the personal presentation of the matter by their King to President Roosevelt. The problem has been dealt with in London, however.

One of the first things Mr. Churchill did on his return was to appear before the Greek King, who would supply a quantity of wheat to the starving Greeks in return for other commodities from the United States and Great Britain.

Royal Visits Too Exacting. The decision of the British not to undertake transportation of the Greek sovereign to the United States was due to a hint from the President that royal visits are too exacting for the White House during the emergency.

The welcome of the American public to the flood of refugees from Europe is the chief reason for the ease with which the President has evoked a certain amount of criticism. It is far easier for the White House to defer royal visits for the time being than it would be to eliminate any of the courtesies due to the heads of those states which are fighting for the Allies.

The elimination of royal visitors serves another purpose: it discourages the presence in Washington of those to whom the President referred Friday as "parasites."

That expanding section of social Washington which President Roosevelt considered worthy of a press conference dissertation is in Washington for no other reason than to participate in the glamour of the wartime capital. These people do no flock to Washington to spend their days in the Mellon Art Gallery. The Library of Congress is full of busy readers and researchers but not one of them is ever seen at a social function. The Capital has no opera or ballet and only one legitimate theater.

But Washington is an intoxicating city today. The spotlight of the world is focused upon it. Take Large Houses. Those who move in the glare are eagerly sought by those who would reflect the light. In order to grab a share of it, the "parasites" move into large houses, lease whole floors in hotels and make entertainment their only occupation. Harmless in ordinary times, they take up too much space in 1942. President Roosevelt went so far as to mention that many of them require 20 rooms in which to exercise their function of social parasitism.

Washington has another appeal for the idle-minded. It is a rootless town. People move in and out just as they do in a week-end hotel where their social standing depends on the size of their suite.

With the city bursting with harassed war workers, there is no longer room for the people who come in and jostle and push for vicarious limelight. With the temporary ban on royalty and the President's denunciation of social "parasites," it looks as if the White House intended to deglamorize Washington for the duration.

Cancellation of the annual winter dance of Alcantara Caravan, No. 12, Order of the Alhambra, has been announced by John B. Coyle, grand commander, because war work has forced many members to curtail social activities.

Chile Goes to Polls Today to Choose New President

Rios and Gen. Ibanez Are Rival Candidates; U. S. Favors Former

By the Associated Press. SANTIAGO, Chile, Jan. 31.—Chileans will choose tomorrow between Juan Antonio Rios, candidate of the "democratic bloc," and Gen. Carlos Ibanez del Campo, former so-called "dictator" and nominee of the right wing, as their next President. Rios is the middle-of-the-road leader of the moderate wing of the Radical party, Chile's largest political group, an outspoken advocate of Pan-American solidarity and collaboration with the United States for hemisphere defense. Ibanez, who was regarded also as extremely friendly to the United States when he was President from 1929 to 1931, strongly denied opposition accusations that he is totalitarian-minded, and called himself "the most pan-American of the candidates."

Chile and Argentina so far are the only Latin American nations which have not ruptured relations with the Axis.

Rios' Election Favored By U. S. Government

The United States Government is hoping that Chile will elect Juan Antonio Rios its new President. The State Department and the White House, following the good neighbor policy which forbids interference in the domestic political affairs of the other American republics, have kept silent on this election.

However, it has been learned that the favored candidate is Rios, because it is felt that his presence in the highest office in Chile will facilitate the course of the hemispheric solidarity during the war. A report was sent to the United States that followers of Gen. Ibanez del Campo are claiming official American support for his candidacy. The American Government refused to refute this claim, but it has no foundation.

The election of Rios, it is said, would be regarded as favorable not only for hemispheric solidarity but for the establishment of Chile as a firm voice in inter-American affairs. Internal political dissension has reduced the authority of Chile internationally in recent years.

Jap Envoy Notified He Must Leave Bolivia

By the Associated Press. LA PAZ, Bolivia, Jan. 31.—The Bolivian government today notified the Japanese Minister, Kasuhiro Irie, that he must leave the country by Monday under Bolivia's breach of relations with the Axis. Luigi Mariani, the Italian Minister, and Wolfgang Hoeller, German Charge d'Affaires, also are expected to leave soon.

Named to the Board of Trustees for three-year terms are P. M. Hauser, Carl C. Farrington and Miss Helen W. Tippy. Other board members are E. V. A. Avery, Mr. Garman, J. S. Hathcock, M. A. McCall, E. ### Native African King Becomes De Gaulle Ally

By the Associated Press. LONDON, Jan. 31.—A native African king with enormous prestige in the central and southern regions of the Vichy-ruled Ivory Coast of West Africa was announced today as the newest follower of the flag of the Free French and a sworn enemy of Germany. The King is Koadjo Adiomani, sovereign of 200,000 Aburon natives living in the Bondoukou district. The announcement said he and his entourage arrived with dramatic fanfare on British Gold Coast territory. He was bearing the French flag and asked that the De Gaulle cross of Lorraine be added to it. Welcomed cordially by the British, he sent a message to Gen. Charles de Gaulle declaring Germany his enemy and pledging allegiance to the cause of the Free French.

Army's Communique Writer Is Graduate of Georgetown

Lt. Col. Fitz Gerald Also Is Former Newspaperman

By NELSON M. SHEPARD. The identity of the War Department's most frequently quoted anonymous war "spokesman" and author of its daily official communique was disclosed to the public yesterday by Georgetown University as a former officer student who graduated magna cum laude from the school, of foreign service 10 years ago. He is Lt. Col. Francis V. Fitz Gerald, recalled by Dr. Thomas H. Healy, dean of the school, as the same Army captain who garnered most of the academic medals in 1931 and 1932, besides topping his class in studies. A former newspaperman who became an officer at the time of the First World War, Col. Fitz Gerald is now regarded as one of the Army's best-informed specialists on military policy and international relations. A serious student, with a passion for anonymity gained through service on missions to Japan, Siberia, the Philippines and Hawaii, he has been a specialist in the Bureau of Public Relations since the start of the rearmament program.

LT. COL. FRANCIS V. FITZ GERALD.

Col. Fitz Gerald entered Georgetown after his graduation from the Army Industrial College. He also graduated from the Army War College in 1935, where he gained a sound grasp on military policy and the art of warfare.

In his newspaper days, he served as reporter, political editor and city editor. He still speaks the language of newspapers. While working in Salt Lake City before the World War, he also served as secretary to one of the Governors of Utah.

O. P. A. Tells How To Have Sweets, Yet Save Sugar

By the Associated Press. The Office of Price Administration, saying that sugar rationing would work no hardship at all if consumers substituted fruits and natural sweets, offered this advice yesterday: "Try less sugar in your coffee and tea. Many people prefer these beverages without any sugar. In any case, stir up well the sugar you use in coffee and tea. Sugar doesn't sweeten your drink if you leave it unstirred at the bottom of the cup. "Make fewer desserts that require sweetening with sugar. Fresh fruit salad is one dessert that has plenty of natural sugar. "Dried fruits such as raisins, dates, figs, prunes, peaches, apricots and others are rich in sugar and should be eaten with breakfast cereal, in desserts and in piece of candy, to save sugar. "Fresh fruits are rich in sugar content and should be used extensively. "The candy, ice cream, chewing gum and soda you have during the day all contain sugar. If you use much of them, the sweetening in them gives you energy and you don't need so much sugar with your foods."

District Jail and one for police records. Without extra help, equipment, or money, police say the situation is desperate. They declare there are no cards, no filing space, no room, no blanks and most of all no time to handle the tremendous volume of work required. It is understood that police expect the total figure of liquor personnel to run far above 15,000 and have made some arrangement with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board to print about 100 licenses and their employes every 10 days. But at that rate, it was pointed out, it would take years to finish the job.

Scores of greetings and well wishes have been received by the commander from all over the British Isles. All extended a warm welcome to the men and women occupied on the American war effort. Invitations to entertain the dough-boys have been profuse. Many of the letters have sought word of possible relatives among the first contingent of American troops.

The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, has established a war relief service room in the north wing of the museum in Memorial Continental Hall. Members of the society will work there daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Arrangements have not yet been completed here to effect the transfers.

Americans Serving With British Seek To Join A. E. F.

Gen. Hartie Conferred For First Time With Gen. Franklin

WITH THE UNITED STATES ARMY IN NORTHERN IRELAND, Jan. 31.—Americans already serving with the British Army in these embattled islands clamored today to join the United States expeditionary force which landed in Northern Ireland earlier this week. The Yanks were near the grim war action that awaits them, for Royal Air Force fighters chased away a German bomber on reconnaissance, possibly seeking to estimate the American strength. Bullets whizzed into the rear turret of the Nazi craft, silencing its fire. A thick cloud bank saved the German from destruction. Maj. Gen. Russell P. Hartie, commander of the first A. E. F. troops, said he had received letters from Americans serving in various parts of Britain seeking to join the ranks of their countrymen.

Most of the 48 States have planned a reduction in speed program in connection with the Nation's tire rationing program.

Prizes Totalling $145 Offered In Star's Wrapping Contest

Prizes totalling $145 in defense bonds and stamps will be awarded winners in the bundle-wrapping contest to be held under auspices of The Evening Star in co-operation with the Merchants and Manufacturers Association at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the United States Chamber of Commerce auditorium.

Three classes of packages will be emphasized—one falling in the clerk-wrap category, one handled at wrapping counters for delivery immediately to the purchaser and one in regular packing and home delivery service.

Each contestant will be required to assemble specified articles already detailed in a previous article in The Star, and the prizes will be awarded on the basis of neatness and firmness of the package and minimum amount of wrapping material used. The winner in each class will receive a $25 defense bond, the runner-up $10 in savings stamps and $5 in savings stamps going to third place. A special prize of a $25 defense bond has been offered by Murray & Heister, dealer in paper boxes, to the contestant judged the best in all classes. Three judges will be named to decide the winner, and their names will be announced Monday.

In addition to the contest there will be short addresses, demonstrations of economical wrapping and a program including moving pictures. Reports from large department stores indicate considerable interest in the contest, and many have signified their desire to enter. Officials of the various stores will select those to represent them. All entries must be turned in to the office of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association by noon tomorrow.

The growing shortage of wrapping materials is expected to be noticeable in the next few months, and this contest is held with a view to postponing as long as possible the day when the situation may become critical. A similar contest sponsored by The Star in 1916 was copied throughout the country and resulted in savings estimated at 400 tons a day in wrapping paper.

G. W. U. Will Increase Classes in Japanese Publishers Are Urged To Conserve Stocks

George Washington University will increase its elementary classes in the Japanese language and offer a course in Chinese if demand warrants, Dr. William C. Johnstone, dean of the junior college, announced yesterday.

He invited mail or telephone inquiries concerning the new semester for which registration begins Tuesday with classes starting Friday.

Dr. William R. B. Acker of the Freer Gallery of Art, a student of Oriental languages for many years, is the instructor. The course in Japanese is designed to be taken in preparation for more advanced work. It deals with reading and speaking modern colloquial Japanese.

Mr. Renard emphasized that no improvement in the supply of rubber for tires is expected and recommended all possible conservation of tires in making deliveries. In addition to rubber, he reminded the publishers of shortages existing in iron, steel, lead, zinc and certain chemicals used in their field.

He urged publishers to follow a general rule in conserving critical materials to the limit and using substitutes wherever possible.

A Frenchman, Leon Scott, made an unsuccessful attempt to record sound in 1855, 22 years before Thomas Edison's experiments succeeded.

NATIONAL 1942

Report to the Nation

Tenth and Last Installment of MacLeish Statement on War Efforts

Paying for the War

Seventeen months of rearming and one month of fighting the war have cost the American people some 15.6 billion dollars, in appropriations and R. F. C. loans. This we have actually spent for making weapons and for training man power.

Two years ago such a prospect of spending for arms would have taken our breath away. After a month of war this huge sum does not begin to approach the cost of ultimate victory.

We were relatively slow in getting started, reluctant to stop producing the goods of peace and to start producing the instruments of war. Yet the past 12 months have seen the highest Government expenditure in our history.

In the calendar year 1941 we spent close to 19 billion dollars—as much as we spent in the previous record fiscal year of 1919. Defense and war accounted for 12.5 billions. Of this 1.8 billions were spent in the last month of the year alone.

Record Sum Spent.
This record sum of 1.8 billion dollars, spent in the month of December, 1941, while it exactly equals our defense expenditure for the last six months of 1940, represents only about 22 per cent of the rate of national income for that month.

For the fiscal year 1943 the President has submitted a budget calling for $56,000,000,000 in war expenditures, or more than one-half of our national income.

Britain's war effort already is consuming about 50 per cent of her income, while Germany has diverted an estimated 60 per cent to war. The high German figure, however, is made possible by the systematic looting of materials and goods from the conquered countries.

Those responsible for financial policy have endeavored to work out a sound program of taxation and borrowing, which would not only produce the needed funds, but would also translate into action these fundamental principles: to pay as you go, so far as possible, to spread the burden as fairly as possible, and to avoid the dangers of inflation. Each of these principles called for the imposition of higher taxes.

Tax Structure Widened.
Year by year the tax structure has been broadened to reach millions of Americans who never before had been called upon to pay direct taxes. The Revenue Act of June, 1940, took a step in this direction by increasing the rates or widening the base of almost every existing tax. October, 1940, saw the passage of a second Revenue Act raising corporate income tax rates and introducing a new excess-profits tax. Another, though not an immediate source of revenue, was provided by the Public Debt Act of February, 1941, which made the income from all future Government bond issues subject to Federal income taxes.

The stepped-up defense requirements that came with the months that followed were reflected in the Revenue Act of September, 1941. This act was intended to raise 3.5 billion dollars additional revenue. A broader income tax base and increased rates were expected to draw 1.1 billion dollars more from individuals and 1.4 billions more from corporations. Capital stock, estate and gift taxes were to yield $180,000,000 more, and excise and miscellaneous taxes to yield $850,000,000 more.

The trend of personal income taxes over the past two years has been toward spreading the cost of arming among more and more Americans. Under the 1939 Revenue Act 4,000,000 people had to pay income tax. Under the 1940 act 7,520,000 paid taxes. This March, it is estimated, 13,200,000 will pay income taxes. This is not quite a third of our non-agriculturally employed civilian workers in November, 1941.

Exemptions Lowered.
The 1940 act lowered the exemption of a single person from $1,000 to $800 and of a married person from $2,500 to $2,000, while the 1941 act again lowered the exemptions to $750 and $1,500, respectively. At the same time, national income was rising steadily, swelling tax returns. On July 1, 1940, the national income payments were at the rate of 74.7 billion dollars a year; on January 1, 1941, the rate was 81 billions; on July 1, 1941, the rate was 89 billions, and in October, 1941, the rate was 95 billions a year.

Revenue from individual income taxes rose from $891,000,000 in the fiscal year 1940 to 1.3 billions in 1941, a 47 per cent increase. Corporation income taxes reached 1.6 billion dollars or 72 per cent more than the preceding year. A steadily rising yield from corporations in 1942 is suggested by recent Federal Reserve figures, which show that 416 corporations earned about 30 per cent more in the first nine months of 1941 than in the corresponding months of 1940.

Total net receipts for the year ending last July were 7.6 billion dollars, an increase of nearly 41 per cent over the preceding year. So sudden and so vast an increase presented the Treasury with a number of new problems. To acquaint new taxpayers with their obligations and to insure prompt collection, two new aids for the taxpayer were devised. The first was a simplified tax form for those with incomes under $3,000, a form so clear that only six simple steps are needed to complete it.

The second was the tax antiipation note, introduced last August. These notes can be purchased at any time and be used in paying future taxes. In effect, those who invest in these notes are paying their taxes in advance and they receive interest for so doing. More than 2.5 billion dollars' worth had been sold by the end of 1941.

In spite of growing tax receipts, the Government must look to borrowing for an ever-increasing proportion of the cost of war. Our net deficit, which rose from 3.6 billion dollars in the fiscal year of 1940 to 5.1 billions in 1941, is expected to exceed 12.6 billions by next July 1.

To meet these deficiencies the Treasury goes to the banks and to the people. In the year ending July 1, 1941, the Treasury sold for cash just over 3 billion dollars' worth of bonds and notes, and re-funded for a similar amount three series of Treasury notes maturing during the year. Since last July there have been four major offerings to the value of 3.7 billions.

Each of these issues was heavily oversubscribed. The latest and largest issues, for 1 1/2 billion dollars of new cash, were oversubscribed seven times on the very eve of our entry into the war. The average interest rate on the Government's outstanding debt is now the lowest in our history, having fallen from 2.566 per cent in December, 1940, to 2.409 per cent in December, 1941. Thus, while the national debt has reached the record level of more than $57,000,000,000 and while the Government's borrowing is greater than ever, it can obtain new money more cheaply than ever before.

Large-scale borrowing from banks involves serious decisions of policy, since these operations, by creating new deposits, may result in credit inflation. In line with a consistent anti-inflationary policy, the Treasury embarked last May upon a new program of borrowing directly from the people. Defense savings bonds, of which by January 1, 1942, about 2.5 billion dollars' worth had been purchased, were designed to reduce the volume of purchasing power by enlisting the current savings of millions of wage earners. High-pressure methods of selling were avoided. Stress was laid rather on the importance of systematic saving as a curb to price inflation.

Help of All Needed.
A determined effort is being made to persuade all wage earners voluntarily to invest a part of their earnings regularly through pay-roll savings plans. No one weapon can hope to fight inflation successfully. Reduction of purchasing power by means of voluntary savings and price fixing are vital expedients. Still greater taxation than we have yet envisioned may be necessary.

In contrast to the last World War, when we were blind to the danger of inflation until it was upon us, our eyes are open today to this evil and to the need of controlling it with every weapon at the command of the Treasury and other departments of Government. Our response to the challenge of inflation may well be a test case of our ability to master our own destiny, of the power of a democracy by the application of popular mind and will to cure its own internal ills.

Just as dollars alone cannot buy victory over the Axis, so understanding, self-discipline and aggressive action by the people are needed to defeat inflation at home as well as the enemy abroad.

Roosevelt Family Now Totals 19 As 2 Chinese Are Adopted

WU CHEN-LING. CHEN TA-PEI.

These two Chinese children, made orphans by Japanese aggression on their native land, have been adopted by proxy by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The numbers they wear are their registration numbers in the Chungking orphanage where they live. Both are natives of Nanking, now in invader hands.

Chen Ta-peï and Wu Chen-ling, war orphans in bomb-scarred Chungking, China, are now the foster children of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, it was announced yesterday.

Mrs. Roosevelt adopted the 10-year-old Chen Ta-peï and 12-year-old Wu Chen-ling by proxy through the "Esteemed Grandparents" organization of United China Relief for a total of $40—all that is necessary to feed and clothe two Chinese children for a year in one of Mrs. Chiang Kai-shek's orphanages.

Both children are natives of Nanking, in Japanese-occupied Anhwei Province. It is not known whether their parents were killed when the Japanese invaded their city or later.

Family Now Totals 19.
The additions to her family, real and adopted, bring the total to 19. Mrs. Roosevelt's international "family" already includes Thomas Maloney, 4-year-old British boy; Lorenzo Murias, 12-year-old native of Spain, and Janina Dybowska, who is a Pole and nearly 16.

Both Ta-peï and Chen-ling may prefix Roosevelt to their names now because the first name, in China, always is the family name. The Chinese characters forming the name of Chen Ta-peï, the little boy, mean in translation, "Admirer of Human Kindness." The characters forming the little girl's name, Wu Chen-ling, mean "Always an inspiration."

1,150 Adopted in United States.
The children were selected for adoption by Mrs. Henry Seidel Canby, national director of "Esteemed Grandparents." To date adoptions throughout the United States arranged by the organization have placed approximately 1,150 Chinese children in orphanages in and around Chungking. Many of the orphanages are located in caves, safe against frequent air raids.

FOR THE DURATION OF THE POLICE BOYS' CLUB CAMPAIGN

They are your fellow citizens—your neighbors—your friends—your business acquaintances. Certainly they have their own jobs to look after. Certainly they have families who claim their attention. Certainly they are engaged in Defense activities in one form or another.

But, they realize that maintaining the INTERNAL security of our Nation is an extremely important part of our war effort. And, the Police Boys' Club is one of the effective methods of doing just that.

Kids who were brought into this world with two strikes on them are given a chance to know the kind of America we read about and preach about. The kind of America that guarantees equal opportunity for all. They are shown how to do their running on a baseball diamond instead of down dark alleys. They are taught that petty lawlessness is just as abhorrent as is international gangsterism.

They are guided into the right physical and mental activities which makes the kind of Boy you are proud to acclaim as an American. About 17,000 boys are enrolled in the five Police Boys' Clubs of Washington. But, not one of them pays a cent to take full part in the club's many activities.

Their obligation is to become Better Boys. Yours, is to support the movement financially, so that the work may continue and expand.

Waste Paper Collection Soars To 106,446 Pounds in Week

More Than Ton Each Are Turned in by Ten Schools

Hampered by rain and sleet one day and low temperatures on another, Washington and suburban Montgomery County schools last week went far beyond any previous mark to turn in more than 100,000 pounds of paper, cardboard and magazines in The Evening Star-P-T. A. Salvage for Victory campaign. With figures from four schools not received as yet, the total received was 106,447 pounds.

Pacing the schools was Jefferson Junior High School with the record-breaking 8,002 pounds. The energy shown by the students at that school has been extraordinary from the start of the campaign. One section in the school was the first to turn in a ton in a single day.

Nine other schools in addition to Jefferson turned in more than a ton each last week. They are in order, Petworth, 4,388 pounds; Horace Mann, 3,684; Bancroft, 3,141; Garrison, 2,757; Grinke, 2,357; Ketcham, 2,274; Shaw Junior, 2,241; Bunker Hill, 2,143; and Buchanan, 2,017.

The funds received from the campaign are being put to many uses in the school for which there are no appropriations, such as first-aid equipment, identification tags, air-raid precaution materials and other such items.

Without figures from four schools, the campaign to date has yielded

Paper Collections For Tomorrow

The following is the schedule for the collection of paper, cardboard and magazines in The Evening Star-P-T. A. Salvage for Victory campaign in district 1, together with the five leaders and their poundage to date:

Jefferson Junior	15,161
Buchanan	7,062
Ketcham	2,736
Congress Heights	2,264
Fairbrother	1,790
Orr	Ambush
Randle Highlands	S. J. Bowen
Fayne	Randall Junior
Bryan	Giddings
Van Ness	Lenox
Syphax	Hine Junior
A. Bowen	Wallach
Greenleaf

386,080 pounds of salvaged paper, or nearly 200 carloads which have gone into the growing stream of recovered waste which is so much in demand in the defense industries.

Week by week the tempo of the drive has been increasing. Some of the schools which were dropped from the campaign because they had failed to make the minimum of 200 pounds have returned and have made exceptional progress since their return. Ketcham, with 2,274 pounds; Syphax, with 854; Grim, with 2,257; and Montgomery, with 589, are examples.

25 Leading Schools

The 25 leading schools in total received up to date are:

Jefferson Junior	15,161
Bancroft	11,078
Roosevelt	9,613
Horace Mann	9,520
Lafayette	9,248
Petworth	8,975

Barnard	7,924
Garrison	7,168
Buchanan	7,062
Westbrook	6,490
Hearst	6,277
Truesdell	5,870
East Bethesda	5,563
Wheatley	5,523
Takoma Park Md.	5,378
East Silver Spring	5,362
Janney	5,071
Shaw Junior	5,026

Conservation of Paper

Every citizen is called upon to see that not a pound of paper is wasted. Demand from every clerk that any unnecessary wrapping of packages or unnecessary use of paper bags be dispensed with.

Waste paper for paperboard is vital to the packaging of a great quantity of war equipment.

Do not burn newspapers, but when you have saved enough for a bundle, give them to the school children who are cooperating in the defense program with the parent-teacher organization in The Star's campaign for reclaiming old newspapers.

American Woman Knows Brazil as Generous Friend

Mrs. Carl Sylvester Honored by Country For Social Work

By JESSIE FANT EVANS.

"Brazil always has been the warm, generous, whole-hearted friend of the United States," said Mrs. Carl Sylvester, wife of the recently retired American president of the Tramways Light and Power Co. of Rio de Janeiro. This great public utility also includes the Brazilian telephone service under its jurisdiction. First American woman to receive Brazil's Order of the Southern Cross for her outstanding contribution to its social welfare, Mrs. Sylvester is in Washington with her husband for a brief visit. Early in February she will return to Rio de Janeiro by plane to further the advancement of certain aspects of social service work which she inaugurated as a bride 25 years ago. She also will continue the organization of first-aid and civilian defense work in the Anglo-American colony, which she started before her husband's retirement and return to his native land after 30 years of service to Brazil.

This petite, cosmopolitan woman made her first trip to Rio de Janeiro in a black-out voyage during World War I. She was then en route there on her honeymoon. Immediately upon her arrival in reality before she had begun house-keeping, she found herself immersed in all sorts of humanitarian activities which she has since followed. "How the money did pour out of Brazil for the American Red Cross and the Allied cause during those days," she recalled. "They made our cause theirs so wholeheartedly and so generously it fairly took my breath away that there could be such sympathy and understanding. I feel tremendously grateful for this as an American citizen and for the way in which the Brazilian families took me, a lonely, little American bride, into their hearts and their homes. My dearest friend in Rio de Janeiro today are Brazilians."

Mrs. Sylvester herself was at that time the organizer of some 22 fetes in Rio, the largest of which was held in the great opera house. The thrilling moment of this particular occasion was the unfringing of the United States flag in the harbor, and the sailors from it unfurled this great banner to the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" led by Hackett, the American tenor, while the entire audience stood at attention.

She is one of the founders of Brazil's S. O. S., the literal translation of whose name means "Social Service Work." The first playground in Rio also owes its inception to her initiative, and many have since followed in its wake. With a group of American women she organized its Thrift Shop and its Orphanage for Girls. Rio's Juvenile Court Society, its soup and diet kitchens and its Shelter for the Destitute, as well as its Pro Matre, or lying-in hospital for women, are other Brazilian philanthropic institutions whose need she envisaged and whose organization she made possible. The case history in Rio's Shelter for the Destitute are now recognized as one of the most complete and effective systems in the Americas today.

Organized Strangers' Hospital. In Rio's American colony she was active in the organization of the city's Strangers' Hospital and the Women's Auxiliary, which has been such an effective force in meeting its expanding needs. In addition to her philanthropic activities, which were so numerous as to require 10 women to take her place in their motivation when she returned with her husband to this country, Mrs. Sylvester was the president of Brazil's Welcoming Committee to foreign guests and assisted in receiving the missions from the United States. "I cannot possibly tell you," she said, "how responsive the people of Brazil are to worthwhile, new ideas, or how quickly they assimilate and adapt the best there is in them to their own specific needs. The younger Brazilian women are outstanding in their social service activities and interest in philanthropic causes. They have their equivalent of the Junior League in their Reguena Crusada, which means Little Crusade. This was organized by Mme. Epitacio Pessoa, the wife of a former President of Brazil." President Vargas and his lovely wife, Donna Darcy Vargas, according to Mrs. Sylvester, are the active leaders in all that pertains to Brazil's advancement along modern scientific and educational lines, and are broadly humanitarian in their concepts of how the welfare of their fellow citizens may best be advanced, as well as loyal friends of their sister North American republic, the United States.

Equally at ease conversationally in Portuguese or French, in addition to her understanding of German and her ability to speak it, Mrs. Sylvester began her study of Portuguese on the boat going down to Rio de Janeiro on her wedding journey. From that time on she had lessons in it every day until she had fully mastered it.

Language Essential. "There is nothing more essential," she said, "than a knowledge of the language of a country for the person who wishes to understand its people and their customs. Portuguese is the language of the people of Brazil. Mrs. Sylvester also said French is the language of elegance and culture in Brazil, with Portuguese, French and English often being practically interchangeable in its social and business relationships. After practically continuous residence for a quarter of a century in Brazil, away from her native New England, where she was educated, Mrs. Sylvester's speech every now and then has the charming inflection of a daughter of the deep South. This is doubtless due to the fact that her mother was a member of a distinguished family of Charlestown, S. C., whose lovely home, Poyas House, is still standing on King street.

Her return to Rio de Janeiro in February will not be one more among many transcontinental flights for this adopted daughter of Brazil, who modestly looks upon her decoration from its government "as a receipt" that she has "in some measure tried to repay her debt of gratitude to its people for the friendship" they so richly gave her during her many years of residence there.

Enthralling Scrapbook. One of 10 children, she has kept in touch with the individual members of this large family by means of a weekly typed letter, often illustrated with newspaper clippings, which she requested back after it had made the rounds. This constitutes the backbone of her scrapbook, which is an unusual and completely enthralling record of her life and unusual experiences in Brazil.

After her return from Rio de Janeiro this time, Mrs. Sylvester and her husband will make their headquarters in Damariscotta, Me., since her husband is "100 per cent New England, and a New Englander is never more typically than in the State of Maine." "They expect to make frequent trips to Washington, however, which they consider, "the one place on this

Auto Industry Pushes Drive to Lengthen Life of Cars

By DAVID J. WILKIE. Wide World Automotive Writer. DETROIT, Jan. 31.—The average individual will have impressed upon him with increasing emphasis in the months ahead how important the automobile has become in everyday life, according to automobile trade experts.

There are something like 650,000 passenger automobiles in dealers' hands throughout the country. But they are earmarked for sale to the Government and for use in essential services. None is for sale to the average individual and there aren't any being made. Mr. Average Citizen cannot buy new tires for his present car and war-created shortages of other vital parts may make it increasingly difficult to keep all needed vehicles in operation, the trade authorities assert.

Even when the industry had produced around 2,150,000 new passenger cars during the year ending next July 31, leading car makers predicted a shortage by the year end of around 1,000,000 units. The War Production Board's plan for increasing all passenger car and light truck output after today cut approximately 900,000 units from the originally planned total.

Cent. Nearly in Half. While the prospective shortage isn't necessarily increased by exactly that volume, it is made a more realistic probability by the present car being cut off of nearly half the expected supply.

To make the most of what there is available, every motorcar manufacturer is promoting some form of car conservation program. Aside from the desire to keep privately-owned transport an accepted phase of the American economy, there is also the determination of the car maker to prove the durability of his own model in times of stress and to keep his customer clientele together for the post-war period.

Replacement parts for older models currently in use, as well as for that part of the 1942 model output that reached the public before the ban on further sale are in about normal volume, according to trade surveys. They are to be supplemented, under present plans, with additional units that should provide supplies sufficient for the next two years.

Even this encouraging forecast, however, does not shake the car experts in their conviction that Mr. Average Citizen will feel the real effects of the lack of new-car production before the end of the current year. A normal passenger vehicle, built as sturdy as the industry knows how to make it, might be kept in use for a dozen years, they say, if very good care is taken of it, but at this point it might "give up all at once" and the only replacement possible would be a new car, now unavailable.

Engagements Reflect War Influence

Wedding Plans Uncertain; Miss Merrill Betrothed

There was a time when weddings took place months—sometimes a year or two—after the engagement announcement. But that was before the war crisis began to affect the lives of almost every young man in the country. Now almost every engagement notice is followed by the information that the wedding date depends on "the orders of the young man" or "on when he can get leave."

Of particular interest today, however, is news of an engagement in which there is no mention of wedding plans. Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Rosemary Katharine Merrill, to Mr. Caleb Loring, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Loring, of the Crossing and Chestnut Hill, Mass.

Miss Merrill is a graduate of the Master's School at Dobb's Ferry, N. Y., and made her debut here and in Boston. She is a member of the Junior League of Washington.

Mr. Loring is a graduate of Milton Academy and is at Harvard, where he is a member of the Hasty Fudding and A. D. Clubs.

Miss Jane Castell To Wed in March

Mrs. William Gertrude Castell of Takoma Park, Md., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Jane Jordan Castell, to Lt. Thomas Treulien Grady, U. S. M. C., son of Mrs. Alice W. Grady and the late Mr. Frank Grady of Augusta, Ga.

Both Miss Castell and Lt. Grady were graduated from George Washington University.

Lt. Grady has just completed the candidates' class at the Marine Barracks, Quantico, and is entering the reserve officers' class for an additional three months training.

The wedding will take place Saturday, March 7, in the Trinity Episcopal Church, Takoma Park.

Miss Margaret Almond To Wed Cadet Galloway

Miss Dyar Married In U. S. Embassy At Caracas

The United States Embassy in Caracas, Venezuela, was the scene January 19 of a wedding of much interest in Washington, when Miss Dorothy Dyar, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kingman Dyar of this city, became the bride of Mr. William Frederick Penniman, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Penniman of Washington and Savannah, Ga.

The wedding was to have taken place here in June, but due to the war and the uncertainty that Mr. Penniman would be permitted leave at that time, plans were changed.

Cable communications were received from Venezuela and Miss Dyar was granted a visa before civilians were restricted in their travel.

The details of the wedding were charming, having been made by Mrs. Frank P. Corrigan, wife of the Ambassador to the South American republic. An improvised altar, banked with orchids and Easter lilies, was arranged in the drawing room of the Embassy, with graceful palms forming a background for the beautiful blossoms.

The ceremony was performed in candlelight by the minister of the Anglican Church. The bride was given in marriage by Ambassador Corrigan. She wore a lovely gown of ivory white satin made with a peplum of rose duchesse lace. Her finger-tip-length veil was held by a halo of tulle embroidered in seed pearls.

Mrs. Osborne Watson, whose husband is Commercial Attache of the Embassy, was matron of honor and Mr. George S. Roper of Washington, a member of the Embassy staff, was best man.

Mrs. Penniman is a graduate of Holton-Arms School and Mount Holyoke College. Mr. Penniman, who is connected with the State Department, is a graduate of the Shenandoah Military Academy and was a member of the class of 1931 of the University of Pennsylvania.

Weddings and Parties Becoming Less Formal On Account of War

Miss Fontaine Fahnestock Bride Of Lt. Stabler; Miss Wirgman Marries Lt. John Kittelle

By MARGARET HART, Society Editor.

Washington's social scene is being changed rapidly by the war with almost all large entertainments being replaced by small and informal parties. Weddings, too, have been affected and many are planned on short notice because of military orders received by the bridegroom-elect. Two weddings yesterday which held precedence over other events in society, although arranged in a comparatively short time, were more elaborate in detail than usual.

The brides who claimed a very special share of society's attention yesterday were Miss Fontaine Fahnestock and Miss Polly Wayne Wirgman, the latter the daughter of Mrs. Wayne Wirgman. Miss Fahnestock became the bride of Lt. Warwick Stabler, U. S. A., at an impressive ceremony at 4:30 o'clock in the home of her father and stepmother, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden A. Fahnestock, on Massachusetts avenue, with the Rev. Albert Lucas, headmaster of St. Alban's School, officiating. At the same hour in All Souls' Memorial Church Miss Wirgman was married to Lt. John Kittelle, U. S. N., the ceremony being performed by the Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett, rector of the church.

Guests at the wedding of Miss Fahnestock were limited to mutual friends of the family of the bride and bridegroom. Lt. Stabler is the son of Mrs. Stabler and the late Mr. Herbert Stabler, long a member of the United States diplomatic service, and a number of the guests were from the diplomatic corps. No formal reception followed.

A large number of guests representing all circles of society assembled for the wedding of Miss Wirgman and then went to the Washington Club for a reception.

Miss Fahnestock Married In Spacious Drawing Room

Miss Fahnestock was married in the spacious drawing room, the furnishings of which have not been changed since her grandmother, the late Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, resided in the mansion. The room with its handsome brocaded draperies, exquisite French furniture and family portraits had an artistic floral display yesterday. At one end of the long formal room there was an improvised altar banked with white snapdragons and gladioli, with palms and ferns used as a background. Other white flowers filled the great vases in the room. The bride walked through an aisle made by white ribbons to the altar, where the bridegroom and his brother, Mr. Wells Stabler, who was his best man, were waiting.

Walking in front of the bride were her two pretty schoolgirl sisters, Mary Lee and Clare Fahnestock. They had on dainty dresses of peach color taffeta made on princess lines with floor length skirts. They wore Juliet caps of taffeta to match their frocks and carried small old-fashioned bouquets.

The bride's gown was lovely and she made a striking picture as she entered the room with her father, who gave her in marriage. The dress was of white satin made with long fitted sleeves, a sweetheart neckline and a sweeping train. Rare old lace which belonged to the bride's mother, Mrs. Wladimir Bouimistrow, who came from her Southern home for the wedding, formed the bridal veil and the bride carried a white prayer book with ribbon markers caught with white butterfly ornaments.

Later in the day the couple left on a wedding trip, the bride traveling in a smart two-piece wool suit. Lt. and Mrs. Stabler will make their home at Fort Devens, near Boston, where the former is on duty.

Church Beautifully Decorated For Kittelle-Wirgman Wedding

Few weddings have had a more effective setting as that of Miss Wirgman and Lt. Kittelle. Ascension lilies in great quantities were used in the church with snapdragons, Southern smilax, palms and ferns. The altar was banked with the flowers and in the chancel the fragrant white flowers were all the more enhanced by the greens. There were candles in each window of the church and these with the tapers in the five large seven-branch candelabra on the altar shed a soft mellow light on the scene.

The wedding party approached the altar through an aisle of green

By KATHARINE BROOKS.

Somewhat larger will be the cocktail party of the Australian Minister and Mrs. Richard G. Casey Sunday afternoon, February 8.

Retiring Military Attache Of Legation to Be Feted

Invitations from the Canadian Minister and Mrs. McCarthy were in the mail yesterday and they have planned their party as a farewell to the retiring Military Attache of the Legation and Mrs. H. F. G. Letson. Brig. Letson is returning over the week end from a short visit in Ottawa preparatory to his transfer to another post.

Maj. C. M. Drury, Assistant Military Attache, will be the acting Military Attache until a decision is reached as to appointing a new attache or making the attache's office an independent military mission. Maj. Drury has been here for several months and was accompanied to Washington by Mrs. Drury, who stayed only a short time and returned to their Canadian home, where very recently their small son was born. They are expected to join Maj. Drury here before the spring. Miss Diane Drury, sister of the major, spent the early winter with him here, but has gone back to Canada.

The Australian Minister and Mrs. Casey will honor their gifted and prominent countryman, Percy Grainger, brilliant pianist and composer. Mr. Grainger will be the soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor, at its Sunday afternoon concert and the festivity at the Legation will follow the concert. Mrs. Casey has arranged the entertainment with the Woman's Committee of the Symphony.

A similar fete is being given this afternoon at the Arts Club for Mr. Charles O'Connor, who will be the guest conductor at the concert this afternoon. This party has been arranged by Mrs. Truxtun Beale, chairman of the entertainment section of the Woman's Committee for the Orchestra and other members of the committee, as well as officers of the Symphony Association, have been included in the invitations.

Mr. Reginald Aiken, who will be secretary, and Mr. Bruce Turner, an economist, whose post at the Legation is not yet decided.

Lt. Col. W. N. Pharazyn also was in the party and will be Military Attache. Mr. Turner is married, but Mrs. Turner did not make the trip at this time.

Dominican Legation Staff Increased

New faces and personalities will be found at the Dominican Legation, for the staff has been augmented by four new members. The two new consular secretaries, Senor Rafael Espallat and Senor Emilio Zeller, with the new Chancellor, Senor Otto Vega, already have arrived in Washington. The new Military Attache, Capt. Salvador Coblan, is expected before the middle of the month.

Senor Espallat is a cousin of the late Maj. Ulises F. Espallat, who was Military Attache of the Legation for some years, serving there until his death. His widow, Senora de Espallat, still makes her home here, where she has an apartment at the Chastleton. Senor Espallat was accompanied by Senora de Espallat and their young son Carlos, and they temporarily are staying with the Second Secretary and Senora de Vilelosa.

Norwegian Minister Entertaining Bishop

The Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morganstjerne have as their guest over Sunday Dr. J. A. Aasgaard, bishop of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. The Envoy, who has been in New Orleans, where he went to make an address, returned to the Legation yesterday.

Also visiting in Washington are the quartermaster general of Norway, Col. John Ravnseorg and his daughter, Miss Tove Ravnseorg, who are staying at Wardman Park Hotel. Col. Ravnseorg is head of the Norwegian Supply Commission and makes his headquarters in New York.

Parties Vie With Wedding Receptions

Mrs. Leland Harrison Entertains Friends on Eve Of Husband's Departure as Minister in Berne

Although weddings and wedding receptions held the attention of much of society yesterday, there were several other entertainments of note on the calendar.

One of the most delightful of the afternoon parties was that given by Mrs. Leland Harrison, who entertained at cocktails in her home on N street. Guests included a number of long-time friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, who gathered to tell their host good-bye before his departure for his post as United States Minister to Switzerland. Mr. Harrison expects to leave early this month for Berne.

Another cocktail party of note on yesterday's social schedule was that given by Mr. and Mrs. Morrison Clements, who entertained in their Twenty-first street home.

Mrs. Disque Hostess To Younger Set

The younger set gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Disque between the hours of 5 and 7 o'clock for the tea at which Mrs. Disque entertained to honor the daughters of two of her close friends. The honor guests were Miss Jane Lingo, daughter of Lt. Comdr. and Mrs. B. Harrison Lingo, and Miss Mary Stuart Montague Price, daughter of Comdr. and Mrs. Allan I. Price.

Mrs. Disque had decorated the tea table with an attractive arrangement of pink roses and tall green candlesticks. ## Silver Spring and Takoma Farewell Dinner Parties

Many Families Loath to Leave Residences Under Decentralization; Mr. and Mrs. Volkmer Entertain

The departure within the next several weeks of a number of families in the Silver Spring and Takoma Park communities who are affected by the Government decentralization orders, will be a distinct loss. Many are well known and have been leaders in organization work and community projects, as well as adding much to the social life. Loath to leave their homes and friends, some of the luckier ones have been able to obtain transfers to defense agencies, and a number of others have decided temporarily at least, to have the man of the house commute each week end and maintain their homes here. However, some of the residents already have leased or sold their homes and will leave within a short time.

The first of a number of farewell parties were given this week end for a few of the families who are moving to Richmond, where the Patent Office is being transferred. Mrs. Victor E. Grottsch of Woodside Park entertained at a luncheon for 16 guests in honor of Mrs. Ernest F. Klinge, who will leave for Richmond with her husband and daughters, the Misses Edna Louise and May Klinge, February 15. Several small dinner parties will be given for the Klings, who live in Wynnewood Park, this week. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Volkmer were hosts at a party at their Takoma Park home for Mr. Franklin T. Garrett, who has been tenor soloist of the Presbyterian Church in Takoma Park for the past four years. Mrs. Volkmer is director of the group. Besides members of the choir, guests included Mrs. Garrett and the Rev. and Mrs. R. Paul Schearer. Mrs. Garrett and their son, David, will remain here until the latter finishes school, but Mr. Garrett will leave early this month for Richmond.

Mrs. William Smith Gives Luncheon. Mrs. William Smith gave a farewell luncheon Friday for Mrs. Erol Emschwiler of Woodmoor. The Emschwilers, with their sons, Eddie and Mac, also are scheduled to leave here in two weeks. Also feted over the week end was Mrs. Harrison Moseley, who was honor guest at a party given by Mrs. LaRue Keagle of Silver Spring. The Moseleys are also scheduled to move to Virginia shortly.

Others leaving soon for Richmond are Mr. and Mrs. James E. Richards of Sutherland road, Silver Spring; Mr. and Mrs. Donald Parker of Sligo Park Hills, and Mr. and Mrs. Maurice K. Peck of Woodside. Mr. Joseph Marion of Woodside Forest, who is with the Rural Electrification Administration, will leave early next month for St. Louis. He will be joined in June by Mrs. Marion and their daughter, Yvette, who will be graduated from the academy of the Holy Names. Their son, George, who is a student at the Georgetown School of Foreign Service, probably will be in military service by that time.

Miss Jean Bush, who is a student at Bucknell, is spending the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bush of Silver Spring. Mr. Jay Miller of the University of Pennsylvania also is a guest at the Bush home for several days.

Mrs. Paul Kreh Leaves for Florida. Mrs. Paul Kreh and her children, David and Charlene, of Woodside, left Friday for St. Petersburg, Fla., where Mrs. Kreh plans to put the children in school and stay for the remainder of the winter. She was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Lester E. Veirs, who will return in several weeks.

Dr. and Mrs. Howard D. Dozier were hosts last evening at their home in North Woodside, entertaining their bridge club at supper and cards. Mrs. Earl Boyer of Philadelphia is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Stockberger of Takoma Park. Mrs. James E. Cope and her children, Jay, John and Julie, of Burnt Mills Hills will leave tomorrow for Mobile, Ala., where they will visit Mrs. Cope's mother, Mrs. Robert Wright, until March 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Hewitt, Jr., and their son, Frank L. Hewitt, III, are again in their Silver Spring home after a visit with relatives in Houston. Mrs. Hewitt and her young son spent several weeks there and were joined last week end by Mr. Hewitt.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd S. Stewart are returning in a day or two from a two-weeks stay in Miami.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of tawny blue taffeta with a matching coronet and short veil and she carried a bouquet of yellow roses and white baby's breath.

Miss Grace Shannon, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and wore a Nile green brocade gown and carried tulle roses. Mr. Perry Tamill was best man.

Meade, the wedding taking place in the Luther Place Memorial Church with the Rev. Charles B. Foelsch officiating.

Falms and ferns formed the background for masses of white gladioluses and snapdragons as a setting for the ceremony and the wedding marches were played by Miss Anne Burger. Solo selections were sung by Mr. Charles Whitten.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Sallie P. Barnes of Frederick and she was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. Roger E. Engle. Her gown was fashioned with a dropped shoulder line and trimmed with Venetian lace. Her veil was of illusion and fell from a tiara of orange blossoms and her bouquet was a shoulder corsage of white roses and sweet peas.

Miss Lillie Mae Barnes was maid of honor for her sister and she was gowned in powder blue taffeta made with a fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline, three-quarter length sleeves and a bouffant skirt, and she carried a bouquet of daffodils and white snapdragons.

The other attendants were Mrs. Anna R. Jones and Mrs. Mildred Stewart and Mr. William P. Shannahan. The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore an ivory satin gown made on princess lines with a train and a sweetheart neckline trimmed with white lace. The long sleeves came to a point at the wrist and the fingertip-length veil was held with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white roses and wore a string of pearls, a gift of the bridegroom.

Miss Sue Marcia Brown, the maid of honor, wore a pink taffeta dress made on princess lines with a matching bonnet. The other attendants were Mrs. Julian M. Social Register Changing In Lower Montgomery

War Is Bringing New Residents To Replace Those Transferred To Posts in Other Communities

It's "Hall and Farewell" now in the Bethesda communities along Rockville pike—"farewell" to the families who are leaving soon with the transfer of the Government offices, and "hall" to the new people who are coming into the neighborhood with the opening of the new Naval Hospital next month.

The transfer of these families is leaving a wide gap in the social life of the lower Montgomery County towns. Most of these residents have been in the county for some years and have been active in the organization of its community life, and now that they are leaving their friends are wishing them "God speed" with many pleasant social affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Nevius of Edgewood will be one of the first families to leave. They are going to Richmond with the Patent Office transfer and expect to depart between the 1st and 10th.

The Nevius home on Fairfax road has been the scene of frequent social occasions during the eight years they have lived there, and the friends whom they have entertained so often and so pleasantly are now feeling them. Next Friday Mrs. F. P. Di Biasi will give a luncheon in honor of Mrs. Nevius. Last Friday she was honor guest at a tea given by Mrs. Kenneth H. N. Newton and before the tea she was a guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. Dan I. McKeithen. Mrs. T. Emmert Beall will leave shortly. Mrs. T. Emmert Beall, another popular Edgewood hostess, to leave soon for Richmond, also is being entertained at a series of parties. She was a guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. Wilfred G. McLennan Friday and several more parties have been planned for her in the next two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Biddle, also on the Richmond list, were given a party last evening by some of their close friends in Bethesda, among them Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Bashore, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Keiser, Mr. and Mrs. Richard E. Titlow, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Di Biasi, Mr. and Mrs. C. Eugene Doyle and Mr. and Mrs. William R. Teunis.

Representative Richards and Family Return. Representative James P. Richards of South Carolina and his family have moved back to Westmoreland Hills and are occupying the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Foshag while the Foshags are in Mexico. The Richards lived in Westmoreland Hills last winter in the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Carl M. Underwood, who are now in Minneapolis, and during their stay here they made many friends in the community. Mr. and Mrs. Foshag expect to be back in Westmoreland Hills some time next summer, or as soon as the research work that Mr. Foshag is doing for the Smithsonian Institution is finished.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Webster Robinson of Greenwich Forest are also on Bethesda's list of "transferees." They are in Richmond for the week end and on their return tonight they will be joined by Mr. and Mrs. Sauley Hughes, who will be their guests until the house the Hughes have leased in Chevy Chase is ready for occupancy. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes have come to Washington from Atlanta.

Mrs. Hugh L. Murrell is planning to give a luncheon Thursday with her mother, Mrs. Cora Adams Peoples, as her assistant hostess. Mrs. Peoples is expected to arrive in Westgate today to spend several months with Mr. and Mrs. Murrell. She has been with her daughter in Baltimore since before Christmas.

Dr. and Mrs. Julian W. Pollard had 10 guests for bridge and a buffet supper party last evening. Miss Betty Varn is home from Hannah Moore Academy for the week end to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Madison H. Varn in Greenwich Forest, and with her is Miss Janet Stirling, her classmate at Hannah Moore.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Sexton of Abilene, Kans., are guests of Mr. Sexton's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Gish, in Somerset. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Skene of Brookdale are visiting Mrs. Skene's mother in Birmingham, Ala. Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Stuart of Bradley Hills Grove have left for Florida, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. King of Greenwich Forest will depart Friday for a fortnight in Fort Lauderdale.

BUY-LINES by Nancy Sasser. A Weekly Sponsored Column of Things Advertised and Interesting.

New York, N. Y., Jan. 31. December had its Santa Claus, January its chubby New Year babe... but February goes completely romantic with the God of Love for partner! Valentine's Day, spang in the middle of the month, is a light-hearted invitation to us all,—one day out of three hundred and sixty-five when we can discard outside "face" and go giddy with heart-and-flower fripperies and sweet sentimental dither! And this year, especially, we'll do just that. War is grim, and its tasks and hardships exacting,—but it makes true meanings seem truer, real valentines more precious. So I've an idea... why not let's out-valentine Cupid this year? To your own True Love, a very special-special gift from YOU, his Valentine. But let's not be too exclusive about it. First, Mrs. A's package split, and there her prunes go a-rolling on the floor,—while Mrs. B slips her handy SUNSWEET carton into place on her pantry shelf, with all the delicious flavor sealed IN until used! Next,—Mrs. A will find that her ordinary prunes are not as tender, delicious, or as quickly cooked as Mrs. B's SUNSWEETS that have been "tenderized" for just these qualities! So avoid these errors,—insist on SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes... Nature-fortified with Vitamins A, B, and C, and tree-ripened under the California sun! # Panama Educator to Talk On Home Life in U. S., A. A. U. W. Board Told

Dr. Ester Neira de Calvo to Give Series of Five Lectures on Her Return; Reports Made at Session

By Frances Lide, Women's Club Editor.

A talk on "Life in the Homes of the United States"—to refute such misconceptions as the belief that most American women are divorced and that prayer is unusual in the homes of this country—will be one of five lectures to be given by Dr. Ester Neira de Calvo on her return to Panama.

Dr. de Calvo's plan was one of a number of reports relative to inter-American relations made to the national board of the American Association of University Women, which opened a four-day session yesterday at national headquarters here.

A prominent educator in Panama and her country's delegate to the Inter-American Commission of Women, Dr. de Calvo recently made a two months' tour of nine States under A. A. U. W. auspices. The material for her lecture on the home life of this country has come largely from her first-hand observations on the trip which carried her as far West as Colorado and Wyoming.

Reports to the A. A. U. W. board on other phases of inter-American co-operation indicate that closer contact with university women of the South American countries was one of the developments of 1941.

Members were particularly interested in the results of the first regional meeting of the International Federation of University Women held in Havana in November.

One of several delegates who followed the regional conference with a brief tour of the United States was Dr. Maria de la Luz Grovas, language teacher of the University of Mexico.

Mexico Summer School Work Called Miracle.

Dr. de Calvo told the A. A. U. W. staff that she regarded the summer school at the University of Mexico as the "greatest work of miracles in understanding" between her people and those of this country.

Summer classes for visitors from the United States have been held there for 19 years, she pointed out. "I watch the new arrivals," she said. "You don't see a pleased face. They have come through the worst part of our country. They are proud, indifferent. Their expressions say: 'Why did I come here?'"

"The compensation comes at the close of the term after six weeks of work. It is marvelous. We have lived together and worked together. When our students leave we see friendly, understanding faces. They are the kind of people who go out and make truly friendly relations."

While inter-American friendship has long held a major position on the A. A. U. W. program—the organization has for 24 years granted an annual Latin American fellowship to bring some gifted woman of the republic to study here—the board meeting this week end is particularly concerned with the role of university women in the work of war and making the peace.

Chinese Ambassador To Be Speaker Tonight.

All sessions are closed, but delegates will be entertained tonight by the Washington branch at a buffet supper at which the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Ho Shih, will be the guest speaker. Mrs. William C. Van Vleet, president of the District branch, will preside at the supper, which will be held at the clubhouse.

Dr. Helen C. White, English professor of the University of Wisconsin, heads the board, which includes Dr. Louise Pound of the University of Nebraska, first vice president; Dr. Dora D. Parkinson of College Station, Columbus, Miss., second vice president; Mrs. A. Ross Hill of Kansas City, treasurer, and Miss Elizabeth Jones of Montclair, N. J., Dr. Leroy F. Jackson of Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.; Mrs. Emil E. Storkan of Battle Creek, Mich.; Dr. Agnes Ellen Harris, University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Mrs. H. P. Palmer of Minneapolis; Dr. Margaret Justin of Kansas State College, Manhattan; Mrs. Charles J. Oviatt of Sheridan, Wyo.; Mrs. Victor Burke of Pullman, Wash., and Mrs. Malbone W. Graham of Santa Monica, Calif.

Committee chairmen heading up the various fields of A. A. U. W. activities who are also members of the Board of Directors are: Education, Dr. Laura Zirbes, Ohio State University; international relations, Dr. Azada Comstock, Mount Holyoke College; social studies, Dr. Caroline F. Ware, Vienna, Va.; membership and maintaining standards, Dr. Janet Howell Clark, University of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.; fellowship awards, Dr. Adeline de Sale Link, University of Chicago; legislative program, Dr. Harriet W. Elliott, Woman's College, University of North Carolina; economic and legal status of women, Dr. Susan M. Kingsbury of Bryn Mawr, Pa., and national clubhouses, Mrs. Lawrence Radford of Washington.

Dr. Kathryn McHale, general director, and Mrs. James K. McClinck, controller, both of the headquarters staff, complete the personnel of the board.

Interesting Life in India Related by D. C. Woman

Mrs. C. Irving Brown Recalls Her Experiences in Bombay, Calcutta and Other Cities

By Gretchen Smith

Should England ever be forced to withdraw from India, it would signify the end of the luxury-filled, easy-going lives of the Indian maharajahs, whose wealth and treasures surpass anything known in the Occidental world, according to Mrs. C. Irving Brown of 6211 Utah street N.W.

Mrs. Brown spent more than 16 years in India, first as a teacher of chemistry in an Indian school after her graduation from Mount Holyoke College and later as the wife of the manager of an oil company in Bombay. Her husband's death shortly after the outbreak of the European war brought Mrs. Brown and her two sons, who were born in India, back to the United States. The boys are now attending school in Washington.

Speaking fluent Marathi, the local language of Bombay, as well as Hindustani, Mrs. Brown enjoyed many close and interesting contacts with the people of India. She learned to know and admire the Far East group in particular, declaring them to be "by far the most cultured people in Bombay."

"The majority of them are merchants," she explained, "and although prosperous and well-to-do, their wealth cannot be compared to that of the native princes."

The latter favored individuals have long been protected by the British who, understanding the psychology of the Indian people and their love of display, have been tolerant toward the extravagant habits of the native rulers, Mrs. Brown explained.

"Of course," she said, "the Indian Nationalist party is opposed to these things which they call the playboys of Europe, because of the lives they were accustomed to live before the outbreak of war."

Native Prince Brings Six Planes as Gifts.

Mrs. Brown told of one native prince, who returned to India from a visit to Europe, bringing with him six crystal pianos as gifts for his friends.

"This same prince returned a luxurious car he had ordered for hunting," she laughed, "because it was too modest for him and he sent it back to have it outfitted with gold, mother of pearl and ivory."

"These princes realize that their spendthrift days will end when the British ever lose their rule in India," Mrs. Brown added.

Although she left the Far East before the Japanese entered the present conflict, the speaker said there was a tremendous anti-Japanese feeling in Bombay two years ago.

"Bombay is the center of the Indian cotton trade," she explained, "and the markets there were flooded with cheap Japanese-made goods, which, were resented by the Indians."

Describing the women of Bombay as cultured, educated and progressive, Mrs. Brown said that before she left India, the women were energetically preparing for war emergencies.

"They were taking first-aid courses and air-raid precautions," she commented, "as well as having their cars painted blue as part of the black-out program."

Mrs. Brown's return voyage was as interesting as her life in India. After leaving Bombay, she traveled to Calcutta and then to Singapore, she said, arriving at the latter port at the same time with the first British expeditionary forces sent to bolster the defenses of the Far East.

"The officers could not understand why they were being sent to the Far East," she said, "when the war was being fought in Europe. Many of them at that time predicted the success of Stalin, who they declared, was the 'greatest power in the world and would eventually win the war.'"

It's a Great Day for Young In the Legitimate Drama

Teen-Age Actor or Actress Might Even Win Year's Acting Prize if Playwrights Keep on Creating Those Brilliant Roles

By Jay Carmody.

The theater today is singularly blessed in its children. In fact, they are so engagingly dominant on the dramatic scene that the latent playwright would do well to contemplate inserting a child in any drama he might be meditating. It is an almost certain harbinger of success, not to mention an occasion for deep gratification on the part of mothers whose little one is flamboyantly another Helen Hayes.

When one comes to think of it, in the desperate hope for column material, both of last year's prize plays were quite largely dependent upon their children for their excellence.

That was conspicuously true of "Watch on the Rhine" in which Miss Lillian Hellman, who seems to understand the young very thoroughly, created three of the most engaging children ever to find their way onto the stage. It was even more true, of course, of the best foreign drama of the season, Emyln Williams' "The Corn Is Green." Williams' hero, of course, was that anguished adolescent whose yearning for an education made a brilliant teacher out of Ethel Barrymore whose talents therefore were being clusively devoted to ancient grand dames.

"Claudia" Role Almost Won Prize For Miss Dorothy McGuire.

Then, there was the other side of the story, the distaff side, which Rose Franken created in "Claudia," the exquisitely maladjusted young bride to whom the facts of life were so disquieting.

In view of the excellence with which the dramatists are dealing with them, it is quite possible that some precocious teen-age actress will walk off one of these days with the distinction of giving the season's best performance.

It almost happened last year when Dorothy McGuire, heroine of "Claudia" and certainly the most sensational young actress discovered in years, received seven votes for that honor. It resulted in a tie between herself and Miss Barrymore, whose bangup job in "The Corn Is Green" alone was responsible for Miss McGuire's loss of that rare distinction.

There is a possibility that an even younger actress may win this year's acting honors.

The judges could do far worse than decide that Patricia Peardon's charming, zesty portrait of Judy in "Junior Miss" was the best acting item of the season. Pretty, pudgy Miss Peardon makes a marvelously engaging person out of Judy, the little girl who thinks life should be more like the movies and is going to make it that way if she wrecks the lives of every one around her.

Of equal excellence in the same play is Lenore Lonergan, whose frog-voiced, realistic, slang-slinging Puffy is an unforgettable character.

Newest sensation on Broadway is the smallest 12-year-old daughter of elephantine Alfred Hitchcock. About her play, "Solitaire," by John Van Druten, the critics manifested a considerable difference of opinion. About young Miss Hitchcock, a realistic child with such marvelous notions as deciding she could not get along well enough with her father to work in one of his pictures, they were unanimous and unstintingly full of praise.

In the world of make-believe, if not in that other one, it is a great day for children.

If They Could Get Box Cars
Producers Would Go Touring.

If it is not one thing, it is another just as bad in the legitimate theater these days.

Latest grief in the lives of producers is the shortage of box cars, of all things. Were there plenty of cars to haul the sets, costumes and props and, in a great emergency, the players, producers are positive they could make a fortune sending shows on tour. National defense has stimulated an enormous interest in the legitimate drama and Broadway magnates were all for taking advantage of it by reviving everything revivable.

Now comes the box-car shortage, or inadequacy, and it looks as if the productions and actors will just have to remain at home. Not all of them, naturally, but a great many more than producers like to contemplate.

When Walter Kerr's and Leo Brady's adaptation of "Brighton Rock" was presented at Catholic University's theater this week interest in it will extend all the way from New York to Hollywood. The new play, based upon the novel of the same name, is the property of Gilbert Miller, who will present it on Broadway if it is deemed suitable. Thereafter, it will be made into a motion picture, almost surely by Lester Cowan, who did such a brilliant piece of production in the film version of "Ladies in Retirement."

Mr. Cowan, of course, might be in the military service, as who might not?

ELVIRE POPESCO

Meet the 'Poor Man's Rhett Butler'

John Carroll Says He's No Threat to Clark Gable, Even if Gable Does Get the Good Roles

By Hubbard Keavy,
Wide World News.

HOLLYWOOD. This will give you an idea of the kind of fellow John Carroll is: In succession, he shot a birdie, an eagle and a hole-in-one, yet his total for the 18 holes of golf was 98. He should have had a card in the 70s—if he were consistent.

That will give you a slant on the fellow we're calling on today. "Inconsistent—that's me all over," said Carroll ruefully. He moved from one chair to another in his living room, which is the biggest room in his house hanging on the side of a canyon. Here he lives with his 6-year-old daughter, Juliana, whose custody he won when Steffi Duna, the Hungarian actress, divorced him.

Since he's 6 feet 3 and rangy built, chairs—even his own—don't fit him very well. He wandered around some more, then went into a cubbyhole bar, surveyed a few bottles and announced that he doesn't smoke or drink.

Says He's No Threat.
He didn't smoke, but soon we were back in the bar. He poured a slug of rock-and-rye. "Good for colds," he said, drinking it.

This Carroll—Julian Le Pave to

New Orleans—has been doing pretty well lately in the cinema, but he never has had a big role and he says the reason M-G-M doesn't give him better pictures is simply because M-G-M doesn't have enough "better pictures."

He denied he is being kept at M-G-M at $1,500 a week, as a threat to keep Clark Gable in line, but—

"I'll never get a good part unless Gable turns it down."

Both of these fellows are tall, dark and handsome, a type always in demand: They are alike and yet they are not. Gable is older, suave, polished. Carroll is a poor man's Rhett Butler—youth, coitish, devil-may-care, eager—and inconsistent.

Well, Not All.
But he is persistent.
"I first came to Hollywood 15 years ago." Actors like to talk about themselves, but I had to come back to the how-you-got-here business several times. John talked about golf and the war and autos. Every few minutes he'd interrupt himself or me to cuss a writer who had accused him of sassing directors. Then he read a long letter, full of attempted sarcastic jibes at the writer who took him to task, which John said he was having mimeographed to mail to his fans.

"All your fans?" I asked incredulously. No, just those hundred or so who wrote to tell him how unfair the article was.

"I came here 10 times in 15 years." We are now back on Carroll's beginnings. "When I couldn't get in as an extra I'd work as a laborer. Why, say, I helped lay the foundation for the stage I'm working on now at M-G-M."

They Were Great Men.
Carroll never wanted to do anything but be an actor since he met, when he was 12 (which would be about 20 years ago), Wallace Reid and Rudolph Valentino.

"They were the greatest men I ever met." He speaks of the now deceased stars as though he knew them quite well. He took them fishing in Louisiana once.

Inspired by the sterling example of these stars, and probably by their obvious wealth, John came to Hollywood. It would have little of him at first. When he couldn't get work as an extra or laborer he'd buy up old Dusselbergs, being mechanically inclined, recondition them and sell them, he says, at handsome profits.

He likes old cars and drives a huge one of '36 vintage because it pulls his huge trailer better. Once, after a better-than-average Hollywood stay, he showed up in New Orleans, a friend recalls, in the longest, reddest Packard ever made.

Yes, Athletic Enough.
Carroll is referred to around town as "that screwball," but the references are always good-natured. He never has done anything to deserve such a name, he says, except—

"Once I got to a producer who wanted a leading man who could ride and sing. I sang a bar or two. 'But,' he said, 'how do I know you're

Not the Best, but the Most Interesting

Three New Broadway Plays Have Better Chances, But Reporter Likes Ben Hecht's Entry

By Ira Wolfert.

NEW YORK.

Although three of the fiscal week's new stage attractions are expected to do better by more customers and one of them is the best thing that has happened in our theater this season, Ben Hecht's "Lily of the Valley" seemed to me the most interesting.

This is not arguing, just stating a fact.

As a matter of fact, it is set down first that there is a new child star in town—12-year-old Pat Hitchcock of "Solitaire." This is a play John Van Druten has adapted from a novel by Edwin Corle and both of them seem to have pale and blanching brains and to write like old ladies for my money. It doesn't mean old girls or good old ladies. I mean old lady old ladies, the kind that spend their time clacking and clattering and creaking gently, away from the life the rest of us live.

The boys get together on a problem that might have had its points. Their leading character is a girl child who is prepared for the world by neurotic parents up on the latest wrinkle in child-rearing. Thus she is completely and expensively unprepared for the world.

But the Bum Functions.
As soon as the thesis is stated the boys trot the kid off into one of the messiest portions of the world a body could find—meaning a bum's jungle that, judging by the setting Dwight Deere Wiman has provided, looks to be steaming away like a pile that maggots have got into. But lo and behold, what should the little girl child dig up out of the maggot pile but a jewel in a bum, a guy who doesn't like to work or shave or wash himself or do anything except play with a rat and fawn up crumbs for himself, but who is as tender as the same as a 33 steak that has been hung just long enough.

Although a nasty old plot is hatched for getting dough, this jewel of a bum functions on all facets and everything comes out okay in the end except the play. In the end the play seemed to be as it was all the way through—an etiquette thing, with toothless sprightliness in lieu of life, with touches of bad taste in lieu of gusto and wrinkled all over with much-mouthed and gummied-up reminiscences of our literary past.

The play is a one-fingered exercise in the woosiness that passes for motion among the overstuffed chairs of our theater and, since the overstuffed chairs, are the ones that pay off, the chances are the play will pay off—no kidding.

The principal parts are acted by Sam Jaffe and Morris Carnovsky. To make a long story short, they are marvelous.

Now the Gold Flows.
The best thing that has happened in our theater all season is Cheryl Crawford's revival of "Porgy and Bess" by the late George Gershwin. This is not only the finest jazz opera thus far written, but is very good, too.

While it did not make any money because no actor is greater than the sum of his part.

But It's So Futile.
Then we had a warm old fruit cake of a comedy called "Cafe Crown" which I liked quite a good deal—for the acting particularly and for the idea and then for its moments of touching comedy.

H. S. Kraft wrote this show right out of the Cafe Royale, the downtown herring grounds where Yiddish geniuses fish for sustenance. The idea he has is the natural reluctance of a minority to see its culture devoured and assimilated by the majority and the futility of such reluctance.

This is an important notion in a country like ours where the overwhelming majority consists of a coagulation of minorities and Mr. Kraft's device for expressing it is engaging. He shows the battle the Yiddish theater people put up to hold on to their young and keep them acting in Yiddish instead of going off to Broadway and Hollywood. Both sides of the argument are given passionate expression with assimilation coming out on top as it does in life.

The idea I had in mind in calling this a warm old fruit cake of a comedy is that the play is stuck full of fruity characters—two waiters and their female boss, Max the beggar, pinocchio players, a drama critic who reads his reviews to the theater people before opening night, a playwright who steals as much as if he's writing jazz songs. These are no Abie's Irish Roses, but instead are real Roses of the downtown East Side with real thorns in them that they don't mind sticking in you.

The principal parts are acted by Sam Jaffe and Morris Carnovsky. To make a long story short, they are marvelous.

Now the Gold Flows.
The best thing that has happened in our theater all season is Cheryl Crawford's revival of "Porgy and Bess" by the late George Gershwin. This is not only the finest jazz opera thus far written, but is very good, too.

While it did not make any money because no actor is greater than the sum of his part.

for its producers when first produced in 1935, practically the same cast and production are now piling up the cash customers all the way around the block, probably because "Summertime," and "A Woman Is a Sometime Thing," and "I Got Plenty o' Nuthin'" and half a dozen other arias are really music and take repeated listening before becoming steam in the heart, and probably because everybody now knows enough to want to hear "Crap Game Fugue" and that high-up, sad, sweet duet, "I Loves You, Porgy," sung by the original cast instead of crooned and bassooned over the radio.

Which gets me down to what interested me most in this week's theater, even more than "Porgy and Bess," because I happen to have seen that opera a half-dozen times already.

I don't know what Ben Hecht is driving at in "Lily of the Valley," but even so I am quite sure that it is not a great play because the boy has been writing long enough to prove that while he has a lively talent he hasn't a great one.

A Thick-fisted Play.
However, a notion of mine is that, while the theater can be great only once in a thousand times, it ought to make up during the interludes by being arresting, original and lively, and all of this "Lily of the Valley" is.

This is a thick-fisted play and you have to have a taste for it to like it at all. The scene is a city morgue populated by abnormal people, a half-dozen of them dead and the rest of them alive. In view of the absence of any readily discernible meanings, it's the characters that make the play, and the characters are good because they are right out of a police reporter's notebook—a good police reporter's good notebook.

Mr. Hecht is a big old knuckled-hammered romantic. But he has been around and he has collected information. He has written a hairy-chested fairy tale in a macabre setting, with dead bums, thieves and misers arguing around while waiting

She Must Be in the Right Place at the Right Time

It's Quite by Accident That a Girl Gets Her Break in the Movies, Even Though Maintaining Her Position Is Something Else

Wide World News. HOLLYWOOD. Dozens, or maybe scores (some say hundreds) of pretty and talented and ambitious young ladies will come to Hollywood this year. You know why.

You'll hear about a very few of them. The rest—well, some will go home, broken-hearted and bitter. A few will marry, and announce they're giving up careers which hadn't even begun. Some may become extras or waitresses, to tide them over until they're "discovered." About one girl in a hundred actually gets in the movies. One in a hundred is lucky. Luck is all that it is. It doesn't require any special gift to become a glamour girl, or an "it" expert, or a comp. siren. It requires some special talent to become an actress, of which there are too few, but just now we are talking about success in the movies and not art, which are as far apart as A and Z.

There are a hundred girls in town at the moment who can dance as capably and sing as well and look as pretty as Ginger Rogers or Rita Hayworth or Betty Grable. There must be a hundred more who can act as well and look as come-hither as Ann Sheridan or Joan Crawford or Gene Tierney or Marlene Dietrich.

But It Must Be Luck. Why is anyone of them successful when Jane Jones, who apparently has what it takes, is not? Little Miss Jones is every bit as talented, as pretty, as personable, and as intelligent as any of the girls she envies so much. But little Miss Jones has not been discovered. The reason is, simply, that she hasn't been lucky. She hasn't been in the right place at the right time. That's all.

Jean Jones, who resembles Joan Leslie (who was lucky) sits at home and is comforted by her ambitious mother, who counsels Jean to keep her chin up and smile. But Mrs. Jones knows in her heart, if she is even a little Hollywood-wise, that luck will have to be with the Joneses.

A girl in Hollywood invariably gets her break quite by accident, but it is no accident that she maintains her position and improves it. Mrs. John Brodel, formerly of Detroit, who is the mother of lucky Joan Leslie, assures me that it requires much more than luck for a young lady to keep her head up and improve her own status.

Joan Signed First. Mrs. Brodel has three charming and talented daughters, Joan, Mary and Betty. All three dance and sing. The Brodel girls were among the scores who came to Hollywood year before last. Mrs. Brodel wanted to get all three into the movies.

Joan was signed first. A scout heard her singing in a night club. The scout had an attack of indignation, or something, because he didn't stick around for the next number, which was a song and dance by the sisters Brodel. Another scout heard Mary later, and she has a contract, but she hasn't done much in the movies yet. Betty hasn't been able to crack the movies at all.

After fate has been kind to a girl, what next? Mrs. Brodel has seven suggestions, which she never would presume to call rules, for successfully assaulting Hollywood. She names ability as the first of these. Second, naturalness. She believes affectation has ruined many a young person's chances. A girl can't be too shy and she can't be too fresh.

Next, says Mrs. Brodel, a girl must have perfect health. "Because Hollywood work is hard, she must have proper food and rest." A girl must learn to concentrate. "A scatterbrain," advises Hollywood wife Mrs. Brodel, "never gets any place." Next, a girl must have the desire to succeed; without this, says Joan's mother, all else is useless. Next, she must have sympathetic guidance at home. (Bring mama with you, girls.)

Last but not least, Mrs. Brodel names education as a must. "Maybe I should put that first, or second," adds Mrs. Brodel. A girl who is dumb, academically and otherwise, has about as much chance as the proverbial snowball.

Prayer for luck, girls. And then hope that you have what Joan's mama says it takes.

athletic—like Doug Fairbanks? I said, "Wait a minute." His office was on the second floor and outside of his window was a pile of newly cut grass. So I jumped out of his window into the grass. Then I walked back into his office and said, "Athletic enough?" He hired me.

The picture, "Hi, Gaucho," seven years ago, was quite undistinguished. During one of his 10 strikes, John was signed up as a cowboy star and he was getting pretty fair money for one who was hungry the month before. He never became competition for Autry, but somehow he got to the attention of Louis B. Mayer, the big shot at M-G-M. Mayer offered to sign Carroll, for $150 a week, if he could get free of his cowboy deal.

He May Be Flattered. John bought up his contract, for $10,000, and it took him more than two years to pay off. Of course, his salary in the meantime was increased many times.

"As I was saying, I haven't had a good role yet," he shrugged. "But at the dough I'm getting, should I complain?" I imagine that Carroll is secretly flattered to be called a screwball and he seems to like to give the impression that he is one, but at the same time has his feet on the ground. Any kind of reputation in Hollywood that isn't harmful reacts to the attention of Louis B. Mayer, the big shot at M-G-M. Mayer offered to sign Carroll, for $150 a week, if he could get free of his cowboy deal.

No, he never had told me how he had foxed Johnny Weissmuller, his

Marriage Won't Change His Plans

Why Should an Actor Differ From any Other Professional Man, Franchot Tone Asks

By Vern Hauland, Wide World News.

Franchot Tone is a married man again, but wedding bells, he says, haven't changed his plans.

He'll keep on being a movie actor as long as he can and here or in New York or wherever his work takes him.

Tone escaped from swastika-decorated policemen on the "Highly Irregular" set, looking healthy and well-fed, long enough to soliloquize a bit.

"Why should marriage change the plans of an actor any more than it would affect a lawyer or doctor or some other professional men?" he asked.

"I want to keep busy in pictures and do a play now and then if it's really good."

A Shaky Start

"As to my wife's plans, I can't say. You'll have to ask her. I think she wants to keep on working, though."

Jean Wallace, whom Tone married shortly after her eighteenth birthday last October, says, "I'm very definitely going to keep on with my career."

That career got off to a shaky start when M-G-M removed her from "Ziegfeld Girl" upon discovering that she was a minor. However, accompanied by a school teacher, she was able to work in "Louisiana Purchase," and one of three dancers in its chorus of 12 to win a Paramount contract.

Jean met Tone while dancing in Earl Carroll's night club here, soon after winning a Carroll beauty contest in Chicago.

She's a striking blond—"another Jean Harlow" her studio says. That description probably will handicap her. She starts work in her second picture next month.

No Reputation to Maintain.

Career trouble, in part, caused the split between Tone and first wife, Joan Crawford. Joan devoted considerably more time to study and serious pursuits than did her fun-loving husband. Some acquaintances said she allowed her interest in acting to crowd out her interest in marriage.

Jean's friends point out that, unlike Joan, she has no screen reputation to maintain. Thus, they argue she can much more easily blend her career with marriage.

Tone says he's still trying to live down an old report that he had a low regard for the movies.

"I went around apologizing to everyone after that one," he grins. "I like the stage, naturally. The competition isn't so fierce—there aren't so many leading men. But a play involves being off the screen so long that it isn't worth it, unless the show's a hit."

Why Should He Work?

Also annoying to the actor is the story that he is a prospective heir to $1,000,000.

"The fellow who wrote that was just trying to louse me up," he asserts.

"Society" else wrote once that my wealthy mother was dangerously ill. I suggested that she wire back that she wasn't wealthy, but that she was my mother."

Tone claims one real distinction for himself and Jean is that "We live in Benedict Canyon, and are among the few persons who can claim Hedy Lamarr as their landlady."

"Unfortunately, she sends someone else around to collect the rent."

Gaxton Sought

Paramount is in negotiations with William Gaxton, who co-starred with Victor Moore in the Broadway version of "Louisiana Purchase," to have a stage adaptation of the screen with Moore in "Are You a Mason?" the comedy classic which the studio will produce soon. The inspiration to have Gaxton make his screen debut in this picture came from Buddy De Sylva, Paramount production chief, who produced the latest Gaxton-Moore show on Broadway.

Favorites Return

Paramount's projected film version of the Hollywood classic, "Merton of the Movies," will bring back to the screen many a film immortal, including Rudolph Valentino, Pola Negri, Gloria Swanson, Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Agnes Ayres, Tully Marshall, Ernest Torrence and Lois Wilson. It was announced today by Sol C. Siegel, producer of the new screen edition of Harry Leon Wilson's celebrated comedy. His plan is to reproduce scenes from such famous pictures as "The Shiek," "The Covered Wagon" and "The Affairs of Anatole" in "Merton of the Movies."

Eddie Albert will star in the production, portraying a country boy who soars to movie stardom in a fabulous Hollywood success story.

AMONG THE STAMP COLLECTORS

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People—Review of the Stamp Press—List of Local Meetings.

By James Waldo Fawcett.

Powerful support for the proposed patriotic stamps developed last week when Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming appealed directly to Postmaster General Frank C. Walker for their authorization. The text of his letter to the head of the postal system ran: "Don't you think it would be a graceful and deserved tribute to our service men in the armed forces if the Post Office Department were to issue a new series of stamps in honor of each branch? The Army, the Navy and the Marines are fighting against great odds in the Pacific, and with the help of a united Nation they will achieve victory for democracy.

Two recent stamps issued in homage to Vitus Bering, Danish explorer in the service of Russia, appear upon the face of this wartime cover received from Copenhagen by Svend Vort, well-known local specialist in the postal issues of the Scandinavian countries.

Bering was born at Horsens, Jutland, 1681, and died on an island off the coast of Kamchatka which he had discovered and which still bears his name, December, 1741. It is said of him that he was "the discoverer of America from the East" and as such he should be remembered. —Star Staff Photo.

"As a representative of a State whose boys have participated in every Pacific conflict during this century, I know that it would be a feeling throughout the country that the heroic defenders of Wake Island should be so honored, and that the glorious resistance of MacArthur's army in the Philippines should be recognized. It would be difficult, perhaps, and impractical to issue a stamp for each incident, but I think that the Post Office Department would strike a most popular and patriotic chord if it were to issue stamps to honor the Marines, the Army, the Navy, infantry, engineers, flyers, tanks, army ground crews, submarine crews and other divisions of the armed services which will readily suggest themselves.

"I do not need to point out to you that the issuance of such a series would afford an opportunity to patriotic citizens to make contributions to the war effort without interest and without obligation of repayment. Not only would stamp collectors all over the country welcome such an issue, but I am sure the country as a whole would rejoice at the opportunity of using such stamps."

An official Post Office Department release, dated January 28, says: "The inauguration of airmail service to Monrovia, Liberia, on F. A. M. route 22, Miami to Leopoldville, Belgian Congo, is scheduled by the eastbound plane to leave Miami February 7 and the westbound plane to leave Leopoldville February 13 and Monrovia February 14, 1942. The usual philatelic treatment will be given covers that may be carried each way between Miami and Monrovia and between San Juan, Puerto Rico, and Monrovia. Covers should be properly addressed and not contain correspondence.

"Any covers to be mailed at Miami and San Juan should be sent in outer envelopes addressed to the postmasters and marked 'first flight covers,' in time to reach those offices not later than 12 noon, February 5 and should be prepaid with postage at the rate of 50 cents per half ounce. The only opportunity to send covers to Monrovia for the return flight appears to be by air-mail on the eastbound flight leaving Miami February 7. Covers addressed to the postmaster at Monrovia, Liberia, and marked prominently 'first flight covers.' Any consignments so sent should be accompanied with a permit for purchase of Liberian postage at the rate of 50 cents per half ounce."

A proposal for overprinting current postage stamps with the slogan "Remember Pearl Harbor" has been met by the suggestion that the sooner the American people forget the disaster of December 7 and get on with the winning of the war the better it will be. A parrot-like repetition of the adapted cliché of 1908 is unworthy of an intelligent community.

Al Burns, writing in his Stamp News for December 6, reports: "A favorite trick of the forger is to denude the cancellation stamp of the British colonies using key and type plates and, by discharging the ink from the value tablet having a blank space to insert the desired high denomination necessary to make it worth a lot of money. This comparatively simple operation turns a 1 1/2d green Nevis stamp of 1882, cataloging 35 cents, into the 6d Nevis stamp of the same issue, cataloging 60."

An easy and convenient way to estimate the progress of philately since the beginning of the 20th century is that of comparing Scott's Standard Postage Stamp Catalogue for 1942 with the same work as published in 1901.

The newer edition sells for six times the price of the older. Every postage stamp that has ever been issued by any government in the world supposedly was included in the 1901 volume while only stamps "recognized" by the editors—that is, stamps that have met their critical requirements—are admitted to the 1942 book.

A total of 658 single-size pages of text and illustrations appeared in the catalogue of 41 years ago; 1613 double-sized pages in that now current.

Pictures of United States stamps were prohibited in 1901; they are permitted by law in 1942.

The listing of the 5-cent red-brown or bluish Benjamin Franklin issue of 1847 (type A-1) was $12, 1.63 double-sized pages in that now unused, $7 used, according to 1901 appraisal; the same item is appraised at $40 unused, $10 used now.

Specimens of the $5 black Columbian Exposition commemorative of 1893 could be had at $6 unused, $5.50 used in 1901 as against $65 and $45 respectively in 1942; and the $2 Trans-Mississippi 1898 orange-brown was reported at $3 and $2 in 1901.

The German authorities in Occupied Norway have overprinted current regular postage stamps with the letter "V" for "victory."

Eugene Klein, 212 South Thirtieth street, Philadelphia, is preparing a supplement to his specialized story of United States "Waterway Packetmarks," listing additional packet markings. He would appreciate the co-operation of collectors knowing of packets not included in the original edition of his book.

Col. Charles S. Hamilton, authority on the stamps of Mexico, has been a subscriber to Meekel's Weekly Stamp News since 1908, more than a third of a century.

Covers from letters addressed to Winston Churchill in care of the White House were permitted to "escape" from the British Embassy and several faces momentarily are revealed in consequence.

Margaret Kermode, writing for the Associated Press Feature Service, reports: "A new set of 72 values has been issued by the Vichy government for all the 24 French colonies, three for each colony including those occupied by the Free French, but excluding New Hebrides. Value are 1 franc in red for each colony, but a different design for every one; 1.50 franc plus 1 franc blue, for each colony, different designs; and 1.50 franc plus 5 francs, reddish purple, same design (colonial infantry)."

Kent B. Stiles, stamp editor of the New York Times, writes: "The number of stamps reported for 1941 exceeded by more than 200 the number of major and minor varieties which appeared during the preceding calendar period. At least 2,124 different postal items were issued and it is probable that the 2,300 mark actually was passed."

The Silver Spring Hobby Show will be held, probably at the Army Building, as usual in the past, April 16 to 18.

Stamp meetings for the week are listed as follows: Tomorrow evening at 8—Woodridge Stamp Club, residence of Mrs. Frances Bonar, 3114 Sixteenth street N.E.; Quiz program and discussion of plans for annual exhibition.

Tuesday evening at 8—Collectors' Club of Washington, Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets N.W. Program, exhibition and bourse. Wednesday evening at 8—Washington Philatelic Society, Lee Sheraton Hotel, Fifteenth and L streets N.W. Dr. Lothrop Stoddard, foreign affairs writer, The Star, guest of honor and principal speaker.

The original of the painting by Francisco Goya y Lucientes reproduced in Spain's "La Maja Desnuda" stamps of 1930 is in the Prado Gallery in Madrid. One of the most notably famous artists in the world, it celebrates the beauty of the Duchess of Alva, a friend and patron of the artist.

Stamps of Abyssinia issued between 1894 and 1931 allegedly were manufactured at the French government printing works in Paris.

Four stamps issued in 1900 served to commemorate the fourth century of the discovery of Brazil by Pedro Alvarez Cabral, Portuguese navigator, April 22, 1500.

Ignatz Moecik, third president of Poland, represented on many of his country's stamps, was a chemist and an inventor who, in his youth, is supposed to have devoted his genius to the making of bombs for the destruction of Russian tyrants.

The beautiful came stamps of Gambia 1869-1898, are discussed in B. W. H. Poole of Los Angeles in Meekel's Weekly Stamp News for January 12, 1942.

Cuba's postal tax stamp for 1941, obligatory on mail during December and January, is inscribed "Pro Hospitales Les Infantiles," signifying "For Children's Hospitals." The denomination is 1c, brown, and the design shows a mother holding a baby up before the Lorraine Cross of Mercy. Proceeds from the sale go to the Cuban National Tuberculosis Council.

Hobbies and Hobbyists

News of Activities Here and Nearby

By Edmond Henderer.

There are many modelers in Arlington County who find it inconvenient to cross the river into Washington to attend meetings of the hobby clubs. In a few instances this has resulted in the formation of local clubs in the county. Other hobbyists have simply carried on their avocations alone.

In this latter group is Clarence Camp, 38 South Park drive, Arlington, Va. He has been a model railroader for about three years and has designed two layouts, the first of which was torn up when he moved to a new house.

Mr. Camp's present layout occupies 130 square feet of his basement. One difficulty which plagued him in his old house has been eliminated in this one. At the former location he had a coal furnace, the dust from which made winter operation almost impossible. His new home is equipped with an oil burner.

As superintendent of malls at the Arlington Post Office, Mr. Camp's modeling time has been seriously curtailed during the past year, but he still works at it whenever possible. His roster of rolling stock includes 1 road locomotive and 1 diesel switcher, 9 passenger cars and 15 freight cars.

When time permits, Mr. Camp hopes to build a model of the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad Station in Rosslyn for use on his layout. This model railroad is 0-gauge, two-trail, and Mr. Camp would like to hear from some other Arlington residents who are interested in this game. There is one 0-gauge club in the county, but it is a three-rail club, and its equipment will not run on the model which he would like to help form a two-rail club. In any event, model railroaders are welcome to visit Mr. Camp's road.

The fourth national model show at Philadelphia will start February 6 and run through the 14th. It will include much of the same sort of exhibits as the New York show and will also have four new operating railroads. This exhibit will be held at Town Hall, 150 North Broad street.

February 8 has been designated as visiting club day at the quarters of the Philadelphia Model Railroad Club, Room 530, Broad Street Station Building.

NEWS FROM DOGDOM

Notes on a Variety of Subjects of Interest in Washington and Vicinity

By R. R. Taylor.

The cocker spaniel led the roster of registrations for the sixth successive year with 25,000 registrations, breaking the all-time high record of 21,596 established by German shepherds in 1926. All breed registrations for 1941 also established a new high with a total of 88,000 exceeding 1937's total of 84,525. The high score until now, by almost the same number as the cocker's increase over the former German shepherd high mark. The breeds leading in popularity remain unchanged since last year, there being no additions or subtractions in the first 25, and only two slight shifts in position. Scottish terriers dropped to fifth and fox terriers moved up to fourth. Irish terriers dropped from 21st to 24th and Chihuahuas and Dalmatians each moved up a place. The 10 leading breeds, in order of registration, were: cocker spaniel, beagle, Boston, pug, pointer, Scottish terriers, dachshunds, Pekingese, English springer spaniels, grayhounds and collies. This select group numbers two sporting dogs, three hounds, one working dog, two terriers, one toy and one non-sporting dog, giving each group representation.

Arthur Frederick Jones, long assistant editor of the American Kennel Gazette, is now editor and under his guidance, the Gazette will emerge in April as a new type of magazine, more closely geared to the needs and interests of the fancy and of their purses. In other words, much of the "popular" material is to be deleted in favor of straight show trial and obedience test reporting; much of the fancy layout is to be eliminated; the size of the magazine is to be cut; and the price of subscription is to be just half, $2 a year instead of $4. The American Kennel Gazette has always been operated at a loss. Whether, under the new regime, it can be operated on a self-sustaining or paying basis, and compete with the commercial dog magazines remains to be seen.

Every few months a new venture in dog magazines is started somewhere. Most of them fold up sooner than later. In the last year or two, several well established, old publications also gave up the ghost. One necessarily limited field it takes a highly technical knowledge of what the public wants to keep going. Since the American Kennel Gazette is subsidized by the American Kennel Club, it has a tremendous initial advantage. What it can do with it, how it can handle the material to which it has first access, makes interesting speculation.

A litter of boxer puppies bred in the purple is making a valiant attempt to survive in the private puppy nursery of Gordon and Peggy Barton. The puppies are owned by Keith Merrill; they are out of Champion Du Barry of Kernia, winners bitch at Morris and Essex last year and are sired by the best of breed winner at the same show. Their mother died on the operating table, when the puppies were whelped and they have been brought up entirely by hand. Since they are almost past the bottle stage now their chances of survival are excellent. And in view of their superlative breeding their careers when they are older, will be watched with interest by boxer breeders everywhere.

The Associated Southern Specialty Clubs, Inc., is having a checkered career in the dog world than us in its attempt to get an annual show established. If it isn't a date it's a place and if it isn't a place it's a judge. But somehow, some time, some way, they are going to have a bunch of specialty shows in or near Washington and when they do they're going to be good!

In Local Bridge Circles

By Frank B. Lord

The next important event on the agenda for Washington bridge players is the Maryland State championship tournament to be held in Baltimore, beginning on Friday, February 6, and running through the following Sunday.

The Maryland players have adopted the slogan, "Bridge the Gap to the Japs With More Defense Stamps and Bonds." Local enthusiasts have done their best to help them in their war effort and incidentally hope to capture some of the highly prized trophies which the tourney offers.

First, there will be the women's pair championship game for the Lewellyn W. Lord Trophy which last year was won by Mrs. E. Ellsworth Ragland and Mrs. Stanley Newman of Baltimore. Then will follow the mixed pair championship for the Helen Rockwell Trophy captured last year by Mrs. Benjamin Golder and Charles Solomon of Philadelphia. The open-pair championship will be played in two sessions on Saturday, February 7. The prize is the Maryland Bridge League Trophy, last won by James Hunter and Arthur Schlesinger of Baltimore.

The only Maryland prize now held by Washington players is the Baltimore News-Post Cup for team-of-four champions won last year by the foursome of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, Alvin Roth and Tom Watson, Jr. This event will take place in two sessions on Sunday, Mr. Lemon and Le Roy Thurthell are Washington representatives on the Tournament Executive Committee.

Other coming events in which local players are participants are the Philadelphia mixed teams-of-four game at Philadelphia on February 14, the Central Pennsylvania championships, at Harrisburg, Pa., on February 20-22, and the Eastern States championships in New York, February 28 to March 3. The latter will be one of the most important bridge matches of the year, continuing for more than a week.

The Federal Bridge League played its regular monthly master point pair game last Tuesday night at the Waldman Park Hotel. Thirty-eight participants in the Washington section were Charles A. Lyons and M. Grossman, 183 1/2 points; first; F. Mullen and J. L. Koster, 175 1/2 points; second; Mr. Clarence W. Hewlett, Jr., captained the Crimmon quartet composed of himself, Roger P. Stokes, Alan G. Kelly, and Henry Brandt; and Mrs. F. Ebersohn were tied with Col. E. B. Gray and Mrs. Catharine Tidball for fifth place, each with 157 points.

The pair game for the benefit of the blood bank will be held on Tuesday, February 10. The Washington Bridge League blood bank benefit game will occur on Wednesday, February 18. The members of the Women's Auxiliary held their blood bank benefit game at the residence of Mrs. D. E. Stephan last Thursday.

Here is a deal played at the Federal Bridge League, with a very unusual outcome. An original bid of one club netted the declarer, James Sourells, and his partner, Mrs. John D. Coffey, a grand total of 2,130 points, which was more than would have been won if he had bid and made four clubs, doubled and redoubled. The cards were distributed as follows:

♠ A x x x
 ♠ A J x x x
 ♠ 10
 ♣ A x x
 ♣ 10 x x
 ♣ A Q J x x
 ♣ x
 ♣ x x x
 ♣ Q x x x x
 ♣ x x x

West was dealer and called one club. North doubled and Mrs. Coffey in the East redoubled. South holding no court card except the queen of diamonds was privileged to pass as her partner, having indicated that he would proceed with the grade clubs, could have taken out in her best suit. She passed, however, and the one club bid doubled and redoubled was allowed to stand. Had she named a heart of which she had five, East and West would proceed to no-trump or clubs and made either four or five clubs. A small slam bid in clubs would have been defeated for North would have taken both of her aces. As it was she underled her diamond ace and dummy won the first trick

Annual Exhibit of Washington Artists Opens

Corcoran Gallery Presents Works in Local Competition

By Florence A. Berryman

The Society of Washington Artists' 51st annual exhibition, which opens today at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, is a more engaging show than last year's golden anniversary display, which was a departure in many respects. It will be recalled that an out-of-town jury made the selections, whereas this year's exhibition was chosen by a local jury, composed of the officers and Executive Committee of the society.

The results seem to indicate that Washington artists are better qualified to assemble this important local exhibition in such a way as to expect of the Society of Washington Artists' annual.

It is quite possible that some artists and visitors will be disappointed that the show is less "radical" or "progressive" than last year's, but there will be an equal number, probably more, who will welcome the inclusion of many competently executed paintings in the traditional manner of attractive subject matter. In fact, a liberal-minded acceptance of both "old" and "new" art is what one has come to expect of the Society of Washington Artists' annual.

Approximately 70 oil paintings and 15 works in sculpture compose the exhibition, which is installed in a single gallery. Although only half as large as last year's show, the present annual has proportionately as much variety, ranging from traditional, naturalistic work to pure abstractions. Experimental works are fairly numerous, but the general effect in a glance around the gallery is conservative, and there is much to appeal to the average person. One looks in vain, however, for a number of outstanding Washington painters, who, presumably, had nothing new to submit to the jury.

The prize awards, made last Tuesday by a jury composed of John Walker, National Gallery of Art; Dr. John Craft, director of the Washington County Museum, Hagerstown, and Thomas C. Colt, Jr., director of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, Richmond, and announced in "The Star" Wednesday, cover an extensive range of techniques.

Andrea Zerega's "Spring Fragrance," which received The Evening Star prize of $100 for the best picture in the exhibition, is a beautiful piece of work, colorful and decorative, in a color scheme of nicely related reds, yellows and warm tints of brown.

"The Storm," by Oke Nordgren, an artist who, like Mr. Zerega, is also employed by the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and announced the bronze medal for landscape including marine. It is one of the largest and most impressive paintings in the exhibition, painted in the astringent blue-greens and greenish-blues characteristic of the artist's work. A strong impression of reality from these swimmers making for a heavily wooded shore in the face of rising breakers. It will be recalled that Mr. Nordgren was a prize winner last year also, when he received the society's prize for the most outstanding work.

Jack Berkman's portrait of a reflective young woman, "Ginger," recipient of the bronze medal for figure composition, is in the contemporary idiom in its best sense.

"Still Life," by Danie Radice, which fetched the highest price for still life, is one of the most abstract paintings in the exhibition. Honorable mentions in these various classifications went to Donald Coale for his strongly painted "Rebecca," to Mary Power for "Interlude," a small painting of two figures in an interior, to a strangely sinister atmosphere; to Alexander Kaye for "Mums," an attractive flower painting. Rowland Lyon, president of the Society of Washington Artists, received honorable mention in landscape for his picture "Carlos V. Mexico City," an equestrian statue silhouetted against large billboards.

The bronze medal for sculpture went to Clare Fontanni for a head in beautifully finished white marble, tempting the touch, while honorable mention was awarded "Beverly," a bust in pink cast stone of a little girl, by Belle Bellerose.

The honors were thus, it will be seen, divided almost equally between "traditional" and "progressive" works.

Portraits and figure subjects are most numerous, comprising about one-third of the works shown, and they exemplify many techniques and approaches. There are straightforward characterizations, such as Lloyd Embrey's self-portrait "Chinese Boy," by Arvin Hedlin; Gladys Milligan's quiet, meditative "Joan Davis"; the double portrait of two Negro boys, "Amos and Oscar," by Esther Lynne, and Lucia Hollerth's little blond girl, "Red Bird"; Julia Doolittle's heavily pigmented "Singer"; the most experimental figure painting shown; it is not a human personality at all, but a kind of symbol, hollow-eyed, elongated and gaunt. Louis de Valentin's "Artist and His Wife" is an arresting study in contrast, modesty in its simplification and emphasis on planes, but traditional in its representation of individuality and contrast between the vital, attractive face of the wife, who returns the beholder's gaze, and the artist himself, preoccupied with his painting and slightly subordinated in the composition.

Figure paintings in which group action is stressed rather than individual personality include some of the more "modern" paintings which have elements of interest but little beauty or appeal. Shirley Jones' "Loaded Dice," for instance, is extremely effective as a representation of a fight over a dice game. The sharp diagonal lines of the composition, strong tonal contrasts, the forward lung of one figure and positions of accessory figures, all build up the idea of a knockout blow, delivered in rage. The dynamic quality of this painting offsets in effect, the unpleasantness of the subject matter, which cannot be said of certain other figure paintings. Ralph Robinson, for instance, contributes a dreary group of men involved in some depressing situation which is not explained in its title: "Composition, 1942." There are, too, a number of small sketches, hastily done to judge from their appearances, depicting poor, shabby figures in appropriately drab colors.

"Steppin' Out," by Bernard Gurevitz, is ironically gay in its implications, despite the squalid scene depicted, illuminated by a glaring street lamp, which accentuates its sardonic humor. One suspects the same quality in Paul Art's "Washington in Wartime," a handsome interior filled with women in Red Cross uniforms, and a window depicting, illuminated by a glaring street lamp, which accentuates its sardonic humor. One suspects the same quality in Paul Art's "Washington in Wartime," a handsome interior filled with women in Red Cross uniforms, and a window depicting, illuminated by a glaring street lamp, which accentuates its sardonic humor.

Landscapes comprise the second largest subject classification, in this year's exhibition. In the 51st annual, which had scarcely any examples. Among the admirable works in this category in the current show are "Maryland Farm," by Helena Hall, Roy Clark's breezy "Hillside," Omar Carrington's spacious "Shenandoah Park," "Old Bridge," by Florence A. Everhart, "Lynn Drive," by Janet Eldridge, Gustav Trols' "Edge of the Wood," Miguel's "Desolation," a meticulously painted desert scene, not nearly so desolate as some of the figure subjects mentioned in paragraphs above. "Barnyard," by Ernest W. Jex; "Snow in Virginia," by Emilie M. Art; "Minor S. Jameson's 'Winter Afternoon' and Lee Atkins' cloud-topped "View From Dickey Ridge." Practically all of these are representations of beautiful places, done in a realistic manner.

Related to landscapes are a number of street scenes and other works in which buildings are more prominent than their backgrounds. Lucile Haynes' "Street in Georgetown," William F. Walters' "Old Stable," "Robert Farm's "Old Bridge," "Palmetto," "Main Street of Tangier Island" is forcefully presented and filled with sunshine. In strong contrast is its neighbor, "16 1/2 Street," by John W. Sanford, Jr., a moody, night scene with a lumen yellow moon which is reminiscent of Albert Ryder. Roger M. Rittase's "Railroad Crossing" is practically the only scene of its type in the exhibition. Suzanne Mullett's "Nub-Lighthouse," a delightful and transparent of a famous subject, and "Perkins Cove," by Ruth Osgood, are outstanding marines.

The remainder of the works are flowers, still life and interiors, which subject classes include the majority of abstract paintings. There are several colorful, decorative flower studies; "Gladioli," by Mary Ruth Snow, which has a charming scheme of subtly varied reds and blue-green, and Marguerite Munn's "Chrysanthemums." Competently handled still life in the traditional manner includes Norma Bose's "Music and the Mask" and Lona Miller Koplewsky's "Indian Vegetables." Lois Malou Jones' "Green Apples" on an oyster-white drape over a chair is somewhat softer and broader in handling. "Kitchen Design," by Harold S. Bloomberg is very linear in technique, and seems more like a large colored drawing than an oil painting. May Marshall's tiny interior, "Studio Chair," reveals abstract features in its composition. Paintings by Alexander Clayton, Ferol Sibley, Dante Radice and Jane Love, although they have no connection, nevertheless constitute a series of progressive abstractions, easily compared because they are hanging near each other. The grounds in Mr. Clayton's semi-abstract are easily discernible; the next two painters' works are less like nature, and Miss Love's "Harlequinade" defies identification altogether. There is a cold, intellectual quality about abstract painting, however, which makes it difficult for the layman to feel much enthusiasm.

The sculpture section of the 51st annual comprises 15 comparatively small works in various materials: Wood, stone, bronze and plaster.

Here, as in the painting section, there is a gamut from conservative to modern work. The most ambitious piece is Hugh Collins' carved wood mural plaque, "The Marylanders," hanging with the paintings. It is the type of work that is being done for public buildings under the Government art programs. The many figures, carved in low relief, are simplified and stylized, somewhat primitive in character, and are engaged in activities associated with Maryland—establishment of the Catholic religion, fishing and tobacco shipping.

Several of the sculptors are represented with two works each. Russell A. Houston shows a smoothly finished "Man," a maple and a plaster group of a man with a boy, "Piggy Back," vigorously modeled but left somewhat rough. The grain and varied color in the wood are the chief attractions of Isabel Bial's primitive, elongated head and shoulders, "Edward Revenir Bush's" two works include the most abstract items in the sculpture section, a torso reminiscent of Archipenko's work with its concave distortions, and a head of mottled brown Tennessee marble.

The other works on view are traditional in handling, and their appeal is inherent in the subjects rather than in the materials. Kathleen Wheeler's bronze bust of a youth, Clarke Daniel's plaster portrait bust of a pretty girl, another child's head in pink cast stone, "Beverly," by Belle Bellerose, the strong, characteristic bust of a Negro educator, Prof. Saunders, by Marshall Lakey, would all, if brought to life by some Pygmalion's entreaties, take their places in the population of the future. Eleanor Mulliken's little bull terrier lying with head on paws.

Regarding this 51st annual exhibition of the Society of Washington Artists as a whole, one feels there is much to admire, and something to appeal to every taste.

Corcoran Winter Lectures

Beginning next Tuesday, February 3, a series of lectures on art will be given, as in past years, in the auditorium of the Corcoran School of Art at 8:30 p.m. The first series of five lectures will be given by Eugen Weisz, beginning with methods and fine examples of water-color painting, and on following Tuesdays masters and pupils and principal aims of painters and sculptors of our time. Richard Lahey, director of the school, will give the second series, beginning March 10 and continuing through April 14, dealing with varied viewpoints of great draughtsmen, several important periods in American art and processes and enjoyment of

Tschaikowsky Concert Is Featured

Reino Luoma On National Symphony Program Today

Tschaikowsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat"—the most popular classical work in the world today—will be the highlight of this afternoon's National Symphony Orchestra all-Tschaikowsky concert at 4 o'clock in Constitution Hall. Charles O'Connell, director of artists and classical recordings for R. C. A. Victor, will make one of his frequent guest-conducting appearances with the National Symphony on this occasion, and soloist will be the brilliant young Finnish-American pianist, Reino Luoma.

For the second major work Mr. O'Connell has selected the "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor," considered by many to be the composer's best score, and the all-Tschaikowsky program will be completed by the symphonic poem, "Romeo and Juliet."

Hans Kindler will return to the podium for the all-subscription concert on Wednesday evening, which will be further marked by the second appearance with the National Symphony of this country's greatest dramatic soprano, Helen Traubel. Mme. Traubel will be heard in four of Beethoven's songs—"Gottes Macht und Vorsehung," "Ich Liebe Dich," "Freudvoll und Leidvoll" and "Die Trommel Geruhret" (the latter two from "Egmont" with the Goethe lyrics) and in the "Immolation Scene" from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." On the purely orchestral side the National Symphony will play the Bach-Paul "Concert Prelude and Fugue in C Minor," the Grieg-Mottill suite from "Cephale

Helen Traubel, Metropolitan Opera soprano, who will be the soloist with the National Symphony on Wednesday evening.

Tibbett Recital Postponed

Lawrence Tibbett, famous American baritone of the Metropolitan Opera and one of the country's outstanding concert stars, who has scheduled to appear in recital at Constitution Hall Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock, has been forced to postpone his Washington appearance until Tuesday evening, March 24, at 8:30 o'clock, according to an announcement just made by Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, under whose auspices Tibbett appears in this city.

Mr. Tibbett underwent an operation for appendicitis a short time ago and it was hoped that his recovery would be sufficiently advanced by Tuesday evening to permit him to sing. Early last week, however, he was warned by his physician that any attempt to do a full recital program might result seriously, so Tibbett was forced to postpone the event until March 24.

That is the date, curiously enough, on which Kreisler was originally scheduled to appear in the Capitol, a performance which the violinist had to cancel owing to insufficient recovery from a traffic accident in New York last summer.

Those holding Tibbett seats are advised that their tickets will be honored at the March 24 recital without exchange of any sort being necessary. In the meanwhile tickets for the Tibbett recital will continue to be available at Mrs. Dorsey's Concert Bureau, at 1300 G street N.W.

In Local Music Circles

The second in a series of "Musical at-Home's," presented by Jessie Masters, director of the National Capitol Choir, will be held this afternoon from 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock in the Romaine-van Schaick room of the Universalist National Memorial Church, Sixteenth and S streets N.W. Emmel Billings, violinist, accompanied by Anton Kaspar, H. Jerome Graham, pianist; Caroline Schaller, soprano, and William Wetmore, Jr., baritone, will appear. Mr. Graham will accompany the vocalists.

Theodore Schaefer, organist of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church of Washington, will be guest recitalist at the great organ of Washington Cathedral this afternoon immediately following the 4 o'clock evensong service.

For his program, Mr. Schaefer has chosen the Andante Maestoso and Allegro from the "Overture to the Occasional Oratorio" (Handel); "Tables of the Law" and "Vision" from "Pieces Liturgiques" (Alexandre Motu); a choral prelude from "Rhosymedre" (R. Vaughan Williams); "Third oration" (Hendrik Andriessen); "Adagio" from the "Symphony in E" (Joseph Gilles) and "Toccata" (Josep Jonhagen).

An evening of song will be given by a group of students of Eva Whitford Lovette at 7 o'clock tonight at the studio, 1736 Connecticut Avenue. Soloists to be heard are Esther Smith Bond, Jean Doyle, Helen Dunbar, Georgene Fox, Peggy Green, George Harvey, Charles Hipsley, Mrs. George W. Moler, Ralph Moler, Dorothy McPhereson, Christine Shipman, Carolyn Schulte, Dorothy Sapp and Helen Thurlow.

A special program has been arranged for the local chapter of the American Guild of Organists at the Church of the Latter-Day Saints, 2810 Sixteenth Street N.W., tomorrow at 8 p.m. Hester Smithey will open the meeting with a recital which will include new, modern music, prefaced by a brief commentary. After a short business session, D. Sterling Wheelwright will conduct an open forum on "What Can Musicians Do in Defense?"

The music division of the Y. W. C. A. announces the second semester of classes beginning tomorrow. Monday evening classes include "Introductory Harmony" and a short series of lectures on "The Art of Listening to Music." Classes in "America, I Love You" are stirring; Charlie Spivak's "Dear Mom," and even the Texas Rangers who contribute "The Air Corps of Uncle Sam" and "I'm Changing my Pent House for a Pup Tent." But most fitting of all, that old ditty remains "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal, You."

For dancing pleasure, the following may be suggested: Tommy Dorsey's "Winter Weather" and "How About You"; Sammy Kaye's "On the Street of Regret" with Tommy Ryan singing and Sam'l narrating; Wayne King's fox trot "The Echo Says No" and waltz "Russian Rose." Those are Victor records, in case you are curious; the following emanate from Columbia and Okeh sources: Benny Goodman's "Blues in the Night"; "Where or When" and "Clarinet a la King" on another disc; Xavier Cugat's conga salute to the President, "Viva Roosevelt!" and his coupling of "I Said No" and "America, I Love You," Harry James' whimsy, "I. P. Dooley III." In a four-record album, the unsurpassable salon orchestra of Marek Weber performs with customary polish separate medleys of the waltzes of Johann Strauss, Josef Strauss and Waldteufel, Eizher and Lehár, as well as two miscellaneous waltz medleys.

On the Bluebird label may be found Freddy Martin's assassination of Grieg's Piano Concerto, the inspiration for which, one suspects, struck at the same time Mr. Martin stabbed Tschaikowsky in the back.

Popular Music

By J. W. Stepp

Something in the air, has been cultivating a special dislike for the little brown men with bayonets across the Pacific. This antipathy is manifested, of course through musical means, occasionally original and tuneful while other times tired derivatives of marching songs of previous wars. However, the feeling is there. And here are some of the titles now available on discs: "They Started Somethin' (And We're Gonna End It)" and "We're All Americans All True Blues as sung by Kate Smith "We Did It Before (And We'll Do It Again)" coupled with "Remember Pearl Harbor" by Eddie Howard; and, of course, Sammy Kaye's pressing of the latter tune. Carl Hoff further the contention that "You're Sapp Mr. Jap" and recalls "We Did It Before" as well. Then there's that other title of the lyric rhyme, "Good-bye, Mama, I'm Off to Yokohama" which is played by Frankie Masters, with "The Sun Will Soon Be Setting (On the Land of the Rising Sun)" on the reverse. Orrin Tucker also submits "Goodbye Mama" paired with "You're a Sap, Mr. Jap." Patriotism of a purely domestic nature is encouraged by Kate Smith whose "Star-Spangled Banner" and "America, I Love You" are stirring; Charlie Spivak's "Dear Mom," and even the Texas Rangers who contribute "The Air Corps of Uncle Sam" and "I'm Changing my Pent House for a Pup Tent." But most fitting of all, that old ditty remains "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal, You."

Margaret Tolson in Recital Thursday

Margaret Tolson, well-known Washington pianist, will be presented in recital at the Arts Club of Washington on Thursday evening at 8:30. Miss Tolson is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, where she made her debut as Sigrilde in "Die Walkure." The acclaim that resulted from these first engagements has never abated.

Armando Jannuzzi Grand Opera Dramatic Tenor

Armando Jannuzzi, Grand Opera Dramatic Tenor, Voice Specialist, Italian Method, Hobart 9028, 1519 Oak St. N.W. (Nr. 16th)

Guedalla Writes Pleasing Biography of Churchill

Author's Ironical Style Proves Ideally Suited to Fictionlike Career of His Subject

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

By Philip Guedalla. Reynal & Hitchcock, New York.
The great trouble with Winston Churchill's history would seem to be that it is too perfectly adapted to telling. It is too much like fiction—too much like the tale of the ugly duckling which became a miraculous swan or the adventures of the third prince in the fairy story who was rejected by his people only to return a hero and savior.

PHILIP GUEDALLA, "Mr. Churchill."

Background Adds Tremendously to Effect.
So, far from looking up at his subject with reverence, Mr. Guedalla takes his own stand on literature's Olympus and looks down with admiring amusement at any attempt to be the proper attitude.

But, though Mr. Guedalla writes a book that is keenly appreciative of its subject and vastly entertaining for its manner, he has not produced a detailed biography. It is, at most, a long impressionistic portrait of a man and his contemporaries.

On two points of Mr. Churchill's history which are still subject to some misunderstanding, it spends considerable argument. One of these is the debacle of the attack on the Dardanelles during the first World War, and the other is Churchill's attitude toward Russia.

Flashing Exchange Between Churchill and Lloyd George.
The charm of Mr. Guedalla's work lies, however, in the intimacy of its picture of British statesmen at work quite as much as in what it tells of Mr. Churchill's varied activities.

Dragon Seed
By Pearl S. Buck. John Day Co., New York.
In this new novel about the Sino-Japanese war, Mrs. Buck returns to her "Good Earth" vein, which is, without doubt her best one.

Welcome to the City
By Irwin Shaw. Random House, New York.
There seem to be two kinds of short stories—those which can be collected and those which cannot.

The Fair Woman
By Hilda Vaughan. Duell, Sloan & Pearce, New York.
Strictly a love story, this novel is written in the style of a novelette.

The Great Pacific War
By Hector C. Bywater. With an introduction by Hanson W. Baldwin. Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.
This is a reprinting of the work produced by its author in 1925 which tells of the course which Japan is now following toward the United States.

Bitter Honey
By Martin Joseph Freeman. The Macmillan Co., New York.
This is a novel about an 11-year-old boy in a small Ohio town 30 years ago.

Time Was
By Heinrich Hauser. Reynal & Hitchcock, New York.
This is one more story of a German's flight from Germany. It differs from the usual run of such narratives in that the author was not forced to flee or made to suffer under Hitler's government.

Fairness Marks Story of Cleveland Plain Dealer

Veteran Member of Editorial Staff Shows Appreciation of Newspaper's Development

The Plain Dealer, 1842-1942: One Hundred Years in Cleveland

By Archer H. Shaw. Alfred A. Knopf, New York.
It would have been hard, indeed, to have seen in the first issue of the Cleveland Plain Dealer on January 7, 1842, the grain of greatness that was to make it outlive all its contemporaries and become the outstanding newspaper in Ohio's outstanding city.

Years later, a great connoisseur of words, Winston Churchill, said "I think that, by all odds, the Plain Dealer has the best newspaper name of any in the world."
Founder Was Active in Politics.
The Plain Dealer has had a fairly tempestuous past. It belonged to the Democratic party from the first, and that was not easy in Republican Cleveland.

But it is not in politics that one finds the real key to the Plain Dealer's success. It is in its devotion to the welfare of the people it serves. It has fought for better civic government, parks, better prison conditions, minimum wages. It has always resisted fraud and hypocrisy in public life.

Mr. Shaw, the author of this history, has been a member of the Plain Dealer staff for 39 years, its chief editorial writer for most of them. He has written with a fine appreciation of his paper's past; he has not tried to conceal the misjudgments of his predecessors, but has explained them with careful fairness.

Good Old Summer Days
By Richmond Barrett. D. Appleton-Century Co., New York.
This is hardly the type of book one would recommend for inclusion in a consignment were being prepared for shipment to the boys at Corregidor or Pearl Harbor.

Since the author knows Newport best of all the playgrounds and, obviously, likes it most of all, it is only natural that the chapter on the Rhode Island resort is the book's best.

Long Branch Had Successful Race Track.
The material on Long Branch is of even greater interest because this generation knows little of the great days of the New Jersey resort. Yet Presidents Grant, Garfield and Arthur used it as a summer White House.

Canton Captain
By James B. Connolly. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.
Mr. Connolly's selection of Robert Bennet Forbes as the subject of his latest work is a happy and timely one.

Hills Beyond Manhattan
By Guido D'Agostino. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.
In this light and insubstantial novel, Mr. D'Agostino has attempted to deal with some very substantial problems.

Best Sellers

writer, Under Hitler, one of his books was suppressed, and he turned then to "industrial propaganda." By 1939, he was so sure that war was on the way that he voluntarily left the country.
He differs from most writers on Germany in denying any particular sympathy for the efforts of Republican leaders to achieve democracy. He records that, after the war, when he was serving as a volunteer to help put down the Communist riots, he acquired both fear and respect for the party.

The Federal Budget System in Operation
By E. E. Naylor.
The budget system has become such a commonplace feature of Federal Government that it is difficult to realize that it once represented a radical departure from accepted fiscal procedure.

From Orient to Occident
By Leon Weber-Bauler. Translated by Bernard Miall. Oxford University Press, New York.
The memoirs of a physician, this is no run-of-the-mine doctor's book, for the author was born a Russian, naturalized a Frenchman, but practiced in Switzerland.

The Fair Woman
By Hilda Vaughan. Duell, Sloan & Pearce, New York.
Strictly a love story, this novel is written in the style of a novelette. It takes place in the by now familiar legendary hills of old Wales.

Bitter Honey
By Martin Joseph Freeman. The Macmillan Co., New York.
This is a novel about an 11-year-old boy in a small Ohio town 30 years ago. Some of the scenes are fresh and pleasing, but the characterization is casual.

Boy Finds Training and Inspiration Singing in National Cathedral Choir

Sight-seeing In Little Old New York

Prize Contribution By BARBARA HAUTER, 15, Woodrow Wilson High School.

Have you ever noticed how many interesting things there are to see in New York City? Our family went there during the Christmas holidays and took in just about everything.

One thing we saw in New York was the Lincoln Tunnel, through which traffic in both directions is one-way.

Next came a boat ride to the Statue of Liberty, which is on Bedloe's Island, 1 1/2 miles out in the bay.

When we returned to Washington I really had blisters on my feet from walking so much in New York.

Just Between Ourselves

By PHILIP H. LOVE, Junior Star Editor.

What does it mean to be a good American? The question is asked—and answered, too—in four interesting letters that have come to me recently from pupils at Tweedell School.

Every "good American," Jean goes on, will do everything possible to help the United States and its Allies to win the war.

When I think of all the hardships that people of other nations are suffering, she writes.

Gloria agrees with Jean and Helen that "we should buy Defense stamps and bonds."

Catherine, whose home is at 646 Hamilton street N.W., defines a good American as one who "can govern himself by the Bill of Rights."

Penelope Mizales, 12, of 2027 Porter place N.W., at St. Paul's Academy pupil, reports that she has invested her recent prize dollar in Defense stamps.

"My father liked the idea of my buying Defense stamps," she writes. "He said that whenever I win a dollar in The Junior Star and spend it on Defense stamps, he'll double the amount."

"I have saved enough stamps to buy a bond."

And nearly always won. But cheer up, all you prisoners—The Yankees are sure to come And whip Germany and Italy And set the rising sun.

Trees That Guided Indians Still Survive in Forests

By CAROL C. HALL.

The American Indian was a master woodsman, but he couldn't find his way through the forests without the help of signposts.

Today, many of these Indian trail trees are still living. They are very old, their ages ranging from somewhat more than 100 to 300 and 350 years.

Many persons do not know that these trees exist. Perhaps you would like to learn how to recognize them.

Indian trail trees have a sharp bend in their main trunks. In some instances the bend is a right angle.

Trail trees are found only in regions where hardwood trees are native. In Northern Illinois over 100 of them have been discovered.

The trees have been found throughout the entire Mississippi Valley, in Texas, in the Great Smoky Mountains, in the eastern Pocono Mountains, in Southern Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Arkansas and Kentucky.

Student Tells Story of His Two Hobbies

Prize Contribution By ORREN STEIN, 13, Powell Junior High School.

I would like to tell you about my two hobbies. My first hobby is finding homes for stray cats.

As we already have a cat and it is very jealous of any other animal that comes into the yard we have found a home for the new arrival.

We found a good home for one cat in our butcher's shop. We gave Tuscaloosa to a man who does some work around our house, and he still calls the cat by that name.

We found a home for another cat at our fish market. Six months later we heard something crying at the door, and we looked out.

It had left the fish market and taken a long time to come home. We now have several new ones and are lending one out to a neighbor to catch mice.

My other hobby is making model airplanes. I have been making them for several years, from real large ones to tiny ones.

When I get too many of them on hand we take them to Children's Hospital for the sick children, and they are happy to play with them.

Another week went by. It was Saturday, and Dolly began to think about a little studying, but she decided there was plenty of time yet.

So confident little Dolly wasted the precious time that was left. Thus, another week slipped by, and suddenly, Dolly realized the exams were right on her, and she wasn't ready.

She tried to do in two days the work that she should have been doing for the last three weeks.

Monday came, and Dolly was getting worked up a grand time and went and she was upset. By Wednesday she was in despair, and on Thursday, she was practically in hysterics.

Exams were over at last. On Friday, the marks were given out. Poor Dolly!

Uncle Ray's Corner

HAWAII HAS NATURAL BOMB SHELTER.

In time of peace visitors in Hawaii are much interested in a certain cave. Climbing a mountain slope one finds an opening about 2 feet wide and 18 inches high.

Getting down on his hands and knees, the visitor crawls for 10 yards. Then he enters a long passage where by lava shielded from a volcano.

It was the case in the "fantastic flow" of 1801, when five rivers of thin lava poured from a crater in Mount Mauna Kea.

The lava flows were part of a great flow which came down from Mauna Kea 59 years ago.

Elsewhere in Hawaii you may see lava which has hardened into rock. Not far from the city of Hilo is solid lava which looks like waves.

In that case the lava flowed slowly before it stopped and hardened. At other times lava does not move slowly.

It may flow almost as swiftly as a river of rushing water. This was the case in the "fantastic flow" of 1801, when five rivers of thin lava poured from a crater in Mount Mauna Kea.

The lava flows were part of a great flow which came down from Mauna Kea 59 years ago. People in Hilo shivered as the lava river moved slowly down the mountain side.

Its onward flow came to an end about a mile from the town.

Mauna Kea is the highest peak in Hawaii, but Mauna Loa and Kilauea are more interesting. They have active craters.

Mauna Loa rises to a height of two and a half miles. Its gentle slopes are used for the growing of coffee plants. Gazing at the green leaves, white flowers and red berries, you see a scene of peace, yet there is no telling when a new flow of molten lava will sweep away that man has planted.

In 1926 this volcano destroyed a village. Uncle Ray's Corner is a regular feature of The Evening Star.

Trap Offers Harmless Way To Catch Woodland Pets

By BERT SACKETT. Mice, wood rats, ground squirrels and rabbits make interesting and easily tamed camp pets.

Choose your bait to suit the animal you are trapping. Put the trigger together and set it so it will hold up the edge of the box.

Put the three pieces for the trigger from any straight-grained, soft wood. The dimensions given in Figure 1 are approximate.

Figure 1 are approximate. You can cut your pieces larger or smaller by keeping to the same general proportions.

Any one can whittle the pieces by taking a little practice with them. The trick of making a good "figure 4" trigger is to cut the notches just deep enough so that when the trigger is put together and weighted on the top, it will fly to pieces at the slightest touch on the long end of the "4."

The trap box is any wooden box of medium size, such as canned goods are sometimes packed in.

Make a base board that is large enough to cover the box opening entirely. Hinge the box to this with leather hinges, made from bits of waste leather.

To set the trap, bait the long end of the "4" with a piece of carrot, apple, potato, cheese or cabbage. Choose your bait to suit the animal you are trapping.

Put the trigger together and set it so it will hold up the edge of the box.

THEY STING!

SOMEWHERE AT SEA Uncle Sam's mosquito fleet is now stalking the enemy. Orders for action are given to the squadron by flag when radio might meet enemy ears. Then the little warships are off at a mile a minute or more.

MY CAPTAIN AND I

The story of a buck private and a ten-dollar bill that burned his hand

by Louis Adamic

Author of "Two-Way Passage" and "From Many Lands"

THE whirl of immense events turns up many a sudden chance to do constructive things. They may seem little; but if enough of them occur, they will help us toward victory.

These days we are thinking of our Army and Navy. Most of our soldiers and sailors are very young; many still in their teens, others in their early twenties. Their characters are not yet firmly established. Many were unfavorably affected by the depression. About half are either foreign-born or grew up in "foreign" neighborhoods; not too certain as yet — some of them — of what it means to be an American.

Here is an extraordinary opportunity for Army and Navy officers. From personal experience, I know they can do — and can refrain from doing — much that will help to mold the characters of the young men under them.

In 1917 I was in the Regular Army. The big idea then was "to make the world safe for democracy." I believed in it, and wanted to have a hand in helping President Wilson to realize it.

Otherwise, however, I was unformed, undefined as a person. Besides being barely 18, I was foreign-born, here only since 1913; and my fledgling personality was undergoing revision in order to fit into American life.

LOOKING back at myself now through two and a half decades, I see that the Army was the best place for me then. It had a high, immediate mission. It threw me together with all kinds of men. I had to speak English. There was discipline.

For a while, though, we had a company commander whom all of us disliked very much. An extreme disciplinarian, Captain A. was needlessly and harshly severe. He apparently derived satisfaction from punishing men and humiliating them. The Regulations were his Bible. Someone from our company was always under arrest or getting a summary court-martial. The captain never let us forget he was our superior. We feared him and referred to him by unprintable titles. He was an incongruity in an army which was to carry out President Wilson's announced purpose.

It was a great relief to the outfit when Captain A. was promoted. The new company commander was so unlike his predecessor that for a time he seemed almost too good to be true. To Captain B. discipline meant self-discipline — something for him to inspire and develop in us. He was exacting but he never yelled. Our shortcomings did not impel him to abusive and sarcastic threats. He had a cool, steady gaze — critical, to be sure, but implying that he knew we could do better. He seldom punished; he seldom had to.

Shortly before he too was promoted, I had a close personal encounter with him — one of the most important experiences in my life.

In addition to his duties as our company commander, Captain B. was for a time the acting regimental paymaster. One payday I found he'd given me $10 too much.

It was nearly 25 years ago, and I am not sure I can present exactly the complexity of my inner state during the next five hours, but as nearly as I can remember it, it was something like this:

Life was full of lures, and I was tempted to keep and spend the extra ten. But I was not simply tempted by the money. The thing was more complicated than that. After the first excitement of my discovery, the most important fact was not that the money was not mine, or that Captain B. would have to make it good. It was that I had it, and no one knew I had it, and I could keep it or return it as I wished. I had the power to choose.

A tremendous problem. All that I had been taught about right and wrong was brought up against a concrete situation, unchecked by fear of exposure. That the decision was to be completely mine at once warmed and chilled me.

I don't know what I would have done had the paymaster been the hated Captain

A. I suspect I would have kept the money to get even with him. But Captain B., I told myself, was not only an excellent company commander but a swell guy too.

Before I realized it, the temptation had resolved itself: I had decided to return the overpayment.

Then a moment of fear. Could I be mistaken about him? He might jump all over me for not returning the money sooner. He was sure to ask questions; how would I answer them? Well, I could say I had just discovered the extra 10 bucks; he could not prove I hadn't. . .

So I went to his quarters. Holding out the bill, I said, "Sir, you overpaid me."

"Oh, yes," said Captain B., "I was short." Then he gave me one of his cool, long looks. "When did you discover you had been overpaid?" he asked slowly.

I meant to lie, but I found myself telling the truth: "Soon after you paid me."

"Why didn't you return it earlier?" There was a lump in my throat so that I could not speak.

"You thought of keeping it?" he asked. I wanted to explain the whole problem, but, fearing I could not articulate it, I said merely, "Yes, sir."

Captain B. lowered his eyes and pondered awhile, then looked at me again and said, "All right. Thank you very much."

I managed to say, "Thank you, sir." The captain took my arm and squeezed it as I turned to go out. . .

I have thought of this episode thousands of times. Why had I told the truth and run the risk of losing my company commander's confidence? Because of the same thing that had led me to return the money — my feeling that he was all right.

Captain A. would certainly have bawled me out and probably punished me somehow. Why didn't Captain B.? Human, decent, wise, sensing what I had gone through, he knew that a reprimand would have defeated my struggle. It would probably have taught me that it wasn't smart to do the right thing. His silent squeeze of my arm — at once recognition and congratulation — was the master touch.

The episode had nothing to do with the Regulations, but it was the best kind of training. It was democracy in operation.

SIDELINES

SECRET. Most reports telling of Dutch reaction to Nazi occupation of their country have been smuggled out. But here is one case where the Nazis tell their own secret:

In "Volk en Vaterland," Nazi weekly, there appeared an article about school children's compositions. Somehow, this quote from a 12-year-old girl slipped in:

"I went to the province of Drente for the holidays. There were many Nazi uniforms in the streets. Then a loudspeaker asked who would join to fight England. So everybody went away and only men in Nazi uniforms were left in the market place."

NUMEROLOGY. With the draft well into its second year, officials are now able to come up with a group of statistics about it. For example:

In World War I, the first number drawn was 258. In 1940, it was 158.

In the '41 draft lottery, the chance of any number's being drawn in its proper sequence was about one in a billion. Yet it happened: the 666th number drawn was 666.

In 1917, young men in Danville, Ind., Albany and Syracuse, N. Y., drew draft numbers 1430, 6 and 856. Twenty-three years later, the sons of these three men drew exactly the same draft numbers as their fathers.

A Baltimore lady told her husband his draft number would be 679. It was.

A Baton Rouge, La., doctor's draft figure was 6088. It was also his telephone number.

The first name of a boy in St. Petersburg, Fla., is Columbus. His number is 1492.

CONFIDENT. We've just heard a story worth repeating. We won't guarantee its truth — but it's a classic:

Young Johnnie's mother missed him when she suddenly became aware of an unusual quiet in the house. She found him in the nursery drawing a picture —

Mother: "Johnnie, what are you drawing?"

Johnnie: "I'm trying to draw a picture of God."

Mother: "Now, now, dear — nobody knows what God looks like."

Johnnie: "Maybe they'll know when I get this picture done." M.

HERE COME THE "HELL-COPS"!

IT WAS a strange-looking contraption. A cagelike arrangement of pipe. A motor in the front of the cage. Just ahead of it, a seat such as you might see on a farm tractor. Surmounting the whole thing, a sort of exaggerated barbershop fan. "Looks like a plumber's nightmare," said the man beside me.

Sitting in the seat was Igor I. Sikorsky, famous designer of great, sleek airplanes. A punctilious kind of man, whose formal manners — as well as his wispy mustache and accent — are constant reminders of his Imperial Russian background, Mr. Sikorsky bowed courteously from his metal seat, then moved a lever. Effortlessly, the weird crate lifted itself straight up off the ground and into the air.

It was a thrill to see it fly. But this was the world's first single-rotor (meaning only one barbershop fan) helicopter — and we were there to see it do more of a trick than mere flying.

A little way from us, a man was standing with a suitcase. And now, after climbing 50 or 60 feet, Mr. Sikorsky began easing his machine down until it was directly in front of this man, and on a level with his head. There it stopped, hanging motionless in the air like a hummingbird. The man lifted the suitcase, placed it in a rack at Sikorsky's feet. Sikorsky touched the controls again, and the helicopter casually rose again, and circled the field. A few minutes later it was back, hovering in the same spot — and the man reached up and retrieved his suitcase.

They're helicopters — machines that can rise, straight up, from a forest clearing, or land on a housetop; and they're Igor Sikorsky's latest. Army plans for them are secret — but soon they may be giving the Axis hell

by Frank J. Delear

"What do you think of the plumber's nightmare now?" I asked the man beside me.

He shook his head. "That's no nightmare," he said. "That's the dream of an Army commander. Imagine! He's cut off somewhere. No communications. No landing field for planes. Then this thing just drops down out of the sky. All he has to do is to reach out and get the messages that will tell him what he needs to know. Maybe it brings him emergency rations. Or ammunition. Man, that's some machine!"

That wasn't the sort of thing Igor Sikorsky had in mind when he was designing this helicopter. He was creating, he thought, a flying machine that would be the average man's air flivver of tomorrow. A flying machine that could be kept in a garage, and that could take off or land in any small back yard. A flying machine that would do anything in the limitless sky that an automobile will do on congested highways: go fast or slow, stop, move forward, backward or — topping the automobile — sideways. A flying machine which, even if its motor failed, could still be maneuvered to a safe landing almost anywhere. A flying machine which, in mass production, could sell for the price of an automobile.

He knows he has created just such a flying machine, and he still believes that mass production for civilian use will come, and that we shall all be flying as casually as we ride the highways today. But first we must win a war. And as the war clouds gathered and burst upon us, Army men were looking at that helicopter, getting some such visions as that of my companion at the demonstration.

One day last year, an Army airman came winging in to the airfield of the Vought-Sikorsky division of United Aircraft, in Connecticut. For two minutes — no more — he examined the controls of the helicopter, was told how to handle it. Then he climbed aboard, and flew. It is as simple as that.

But it may well mean a new and amazing kind of mobility for our armed forces. Here is a flying machine that needs no huge, bomb-inviting airfields — that can go anywhere soldiers can go — that can go some places soldiers might not be able to go any other way. Ordinary airplanes can drop parachute troops, but this machine could set them down in picked spots — on the side of a hill, the top of a building, in a street. And it could pick them up again, or rescue trapped forces, or take wounded men from a battlefield.

That isn't all. Hovering in the air, it could direct artillery

Other "Hell-Cops" land shock troops in street to halt enemy charge, and capture crew of disabled antiaircraft gun at right fire. It could spot and identify things below which would be only blurs to a man in a fast-flying plane — camouflaged gun emplacements, for instance; or, at sea, submerged submarines or mines.

It could carry out communications missions when bad visibility kept ordinary planes grounded, for it could always come down to within a few feet of the ground to get its bearings.

It could operate under cover of darkness, needing no flood-lighted field on which to land. Over dense woods, where no landing would be possible, it could hover just above the treetops while its occupants descended on a rope ladder.

These are just a few of the obvious possibilities. What plans the Army may be developing will undoubtedly be revealed by deeds, not words.

"It will never replace the fixed-wing airplane, of course," says Sikorsky. "It will be essentially a small machine, of moderate speed." He sees its probable maximum as about 150 miles an hour, and thinks it will be built to carry from two to four people.

Thirty Years In the Making

THOUGH Igor Sikorsky's fame rests largely upon giant airplanes, it is this unique midget which is his favorite brain-child. The story goes back to 1909. Igor Sikorsky was 20, a student at the Polytechnic Institute of Kiev, Russia. From early boyhood, he had wanted to build flying machines. A couple of years before, he had designed and built a model helicopter which actually flew. Now, borrowing money for a motor and other essentials, he built a full-sized one. For weeks he tested it on the ground. But when he got in it, the thing wouldn't rise an inch.

That was a blow. But Igor Sikorsky went on. He built another helicopter which wouldn't fly, either, and an airplane, ditto. Finally, with the aid of several friends, he succeeded in building a plane that would fly. He flew it, to be exact, a total of eight minutes before it crashed in a ravine. He climbed out of the wreckage and began salvaging the material to use on the next one.

That next one, after a dozen hops of about half a minute each, ended up in a pond. He fished out the motor to use in the next one.

It was his fifth plane (not counting the helicopters) which not only flew but kept on flying. That was in 1911, and it was a turning point. He began to win prizes and recognition.

But a minor accident with that fifth plane had as much to do with airplane history as did its success. A mosquito got into the gasoline line and stalled the motor during an exhibition flight. Sikorsky saved the plane from serious damage by a skillful forced landing. But it started him thinking. . .

The experts were saying that big, multimotored planes would never be possible. But Sikorsky asked himself if a plane that had several motors to depend on wouldn't be several times safer. By 1913, he had designed, built and flown the first big, four-motored plane in history.

It was a luxurious ship, complete with lounge and washroom, capable of carrying 10 people. Sikorsky saw it as the beginning of a new era in transportation. It was. But the First World War broke out, and Sikorsky's four-motored planes became bombers instead of passenger transports.

The Russian Revolution temporarily ended Sikorsky's career in aeronautics. He landed in New York in 1919 with little money, a scant knowledge of English and no business contacts. Airplane manufacture, after the war, was being reduced. There were few jobs in aeronautics, particularly for newly-arrived foreigners.

Sikorsky took a furnished room, picked up some money by giving lessons in mathematics to Russian immigrants. Meantime, he went on designing new planes, even if he couldn't build them. Some of his Russian friends eventually got interested, offered to back him in a new company. The Sikorsky Aero Engineering Corporation was formed. It was long on enthusiasm, short on funds. Materials often had to be obtained from a neighboring junk yard or from the five-and-ten.

The first plane crashed on its test flight. Sikorsky, as if by force of habit, gathered up the wreckage and began figuring out repairs. A few months later, the rebuilt plane made the first of many successful flights.

The story of Sikorsky's career, from that point on, is the story of the development of aviation in America. As planes grew bigger and bigger, faster and faster, Sikorsky planes were consistently in the vanguard. When the first great air clippers conquered the oceans on regular commercial flights, they were Sikorsky planes. Many of America's fighting ships today bear the Sikorsky name, and more are coming off the production line constantly. No one man has done more to develop the airplane from a crude puddle-jumper to the modern monarch of the air.

"And now," I said to him, "you have started all over again with a different kind of puddle-jumper."

He smiled his polite, dignified smile. "I started a long time ago," he said. "It seemed time to take it up again." (He always pronounces the ed on words like seemed.) "The fixed-wing plane had reached a high state of development. Of course, we can build bigger planes — if we find we can use them economically. And we can build faster planes, within limits — but the limits are in sight, with our present types of planes and motors."

And so the challenge was to turn from the conventional. Sikorsky likes to talk about flying machines that will use sub-atomic energy, and speed through the upper stratosphere at thousands of miles an hour. "I personally believe that this will come," he says.

But he isn't waiting for that. His own answer to the challenge had been ready for development for years. A ship that will fly straight up — and do tricks. A pint-sized craft that packs a mighty punch — for peace or war.

THE NAVY'S MIGHTY MIDGETS

AT ANCHOR, the crew can take it easy. But at 70 m.p.h., you just hang on!

CLOSE QUARTERS like these show why mosquito men must be young, athletic

HARDLY had the first bombs dropped on Pearl Harbor when whole swarms of them were speeding out from ports on both our coasts. Where to? Only the men aboard and the Navy Department knew.

But one thing is certain: wherever they are now, every single man on those pint-sized dreadnaughts is praying for a crack at the enemy. For the mosquito fleet is facing its supreme test. Ever since the first boat went into service, Navy men have been arguing: Could these little wooden mites really sneak up on a warship, blow it to bits and get away again?

Or were they plain suicide boats? Now we shall know. And every man in the fleet is staking his life on the answer. Doing it willingly, eagerly, for it's a volunteer service.

It's a tough service, too—even when there's no enemy at hand. The mighty midgets literally hop from wave to wave at speeds up to 70 miles an hour. Crews aren't even allowed on deck except in emergencies. But the boys wouldn't swap jobs with the crew of our proudest battlewagon. They're out to prove that M.T.B. means not only Motor Torpedo Boat, but also Mighty Tough Babies.

SWEEPING STATEMENTS

My "cleaning" woman slyly sweeps
The dust in tidy little heaps,
And then, when I have left the room,
She quickly wields a wicked broom
And hides her crop beneath the rug,
Where it can nestle, safe and snug.

At times I catch her in the act—
It makes me angry, for a fact.
But I am madder still when she Comes softly in, and catches me.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES . . .

THE Family Album Editor is being deluged these days with "true tiny tot" sayings. It would be impossible to print them all, but last week a couple of nice ones popped up:

Little Wesley, aged two, fell down particularly hard. When asked what the matter was, he sobbed: "I hurt my me!"

Young Jimmy's Dad enjoyed an occasional highball before dinner. One day at an Sunday school the boy's teacher was telling the class how bad drink was. Piped up Jimmy: "It isn't so bad when you mix it with ginger ale."

Morning Freshness

TRY THIS AT BEDTIME TONIGHT

IF THE swift pace of these war-time days is wearing you out—if you're losing your freshness and sparkle, waken tired and nervous—you should know this.

Today, modern science is reporting startling discoveries about food. About new-found, almost-magic food elements—with power to revitalize millions of the tired, the nervous or under-par, and build them up for clear-eyed morning freshness and vigorous, buoyant days.

As you may have read in recent magazines, these new-found food elements are so important that governments throughout the world are changing national diets to include more of them. Warring nations feed them to their armies, to build up physical stamina and sound nerves. Deny them to their captive peoples, to sap physical resistance and undermine morale.

Already our own government is seeking ways to supply more of these elements. For government studies show that 2 out of every 3 Americans aren't sure of getting enough of these vital food-factors to be at their best.

What To Do

In light of these new discoveries, thousands are taking a cup of new, improved Ovaltine night and morning. For Ovaltine is a scientific food-concentrate designed to do two important things.

First: Taken warm at bedtime, Ovaltine fosters sound sleep—without drugs.

Second: To build vitality while you sleep, Ovaltine supplies a wider variety and wealth of valuable food elements than any single, natural food. More than merely a "vitamin carrier," it provides not just two—four—or six—but eleven important food elements, including vitamins and minerals frequently deficient in ordinary foods. Significant amounts of Vitamins A, B<sub>1</sub>, D and G—protecting minerals—complete proteins—all in easily digested food form.

So—if you've been waking tired and listless, turn to Ovaltine—begin tonight. See if you don't soon feel—and look—far fresher mornings—with far more "life" and sparkle. Get a tin, today.

SURPRISE IN A BOTTLE

Twenty-four hours together in a locked room — two spies fight a battle of wits

by George Harmon Coxe

Illustrated by C. C. Beall

LATHAM knocked three times and then inserted the key which had been made from the impression he had taken earlier. It was an old-fashioned lock, like the remodeled house, and the bulky key was similar to that of his own room on the floor above.

The door opened easily and he dropped the key into his side pocket as he stepped into darkness. He was reaching for the electric switch when light exploded in the room and he saw Polsen standing there, one hand on a floor lamp, the other holding a Mauser.

"Ah, Lieutenant." Polsen moved up, a blocky figure, narrow-eyed and contemptuous. "I've been expecting you. Ever since I learned you took the room above me this morning." He tapped his breast pocket. "You want the dispatches I took from your messenger, yes—? Face about, please."

He stepped close, removed an automatic from under Latham's jacket, patted pockets, hips and shoulders. "I regret," he said, "that my own assignment is so unpleasant. We will go to your room, I think. It is better so."

"You've slipped since Bogota," Latham said as they climbed to the fourth floor. "There you were well rated by our Bureau. Here, in America, you are only a killer."

"Ich dien," Polsen said. "One cannot always choose — Unlock the door."

Latham obeyed, stepping into the room. "Lock it?" he asked.

"If you will." Polsen drew back, the gun steady, watching the Englishman lock the door and slip the key into his side pocket. Polsen smiled. "I'll take that. You can toss it to me."

Latham shrugged; withdrew his hand. He flipped the key to Polsen and crossed the cheaply furnished room to a window. "I could do with a bit of air," he said. "If you've no objection."

"Yes . . . I'm sorry, Lieutenant. You know the risks of this business as well as I."

"Oh, quite. One has to follow instructions. Someone has to do the dirty work." He paused, a lank, competent-looking man, his smile sardonic now as he took his hand from his side pocket and tossed a key out of the window to the alley four floors below.

Polson stiffened. "What was that?"

"The key. You know, to the door."

Polson glanced down at the key in his hand. He backed to the door, eyes incredulous. After a minute of useless struggle he cursed, threw the key against the wall.

"They're very similar," Latham said. "It was a natural assumption, Polson. I put mine in my pocket and tossed you my key to your room." He watched the German attack the lock with other keys, produced others of his own when ordered to . . . "I didn't think you could," he said at last. "My skeleton was no good for your door either. That's why I had to have a key made."

POLSEN'S square face was red with frustration. "Very clever," he said. "But it won't make any difference."

"I suppose not. Still, a reprieve is always welcome."

"Reprieve?"

"Well, you can't get out, can you? There's no other door. It's Saturday night, you know. The caretaker here won't be in till Monday morning." Latham sat on the edge of the table. "Commander Abbott is calling tomorrow evening at ten. You know the Commander? Well, when he comes and I don't answer he'll know something's up. He'll be back with keys and reinforcements. If I'm dead, it will be a lot easier for you if you put returned to the other room. "Join me?"

"Afraid of it? Well, perhaps you're right. It's brandy, Polson. And very good, too." He took off his coat and shoes, loosened his tie. "From now on, the burden's on you. I'm the captive. I can sleep. You can't. Not for a moment. Because if I get that gun — You see what I mean?" He sat down on the bed, sipping his drink until it was gone. "I'll be fresh in the morning, but you — well, you'll still have a long time to go. Nighty-night, Polson," he said, and stretched out.

For three hours or more, Polson sat in a straight-backed chair, constantly alert and ready for a trap. When Latham finally turned over and opened one eye guardedly, Polson was ready. Once, when he nodded, the bed-spring creaked with Latham's turning and warned him.

Latham, on one elbow, lay back and closed his eyes. After that he opened them from time to time, but he had no chance to act, and at eight o'clock he sat up and yawned.

"How'd it go? You look a little bleary-eyed," he said, and went whistling to the bath to shower and shave. "Now if we only had some bacon, eggs and a pot of tea — or would you prefer coffee?"

"Shut up."

Latham picked up a magazine and sat down near the German. "Just so I can keep an eye on you," he said. "I doubt if you can stay awake until tonight, Polson. But I can. I've had my rest."

The morning dragged on. Twice Polson got up to get a drink of water and pace the room. Latham jeered at him. "Your eyes are getting heavy," he said at two o'clock. And at three, Polson nodded and only caught himself at the split instant.

Latham sat down again. "Next time I'll get you," he said, and went back to his magazine.

Three times during the next hour Polson's eyes closed, but not quite long enough for Latham to act. "Six hours more," he said. "You'll never make it, old boy."

Polson moved his chair away. Latham moved closer. Finally he yawned. "Damned boring, all this sitting, what? I'm hungry, too. Maybe a touch of brandy would help — Oh, hello. Where's the flask?"

POLSEN'S grin was bright and cunning. He pulled the flask from his coat pocket.

Latham's face fell. "Oh, I say now — There isn't much, you know."

"You're a fool, Latham. All Britishers are fools. You think I won't stay awake? Hah! You wasted your share of this. I saved mine until I needed it." Without shifting his eyes or gun, he swallowed, his smile gloating.

"Wait," Latham said as the flask was raised again. "You can save me a drop, can't you? I'll get a glass."

He went into the bathroom. When he heard the thump in the other room, he smiled and went to the door. Polson was on his hands and knees. He still held the gun. His eyes were glazed now, and he struggled desperately to keep awake. Slowly, as though it weighed a hundred pounds, he lifted the gun and fired once, wildly; then the gun dropped and he fell on top of it.

Latham recovered both guns and found the dispatches he wanted; then he picked up the flask and kissed it lightly.

"Guaranteed to put you to sleep for three hours," he said, half-aloud. "It did me, only I took mine when I needed sleep, Polson. But I don't suppose it would ever occur to you that a man might dope himself. That's the trouble with you chaps. No imagination —"

*Go to the Nearest Navy

DURING the past eight weeks, thousands of men — with fire in their eyes and determination in their hearts — have gone to Navy Recruiting Stations everywhere. They have demanded the opportunity to fight for their country.

Thousands have been enlisted and are now being trained. But make no mistake, thousands more are needed — urgently needed. Men in good health between 17 and 50 years of age.

As the President has said, the United States can accept no result save victory, final and complete. To win that victory we need more ships. They are being rushed to completion. But the finest ships in the world are useless without enough men to operate them.

Every Navy fighting ship is a complete unit — a small world, which requires a full complement of trained specialists, engineers, machinists, shipfitters, carpenters, welders, radio operators, aviation specialists — experts in almost 50 skilled trades.

THE NAVY WILL TEACH YOU A SKILLED TRADE

If you have no trade, the Navy will teach you one. Select the job you prefer. If qualified, the Navy may spend $1500 training you to be an expert and thus fit you for a well paid job when you return to civil life. Navy trained men are always in demand.

PROMOTIONS COME QUICKLY

In the Navy you earn while you learn. You get a pay increase automatically after four months. You may earn up to $136 a month, plus allowances. Plus your board and keep. Plus the finest medical and dental care. Plus more than $100 worth of clothing when you join.

IF YOU ALREADY HAVE A TRADE

If you have had special training or know a trade, here is the opportunity to use your knowledge at once. If you can qualify in any one of the Navy trades, you can join the Navy as a petty officer right away . . . with the higher pay and allowances.

COLLEGE MEN WANTED TO BE NAVAL OFFICERS

Seniors who enlist now for deck or engineering officers will not be called to active duty before next June. Juniors may continue in college until 1943, but may be called to active duty during the period while not attending college next summer.

College students (except freshmen) enlisting now to become Naval Aviation officers will not be required to commence training until the completion of their current college year.

The officer in charge of the nearest U. S. Navy Recruiting Station will give you further details.

SHOW-WINDOW GIRL

Maxine was as smart as she was pretty. And that was a break for the shabby young man

by Everett Rhodes Castle

Illustrated by Harry L. Timmins

YOU'RE going to fall in love with a young man with a lot of money," the woman in the Gypsy Rose Tea Shoppe had said. Her white hand fluttered vaguely over the amount. "A great deal of money," she repeated, and lit the words with a false, mechanical smile.

Maxine — Max to her friends — said, "Oh," with equal vagueness. She wasn't much taken in. The woman didn't look like a gypsy. She was small and thin and her blonde hair got awfully tired of being blonde before it got down to the roots. The fortune came with the 35-cent luncheon. It was really nothing but a sales-promotion stunt.

Max knew what sales promotion meant because she was in business. When people asked her what business she was in, Max always told them the advertising business. With the assistance of sixteen hand-lettered cards, a half-dozen pieces of unpainted furniture and a full line of Laidley's Lacquers, Max demonstrated how simple and inexpensive it was to make your home pulse with new life.

In a way it was like being on the stage. The people passing on the street had to be stopped. That meant, practically, that the person in the store window had to sell herself before she could sell her product.

SHE had to have the same things an actress had, to be successful. She had to have poise, personality and even glamor. She had to look as fresh and inviting after six hours of painting bookcases and holding up cards as an application of any Laidley Lacquer. That took a lot out of a person. But it had to be done. That was the price of success, as Mr. Grumbine, local manager of Laidley's Lacquer, had pointed out.

And Max was a success. During the week she spent in the window of the Globe Furniture Company, sales of Laidley's Lacquer increased twenty-five per cent. Sales took such an upward sweep during the week that she spent in the big front window of Mandel & Son Co., that she was held over for an additional three days. It was just like being in the show business. Mr. Grumbine had her picture taken, while she was in Mandel's window, for the home office. It was a candid shot over the heads of the crowd. It made Max look like Rita Hayworth. Rita Hayworth in a short flaring skirt of bright green decorated with bright-colored yarns and a white blouse.

It was the audience-appeal of her "act" (Max got to thinking that way about it) that led to Rowley's giving Laidley's Lacquer one of their big central windows. Rowley's was one of the biggest department stores in town, and their window space, as Mr. Grumbine pointed out, was as precious as rubies.

"Who knows but some movie scout will come along and see you," Mr. Grumbine had chuckled. He was such a nice little man. He had a little watermelon of a stomach and eyes like buttered onions.

That was when Max remembered what the woman in the tea shoppe had told her. She grinned. It wasn't the slow, alluring smile she used during her performance. It was just the quick, delighted, optimistic, wary mirth of undaunted nineteen.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Grumbine, but I won't have time for a career. Honest I won't. You see I'm going to fall in love with a young man with a lot of money."

Max first noticed him when she was holding up Placard No. 1. It read:

Does Your Home Suffer From Dingsyitis?

Max picked him out of the crowd because he was nodding violently. He was much too young to be Mr. Grumbine's movie scout, and he certainly didn't look like any gypsy's promise. He wore a battered brown felt hat pushed far back on his head, and his topcoat, a tan reversible, gave every evidence of long and careless wear. He carried a black leather brief case under his left arm.

MAX's eyes traveled over him with the smiling aloofness which always characterized the opening of her performance. He had freckles. She placed Placard No. 1 on a nearby easel and picked up Placard No. 2. It said:

Old, Dull Furniture Can Be Made as Fresh as a Spring Garden!

In the regular demonstration Max used a scarlet-tipped forefinger to emphasize each word of the printed message. Today, as her finger reached the second word in the last line, the young man shook his head vehemently. His free right hand crossed his heart. Then he grinned.

Max concentrated her attention and personality on other faces in the immediate foreground. She presented Placard No. 3 and Placard No. 4. Then, as she picked up a brush and a can of Laidley's jade — "Scientifically Compounded For Breakfast Nook Furniture" — her dark eyes strayed briefly toward the fringes of the audience.

The young man was gone. Max was on Placard No. 8 the next morning, when her ears caught a slight drumming on the plate glass which separated her from her public.

It was the young man in the battered felt. He was holding his brief case against the window. The sleeves of the wrinkled reversible hid a sheet of paper, pressed between the window and the case, invisible to the eyes of the rest of the potential lacquer market. Printed in large crude letters, was the following message:

May I See You After Work?

Max gave a fat woman, flanked by two small and very dirty children, a dazzling smile. The woman stared up at her dully. She was following Max's tapering finger across the cardboard:

The Wise Always Avoid Cheap Unknown Brands

Max held up a can of Laidley's

Lacquer. As she pointed to the label, the drumming noise returned to the window.

Max crossed the window up stage and picked up a rose-colored stool whose lacquered sheen was as resistant to wear as the hide of a hippo. She stroked its glistening surface with a dry brush to illustrate how quickly and easily this astonishing result was achieved. The drumming persisted. Max blinked her eyes engagingly — Mr. Grumbine called it "the old sell" — and looked out over the crowd.

That was how she came to notice the man with the pointed ears. He was part of the audience, and yet his flat, unpleasant eyes never focused on the stage. He kept looking up and down the street.

a movie scout, she thought

Then he walked out to the curb. A black sedan crawled up out of the traffic, and the man slid through the front door. Max only noticed the little incident because the man did not even seem to know that there was a girl in Rowley's window—a girl Mr. Grumbine laughingly referred to as the Rita Hayworth of the lacquer business.

But Max had no time for personal pique. She turned on a fresh charge of magnetism and picked up Placard No. 9.

Her eyes flickered carelessly over that particular corner of the window, but the young man was gone. Which was as it should be, Max told herself firmly.

Late that afternoon a messenger boy delivered a package, addressed to "The Girl in Rowley's Window." One of the assistant display managers handed it to Max as she came out of the window at 5:30. It turned out to be a two-pound box of candy. Not the sort that a young man with a lot of money would get at Barloff's. There were no nut or fruit centers.

There was a note tucked in the rummy wrapping. Max read it for the second time as she stood before the locker containing her hat and tweed coat.

"Dear Miss Laidley Lacquer:

Do you believe in love at first sight? I saw you first in the window of The Grott Paint Co. I don't think you noticed me. I also saw you in Mandel's window. I am not trying to be fresh. My life is full of dingyities ever since I saw you. Just so I no longer will be an unknown brand to you, I am —

Irving Webster

1176 W. Adams Street

P.S.—If you should decide to change your mind about me, I will be in front of your window tomorrow morning at about half past twelve or a quarter to one, depending on deliveries. — I. W.

P.P.S.—The telephone number is Yardley 7869. Please call between 6 and 7. — I. W.

P.P.P.S.—Will be near the telephone this evening. — I. W."

THE note was so amusing. And yet there was something about it that was different. Max groped for the difference as she adjusted her small green hat before the washroom mirror. It was—was cocky and yet simple. Mr. Irving Webster was naive. Or was that exactly the word?

Max wasn't quite sure. But as she straightened the bow of color on her lips with the tip of her little finger, she decided one thing. He probably wasn't the type that — he wasn't like the man from Grott's Paint Store. Max frowned in the mirror, then shrugged her slim shoulders philosophically. Every person in public life had to get used to running into rummy situations and unpleasant people.

Max tucked the note into her patent leather purse. In a way it was nothing but fan mail. Rita Hayworth probably got a lot like it. She sighed.

It rained the next day, a cold, penetrating drizzle. Friday was always a big day at Rowley's. Every department had its Friday specials. But it was bad weather for personalized demonstrations. The window steamed up, and it was difficult to project magnetism and personality to a scurrying parade of hunched shoulders and dripping umbrellas. Even great actresses never give their best performances to empty seats.

Mr. Grumbine came around about ten o'clock and said it was a fine day to stay in bed. At eleven o'clock two small boys and a colored man lingered momentarily, and Max tried valiantly, using the trio as a nucleus, to build an audience for a completely rounded performance. But the boys left after one of them drew a face on the window with a damp finger; and the colored man drew his head down into his threadbare raincoat, like a tired turtle, and drifted away.

The sedan slid into a space in front of the window, just vacated by a truck, a few minutes before twelve. Max noticed it only because the man who got out and looked up and down the street for a minute, before he sidled back into the car, had small pointed ears. She never saw the driver of the car. The momentary gap in traffic filled up with hurrying gray figures.

Max dawdled among her props. It was really going to be difficult to pretend not to see one person standing in front of a big window. Especially if he — he made motions.

It wasn't quite as if he was just a pawer like the man at Grott's. There certainly had been nothing naive about Mr. Whipple. He —

Then — before Max could decide on a course of action which would show Mr. Irving Webster that she was no common pick-up and, at the same time, accord him the tolerance a more mature person extended to a naive young man not in the Whipple class — he was standing in front of the window!

He wore the same old battered felt hat and the same topcoat, reversed to expose tan gabardine to the chill drizzle.

And he still carried the black leather brief case.

He smiled. In a way it might have been said to have sell in it. Max felt a sudden moment of panic. It was silly of course. She picked up a placard uncertainly. The easel stood at the opposite side of the window. Max started for it.

Then she stopped. Somebody was standing directly in back of Mr. Irving Webster. It was the man with the pointed ears. He was standing very close. It was a very funny way for a person to stand. Max saw his lips moving. Something about the way they curled and uncurled in quick, curt soundless movements made Max suddenly prickle. It was like a scene she had seen in the pictures once. Something with Edward G. Robinson in it. A gangster was about to be taken for a ride.

Mr. Irving Webster certainly didn't look naive now. Neither did he feel like a gangster about to be taken for a ride. He just looked like a badly frightened young man.

Even in the dull slate-colored mist, every freckle on his pleasant face seemed to stand on end. And his eyes were fixed in an agony of entreaty on the placard Max still fingered.

Max stared down at it. It was Placard No. 13. It read:

If You Need Help
Call on Laidley Color Experts Now!

Max could see the arm of the man with the pointed ears. It was pressed into the back of this Irving Webster. It seemed to prod him. With a sigh of despair that Max could almost hear, young Mr. Webster started to turn away from the window.

On the wings of a conviction she didn't stop to rationalize, Max ran across the window. To the left rear, hidden beneath a small walnut molding, was a little gadget. It was part of the protective system of the store.

On the day she entered the window, the assistant store manager had warned her not to touch the little hard rubber knob. He had explained why.

Max hadn't grasped the details. It had to do with open or closed circuits or something, and emergencies and things like that. But she remembered, vividly, what the man had said would happen.

And it did. Even through the thick plate of the window. It rose like the scream of some strangled robot. Rose and fell. Rose and fell. The scene through the window lost all the order of a rainswept day. It became a frenzy of twisting, running figures. A police whistle shrilled.

Max stood at rigid attention in the middle of her little stage. What had she done? Women were screaming in the audience.

They were screaming because the grayness was suddenly threaded with orange flame. Orange flame and the rolling thunder of gunfire.

Max sat down suddenly on the rose-colored stool. She hoped she hadn't made a terrible mistake.

IT WAS almost like a Hollywood preview. Strangers shaking her hand, policemen pushing people around, newspaper reporters, asking numberless questions, flashbulbs popping. A young policeman with a frankly admiring eye gave her most of the facts.

"It was the Bertholdi brothers. We got 'em cold, thanks to you. A pair of young punks that have been out on parole for about two months. Bad eggs, sister. They made a specialty of robbing bank messengers and the lads that make security deliveries for brokerage houses, like this chap. The captain figures they've been putting the finger on this young Webster for two or three days. You know, following him around. Getting set to walk him into their car. I guess the boy's been stopping along here pretty often."

"— Now turn this way, Miss Shea, and smile —"

Max gave a feeble imitation of her old sell. But her mind was elsewhere. Anxiously she asked the question that was uppermost in her mind.

"Do you think he is badly hurt?" "Webster?" The young policeman shook his head. "He got it in the shoulder. He'll be all right. Plenty of guts for a kid. He held on to that million dollars."

"Million dollars!"

Another bulb exploded. "Maybe not exactly a million dollars. But a lot of dough, sister. Securities. See? Of course all of them wouldn't have been negotiable, but I heard the Cap tell a Morning Mercury guy that the boy had fifty-thousand dollars' worth of government bonds that were just like cash."

"Now, Miss Shea, if you will just stand up and let us get a shot —"

Max sat still. "... You're going to fall in love with a young man with a lot of money." The men with the cameras were walking around her. Max stared at them unseeingly. Of course the woman in the restaurant hadn't said that the money would belong to him.

But after all, could you expect—well, details like that on a thirty-five-cent lunch?

Max stood up suddenly. She was smiling — not radiantly — not with personality, but with the quick, delighted optimistic mirth of undaunted nineteen.

The End

"What can I do?"

"LIKE millions of other Americans, I've asked myself one question repeatedly ever since these fateful words popped out of my radio:

" 'Japanese planes have bombed Hawaii!'

"Daily, nightly, I've turned this question over and over in my mind — with the reading of every news bulletin on the air and the appearance of every epic headline.

"What can I do — here at home?

"What can I do — while Americans are fighting and dying in the far reaches of the Pacific for freedom and for me?"

"What can I do?"

"Only last night I found the answer as my eyes fell on my wife's knitting bag and my ears caught the click of her knitting needles.

"I could give to the Red Cross.

"I could give to the limit of my means to aid and comfort those who are giving so much more.

"And I have — today."

NEXT WEEK  "George, the Cat" RICHARD POWELL returns in a new story by

Miss Wham!

IRENE DUNNE is head of that school of screen brides who can toss a wisecrack or a pie into her cinema husband's face—before breakfast—and make him die laughing. That's the zany school. Other attributes: the sparkling repartee must be mixed with a face that's kissable 24 hours daily. Plus an ability to do a youthful version of Whistler's Mother.

It would be a good story if Irene were really that kind of lady. She's not, of course. But she's much nicer. She's a very smart, very beautiful woman to whom movie work is a wonderful way to make a living. No more. To her the most important things in the world are Husband Dr. Francis Griffin and six-year-old Missy. Married for 14 years, she hasn't yet thrown a pie into Frank's face.

In a first-name town like Hollywood, almost everybody still calls her Miss Dunne. And she's earned a reputation as one of the best business-women around. She makes a lot of money—and deserves it. She carefully picks her pictures. Is careful, too, about anything connected with them. But Hollywood for her begins and ends on the set. She doesn't bring her work home with her.

She began her career as the films' zaniest bride in 1936 with Columbia's "Theodora Goes Wild." Well, Irene did. And she has been going wild ever since—in front of the camera.

Everywhere else Irene is calm, dignified, serene. Ninety-nine per cent of the time she's as cool as her voice. But far below that lovely exterior runs a vein of dynamite. That vein was tapped during her last picture, "Unfinished Business."

Famed Gregory La Cava was the director. He picked out a dress for her to wear. She didn't want to. They argued. She yielded. She took it to the dress shop herself to have it altered. At 8 A.M. next morning she was on the set. The dress wasn't. She waited in her dressing room—her serenity leaking away. La Cava thought she was sulking. The dress arrived at 11. The dress went on. Irene turned to her maid: "My jewels for this scene, please." The maid paled. The jewel case was home. Irene said quietly: "Would you mind leaving for just a minute?"

Then slowly, deliberately, she kicked over everything in her dressing room that she could kick without breaking her toes. Some things she threw. Then she went out and had a fight with La Cava. Ten minutes later, they were pals—and she was Serene Irene again.

Oddly, La Cava is one of the few who spotted the Dunne volcanic streak. He likes to nickname people. "Your name with us," he announced when he first met Irene, "will be Mary Lou Wham."

The inventor of Mike and Ike, Boob McNutt, and the world's screwiest inventions, is also a marvelous cook. "Men are better cooks than women", asserts cartoonist Goldberg, "because they have a more inventive turn of mind!" In proof (or disproof) here is his recipe for Hash Palooza. Take the contents of a No. 2 can of Libby's Corned Beef Hash and fry in butter, mixing steadily until the hash is brown and crisp.

While frying, mix in 2 chopped hard-cooked eggs and fry with hash. Add 3 drops Worcestershire sauce and salt and pepper to taste. Pile on hot platter and accompany with hot buttered lima beans and carrot strips.

An idea from BEN IRVIN BUTLER

Ben Irvin Butler's best idea was the Society of Amateur Chefs, of which he is the Executive Director. Having a wide acquaintance among well-known men, he was surprised to find how many made a hobby of cooking. Everyone knows that birds of a feather have fun together, so before you could say "Boil rapidly" he had organized the Society of Amateur Chefs. Today, many of the foremost men of the arts, literature, exploration, and the stage are Society members. Naturally, Butler himself wields a mean pot and pan. This is his recipe for Hash Pie. Line a baking dish with pastry. Empty contents from a No. 2 can Libby's Corned Beef Hash. Cut 12 strips of crisp bacon into 1 inch pieces. Slice 2 hard-cooked eggs. Fill dish with alternating layers of hash, bacon, and eggs. Sprinkle 1 tbsp. flour over top of meat, add 1 cup top milk, 1 tbsp. chopped parsley and 1/2 tsp. pepper. Cover with pastry and bake in a hot oven (425° F.) for about 45 minutes.

SCAT!

ALLEY cats probably dream about getting a job in the Bronx Zoo's Bird House. Imagine a cat turned loose with 700 birds!

It sounds exciting for the birds, anyway — never knowing when danger might leap from a dark corner. Actually it's a lot more nerve-wracking for the cat. He has to watch out or the birds will pounce on him.

But visitors to the Zoo don't know that, and it always startles them to see a cat peering through the door of a cage the keeper has momentarily left open. It fooled me when I was new at the Zoo: I ran to report an impending tragedy, but the keeper only laughed.

"Oh, that's the Bird House Cat. He's more scared of the birds than they are of him."

There have been several generations of Bird House cats and all have been completely reliable. But the first one had to learn a hard lesson.

As a kitten she pounced on pet birds loose in the food-mixing room. So they let her try pouncing on a tough old bluejay, a notorious fighter.

One fierce peck on her nose and she learned her lesson. She must have passed the story on to her own kittens, because they all keep clear of birds.

Here's How To SAVE YOUR PRECIOUS TEETH FROM THIS INJURY

Change To New Liquid Dentifrice Which Beautifies Your Teeth Without Abrasives

It's a scientific fact: Abrasives contained in dentifrices are causing millions of people to slowly injure their teeth.

These abrasives consist of particles so small you can't see or feel them. Yet they are so hard that, as you brush them back and forth, they gradually wear away the softer part of your teeth wherever this part is exposed by shrinking gums.

You can save your teeth from this appalling injury simply by changing to the revolutionary new dentifrice for brushing teeth—Teel.

Not a paste—not a powder—Teel is a ruby-clear LIQUID containing absolutely no abrasives. Tests show that it cannot injure even the softer part of your teeth.

How Teel Works To Beautify Teeth

Teel uses a new-type, patented cleansing discovery that bursts into thousands of tiny, surging bubbles in the mouth which instantly go to work to help remove the daily accumulation of decaying food particles and dulling surface film. Thus your teeth look so much whiter, more thrillingly beautiful.

Also, Teel's amazing action gives your whole mouth a glorious beauty bath—a refreshing clean "feel." It helps sweeten bad breath. A few drops of Teel in 1/4 glass of water is delightful as a mouth wash.

Start This Safe Liquid Way Today

Teel is easy to use and so economical. Get a bottle today at any drug, department or 10c store and follow this safe, new-day way in tooth cleansing. If you feel that your teeth need an occasional abrasive scouring, follow special directions on the Teel carton. And visit your dentist regularly for his professional care. Procter & Gamble.

MILLIONS ARE SLOWLY CUTTING CAVITIES INTO THE EXPOSED, SOFTER PARTS OF THEIR TEETH

Scientific research has proved that this damage is caused by regular brushing with dentifrices containing abrasives. Clinical studies* show that 8 out of 10 adults examined risk this injury because the softer part of one or more teeth is left exposed (usually due to shrinking gums) with no hard enamel to protect it. You can avoid this trouble by changing to Teel Liquid Dentifrice, because it contains absolutely no abrasives.

ON THE HOME FRONT

The Maine Idea

BECAUSE total war affects every man, woman and child, THIS WEEK Magazine is sending a staff writer, Arthur Bartlett, around the nation to bring you firsthand reports of the war effort on the home front. The first of these articles follows.

EASTPORT, MAINE.—The fisherman I met, dock was lanky, blue-eyed, and had two days' growth of bristly, blond beard. In a rich down-east drawl, he repeated my question: "Has the war hit Eastport? Well, I guess it has." The way he said it left no doubt whatsoever. "Hit Eastport that day the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor," he said. "Almighty bad shot, those Japs. Aimed at Pearl Harbor and hit Eastport." He grinned, but he wasn't fooling. Eastport, easternmost city in the United States, is farthest from the Pacific. But the Japs did hit it that quiet Sunday morning, just as they hit every other city and town from here to San Francisco. That's why this dispatch can rank as war correspondence. The war is wherever Americans are. This is news from the home front.

That fisherman and 10,000 like him are already in action off the coast of Maine. Farthest from the Pacific is nearest to Germany. And the Maine side of Eastport. They are Passamaquoddy Indians. I went out there, and visited Sam Dana's house. Sam Dana has only one leg. He left the other in France in 1918. On his wall, framed, was his discharge from the Army of the United States. There was also a yellowed certificate of membership—his grandfather's, he told me—in the Sons of the American Revolution.

And there was a calendar, on the back of which Sam had a record of all the Passamaquoddy boys who have now gone away to fight in this war—more, in proportion to population, than any other community in the county, Sam told me proudly.

A friend of Sam's came in, a husky young Indian of 30 or so. He sat down, and Sam began telling me about three of the reservation's boys who had walked to Bangor, 138 miles, to try to enlist. The recruiting officers told them they had to have birth certificates.

They walked back, got their certificates, and walked to Bangor again. Then they had been rejected for various minor reasons. "He was one of them," said Sam, nodding toward his silent friend.

"Maybe they take me pretty soon," said the young man, hopefully. "I go to Bangor again and see."

MORE GOOD AMERICANS—several hundred of them—live in near-by Quoddy Village. But instead of being the descendants of America's oldest inhabitants, they are mostly the sons of the immigrant families of Eastern cities.

They are the members of the Quoddy Village work-training project of the National Youth Administration, learning to be airplane mechanics, electricians, radio men and other types of technicians needed in national defense.

They were having an election rally when I went out. Every four months they elect their own youth government, from mayor to councilmen. The names on the campaign posters were straight from the melting pot: Loiacano, Levy, Zeller, Smilowitz, Kanoff, Lemack, Meadow. But the campaign oratory was straight American.

Sample: "Fellows, at the last election we could still talk about such issues as getting more recreation facilities and better grub. Things like that. That's out now. We're here to learn trades the country needs to win this war."

"The sooner we can get ready and get into the armed forces or into defense industries, the better. That's the only issue. We've got to keep things going full speed ahead. That's what I'll try to do if you elect me."

I chatted with the outgoing mayor, a keen-eyed lad who was within one month of getting a high-rating certificate as an electrical engineer. "But I don't know whether I'll stay on for the other month now or not," he told me. "I've got enough training now to be useful, and I can always get the rest of it after the war. We got a call the other day for thirty men to go to Pearl Harbor. Everybody wanted to go. But it was up to me to pick the thirty. So I'm one of 'em. We're hoping to get the final word to go any day now."

THEY'RE DIGGING IN at Portland. I stopped off there on my way to Eastport, and went out to an apartment development where I once lived. But my old neighbors were not at home. They were over on a vacant lot near by, helping dig the excavation for an air-raid shelter. Everybody in the co-op, I was told, was working on it co-operatively, and chipping in to pay for the more specialized work which required skilled labor.

HERE'S AMERICA in a capsule, it seems to me: The Portland Henry W. Longfellow Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, is buying defense bonds from its treasury.

AN EXCITED KID called this Portland note to my attention: Portland's water supply is low, and fears have been expressed that it might not be sufficient to cope with an incendiary-bomb raid unless it is carefully conserved. A Mr. J. W. Griffin therefore wrote to the Portland City Council. His proposal: Bathless Saturday nights.

FILIPINO stewards serve on the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad. One of them recently declined to serve another drink to a passenger who was getting too noisy. "You damned Jap," shouted the drunk, "gimme..." That was as far as he got. The steward gave him the whole tray, right over the head.

THE MAN WHO STAYED

"The Noblest Act I Witnessed in the War"—the fifth in a series of articles by famous authors and war correspondents

by Robert St. John

IT HAPPENED in the Athenee Palace Hotel in Bucharest, Rumania, about a year ago. There were always half a dozen foreign correspondents sitting around the Athenee Palace swapping stories and drinking little glasses of Rumanian tsuica. This particular night we were talking about the abdication of King Carol and the possibility that German troops would soon be sweeping down through Rumania.

Then Walter TancI came in. We raised our glasses in a toast to him. Walter was a Czech refugee. He'd fled from Prague just a few months ago. The Nazis had finally learned how it happened that so many Czechs on their black list vanished—vanished just when they were about to be picked up: they escaped over the underground railroad. Walter had been operating. It was like the underground railroad in America back in slave days. An elaborate organization that rustled its human freight out of German-occupied Czecho-Slovakia and down into still-free Rumania.

Once the secret was out, Walter himself had to follow the underground route and get out. For several months he had been in Bucharest. But now Walter was worried again. He told us so that night in the Athenee Palace. He wasn't a bit dramatic, but we knew he was at the end of his rope.

The Nazi army was getting ready to sweep down into Rumania and take possession of the country... body, soul and railroad lines. With the army would come the Gestapo. And Walter was on the Gestapo list. He would be one of the first to be picked up. And so he knew he had to move on quickly.

But he had no passport. And the Rumanians refused to give him one. Without a passport, travel was impossible. All frontiers were now under extra-heavy guard. Walter seemed to be trapped at last. His future wasn't very rosy. We all knew what happened to men like Walter when the Gestapo got their hands on them.

But that night in the Athenee Palace a quiet voice suddenly spoke up. It was Louis Fleurin, the Swiss journalist.

"How tall are you, Walter?"
 "Five feet, ten," was the answer.
 "Good. And your hair is brown and your eyes are blue and you weigh about seventy-five kilos, don't you?"

Walter kept nodding.
 "Tris bien!" said Louis. "Alors! You can take my Swiss passport and get by all right."

Walter began to protest, but Louis pulled his well-worn passport from his pocket and tossed it across the table.

"Take it and be quiet. Get a photograph of yourself just the size of mine and then I'll give you the name of a man who'll glue your picture in the passport, in place of mine, so cleverly that no one will ever know it's been changed."

Walter and Louis argued for some time, but when we left the Athenee Palace that night the passport was in the pocket of the Czech refugee, and Louis went home without the most valuable possession any man could have in Europe those days... the passport of a neutral country.

None of the rest of us entered into that argument, because we knew Louis was "on the spot" too. For a full year Louis, the Swiss, had been blasting the hide off the Nazis in his dispatches. Berlin had tried over and over again to get the Rumanians to expel him.

The next day I bumped into Louis on the street. He wore his usual broad smile. He said he wasn't very worried. He had a friend in the Swiss diplomatic corps. He thought that by pulling this string he might be able to get another passport in time.

But things happened down there in Rumania faster than Louis or any of the rest of us expected. One day the Nazi army came marching in.

But Walter, with his borrowed Swiss passport, had got out of Rumania one jump ahead of the Gestapo. A few days later the Rumanian Secret Police, under the gentle guidance of the Gestapo, ordered all aliens to report at headquarters. Anyone without a passport was locked up.

Louis vanished about that time. None of us ever saw him again. But none of us will ever forget him.

HERE'S WHAT BURNS ME UP

by Jane Rice, Waitress

IT MAY SURPRISE some people to hear it, but waitresses are people. They, too, have metatarsal arches, headaches and tempers. Only they have to forget such things and swallow their pride when they get a beeper at their table. A waitress has to take it; if she dishes out anything except food she gets fired.

Of course, the great majority of people are nice to deal with — considerate, sympathetic. Time and again when I begin to burn up about some unreasonable cluck, the customer at the next table will give me a sly grin which seems to say, "Don't let it get you down, kid; we're not all like that."

It would help us girls most if the impatient ones would try to remember they're not the only customers in a restaurant. I've served 22 luncheons at two four-chair tables in an hour — so have lots of other girls. We can't be as dumb as some folks think we are and handle that kind of traffic. In fact, I'd like to see some of the chronic kickers I've known try to do it — just once!

What Does the Waitress Think of You?

|---|--|
| 1. Do you chat for 10 minutes before looking at the menu — and then want everything from soup to pie in three minutes? 2. Do you eat in 30 minutes, then gossip 30 more, thus killing a girl's table and another tip? 3. Do you come in just at closing time and expect perfect service? 4. A "stiff" is a non-tipper. Are you a stiff? 5. Do you find fault with the food and service just to show your friends how smart you are? 6. Do you keep the waitress waiting | ten minutes because you can't make up your mind — and then say, "Well, what's good today?" 7. Do you snap, "I've been waiting twenty minutes!" when you've never even looked at the clock? 8. Do you write on tablecloths, bend fork tines out of line or commit other idle sabotage? 9. Do you yap at the breakfast waitress — who, after all, isn't to blame if you got out of the wrong side of the bed? 10. (For men only.) Do you think buying a 30c lunch entitles you to try to date the waitress afterward? |
|---|--|

THE SCORE: Each "No" answer counts 10 points. 70 is passing. But you'll never have a waitress calling you by name unless you score a full 100 — or, if you're a woman, a full 90.

TAKE TIME TO BE HIS PAL

To have his confidence in later years, win it when he's still a baby

by Douglas A. Thom, M.D.

Director of the Habit Clinic for Child Guidance, Boston, Mass.

IT is one of the unhappy observations that children rarely express a desire to be like their parents. And adolescents— even grownups— often complain about the attitude their parents had when they were children, and voice frequent criticisms of their early home life. Lack of understanding stands out as the most important criticism. These backward glances are not usually associated with bitterness or resentment. More often, it is with a feeling of tenderness that these grown-up children express regret because their parents just did not know how to enjoy what they, as children, could have offered.

One boy says: "Dad just swelled up with pride over his family, and the fact they belonged to him, but he never had time to get acquainted." A girl in early adult life says: "Mother always acted as though it were dangerous or undignified to get too intimate with me. Seemed to be afraid I would take advantage of any familiarity." A nineteen-year-old boy states: "Father used to get embarrassed if anything about sex was mentioned and acted as though it was not a decent topic to talk about."

Youth Won't Be Waiting

THE time to begin getting acquainted with children is when they are very young. During these early years children just naturally turn to parents for care, protection, consolation, and advice. The pre-school years offer opportunities that will never come again for building up a happy, healthy parent-childhood relationship. How often do we hear a busy father remark: "When the boy grows up or when he gets a little older so that he can do things with me, we will get together and have some real comradeship, some good times." With an unshaken conviction that he can just slip in at any time and find youth waiting to accept him, he lets the years slip by.

Then later, when Father is ready and in the mood for this comradeship, he is frequently hurt and disappointed that his boy is not receptive, that the relationship is strained, that shyness and diffidence offer a resistance to the efforts of both father and son. The parent now wants and hopes for the very comradeship which the child has been deprived of ever experiencing.

The foundation of what this father would some day want and what the child always needed should have been laid during the early years. Sympathy, tolerance, affection, understanding are the product, not necessarily of constant association, but of genuine interest that can always be tapped by a child in time of need. The important ingredients of the child's part in this particular relationship are quite different from respect, obedience, good manners, and submitting to authority.

Sense of Security Vital

RESPECT and obedience, of course, are fundamentally important both now and later. But a sense of security in the personal relationships, is also important. This is, in cold fact, the very basis for confidence, self-esteem, and courage in later life. These assets come from a feeling in childhood of being wanted, of being understood. The experiences he has in his early family relationships set the pattern for a child's later life. If his simple, immature activity in everyday life appears to be of interest and concern to grownups, a child gets a feeling of being an important member of the family group. On the other hand, if his sand pile, his snow man, his make-believe boat or car never get an audience; or the recital of some thrilling experience, either real or imagined, never gets a hearing, he feels out of it.

A child gets satisfaction in sharing these pleasures with his parents. When they take an interest, he feels he is understood. In time of need he—like all of us—will naturally turn to those who are sure to give a sympathetic hearing. Parents who have been busy, too dignified, too preoccupied, or too intolerant to pay heed to the child's early interests and problems, will rarely be called in for advice and guidance when important problems arise during adolescent years. They will have to pick up the pieces and pay the bill, so to speak, but they will be able to contribute little of a constructive nature.

The roots of confidence, understanding, and sympathy go deeper—and last longer—than mere obedience and respect. They need more care and consideration, if they are to develop and feed a relationship between parent and child which will permit of joy in companionship as well as pride in ownership.

A 60-SECOND CLOSE-UP

FEMINE back-seat drivers are riding to glory in taxicabs. Draft calls, defense needs, have created gaps in the ranks of cabbies. In cities all over the country, ladies have begun to take over jobs left vacant by hackmen. So far — if you're bothered by women drivers — the trend is not serious enough to worry about. But it's on the way. London has its skirted lorry and tram drivers. And now, the U. S. is beginning to produce its chauffeurettes—descendants of World War I's streetcar conductresses.

The trend has bloomed most in those cities where defense industries have created a big labor demand. Baltimore, for example, is a leader in employment of girl cabbies. Last May the License Division, Newark, N. J., okayed cab licenses for women because of the draft. Way up in Fairbanks, Alaska, Kitty O'Brien was running a city cab service at last report. San Jose, Calif., Sandusky, O., Memphis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Washington are some of the 20-odd (and the number is rising) cities where women have begun to take over the wheel.

REACTION in all places is the same: the gals are good, careful, polite. General requirements: married, 25-35, accident-free record, husband in Army or defense work, neat appearance. Beauty not necessary.

A few months back, a New York taxi company advertised for lady drivers. Three hundred answered the ad. One of those hired was 27-year-old Mrs. Vivian Falcon, (above). She's pretty representative of the nation's chauffeurettes. She works from 9:30 A.M. to 4 P.M. five days a week (most cities prohibit night work for the ladies). She averages about $35 a week, including tips. Five of that goes to the nursemaid who takes care of her Jackie, 7, and Marie, 5. But she gets home in time to fix dinner. A good one.

She hasn't had a bit of professional trouble with men—either customers or competitors. The former have been courteous. The latter — especially the two who work from the same stand she does — have been helpful, friendly. She's enjoying her new career tremendously. Says she always feels a feminine pioneer. She'd have looked good in the front of a covered wagon, too — right?

How proud you are when you cut into a tender golden-brown pie—but how awful when the crust is tough!

Now—be sure of flaky, tender pastry! Crisco brings you 2 new helps . . . First—Crisco itself is different because this pure, all-vegetable shortening is now made by an exclusive process. Why, cooks all over the country find Crisco does more to give them tender pastry than any other shortening. Second—Crisco has developed a new, sure-fire pastry method.

Goodbye guesswork! Till now, it's been so easy to make 2 mistakes that cause tough pie crust—adding too much water and over-handling the dough. Now, with Crisco and Crisco's New Method, even beginners needn't have a worry!

Try it! Read Crisco's amazing New Pastry Method, given at the right. Don't wait a day to thrill your family with flaky, digestible pie crust.

CRISCO-FRIED FOODS ARE SO DIGESTIBLE, EVEN CHILDREN CAN EAT 'EM!

New! Easy! CRISCO'S SURE-FIRE PASTRY METHOD!

Try it for a "Hostess Pie Tray"

DOUBLE-CRUST MEASUREMENTS

- 2 cups sifted flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 3/4 cup Crisco
- 1/4 cup water*

*Notice—this method tells you exact amount of water. Standard recipes don't . . . yet too much water is the first big cause of tough pastry.

Sift flour and salt into bowl. Take out 1/4 cup of this flour and mix with the 1/4 cup of water into a paste. Add Crisco to remaining flour; cut in Crisco until the pieces are the size of small peas.

Next, add flour-paste to Crisco-flour mixture. Mix thoroughly until the dough comes together and can be shaped into a ball. (Notice—the dough isn't sticky—it's easy to handle, easy to roll out! No need to over-handle the dough—the second big cause of tough pastry.) Divide in half—roll out both crusts about 1/4 inch thick. (All measurements level.)

ONE-CRUST MEASUREMENTS: Use 1 1/2 cups flour, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup Crisco. Take out 1/4 cup flour and blend with 3 tablespoons water.

"BESIDES COFFEE . . ."

Five Latin-American lands provide these five fine recipes

by Grace Turner

TO THE south of our country, the recent years—elsewhere spinning a gigantic web of War for us—have been creating loyal friendships. Increasing numbers of Latin-American people and our people have traveled back and forth across the borders with happiest results. And even Stay-at-homes in North America feel the impact of the other Americas—in politics, fashions, music, dances and food. From below our Southern boundaries, come dark-eyed statesmen; handsome plantation owners; bevy of beauties for the American stage and movies—good salesmen, these, for the South American Way of Life.

Today we round up five spokesmen for food in nations to the South of us. . . They're coffee-lovers, all of them. Some grow it and get rich by it; all drink it and talk it. . . They give us their Latin-American definitions of the kind of coffee they like to drink. . . In addition, they suggest the famous native dishes printed on the next page as THIS WEEK's recipes.

GENTLEMEN FIRST, this time. Here is Senor Dr. Don David Castro, Minister Plenipotentiary from El Salvador, staunch U.S. Ally and tiniest Central-American republic, exporting coffee, sugar and specialties like indigo and balsam. . . Senor Castro is a top expert in Inter-American affairs and solidarity in the Western Hemisphere. . . Privately, he is also a coffee connoisseur. His idea of perfect coffee: Brew it to thick essence and dilute with cream; milk; both. . . His favorite native recipe is Salvador Casserole of Haddock.

MANUEL MEJIA—pronounced, Mayah—Colombian socialite, banker, coffee grower, exporter and booster for the U. S. A., says every Colombian stops in several times daily at the tiny cafes in his country, serving only "cafe tinto"—black coffee with sweetening. He himself admits to four large cups a day, ten or fifteen demitasses. . . He gives us also a very special and a delicious potato recipe: Potato Ajaico.

FROM CUBA, another valiant U. S. ally, comes Desi Arnaz, handsome Latin-American picked by Abbott and Hart to play Manuelito in the stage musical "Too Many Girls." A "hot" dancer, he also introduced the conga to Miami and New York. . . He likes his coffee strong, boiling hot Father Routh of St. Anselm's Priory and Father Kennedy, O. S. B., practice application of an open-thigh bandage on a fellow student as part of their preparation to teach others.

Learning First Aid to Teach It

← Splinting a fractured collarbone to relieve pain and immobilize the affected arm offers practice in using an improvised bandage.

↑ How to move an injured person without risking further injury to him is demonstrated by this group. It guards against complicating bone fracture or other injuries.

Traction splinting not only relieves pain, but reduces muscular spasm and shock. It is a modern addition to first-aid work.

WASHINGTON'S favorite "indoor sport" since Pearl Harbor has been training in first aid. In addition to the thousands of air-raid wardens and auxiliary police and firemen, many other residents, preparing to take their place in the emergency program, literally have been "boning up." The demand for training of first-aid crews to man neighborhood casualty stations as well as those in Government and private office buildings and stores reached its peak this month with approximately 63,000 students enrolled in more than 600 classes. The need for instructors in this greatly expanded training program has been met by special courses for instructors, such as the one pictured here in St. Gertrude's School of Catholic University, so that the training may be carried to all classes and groups in the Capital.

Artificial respiration ranks with stoppage of hemorrhage in the life-saving technique of the first aider. Here Brother Robert of the Franciscan Monastery improves his skill in artificial respiration.

Important in the training program is the lecture work of the instructor, which includes classroom procedure, use of visual teaching aids, and modern methods of testing and grading. C. M. Maxwell, chairman of the American Red Cross emergency mobile unit, uses a Keller-Blake splint to demonstrate his point.

Two nuns care for a theoretically fractured arm by the most approved method of preparing the victim for later surgical care, before they begin the work of combatting nervous shock or attempt to move her.

She Goes Ice Fishing De Luxe

ICE fishing is a popular winter sport up around the Great Lakes. Winter anglers of Sandusky, Ohio, on Lake Erie have surrounded the sport with many of the comforts of home. When the temperature flirts with zero a breeze across the ice can make the exposed fisherman think of more comfortable places after an hour or so. The answer to that has been a brisk rental business in little cabins that slide across the ice on runners. You pick a likely spot, chop a small hole through the ice, move your floorless cabin over the hole and start fishing. You may even have a small stove for company if you want.

On Sandusky Bay, where Ruth David joins the boys to show 'em how in these pictures, your most likely catch is yellow perch. Pickerel and other varieties also are caught on the live minnow bait which the knowing angler uses.

→ Here Ruth David, having picked a proven spot, cuts a hole through the ice with a special giant chisel. Then she slides the cabin, just behind her, over the hole.

When the fishing is good, two at a time is no rarity. Ruth had baited the usual two hooks for this double-header catch of yellow perch on the two-foot rod, which also is standard equipment.

Not bad! Ruth's several-hour haul of perch numbered more than 60. Kept on plenty of ice, they'll certainly be fresh when she gets the string home.

← And now for a panful of the fish that don't run high in poundage but are second to none in flavor.

JUST suppose enemy bombers are striking at a coastal city. What happens? Follow the numbers on this picture-diagram and see how Uncle Sam's raid alarm system works:

1. Coast Guard cutter, miles at sea, flashes the first warning.
2. Instrument detectors ashore report raiders off the coast. (They may give the first alarm.)
3. Visual observers at intervals of 5 to 8 miles sight raiders, get to nearest telephone, tell operator

"Army flash" and report to assigned Filter Center all they have observed, furnishing line of flight.

4A. Filter Center receives reports, filters out false alarms by advance knowledge of air traffic and charts route of approaching raid.

shows location, strength of available combat force. On gallery above, officers watch progress of raid, directing defenses accordingly. (These Army Information Centers, with overlapping webs of communications, control large regions and blanket the Nation's vulnerable areas.)

4C. Control Officer, flanked by two assistants, is in supreme command. Other officers on gallery are specialists, directing anti-aircraft guns, civilian aircraft (C. A. A.), interceptor planes, naval operations, bomber command, radio (F. C. C.), and civilian defenses.

4D. Plotters swiftly map navigation data for interceptors to engage the enemy. Interceptor officers direct combat squadrons by radio.

5. Interceptor planes at dispersal fields (40 miles apart) converge on the enemy. Anti-aircraft guns go into action. Barrage balloons are raised.

6. Simultaneously, civilian defense officers at Information Center flash light warnings to Warning District Center in path of raiders which telephones warnings to Control Centers within the Warning District. Yellow light is confidential preliminary and sends civilian defenders to their posts; blue light means extinguishing special lights allowed essential industries under blackout conditions; red light means "raid is on" and is the one on which the public is warned. White light is the "all clear."

THE MERRY KNITTERS

By W. E. Hill

Sensitive knitter. "I can't remember for the life of me what she said about the stockinet stitch, but she was so snippy with me I'd rather die than ask her again."

"I know I shouldn't have put toes on them, but I've been knitting gloves and I forgot these were socks. I guess the soldier won't mind!"

The proprietor of the wool shop, who teaches the war workers how to knit, showing the embryo knitters what they've done wrong. They come back next day to find out how to put the needles back after they've slipped off. And they'll be back again to learn how to turn a heel.

"Knit one, purl two, knit one," etc., etc. Mary is one of those knitters who just have to count out loud. This is a great trial to knitters parked near by.

Somebody's unhappy husband spending a long Winter evening typing a set of directions for socks.

Mad knitter. She's had to rip it all out for the fourth time and it irks her.

Slow knitter. Agnes has been weeks knitting a pair of socks for her buck private boy friend. Something always seems to happen. Either she loses a needle and the wool shop won't sell her less than two, or she can't match her wool, or maybe she measures wrong and the sock turns out a size 6 when the boy friend wears size 11. And all this takes time.

Dorothy washed the lovely sweater she knitted for her soldier and it shrank. She's trying it on her brother, just to see. Decides it may do for a very small soldier, but not for her best boy.

Inspired by the gentleman's costume of centuries ago is this smart waistcoat dress. Filmom's Renee Hall shows you how the flattering design emphasizes the bosom line, draws in the waist, while the narrow roll collar calls attention to the smartly shaped neckline. Pattern No. 1527 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 5 1/2 yards of 35-inch material.

Crowded skies at Randolph Field. A nine-plane formation leads a huge training flight in an aerial maneuver at the Texas "West Point of the Air." In the stepped-up aviation training program, Randolph Field recently graduated its first wartime class of cadets, who are in their final stage of training for the Air Corps at specialized fields.

Defense stamp sales were brisk when Bunny Waters of a Broadway chorus used this sales technique while traveling down to Miami with the show. The young men peeling off the stamps as they buy them are Royal Air Force cadets headed southward on Bunny's train. Wide World and A. P. Photos.

FROM LOG CABIN TO THE OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
The Story of CORDELL HULL
BORN OCTOBER 2nd, 1871

BACK IN 1869, RIP-SNORTIN', STRAIGHT-SHOOTIN' "BILLY" HULL WAS THE IDOL OF THE TENNESSEE MOUNTAINEERS.

BILLY'S GOT AN EYE LIKE AN EAGLE!

WILL YOU MARRY ME, BETTY?

YES, BILLY, WE'LL BE THE HAPPIEST COUPLE IN STAR POINT, TENNESSEE.

WHEN A SON WAS BORN IN 1871...

LET'S NAME HIM CORDELL. THAT'S A GOOD TENNESSEE NAME.

AND, BILLY, HE WAS BORN IN A LOG CABIN... MAYBE SOMEDAY HE'LL BE PRESIDENT!

THERE'LL BE MORE CHANCE FOR CORDELL, TOO.

WELL, BILLY, YOU'VE PROSPERED SINCE YOU CAME TO CELINA FROM NASHVILLE.

YES, AND MY SON, CORDELL, IS DOING FINE, TOO. HE STARTS COLLEGE AT MONTVALE NEXT YEAR, AND HE'S ONLY 14!

WHAT'S HE WANT TO DO?

WAAAL— CORDELL'S NOT SET ENOUGH TO BE A SCHOOLTEACHER, ROUGH ENOUGH TO BE A LUMBERMAN, OR SOCIABLE ENOUGH TO BE A DOCTOR, SO I GUESS HE'LL BE A POLITICIAN.

IF I'M GOING INTO POLITICS, I BETTER START NOW; I'M GOING ON SEVEN—TEN! GIDDAP, YOU CURSED CREATURES!

LOOK! IT'S BILLY HULL'S BOY!

WHY ISN'T HE HOME A-PLOWIN'?

WHAT'S HE WANT?

NEIGHBORS, I WANT TO TALK TO YOU...

JUMP BACK IN YOUR CRADLE, SONNY.

MEN, I HAVE SOMETHING TO SAY, AND I WILL SAY IT!

THE POOR PEOPLE ARE BEING BLED BY TAXES. WE NEED AN INCOME TAX TO BE PAID BY THOSE WHO CAN AFFORD IT, AND AN END TO THE HIGH TARIFFS THAT ARE STRANGLING WORLD TRADE.

SO CORDELL HULL MADE HIS FIRST SPEECH AT THE AGE OF 16. CONTINUE HIS INSPIRING STORY NEXT WEEK.

ON THE MORNING OF DECEMBER 9th, 1941, AN OLD FISHERMAN LYING BECALMED IN THE UNRESTRICTED WATERS JUST OUTSIDE PEARL HARBOR NOTICED HUNDREDS OF WHITE PAPERS FLOATING LIKE LILY PADS ON THE PURPLE SEA ..... CURIOUS, HE GATHERED THEM UP, AND BEING UNABLE TO READ, SOLD THEM TO A BEACHCOMBER FOR A SLIGHTLY USED CORN COB PIPE.. THUS THEY TRAVELLED FROM HAND TO HAND UNTIL SOMEONE READ THE CAREFULLY PENNED WRITINGS ON THE SHEETS, AND DISCOVERING THAT THEY WERE PART OF A DIARY CONTAINING SEVERAL REFERENCES TO THE SPIRIT, SOLD THEM TO US FOR TWICE WHAT THEY COST HIM .....
