Anacostia Park Tract Sought For Navy Yard Planning Board

Opposes Move to Take 70 Acres

(Map on Page A-10.) The Navy Department is seeking permanent jurisdiction over 70 acres of Anacostia Park below Eleventh Street Bridge, it was learned yesterday, for a proposed wartime expansion of Washington Navy Yard facilities. Its request for transfer of the tract is meeting opposition from Federal park official because, among other necessary uses, the Anacostia tract includes the valuable tree and plant nurseries of the United States Botanic Garden and the District A counter proposal has been made by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, it was announced, involving another area in the general vicinity which would meet the Navy Yard's requirements and would not interfere with es-

Nurseries Might Be Involved.

Park and planning commission officials said yesterday the District government has laid out 25,000 trees in the Anacostia nurseries which are being grown for replacement on the city's streets and parks. Mr. Rogers has returned from Chile where he was one of six American newspapermen who were guests of Chilean newspapers. Their trip returned the visit to the United States last year of Chilean journalists, including Manuel Vega of El Diario Ilustrado, who was a guest of The Star. The interchange was arranged by Claude G. Bowers, United States Ambassador to Chile. This is the first of a new series of articles by Mr. Rogers on South America.

decision has not been made. The meeting of State chairmen which originally was to have been held here February 12 but was postponed because of the war, has two purposes. First, it is to bring State organizations into as close working co-operation as possible with the national Republican organization. Second, it is to give the individual States a chance to present their own particular probems for consideration

Arrangements are being com-pleted by Chairman Martin for the meeting of the National Committee which he has called for April 20 in Chicago. That will be the kickoff for the campaign. ### Elizalde in Radio Forum Philippine Commission to Discuss Southeast Asia's Role in War

The vital role which the natives of Southeastern Asia can and should play in the war effort of the United Nations will be discussed at 9 p.m. tomorrow by Philippine Commissioner Joaquin N. Elizalde in the National Radio Forum arranged by The Star and broadcast over the blue network. The program will be heard here over Station WMAL. Commissioner Elizalde, a native of the Philippines, is convinced that the United Nations should sell the native populations on the idea that they are fighting for their own freedom and their own future instead of a mere choice between two forms of imperialism.

He has pointed out that the United Nations may be overoptimistic in their claim that their cause is backed by four-fifths of the people of the world. The Commissioner is more inclined to the view that some three-fifths of the world's population are more or less "on the fence" in the present struggle and must be convinced they will benefit by throwing in their lot with the United Nations.

Commissioner Elizalde, while of Spanish descent, is a Filipino by birth and feeling. He and his three brothers who now are in the inyaded islands are partners in one

Judge Cayton Asks 'Summary Judgment' Rule Be Abolished

Points to Hardships Of Defendants in $50 to $500 Suits

Citing a Court of Appeals decision as authority, Judge Nathan Cayton in a written recommendation to the other municipal court judges, yesterday urged repeal of the summary judgment rule in "class B" cases, or those where claims range from more than $50 up to $500.

Abolition of the rule means that in a contract suit involving a sum within those brackets a defendant no longer would be compelled to provide an "affidavit of defense," which requires the services of an attorney and, in the opinion of Judge Cayton, works a hardship on defendants being sued for small

Its primary purpose is to assure to people of small means, ignorant of the complexities of pleading and practice, often unrepresented by counsel, their day in court and that fair hearing on the merits which, in our system of jurisprudence, is regarded as fundamental."

Regarding the Court of Appeals decision, Judge Cayton wrote "there is implicit in that opinion a plain suggestion that Rule 16 should be abolished and a more humane procedure provided to meet the needs of the poorer class of people who are sued in these 10,000 or more cases each year.'

With the rule in operation a plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for the full amount of a claim unless the defendant or his agent in stride. Her father, Col. ### Congress Members Find Selves 'Violating' Espionage Act

Committee Taking Hasty Steps to Protect Aid to United Nations

By the Associated Press. Members of Congress discovered to their amazement yesterday that in recently re-enacting the 1917 espionage law they had made it illegal -with the death sentence as a maximum penalty-for Government officials to furnish military information or instruments of war to allied as well as enemy nations.

(Since re-enacting the 1917 measure, Congress has voted increased arms aid to members of the United Nations and leaders have conferred with visiting allied officials. Hence members of Congress themselves have violated the law.)

Chairman Austin said a Senate Military Affairs Subcommittee was taking hasty steps to correct this situation by rewriting the 1917 act as a part of a war secrets bill now pending before the group.

How Measure Reads.

The Vermont Senator told reporters the committee had discovered that a strict construction of the 1917 act would prevent the communication, delivery or transmission to any foreign nation of documents, photographs, plans, maps, models, instruments, appliances or information relating to national defense.

Penalty for violation of the law, aimed primarily at preventing the divulging of military information to the enemy, may be either 30 years' imprisonment or, in extreme cases

The act, Senator Austin said, puts direct curb on the exchange of some types of information between the United States and other United Nations. Such exchanges were authorized by the Lend-Lease Act, but that law was approved prior to reenactment of the espionage statute. The committee is expected to act soon on the revamped war secrets Senator Austin predicted it

Allied Pacific Strategy Worked Out, Offensive Planned, People Told

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, Australia, March 7.—Australians linked reports via London today that "great convoys" of American troops are moving through the Southwestern Pacific with assertions of their own government leaders that London and Washington are working out plans for an offensive from Australia and back to Tokio and Yokohama.

John Beasley, Australian Supply Minister, said in a speech at Sydney that "within the past week complete organization for Allied strategy in the Pacific has been worked out.' 'The enemy has a long supply line which we can cut, leaving him at the end of a line without support for his forces. Time is the only factor we have to deal with, and given time, we, in association with our Allies, can drive the enemy to Tokio and Yokohama." Other government leaders said they were informed that the United Nations are assembling their maximum strength in the Southwest Pacific at the earliest possible moment for such an offensive.

Repeated Brushes Reported. The dispatches from London quoting a Daily Mail correspondent accredited to the United States Pacific Fleet said large convoys loaded with American troops, airmen, planes, guns, tanks and "materials to be used to build the foundations for a great offensive" were moving through the Pacific toward Australia

The Tokio radio in the past 10 days has told of repeated brushes with American naval and air forces all the way from northeast of New Guinea, north of Australia, to Wake Island and Minamitori Shima (Marcus Island), 1.400 miles from Tokio, The United States Navy, however, has confirmed but one of them, an attack by 18 Japanese bombers on a task force northeast of New Guinea in which 16 of the Japanese planes were shot down. Employment of tanks by the British for the first time in Burma was looked upon here as a strengthening of that front to gain time for the maturing of plans in India.

Meanwhile, the critical situation in Java, Netherlands Indies, emphasized to Australians the urgency of their problem of holding this continent against incursions until the Allied offensive can be prepared.

Way Open for Attack. Japanese conquest of Java would open the way for an all-out attack on Australia not within months, but weeks, the people have been warned, and government leaders hurried plans for the drafting of all men up to the age of 60 to man the defenses and build war materials.

Civilian Defense Unit Credited With Saving Lives in Truck Blast

Four Killed, 100 Injured As Munitions Explode After Collision

By the Associated Press.

SMITHFIELD, N. C., March 7 .-Like a gigantic time bomb which dealt death and destruction after attracting a crowd of the curious, a blazing truck and trailer loaded with 30,000 pounds of munitions exploded near here early today, killing at least four and injuring approximately 100.

The explosion occured two hours after the truck was in a wreck with a sedan, three miles from here. Both vehicles caught fire.

The blast demolished a roadside hotel, wrecked a tavern, leveled a row of filling stations, pock-marked two rows of brick tourist cabins and broke virtually all the windows in Selma, a small town a mile away. Heard for 50 Miles.

Wreckage was strewn for two and a half miles. A hole 30 feet deep and as long as a railroad car was ripped in the cement highway. Windows here were broken. A man standing half a mile away was seriously injured.

The blast was heard for 50 miles. At first it was feared that the death toll might reach seven or even higher. Coroner E. N. Booker announced that at least three persons, in addition to the four known dead, perished in the wreckage of the hotel, which burned to the Later, however, the coroner said all of the hotel occupants were accounted for. The ashes were still smouldering, and it was impossible to search the ruins.

The known dead were George Stroupe of Gastonia, commander of a C. C. camp at New Holland; Cecil E. Propst of Lawndale, a State game and fish warden sta- pectation that reinforcements would tioned at New Holland; Mrs. Minnie Lewis of Raleigh, driver of the sedan which was in a wreck with the truck, and Buck Mitchell, 46, of Dunn, a cafe worker.

A major factor in the shutdown of civilian radio production was the fact that more than $1,000,000,000 in military orders already have been placed for war radio equipment. Approximately half this total is being held by the 55 firms affected by yes-

The board predicted that, when the shutdown becomes effective, approximately 60,000,000 radio sets will be in operation in about 87 per cent of the homes in this country. The plants will be permitted to complete sets on which assembly work was begun on or before April 22 under production quotas set by W. P. B. earlier

Some of the companies will be permitted to exceed these quotas, however, with all the excess production reserved for Government distribution. Officials indicated that some of this surplus stock would be exported to South America.

The board announced that the military contracts for the radio industry would be so divided and arranged that every company could participate in war work either as a prime contractor or as a subcontractor. All but 13 of the 55 companies now have war contracts of some kind.

Two Bureaus to Make Experiments Looking to Bigger Rubber Supply

By the Associated Press Secretary of Agriculture Wickard ordered the Forest Service and the Bureau of Plant Industry yesterday to proceed with a program for production of guayule rubber but made clear that no substantial amounts of rubber could be obtained in the near future. He said the guayule project would be confined this year to test plantings in California, New Mexico, Arizona and Mexico to determine suitable areas for possible future commercial plantings

Operations, which will be centered at Salinas, Calif., will be limited to about 2,000 acres this year for test planting and about 750 acres for production of plants for increased plantings in 1943.

Doesn"t Solve Problem. Secretary Wickard emphasized that the project did not in itself promise an early solution of the Nation's rubber supply program.

"The law limits field plantings of guayule to 75,000 acres, which is about all that can be accomplished by the spring of 1943 with seed that is available at present," he said. "But once the project is under way there will be opportunity for expansion if needed." A recent act of Congress provided for the program. The nucleus of the Government's undertaking already exists in properties and processes developed by the Inter-Continental Rubber Co. in its production of guayule rubber from wild shrubs in Mexico and its experimentation with cultivation of the plant in California and elsewhere in the South-partment had arranged to purchase these properties at $1,721,235. The Forest Service has selected one of its regional foresters, Evan W. Kelley of Missoula, Mont., as field director, and Paul Roberts, director of the prairie States forestry project, as associate director of the guayule program. Guayule is a slow-growing shrub native to limestone slopes of North Central Mexico and the Big Bend area of Texas. Commercial shipments of guavule rubber have been made from Mexico for many years. Produciton of such wild rubber however, is not expected to exceed 10,000 tons annually, Mr. Wickard

Speaker Warns Club Against Axis Propaganda

If the citizens of the United States | Sun Gets Auto Afire can prevent the Axis powers from dividing our people by propaganda our enemies will not accomplish their objective of conquering this country, William C. Krueger, national commander of the Army and Navy Union, said in a talk yesterday at the Thomas Circle Club. Taking as his theme "Unite and Conquer," Mr. Krueger warned the people that they must "not listen to any form of Quislings." He decfared that "we must unite instead of divide—unite each race, each creed, the poor and the rich and win this war. We hear these people talking everywhere. We must not listen. We must stop them," he warned. He cited such statements as "the English will fight until the last American is killed," "our Pacific Fleet was destroyed at Pearl Harbor" and "Russia will sell us out and make a separate peace with Germany and Japan" as examples of Quisling statements.

"The influence of rising prices in expanding the level of national income was much larger in 1941 than it had been in other recent years," the report pointed out. "It is estimated that an upward price movement of about 6 per cent occurred in the course of the year, most of which was concentrated in the second six months. Even after adjustment for price changes, however, the increase in physical output in 1941 was very substantial, and the total output for the year established a record high. American Negro soldiers had done their duty with combat units of the ground forces, but that "in this war, the American Negro is destined to take his place in defense of his country by performing combat duties

"You should feel that you are on your mettle," he continued. "As you are the first group of Negro military pilots, it is up to you to prove that this school is not just a noble experiment, but is a sound step forward in the Nation's war effort."

Colored Group's Song Ban Plea Opposed By Mrs. Roosevelt

She Calls Movement Idea of Few Who Are 'Supersensitive'

A movement by some of Washing. ton's colored educators to have the Board of Education remove such well-known ballads as "Old Black Virginny," because some pupils consider them objectionable brought comment from Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday that only a "supersensitive" group would make such a request.

She told her press conference she tion. thought the objection of colored groups to certain compositions of Stephen Foster and other musicians a very foolish thing. It is understandable only in the light, she said, that "people not secure in themselves are apt to be supersensitive" and feel things too keenly

White House Has Sugar Problem. "I feel sure that the more secure and educated colored would not feel that," she said.

The request was made last week by Mrs. Velma G. Williams, member of the school board, who asked that the board not place on the approved school list text books which contained song lyrics claimed to be offensive to the colored group.

Discussing the effect of the war on the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt said the White House staff is having a hard time figuring out its sugar ration, but persons there will get It was on Bandoeng that they only as much sugar as the rest of the Nation is entitled to. ### Mrs. Roosevelt Backs Labor's War Demands At Student Parley

Tells Opposed Collegians Troops Must Come Home To Good Work Conditions

Mrs. Roosevelt came to the defense of organized labor last night in the face of spirited criticism by a group of college editors and leaders of its wartime demands.

She does not worry about the gap between the pay of the enlisted man and the defense laborer, she said, because in the last analysis there is no pay adequate for a man prepared to give his life for his On the other hand, she main-

Mrs. Roosevelt's opposition came from 50 student leaders who during the last three days have been tour-ing Government offices to study wartime Washington. Their conference, which closed last night, was held under the auspices of the United States Committee of International Student Service. The students peppered Mrs. Roosevelt with suggestions for a draft of labor similar to the Selective Service Act. This she fears, she said, because drafted labor might be used as the opening wedge to wipe out improved labor conditions set up after years of effort.

The right to strike, in particular, she declared, should never be legislated out of existence in this country. She proposed instead that no Joe" and "Carry Me Back to Old strike be called without being first submitted to public arbitration, carried on with members of the press present. ### Lease-Lend Mission Sent to Australia To Rush Production

New Allied Policy Aims At Arsenals Close To Possible Fronts

By BLAIR BOLLES.

Charged with the task of arranging for a major increase in Australian production of warplanes, tanks, guns and tires for mechanized operations, a special leaselend mission has been sent from the United States to Australia, where, according to a Melbourne dispatch, the Allies expect to launch an offensive against Japan.

The mission to Australia, like the previously announced mission to India, reflects the new United Nations policy of girding for victory by distributing the arsenals of war in centers close to raw materials sources and close to possible fronts.

This policy is aimed at enlisting the full industrial potentialities of all the Allies and reduces the demand for shipping space from the United States. The gap between shipping space and shipping demands daily grows wider.

S. M. Wasserman and Alden Smith of the Lease-Lend Administration are in charge of the mission to Australia. They are also to visit New Zealand. It is reported that Henry Grady, former Assistant Secretary of State, is heading the mission to India. An American mining engineer already is in South Africa another Allied raw materials center for conferences on increasing the South African output of essential metals.

Long-Term Plans Mapped.

The dispatch of these various groups to different points in the Indian Ocean region is taken here to indicate that a turning point may be near in the Far Eastern war. Careful plans for long-term warfare in Australia and India are now being laid here and in London after three months of continuous reverses which came so quickly that the Allied defenders were never able to organize a real resistance.

Coincidentally with these recent indications that a shift to offensive strategy is in the making, President Roosevelt called his ranking war advisers to the White House yesterday for their second conference in three days.

Summoned for the meeting were Secretary of War Stimson, Secretary of Navy Knox, Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff; Lt. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, deputy chief of staff for air; Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet and Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations

Vesterday's council lasted nearly two hours. On Thursday the President met with the same group and later called in for a joint meeting the British staff officers stationed

Next Jap Move in Doubt.

Yesterday's warm weather was a soothing reminder to Washington that spring and new campaigns both in the Far East and in Europe are but a short distance away in time. It is still debated whether the Japanese intend next to launch assaults at both Australia and India or only against India.

Walter Nash, the New Zealand Minister, said in a talk here yesterday that New Zealand, to the east of Australia and far from the scenes of Japanese conquest, "is concerned about Japan's future intentions but not dismayed." He added:

'We realize that the invasion of New Zealand would be a difficult and risky operation, but New Zealand would be a prize worth taking. New Zealand is ready for any emergency, but it needs all the help the United States can give in the way of airplanes, tanks, antimircraft and fighting equipment." Mr. Nash said that in his country 330,000 men and women are or-

In the Axis lexicon that word is but a simile for unobstructed invader. High Allied representatives are inclined to think that Turkey will reject the German demand align itself with the Allied cause and invite the Allied forces to enter Turkey to implement the resistance to Germany.

Turkey's attraction for Germany lies principally in the fact that it is on the road to the Mosul and Persian oil fields. Diplomatic advices reaching Washington stress repeatedly that Germany's oil problem is growing critical. The secondary attraction of Turkey is that it is on the road to India, where a German junction with Japan could

Some observers, however, doubt if Germany wants a junction with Japanese armies. The prospect of a serious German-Japanese clash is considered always a possibility if the two powers are triumphant over their immediate opponents.

Allied generals confidently rule out the possibility of a German-Japanese junction on the ground that Japan will be unsuccessful in an attack against India. The prospective move of the fighting in the Far East from islands and indefensible peninsulas to great land masses like India and Australia encourages the political and military representatives of the United Nations here to think the war with Japan is entering a new phase.

Water for Air Base Tested After Prowlers Are Routed by Bullets

Albuquerque Reservoir Guard Fires at Men Who Arrive in Darkened Car

By the Associated Press.
ALBUQUERQUE, March 7.—The Army air base pressed auxiliary water supplies into service today as authorities cut off Burton Reservoir, the base's normal source, and took extensive chemical analysis of the water after a civilian guard was forced to rout nocturnal prowlers with gunfire.

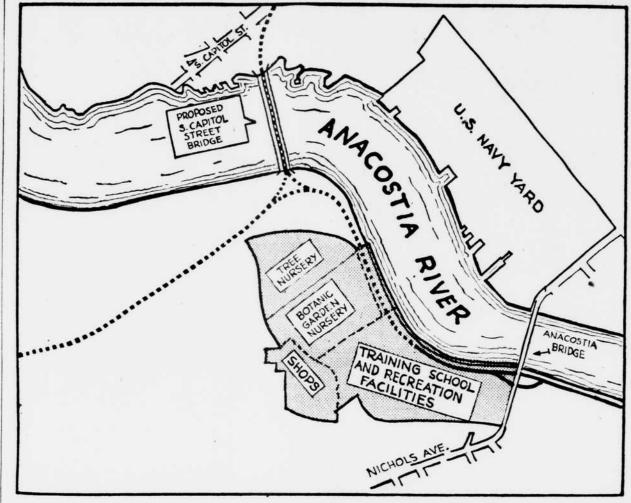

City Manager Charles E. Wells sent water samples to the University of New Mexico Laboratories as a precaution. Reports on the analysis will not be available until tomorrow or Monday, it was said. Nick E. Sanchez, the civilian guard posted by the city parks department, reported he fired two shots at two men who disregarded orders to halt at the reservoir gates about 4:30 a.m.

The prowlers arrived in a car without lights, Mr. Sanchez reported. While one man remained in the car, the other entered the

"I called out to him to halt," Mr. Sanchez said, "but instead he started to run. I fired one shot and the man fell. He got up then and ran toward the car just as the other man was stepping out. They both got back in and drove away. Mr. Sanchez fired a second shot after the still darkened car, and said the bullet struck home. Police investigators found foot-

PROPOSED AREA FOR NAVY YARD EXPANSION IN ANACOSTIA PARK-Federal Park officials are trying to divert the Navy from seeking a transfer of 70 acres of Anacostia Park below Eleventh Street Bridge to the proposed site of the South Capitol Street Bridge to permit expansion of the Washington Navy Yard. They fear in time the transfer would result in possible elimination of the nurseries of the United States Botanic Garden and the District of Columbia. A recreation area for Navy Yard employes would be located, if the transfer is made, on the present site of the week-end camp for colored troops near the Eleventh Street Bridge. It would also eliminate space reserved for shops of the National Capital Parks when they have to be moved from their present site near the Tidal Basin.

7 Firemen Hurt In Downtown 4-Alarm Blaze

Furniture Store Loss Heavy; D. C. Records Are Damaged

Seven firemen were injured or overcome by smoke and 25 received treatment in a four-alarm blaze yesterday that damaged valuable records of the District Employment Center and resulted in a loss estimated at between $50,000 and $75 .-000 to the Commercial Office Furntture Co., Eighth and E streets N.W. Approximately 15,000 persons watched scores of firemen from 16 engine and five truck companies battle the stubborn fire for more than two hours, while clouds of black smoke spread over the downtown section.

The fire apparently started in the boiler room in the basement of the three-story brick and concrete structure occupied by the furniture concern, according to L. E. Kling,

First Confined to Basement. For the first hour the flames were confined mostly to the basement, storage space for office furniture and stationery supplies of all kinds. Firemen were unable to enter because of the heavy smoke in the closed place. They thrust hoses through doors at either end of the structure and through two holes battered in the rear of the building by sledge hammers and rams.

The blaze went out of control however, and ate up to the second and third floors in the west end of the building. Fire Chief Stephen Porter, who personally directed the fight, said it was one of the most difficult blazes to get to he ever had seen.

Smoke was first noticed by J. R. Runnels, head of the office firm's stationery department. Manager Kling threw valuable records in the company safe until forced to flee by the smoke. He carried out the cash box containing $300.

Porter Is Rescued.

The only person in the upper stories was Charles White, colored porter, who was brought down a ladder by firemen when the building filled with the smoke. Employes of the Employment Center, which occupies the top two floors, had all gone because of the Saturday afternoon early closing time.

A number of Red Cross nurses and members of the Red Cross Women's Motor Corps also responded, helping administer to the smoke-choked firemen and standing by for whatever other first-aid might be demanded of them.

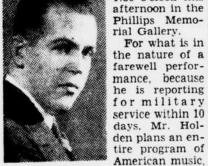

Firemen Treated. Five of the injured firemen were treated at Emergency Hospital and released. They were Lt. J. W. Bell, 42, of 4019 Fifth street N.W., cut right hand; Sergt. J. R. The so-called Goodwillie plan for rehabilitating nine blocks in Southwest Washington will be studied by the House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee before approval is forthcoming on the Senate-revised $70,000,000 emergency housing and public works bill for the District Metropolitan Area, Chairman Lanham announced last night

7 Firemen Hurt In Downtown 4-Alarm Blaze

Furniture Store Loss Heavy; D. C. Records Are Damaged

Seven firemen were injured or overcome by smoke and 25 received treatment in a four-alarm blaze yesterday that damaged valuable records of the District Employment Center and resulted in a loss estimated at between $50,000 and $75,-000 to the Commercial Office Furniture Co., Eighth and E streets N.W.

Approximately 15,000 persons watched scores of firemen from 16 engine and five truck companies battle the stubborn fire for more than two hours, while clouds of black smoke spread over the downtown section.

The fire apparently started in the boiler room in the basement of the three-story brick and concrete structure occupied by the furniture concern, according to L. E. Kling,

First Confined to Basement. For the first hour the flames were confined mostly to the basement, storage space for office furniture and stationery supplies of all kinds. Firemen were unable to enter because of the heavy smoke in the closed place. They thrust hoses through doors at either end of the structure and through two holes battered in the rear of the building by sledge hammers and rams.

The blaze went out of control, however, and ate up to the second and third floors in the west end of the building. Fire Chief Stephen Porter, who personally directed the fight, said it was one of the most difficult blazes to get to he ever had seen.

Smoke was first noticed by J. R. Runnels, head of the office firm's stationery department. Manager By War Building Kling threw valuable records in the company safe until forced to flee by the smoke. He carried out the cash box containing $300.

The sum of $4,158 was paid to 190 retired workers 65 years old or older who have qualified for benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance system. In addition, $596 was paid to 52 wives of retired workers. Benefits to widows in the Alexandria area amounted to $1,332. while 127 children receive monthly benefits totaling $1,552.

Pointing out that many persons who were drawing monthly benefits under the Government insurance system have gone to work on defense jobs, Mr. Baylis said the law provides for a suspension of payments in such instances, not only to the worker who in any month earns as much as $15, but also payments to a worker's wife and children. ### Redistricting Measure's Fate Still in Doubt

Virginia Assembly Faces Last Week Of Session

By ALEXANDER R. PRESTON. Star Staff Correspondent.

RICHMOND, Va., March 7 .- The General Assembly faces the final week of the 1942 session with the fate of the controversial reapportionment bill still in doubt.

The procedure to be followed in attempting to restore a pro-posed second delegate for Arlington County and bring the House disrict changes back more nearly in line with a legislative commission's recommendations on reapportionment was indicated today by the absence of action by the House of Delegates. Today was the last day in which the House could consider its own bills, including the bill to redistrict House seats, which was recommitted to the Privileges and Elections Committee yesterday. Provisions of the House bill can now only be incorporated in the form of amendments to a bill to redistrict Senate seats which has already passed the upper branch and is pending before the House Privileges and Election Committee, Changes Predicted. A member of the committee, who asked anonymity, said the Senateamended bill, with a few changes affecting Senate districts and about 'six or seven" changes from the legislative commission's report affecting House districts, probably will be reported Monday or Tuesday. Assurance was given that Arlington would retain its own Senator, as provided in the Senate bill, and would be listed to receive a second delegate as proposed by the commission. Recommital of the House bill Friday barely saved it.

At that time the measure carried amendments by Delegate Emmett H. Poindexter of Louisa County which made even more disproportionate the House representation based on population of urban and rural areas. Last night and again this morning the Privileges and Elections Committee continued to work with the bill

On the Senate side, Senator Hundson Cary of Henrico County introduced a bill which not only would affect Arlington County, but focused attention on the significance to that community of a State Supreme Court of Appeals decision handed down Monday.

Senate Passes Cary's Bill. He described his bill as emergency legislation designed to correct an unconstitutional provision of the present law and the Senate passed his bill unanimously

The Supreme Court held unconstitutional an act vesting in the governing bodies of counties adjacent to cities of 125,000 pe or more powers to enact ordinances similar to powers granted the councils of cities and towns of the State. providing such ordinances were submitted to the judge of the Cirnecessity.

The purpose of the existing law was to provide governing bodies of counties adjacent to large cities the power to pass ordinances to meet the requirements of an urban community as is granted to Virginia cities and towns. The court ruled, however, that this procedure delegated unconstitutional power to the judiciary. Ruling Affects Arlington. Arlington County is among the jurisdictions affected by the ruling. The implications of the court decision may affect the validity of the recently enacted bicycle ordinance in Arlington, observers declare. Senator Cary's bill seeks to amend the present law so as to strike out the requirement that local ordinances be submitted to the circuit judge for approval. The sponsor believes the amended law will meet constitutional objections raised by the court. The court's ruling was issued in the action of W. J. Gandy against the Board of Supervisors of Elizabeth City County. Commonwealth's Attorney M. A. Cogbill of Chesterfield County, another of the jurisdictions affected, said he believed all ordinances enacted by county governing bodies in accordance with the provisions ing salaries or wages of less than of the unconstitutional act, would $2,400 a year, provided they are in be placed in jeopardy and open to the employ of the State on the contest in the courts. It would be "bonus" days, January 1 and July 1. necessary for the governing bodies The bonus will be 10 per cent on to again pass all such ordinances the first $1,000 of annual salary and after the Cary bill is enacted in 5 per cent on the second $1,000 of order to insure their validity, he annual salary, but with the provi- believes. He pointed out, however, sion that total compensation of the that no renewed action would be necessary on other county ordinances which have been passed as authorized by other sections of the general law. House Approves 65 Bills.

Meanwhile, the House meeting two hours early, passed 65 of its ate bill, similar to a House bill, to Delegate Charles R. Fenwick of own bills including legislation by Arlington County to incorporate that county as a city. Delegate Robert J. McCandlish jr., of Fairfax County moved to suspend the rules and the House passed his bill providing for a uniform brief executive session, reported Church with the rest of the Falls Other bills passed included: A bill by Delegates William L. Gibson of Fredericksburg. Maurice D. Quesenbery of Waynesboro and lations on small loan companies. A bill by Burnette Miller, ir., of Culpeper, Mr. Rosenberg, and others, bill to require railroads to furnish establishing a personnel and advancement on merit system, for State employes A bill by Mr. McCandlish, Edgar R. Conner of Prince William County, amended by Mr. Fenwick, providing for police appointment for indefinite terms in the home counties of

Quit Making Alcohol From Sugar, Use Corn, O'Mahoney Urges

Senator Suggests Plan To Offset Loss of Philippine Imports

By J. A. O'LEARY. The Government could go a long way toward assuring an adequate sugar supply by having the liquor industry manufacture from surplus corn the industrial war alcohol now made from sugar and molasses, Senator O'Mahoney, Democrat, of Wyoming declared last night.

The Senator indicated this is one of a number of suggestions likely to be studied at a conference which Chairman George of the Senate Finance Committee will call in a few days with Government officials .o see what steps can be taken to prevent the sugar situation from becoming acute. The primary reason, Senator O'Mahoney said, that prompted him to ask Chairman George to call the conference was his belief there is need to co-ordinate the planning of new war agencies having to do with sugar and to integrate that planning with the work of the permanent departments that handle the sugar problem in normal times-Agriculture, Interior and State.

Corn Supply "Huge." "There is another phase of the problem, namely, the apparent failure of the Government to utilize our surplus corn supplies for the production of needed war alcohol. Senator O'Mahoney said. We have a huge supply of corn. We have a huge supply of liquor. We are deficient in sugar and in alcohol, but, instead of using corn to make alcohol, we insist upon using sugar and mo-

"I am told that the supply of alcohol needed for the war in 1942 amounts to between 275,000,000 and 300,000,000 gallons. Of this amount 50,000,000 can be obtained as a byproduct of the petroleum industry. That leaves approximately 250,000,000 gallons of alcohol to be obtained

"We insist upon using sugar and molasses, although I am told that mining what is par in the matter the liquor industry, which has a five-year supply of liquor on hand, has distilling capacity enough to make 100,000,000 gallons of 190 proof alcohol and that there is additional capacity sufficient to manufacture 150,000,000 gallons of 'high wines,' or alcohol of 120 to 150 proof.

Benefits Not on Agenda.

Moreover, it is not a burden let him in because he forgets his on the consumer because the price keys of sugar to the consumer is controlled in two ways, first, in ordinary times, by the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to increase the supply if the price should get out of line and, second, in time of war, by the power already exercised

New Agencies Pre-emptive.

In suggesting the forthcoming conferences to Senator George, Senator O'Mahoney said the Agriculture, State and Interior Departments in the past have been rea-sonably well co-ordinated in dealing with sugar, but added:

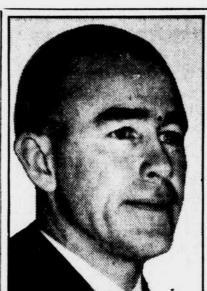

"They have, however, been pushed into the background by new agencies performing new functions, some of which may be listed as follows: "1. The Office of Price Adminis-

Numbering of Latest Draft Registrants Begins Tomorrow

Third Lottery March 17 To Determine Sequence In Sending Questionnaires

Taking the second step toward the eventual selection of youths and older men for Army service, District local boards tomorrow will start the pre-lottery shuffling and serial numbering of the mass of cards filled out at last month's selective service registration.

The sequence in which capsules containing numbers to match these serial numbers are drawn during the third national lottery March 17 will determine the order in which the new registrants will be sent their questionnaires and classified for

Serial numbers assigned to new registrants by the local boards will be preceded by the letter "T" to designate the third registration. To prevent any confusion between old and new serial numbers, which could be caused, for instance, by dropping off the letter "T," it was decided to start the numbering at 10.001. Some 9.000 numbers were drawn in the first lottery, 800 in the second, based on the largest number of registrants in any local board.

Hoping to avert serious crowding of local board offices on the day the serial numbers are posted, selective service officials pointed out thatthe order number was what the registrant really wants to know and suggested that even order numbers should cause no immediate concern since the new registrants will not be called up for several

The posting of serial numbers was much simpler after the first registration in October, 1940, because the boards then occupied school buildings and could post the lists around gymnasium walls instead of in small board offices such as they now occupy

In other ways, however, despite the fact that the day-to-day job of keeping ahead of selective service quotas keeps them busy, the local boards this week will not be faced by many of the obstacles that preceded the first national lottery of the emergency.

Revelation of Its Terms Puts Puzzle Together In Today's Pattern

By GIDEON A. LYON. In the spring of 1929 the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace organized and financed a visit of "representive American journalists" to Japan, Manchuria and China, to study the economic, political and social conditions in those countries. The Star was included in the invitation and it was my good fortune and privilege to be designated its representative.

were the Atlanta Constitution, the Chicago Daily News, the Houston Post-Dispatch, the Los Angeles Times, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Scripps-Howard newspapers and the Springfield Republican. Accompanying the party was George A. Finch, then assistant secretary and now secretary of the Carnegie Endowment.

The invitation stated that the guests of the endowment were under no obligations whatever, expressed or implied, it being the sole object of the endowment that they should use their time in the Orient to the best advantage, to the end that when thereafter they discussed Asiatic questions they would be able "to make use of the results of their own independent observations and reflections."

Observations Published.

These 63 letters to The Star were all written "on the road." They embraced a wide variety of topics, ranging from the physical aspects of the lands traversed to racial, social and political conditions. There was no time before departure and while traveling through the countries visited for a thorough study of the historical background. without which a full understanding of the then prevalent political, social and international conditions was well nigh impossible. Political propaganda was not lacking, however. Our guides and travel escorts, both Japanese and Chinese, grasped every opportunity to engage in "educational" dissertation, to establish the righteousness or the injusty of Jathat it is doubtful whether, in the direct but conflicting instruction on the part of the Japanese. Korean, couriers who accompanied us in relays. One consequence of this political babel was that I, at least, forbore in the matter of judgment re-"status quo" in the areas of dis- cent conflict between Russia and

Marshal's Death a Puzzle.

Just a short time before our visit, Chang Tso-lin, marshal of Manchuria, was killed by an explosion as he was entering Mukden, in virtual flight from Southern China. The Chinese charged that the Japanese had plotted his death. The Japanese intimated that "young Gen." Chang Hsieu-liang, marshal of Manchuria, son of the late marshal, was guilty of the plot against his father. In a letter from Mukden I wrote, regarding this matter:

"There is in evidence at Tokio a disposition on the part of some of the politicians for the sake of emeverybody recognizes the murder of to discuss the questions, a position which has the effect of arousing suspicion rather than allaying it." ### Answered Many Questions.

The Tanaka Memorial served as complete and logical answer to many questions that remained in my mind after the sojourn in the Orient. I did not however, secure document until long later-indeed not until a short time ago, soon after the Honolulu "incident." to use the English equivalent for the now-familiar Japanese word for a military attack. The pattern of the program outlined in the Tanaka Memorial fits in all but immaterial details the outline of a project of Asiatic and eventual world domination set forth by events subsequent to July 25. 1927, the date of its deliverance. Had the disclosure and publication of the Memorial occurred in 1941 instead of in 1931 it might have been suspected of being a fiction, or at least a highly imaginative

Drastic stories of Axis retaliation against the people in occupied Yugoslavia for the Cheinik fight have reached the Yugoslav Legation here from Premier Slobodan Javanovich of the Yugoslavian gov-ernment in London who recently That reserve, which was intended notified the Washington Legation:

"From this ruin, from this devastation, from these endless lines of graves in our fatherland, from these mass slaughters and from the blood of innocent children, a happy, strong, free and content fatherland of ours will rise."

The terroristic campaign in Yugoslav territory under Axis control is carried on with the assistance of the followers of Ante Pavelich, whom Premier Javanovich terms the Yugoslav Quisling, according to the reports of cruelty reaching

Axis Troops Quarreled.

What authority Pavelich has is exerted in Croatia, a seething province whose restlessness under Axis control has caused Germany many administrative problems.

For several months German and Italian troops were the police agents to be ignored. The Axis diplomats armaments for years is too great of occupation in Croatia, but they will be moved to less luxurious quarreled so often among themthough still comfortable quarters serves that Bulgurian and Hungarian soldiers were substituted for Rome hopes to turn Croatia into an Italian puppet state and to establish the Duke of Spoleto on a puppet throne as King Aimone. Fearful of losing his life, the duke, uncrowned, has been staying on an island in the Adriatic Sea off the Croatian coast hoping against the time when some order might be enforced in his kingdom, whose population resents foreign governors.

It is almost a year since the government of Yugoslavia decided to stand firm against the Berlin insistance on co-operation with Axis aims. Although most of the country was quickly conquered by the Axis invaders, the Chetniks and the unorganized dissidents keep the country in a state of upheaval unlike any other occupied country, according to reports to Washington.

Women in Federal Service Have Average Age of 37

With a median age of approximately 37, women workers in the Federal service in 1938 were an appreciably older group than gainfully employed women throughout the country as a whole, a Labor Department bulletin revealed yesterday. The average woman employed by the Federal Government was a clerical worker, probably a stenographer, or typist, with a salary of $29 a week, or $1,500 a year.

The bulletin, issued by the Woman's Bureau, reviews the trend of employment of women in the Federal Government from 1923 to 1939. The research was conducted by Rachel Fesler Nyswander and Janet M. Hooks, under the general direction of Mary Elizabeth Pidgeon, chief of the bureau's research divi-

As a result of the Government's expanding social program, the number of women employed as statisticians, accountants, social welfare workers, job placement specialists, laboratory technicians, research economists, legal advisers and laborlaw inspectors has increased in recent years, the report disclosed.

From 1936 to 1939, women comprised nearly one-fifth of the total number of Federal employes. Next to stenographers, nurses made up the largest group of women on Uncle Sam's payroll. The bulletin does not deal with the employment changes and increases caused by the war. In June, 1941, the Civil Service Commission estimated that 267,000 women were employed by the Federal Government, as compared with 173,000 in June, 1939.

With 30,000 women on its rolls, the Post Office Department employed more women in 1939 than any other Federal agency, the report pointed out. Next in order were the Treasury, Agriculture, War and Interior Departments. All of these agencies employed more than 10,000 women.

Collector to Prolong Office Hours to Aid Income Tax Payers

Biggest Staff in History Employed This Year; Week Sets Record

To help the public with its biggest income tax in history the local office of the deputy collector of Internal Revenue will remain open daily this week from 8:30 to 6 p.m. beginning tomorrow. This is an hour longer than originally had been planned.

Announcement of the new hours was made by A. P. Rasin, local deputy collector, at the end of a hectic day yesterday, when he chalked up a Saturday total which showed more than twice as many taxpayers had filed returns through his office than on the comparable Saturday last year.

From 8:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. yesterday a total of 5,045 people went through the office to get help in preparing returns and to pay at least one-fourth of their tax. This compared with only 2,257 on the comparable Saturday in March,

Union Funds Made Available For Civilian Defense Needs

C. L. U. Head Plans Conference on Use of Gift

Part of the $130,000 donated for civilian defense by affiliated units of the Central Labor Union may be used to purchase ladders, flashlights and other equipment needed by community defense units, John Locher, president of the C. L. U., said yesterday.

Mr. Locher said he planned to confer with Chief Air Raid Warden Clement Murphy tomorrow night to discuss what equipment is most urgently needed by air-raid warden staffs and other defense units.

Mr. Locher emphasized that the decision on how the money is to be spent will be in the hands of civilian defense authorities, and that the donations, which now total more than $130,000, although the original goal was only $70,000, will be turned over to the Commissioners without any strings attached.

In fact, some of the designs dated back to the earliest days of the bicycle. Carriages, too, rolled on wheels whose spokes were got locomotion, if not comfort, out seated in springs arranged about the hubs.

Among the recent patents were wheels of wooden cleats cushioned on springs, and spring wheels covered with fiber, fabrics and plastics.

"The wartime automobile may be slow, rough riding and noisy," said a spokesman for the Inventors' Council, "but it will get there, with or without rubber tires!'

One of 8 Fraud Counts Against McKay Quashed

000 shakedown of distillers in liquor sales to the State monopoly

Retrial of McKay and co-defendants on the remaining seven counts will proceed Monday, the court announced. The remaining defendant, Charles Williams of Windsor, Ontario, was granted a separate re-trial because of illness.

The quashed count involved a $30,000 stock purchase in the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Brewing Co. by Isadore Schwartz and Charles Leiter, former Detroit liquor salesmen and co-defendants. This stock later was pledged to McKay-Dembinsky, Inc., Grand Rapids, for a $7,500 loan. Mc-Kay held a principal interest in both companies, and Government attorneys charged the transaction was a front for graft payments to McKay for State liquor business.

The defense argued subjects considered in the indictment-one of three involving McKay to be returned by the grand jury—were not considered during the term for which the grand jury was originally constituted and for that reason were beyond the jurisdiction of its inquiry. The court quashed the one count on those grounds but ruled the remaining seven were

Paper Salvage Collection Passes Million-Pound Mark

Schools Contribute Equivalent of 720 Trees in Program

Pushing way beyond the millionpound mark, Washington school children during the past week increased to 1,013,265 pounds the paper collected in The Evening Star-P.-T. A. Salvage for Victory

The tremendous increase in collections has put a serious strain on the facilities of the dealer handling the paper. The difficulties encountered in obtaining additional trucks have caused great inconvenience but during the past week arrangements were made not only for another truck, but for emergency assistance if the trucks engaged in the collection fall behind in their schedules.

Evidence of the rapid expansion of collections is-shown in the figures. During December 89.837 pounds were collected. In January the collections grew to 299,427 and in February to 468,745. The first week of March brought in 155,256, an increase of 50,000 pounds over the first week of February. Equivalent of 720 Trees.

It is estimated that the average yield of paper from a tree is around 1,400 pounds so that in effect, Washington's school children have

Russians Pressing For Second Front in Northern Europe

Hitler Can Be Beaten By Autumn in Bold Drive, Reds Argue

holstered in cotton tapestry.

The Soviet argument, heard now wherever Russians, British and Americans meet, is that Hitler can be beaten by Autumn provided there is bold use of his own divide and conquer strategy against him, and that once he is disposed of, Japan will be considerably less formidable to the United Nations. Then, it is argued, United States and British naval forces would be free from Atlantic tasks for concerted action in the Pacific.

The Russians are encouraged to believe that establishment of a second front is not far off by the arrival of increasing United States forces in the United Kingdom. They talk freely of Northern Norway, where the coastline is difficult to guard and the country ideal for the infiltration tactics practiced by Japan in the Pacific campaign.

Common Front Urged.

An Anglo-American drive across the top of Norway, which is almost contiguous with Soviet territory could result in establishment of a common United States - British-Soviet frontier and protect the Northern supply route via Murmansk and Archangel, it is contended. It also would free some Russians troops now in the Far North for stronger offensive action on the central and southern fronts.

The Russians want such a front combined with increased British and American bombing attacks on Germany to hamper the Reich's war industry and snarl German rail lines so that Hitler will find it difficult to move armies east to protect weak points.

On the eastern front itself, tonight's Moscow communique told of continued advances and liberation of numerous additional places by Red Army forces during the day after fierce fighting in which the Germans sustained heavy losses. The communique listed 35 Nazi planes downed yesterday against seven Soviet losses and reported destruction of three German raiders today near Moscow. But despite the continued successes of the Red Army winter campaign, the Russians contend they should not carry on alone indefi-

Times Expresses Concern.

There are many people in Britain who feel the same way as the Russians. Sir Stafford Cripps has been urging greater co-ordination with the Soviet war effort. The important Times today expressed concern over Russian anxiety about inadequate supplies from the west and Allied post-war intentions and urged closer tri-power political collabora-It said Russia "asks for more than material supplies: * * * Rusclaims the right, which London and Washington equally claim on th'r own behalf, of judging for herself . conditions necessary to her own security.'

Some important American opinion in London likewise parallels that of the Russians at least to the extent that it is upon aid to Russia and defeat of Hitler that the Allies should first concentrate, while they are mustering their strength at sea for countermoves in the Pacific.

No Bases Now Available. They point out that the Allies now have neither the seapower nor the airplane bases to strike at the heart of Japan, and they say Russia cannot be expected to give them bases under the present circumstances because that would lay Russia open to an immediate stab in the back from Japan at a time when the Red Army is heavily engaged in the west.

But they believe that if the United States and Britain help rid Russia of her pre-occupations in Europe, Russia will not have to worry about what happens in Asia and will grant the United Nations the free use of Vladivostok

The way this view coincides with that of the Russians is taken by some observers to indicate there may be some bargaining between Russia on one hand and Britain and the United States on the other on the basis of a Russian promise of Far Eastern bases in return for stepped-up supplies and the opening of a second front in the west.

Reds Prepare to Meet Nazi Drive on Rostov

BERN, Switzerland, March (A).-The Russians were reported assembling many newly organized army corps tonight in a strategic triangle between Rostov, Stalingrad and Astrakhan in anticipation of the main German spring drive against the Rostov oil fields and the vital Caucasus.

The Soviet reports, printed in the Swiss newspaper Delemont Democrate, said violent fighting now is in progress in the thawing southern sector of the vast white wilderness of Russia. Astrakhan is at the mouth of the Volga River on the Caspian Sea.

Repeated Russian drives as deep as 250 miles behind the German lines also were said to have seriously disrupted Hitler's offensive plans. But both German and Russian armies were established in the rear of each other in many localities. While the Germans generally held to isolated ruins of towns and converted fortresses, the Russians were using "flying" armored cars—mounted on skis and powered by airplane motors. Reports reaching here said the Reds had effectively German communication lines and destroyed ammunition dumps in many sectors behind the front. The effectiveness of the new Rusgian tactics were admitted in a Berlin report to Neue Zeurcher Zeitung which said "even bringing up supplies and moving troops to the front is now considered a battle in itself." The report added that the increase of mechanized battles had disrupted the German front at several places and that there no longer was a continuous line.

Realism of Russian War Policy Regarded as a Pattern for U.S.

America, Always Idealistic, Finds Itself Engaged in Quest for Power Without Admitting It or Preparing for It.

By Felix Morley.

acter of its own. With the passage of time, original purposes are modified and altered, objectives change and new policies appear. From day to day the changes may be imperceptible, but over a period the course of evolution is un-Prior to our own era the campaigns of Napoleon provided the most striking illustration of the dynamic qualities in war. As that general's armies penetrated to every corner of the European Continent, the original aims of the French Revolution were largely forgotten and new ambitions took their place. Boundaries were obliterated, governments overthrown, alliances shifted. Yet through the whole tangled picture a certain logical pattern was maintained. Attempting to analyze this upheaval, in the closing chapter of "War and Peace." Tolstoy summarizes as follows: "In 1789 there was a ferment in Paris. It grew and spread and found expression in the movement of peoples from west to east. . . . In the year 1812 it reaches its furthest limit, Moscow, and then, with a remarkable symmetry, the countermovement follows from east to west. . .

Paris-and subsides." "What," asks Tolstoy, "does all this mean? What did all this proceed from? What were the causes of these events? What is the force that moves nations?" These "most legitimate questions," he points out, must be answered before there can be any reasonable hope of renouncing war as an instrument of starting point of the first movement-

Power the Motive Force.

Writing in 1866, Tolstoy concluded his searching analysis by maintaining that men seek power, which is usually attainable for the individual only when associated in effective political units under a leadership expressing the mass will. To conceal this underlying aspiration in war, says Tolstoy, publicists inwent as aims "the most obscure, intangible and general abstractions." Among these the most usual are: "Freedom, equality, enlightenment, progress, civilization, culture."

But the real motive force in war, in the opinion of this great Russian philosopher, is the quest for power. And that explains why national aims and objectives and groupings may altar so completely in the course of prolonged hostilities.

If the present war is regarded as a continuation of the other world conflict, political changes more remarkable than any which took place during the generation subsequent to the French Revolution have already occurred.

France and Italy have shifted from bitter opponents of German expansion to a position which is in the one case passive and in the other active acquiescence. Japan has moved from a tacit co-operation with Anglo-American imperialism to an aggressive championship of "Asia for the Asiatics." The United States more clearly recognizes and asserts its interest in world movements. The British Empire has weakened and Russia, under Communism, has greatly increased its national strength.

Denunciations Futile.

For those to whom history means more than a succession of names and dates, these tremendous developments are of the most profound significance. Whether they are emotionally pleasing or disturbing to us as individuals is immaterial. If we desire our Nation to exercise its strength in constructive fashion, we must as a preliminary at least dimly understand the meaning of the trend which is in operation.

Merely to denounce changes brought by that trend is comparable to reviling a disease which attacks one who is dear to us. Already there has been too much idle denunciation over, and too little attempt at understanding, the biological alterations in our stricken international society. There are many Americans today who would rather not be reminded of what they were saying just two years ago regarding the heroic democracy of Finland and the ruthless aggression of tyrannical Russia. But it is well to recall such short-

Like every other co-operative under- 1 sighted outbursts as the fairly recent taking, war possesses a dynamic char- play in which heroic American volunteers were depicted as aiding Finland to resist a Russian attack allegedly directed by the German general staff. Such memories should help us to avoid current emotional orgies which may seem just as meaningless two years

> As Tolstoy pointed out, the most unchanging factor in the political kaleidoscope of modern history is the consistency with which Russia has solidified the huge area and unified the various races within its orbit.

> Czarism gives way to Communism and the attack of a French Emperor is succeeded after more than a century by that of a German dictator. But across the chapters of history Russia reacts in much the same way. Seldom blatantly aggressive, this great nation nevertheless remains profoundly influential in world

And Russian policy, perhaps because of the national leaning toward introspection, is always coldly realistic. Prior to the Napoleonic invasion Czar Alexander I maintained an alliance with France, wholly indifferent to the sharp remarks passed in England about his assistance to the "Corsican ogre." Prior to Hitler's invasion Stalin was in alliance with Nazi Germany, always expecting the worst, but gaining time and territory for strategic purposes.

Russia an Ally by Convenience.

Today Russia is still on good terms with Japan, and will doubtless continue so unless it appears to the unmistakable advantage of Moscow to be otherwise.

To speak of Russia as one of the "United Nations" is therefore to substitute rhetoric for reality. As was made clear by Stalin in his Red Army day address. Russia regards herself as a free agent, allied with Great Britain and the United States for purposes of convenience. To relieve German military pressure, as Ambassador Litvinoff suggested in his speech in New York on February 26, Russia would welcome an Anglo-American offensive in Western Europe. But in return for such action Russia promises nothing.

As the United States girds itself for war on an unprecedented scale, it will be well if we acquire something of the cool realism, and something of the historica! approach to present problems, which characterizes Russian leadership. Only thus can we be sure of avoiding bitter disillusionment as the war evolves its dynamic course.

Americans are an idealistic people, and there is no question that idealism, sharply focused against the practices of aggressor nations, is one of the factors which made us a belligerent. But idealism, expressed in such abstractions as the "four freedoms," is not the only act-

U. S. in Quest for Power.

This Nation, like others, is also engaged in the quest for power regarded by Tolstoy as the real motive force behind all modern war. Indeed, we admit as much when we refer to the future in such terms as "The American Century." In war, as in all other human undertakings, confusion arises when motives are not clarified and when objectives are, in consequence, ill-defined. That confusion led to disaster after the last war and this time it may be even more fatal, for the simple reason that the sacrifices demanded from the public are going to be incomparably greater.

It would, therefore, seem appropriate that our leaders should stop talking generalities, should state flatly how far we desire at the moment to extend our national power and should admit frankly that in working for this goal old policies -such as the antipathy to "entangling alliances"-may have to be sharply modified. If we are going to win the war, we shall have to define what we mean by winning it, then hew to the line in that

Germany, Russia and Japan have all waged war successfully because the objectives of their leaders have been made clear to their people, who desire the power promised them. Great Britain and the United States are waging war unsuccessfully, not because of inferior strength but because of a stultifying lack of precision in their stated purpose

The Hour of Decision.

He Burned His Political Bridges

Col. Knox Believes War Calls for Nonpartisan Service

By Gould Lincoln.

"How does it feel to be a Repub-lican in a Democratic cabinet?" With a grin on his ruddy countenance and a gleam in his eyes. Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox replied: "There's no politics in this job-never has been and never will be."

Nevertheless it is an open secret in Washington that Col. Knox has been pilloried by some Republicans and Democrats.

The Democrats would like to have his office-one of the most important in national defense and war. Some of them have hungered for it ever since he was appointed by President Roosevelt a year and a half ago. The Republicans-particularly those who did not go along with the President's foreign policy-have dubbed him "traitor."

Ever since Japan's attack-without warning-on the Pacific fleet in Pearl Harbor, Col. Knox has been taking it on the chin. His chin is still up.

Further, the Secretary of the Navy is anything but a pessimist so far as the American Navy is concerned. He may tell you, if you ask him, that it was a great humiliation to be outguessed by the Japanese. He feels deeply about it. His great ambition is that the Navy will soon wipe out the Pearl Harbor defeat. He is confident this will happen. With the President, Col. Knox is driving fast for the American fleet to take the initiative.

Resents Baseless Rumors.

Like the President, too, Col. Knox resents the widespread charges-of the rumor variety-that the country has not been told the "truth about Pearl Har-

The jibe-"there isn't any Pacific Fleet"-which has gone the rounds of the Capital, is given the lie direct by the fact that successful attacks on the Marshall and other Japanese held islands have been made.

No one will ever have to tell Col. Knox, however, to "remember Pearl Harbor." The heart-rending thing about the Pearl Harbor affair to Col. Knox, aside from the loss of life and blow to the country's naval strength, was the fact that there was sufficient force, well equipped, to have blasted the Japanese attack, had this force only been used. This goes for both air and naval forces.

The Secretary of the Navy is particularly proud of the fact that at no time has there been a charge anywhere that the program for the expansion of the United States fleet-now looking to a two-ocean Navy-has fallen behind. On the contrary, the ships are coming off the ways and into commission months and months ahead of the program schedule.

By the end of this year there will be launched. Two of these ships have al- President there seemed at that time no across the continent and more than 2,000 on the way. Cruisers, destroyers, sub- war was far away from this country.

marines and other auxiliary craft are coming fast in this building program, too. Col. Knox is no "traitor" to the Republican party-but he just is not playing politics, or having any part in them at this time-despite the fact he owns and controls the Chicago Daily News. He took his present office in July, 1940, after the fall of France. He went into it with the full understanding that there was to be no politics in connection with his duties-just as did his Republican colleague, Secretary of War Stimson.

Never once during his more than year and a half in the cabinet has Col. Knox been asked to do a political job by his chief, President Roosevelt. He has never been asked to make a political speech or a speech with political implications. He has never been asked to make a partisan political appointment in his department.

Furthermore, political questions have never arisen in the meetings of the President with his cabinet while Secretary Knox and Secretary Stimson were present. Nor have his Democratic colleagues ever twitted Col. Knox for being a Republican-notwithstanding the fact that he has come to be on the most friendly terms with them

Politiics Is "Out." In others words, politics, so far as the Secretary of the Navy is concerned, is "out." And yet his appointment and that of Secretary Stimson cannot escape entirely a political implication. It is that partisan politics, so far as national defense and the conduct of the war are concerned, has been laid aside.

This is, of course, the only tenable position that the two Republicans serving in Mr. Roosevelt's official family can occupy. Col. Knox is entirely frank in saying that he has burned all political bridges behind him, that he has no political aspirations and no axes to grind. And the same may be said of Secretary

After all, it is rather an amazing thing that the two major offices having to do with the running of the war under the President should be in the hands of men who have been prominent in the party opposed to Mr. Roosevelt. Col. Knox was the Republican candidate for Vice President in 1936. Secretary Stimson served as Secretary of War in the cabinet of the late President William Howard Taft and as Secretary of State in the cabinet of former President Hoover. They were selected by the President because they saw eye to eye with him in the matter of national defense and the need of preparing the country for warand because they agreed with his for-

Chief Executive, he would reconsider. With the fall of France, the picture changed overnight. Col. Knox became convinced that it was only a question of time when this country would be forced into the war by the totalitarian powers. So when an emissary of the President came to him, he sent word that he would serve in any capacity the President

The two Republican members of the President's Cabinet have more in common than their one-time political complexion. They were both closely associated with the first Roosevelt President -Col. "Teddy"-Col. Knox was in the Rough Riders, Col. Roosevelt's regiment in the Spanish-American War. Secretary Stimson was appointed United States attorney for the southern district of New York by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1906. Both Knox and Stimson saw service in the A. E. F. in France during the first World War, Stimson becoming colonel of the 31st Field Artillery and Knox as a major in the 303d Ammunition Train of the 78th

The heads of the two departments work closely together, in the firm belief that only through the closest collaboration-and unity of command where the two services operate together-can the best results be obtained in the war. After Pearl Harbor, both secretaries issued orders there was to be no criticism, no backbiting on the part of any Army or Navy man or officer in an effort to throw blame on the other service for that disastrous defeat.

The service of members of the opposite political party in a President's cabinet during an emergency did not begin with Secretaries Knox and Stimson. President Roosevelt, when he first approached Secretary Knox, pointed out to him that the Secretary of the Navy in the cabinet of Abraham Lincoln, Gideon Welles, had been a Democratic newspaper editor in New England. Col. Knox was once a Republican editor in New England. However, Mr. Welles did become a member of the Republican party prior to the election of Mr. Lincoln.

Col. Knox's interpretation of the selection of two Republicans to head the War and Navy Departments is that the President determined there should be no politics in the national defense-and that is Col. Knox's firm conviction today.

President Accepts Advice. President Roosevelt, it has been charged in some quarters, undertakes to conduct the military operations of the American forces from the White House, overriding on occasion his military and naval advisers. Nothing, according to Secretary Knox, is farther from the truth. The President has been a student of naval affairs and strategy for years-he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the Wilson World War administration. He relies upon the advice of his naval advisers. It was Col. Knox who thought up the plan of flying to Hawaii immediately after Pearl Harbor. He wanted to know the truth at first hand. The idea came to him as he was riding back from the Capitol after listening to President Roosevelt's war speech to Congress.

He turned to Mrs. Knox and said: "I'm going out there myself to see the situation."

Mrs. Knox agreed he should go. And so this 68-year-old Secretary of the Navy—who looks 15 years younger-

War Climaxes Rags-to-Riches Decade for American Farmers

Agriculture Leaders Fear Return to Low Prices and Depression Unless Crop Controls Are Used Properly Now

By Ovid A. Martin,

American agriculture is drawing near the end of an eventful decade that opened with rags and closes with riches. Ten years ago agriculture was on the brink of insolvency. Today it looks forward to its most prosperous year since the boom years of World War I. Last year was its best in two decades.

But rosy as immediate prospects may be, some farm leaders analyze a current fight over agricultural prices and express fear that the next decade may reduce farmers to tatters again.

These leaders, among whom Vice President Wallace and Secretary of Agriculture Wickard are representative, are afraid that agriculture will take advantage of the present war demand for food and use governmental powers which others helped it get to boost prices to levels which would put farmers in bad with city consumers.

The payoff in the form of rags might come, these leaders warn, in the postwar years of readjusting agricultural production to a smaller market. Could city consumers, holding a balance of power, be blamed, it is asked, if they should refuse to support Government crop control, price-supporting loans and cash subsidy programs designed to make the farm readjustment as painless as

Today, as in 1932, agriculture is in conflict with the city

Blamed Industrial East.

Ten years ago the farm lands were seething with a spirit of revolt against what many farm leaders called the "industrial East." From the early days of the Republic farmers had laid blame for their recurring economic troubles at the doors of capital and industry.

Farm products were selling at prices which did not give producers sufficient income to pay their bills and meet payments on their debts. Thousands of farmers, through no fault of their own. were swept into bankruptcy. Forced from the land, many moved to the city in a vain search for work. Many eventually joined long, weary breadlines started long before by urban unemployed.

Little help came from Government, however, as presidential vetoes struck down measures passed by Congress. Finally the Hoover administration set up a farm board with authority to buy agricultural surpluses. It was hoped that such purchases would result in improved prices.

But the farm board activities did not bring about sufficient improvement to satisfy agriculture. With anger born of frustration, radical farm leaders, typified by Milo Reno of the Midwestern Farmers' Holiday Movement, promoted food production strikes in an effort to force urban recognition of agriculture's plight.

The climax came in the bitterly fought presidential campaign of 1932. That campaign swept Republican Herbert Hoover out of office and put Democratic Franklin D. Roosevelt in the White House. Mr. Roosevelt, who had promised agricultural relief, got a landslide vote in traditionally Republican farm belt

Wallace Appointed.

One of Mr. Roosevelt's first acts was to call a young Iowa farm magazine Agriculture and put him to work on the farm problem.

ference of agricultural leaders. Out of it | creases far in excess of agriculture's grew what became known as the A. A. A. (Agricultural Adjustment Act). Under this act the Government took emergency steps to reduce the price-depressing surpluses. It paid farmers cash benefits to plow up part of a cotton crop and to kill part of their pigs and sows. It also paid benefits to farmers for taking wheat and corn land out of production. Funds to pay these benefits were secured from taxes imposed on processors of farm products.

These emergency programs, coupled with droughts in 1934 and 1935, quickly reduced most of the surpluses. Prices improved and farm income increased.

But in 1936 along came a historic Supreme Court decision killing the A. A. A. on the ground that it granted the Federal Government unconstitutional authority to control farm production.

Aroused but undismayed, agriculture and its leaders set 'o work on new measures. With the help of Congressmen from urban areas they put through the Soil Conservation Act of 1936 and the second A. A. A. Act of 1938.

These farm acts set up agricultural price goals. The goal prices were called parity prices. They were defined as prices which would give farm products as much buying power as they possessed in a base period when agriculture and industry were in economic balance.

The parity prices were generally accepted as fair to both producers and War Changed Whole Picture. The war changed the whole agricultural picture. Suddenly an unprecedented demand for food arose. In addition to a growing demand at home, this auntry was called upon to provide huge quantities for its allies abroad as well as reserves for feeding hungry post-war Europe until it could get on its feet.

To meet this demand the A. A. A. shifted its farm adjustment machinery from low to high gear, with special emphasis on producing larger quantities of live stock, poultry and dairy products and vegetable oil crops for which there was need. Coupled with the war food program was a policy designed to stabilize farm prices around the parity level.

This policy made an exception of corn and wheat for live stock feed. They were to be stabilized at 85 per cent of parity for the purpose of providing reasonable priced feed for live stock, dairy and poultry farmers. Corn and wheat farmers were to receive benefit payments of sufficient amount to give them full parity for their grain crops.

The Government was in a position to hold grain prices at the 85 per cent parity level because of its control of surpluses which had been accumulated in prior years under the A. A. A. loan programs. All it had to do was to sell at the 85 per cent price. The markets naturally kept in line.

Congressmen from farm belt States oppose the corn and wheat price policy. They contend it denies farmers the prices promised them under the A. A. acts. They are trying to upset the policy by pressing legislation which would hibit the sale of Government farm products at less than parity. The legislation passed the Senate by a top-heavy

Roosevelt Veto Forecast.

In communications to Congress President Roosevelt has warned that this legislation would upset the vital war food program and result in further increases in prices of meats, dairy and poultry products-already at prices in excess of parity. Secretary Wickard says the legislation would boost the consumer food bill $1,000,000,000 a year, give labor grounds for new wage demands and start a new spiral of advancing industrial prices and service rates. Administration leaders predict the President will veto the measure if it reaches him. Congressional farm bloc spokesmen declare that if he does they will pass it over his veto.

In pressing their point the farm bloc leaders argue that agriculture should be editor to his cabinet as Secretary of allowed to make up for the lean years of the past. > Farmer followers of Mr. Wallace and Mr. Wickard believe the future of the A. A. A. crop control programs may be decided by the outcome of the present fight. They concede that with the present big demand for farm products agriculture would get good prices regardless of > These farmers believe, however, that the present big markets will shrink after the war is over, as they did after World War I. Agriculture then went through one of its worst depressions in making a readjustment. There were no A. A. A.

Beginning at the Top

The American people may be counted on to respond to every appeal for sacrifice. Common sacrifice will strengthen rather than weaken their morale. The danger to their morale will stem from other sources. If their Government at Washington, for instance, does not take the lead in cutting down, as the people are | a requirement may become little betgoing to be asked to cut down, the result will be disastrous from the point of view of public morale. But in Washington today, bigness—not streamlined efficiency—is what chiefly impresses every observer. As yet there are no indications that the effort to cut down on Government expenses by reducing or transferring whittling away, here and there, with the nominal reductions in personnel more than offset by additions.

Elimination of unnecessary activities must begin at the top if the people are to respond. And things that are desirable, useful and of value to the Nation in peace cannot always qualify as necessary in time of war. A host of new agencies was added to the Government under the emergency of a war with depression. One finds on every hand now the tendency to retain them, even to expand them, under the emergency of a war with the Axis. To eliminate numbers of them would be no real sacrifice of "social gains." But failure to eliminate them will impede our effort to maintain the only social America.

Government securities on a patriotic plane. People are buying bonds because that is expected of them as good citizens. Cannot the elimination of waste in Government similarly be approached? Is it out of the question for the President to ask heads of departments, bureaus and independent establishments to take effective leadership, as an act of patriotism, in curtailment of unnecessary activities and personnel?

The excess of Government personnel in Washington today is plainly evident. It is one of the most talked about of all subjects. Those in the Government service admit it privately, but shun the subject publicly. Practically every Government agency could get along as well, if not more efficiently, with less personnel. But as yet there has been no will to cut, no stimulation of the idea that waste in Government is far worse than waste by the selfish citizen. And until this will to reduce is encouraged as a patriotic necessity there will be no effective reduction, and waste in Government will be a major scandal of the war.

Mr. Murray's Statement

The call which Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., has addressed to labor to see to it that "not an hour of production time is lost from any cause until we win the war" should remove the last doubt which any workers may entertain concerning the extent of their stake in this conflict.

Mr. Murray stated it well: "I want to stress again and again to labor and to the public that America today is at the parting of the ways. If we lie down on the job, if we shirk, if we listen to the sly preachers of disunity and complacency, if we fail to back up our armed forces with all that is in us, we can go down to defeat, dishonor and the loss of all our liberties-to the complete blackout of civilization which Hitler and the Axis are fighting to bring about." This statement from Mr. Murray comes at a time when the labor picture is notably improved. Since the start of the war there have been no extensive strikes and those which have occurred have not had the authorization of either the C. I. O. or the A. F. of L. But it also comes at a time when the military outlook could hardly be darker. The three months just passed should have opened the eyes of all Americans, in whatever class they belong. We have suffered defeat after defeat, not because our fighting men or their equipment has been inferior in quality, but because we have never had enough of either at the critical points of combat. And the end of these defeats is not yet in sight. Because our military situation is so grave it is not enough merely to pointed out, our hope of victory rests that they have to them. Management must be actuated by the same spirit, and must put aside the old animosities, fears and suspicions which act as a drag on production. Neither must try to take advantage of the Nation's plight for selfish ends.

And the time for this combined all-out effort is now. In a few weeks or months it may be-it probably will be-too late.

Rule 16

A recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals has pointed the way to a modification of a Municipal Court rule which should contribute to more equitable dispensation of justice in the District.

The rule in question is the summary judgment rule, sometimes known as Rule 16, which provides that in suits arising out of contracts judgments may be awarded against a defendant for neglecting to file an affidavit of defense. Indicating its belief that the rule should be abolished in cases involving claims of from $50 to $500, where defendants often are not represented by counsel. the appellate court said: "As between litigants who are represented by counsel and who are in a true sense equal before the law * * * the provision for summary judgment in default of strict compliance with requirements for formal pleadings is a salutary one. On the contrary, such ter than a trap for the poor, the ignorant and the unwary when they do not have counsel, as is frequently the case." The requirement for affidavits of defense already has been eliminated in the Small Claims Court, where suits for sums up to $50 are tried, and in the Landlord and Tenant personnel will go beyond a gentle | branch, without in any way prejudicing the work of either tribunal. There seems to be no sound reason why relief from an oppressive rule should not be extended to the 10.000 suits filed yearly in the $50 to $500

> The judges of the Municipal Court now have under consideration a proposal by Judge Nathan Cayton to effect this change. Under his proposal a plaintiff, of course, still would be entitled to judgment when a defendant fails to appear in answer to a suit. But the defendant, upon making an appearance, would not be denied opportunity to submit his side of the dispute merely because he had neglected to comply with a technical rule of procedure.

This clearly seems to be a desirable gain that matters now-a free step toward a further simplification of the administration of justice in Secretary Morgenthau has been the Nation's Capital, and it is to be successful in putting the purchase of | hoped that the Municipal Court judges will not hesitate to put the change into effect promptly.

Trousers will henceforth be made without cuffs to conserve material Quite a bit of cloth might also be saved by reducing the size of the pocket in which money is carried.

The Mooney Case

For the great majority of the Americans of the time, the famous Mooney case began in April, 1917, when the United States Embassy in Petrograd was besieged by a crowd of Russian revolutionaries protesting against the scheduled execution of an individual described by them as "the anarchist Muni." Such a demonstration in the Soviet capital made the fate of the man to whom the mob referred a matter of international consequence. It was necessary for the State Department promptly to inform itself about him so as to be able to reply to the questions of the leaders of the new Bolshevist republic, Lenin and Trotsky and their

Briefly, according to the Dictionary of American History, the facts were these: "During a strike in 1913 Thomas J. Mooney, a minor labor leader, and his wife, together with Warren K. Billings and two others, all connected with labor organizations, had been arrested and tried on the charge of unlawful possession of explosives. Mooney was acquitted; Billings served two years in prison. On July 22, 1916, a Preparedness Day parade was in progress in San Francisco when a bomb exploded on the sidewalk, killing outright or mortally injuring ten persons and wounding forty others. Mooney and Billings were among those charged with the outrage; Mooney was sentenced to death and Billings received

But, this same source continues, "the case against Mooney was weak, and some of the evidence so questionable that Judge Griffin, who presided at his trial, finally became convinced that the trial had been unfair, and joined in the long fight to save Mooney. In 1918 President Wilson asked Governor Stephens of California to delay the execution, with the result that Stephens eventually commuted Mooney's sentence to life imprisonment. Labor and other organizations fought steadily in his behalf. Governor after Governor was petitioned for a pardon or a rehearing. On January 7, 1939, Governor Culbert L. Olson, only a few days after his inauguration, pardoned Mooney, and, on October 16 following, released Billings through a commutation of his sentence." The records of the several different proceedings in Mooney's behalf weigh tons, and the literature which has developed around him runs to call a halt to strikes. As Mr. Murray | literally hundreds of volumes. Doubts may persist as to Mooney's guilt or innocence, but the case against him certainly was open to the criticism it received from conservatives, liberals and radicals alike.

New War Contracts

The need for war materials justifles any reasonable steps necessary to speed output to the highest pitch, and for that reason there will be general agreement with the decision of Production Chief Donald M. Nelson to let all contracts hereafter by negotiation rather than competitive bidding.

Both types of contract have been employed in the past, but Mr. Nelson now has concluded that time will be saved by abandoning the practice of awarding business to the lowest qualified bidder—and it is against time that the United Nations are fighting.

That the change will be costly is not disputed, but Mr. Nelson puts a blunt truth in declaring that price is a secondary factor. At the same time, however-and this cannot be emphasized too strongly-the fact that the ordinary restrictions are removed will not excuse either carelessness or favoritism by contracting officers that results in waste of funds, or profiteering by an industry that takes advantage of the Nation's need.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Bethlehem ship case growing out of the first World War demonstrated conclusively that in the absence of a showing of fraud, the Government has no alternative but to abide by the terms of a contract, however exorbitant they may be. It is, therefore, incumbent upon contracting officers to exercise the greatest vigilance in protecting the Government's interest in negotiations. Nor would it be amiss to give consideration right now to steps that might be taken when it appears an unfair advantage is sought by an industry. It is true that the Government can seize plants in such cases, but as was brought out in the Bethlehem litigation, that is no solution. for the trained plant management is as necessary as the physical equipment to execute contracts satisfac-

The new contractual plan has another advantage in that it will serve to spread work, and give orders to small industries which, entirely competent, have not been able to meet the terms of their larger competitors and consequently have been shut out when cost determined the award. The plight of small business has been dwelt upon at length, and while there have been recurrent efforts to keep these struggling concerns going, the result can best be measured by the recent report of the Murray subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee, which showed that more than 75 per cent of Army and Navy contracts has gone to 56 of the 184,-230 manufacturing concerns in the country. The program contemplated by Mr. Nelson, if bolstered by pending legislation to assist small industry financially, should serve to avail the country of the services of valuable new production units, while at the same time helping countless establishments which otherwise would lie idle.

Pride in the Past

Time was when those Americans who now are fifty years of age were a little ashamed of the period of their childhood and their youth. It was said of that epoch that it was sluggish and slow. There were suggestions that involved the word 'mauve" and even less inoffensive designations. Critics talked of gas lights as though they were things to be apologetic about. The costume invented by Amelia Bloomer was ridiculed with a systematic virulence worthy of better employment. Ladies were teased for attempting the gentle art of china painting. Their brothers and husbands competed for the honor of possessing the noisiest

But it also was a period of great men, great women and great deeds. Merely to call the roll of the leading personalities of the era was to claim for it a considerable distinction. Queen Victoria ruled as well as reigned in Britain. Her ministers were Gladstone, Rosebery, Salisbury, Balfour; each of them a public servant of well-earned celebrity. In America it was the time of Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, William Jennings Bryan, Woodrow Wilson, John Hay, Elihu Root, Melville W. Fuller, Philander C. Knox, 'Uncle Joe" Cannon, Admiral George Dewey, General Leonard Wood, Thomas Alva Edison, the Wright brothers, Jacob Riis, Frederic Remington, Victor Herbert, Reginald De Koven, Maude Adams and Julia Marlowe. Medicine and sociology made marvelous advances. Wars were infrequent and not too costly of life or

Meanwhile, those citizens who were young ceased to be youthful. Having survived the worst of economic depressions, they presently find themselves in a cataclysmic contest between the slave communities and the still free societies of the earth. It is their pleasure as well as their duty to do their part for victory. One stipulation, however, they have the right to make. It is this: That their pride in their not altogether undeserving past be left to them. values the unforgotten years and

War Policies Decided By President Alone

By Owen L. Scott.

This country's central war cabinet is shaping up into a small group that consists of President Roosevelt and three principal aides. These men hold the real power and make the decisions that others then execute. On their ability and judgment depends the course of American action in the war.

Mr. Roosevelt, definitely, is running the war. He is making the decisions on strategy, not the generals or admirals. He is deciding the questions of world politics that bulk so large in their influence on the war's trend. His is the final say on which individuals and which groups will play a major part in the One man cannot make all of the decisions and carry all of the load. As his key assistant, the President has chosen Harry Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins is trusted implicitly by President Roosevelt. He lives at the White House and although not in good health, accomplishes a great amount of work. The power he wields in determining the direction of flow of American war materials and in deciding which individuals are to hold key jobs is immense. The two top jobs are those involving exercise of power over prices and the distribution of goods and the power over American industry. Leon Henderson, a close friend of Harry Hopkins and formerly his economic adviser in W. P. A., holds the first of these jobs. Mr. Henderson's powers now are great. These powers stem in part from the new price control law that he administers and in part from his friendship with Mr. Hopkins, who, in turn, is very close to the President. It is this friendship that had much to do with the selection of the third man in the real war cabinet.

The third member is Donald Nelson who heads the War Production Board and who holds dictatorial powers over American industry. Mr. Nelson is an old friend of Leon Henderson and owes his present position, in important part, to the recognition by Mr. Henderson of his

This, then, is the closely knit little group that really runs the war effort. It is a group that, except for Mr. Nelson, carries a very strong New Deal viewpoint. Yet, throughout, it is a group that from the first has been right in its appraisal of the course of the war and of the demands that war would make upon the United States. Every one in the group is ready to be ruthless in the exercise of power if that is what the war requires. The temporizing policies of previous leaders get no support from those who now control.

But what of the military leaders and of the regular members of the President's ordinary cabinet?

As for the military leaders. Mr. Roosevelt is in constant contact with Gen. George C. Marshall, who runs the Army and with Admirals Ernest King and Harold Stark who run the Navy. He receives their advice. He respects their judgment. But the President makes the decisions. He really is this country's unified command at the very top. If issues arise between the Army and Navy, he resolves them. If there is argument over whether the Army or Navy should have priority or over the distribution of arms between the forces of foreign nations and the United States, Mr. Roosevelt decides the argument.

As for the cabinet, individual members wield power and influence in their particular fields. As a group, however, the President depends relatively little upon his cabinet. Its collective judgment seldom influences decisions of major importance. Cabinet members, like generals and admirals, can offer their suggestions and advice and can even argue, but President Roosevelt does the deciding. Among cabinet members the most influential are Jesse Jones and Henry L.

What then of the policies of Mr.

Roosevelt and his war cabinet? In economic policy, the attitude is rather New Dealish. Here advanced viewpoints and young men get their chance. There definitely is an attitude that the friendship of organized labor is basic to any successful waging of the present war. Money and money power carry far less weight. Management is respected and its co-operation is sought. The President insists that the position of workers in relation to other groups in the population must be improved. He notes this trend even in the conservative government of England.

In military policy, the President is a definite conservative. He shows little confidence in young leaders, in sharp contrast to his attitude in fields of economic control. The generals and admirals on whom he depends are all near the retirement age. The President prides himself upon his ability as a strategist and this ability was gained in the last war and is based upon the ideas of the last war. Mr. Roosevelt, in other words, is like most of this country's top-ranking military and naval leaders in his look backward to the good old days when the lessons learned in youth still could be applied. It was well along in 1940 when the President strongly discounted in a press conference the influence of the airplane on naval warfare and took his stand firmly for big battleships and a questioning attitude toward the effectiveness of aircraft. There are signs that Mr. Roosevelt now has a somewhat different attitude toward the importance of aircraft in naval warfare. However, there are no signs that the American Navy is convinced of the importance of the plane as a powerful offensive weapon or that it is giving a greater voice in naval strategy to airmen. Likewise, there is a feeling among airmen in the Army that the President's planning of strategy is based more upon orthodox concepts than upon the concepts that the airplane now permits. As for ovre-all strategy: Are there evidences of decisions that will shape the course of the war? The answer is that the initiative in this war, so far as America is concerned, lies in the hands of Japan and Germany. This country's strength still is not great enough to challenge either of those enemy nations on a battleground of our own choosing. The result is that there really is no basic American strategy as yet. All there is, is an effort to send men and munitions to spots satisfying role, but it is one that the oil and other necessary materials. Out the Bawling."

from thoughtful and reflective men and women differ from those that have previously been received throughout the many years of a long ministry. These letters are written by high-minded and utterly sincere people, some of them occupying high stations in their several occupations. None of them indicates that the writers are motivated by fear. They all suggest that reflective people are more and more thinking realistically of their Christian faith in its relation to present world problems and disorders. One such letter poses this question:

"What ought a Christian to do in the present world situation?" The writer was not seeking a method of escape from the responsibilities that a world crisis imposes. He was rather seeking to know how he could bring his Christian faith, his belief in the deity and sovereignty of Christ, most effectively to express itself in a disorderly and confused world. To tell such a sincere inquirer to say his creed and prayers, go to church periodically and perform the usual practices of religion is not enough. We are reminded, in connection with this inquiry, of a book that had wide reading (over fifteen million copies were sold) several years ago, entitled, "What Would Jesus Do?" In it the writer attempted to indicate that the practice of the Christian religion was not restricted to one day of worship or to the ordinary formal practices of a Christian believer. In a graphic way he portrayed the Christian living by the rule of Christ seven days rather than one. He urged with convincing power that christianity was more than the profession of a creed; it was the application of the expressed teachings of Christ to all the concerns of life. It was not lip service, it was life

It is interesting to note that a distinguished English statesman, who has been Ambassador to Russia, recently stated that the philosophy of life held by the Russians was a form of religion that operated seven days of the week, not one. He did not claim that their religion (if such it might be called), was superior to that of the Christian; he did insist that their devotion to their ideals was an operative force in the life of the people. It may be that because the churches and corporate worship recognize one day in seven for giving public expression

To Him all life was sacred. His supreme effort was to enrich and glorify human personality by giving to it a way of life that should bring it to its finest state of development. The whole of life—life in its fullness and highest attainment—was the purpose of His ministry. To seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness he made imperative, and He maintained that the fulfillment of this meant that all other things would fall into their proper and rightful place.

Our modern world has paid homage to Jesus. Writers and men of affairs, and numble people, too, have recognized with reverence the incomparable qualities of His life. They have tacitly accepted Him, as did Napoleon when he said, "He is the mightiest among the mighty." They have built churches and cathedrals and set up beneficent institutions in recognition of His teachings. Multitudes today, in every part of the world, pay Him reverence on the day of worship, but they largely leave Him in the sequestered atmosphere of their houses of worship.

This is a wholly inadequate expression of lovalty and devotion to Him. He attempted to make life here better, more wholesome and satisfying by prescribing for it a habit and practice that would affect its relation to every condition and way of life. Men may call His pronouncements "counsels of perfection"; they are more than this, they are concerned with ways of life that have to do with every human relationship. To Him there were no areas of life in which His teaching was not applicable. True, it was a way of life that entailed cost and, if need be, sacrifice, but He gave assurance of ample compensation.

"What ought a Christian to do in the present situation?" He ought to meet, and with courage, the many problems and possible misfortunes that may come to him, as Christ Himself met them. We may not have His courage; we may be reluctant to make sacrifices to demonstrate our faith in Him, but if we are to bring His teachings to bear upon a disorderly and chaotic world we must exemplify in every aspect of our lives His philosophy and way of life.

India, with its countless natural resources and expanse of territory, attracts both the Nazis and the Japanese, and the peoples of India, divided as they are by all shades, of social and economic variation, speaking more than 200 languages and dialects, represent the very class over which the Nazis are prone to dominate and which the Japanese would subdue as slaves. India's total population represents almost onesixth of the entire human family, and the subjugation of so large a sector of the world's inhabitants would enslave more people than in any other period of world history. The possibilities are not now beyond reason and the thought is appalling. For many years India has been seeking independence from the Brit-Committee last week prior to entering ish, and the belief is widespread Sheild had been honored in eulogies ticipation in the war. How effective such a deal would be in helping Great Britain in her struggle for survival is a point of conjecture. India is already allied with Great Britain in the present struggle and was also an ally with the British in World War I, Indian fighters acquitting themselves in commendable fashion. But that war was quite different from the present struggle, which requires machines and skill by those who know how to use them. India is not totally devoid of men who can take to the air, man ships and aid in submarine warfare, but the millions of men it could yet furnish are mostly land warriors largely skilled in their own tribal tactics of fighting.

From the time Alexander the Great invaded India in 326 B.C., until it came under control of the East India Company in 1600, the country had a long record of invasions, but in no instance was an invasion sufficiently complete to bring conquerors and conquered into a racial unity. Since the country is so large and the population so great, it has always been much easier for the invaders to rule the conquered than to exterminate them. As a result, after the lapse of hundreds of years, it is possible to find in India racial types representing the descendants of all invading peoples.

This has made it most difficult for Great Britain to establish rules and regulations and to enact laws to aid all, and obviously this condition has been the chief handicap in granting India its requested independence. But the situation would fit perfectly into the code of Nazi or Japanese rule, for the iron hand would be law and such a thing as independence would be a far-fetched

Since Hitler's undeclared war started, Great Britain has been striving to convey to the people of India something of their plight were they under a dictator. How effective this effort has been no one can tell, but even where it has had the most favorable reception, India is without modern weapons of war in sufficient quantities to meet a prepared enemy successfully. Great Britain and her allies are holding the fort as best they can, and wherever they can, to keep India from being thrown into the caldron of war. But with so many other fronts on which to fight, and not overlooking the possibility of an early drive by the Nazis on the British Isles, it is a very difficult problem with which to deal.

India's lack of sufficient equipment to wage a modern war, and the probability of not having enough allied strength for protection, point again to the possibility that both Germany and Japan will seek to seize it. Russia has shown already that Hitler's chances to win there are remote, even diminishing every day. Comparatively speaking, Japanese successes so far are small, a possible exception being the case of Singapore. With the United Nations working day and night amassing men and machines and going fresh into battle, both Hitler and the Japanese war lords know that when the Yanks really begin to come, supplemented by their Allies, the smashing records of 1917 and 1918 will be repeated.

Thus, Hitler undoubtedly is looking for some source for a new success and the Japanese are looking for a chance to make some worthwhile achievement. No better place could be found than India for each to strike, and should both of these Axis powers decide on the same goal, the Hitler and Stalin alignment, resulting in the Hitler and Stalin estrangement, could well be duplicated. ### Three Months of Japanese Warfare in Pacific Bring Disaster for United Nations

America's Thirteenth Week of War (131st Week of World War II)

By Blair Bolles.

The war with Japan yesterday was three months old. For the Allies these were three months of gloom, retreat and defeat. In three months Japan has taken possession of Hong Kong, most of the Philippines, Wake, Guam, most of the Indies. Thailand, the Federated Malay States, Singapore, Burma east of the Sittang, New Ireland and New Britain. It is a doleful catalogue shown on the accompanying map.

But the war against Japan is about to reach a new phase, in which the enemy is not likely to record such extraordinary successes. The war is ready to move to Australia and to India, two great regions, far more defensible than the islands and peninsulas that the Japs have won.

The Japanese last week moved methodically about the swift conquest of the last chink in the wall separating them from the riches of Australia and the Indian Ocean—the Island of Java, greatest of the Indies islands. Batavia, the capital, fell after the government of the Indies had left it. The British resistance in Burma along the Sittang River line weakened. In the Philippines, however, the glorious forces of Gen. Douglas MacArthur not only held their own, but in a daring sally sent five Japanese ships to the bottom. The action on the Russian front remained satisfactory to week was the battle of Java. About 50,000 Allied troops, mostly Dutch but including a few thousand Americans and British, were lined up against 85,000 Japanese troops in Java. The first days of the week. Monday and Tuesday, brought encouraging reports from London and Bandoeng about the Allied cause. "Attack and not defense must be our watchword," the order of the day said on Monday. Events did not support this sanguine enthusiasm. By the middle of the week two developments became known which made it plain that hopes for Java were ebbing. They were: Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, commander of United Nations forces in the Southwest Pacific, left that command and proceeded to India to take charge of the expect-Shifted ed Indian war with Japan. Vice Admiral Conrad Helfrich, the naval commander in the Southwest Pacific, was relieved of that post for a special assignment-its exact nature un-

The events leading up to these changes and to the unhappy course of the war in Java after the departures of Wavell and Helfrich were made clear first in the dispatches of Wednesday. The high command in Bandoeng—where the Indies government moved from Batavia Tuesday-acknowledged then that the Japanese had made "some headway at some points." The war bulletin reported heavy Dutch aerial blows against the enemy's air power. Serious damage was inflicted on hangars at a Japanese-held airport.

The hopeful note went out of the news from Java Thursday. The Japanese invaders drove forward with a pincers movement against Batavia and Bandoeng. They cut the railroad linking those centers of resistance to the third focus of defense, Soerabaja, the port and naval base of Eastern Java. The enemy drew within 10 miles of Batavia and 25 miles from Bandoeng and threatened to bisect the island, 622 miles long. The enemy airmen began to bomb the one good southern port through which the island could draw reinforcements.

The Dutch command pictured the battle of Java as a confused, swirling lishment of a regular fighting front. The defenders evidently were fighting a losing battle, although they were striking the foe when and wherever numerical superiority in the air and aground was not overwhelming. Usually it was overwhelming.

Late Thursday night the Japanese occupied Batavia. Aneta, the Dutch news agency, said practically all of Western Java had been overrun by the in-Captured vaders. A bulletin from the Indies headquarters admitted the capture of Jogjakarta, a city of 140,000 population, in a Japanese thrust knifing almost to the south coast of Java. For all practical purposes the island thus was cut in two in its middle. Bandoeng was moved, by the Japanese advance, into the front line of defense.

while the Japs also destroyed some installations at Soerabaja during a threehour raid. The Japanese got within 25 miles of Bandoeng. The situation seemed desperate, but Dr. Hubertus van Mook, the brave Lieutenant Governor General of the islands, announced that "every day we hold out brings us nearer to victory.' Can the Allied leaders in Java do what MacArthur is doing in Bataan?

Far away other Japanese armies gained fewer successes in Burma. The resistance there was stiff, and the Japanese have not yet been able to break the line of British opposition set up along the Sittang River, although in one place they have crossed the Sittang. The Allied troops in Burma now are under Gen. Wavell's command. The Japanese drive has been slowed down to such an extent that on Tuesday the British Army headquarters issued a communique reporting | Each, plane, presumably of the pursuit | along its line back from 1 to 5 miles and that a growing number of Indians were | type, carried a full load of 200-pound | recovered former positions held by the returning to Rangoon-almost emptied

The once underrated Japanese military machine has moved so fast and furiously in the three months since Pearl Harbor that already it battles to complete the final step in a basic scheme of conquest. China. The history of the Sino-Japanese War since 1937 could be repeated in a general way in Australia and in the continuing battle for Burma, which could turn into the battle for India.

There is another place where the Japs find the going hard-Bataan. Americans are used to reading of the great defense there. Last week brought another story -a great offensive operation. On Wednesday MacArthur's tiny air force appeared over Subic Bay, a Japanese naval and shipping base north of Bataan. The Americans made the most of an apparent lack of alertness by the Japanese during the lull in the Bataan fighting. Somewhere in these islands on Tuesday an American naval task force made an excursion and knocked out of the sky 16 of the 18 Japanese bombers sent out against the Americans.

While the Russians continued to forge ahead, the British last week tried an experiment. They sent a bombing raid over France to attack the Renault factory at Billancourt, on the outskirts of Paris, a factory which is on a triple shift to make goods of war for the Germans. Some speculated whether the bombing would have political effects. That remains to be seen. Besides Billancourt, these towns were struck: Clamart, Issy Les Mulineaux, Ville Juif, Mount Rouge, Neuilly,

The Russians last Monday were headed toward Staraya Russa, where 90,000 Germans were said to be trapped with dwindling Advance food supplies. That was in the north. In the center the Russians under Gen. Golubev pushed toward Smolensk, and in the south they continued to go for Dnieperopetrovsk. Both the Russians and the Germans were throwing planes, tanks and artillery into the fighting on the southwestern and southern fronts, where the battlefield is a vast quagmire under rain and melting snow.

Dispatches from the Staraya Russa region said the Red Army was drawing its steel noose tighter around the German 16th Army each day. The Germans transformed the city, once a famous Russian resort famous for its brine springs, into a base for communications on the northwestern front below Leningrad. The city is 280 miles northwest of Moscow and 140 miles south of Leningrad.

German military spokesmen circulated reports for the benefit of Swedish and Swiss newspapers that Soviet troops are massing

Offensive in prodigious force all along the Russian front for a revitalized drive and have already instituted attacks on a scale not previously reached in the war. One correspondent was impressed that the Soviets are launching "a fantastic effort to bring about a decision." The German broadcast on Tuesday said that German troops had repulsed strong, tank-supported Russian assaults on the Crimea and in the Donets Basin.

Nothing the Russians said contradicted the reports from the German military spokesmen. The Soviet communique of Wednesday announced that Red forces had destroyed "about 50 centers of enemy resistance" and killed 650 officers and men in an offensive around the Leningrad front. #### Atlantic Front

The eastern seaboard of the United States continues to be the front line in the Atlantic war. The Nazi U-boats bring the war almost on to our shores. The prize loss was the destroyer Jacob Jones, sent down off Cape May, N. J., with the loss of more than 100 lives. The vessel carried the same name as the marine during the World War.

Three submarines combined their striking power to sink the American freighter Marore off Cape Hatteras, N. C. They crippled the ship with one torpedo and riddled her from stem to stern with 100 shells. The crew of 39 escaped and were brought to Norfolk. Over the submarine-infested waters to as perhaps never before with the shape of things to come. He wants to know what is going to happen to him day after tomorrow and the day after that. He's been told a great many things, most of them unpleasant, so that now he doesn't know quite what to believe. The truth is that no one, not even to the nearest store to buy all they could, the heads of war production here in Washington, can know how deep and how far-reaching are the inroads which the war is certain to make on normal life. Total war is so new to America, that it would be rash to prophesy where or how far it may cut into our ordinary, comfortable existence. But some things can be foreseen with reasonable certainly. Already we know that we are to be hit in a number of places and hard! The following is a summary of the latest information here in Washington on what the war is likely to mean to the average citizen in this first year. It comes from a variety

from off the record conversation with officials as well as from announcements

Curtailment and rationing of clothing and food are already here. About 40 per cent of our wool has come from Australia, and Pacific sea lanes are difficult to maintain. The necessary wool to make uniforms for an army of 7,000 .-000 and for a greatly expanded Navy is cutting de p into civilian supply. Rationing, which will further limit the supply to consumers, is expected soon. The Government a month ago ordered the supply a allable to civilians reduced by 80 per c nt.

Men's Clothing to Change.

Clothing manufacturers and tailors have agreed to cut down on men's clothing in order to conserve wool. Vests are on the way out. Trousers may be shorter, and there will be no more two-pants suits. A new victory suit has been designed which embodies these

Women's styles are certain to be simplified and there will in all probability be fewer style changes. The elastic girdle has disappeared until rubber is again available. Chemical and metal shortages are expected to curtail resort to beauty shops, and bobby pins and metal curlers are already disappearing from the counters.

Women will walk more and therefore a modification of the extreme high heel can be expected. While no order is contemplated as yet, within a foreseeable time sizes and colors of shoes are cer- scarce. tain to be limited by special order so

The average American is concerned | the supply appears to be such that the individual ration will work no serious hardship. The question of possible food shortages has been badly handled in Washington. Before a rationing plan had been set up. Secretary of Agriculture Wickard suggested that sugar might be short. This sent housewives scurrying which was in turn sufficient to insure immediate sugar rationing.

Similarly, Mr. Wickard "warned" of a possible shortage of fats and oils in 1943, although he indicated that the supply should be ample for the current year. Obviously too much talk about shortages tends to produce them.

Acute Rubber Shortage.

The most acute shortages are likely to come in goods imported from the Pacific. Rubber is first on that list. Many Americans have persisted in believing that this will be of short duration in spite of the fact that the Japs have already conquered the rubber-producing areas of Malaya. Optimistically they have assumed that a substitute will be found or that rubber supplies in Malaya will be reopened.

But Leon Henderson has dispelled these illusions. Crude rubber will not be available for civilians for at least two years, if then. Even when the Japs are driven out of the Malayan Peninsula and Sumatra-a long and costly process-it will be a considerable time before production is restored.

American ingenuity may discover a substitute. But to put that substitute into mass production to make tires for the 28,000,000 American passenger cars would take quantities of steel and other metals almost as scarce as rubber. Moreover, it would take man power and transportation direly needed in the war effort.

A basic factor affecting the food supply is the shortage of tin which has been Lapels are to be shortened or abolished." on the list of scarce metals for under the newest decree tin cans can be used only for essential foods and there may even be a scarcity for food canning.

> Tin Cans Becoming Scarce. Inevitably the tin shortage means the housewife must do more home canning in glass containers then ever before. While industrial canners may be able to convert their factories to glass or plastics instead of tin, this will take time and it will also take scarce metals to carry out the changeover; metals which may not be obtainable. This summer should see every glass container filled with food for the coming winter. It means, too, an increase in home gardens but here the Department of Agriculture adds a note of caution. phase certain to touch rich and poor of every race. Changes in living standards will be forced, particularly in the middle-income brackets from $5,000 to $25,000. The prediction is made that taxpayers in this group will pay four times as much on this year's income as they pay, beginning on March 15, on the same income last year.

The probability is for a payroll deduction tax of anywhere from 5 per cent That will be money you will never see. Another probability is a sales tax, which may or may not exempt food and work clothing.

Besides the payroll tax, it is possible that Defense bond purchases may be made compulsory.

Prices Certain to Rise.

Prices are certain to rise, despite the price-control bill. It leaves wage and farm loopholes that make price rises more or less inevitable. The rise that is taking place just now in the cost of living—at the rate of about 1 per cent a month-represents the narrowing margin between wholesale and retail prices, the former having shot up earlier and faster than the latter because retail merchants did not mark up prices of the goods still on their shelves.

The next few months are certain to see widespread demands for higher wages from unions and from groups, such as teachers and policemen, who do not have union representation. In the face of rising living costs it will be difficult to resist these demands.

All this does not add up to cheerful news. But officials here take the attitude that it is best to be prepared for what is to come. Many Americans, they point out, are still living under the illusion that the past as they have known is can be preserved in the middle of a total war. They are due for a rude miles out to sea, to America's stronghold in Hawaii. Within a week after Japan had launched her attack on Pearl Harbor, Col. Knox was back in Washington. He brought with him a complete report to the President. The essentials of this report he made public through the press. That report was later corroborated by the Roberts Board of Inquiry, sent to the islands by the President to place responsibility for the disaster and to report on the facts of the attack.

Pearl Harbor Survey.

Col. Knox said in his report that one battleship, the Arizona, had been destroyed, along with the Utah, an old target ship; three destroyers and a minelayer, and that the Oklahoma, another battleship, had capsized, and a number of other ships had been damaged, some slightly, and others would require months before being ready for service. Since then, from other sources, rumors have come of the destruction of nine capital ships and many other craft. These rumors have filtered through Washington like water through a sieve.

Some of the rumors regarding the disaster were that the drydock and other facilities for the repair of vessels had been destroyed at Pearl Harbor. This

Since he became Secretary of the Navy, Col. Knox has seen vital changes made in the Navy setup. In the past the chief of naval operations ran the whole show. Now Admiral King has complete command of all the naval vessels at sea, and Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, has charge of all the other operations, including naval bases and naval posts. To Admiral Robinson nas been intrusted "procurement" for the Navy, and he is co-operating closely with the W. P. B.

Col. Knox "gets along" well with the admirals. When it comes to naval operations and strategy, he regards them as essentially the responsibility of the naval experts. He leaves them in their hands. In the matter of administration of the Navy Department, Col. Knox keeps his hand constantly on the controls. He has virtually created a statistical division in the departmentwhich is proving its value in many ways

The gallantry of the men in the Navy, officers and enlisted men, is a particular pride of the Secretary of the Navy. It was this gallantry which brought the men at Pearl Harbor into effective action-despite the fact that the surprise air attack was devastatingly heavy. And it was the guns of the Navy which drove off a third attack of Japanese planes that day, with never a bomb reaching an objective.

Secretary Knox visited Pearl Harbor more than a year before the attack was made by Japan. It was after that he the islands.

States at this moment in its war effort against the Axis is not field strategy and tactics, but production-how to get 100 per cent output from our industrial The heroism-individual and collective of American fighting men on sea and land, and in the air, will not assure us victory if on the home front we fail to extract the maximum in finished war materials from our productive capacities.

It goes without saying that Americans can fight and will fight against any enemy, regardless of his superiority. The statement some 10 years ago by the former Japanese Ambassador to Washington, Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura, that the inner spring mattress had softened our people, is as far from the truth as the Japanese diplomat is from Japan. Despite likely further setbacks in coming months American forces will be able to hold off the enemy. But we are at a distinct disadvantage as far as production and labor are concerned. The Axis powers do not depend on one another for any kind of raw materials or manufactured supplies, but America is the arsenal of the United Nations, and unless our factories can deliver military equipment of all kinds to our associates. we may one day face the prospect of having to fight single-handed.

The Axis Situation.

As far as the Axis is concerned the situation shapes up about as follows: Germany lacks some raw materials, particularly oil and rubber. Other materials which enter into the manufacture of war equipment are available in satisfactory quantities in Europe. Besides their own excellently equipped workshops, the Nazis also have those of France, Belgium, Holland and Czechoslovakia—all highly developed industrial countries. Italy does not count, either militarily or industrially. Thus. Germany is a fairly compact economic unit, extending from the Atlantic to the Russian border. The oil she needs so badly must be obtained, however, either from the Caucasus or Iraq. Rumania, Poland and Albania produce some oil, but the quantities are inadequate for German blitz methods. Germany's principal associate in this war is Japan. There is close strategic collaboration between the two birds of prev. but Japan needs nothing at the present time from the factories of Europe. She is fighting her war on her own resources and with the stocks she has collected over a period of at least 10 years. A few thousand specialists and foremen comprise the only industrial assistance Berlin has given its associate

PRODUCTION NOW IS FIRST GOAL OF U. S.

Each Axis Nation Self-Sufficient, but All Allies Depend on America

By Constantine Brown.

The prime concern of the United | war for at least another 18 months with- | armament. On top of that we have out outside assistance. This means they can afford to wait until destruction is repaired in the islands of the South Pacific, where the forces of the United Nations are carrying out efficiently a scorched-earth policy. When the repairs are completed, Japan will have more rubber and oil than it can possibly use. She will also have large quantities of coal, lignite, tin, copra and other materials. With her modern factories and conscripted labor the result is obvious. Thus, while the Nazis and Japanese are militarily and politically interdependent they are completely independent of each other as far as war production is concerned. The Japs can fight without German planes and the Nazis can fight without Japanese tanks.

Britain Dependent on United States.

The situation of the Axis in this respect is in startling contrast to that of the United Nations. Britain still produces a satisfactory quantity of tanks and planes, but her factories are almost wholly dependent on raw materials from the United States. Since Singapore fell and the Japanese established their domination in the Western Pacific this dependence on American sources has become heavier than it was a few months

If the lines of communication between America and Britain were cut by the Nazis, some British factories might have to suspend all activities in a few months. With these lines still open, as is the case today, Britain can produce for warfare which is far from her own doorstep. If the Nazis were to start another blitz against the United Kingdom her factories would suffer and the United States would be called on to make up the deficency in production. Russia is in a still worse position. Her main industrial and raw material producing areas have either been occupied by the Nazis or laid waste when the Red Army pushed them back. The fight is going on as bitterly as ever, and the Russians naturally have not yet had time to restore their destroyed factories to production.

Russian Requirements. The industrial centers which the Russians saved from German devastationplants and factories behind the Volga and the Urals-may be able, with available raw materials, to produce sufficient equipment for an army of a million and half, but not for the millions the Russians can, and must, put in the field to counter the next German offensive.

From all this it is evident that our remaining fighting Allies rely almost exclusively on the United States for supplies. It is not a question of providing to think of our own fighting forces. By the end of this year we shall have to equip some 2,000,000 Americans with the best available war material.

We have set a goal of 65,000 planes this year; whether it is possible to attain that production in the next 10 months is a question which only the heads of our war production can answer.

Furthermore, it appears that in computing the figure of 65,000 planes this year possible losses, which may be heavy in the months to come, have not been taken into consideration for the simple reason that we cannot visualize what they may be. Our output, on the basis of our present rate of operation, would be more than ample for the American Army alone, but it is doubtful whether it will be sufficient to cover the severe losses our Allies are bound to suffer as soon as Hitler starts his spring and summer campaigns. Even if Hitler were to be unsuccessful in these offensives, the Allies' eventual successes would be shortlived unless immediate reinforcements are available from the United States. The British and Russians must have on hand ample reserves of planes, arms and ammunition to exploit any victory they may obtain against the Nazi forces; otherwise their men will be sacrificed for nothing.

24-Hour Production Wanted.

Our war production experts-who do not depend on the electorate for their jobs-are worried over our capacity to turn out war materials. The decision of Congress not to interfere with the wages and hours law would have been most laudable in peace time. But the men who think only in terms of war material production—and are not concerned with social reforms-maintain that our effort will be seriously handicapped unless our factories and our plants are operated on a 24-hour, seven days a week basis.

Our task is, therefore, far more difficult than that of our enemies. The Nazis. with a five-year jump on us in gearing their economy to war, must produce only for their own armies. While we are now in the process of placing our peacetime industry on a war footing, they have been doing it since 1936 and 1937. The same thing applies to the Japanese. Both members of the Axis are manufacturing for the needs of their armies alone, while we must manufacture not only for ourselves but for all our Allies and prospective Allies, such as some of the South American republics which may find themselves attacked in the near

Now that so many patriotic songs are being written, it might be well to say something about our greatest, "The Star Spangled Banner." It was written by a Maryland native, though an adopted son of the District of Columbia. Indeed, he was a resident of this city at the time the words of the national anthem were written, a fact of which we are naturally very proud. Perhaps, if you are not already very well informed on the subject, you would like to know just how, and under what circumstances, Francis Scott Key came to pen the lines which today mean so much to every trueblooded American. When you consider the tragic and inspiring conditions under which the words of this anthem were written, it is quite certain that the next time you sing this song it will be with added fervor and enthusiasm.

The public buildings in Washington had been burned by the enemy on August 24, 1814, and with this purpose in view, the enemy had, on August 19, landed its forces eight miles below Benedict, Charles County, Md., and from there the invaders had taken up their march to the Capital, passing through the village of Upper Marlboro, where lived a prosperous and well known physician named William Beanes, whose home was selected as the headquarters of Gen. Ross. Incidentally, this Dr. Beanes became the immediate contributing cause of Mr. Key's presence off Baltimore during the memorable bombardment of Fort McHenry, September 13-14, 1814.

Dr. Beanes, so it appears, had played host to the British officers while they were occupying his residence a short while before. He had a large number of slaves and horses and other valuable property, and, most naturally, thought that discretion was the better part of

However, his courtesy to the British seems to have misled them into assuming that he was pro-British, whereas just the contrary was really the case, since Dr. Beanes had served in the American Army during the Revolutionary War and naturally was 100 per cent loyal to his own country.

Nevertheless, the doctor did, seemingly, become somewhat involved, for when the British were returning to their fleet at Benedict, through Marlboro, marauders appeared in the town and were arrested and thrown into the county jail by a committee headed by Dr. Beanes and several friends.

Arrest of Dr. Beanes.

One of those imprisoned escaped and informed Gen. Ross of the circumstances. He ordered the arrest of Dr. William Hill, Philip Weems and Dr. Beanes. The first two were released but Dr. Beanes, at Nottingham, was taken aboard one of the British vessels, which, with the rest of the fleet, weighed anchor from Benedict on August 29.

C. C. Magruder, jr., in an article written by him some time since, tells us that Dr. Beanes was forced to arise from his bed after midnight at the point of a revolver, scarcely permitted to clothe himself and made to ride horseback on a rough-gaited, cadaverous animal to Benedict, 35 miles distant. From here the fleet proceeded toward Baltimore by way of Chesapeake Bay.

In the meantime Dr. Beanes' friends were active in his behalf, and it was upon the appeal of Richard W. West that Key was induced to seek the release of the

Mr. Key was a member of the bar and a brother-in-law of Roger Brooke Taney, Secretary of the Treasury and later the Chief Justice of the United States, who married Anna Arnold Key. He was born upon an estate in Frederick County, Md., known as Terra Rubra, August 9, 1780. After graduating from St. John's College, Annapolis, he married Mary Taylor Lloyd, who, it is said, showed such indifference for his sonnets that she frequently made curl papers out of them. Shortly after beginning the practice of law in Frederick, Md., in 1801, he moved to the District of Columbia, where he formed a partnership with his uncle, Philip Barton Key. He was an Episcopalian and a vestryman of St. John's Church, Georgetown, and wrote for the church hymnal "Lord, With Glowing Heart I Praise Thee." During the administrations of Presidents Jackson and Van Buren he was three times appointed United States district attorney for the District of Columbia.

Lived in Old Georgetown.

Much of the author's life was spent in this city at his residence in Old Georgetown, a part of which still is standing at 3516 M street, near the Washington end of the Francis Scott Key Bridge, which was named by Congress in his honor. Here he resided from 1808 to 1828 and here, it is said, his 11 children-six boys and five girls-were born. His later residence, at 308 C street Northwest, was replaced by an apartment house and the latter removed in recent years. The original Key house was built about 1835 by Henry Weightman, brother of Gen. Rober C. Weighman, mayor of Washington from 1824 to 1826, and occupied by Mr. Key up to the time of his death in Baltimore, January 11, 1843, after which it was disposed of by his widow. A portion of the west side of the C street residence was devoted to Mr. Key's office.

As a lawyer, Mr. Key stood in high repute, and we can easily see that Mr. West could not have selected a better man for the purpose of securing the release of Dr. Beanes, which Mr. Key immediately proceeded to do.

In a letter to his mother, under date, Georgetown 2d, September, 1814, Key wrote: "I am going in the morning to Baltimore to proceed in a flag to Gen. Ross Old Doct. Beanes of Marlhoro is taken prisoner by the enemy, who threaten to carry him off. Some of his friends have urged me to apply for a flag to go and try to procure his release. I hope to return in about eight or 10 days, though it is uncertain, as I do not know where to find the fleet."

Key was soon on his way to Baltimore. where he met John S. Skinner, who was in charge of the exchange of prisoners, and having obtained the consent of President Madison, they proceeded together to Chesapeake Bay, aboard the Minden, under a flag of truce, in search of the British fleet.

He went as far as the mouth of the wise Gen. Ross, did not take kindly to Beanes to the utmost.

Fortunately, Mr. Skinner had come own men were extremely grateful for the kind treatment they were receiving from their foe, he agreed to the release.

Mr. Key was then permitted to interview Dr. Beanes. He found him in the forward part of the ship, among the sailors and soldiers. He was constantly treated with indignity by those around him, and this keen humiliation continued while he remained aboard the Brit-

The Flag of Fort McHenry.

On the morning of September 12 the enemy sailed up the Patapsco and during the day and night brought 16 vessels, five of which were bomb vessels, within about two and a half miles of the fort. Key's vessel was anchored in a position from which he could see distinctly the flag of Fort McHenry, which was erected on a high mast not far from the bastion.

About sunrise on the 13th five bomb vessels of the British took up a position a little more than two miles opposite the fort and kept up an incessant and well directed bombardment.

Lt. Col. George Armistead, U. S. A., then 34 years of age, in command of Fort McHenry, had the assistance of about 1.000 men. He immediately returned the British fire, but soon found that our shells fell short of the enemy, and his gunners were thus left inactive though constantly exposed to a tremendous shower of shells. During this time and under these conditions, Col. Armistead states, "not a man shrank from the conflict."

At one time the British were deceived into believing that the fort was about to surrender and came in closer, and only then were our guns able to reach them, which they did to such good effect that the enemy retired out of range of the American guns, continuing the bombardment, however, until 7 a.m., September 14. when it ceased, and about 9 a.m. got under way and stood down the river, re-

In describing the bombardment to Judge Taney, his brother-in-law, Mr. Key, said that he and Mr. Skinner remained on deck during the night watching every shell and listening with breathless interest to hear if an explosion followed. But it suddenly ceased before day, and as they had no communication with any of the enemy's ships, they did not know whether the fort had surrendered or the attack had been abandoned. They paced the deck for the remainder of the night in painful suspense, watching with intense anxiety for the return of day and looking every few minutes at their watches to see how long they must wait for it. At dawn and before it was light enough to see objects at a distance, their glasses were turned to the fort, uncertain whether they should see the Stars and Stripes or the flag of the enemy. At length the light came and they saw our "flag was still there."

We are told it was first published in the Baltimore American of September 21, 1814, and a few days later it appeared in handbill form, and was first sung, so one account states, in a small, one-story frame house next to the Holiday Street Theater, Baltimore, and another authority says it was "printed within a week in the Baltimore Patriot under the title of "The Defense of Fort McHenry." In Washington we first come across it in the National Intelligencer for September 26, 1814, and it is recorded as having been first sung here at McKeown's Hotel, later the Metropolitan, about December, 1814. The history of the old air is interest-

As far back as 1788 it was printed in Scotland, the composer having been John Stafford Smith, the words, by Ralph Tomlinson, being entitled "To Anacreon in Heaven." Parenthetically, Anacreon was a Greek lyric poet who lived around 500 B. C., and the meter of the verse is attributed to him, or is in his style, and therefore known as "Anacreontic." Webster tell us it is "a sprightly little poem in praise of love and wine."

It was written for a musical club called

The first one in this country to write song to this air seems to have been Robert Treat Paine, jr. This was first sung in 1798, being entitled "Adams and Liberty." It has nine verses, the first to the same air for the Russian festival in Boston, March 25, 1813, and it is believed that it was Everett's piece that Mr. Key had in mind when he penned his own immortal song. For his successful defense of Fort

McHenry, Maj. Armistead was brevetted lieutenant colonel, though he survived but a few years to enjoy his well-earned honors. He died April 25, 1818, and four days later the National Messenger of Georgetown tells of his death as follows:

"It is with feelings of the deepest sorrow and regret that we perform the painful duty of announcing to the public the death of Col. George Armistead, the gallant defender of Fort McHenry.

"On this melancholy occasion the recollection of the ever-memorable 14th September naturally occurs to our mindwhen the Star Spangled Banner waved in proud defiance to a formidable foe, and after a furious bombardment of 23 hours, continued to float triumphant on the ramparts-then it was that Baltimore was saved and a wreath of never-been on exhibition in the north hall of the old building of the National Museum. During the bombardment one shell passed through it, but it is still well preserved. Originally it was 27 feet 6 inches by 32 feet 10 inches, but in the early days some small pieces were clipped from the end and presented to different people, the result being that as the flag stands today its length is reduced to about its original height.

It was made as a garrison flag for Fort McHenry by the wife of Col. Henry S. Pickersgill of Baltimore, who experienced difficulty in finding a room large enough for the purpose of putting it toresort to a nearby brewery for this purpose. After the bombardment, Col. Armistead retained the flag as a memento, and it still is the property of one of his descendants.

Previous to its being deposited in the Museum, it was used upon a number of public occasions, principally when it floated over Gen. Washington's war tent at the time of the reception to Gen. Lafayette during his visit to the United States in 1824, and again in 1880, when it formed a strikin, feature of the celebration at Baltimore of the battle of Fort McHenry, having a guard of honor of 200 descendants of those who fought under it when the "Red Devil of the Chesapeake," as the British admiral was called, tried to destroy Fort McHenry and take the city of . Baltimore.

In the Museum, in the same case with the flag, is a silver punch bowl given by the citizens of Baltimore to Col. Armistead for his heroic defense. It is in the form and size of the largest bombshell thrown into the fort. The ladle is in the form of a shrapnel shell and the goblets represent powder barrels.

It was only in recent years that "The Star Spangled Banner" was recognized as the national anthem, and to John Charles Linthicum, a member of Congress from Maryland, is due the credit of securing the passage of the act declaring "the composition consisting of the words and music * * * as the national anthem of the United States of America." The act was signed by President Herbert Hoover March 3, 1931.

When you motor through Upper Marlboro stop long enough to see the grave of Dr. Beanes, and the next time you drive through Frederick, enter that city by the Clarksburg route from Washington, and just on the outskirts you will see Mount Olivet Cemetery and in a circular plot, carefully cared for, you will find a monument on which is a tablet inscribed:

Benjamin Franklin-The Earliest Great American

THOSE DAYS."

This is the first of a series of articles about men who worked, fought and died that America might live: men who made America great by contributing their own greatness to a country which was founded and has endured on the principle of life. liberty and the pursuit of happiness as the right of every man. The second article in the series will appear next Sunday.

By Carl Van Doren.

Any great American is one of America's national resources, and to cherish his memory is to make continuing use of his greatness. Even though his example may seem from time to time to have grown dim, it is still there, ready to be drawn upon like forests and mines and wells, farms and rivers and the ocean. In dark days he can be trusted to be a light out of the past, if he is remembered for what he really was and still

Let us remember some of the things too many of us have forgotten about Benjamin Franklin, the earliest great

When Washington was only 21, Adams 18, Jefferson 10, Madison 2 and Hamilton not yet born, Franklin in 1753 was already a scientist of world-wide renown. His discoveries in electricity had laid the foundations of that science. His experiments with lightning, and his invention of the lightning rod, had begun to make him thought of by the people everywhere, as a kind of wizard. Had he not hit dpon a secret which enabled him to catch and tame a terrible force which mankind had superstitiously dreaded for thousands of years? Here was another hero of the human race.

But Franklin was no wizard hid in a cave. He was also a humorist and wit. He had created the character of Poor Richard the year Washington was born, and had ever since gone on annually turning the world's proverbs into Poor Richard's sayings, with a new American point and flavor. Probably no man since Solomon has given so many proverbs

"THERE WERE GIANTS IN also the leader among the men who were changing Philadelphia from a little provincial town to the most important city in the American Colonies and one of the important cities in the British Empire. In 1753 he became Postmaster General for North America and the next year drew up his plan for a union of the Colonies which was to be, as it turned out, a forecast of the United States.

> Franklin at first had no thought of independence. He desired only to unite the Colonies in local affairs within the larger frame of imperial government. His vision for the future included both sides of the Atlantic. If America depended on Great Britain, so did Great Britain depend on America. Together they might, he wrote a little later, set up "the greatest political structure human wisdom ever yet erected." For 18 years before 1775 Franklin > spent most of his time in London as agent of various colonies and, in effect, Ambassador from America. Firmly holding out for justice to his native country, he was also faithful to his imperial vision. Justice to America, he knew, was in the long run a necessity for the whole empire. What he proposed was substantially what was long afterward to be the basic principle of the British Commonwealth of Nations. But the reactionary George III and his obedient ministers were not prophets. Franklin's plans were disregarded, and he was insultingly dismissed from office.

During his voyage home the battles of Lexington and Concord took place and the Colonies flared into rebellion. This was something Franklin had feared and had done his best to prevent. He might, like most former crown officers in America, have sided with the King. He might have stubbornly persisted in his plans for reconciliation. He might, at 70, have withdrawn from the conflict and returned to the scientific studies which had made him famous. Instead, he took his seat in the Continental Congress, the oldest man in it, and therefore gave his had a large European reputation, Franklin was sent to Paris to try to win France as an ally. There his triumph was due perhaps less to what he did than to what he was. For to the French, as to all the rest of Europe outside of England, he was not merely a shrewd diplomat working against many odds. He was a great sage, wise and good and smiling, who spoke for the new Nation of Americans because he was so completely one of them while being a citizen of the world. If America could produce a great philosopher it was not, as it was represented by its enemies, a noisy rabble in a wilder-

Each of them for the sake of his country had turned away from what he liked and valued most in private life. But there they stood, throughout the long struggle, like the towers or temples of an unshakable faith

When Franklin at .80 left Paris for America he looked forward to a philosopher's retirement. But almost at once he was elected President (Governor) of Pennsylvania, and he was inevitably a delegate to the Federal convention which formed the Constitution of the United States. His temperate wisdom kept the convention from breaking up into antagonistic parties. The finished Constitution was not altogether what he wished It to be, but without him there might have been no Constitution at all.

Too old and feeble to be considered for first President, Franklin lived only long enough to see the first few months of the new Government he had done so much to bring into existence and to shape. Then, like Moses on Pisgah, he looked into the promised land which his people were to enter and enjoy. In one of his last letters he summed up what amounts to his blessing on this Government and every good government.

"God grant that not only the love of liberty but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his foot anywhere on its surface and say: 'This is my country.'"

What survives from Franklin's life and work a century and a half after his death? There are, of course, the bequests to Boston and Philadelphia which have grown into the most munificent money gifts ever made by a philosopher. There are the library, the hospital, the fire insurance company, the scientific than his works, and that while his works society, the academy (eventually the have spread out into the broad stream university) which he helped found in of American life, the man has somehow

Things not so well known are that he was the first notable American athlete, published the first foreignlanguage newspaper in America, planned the first American magazine, made the original observations out of which the Weather Bureau developed, drew and printed the first American cartoon, invented a draft for fireplaces and was a pioneer in the science of ventilation, was the first scholar to study the Gulf Stream, saw the first men go up in a free balloon and was first to prophesy that war might be made from the air, and received the first letter carried through the air, by balloon from London to Paris. The oldest of the great Americans of the Revolution, he saw furthest into the future.

Among great American statesmen, Franklin is the only one who has a great name in science, the only one who wrote a book that belongs to world literature, the only one who was equally at home in America, England and France-at once intensely native and perfectly cosmopolitan.

Far from sinking out of sight as time passes, Franklin steadily emerges, like a mountain which seemed no higher than others when we were close to them, but which as we move away rises above them all. And yet there is nothing overpowering in Franklin's eminence. The more we learn about him, and the more we wonder at him, the more also we take a comfortable delight in his serenity and good humor and candor and charm. We are proud to belong to the Nation that produced him. We honor his talents and achievements. But we feel that the man was more

Atlantic Air Patrol In Action

By Lt. Hugh D. Maxwell.

The seas off Long Island look different from a giant Army patrol bomber loaded with TNT.

Once there was a smiling expanse of blue sea. Pointed white sails could be seen against the darkness of the water, little tufts of foam in their wake. Coastal steamers churned to and from New England and the South with their vacationing passengers.

On this particular day, a dark, cold, foggy winter morning, everything is changed. The plane roars over the sea wastes. A tanker is sighted. We circle several times, and challenge her. Not quite certain of her identity, we dip

The wing tips seem to touch the water although we are full 200 feet above the crest of the waves. Finally the navigator leans forward and shouts, "O. K., she's got it . . . British, but damn slow about it."

Our bomber fairly skims the water as a fleet of fishing trawlers is checked. The nose of a sunken freighter sticks up out of a thin oil slick stretching for miles -a marine tombstone at the sea gate to the richest city in the world.

A certain tenseness holds the plane and its crew from the minute its threeman team took over. At a "brief," our squadron commander sketched the route of the patrol on a green chart as pilot. navigator and bombardier stuffed themselves into the heavy sheepskin flying clothes. They wore garrison caps with the wire out, so that their earphones fit over them. Some wear visor caps, none use goggles.

The gasoline trailer and the ammunition trucks pull out as the jeep bringing the crew approaches the ship.

The flight crew stands in front of the ship as the engineer gives the motors a final check. The earth vibrates, the ship quivers. The pilot-commander holds a hurried conference with the radio man and gives him the call letters for the day. Special daily signals to the base in case of emergency.

We're ready to take off. (Buck, captain of the crew spits on his finger and man and photographer climb into the tail. We, the pilot, co-pilot, navigator and bombardier go up front. It's not crowded, but we seem to get in each

Another roar of the motors, then taxiing across the field, Buck and I adjust our seats. The plane drives ahead in a ing. burst of power. Three jobs all silently join hands in a flight such as this. The pilot, of course, is the commander, but with a surious dependence on his teammates, the bombardier and navigator.

Each has a seperate backyard in which he's boss. Each spent anywhere from seven months to a year learning his bombardier at Barksdale, navigator in that sub!

Grouse knows what's wrong, and there's always something wrong. He always clowns about being able to drop an "egg" into a barrel from 30,000 feet. "Sometime I'm gonna miss," he says. He comes from Washington, Pa., and prides himself on being an amateur wrestler, and a pretty good one at that.

Curley doesn't say much. Sometimes he takes off his spectacles and smiles. Then he seems like a kid of 18. But as he works with his compass, slide ruler and drift meter he looks like a Chinese philosopher. He likes to help the photographer. He's even an expert gunner, and a Swiss bellringer with an aerial machine gun. He takes code as smoothly as an alley cat walks a fence.

Other members of the flying club are usually the co-pilot (myself), engineer, radio-man, and gunner-photographer. But we are on patrol duty, and the crew doesn't include an engineer. All of us can handle a machine gun. All of us know that if anything should go wrong, it might be the last flight we ever make Flying so close to the water you can't use your parachute, and once the plane hits the water our life belts won't do us any bood because we couldn't get out. We're not nervous though. . . . It's too calm. Once we get to our combat stations, we just don't give a hoot.

Each is at his post, from the bombardier in the nose to the gunner in the tail. Phones connect everywhere. Eyes strain in every direction. No talk; a few smoke. The radio maintains a silence that reveals nothing to the

One stands up and points. We nose further off in the direction indicated. In a brief moment, we sight and circle two dories, one with 14 and the other with 20 men. Instantly we flash to our base, "Ship submarined-two boats and a raft with 30 survivors-position." Curley hands Buck a slip. . . . "Position

Back and forth we circle looking for the conning tower or the periscope, but constantly in sight of the survivors. For a half an hour more we fly around. Then in the distance we sight a ship. The radio goes into action. Details are exchanged. The rescuing ship cuts through the water, full steam.

We head for home still hoping to get a crack at that sub. We have never seen one-don't know what it'll feel like when we do. But every man in our ship was literally praying, yes, praying . . . "Please, please, just give us one little shot at

Then as one man Buck and I jump up . . . almost through the windshield. We exchange glances. Buck picks up the phone, tells the bombardier to open the bomb bay, warns cameraman to get ready. There's a speck, broadening into a horizontal object in the distance.

It looks like a ship. No. it's not a ship. it looks like a sub now! We step it up to

As we hear, an interminable lapse of seconds, we see it is a Navy blimp flying so close to the water that it seems to be swimming along. Our hearts sink, and tired, we turn to head for home.

But just as we are almost resigned to giving up the blimp drops a flare indicating a sub below.

Buck banks the ship practically over on its side. We all hang on, and Lord knows how, but he's got the whole situation diagnosed already. He orders Grouse to stand by, lines up the plane on the flare, makes the "run." and then as we fly over the flare the

We circle proudly. The blimp gives us no sign of congratulation . . . just drops its nose down again and continues her search. She's practically standing still and only 50 feet above the water.

There goes another flare. We zoom down again and Buck warns, "Hold it. Grouse, or we'll bomb the tail right off the blimp." Grouse bites his lip. He holds his breath as Buck steadies the ship. I wave him a bit to the left with my hand. Steady again.

Grouse grips the stick. He toys with

New Army of Women Workers

By Gladwin Hill,

DETROIT, March 8.—The greatest army of women workers in history soon will be at machines in this great warproduction center, helping to turn out the planes, tanks and guns.

They already are working by the thousands, and when production gets in full swing it probably will be by the hundreds of thousands.

Twenty thousand of the 80,000 workers at the rising Ford Willow Run bombing plane plant are scheduled to be Kanzler estimates that between 800,000 and 1,000,000 will be needed in the erstwhile auto industry, against the maximum of 500,000 in the carproduction days.

Although at the moment there is extensive unemployment in the area due to the conversion shutdown, they are figuring on having to import at least 150,000 workers from outside the area. That is in addition to all the potential factory hands available within the areaa lot of whom are women.

Another factor is the draft, which will greatly reduce the present reservoir of men. The manager of a gun factory told me a few days ago that a third of his men were liable to imminent

Women workers, in small numbers, are an old story around Detroit. A lot of them date back to post-World War boom days, when there was a similar labor shortage, some to that pre-union era when women were hired because they were cheaper than men.

Today there is a State law that if a woman is doing the same work as a man in a given factory, she must get the same pay.

And, although some managers won't have a woman in a factory, many women have been hired because they were considered better than men at some jobs, like inspecting-could it be that they are hypercritical? - and assembling small parts requiring deft handwork.

And at least one factory supervisor here finds women better learners. The first class of six women has just started in the training school at the Willow Run bomber plant, which eventually will have more than 8,000 students.

The auto industry's mass-production system of breaking a manufacturing job down into hundreds of individual operations, which is being applied likewise to armament production, has widely dispelled the main obstacle to women doing the same work as men, the matter of strength.

Of course, it takes a certain physical stamina to do any job for eight hours a day, but many of the machines they are using here take no more muscle than an

Washington's Book Reveals 1776 War Costs

By T. G. Abbott.

The page in Washington's account book written by himself, which was reproduced in last Sunday's installment, revealed the bartering of salt for household expenses. This incident is too interesting not to be mentioned here, so we quote from Surg. Gen. James Thacher's military diary, which he kept while attached to Gen. Washington's headquarters during the winter of 1780.

January, 1780, was not quite so severe as the January at Valley Forge, but sufferings and privations still persisted, and a scarcity of provisions prevailed.

During this month Gen. Thacher wrote in his diary as follows: Today General Washington's housekeeper, a very worthy Irishwoman named Mrs. Thompson, reported to General Washington, "Sir, we have nothing but the rations to cook." *Well, Mrs. Thompson, you must then cook the rations, for I have not a farthing to give you." "If you please, sir, let one of the gentlemen give me an order for six bushels of salt." "Six bushels of salt! For what?" "To preserve the fresh beet, sir." One of the aides gave the order and the next day his excellency's table was amply provided. Mrs. Thompson was sent for and told she had done very wrong to expend her own money, for it was not known when she could be repaid. "I owe you," said his excellency, "too much already to permit the debt being increased and our situation is not at this moment such as to induce very sanguine hope." "Dear sir," said the old lady, "it is always darkest just before daylight and I hope your excellency will forgive me for bartering the salt for other necessaries which are now on the table." Salt was then $8 a bushel and might always be exchanged with the country people for provisions.

On the page reproduced in this installment, Washington, continuing his accounts, made this entry: Sept. 1st 1781-To Daniel Grant, Baltimore, his accounts 13 pounds 3 shillings 3 pence equal to 10 pounds 10 shillings 7 pence. About $65 as valued today.

Grant was the owner of the Fountain Inn, in Baltimore where Washington frequently stopped and the money he paid to Grant was for eight dinners for himself and suite and meals for seven servants. The care, by Grant, of 16 horses was aso included in this sum.

September 17th Washington wrote: To expenses on the road per Colonel Smith, 55 pounds 4 shillings 3 pence Pensa (the currency of Pennsylvania) is reduced to 44 pounds 3 shilling 5 pence and 49 pounds 6 shillings 8 pence lawful together is 93 pounds 10 shillings 1 pence. Lincoln reached the boat before Stephens. The latter was delicate and dressed that morning to combat the March wind. When Stephens came into the salon where Lincoln was, he and his attendant began to strip off the extra clothing. years in preparation Theodore Roosevelt once said, the more we know of a nation's past the better able we are to take care of its present and prepare for its future. If we learn nothing from history it is only because we do not read history. In January, 1777, Congress began issuing Continental dollars and paying Washington in that currency against the vouchers he submitted enumerating his expenses. He made his debit entries in the Continental dollars when writing the page we have reproduced in facsimile today, but he still had to reckon their value with the lawful currency set up by Congress earlier in the war, which accounts for his entering his expenses in two columns.

In the recapitulation of his accounts for the entire war. Washington wrote that while these Continental dollars were credited 40 to 1 many of them did not fetch 1 for 100. One of the chief causes of the rapid and early depreciation of these dollars, was the counterfeiting of them by the enemy and then paying their bills to the Colonists with the counterfeits, who in turn had to use them to pay their taxes.

Like the expression "from a needle to an anchor" Washington's purchases, necessary to maintain his headquarters and run the war, included everything from milk to powder. One of his vouchers for April 1, 1776 shows the purchase of red wine, soap, candles, 113 quarts of milk and the cost of baking bread. On the same day he records the paying of expenses incurred by Emanuel Pliarne and Pierre Penet on their journey from Rhode Island to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia. These two French gentlemen had brought 20 tons of powder to Washington. They had been of great assistance to the Colonies and before Penet returned to France he was brevetted aide-de-camp to Washington, the only honorary aide ever appointed to the commander in chief.

Washington paid for hundreds of things no modern-day general would ever be called upon to pay. He even paid for tailoring work, done for his servants attached to his headquarters. The money he spent for this work and entered in the page of accounts shown here, was for a pair of riding breeches for William, one of his servants.

The entry he made near the bottom of the page to John Likely, was for tea purchased when the Army passed through Philadelphia in September, 1781. John Likely was a Philadelphia mer-

Washington's great regard for the public interests and the meticulous way he administered the public's funds sent him by the Congress (when they had it, which they frequently didn't) very definitely shows up throughout his entire account book. One example of this appears on the credit side of his ledger-opposite the debit page reproduced here-when he entered a credit of 28 pounds as having been received from Congress, but which actually was the value he placed on various sundries brought from the British stores captured in Yorktown. Even the edible spoils of war, this great general refused to accept without crediting the public with their monetary value.

In the concluding article about this recently discovered account book of George Washington's appearing next week. Washington personally tells why he hesitated to include Mrs. Washington's travel expenses when she would visit him at his headquarters between the close of one

Blackout Reveals Defense Progress; Know Your District of Columbia

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Last week was notable in civic circles for the practice "blackout" in the civilian defense program and for the completion or the passage of some needed legislation. The "blackout" was a great success as a civilian effort but a "dud" so far as voluntary compliance by the Federal and District Governments was concerned.

The President on Thursday signed the bill authorizing the Zoning Commission to require future building construction to provide off-street parking facilities. The law clothes the commission with both the authority and the discretion to require the furnishing of such facilities wherever and whenever they believe it to be necessary in new construction.

Two other bills signed by the President on Thursday changed the name of the Conduit road to MacArthur boulevard and permitted the vestry of Rock Creek Parish to utilize for burial sites certain land within Rock Creek Cemetery. The Conduit Road Citizens' Association has already changed its name to MacArthur Boulevard Citizens' Association.

The House on Monday completed action on three measures and sent them to the White House. They were the resolution directing the District Commissioners to make a preliminary study to determine the feasibility of a subway, for both rail and vehicular traffic, in the District; a bill to make the theft of tires, tubes, batteries, gasoline and other automobile accessories a felony during the war and the bill to authorize a non-profit organization to operate a canteen in the District Tuberculosis Sanitoria at Glenn Dale, Md.

Both the Red Cross war fund campaign and that for the Police Boys' Clubs have lagged and are far behind the goal set. The Red Cross collections are still below 50 per cent of its goal of $750,000. The effort is being continued. The Police Boys' Club Campaign Committee on Wednesday reported that over 58 per cent of its required $100,000 has been pledged. The campaign will be extended

The Senate on Tuesday passed a resolution authorizing and directing the Senate District Committee to conduct an investigation of the District water system. Expenditure of $5,000 from the contingent fund of the Senate is authorized for the inquiry. Administration and operation and rates will be surveyed.

Local Civilian Defense Organization Making Progress.

The general response to the call to duty of the air-raid wardens and other local volunteers on Tuesday night showed that, in most sections, substantial progress has been made in the organization work. The enthusiasm and the businesslike way in which these patriots went about their arduous task on a raw, blustery night were most encouraging.

This observer made the rounds in his own home section and talked with some of the wardens. They were alert, thorough and courteous. Most of them had previously visited each home in the area of their assignment and had become acquainted with the neighbors they are to serve and aid in an emergency. Some had never met their neighbors heretofore and expressed pleasure at this opportunity to know them.

These volunteer workers included some of the old "wheelhorses" in the citizens' association. Others were newcomers or those who have not before felt the urge to take part in the work with and for the community.

The plan of organization put in operation for the District civilian defense has impressed many who have been active in citizen organizations as being a system that it would be well to perpetuate when final victory will permit a return to normalcy.

Recently a letter written to the editor of a morning paper criticized what the writer called "the complete helplessness of the Capital of this great Nation when teamwork is urgently needed." He expressed doubt as to whether any other city in the country is in worse condition from the standpoint of civilian defense. It is nobody's fault," he added, "but the result of the absence of political machinery existent in any voting community."

The citizens and civic organizations afford our best approach when a general teamwork job is required for the community. These associations at best can form only a nucleus from which to work. Really, there exists, possibly, a greater need for complete and compact organization of the citizens of the voteless and unrepresented District of Columbia than in a voting community. All of the local problems could be better handled had the citizens an organization following the lines of the local civilian defense plan. Such an organization, it is believed, would hasten the day when the District would be given its just right to voting representation in the Congress and the electoral college.

Compromise on Non-Resident Judges

Differences between the House and Senate on the court merger bill have been reconciled in conference. The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment making the terms of judges of the Municipal Court ten years instead of six. The terms of the judges of the Municipal Court of Appeals are retained at six years.

The Tydings amendment, authorizing the appointment to the bench of non-residents, has been modified. The amendment as adopted by the Senate permitted the appointment of lawyers who have been actively practicing in the courts of the District of Columbia for five years immediately preceding their appointment and who reside within 10 miles of the District. The conferees agreed on a compromise provision under which not exceeding two non-residents may be appointed and serve as judges of the Municipal Court. It is required that such non-residents must have engaged in active practice before the local courts during the five years immediately preceding their appointment.

The three judges of the Municipal Court of Appeals must all be residents of the District of Columbia for the five years preceding appointment and during this time engaged in practice of law before local courts or serving as judges of such courts.

The two non-residents for appointment and service on the Municipal Court may hold legal residence in any State instead of being restricted to residence in Maryland or Virginia as provided in the Tydings amendment.

There is keen satisfaction in the culmination of the extended effort to bring about this needed reform in the local judicial structure. The organic measure creating these new courts is regarded as a major achievement in legislation for the District and is expected to establish a landmark long to be remembered.

Some disappointment has been expressed at lifting the requirement for the appointment of only bona fide District residents as judges. It was reasonably expected that the same residence qualifications would have been imposed as long required for judges of the Municipal and Police Courts which the new Municipal . . . .

Know the District of Columbia-No. 1-Its Genesis

The District of Columbia was created by Congress as the seat of the Government under authority of the Constitution, Article I, section 8 and 17th clause of the enumerated powers of Congress. It is as follows: "To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States. * * **

During the Revolutionary War the Continental Congress was the sole governing body over the joint activities of these Colonies which had declared their independence from the government of Great Britain. Its capital, or meeting place of the Congress, was of a migratory type customary under such conditions. Because of the uncertainties and perils of the Revolution Congress was frequently obliged to adjourn from place to place.

Places, otherwise desirable, were at times unavailable because of being occupied by the enemy or too close to the enemy's lines. The determining factor in selecting the meeting place for Congress during this period was, largely, the location of the two armies and freedom from menace by the foe. None of these migrations of the Congress and its capital were due to any threat or menace of the Colonial troops, but entirely to a fear of interference of the British

Philadelphia appears to have been a favorite place for the meetings of the Congress because of its commodious State House and its accessibility. There was, however, a growing rivalry between the different sections for the location of the capital at some favorite spot within their particular section. A commission was created by the Continental Congress to select a site on the Delaware River, but no selection was made. To the first Congress under the Constitution was left the selection of the location of the capital of the new Nation. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Germantown, Havre de Grace, Trenton, Wrights Ferry, on the Susquehanna, and a location on the Potomac all had their ardent partisans for selection as the capital site. The Potomac River location finally was agreed upon by Congress in 1790 as the result of a "log-rolling" arrangement between Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson.

Federation Members Active In Civilian Defense Work

Survey Shows Nearly All Delegates Holding Committee or Warden Posts; Regular Civic Program Curtailed

By BAINBRIDGE CRIST.

From its president on down through the ranks, the overwhelming najority of the delegates to the Federation of Citizens' Associations are carrying on some form of civilian defense work in addition to their civic duties, it was revealed in a survey made by The Star.

President Harry N. Stull, recently named assistant to Chief Air-Raid Warden Clement Murphy, is setting a fast pace for his fellow delegates, working four or five hours every night and all day Sunday on his new civilian defense tasks. In fact, he has been forced to turn over routine work of the federation to Vice President Harry Wender. He will continue to preside at the meetings, however, he said.

The press of the defense activities has already prompted the federation to cancel its usual meeting last . night and the prospect is good that other meetings likewise will be called off. Committee chairmen just do not have time to call meetings and prepare reports for the delegates, it was brought out.

Answers Vary.

When asked whether civilian defense work was taking a good deal area. of time, the answers of delegates ranged from those who said frankly that it did not or that they could not spare much time to the sector warden who said he was considering putting a "Never Home" sign on chairman of Friendship area Dehis front door. Most of them were unable to give the weekly average of time spent on such duties, but a warden for Georgetown area. few were specific. Milo H. Brinkley, deputy warden for the Georgetown area, for instance, said he spent Committee. Sheldon W. Fairchild, from 10 to 15 hours a week on his auxiliary detective at headquarwork, and Mrs. Ernest W. Howard, first assistant deputy warden in the mittee of Hampshire Heights and 930 H street N.W. asked if all this took much of her husband's time, she exclaimed:

Another delegate who was specific about the time which defense work consumes was J. B. Dickman, jr., of North Cleveland Park, where he is chairman of the Defense Committee. In a recent Sunday, he said, he spent from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., 1 to 2:15 p.m. and 3:30 to 6:45 p.m. in making various trips

Visitors to Navajo County Find Curious Courtesy Customs

There Is Etiquette to Watch to Avoid Being Classed as III-Bred

GALLUP, N. Mex., March 7.-Travelers contemplating a first visit to the Navajo Indian Reservation, which spreads over Western New Mexico, will get much more from the trip through a working knowledge of some of the common rules of Navajo courtesy.

Probably the first rule to remember is that the Navajos do not shake hands, but clasp them gently for an interval depending upon the length of time since the last meeting. Omits Good-by.

It should also be remembered that it is ill-mannered to ask a Navajo his name, and after a pleasant chat or visit, the traveler should feel no concern if he receives no farewell salute from the Indian. The Navajo never says good-by.

The Navajos have a visiting song for social calls, and when some one approaches the hogan singing this song, it is impolite for the prospeccollector and he'll stretch your dis- tive host to go outside to see who is coming

When entering a hogan, the visitor should remember that it is impolite to pass on the north side of the fire, which burns in the middle of the room. Always walk on the left side when entering a Navajo's house.

Slow to Show Recognition. At the many trading posts which dot the vast expanse of the Navajo Reservation, the traveler may learn some of the simple rules of courtesy observed by this proud and haughty

When a Navajo enters a trading post where several of his friends will clasp hands with all of them. If he doesn't, it shows ill manners and his friends will be slighted.

JASPER PARK, March 7.-Belief of Jasper Park Lodge.

Jasper Park Lodge, which nestles amid neaks in the Athahaska Vallev, had the best season in its history last year, Mr. Cuhney said, and judging from advance reservations so far this year, everything points to an "equal if not better" season. ### War and Navy Units Back Parity in Pay For Reserve Officers

House Committee To Study Bill; Posts Open in Signal Corps

The War and Navy Departments last week approved a bill which would give Reserve officers parity in pay with Regular officers while on active duty in time of war or national emergency. The bill is sponsored by Representative Maas, Republican, of Minnesota, of the House Naval Affairs Committee. As originally introduced, the measure affected only officers of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve. Feeling that Army officers should be included in the bill, the War Department requested that it be amended to include National Guard and Reserve Corps commissioned men.

Mr. Maas will support the suggested amendments. The bill will be taken up by the House Naval Affairs Committee as soon as the investigation of the fire on the U. S. S. Lafayette (Normandie) is concluded. The Budget Bureau has no objection to the bill.

Vacancies exist for immediate appointment of a limited number of second lieutenants in the Army Signal Corps. Applicants for commission must be between 18 and 46 years of age and be able to meet the prescribed physical standards, and they must have a college degree or its practical equivalent in electrical engineering or electronic physics. Civilians or enlisted personnel in any component of the Army in either active or inactive status are eligible to apply for commissions.

Commissioned personnel who meet the physical and educational qualifications who wish to transfer to the Signal Corps in grade may make application. Personnel commissioned under this authority will be ordered to active duty at Fort Monmouth, N. J., for a brief course of instruction, and then will be assigned to duty.

Win, Lose or Draw

By FRANCIS E. STAN. Star Staff Correspondent,

A Boy Out on the Errand of a Man

CLEARWATER, Fla., March 7.—There have been three notable instances in the modern history of major league baseball where club owners, acting on whim, hunch or fancy, have appointed extremely young men—"boy managers," it has been stylish to call them-as heads of ailing teams that seemed to need a little something extra.

In two instances nothing less than remarkable results were achieved, and both by the same club owner, Clark Griffith of Washington. In 1924 he appointed 27-year-old Stanley Harris, out of a clear sky, and Harris won two straight American League pennants. In 1933 Griffith selected 26-year-old Joe Cronin, another infielder, and Cronin won a flag in his

But here in this bleak little town on the Gulf of Mexico, where the Cleveland Indians are training, the cards seem heavily stacked against the youngest big league pilot of all times. This would be the 24-year-old Lou Boudreau, who, after only two and a half years under the big tent, finds himself the leader of a team playing in a town long famous as the graveyard of managers.

The immortal Tris Speaker and Walter Johnson weren't good enough for Cleveland as managers. Lee Fohl, Steve O'Neil, Oscar Vitt and Roger Peckingpaugh were fired as field tacticians, the latter twice. Now a boy is being dispatched to do a job that men couldn't do.

Even With Feller the Tribe Wasn't Close

The condemned man who ate a hearty breakfast was a guy who dallied with his food, compared with the young, black-haired French-German boy. The thin, wiry, pale chief of the Indians, when we talked with him yesterday in the dressing room, was wearing a rubber shirt. "I'm weighing 165," he said, "more than I've ever scaled. It feels good."

Regardless of how it felt, Boudreau's gaining of weight since he was appointed manager of the Indians stands out as a dietetic miracle of a sort. Last year, with a 25-game winner in Bob Feller, a slugger who had driven across 911 runs in seven-and-one-half seasons (Hal Trosky), and a promising young outfielder (Clarence Campbell), all putting out for a veteran, well-liked manager (Peckinpaugh), the Clevelands finished 26 games behind the New York Yankees.

It sounds incredible but those are the figures. The Indians not only had Feller and Trosky but Boudreau, himself, was called the best shortstop in the league, Jeff Heath batted .340 and Manager Peckinpaugh was no wooden Indian on the bench.

But the Tribe finished 26 games off the pace and Boudreau, immediately after being appointed manager, properly was appalled at hearing the news that (1) Feller was inducted into the Navy, (2) Trosky had by what he terms the inconsistent retired from baseball due to migraine headaches. (3) Campbell was and unreasonable demands of holdinducted into the Army, or will be; (4) Heath and Walker are such stubborn holdouts that rumor is they will be traded off.

Lou Could Become the Champ of Cradle Pilots

If Boudreau emulates Harris and Cronin he will create automatically a class by himself among the boy managers. The team that Griffith handed over to Harris in the winter of 1924 was an old, expert team that lacked a spark. It had pitchers like Johnson and Mogridge and Reuther, infielders like Judge and Peckinpaugh and Bluege, outfielders like Goslin and Rice, and a catcher like Muddy Ruel.

The team that Cronin inherited in 1933 had a catcher like Luke Sewell and good, reliable infields and outfields. For pitchers it had White- less, of course, I'm offered somehill, Weaver, Crowder, Walter Stewart and Jack Russell. It, too, was an old team. All it lacked was a fiery child to lead them.

But Boudreau is faced with a task that well might have tested a McGraw or a Huggins or a George Stallings. With Feller gone, he hasn't a first-class pitcher on his club, and this is with a deep bow to Lefty Al Milnar. A rookie at first base will try to bat across more than 100 runs, by way of filling the shoes of Trosky. If Heath and Walker play, they will represent, until proved otherwise, morale problems. If they don't— he now is suspended and will not a Cleveland-Detroit deal is hinted-it may be Boudreau's task to squeeze from such famed tempermentalists as Buck Newsom and Rudy York, now of the Tigers, the best there is in each of them.

Boudreau's Gang Could Possibly Finish Last

Being a big-league manager isn't a soft job when one is only 24 and barely out of the rookie class and suddenly deprived of a great pitcher and penalty as of this moment; the a prodigious runs-batted-across guy. It isn't soft because the manager, too, must lay down the rules and devise complicated sets of signals and will be sliced.' hold his own with press and with fans and with his bosses, the latter, in Boudreau's case, being Owner Alva Bradley and Peckinpaugh, fired as pilot, but elevated to the post of general manager.

A manager must pick and rate pitchers. He must give clubhouse orations and levy fines and speak before the Lions and Kiwanis Clubs. Atop all that Boudreau, only 24, mind you, must play shortstop in the manner expected, and hit that ball in the clutches. A manager who is not a strong hitter, and who fails to win personally a game in Merriwell Leonard. I tried in every manner to fashion, very likely will be called a bum. Boudreau never has hit .300, even without carrying the extra load.

Boudreau was studying a pitching chart when we first talked with him the other day. With the deftness of a Cardinal he must find a way to produce a person or people to replace Feller. He also must have hitters, especially one able to match Trosky. And, if he should find all this he might need heaven, too, because if the Indians finished 26 games back last year they certainly cannot be rated better than fourth or fifth-place

"If we get into the first division," young Lou was saying, "I'll be well pleased." It so happens, as things stand now, according to the experts, that fourth place is a very high goal. The Indians, with a bit of bad luck, under the present emergency conconceivably could finish lower than the Washingtons, who generally are being picked to pluck mushrooms in the cellar.

All Offers to Holdout Withdrawn, Salary Cut Threatened

Dutch to Train at Own Expense if He Reports; Apt to Go on Block

By BURTON HAWKINS,

ORLANDO, Fla., Mar. 7.-Irked out Dutch Leonard, President Clark Griffith tonight withdrew all offers made to Washington's leading pitcher and intimated that if the portly nickle-ball specialist now signs it will be at reduced salary.

Asked if he would trade Leonard if he persisted in refusing to sign his 1942 contract, Griffith fumed, under no circumstances will I consider trading a holdout player-unthing I just can't turn down."

Considerably irritated over Leonard's attitude. Griffith summoned reporters and issued a formal statement to the effect that he had offered Dutch a salary of $13,000, that the semi-bald right-hander was holding out for a bonus and that be placed on the Nats' payrol! until pronounced in condition by Washington bosses.

Griffith had isisued a 48-hour ultimatum to Leonard to come to terms, and when the deadline expired tonight he handed reporters typewritten statements of his standing in the matter. Furthermore, he is inconsistent in his demandsone day asking for a bonus of $5,000 and the next a bonus based on the Washington club having an attendance of 325,000 people in 1942. Well, Washington would starve to death on such an attendance. "Consequently, the unreasonable demands made by Leonard have compelled me to withdraw all offers made him and allow his case to be governed by the major league rule which provides that a player refusing to report for spring training must train at his own expense and not be placed on the payroll of the club until he is pronounced be in condition to play his normal

Whitney Horse, Once an Invalid, Victor by Head

Alsab, Fifth, Is Best Of 'Name' Racers in $50,000 Handicap

By CLYDE TALBOT.

MIAMI, Fla., Mar. 7 .- One of the most dramatic stories in thoroughbred history reached its storybook climax today when Mrs. Payne Whitney's The Rhymer, the "blood transfusion horse," came up with his closing strides to win the Widener handicap, richest race of the winter season.

Nobody had given the Rhymer & look-in on the first prize of $53,-950 in the Hialeah Park race. The handsome chestnut, which only two years ago was regarded as a hopeless invalid, wasn't considered in the same class with the group of great stake horses running today-Market Wise, Mioland, Challedon, Attention, Alsab and the others. But when the field of 17 had completed the 14-mile route of the Widener to the frenzied cheers of a crowd of 25.048, it was Mrs. Whitney's pet that had his head out in front of Col. E. R. Bradley's Best Seller, the second horse, while the star runners were nowhere. Market Wise, the favorite, never was in the race, and only little Alsab of the "name" horses gave his owner a run for the money. He Was Given "Running Blood." The Rhymer was bred by Mrs. Whitney's Greentree Stables and horsemen say she formed a particular attachment for him, to the extent that when he became a very seriously sick 2-year-old she insisted he be given a blood transfusion, a thing unheard of at that time. At any rate, he recovered to run a grand race under the skillful handling of the veteran Eddie Arcaro today and to repay fully his owner for her affection. The few who had their money on the game outsider realized the big reward of $32.80 for each $2 mutuel ticket. Best Seller, which led the procession most of the way and yielded to The Rhymer only in a final dramatic rush for the wire, returned $53.20 for the place. Another rank outsider, Olympus, was third, a half length farther back, paying $12 for a show ticket. Stars Take Great Beating. Seldom has a field of great horses taken a more surprising beating. From the instant starter George Cassidy sent them off to an almost perfect start from two sets of stalls none of the favorites ever gave his backers a real hope. Best Seller was in front the first time past the grandstand and never yielded his position until the run down the stretch. Market Wise wound up a dismal eighth after having run next to last a great part of the way for those who had made him a 2-1

Fourth by a length in the big jam at the finish was Our Boots. Fifth was Alsab, the great little 2-year-old king of last year, competing in a field of older and bigger horses. He justified the decision of his owner. Al Sabath, in starting him, even though he couldn't quite come through for his thousands of

Alsab Once in Front. As the field rounded the last turn and came tearing down the stretch Alsab swung far to the outside and gained on the leaders at every jump. Back of Alsab in this order, finished Challedon, Get Off, Market Wise, Mioland, Gramps, Pictor, Attention, Pomayva, Waller, Porter's Cap, Dit and Great Union. Almost any of them was supposed to be a better horse than The Rhymer, which was beaten only three days ago in a grade B handicap. Rider Arcaro, in fact, was not too enthusiastic about The Rhymer when it was over, apparently feeling that his "Arcaro" horsemanship had been quite a big factor in the

By LEWIS F. ATCHISON. A galaxy of track stars, including the two brightest in the winter firmament---Greg Rice, world champion 2-miler, and Gilbert Dodds, his most persistent rival and recent conqueror of Les MacMitchell over the mile route-will stretch their legs tomorrow night in the ninth annual renewal of the Catholic University indoor games, starting at 7:30, at Riverside Stadium.

Competition actually will get under way with the running of preliminary heats beginning in the afternoon, but the most appetizing dishes will not be served up until evening when scintillating fields march postward for the 212-mile the traditional Rector's 1,000, Killion Mile and Abbey Club 50. Rice, who appeared here last year in a record-breaking 2-mile race, is expected to give his opponents a handicap in the "special" in an effort to crack the mark hung up several years ago by Taisto Maki, the Finnish star. Oddly enough Rice won the race in which Maki made the record of 11:39.5, as it was over the 3-mile route and he staged his customary brilliant finish to kill off

Dodds Wanted for Mile. Whether Dodds, who twice has forced Rice to near-records this winter in 2-mile duels, will oppose the former Notre Dame star or drop down into the Killion Mile was still a matter of conjecture late last night. Dorsey Griffith, director of the games, announced that numerous requests had been received to have Dodds run the shorter distance in an assault on the District record of 4:18 made last year by Walter

It was pointed out that Dodds' thrilling victory last week over Les MacMitchell, heretofore recognized as undisputed successor to Glenn Cunningham, had elevated him to prominence equal to that of Rice and that most fans would prefer to see him lead the Killion field than

A smart, but not super-terrific field already is entered in the mile, including Stirling Kehoe of Maryland, Dave Polansky, Ohrback A. A.; Spud Lockwood, Duke; Jim Rafferty, New York A. C.; Tommy Fields, Maryland R. O. T. C., and Johnny Wall, Roanoke A. A., and still other fans argued that Dodds' addition to

In an effort to appease all hands, Griffith spent most of last night on the long distance telephone trying to get Campbell Kane of Indiana to run against Dodds in the Killion. Kane recently outdistanced John Borican in the Penn A. C. games and would make anybody run for the bacon. Invited with the Hoosier ace was Fred Wilt, who could run in either the mile or the special.

Regardless of which race he enters, Dodds is certain to show the customers a fancy brand of hoofing for his legwork against MacMitchell stamped him as one of the finest milers of the decade. Rice, of course, always has his eye on the clock trying to better his best time and may be depended on for a sparkling exhibition. Griffith plans to dole out handicaps to his opponents to help speed him on his way to a new mark and also to help the spectators realize his sole-searing speed as he picks up the various runners during the 30 turns around the wooden saucer.

But Rice and Dobbs will not be the whole show tomorrow night. The shotput should be a classic in itself with what is probably the best crew of pellet pushers assembled thus far stanza. competing. # Schoolboy Teams Move Into Semifinals of Star's Tourney Without Favorite

St. John's, Bethesda, W.-L. and Prep All Hit Swift Pace

Resume Metro Struggle Tomorrow Night With Contests at Tech

By GEORGE HUBER. A championship favorite is hard to name among the four teams remaining for tomorrow night's semifinal round in The Evening Star's 10th annual metropolitan invitation interscholastic basket ball tournament, but it is certain from the class of play in two nights of torrid battling that whoever wins richly will deserve rating as the outstanding schoolboy quint in this section outside the District public high series. Semi-final play opens at 7:30 tomorrow night at Tech gym with Washington-Lee, Northern Virginia champ, tackling Georgetown Prep, Catholic League titlist, with Bethesda-Chevy Chase, holder of the Montgomery County crown, and St. John's, first-round winner over Gonzaga, last year's metropolitan champion, facing in the nightcap. The four teams on form displayed so far have about equal chances of capturing the Metro crown. The final is slated tentatively for Wednesday night,

Phillips Leads Generals. Washington-Lee's rangy, well-balanced quint is led by Bobby Phillips who hit the cords for 14 points when the Generals disposed of George Washington in the first round, but there is balance all down the line with nearly every player able to hit a hot pace. Georgetown Prep, its opponent tomorrow, is much the same type of team. The leading player here is tall Johnny Showell, but even if the Generals manage to bottle ments-others likely will be able to find the basket consistently. Ray Schneider especially can be counted on for some snappy scoring effort, and Prep is not being handicapped as was expected by the large size of Tech's playing floor.

The Garrett Park quint played many of its games this season in its own small gym where a zone defense works to advantage and trouble was expected when it transferred this style to Tech. Coach Orrel Mitchell borrowed a large gym for practice last week however and the Little Hoyas were able to work the zone with real effect in their first round game against Bladensburg.

Stationed at Bolling Field from 1936 through 1939, Robinson and his wife, the former Margaret Carspecken, won fame and friends not only through their playing but also their qualities of sportsmanship which they manifested on every occasion.

Six Stakes Scheduled For Tropical Park

Meet Opening Tomorrow To Distribute About $275,000 to Winners

MIAMI, Fla., March 7.—Although overshadowed by today's big final racing program at Hialeah Park, its cross-town rival, Tropical Park, will open a 29-day spring racing period Monday at its plant in Coral Gables.

The smaller track has scheduled six stake races, with purse money totaling $32,500, an increase of $9,500 over last year. During the spring meeting Tropical will distribute about $275,000 to the owners of winning throughbreds. The $1,000 minimum purse established during the last meeting will be maintained despite the threat of war and a somewhat smaller tourist season. Closing day, April 10, will be marked by the Tropical Handicap, tops with a $10,000 purse. The Coral Gables Handicap has been increased from $3,000 to $7,500; the Ponce de Leon carries $5,000, although formerly called the Royal Palm and worth $3,000.

The $5,000-added De Soto Handicap replaces last year's $3.000 Pan

The Rhymer

Under Don Meade's guidance he remained on Best Seller's flank as far as the three-quarter-mile mark and still was in a contending fourth place as they reached the stretch, but from there on in he looked as though he was pulling a harrow.

Mioland, pride of the West, was to win at the three-eighth pole, but | far back in the early stages, made a strong run around the last turn pull into fifth entering the stretch, but then faded as quickly. The great money winner, Challedon, was on the tag end most of the way and only raced up into sixth place in the last 100 yards.

It was an amazingly tough day for the good horses. Most of their riders blamed the big field for their inability to get through and make a run. Wendell Eads, on Market Wise, said "it was so much of a scramble my mount couldn't run

The Rhymer Is 13th at Half.

The Rhymer drew the number one pole position and was off to a good fourth under Arcaro's spirited riding. At the 1/2-mile he had fallen far back to 13th, taking plenty of dust, and at the %-mile was ninth. At the mile he was sixth—still with nobody paying him any attentionand the same rounding into the

From there on it was between him, Best Seller, Alsab, Our Boots and Olympus. They resembled a team of fire horses in the last 100 yards. But just before the payoff wire, Arcaro shoved his horse in front and held him there by main strength.

Prior to this one. The Rhymer had won only $2,575 toward paying for that transfusion, but his first stake victory boosted his earnings to $63,-400. They must have filled him with running blood. His time today was 2:05.15, slow for the Widener, but very handy for the occasion.

Pacini, Defending Title, Last Capital Man to Win in Baltimore

With their pockets well drained after 10 futile attempts to land their first victory in a Baltimore major bowling tournament this season, District topflight duckpinners headed by Ollie Pacini, the defending champion, will be out in full force tonight to land top prize of $125 in the fifth annual Sabatino singles at the Franklin Bowling Center. The event will be rolled in three shifts, the first at 2:30 this afternoon, the second at 4 and the final at 5:30.

Oddly, Pacini, who has competed in few money events the last several years, was the last Capital sharpshooter to triumph in an Orio'e event. Since his victory in the Sabatino with a record for the sixgame affair of 848, Washington pinmen who once won with regularity have not fared any too well in the Monumental City

Over a period of 10 years it was almost a safe bet that such stars as Astor Clarke, Tony Santini, Hokie Smith, Perce Wolfe, Karl Gochenour, Al Wright, Cletus Pannell, Ed Blakeney and Joe Harrison would come back with most of the coin in Baltimore events.

Unless a Capital winner turns up tonight, the local howitzers will have only the Johnny Ruppel-Johnny Vaeth Memorial tournament left on their Baltimore bowling schedule in which to recoup some of their prestige.

Jimmy Marks of Baltimore's New Highland drives has announced the cancellation of the third annual Robinson-McGraw tournament which was carded for next Sunday

Engineers' Club Plans Yearly Dinner Tuesday Night

Catholic University alumni will meet in the gymnasium of the university at 8 p.m. Thursday to elect officers and outline a program for the rest of the year for the Washington chapter of the alumni association, S. Dolan Donohoe, '16, president of the organization, announced yesterday

Encouraged by the large attendance of the younger graduates of C. picture custodian of the photographic records of the Signal Corps. Under her custodianship, in the well-ordered office over which she presides, are over 150,000 photographs. Their range is a kaleidoscopic, panoramic one, from Civil War times down to the immediate present, with the official picturization of the damage done at Hickam Field, Hawaii, when the Japs bombed it on December 7. These Signal Corps photographs constitute a pictorial treasure house of incalculable value to historians of the present and future.

Important historical items in this collection are the negatives made from the original glass plates of the day night in the gymnasium, with famous Brady photographs of the Athletic Director Edmund La Fond Civil War era. # Ingenuity Cuts Down

Delays for Lack of Machine Tools

> By DAVID J. WILKIE, Wide World Automotive Editor.

DETROIT. March 7.—A little of his trade and adopt an entirely more than five weks ago the automobile industry stepped on its plant conversion accelerator. Expectation of some clarification

It began tearing out overhead next week of the confused situation | conveyors and car assembling lines, regarding terms of sale of Govern- shifting machine tools about and installing new equipment so that all its famed mass production technique could be turned to the task of war weapon manufacture. Today the conversion job

"ahead of schedule." The expanded output of anti-aircraft cannon, aviation engine parts, bomber plane sub-assemblies and tanks and all the things the industry can produce to help win the war quite evidently is going to be attained sooner than generally was expected. Machine tool equipment continues to be the most urgently needed and most difficult to obtain, but with the aid of priorities and the ingenuity of the production chiefs in converting older equipment, the necessary tools are moving into the factories.

The progress is perhaps most noticeable in the larger factories. These plants, some of them with as much as 1,000,000 square feet of floor space, presented the most startling picture a month ago when almost overnight they were stripped of their accustomed equipment to be left as barren as gigantic unoccu#### pied airplane hangars. Many Bare Spots Remain.

Today they rapidly are taking on the business of providing permanent their traditional machine shop appearance again. There still are many bare spots, of course, where installations are yet to be made or where two or three erstwhile passenger car assembly lines are to be replaced with a single line for the assembling of huge Army tanks. It is a conspicuous fact, however that in virtually every one of these

Banks to Back Small Firms in Arms Work

Writer Finds More Liberal Policies Are Gaining Rapidly

By FRANK MacMILLEN,

Wide World Business Writer NEW YORK, March 7.- The little ousinesses which can do war work can get the money from their local banks to finance it and if you know of cases you think contradict this general statement, maybe the applicant just didn't know the ropes.

That was the conclusion this correspondent reached after three days of listening to speeches and talking to dozens of bankers who came here this week to attend a war-lending clinic sponsored by the American Bankers' Association. Even if you are a small manufacturer who has tried, without success, to get money to finance a defense job, it might be worth while to tackle your local bank again. For conversations indicated the attitude of bankers toward the little fellow has changed rapidly in recent months and still is swinging to a more liberal attitude toward

tions are often exacting. 2. That you have an assured supply of the particular kind of labor you need and can keep a force together at least until the contract is paid for 3. That priorities or allocations will assure you enough material to finish the job. 4. That you can figure your costs fairly accurately on what is likely to be an unfamiliar type of work and can thus show the bank you can make a profit on the contract. If you can meet these elementary tests, a lot of the old difficulties small manufacturers used to have in getting money from banks seem to be disappearing.

This, from one of the speeches at the war-lending clinic, shows the changed attitude: "In considering an application for a defense loan, the credit man must lay aside the time-honored methods

new approach. Old Methods Useless. "Balance sheet ratios, bank balances and even profit and loss statements may be, and frequently almost meaningless when applied to a manufacturer who is about to fulfill a Government contract, the magnitude of which cases firms have taken a single defense order exceeding a full year's normal pre-war business." It would appear that when bankers advise each other to toss the old rules out the window, it might be worth while for small manufacturers to listen. The extension of credit to manufacturers, and especially small ones, has, as a general rule-and it was probably a sound one in peacetimes -been confined to carrying them through seasonal peaks or other unusual demands. At other times, the capital invested in the business was expected to take care of its needs. The commonest turn-down from the bank, which nearly every small manufacturer has heard at one time or another, is:

"You don't need a bank loan. What you need is more capital. You are trying to do more business than your present capital warrants.' And under peacetime conditions the commercial banker was not in capital. Thrree Alternatives Faced. Faced with such an ultimatum a small businessman would have had three alternatives. He would have passed up the orders which required more money to handle, he would have gotten a partner to invest in the business, or he would have gone to an investment banker and arranged to sell securities to the public. Either of the last two courses would have meant splitting his expected profit with some-

But the whole course of the disussion at the war clinic indicated this old conception of the function of the commercial bank was crumto pile up the huge banks of parts bling under the impact of war. These, from another speaker, may be words of hope to many a small

"We must never decline a loan for ards, we honestly feel that there is perform the contract and that we could, therefore, never justify taking the risk." "And," he added, "when I say complete investigation, I mean just that. We must get out of our smug environment and investigate fully, expending whatever time and effort are necessary to develop ways and means to finance loans."

Trade Reports at a Glance

NEW YORK, March 7.-All cities covered in a tabloid review of business from Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., showed gains over a year ago during the last week in wholesale and jobbing, retail trade, manufacturing and industry and collections.

Reports on the individual cities follow: BALTIMORE.—Retail merchants reported overall demand more brisk this week although results varied widely in different stores. Sales generally continued to lead last year by a wide margin. Increasing call both for replacement stocks and future requirements maintained a favorable volume at wholesale. Bank clearings were 21 per cent above 1941.

CHICAGO.—Although retail volume made a spotty showing last week the aggregate gain over last year was good. Wholesale turnover remained lighting an irregular bond market excellent as retailers continued to build up inventories. KANSAS CITY.-Retail sales continued to decline in the past week but recorded a satisfactory gain over last year. Aided by a gradually increasing movement of spring merchandise and retailers' efforts to build up inventories, wholesale activity increased and registered a 20 to 30 per cent gain over last year. Bank clearings were 38 per cent

LOUISVILLE.—Retail spending continued at record levels, reflecting the great influx of workers to this area. Dollar sales registered a good gain over last year in total, despite the uneveness in reports from various types of businesses. Turnover at wholesale dry goods houses was sharply higher than 1941 as retailers endeavored to stock up on merchandise. Bank clearings were 9 per cent greater than a year ago, compared with a rise of 17 per cent for a group of major cities.

PITTSBURGH.—With transportation facilities snowbound by the heaviest blizzard on record, business activity suffered a set-back this week. Retail volume was considerably curtailed for a few days and the week as a whole was much slower than the previous week, as unit sales dropped substantially below last year's levels. Wholesale markets were also slower. Although gains in war production were checked temporarily by the storm, manufacturing generally expanded operations in the week, aided by extra shifts in some plants. Bank clearings were 27 per cent above 1941.

ST. LOUIS.-Aided by month-end sales and a special shopping day omotion, retail volume increased 20 to 40 per cent in the week and registered a gain of 15 to 30 per cent over last year. Demand continued at favorable levels in the wholesale apparel market, with sharp gains over last year. Many non-war manufacturers are operating at lower levels than this time last year. The steel rate declined 1 point to 80 per cent of capacity. Bank clearings were 22 per cent larger than 1941.

TOLEDO.—Sales volume was close to previous week's totals, although the larger retailers recorded a moderate increase. Retail spending generally ran 18 to 22 per cent ahead of last year. Wholesale activity showed little change in the week and continued 15 to 20 per cent larger than 1941. Employment in 125 local plants advanced to 51,916 from 50,374 last week.

YOUNGSTOWN .- Although sales results varied considerably in different lines, overall retail trade gains were subsequently higher than last year. Wholesalers' volume leveled off somewhat, but demand continued unusually heavy for this season. Steel mills scheduled operations at 91 per cent of capacity. Fabricators have largely converted to war production and are again operating close to capacity.

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 8, 1942.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Minister and Daughter To Be Much-Feted Guests

Series of Parties Are Arranged; New Paraguayan and Bolivian Ambassadors Are Due to Arrive

By Katharine Brooks

The Nicaraguan Minister of Foreign Affairs, Senor Mariano Arguello Vargas, and his attractive daughter, Senorita Rosita Arguello, will be the center of a flurry of entertaining this week. They arrived Friday and are staying at the Shoreham Hotel with Dr. J. J. Sanchez and Senora de Sanchez, who accompanied them to Washington. They made the trip by boat to New Orleans, where they transferred to a plane, and they plan to remain in the Capital about a fortnight. These first few days they are dining and lunching informally at the Legation, and the Minister and Senora de DeBayle have lunched and dined with them

However, serious entertaining will get under way by Tuesday, when the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, will be host at dinner in honor of the distinguished visitor. The guests all will be men, leaving the feminine members of the party to dine with Senora de DeBayle, or, perhaps, catch up on letters home.

Wednesday the Director General of the Pan-American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe, will give a luncheon for Dr. Arguello in the union annex the company again confined to gentlemen.

Later-perhaps the first of next week-the Minister and Senora de DeBayle will give a reception for the visitors, undoubtedly one of the popular afternoon fetes to which will be invited officials, diplomats and numerous Army and Navy officers, as well as a number from the resident circles of the Capital.

Envoy From Paraguay Soon to Arrive Here.

The first Paraguayan Ambassador to the United States, Senor Dr Celso R. Velazquez, is about to descend upon the Capital. That is not literally true, as it has been about so many others, for this new diplomat will travel only as far as Miami by plane and will make the rest of the trip by train. He is expected to leave Asuncion today or tomorrow and will land in Miami within two days, probably arriving in the Capital Wednesday or Thursday.

The Ambassador will be accompaned by Senora de Velazquez and

Jean Waggaman Attractive Bride in Her Wedding to Francis Albert Harper

Flower-Banked St. Thomas' Church Was Scene of Outstanding Social Occasion in Capital Yesterday

By Mona Dugas

A wedding perfect in every detail was the outstanding social occasion in the Capital yesterday. The bride was lovely Miss Jean Fairweather Waggaman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Pierpont Waggaman, and she was married to Mr. Francis Albert Harper of New York. The Rev. Arlington A. McCallum of St. Paul's Episcopal Church officiated, assisted by the Rev. Howard S. Wilkinson of St. Thomas' Church, where the ceremony was performed at 4 o'clock in the afternoon,

The chancel of the church was decorated with palms and Australian fern and, at the altar, candles, white snapdragons and lilies were used. The bridal couple stood between two tall standards of spring flowers to repeat their vows, and the center aisle, where the bridal party walked to and from the altar, was marked with alternate standards of spring flowers and five-branched candelabra. The tall pillars of the church were entwined with smilax for the occasion.

Dainty Bride Is Picture Amid Banks of Flowers.

The former Miss Waggaman was the daintiest of brides as she walked down the flower-banked aisle of St. Thomas' Church with her brother, Mr. Robert Waggaman. She wore a Regency gown of heavy bridal satin, trimmed at the yoke and elbow-length sleeves with deep bands of rosepoint lace. A satin bow at the neckline matched the large appliqued satin bows around the bottom of the full skirt, which ended in a long train. From her dainty lace and net bonnet that tied under her chin fell a long veil of bridal tulle that came to the end of the gown's train. Her small old-fashion bouquet of white violets was edged with tulle,

Miss Elizabeth Ragland of Nashville, Tenn., was maid of honor. Her gown was made like that of the bride, except pleated ruffles at the neckline and sleeves took the place of the lace on the bridal gown. Miss Rag-

MRS. JAMES F. BYRNES AND MRS. GEORGE C. MARSHALL. Mrs. Byrnes, whose husband is a member of the Supreme Court, and Mrs. Marshall, wife of the chief of staff, U. S. A., are assisting in preparing for the benefit concert, which is to be held Tuesday evening, March 31. Social Gayety Prevailing

With Week-End Parties Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Entertain; Gen. and Mrs. Peterson Also Among Hosts at Interesting Gatherings

Again the week end is filled with gayety-small and informal parties being, as always, most popular on the schedule, with a few formal dinners listed on some calendars. .

Mr. Hallett Johnson of the Division of Exports and Defense Aids in the State Department and Mrs. Johnson entertained at dinner last evening in their home on R street, and this afternoon they will be hosts again, this time at the tea hour. Their honor guest is Mrs. Johnson's sister, Miss Margaret Stewart, who came down from New York for the week end, and who will return to her home there tomorrow

Gen: and Mrs. Peterson

Another dinner party on last evening's list of entertainments was that given by Gen. Virgil Lee Peterson, U. S. A., and Mrs. Peterson, who entertained in their home on Woodland drive.

Her usual Sunday night dinner and movie will draw a large group of guests to Mrs. Edward Beale McLean's new Friendship tonight and also among today's entertainments is the party Mrs. Grenville Temple Emmett is to give in honor of her daughter, Miss Patricia Emmett.

The younger set found that one of yesterday's gayest parties was that given by attractive Miss Mary Alice White, who entertained in the Sixteenth street home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Stanley White. Miss White's guest of honor was Miss Lucie Dourif, her former roommate at Vassar. Miss Dourif is a native of France, but now is residing in Huntington, W. Va. She arrived here Friday to spend the week end with the Whites.

Many Former Debs Among the Guests.

Many of the guests at yesterday's party were young women who had made their debuts during the 1938-39 season when Miss White was introduced. Miss Anne Underwood, Miss Patricia Morris, Miss Anne Wilkinson and Mrs. George Y. Wheeler, who formerly was Miss Jane Eustis, were some of Miss White's fellow-debutantes. Others among the half-ahundred guests at the party included Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Adams, Miss Laura Blair, Miss Sita Finkenstaedt, Miss Louise McNutt, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Beall Gwynn, Miss Ruth Hurley, Mr. and Mrs. McCullough Darlington, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Hammond, Miss Jane Davis, Mr. Frank Holcomb, Mr. Charles Wilson, Mr. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor 2d., and Mr. Gilbert White.

also were used in other parts of the house.

MRS. JOSEPH E. DAVIES. Mrs. Davies, whose husband formerly was United States Ambassador to the Soviet, is well fitted to act as chairman for the committee in charge of the Russian Relief benefit. Constitution Hall will be the scene of the concert.

Princess Juliana Is Expected To Visit Rembrandt Exhibit At Metropolitan Museum

By Robert Crawford

It is rumored that New York is looking forward to another visit this month from Princess Juliana of the Netherlands to view the showing of Rembrandt's paintings, prints and drawings, which while they have long been in the possession of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, have not until this year been assembled in a single exhibition. They belong in different collections, and because of legal restrictions such as the stipulation of donors that their collection be kept in one unit only a few have ever been shown together in one gallery.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Lyon of Woodmoor to Be at Home Today To 79ers Club Members

Several parties, most of them small and informal, are enlivening the week end in the eastern suburban area of Montgomery County. One of the largest affairs will take place this afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Lyon of Woodmoor will be at home to members of the 79ers Club from 4 to 6 o'clock. The party will mark the first of a series of such affairs of the Executive Committee of the group, which is strictly social, is planning for its members this spring. A number of the younger married set of Takoma Park and Silver Spring belong to the club, which derives its name from the rule that no couple whose combined ages are more than 79 may join or remain members.

Formal entertaining slips farther into the background as preparations for whatever emergencies the months ahead may bring cut more deeply into the time that used to be devoted to social gaiety. # Most Shrubbery and Trees Planted in Early Spring By the Home Gardener

Middle of March Considered Proper Transferring Time For Our Own Local Area

By W. H. Youngman

In spite of all the scholarly recommendations to the contrary home gardeners buy and plant most of their shrubbery and trees in the spring. flood of nursery catalogues that descend upon us each spring and the desire to have flowers account for this tendency. However, if done early and carefully, spring planting in most cases will turn out fully as success-

The middle of March is considered the proper time for spring planting of trees and shrubs in this area. But it is an average date and the condition of the soil is far more important. As soon as the ground can be worked without injury—dry enough—is the time to start planting. Root activity starts long before the leaves appear in the spring and we should try to do our planting early so as not to delay or interfere with this essential growth. Thus the shrub or tree may become well established before hot weather. The earlier we get the new plants in the better they will do. There are a few exceptions to the rule. Magnolias, dogwoods and a number of the azaleas transplant best just as the buds begin to swell. In fact, azaleas transplant very well even when in bloom. Tulip trees and birch do best when planted in the spring. So local gardeners should order shrubs and trees for mid-March delivery with the intention of planting them as soon as the soil may be worked. without "puddling." Most soils if worked when wet "puddle" unless they are quite sandy. Since most of our soils are heavy clays we must take care not to work them while

Dig Large Hole. In planting shrubs dig a hole before planting. large enough so that the roots can be spread out fully without touching the sides of the hole. A quantity of well-rotted compost, or wellrotted manure in the bottom of the hole plus bone meal for those shrubs which do not require an acid soil is sufficient fertilization at planting time. There are several other dwarf cherries and plums which are really very handsome. Among them is Nanking Cherry (Prunus tomentosa), flowering plum (P. triloba) and sand cherry (P. pumila), and several other dwarf forms. It is interesting to note that the peach, almond, cherry and plum all belong to the same genus. They differ in their stature and fruiting habits. All are really worth cultivating, not only for their handsome spring bloom but also some of them for their fruits.

These are early spring-blooming shrubs, the double forms being " ticularly attractive. They are of culture and are quiet as satisfactory as cherry or plum treesfor that is really what they are in some of the choicest of the spring blooming shrubs. Flowering almond is particularly well worth bringing back into general cultivation. You will find it now in old yards and in the gardens of people who have carried it down in the family.

Remove Broken Branches. It is good garden practice to re-move broken branches, to trim off smoothly the ends of broken roots, and to cut back the tops (if not already done) to compensate for loss of roots. Most shrubs are received with more top than should be left on. Many losses occur because the tops are too big a load for the roots. If pruned severly it will make an early and vigorous growth, while too many branches will demand more water than the roots can supply and the bush will do very that it's not too early to begin for next summer's gardens.

This is the time of year when it will profit home gardeners to spend | hold surrounding water. an evening with the catalogues and a ground plan on which exact patterns for later plantings may be marked out. It's also the time when early orders to growers will assure spring delivery of the most advice, both official and unofficial, not to neglect flower plantings already made and the development and morale. The Government's civic and civilian defense officials all agree that there is neither reason nor necessity for the destruction or deterioration of flower gardens during this war year. No matter how hard man works there will still be time for the quiet relaxation and pleasure which a beautiful home garden will bring. When the frost goes out of the ground gardeners should be ready with plans for the planting of the new and beautiful roses for 1942. There are some spectacular newcomers waiting for planting.

One expert calls attention to "Pan America." a striking orange rose, first introduced at the Festival of Roses in Newark, N. Y., last summer. "King Midas." a magnificent, hardy, yellow climbing rose, is already attracting notice. It is one of the longest blooming climbers and produces an unusually large flower comparable to the hybrid tea. "Spun Gold" is a lovely hybrid tea of golden hue that has given satisfaction wherever it has been tested.

In some parts of the country the frost is already leaving the ground and even in Northern latitudes it will soon be time to put into practice simple and effective principles for successful rose culture. Rose growers are urged not to neglect full and complete preparation of the ground before putting in any plants.

The preparation of the ground for the bed is one of the most important steps in the future life of the rose. Plan now to put in your plants in a well-drained spot in well-aerated soil. If they are given modern care at the time of planting, roses will never develop summer ills. A rosebush under proper growing conditions can build up its own immunity to its natural enemies just as a healthy child

It follows that the healthy modern rose, planted under the best possible conditions, is far less susceptible to disease than the anemic bush. A little extra effort with a spade at planting time is good health insurance for the rosebush. In circumference the hole should be big enough so that the roots will have plenty of room and go in without crowding so they have as wide a feeding area as possible

An ordinary carpenter's level and a line will accomplish this. These, when properly laid, should be covered to a depth of 2 inches to 3 inches with coarse gravel or cinders, to allow free passage of water.

If no tile is used rubble or cinders should be returned to the bottom of the bed to the depth of 4 to 6 inches in order to insure good drain- bronze when touched by frost and age at all times. In sizing up rose-planting requirements for early spring arrange to prepare the ground well for a least two spade depths whether you are putting in only a few new roses in a border, replanting an established bed or making a new bed. You will be amply repaid by the following season's results. Under ideal conditions over half of the rose roots go down far below the top soil. This means that when there they are less affected by the vagaries of the summer temperature or rainfall.

Evergreens Are Suitable In Foundation Planting And for Rock Gardens

Necessary to Restrict Them Through Pruning, but Begin While Trees Are Small

By the Master Gardener

A continuation of our listing of evergreens, the first article of which appeared last Sunday, includes trees that are useful for foundation planting or in front of taller growing varieties and others that are equally useful around foundations, but also in rock gardens. But, again, let us remind you to select the ones suitable to your needs and the location for which they are intended. The care and feeding of evergeens are just as important as proper selection and we are including in this article some suggestions that are well worth following. GROUP 4 INCLUDES VARIETIES OF DWARF, ROUND, OR GLOB-ULAR FORM, AND ARE USEFUL FOR FOUNDATION PLANTING OR

IN FRONT OF TALLER GROWING VARIETIES.

Pinus montana mughus (Mugho pine)—Three to four feet. Very beautiful and valuable for covering dry, gravelly and sandy slopes. Desirable also for foreground, foundation, rock garden. Often called the best all-around low growing evergreen. In spring, bright colored new shoots like little tiny candles adorn them and contrast with other evergreens. Succeeds in almost any soil except wet. Stands more exposure to wind and sun.

PRUNING OR CLIPPING OF EVERGREENS

It is important in choosing evergreens to restrict your choice to those that are well suited to the location and purpose you have in mind, as far as size is concerned, and even then, most of them will have to be confined somewhat through pruning.

But to secure satisfactory results, the tree is still small and continued consistently. Once an evergreen has grown too large, not much can be done to reduce its size without spoiling its appearance. Specimen plants that have been wisely chosen will need little pruning; clipping, however, will keep The pruning and spraying of esoutline uniform and dense. The tablished bushes and the planting of only pruning necessary with plants new ones are the principal jobs, but of that type will be that necessitated many beds need to be limed and ferby lopsided growth, or as a result of injury by wind, snow or ice.

the native trees as much as we should. Many property owners plant too many maples and sycamores. If we used more of native trees, and particularly some of our stronger-growing types that are disease-resistant, we would have much better results. Another interesting fact is that the most of our native trees, with the conspicuous exception of the maples, are more or less deep-rooted, and grass can be grown around them satisfactorily. This is impossible with most maples and Oriental sycamore, or London plane, as it is more properly called.

When selecting trees for planting we would suggest you look carefully over such natives as some of the oaks, hickories, honey locusts, Kentucky coffee beans, ashes and bald cypress. Many gardeners make a practice of giving the lawn a top dressing and seeding the bare spots each spring. This is a sound procedure and one that more of us might follow. The grass crowns tend to grow out of the soil and by putting a light covering over them each seasonrather than pulling them out further by raking, we will improve their vitality and resistance to summer heat. # American Women in Peru, Led by Wife of Envoy, Aid U. S. War Effort

Mrs. Lydia Van Hagan Van Zandt Writes About Busy Program Small Group Carries On

By Frances Lide,

One day after the attack on Pearl Harbor, American women living in Lima, Peru, met to map a program of war relief work for their country. So productive were their efforts that several weeks later two bales of pajamas and a bale of bandages were on their way to Red Cross distribution headquarters in the United States.

This interesting news of war-time activities of our women abroad came last week in a letter from Mrs. Lydia Van Hagan Van Zandt, a member of several women's organizations here and known to many for her lectures on current events.

Mrs. Van Zandt is in South America with her husband, who is temporarily attached to several of the embassies there. With a "nose for news," she gives an impressive picture of how a relatively small group of American women have organized for war work under the leadership of the American Ambassador's wife. Their methods for raising funds have a familiar ring for they include teas and garden parties, "vanishing" luncheons and a woman's

But here is her letter, which tells the story:

"Dear Frances Lide:

"Perhaps you will be interested to hear how a group of American women living abroad in wartime are doing their bit.

"Prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor, many of the American women living in Lima, Peru, sewed or knitted for the British War Relief. On December 8, 1941, the Executive Committee of this group met and voted to form an American Women's Unit for War Relief.

'Under the dynamic leadership of Mrs. R. Henry Norweb, wife of the American Ambassador, the campaign started for funds and workers. Mrs. Norweb held a tea at the Embassy which was attended by 193 women (virtually the entire female contingent of the American colony). These women paid dues (the amount being voluntary) and pledged themselves to become monthly contributors. Inthis way a fund to buy materials was started. Funds Raised to Buy

More Materials. "The women then went to work Civic and Study Clubs cutting and sewing two afternoons and one morning a week in the old American Association of Univergolf house on the Country Club grounds. Many tail and triangle bandages, swabs, pajamas and hospital coats, made exactly according to American Red Cross patterns and specifications, were turned out with such speed that it soon became apparent that new ways to raise funds for materials must be found. This was not easy in so small a community, but the ladies have shown great ingenuity. "Mrs. Norweb started a series of vanishing luncheons by inviting 12 guests. Each of these contributed one sole (about 15 cents) and obligated herself to give a luncheon for 10, and so on to the vanishing point In the first month alone these luncheons had netted over $100 and they were just getting under way.

"The wives of the assistant military and naval attaches gave a bridge for which they sold tables chances on various articles. This party brought $70 to the fund.

"The wives of several Panagra pilots gave a 'Sadie Hawkins' barn dance with fortune telling booths and all the concessions of a country fair. In this manner over $600 was raised in one evening.

"The American wife of a Swiss businessman opens their garden each week end and charges a small fee for games of badminton, ping pong, bridge or mahjong. The garden is crowded every Saturday and Sunday and brings in a steady income for the unit.

Exchange "Sells Out"

On First Day. "The most ambitious undertaking and one which promises to be a continuing financial mainstay is the Woman's Exchange. In two rooms over a private garage, which were scrubbed, papered and painted by the women themselves, a small shop was opened. Here were sold handmade baby clothes, knit shawls. sweaters and socks, embroidered bridge cloths, cocktail napkins and homemade preserves, pies, cakes and candies. All goods were sold out the first day and duplicate orders were so great that the American women canvassed the city for native seamstresses and cooks to work under their direction.

"The food department promises to be a real boon to the community because eggs, butter, flour and sugar are cheap, but homemade candies, cookies and cakes were formerly not to be had at any price. "The American children, or ganized by the Ambassador's young lady daughter, Jean, were put to work in the chancery on Saturday mornings making swabs. So great was their enthusiasm that they have been joined by many of their small Peruvian friends. In the first month they turned out 3,100 swabs.

More Red Cross Shipments Planned.

"The first shipment, two bales of pajamas and a bale of bandages, has by this time reached Red Cross distribution headquarters in the United States. Later consignments will be divided between the Red Cross and Army and Navy relief. # First He Selects the Title, and Then He Writes the Song

It's a Method That Has Served the Unpredictable Cole Porter So Well He Can't Recall Off-Hand How Many Tunes He Has Composed

Cole Porter is probably the only Broadway and Hollywood song writer who ever escorted a wooden lady all the way around the world. A solid, unprepossessing figure of shameless bulges and curves, she was a constant enchantment to the composer and the toast of every port. She wore dresses of exotic colors and design. The ship's company attended her in doldrums and in high winds. The stewards adored her and she all but sat at the captain's table.

In a final burst of triumph she came back to New York to the bafflement of two of Broadway's cleverest pranksters, Howard Lindsay, the father of "Life With Father." and Russel Crouse, Lindsay's collaborator in the show and in the "Cole was making a round-the-world trip on the Franconia," Crouse said the other day. "Moss Hart was going with him to write the book for a new show—it was 'Jubilee,' produced in 1935-and Cole was to do the music. Monty Woolley, who was then a stage director, was with them. We wanted to give Cole something when he sailed and after searching around we found this hideous sculptured figure."

They had it crated and delivered to Porter's stateroom and had a good laugh whenever they thought of it. But Porter was delighted. Instead of tossing the lady overboard when the ship cleared Ambrose Channel, he had her dressed and for the rest of the voyage gave her extravagant parties.

Still Unpredictable.

This was not the only occasion on which Porter astonished his friends or had a little joke of his own. Once, Crouse and Lindsay, who wrote the books for "Anything Goes" and "Red Hot and Blue" with lyrics and music by Porter, fretted and worried more than a week for him to return from California. When he finally showed up he explained that he had broken the trip by driving up to Callender, Ontario, to see the Dionne quin-

NEW YORK. The most exciting hit show on Broadway at the moment is one that has "Welcome, Brother," only to men in uniform, and it is free of charge.

This is the Stage Door Canteen, operated in an erstwhile night club with such a line-up of stars and entertainment that the only attraction that could have approached its glamour was in those Wall Street boom days when $10,000 worth of talent would sometimes perform on those floor shows equipped only for Texas Guinan's $500 club shows. them seemed to be winning more

What's in a Changed Name

Sometimes It's Sentiment, Then Again It May Be for Euphony

By Ted Gill,

HOLLYWOOD. Actors and actresses change their names for the strangest reasons. Some do it to make them more euphonious; others because they don't look good on a theater marquee, while others are altered because of some whimsical or sentimental reason. When Jean Wood and Joel McCrea were students together at Pomona College, she appeared opposite him in her first school play. Later she made her debut at the Pasadenas

Clocks Are Turned Back

Hollywood Hits Upon the Year 1926 As Time of Several Pictures

By Gladwin Hill,

HOLLYWOOD. Can you remember back to 1926?

was a coal strike. . . . The Philadelphia Sesquicentennial Exposition that tongue-tied everybody-a Florida hurricane-and the League of Nations admitted Germany—a classic bit of lost motion. . . . Nevertheless, 1926 is the year Hollywood for some reason or other

There was nothing particularly momentous about the year. . . . There has decided to turn the clock back. to for a sort of nostalgic celluloid | Crosby. ("The last gal you gave me cocktail it has been shaking up. was that lady wrestler at the St. Ginger Rogers' new picture "Roxie Nicholas Rink," Crosby comments Hart," about a dancer that gets dourly.) They're sitting in front of mixed up in a murder rap, is laid in 1926. It's a movie version of the hit play "Chicago Out at Universal Studios, they're cooking up a similar gangster-dancer item entitled "Broadway," a film adaptation of the play of the same name-also set in 1926. George Raft olays himself-he was a dancer on Broadway then. Ann Gwynn is his girl friend. And Marie Wilson, the arch-type of the dumb blond, is in there dumb-blonding. (But don't get her wrong-the second the camera stops clicking, she's in there thinking and talking about three jumps ahead of everybody else). To polish off the 1926 business a polished-up version of his classic comedy "The Gold Rush"-another product of the 1926 era. (Remember him doing the dance with the guns on the forks?) The new edition supplants the subtitled with narration by Chaplin and musical accompaniment. A lot of the 1926 gags brought 1942 howls from the preview audience. One of the best, the climax gag where he is running back and forth in a house balanced on the edge of cliff, was used recently in another picture, and resultant glares that shot back and forth across town were icy enough to chill the balmy (?) California

Cagney's rendition of some of Cohan's celebrated dance routines is a complicated business. Cagney, a good dancer himself—he broke into the show business as a chorus boy-learned the routines from Johnny Boyle, a master hoofer of vaudeville days. Then he performed the numbers before the sound camera in soft shoes, without any taps to recorded piano music. Onto that film, a full accompanying orchestra will be dubbed in in place of the piano music. And then they're going to dub in the taps-from the feet of Johnny Boyle!

What Peace Symbol. The dove is supposed to be the bird of peace, but doves caused nothing but trouble this week on the set where Bing Crosby and Bob Hope are making "The Road to Morocco." (It was "The Road to Moscow" before things happened.)

Hope and Crosby have been fighting to marry Dorothy Lamour. Hope wins only to find that if he marries her, he will be immediately executed. So he tries to pawn her off on

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People—Review of the Stamp Press—List of Local Meetings.

By James Waldo Fawcett. Mrs. Eveleen W. Severn, editor and president of Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News and one of the most widely known of American women philatelists, died at Portland, Maine Tuesday. March 3. She was the widow of Charles E. Severn. a distinguished stamp journalist of a generation ago whose work she carried on with credit to herself as well as to him. It was her custom to attend the conventions of the American Philatelic Society wherever they might be held. She was a sponsor of the American Philatelic Congresses from their beginning in 1935 and took an active part in the National Stamp Conference, held in Washington in 1936. A past president of the Chicago Women's Stamp Club, she was a non-resident member of the Washington Philatelic Society and many other stamp organizations. Services were held in Chicago Friday, with burial at Rosehill Cemetery.

Apparently the Indian craftsmen were orderly people. When one spoiled a piece of stone, and found it to be beyond use, he threw it on a pile with others of its kind. Thus when today's searcher finds an Indian work space, he is almost certain to find a heap of broken and imperfect arrow heads, and so on.

In addition to the usual large number of such broken pieces, the Stups have some exquisitely perfect ones. They also have some so small that it seems incredible that they could have been chipped out of hard flint by the means at the Indian's command. They are so tiny that they seem almost jewel-like.

Besides these Indian relics, Mr. and Mrs. Stup have a number of bullets found in the neighborhood of Balls Bluff and Edwards Ferry. These, of course, are from the Civil War battles fought in the vicinity. found as deep as 8 feet in the 8 p.m. ground. Some of these were dug out Talking about club meetings Bulldog club meetings and Gordon Barton, president of the Washington Bulldog Club, just don't seem to agree. The W. B. Last time it was supposed to meet at Barton's, after the house was all prettied up and refreshments all bought, Gordon came down with the measles.

When his turn rolled around again recently, it was discovered at the 11th hour and 59th minute that Gordon had a case of the shingles bad enough to put him in the hospital. Poor Gordon, that must be a really distressing allergy.

Paintings From the Louvre and Other Great Collections of France In Important Exhibition Here

By Leila Mechlin.

One of the most important loan exhibitions ever held in Washington is that of paintings from the Louvre and other great French collections which opened in the National Gallery of Art this past week. Not only does it include world-famous works by the leading painters of France from the latter part of the 18th through the whole of the 19th century. but, because of its admirable selection, it also bears witness to the diversity of the stream which, through its many turnings, changed art from

Gerard, Gros and Ingres were his followers, each interpreting his theories individualistically, Gerard most closely, Gros with more fire, and Ingres with a greater sense of rhythmic beauty. Then came the Napoleonic era, with its trumpets and parade, so appealing to the imagination, which artistically found expression in the rise of the romantic school, best represented by Gericault and Delacroix.

When life ceased to be picturesquely romantic, the painters turned to history or literature for their themes, and from these, strangely enough, back to nature. The middle of the 19th century saw in France the rise of a great school of landscape painting—that of the Barbizon painters, which was in its inception sincerely lyrical, but later became realistic. Corot, Daubigny, Rousseau painted what they saw with emotional reaction to beauty; Millet, moved by the life which he saw around him, became the interpreter of the French peasantry in their actual relation to the soil.

Gradually the painters became more self-conscious. Manet declared that it was not the thing itself which should be represented, but rather the impression it created on the observer. Interest began to center in painting as an art—a means of personal expression. # Ormandy Presents Zimbalist

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 8, 1942.

Noted Guest-Artist On Philadelphia Symphony Program

Ever a well-loved personality as well as an outstanding musician, Efrem Zimbalist will be the next guest artist to appear in Constitu-tion Hall with the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday evening, March

Zimbalist will play that showpiece of all violinists, the Brahms "Concerto in D Major" for violin and orchestra. For the balance of the program, Conductor Eugene Ormandy has announced the Handel "Overture in D" and Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico."

Known to American audiences since 1911, Zimbalist has been esteemed as an eminent artist in his own right and, in private life, as the husband of the beloved Rumanian-American soprano, Alma Gluck. Their daughter has dis-tinguished herself in the world of letters, both as critic and novelist, as Marcia Davenport. Nicknamed "Zimmie" by his friends, the violinist's first professional engagement was undertaken at the age of 9, a position unknown to his family. He had run away from his home, Rostov-on-the-Don, to a nearby town, where an Italian opera company was playing and which, he had learned, needed a violinist. Trudging the distance on foot he arrived dust-stained and tired, but prepared to have the doorkeeper take him to the opera director. When the latter heard the boy's application for the post he could scarcely suppress a smile, for the vacancy was that of concertmaster and he feared the boy was too young.

"But won't you hear me play?" begged the youngster. He was permitted to do so and that evening's audience was amused to see the most important post of the orchestra occupied by a lad whose feet scarcely touched the floor.

Since then he has played-and latterly-conducted the world over and in recent years has become director of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, an activity which does not interfere with his practice of long winter tours and his widely-touted forays into first edition markets, in which contemporary authors are his speciality.

This will be the fifth and final concert in the Philadelphia's current subscription season, although an additional concert has been scheduled for the evening of Wednesday, April 15, in Constitu-tion Hall.

When a new recording by the eminent cellist, Pablo Casals, comes him from active concert work and little is known of his present whereabouts except that he is living in retirement in France. String instruments in combination are becoming more and more popular. Jascha Heifetz and the first ranking violist, William Primrose, have recorded lately the lovely Mozart "Sinfonia Concertante in E a recital of sonatas for cello and Flat Major. # Orchestra in All-Russian Program

Boston Symphony Returns Here After Extended Absence

That great musical group known as the Boston Symphony Orches-tra, which has not been heard in Washington for several years, will be brought to the National Capital for a single concert Tuesday, March 31, at Constitution Hall at 8:30 p.m. Both conductor, the famous Russian, Serge Koussevitzky, and his orchestra are donating their services for this event, which will be a benefit for Russian relief. At this time, too, local music lovers will have an opportunity to hear the muchdiscussed Soviet anthem-"The Internationale"-for Mr. Koussevitzky has said he will follow the traditional playing of our own "Star Spangled Banner" with the Russian air before opening the program Already so much keen interest has been shown in this extraordinary concert and its worthy cause that more than 2,000 of the 3,844 seats in the hall already have been reserved. The event is being managed locally by C. C. Cappell.

Mr. Koussevitzky has not announced the full program, but it has been intimated that it will be all-Russian. Certainly no country has a broader palette of many toned, colorful masterpieces for symphonic orchestra from which to make a

Many of Mr. Koussevitzky's ardent admirers do not realize that he was born in a tiny, central Russian province so small there was no music for him to hear in his boyhood, and so he ran away from home to Moscow, where he was given a scholarship to study the double bass as his solo instrument. The reason he chose this rather unusual and unwieldly instrument was because it was the only one for which a scholarship was available at the time he, a penniles lad with obvious talent, applied to be taken into the conservatory.

Later he was to be so happily situated financially that he could organize his own orchestra and even charter a steamer to carry that orchestra the entire length of the Volga to give first symphony concerts in many other tiny provincial towns like the one in which he was born. It is thoroughly fitting that it is Koussevitzky who, although not originally sympathetic to the Soviet regime, should be making this generous gesture toward the practical relief of the people of his native land at this time. This concert is having the spon-

Hull Biography Is History Of U. S. Foreign Policy

Harold Hinton Presents Vast Amount of Information in Well-Organized Work

Cordell Hull: A Biography

By Harold Hinton. Doubleday, Doran. The term "biography" must be applied to this book on Secretary of State Hull with a limited meaning. The work is a history of Mr. Hull's career. It is not a study of his personality, and it contains very little of the stuff which makes a biography an item for popular reading. Unless, that is, a history of America's foreign policy during the past nine years can be rated fit for that dubious honor.

The work can be thought of as being in two parts. The chapters which cover Mr. Hull's activities until his appointment by Presiden Roosevelt deal with the preparation which he acquired for his cabinet job. In Mr. Hinton's opinion, that was chiefly a sound understanding of economic problems and a thorough grasp on the technique of "practical politics." The second part of the work is virtually a history of State Department's conduct in the major issues which have confronted our country during Mr. Hull's incumbency. It is written in considerable etail and shows the author's close familiarity not only with matters as they have been presented to the public, but with the factors which have lain behind the scenes. Mr. Hinton, a correspondent for the New York Times, covered the State Department for nine years and ac-companied Mr. Hull on all his Latin American conferences

Sees Hull as Economic Thinker.

He obviously has an excellent picture of the whole situation of our foreign relations during recent years, and he is able to present that situation lucidly. But what the lucid presentation brings out is chiefly confusion. The complications between domestic politics and foreign policy, between election tactics and international relations, between Mr. Hull's personal sense of what was desirable and his political sense of what was possible-these are in constant play, and it is tribute to Mr. Hinton's ability that he has been able to marshal them in such a way that a reader can follow the development without getting lost. His own complaint is that the New Deal concentrated its attention on "the immediate and unimportant, as opposed to the permanent and valu-able," until the hour had passed when any effective thing might be done. He does not put the blame for this on Mr. Hull, however, but on the whole state of politics and pub-

His estimate of Mr. Hull is that he is primarily an economic thinker. From his early championing of the Income tax law in the administration of Theodore Roosevelt to his assumption of the duties of the State secretaryship, he has shown a conviction that economic readjustment is the way toward social improvement. An old-fashioned Southern Democrat, he had as part of his political heritage a faith in low tariffs. From this somewhat elemental concept he gradually developed a political philosophy in which the necessity for a more equitable distribution of the world's goods was a basic idea. It has been his ill luck, however, to be in office at a time when economic nationalism was rampant and the way of his program of trade readjustments was hopelessly blocked.

Throws Light on

The failure of the London Monetary and Economic Conference showed him, says Mr. Hintor anything effective along this line, and the result was his decision to accomplish as much as possible on a regional basis in the Western Hemisphere. The pan-Americanism which has brought his secretaryship its greatest popular fame grew out of this decision, and under him economic regionalism became a recognized method. Economic nationalism, however, was not the only enemy to peace which was abroad in the world; there was also political isolationism. The combination was more than any single power could control. The result is, of course, a war which is so destructive that the gains made on its eve have become

The book throws much light on the personal factors which have worked on public affairs during the recent past. It discusses at some length the part played by Raymond Moley in the London Conference, it goes into the influence of Mrs. Roosevelt and the League of Women Voters on the Montevideo conference, it decribes with remarkable clarity the effect on public opinion of the Nye Committee to investigate the munitions industry. The accounts of the various conferences are given almost as fully as if in minutes. The work is downright formidable in the amount of information which it sets forth. But it is admirably organized, and its author's comments, shrewd and often amusing, provide good seasoning. For a history of the recent decade in our Government, rather more than for a history of Cordell Hull, it can be heartily

The New Day

By Jules Romains. Translated from the French by Gerard Hopkins. Alfred A. Knopf.

In this new addition to his "Men of Good Will" novel series, Mr. Romains takes up the subject of Communism as that doctrine was received by the European world in the early 20s. He first shows us post-war Paris, where young intellectuals are turning toward Russia in mingled curiosity and hope. Then he shifts his scene to the Soviet Republic and lets us look on the squalor, misery and repression which reigned in that land in the early Bolshevik period. Both scenes are complicated with the private affairs of various members of Mr. Romains' enormous cast of char- malice even extends to his own acters, with virtually no relation demonstrated between the large theme and the individual histories.

Indeed, as this series of connected novels grows longer and longer, one feels with increasing certainty that the form is not a happy one. The effort is to tell the history of the modern European world through a work of fiction without fusing the fiction and the history into a related body, and the result is simply a procession of alternating passages-first on world events and then on the far-from-interesting adulteries of a cast of fictional characters who never achieve the slightest reality as men and women. The contrast is glaring, and one cannot but feel that Mr. Romains would do better to separate his materials.

If he wants to write a series of historical essays, he should do so without mixing in totally irrelevant fictional matter. Or, if he wants to write fiction, he should give his mind to that and make an effort to create characters who are something more than names. His method, as it stands, has been called that of the "collective novel." Like most of collectivism, it is better in its theory than in its practical execution.

Renegade

By Ludwig Lewissohn. Dial Press.

This novel, like Lion Feuchtwanger's "Josephus and the Emperor, is a study of the problem of the Jew. Unlike Mr. Feuchtwanger, however, Mr. Lewissohn has a solution ready to his hand. Since the Gentile races are, in his view, inferior to the Jews in their standards of conduct, they must obviously become Jews if the world is to improve. His story is designed to show how the really virtuous Gentiles feel themselves drawn to the Jewish faith and how good results when they yield to the attraction and become converted.

This interesting theme is developed through the story of a young Jew of 18th century Paris, who, coming under the spell of the "philosophers," accepts the idea that a new day of universal tolerance has dawned and leaves the ghetto to enter into the life of the court. He is presently disillusioned. In Poland, somewhat later, he finds regeneration of his faith in the sect of the Chasidim, an evangelistic group of Jews who wander about the country singing, shouting and experiencing religious ecstasies. The orthodox frown on the Chasidim and threaten them with the ban of their faith, but the young man from Paris discerns in them the ultimate ideal of purity. He becomes a member, and his former mistress, a French lady, a Catholic and a countess of the ancient regime, hastens to join him and enter into his religion. The pair then find a noble

Mr. Lewissohn has written this story with a sincerity which is unmistakable. He is completely devoid of humor, and his style often reaches heights of the bathetic which move one to genuine wonder.

Sea of Memories

By Charles Moran. Charles Scribner's Sons.

This is a book of episodes out of the history of the Mediterranean Sea, from the day of the Phoenician merchants to that of Mussolini's Blackshirts. The author, evidently steeped in his subject, has not attempted to present a connected narrative, but has simply taken the bits of Mediterranean history which have most appealed to him. Thus, he tells of the war between the Spartans and the Athenians, of Xenophon and his Ten Thousand, of various ephemeral kingdoms set up by Crusaders, of Turkish invasions and so on.

Both subject and method certainly have much to commend them, but in some episodes Mr. Moran falls into the error of the historian who knows too much about his subject; he writes as if he expected his reader to share his own erudition, and the result is that he will be over many readers' heads. However, his book contains some delightful passages. The learned at last, should appreciate it.

Fire in Summer By Robert Ramsey. Viking

Here is a more than ordinarily apable first novel written by a man 29 years of age. It is a psychological study of Spence Lovell, a mean, unrelenting, hating man. His family, but his greatest obsession is his belief that Negroes have brought ruin to him and to the South. Lovell leaves his unproductive hill farm in a wagon with his tolerant wife and his three young children Jewel, Blue and Larkin, in quest of reported fertile riverland cotton plantations upstate. The first job he obtains is as a sharecropper for before Spence finds he is the only white sharecropper in Mr. Fallon's employ. Defeated at every turn, he finally has to accept relief along with a small job with a road gang composed mostly of Negroes. The novel reaches a powerful climax when Jewel, his 13-year-old daughter, disappears. It is then that every ounce of Lovell's meanness comes to the surface. Mr. Ramsey's first work undoubetdly will be compared with the works of Caldwell and Steinbeck because it is slightly reminiscent of "Tobacco Road" and "The Grapes of Wrath." But his theme of the hatred of the poor white for the Negro has importance and novelty and the author has a legitimate talent and a touch all his own. "Fire in Summer" contains no fancy writing, but it is emotionally compact and at all times honest and

The Japanese Enemy: His Power and His Vulnerability By Hugh Byas. Alfred A. Knopf.

A veteran newspaper correspondent draws on his experience in Tokio, his expert knowledge of the Japanese mind, habits and form of government, to make this handbook a keen analysis of little-understood factors bearing on the strength and weakness of the United Nations' enemy in the Pacific.

Pointing out that the facts and figures of Japan's war resources are secrets known to but a handful of men in Japan, the author devotes his principal effort to providing a basis for better understanding of just what type of nation we are fighting. He is convinced that the war will prove suicidal for Japan, but emphasizes that the Japanese military and naval staffs did not move before they had convinced themselves they could win.

The Japanese, the author believes, sees the war for them more as "an insurance against German defeat than a gamble on German victory." They are attempting, he explains, to take up a position in the Pacific from which they believe they cannot be dislodged, regardless of whether

The Japanese military mind does not comprehend, he goes on, that the democracies can be "revengeful and tough," and expects that they would be eager for peace, lower taxes and normal life if they should defeat Germany, and so unwilling to make the sacrifices that would be necessary to drive Japan out of the positions she is winning now.

Perhaps one of the most valuable chapters in the book explains how the military extremists became the most powerful element in Japan's "group dictatorship" government and forced the war to satisfy their own lust for conquest rather than any real needs of the Japanese people.

Hitler had been able to overcome other nations, one by one, by the subtle use of fear and propaganda. Against the Soviet, these weapons were powerless. The Russians had a deep-seated scorn for Germany. When Hitler released his full fury against them, it was hurled back at him with all the fire and spirit of a nation of angry people.

Mr. Caldwell was convinced from the beginning that the Germans would be stopped. There was no such thing as a Stalin Line along the Western frontier and much territory had to be given up. #### Stripes of French Flag Purposely Varied in Width

When the French flag, the tricolor, was first designed, the bands of red, white and blue were made of equal width. But the designers soon discovered that the stripes seemed to vary, with the red appearing larger than the white, and the blue smaller. As a result they made the stripes of different widths so they would appear to be the same width!

The reason for the optical illusion is that color light rays aren't all bent the same way in the eye. Red bends less easily than blue, for example, so that a red object appears nearer than a blue object the same distance away. This is due to the fact that strain on the lens is a key factor in judging distance and the difficulty of bending the red beams results in this illusion.

The French flag makers solved their problem by designing the tricolor stripes in the proportion of 3 for red, 3.3 for white and 3.7 for blue. As a result no Frenchman has ever been able to complain that the stripes of his flag are of unequal width-although, of course,

For nine years we have been going to school, learning our lessons; but something else, far more important than this-we have been learning the principles of democracy. Every rule that we have had to obey in our school has been because that rule had something to do with making our school a better place to be in. . Now that we know the foundations of democracy we must practice and use them every day of our lives in this world. By the time peace reigns again, the present leaders of our Nation may have passed away, and it will then be the duty of young America to carry on. And young America will know how, because of the things that were learned in junior high. To many of us these things seem mighty small and unimportant, but it is the little things that make the large ones. This is illustrated best, I think, by the poem: Little drops of water, Little grains of sand Make the mighty ocean

And the beauteous land. Thinking of the principles we water, and of our ideals as the little grains of sand, we know we have the greatest thing on earth, the thing we all must try to make live on, America!

Since I started to school, my hobby has been assembling models—models of airplanes, trains, light boats and battleships and studying the history of the outstanding ones. In the last few months, I have graduated into actual model-making, mainly airplanes, and hope to develop the creative side of the hobby as I grow

In putting boat models together, learned many things about our Navy, which today is helping to defend our outposts and our shores against the enemy. For example, cruisers are named for large cities, battleships for States, aircraft carriers for historic vessels or battles, submarines for fish and destroyers for navy men, members of Congress and inventors. The model of the cruiser Indinapolis is like the ship of that name that carried President Roosevelt to a big international conference at Buenos Aires a few years ago. After making my first submarine model, I was very anxious to see a real submarine. In the spring of 1939 I was able to see one. The submarine S-49, which had been decommissioned after the London Naval Treaty in 1931, was touring the country. It was stationed at the Seventh street wharves here in Washington, and I went through it. That same summer I went to Annapolis and visited several destroyers. They, too, were wonderful When a local department store had a miniature display of the catalogue to find its call number, United States Navy, I was thrilled and in a few moments the work will when I was able to find cruisers, destroyers and battleships exactly like the models I had made, and found they were bearing the same number as mine. The history of modern transportation unfolded itself to me in the train models I assembled, some of the school librarian, they are the old pioneer trains or "iron trained to horses" and others of our fast steam | workers. and diesel engines of today. The DeWitt Clinton, named for the famous Governor of New York, was the first passenger train in that have learned as the little drops of State. The William Galloway, a train of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, was the first freight train in America. With the airplane models, I learned that the Lockheed transport flew around the world in three days, 19 hours and 14 minutes, and that the Consolidated Navy patrol bomber is one of the newest types in use in the United States Navy. With each of the 27 models I have assembled, I found some interesting facts about our great nation. The chief value of such models is in teaching children to follow simple directions and plans. Not all the task is just a matter of assembly, because the parts have to be sanded, sometimes trimmed, and after that, fitted together. I have learned how to handle tools, and this will help me a lot in the future.

My other hobby is the study of the American Indian and collecting Indian relics, weapons and costumes. In The Junior Star almost a year ago, I told about meeting a real Indian chief in the Pocono Moun-

The Claude A. Swanson Junior High School pupil went on to explain that the easiest of all necklaces to make also represents "a good way to use up candle stubs that are no good for anything else." Here are her directions for the use of such stubs: "You take a candle the color

Some Interesting Pointers For Post Card Collectors

By FRED DREW, Jr., 15.

It is surprising how many boys and girls collect post cards. But then again perhaps it's surprising that more of them don't start, because it's such an interesting hobby

Post cards are easy to obtain, of course. And, although perhaps you haven't realized it, most of them contain beautiful illustrations. Your collection will not only take you in thought to as many parts of the world as are represented in it, but will provide a group of attractive scenic pictures worth something in itself.

The best way to collect post cards is to join a national club. You may be able to discover a nearby group listed in one of the current magazines pertaining to such subjects. But there are a lot of other methods you use, the better collection you'll have. First, look around the house. You and your family probably have a lot of cards which traveling friends have written you. They make a fine start for the hobby. Then ask your friends and neighbors if they have some around. If they don't want everyone who looks at your collection reading the messages on the back—and they probably won't—

There are dozens of ways to classify your collection, and probably hundreds of kinds of cards you can specialize in. You could collect only cenic pictures, and file them according to the natural wonder they depict, like "California Redwoods," "Natural Bridge," "Grand Canyon," and so on. You might get all the monuments dedicated to famous Americans you can. You might try to get one from each State or each State capital. You could attempt to get cards from all the cities of the same name in different States, like Springfield or Columbia. Probably you can think of many other classifications and types of cards.

> construction job to cut them from Use 1-inch boards for the ends and an old broom handle for the cross Start by making a paper pattern for the ends. The easiest way to do this is to draw a 6-inch square and rule it off into 1-inch squares. The Egyptians Now draw the end of the pattern to the proper dimensions. Trace the pattern on your wood, having the grain run up and down. Cut the cross pieces, using a coping or jig saw. Bore holes into which your cross pieces will fit snugly through each end. Cut the cross piece 6 inches long. It may be made longer if you desire. Sandpaper all pieces to a smooth finish. Cement the cross piece into the holes. When doing this place the ends on a level surface so that they will be straight. Finish by painting or varnishing. Strips of felt cemented to the bottoms of ends will prevent them from scratching furniture.

ALL WE CAN GIVE . . .

In money...in work...in doing without: It will take ALL we can give to win this war

by Robert Keith Leavitt

THERE was a news dispatch in the papers a few weeks ago. It was only a little item about a farmer in upstate New York, and it was buried in the back pages among the human-interest sidelights in this war. It wasn't even a very unusual story. In dozens — perhaps hundreds — of towns the same thing must have happened.

But for what it symbolizes, that story rates a lot of hard thinking, right here and now.

In the town of Norwich, New York, a man named Sam Schou, a prosperous dairy farmer, with a wife and two kids, heard the news of Pearl Harbor; he went out and sold his entire herd of 49 Ayrshire cows, sold his hay, his machinery, his equipment, his furniture. He sent the children to the neighbors; his wife went to work for the Red Cross. And Sam Schou dusted off his hands and headed for the nearest recruiting station.

It made a nice little story, comforting—on the face of it—to less impulsive citizens like you and me. We could murmur "Attaboy!" and reflect, as we turned to the crop prices or market reports or sports pages, that it is a good thing Uncle Sam has some fighting fools to end the war quick before our lives get too disarranged with taxes and scarcities and uncertainties.

WE'D have done a lot better to cut out that article, paste it in our hats, go for a long walk and then reread it and think hard about this "fighting fool."

Because, in reality, it may be you who are being the fool — not Farmer Schou.

There are some significant points in the later lines of the story:

Schou was born a Dane, came to America as a boy. Such people, being maybe a little closer to what has happened abroad, do not undervalue the freedom of the United States.

He was a well-informed man: graduate of the University of Minnesota, scientific farmer, leader in agricultural improvement, well-read in world affairs. He had a clear idea of what we are up against.

And — he was a veteran of the American 2nd Division, in which he had enlisted in 1918. Old soldiers are nobody's fools about war.

Sam Schou — like many, but still not enough, Americans—knew instantly what we are all going to know sooner or later. And the sooner the better:

It is a desperate war. There is no possible halfway about it. We are on a side which, so far, has never secured more than a teetering position of equality in the fight. We went in only half-prepared. We are up against fanatical peoples committed — every last one of them — to our destruction. They can count on their citizens giving every scrap they own and every breath they take to knock us out.

We can lose this war — and the surest way to lose it is to think and act as though we could not lose. We should know that from Pearl Harbor.

We can lose it — and if we do, we lose everything we have or hope to get: Ayrshire cows and well-paid jobs, savings and careers, universities and security in old age. Those are among the things that Europe has lost to the Axis. The smartest man at "getting his" — or keeping it — while his country is at war will have nothing left, not even liberty and self-respect, if the nation loses.

But we can win. We can win this war so overwhelmingly and decisively that our Ayrshires and universities and liberties will be safe so long as the memory of man endures. We have got the stuff to pin back Axis ears for keeps.

But the only way we can win is to understand now—and not in some desperate later fix—that nothing matters but winning. Literally nothing: not property or prospects or position or anything we counted on before.

We have got to write off every material thing — mentally, at least — and to reach that stage of exaltation where there is all to gain and nothing to lose. The British, bombed from hell to breakfast, have achieved greatness in adversity. The invaded Russians have. And the Chinese, and the Dutch... Are we any less men than they, either as a nation or as individuals? Are we bright enough to see in their fiery rebirth an imperative example for ourselves?

We can't all shed everything as literally as Sam Schou. But spiritually we can clear the decks and dust off our hands for the one job above all others. This is no time to think about possessions or plans. If those things come through with us, well and good. But the important thing is for us to come through as Americans. It is time to stop thinking about what we have and begin remembering who we are.

SIDELINES

PATRIOT. Norwegians are becoming more optimistic. They feel the day of Nazi defeat is coming closer. Evidence is the news that many are glad to be arrested just to prove they were on the right side when the day of reckoning comes. Even the children of Bergen share that feeling.

Recently they were ordered to attend a Hitler youth exhibition. Instead of entering the hall, they marched past the door, singing their national anthem, yelling "Long live the King!" Every one of them was arrested except a little six-year-old. Chagrined, he ran up to a policeman, shouted:

"Long live the King! I want to be arrested, too!"

INDEX. One thing about this war: it seems to make people talk a lot. Look at the record of the phone company:

An average of 85 million calls a day were made in 1941—6 million more each day than in '40. Long-distance calls increased 15 per cent. Total: more than a billion during the year.

Clearest index to defense and war production's effect on talking are the Washington figures. Calls to the capital in '41 were 50 per cent more a day than in '40. Now, as we really swing into action, Washington calls are already 70 per cent above last year's.

simpatico. Groundwork for the recent Pan-American alliance was laid as far back as 1933, the year of the Montevideo Conference. Cordell Hull traveled to South America, found many of our southern neighbors suspicious and hostile.

Promptly, with no fanfare or formality, Mr. Hull started calling on the delegates. Some he found at lunch. Others were in conferences. One he visited in his bath. To all, he said he had come just to get acquainted, to talk over common problems, to learn how they might be helpful to each other. By the end of the Conference, some of our most bitter foes were making speeches in defense of the U. S.

And so, because a simple, modest gentleman had shown himself a true good neighbor, the foundation was laid for one of history's most important alliances.

across the sand dunes of Cape Cod, and the trees leaned and the sea ran white and wild under a thin moon. Brad Hewitt was having lobster in a Provincetown cafe when the belted shore-patrol sailor entered. The wind came in with him. Brad heard the wind and saw the man's face, and he knew something was wrong.

There were eight or ten other naval officers at the tables, all wearing civilian clothes, like Brad. But the sailor came straight to him after one quick look around.

"Are you the captain of the Chickadee, sir?" he asked.

Brad thought, half-angrily: I must even look like a tugboat! And, after a fashion, he did. He was solid and slow, deliberating each word and action, and he was dependable. Tugboats are like that. And for ten years, before being called into active service as a lieutenant in the Naval Reserve, Brad Hewitt had been closely associated with tugs, in the salvage business.

He put down his fork slowly. "I'm executive officer on the Chickadee, and acting captain while the skipper's on leave. Why?"

The sailor saluted. "You're wanted aboard, sir. It's that old Eighty-Two boat — she dived and didn't come up!"

"Eighty-Two boat?" Brad echoed. That meant the S-82 was on the bottom, under that wild sea. It meant Whit Rand was down there in her, waiting for the Chickadee to come out and try to save him. Whit Rand — of all the lieutenants in the regular Navy — of all the people in the world!

When Brad thought of Whitney Rand, the stored-up bitterness of ten years rose and choked him and demanded revenge. He thought of the Naval Academy. And Elinor Sherrill. . .

HER face was a remembered dream, framed by hair too soft to stay put, hair like a mist of gold. She had storm-blue eyes and slim legs, and every moment with her was ecstasy. She was vividly alive, electric and emotional and unpredictable — everything so different from slow, solid things.

That was what she had said that night ten years before, when summer lay soft along the Severn. She had said, "Brad, darling, don't be angry with me — but I've changed my mind. It wouldn't do; it just wouldn't! Darling, we're just so different —"

Brad had never been angry with her. He knew, later, that the real difference was the difference between the Navy's blue and gold, and civilian clothes. He wasn't being graduated, that tough year when only the top half of the class got commissions in the line. He was Brad Hewitt — "anchor man" of the class. He had plugged slowly and doggedly for four years, avoiding being bilged — and remembering everything he'd learned, because he'd learned it the hard way.

And then he'd been put on the report. Frapped by a midshipman lieutenant to whom everything came easy, who was among the first ten in the class. Whitney Rand.

That had bilged Brad out; they were tough that year, and it took only a few demerits to do it. So he'd packed, and said goodby to Elinor Sherrill... And when she said she had changed her mind, he knew Whit Rand had won, and that they'd marry as soon as Whit's two years of Navy-enforced bachelorhood were up...

Brad followed the sailor outside. The wind slammed him, and sand stung his cheek. He turned down to the dock, where the dark waters rumbled and slapped to show what it was like outside the harbor. More imaginative men might have looked into the water to see other things — a huddle of strained faces in the thickening air of the forward

His right arm was in a sling, and it was pain that made his eyes so bright torpedo room, or women twisting their handkerchiefs as they waited tensely beside radios from Maine to California. Or a bugler blowing taps while the Secretary dropped a wreath into the silent, penitent sea...

But Brad could only be haunted by things past and gone, because whatever impressed itself in his mind remained forever. And he was already making his plans. He functioned that way — give him a stated problem, and time, and he would arrive, slowly but surely, at a solution. Which was why he had been successful in the big salvage firm on the Great Lakes and on the west coast. There are few swift decisions necessary in salvage work. It is a slow, painstaking, painful job. You need to plan it all out in advance. You must know the wind's vagaries, and what the sea might do.

Men from the Chickadee's liberty party were already gathering at the Navy landing. Jeffries, the gunner's mate and master diver, saluted and drawled, "Evenin', sir." He was lean and leathery, and afraid of nothing in the green ocean. He sang Navy and hillbilly songs on the bottom in a diving rig.

Brad Hewitt asked, "Anybody know how deep she is?"

"All we know is she didn't come in, sir. She's somewhere in Area Roger."

Brad moved into the lee of the dockhouse, under a light, to wait for the boat. A car came down the pier — fast. It was whizzing toward the far end, where there was room to turn around, but it stopped with a squeal of tires in front of the dockhouse.

"Brad! Brad Hewitt!"

Things like that require a little time to make their impact upon your mind. They are unexpected, a part of the confusion attendant upon any swiftly-striking, tragic event. They have to be taken up out of the tangle and examined separately before you can plan how to handle them. A car drives up, and the girl you used to love — the girl you'll always love — comes running to you across the years, calling your name. . .

TW-3-8-4

Brad said, inanely: "Elinor! You're here!" She had been crying. He had never seen her cry. Mascara streaked her cheeks, and her nose looked a little red, and she wore more lipstick than he remembered. But she was still slim, still lovely.

"I just arrived - this afternoon." Her voice broke. "Oh, Brad! This happened while while I was home - getting a divorce!"

Her face was against his shoulder. He felt sobs shake her. He thought, with sudden clarity and a surge of hope that was as wild as the sea: Getting a divorce! Then he thrust that thought aside.

"Don't worry, Elinor! We've got a rescue chamber on the Chickadee - my ship. We'll get them up, all right!"

Elinor said, as if very tired: "I knew it was coming some day. I think that must have been why we - why I went home. He was gone all the time when he was on a battleship. He was gone, and I had nothing to do. Nothing. But submarines!" The word was a shudder. She lifted her wet storm-blue eyes and whispered: "Brad, I know now that I made a mistake - that time you asked me. I know I was thinking of uniforms and bands and Army and Navy games and dances at the Officers' Club. It isn't like that. It's-

The shore patrol officer put his head into the door. "Your boat is here, sir," he said. "The squadron commander wishes you to make the flagship and pick him up."

Elinor said, "I can't stand it, Brad! I can't stand this, either!"

She was going to pieces. Brad shook her back together.

"I tell you I'll get him out!" he cried savagely. And to himself, with a fierce joy: And I'll punch his face for him! For what he did to me that time, I'll go down to the bottom of the sea and punch his pretty face!

HE sun was up. Wind had blown all the clouds out of the sky, and Area Roger, in dim sight of the Cape, was an expanse of sea tumbling over itself in a hurry to go everyThat worried crease between his prows meant he didn't like the looks of the sea - and had no great confidence in the abilities of a reserve officer. Brad thought, with hot resentment, But I'm in command of this ship! and steamed the Chickadee slowly past the buoy with a grapnel dragging.

It caught, and they left another buoy to mark the descending line for a diver's use. The signalman who had gone in the whaleboat waved his flags. They had removed the brass plate succinctly stamped: "Submarine Sunk Here. Telephone Inside." They had talked to the old Eighty-Two boat.

She was on the bottom at nearly three hundred feet, her after part flooded because of the failure of a main induction valve. There were no casualties. But air was getting bad, would last only a few hours more.

Captain Libby perspired despite the cold. He wiped his brow, and said, "Then they'd better use the Momsen lungs and come up a line! We'll never be able to put the chamber over in a sea like this. It would smash our

Brad Hewitt walked deliberately through the pilot house to the other wing. He stationed a quartermaster on the pelorus there to take bearings, and came back to do the same on the starboard side. Then he planted his feet wide against the roll of the ship and faced the four-striper.

"We can plant a four-point mooring. The gear is rigged. If they use the Momsen lungs, it means flooding the rest of the boat, and you've got that much less buoyancy when time comes to raise her. At that depth it means a lot of pressure, and a long-time ascent for each man in this cold water. Some of them might lose their heads and let go. That would kill them. And pneumonia might kill the rest!"

Captain Libby's face went red. He said, "Damn it, I know all that, Hewitt! But - " the course was as plainly defined as a city block.

There were four deck anchors Brad had had secured outboard on the fantail - two on a side - rigged so that the stroke of an axe would send them over the side one by one. The chain of each was faked over the bulwarks so it would pay out. And from each chain a stout steel cable led to one of the corresponding four huge wooden spuds secured in metal sleeves in the rigging.

BRAD had taken soundings around the entire course. He knew how much cable each anchor and spud would need. Now they were heading up on the first leg of the rectangle. The tenseness was something to feel. Captain Libby puffed noisily on an unlighted pipe.

"Cast off!"

The axe swung, aft, and the after port anchor splashed. Chain rumbled and whipped, spraying rust particles over dungaree-clad men. In the rigging, a bluejacket with a sheath knife cut away the spud buoy at the instant the anchor was taking up slack in the cable.

The Chickadee went straight ahead, and the war-colored spud bobbed off her port quarter and fell astern.

Three hundred yards to the next corner the tenseness again, and the cry: "Cast off!"

Brad Hewitt jockeyed the Chickadee alongside the telephone buoy. He stopped the engines. Steam winches clattered as the slack was taken up on this hawser and paid out on Slowly, deliberately, the Chickadee trussed herself into steadiness. The pitch and roll ceased. Captain Libby grunted, "Damn nice work." Nobody heard him. Brad Hewitt was in the wing with a megaphone, ordering the diving stage swung outboard, with Jeffries in his suit.

Brad was thinking, Jeffries is the man who plays the hero — Jeffries does the dangerous job! A tugboat skipper was like his boat. Workaday and dull. And he was thinking, in the grip of a cold anger that had lasted ten years, I'll knock Whit's teeth in, down there in that pigboat where nobody can see. Let him report that!

But it was curious enough when he tried to analyze the way he felt toward Elinor the way he felt now, when she planned to be free, and when she had admitted that marrying Whit Rand was a mistake. It was curious, and it would take time to understand.

Jeffries went down the descending line that would guide him to the deck of the Eighty-Two boat. He had the downhaul cable of the rescue chamber secured to his arm by a bit of line. While he was down there, attaching the shackle of the cable to the submarine's escape hatch, he whistled and shrieked and groaned. The unearthly noises blasted from the loud speaker on the fantail, and Jeffries sang things like:

"Oh, the Chickadee is just a joke -We fill the ocean full of smoke, But at seven knots along we poke In the working tugboat Nav-eee!"

He was calling for them to hoist him so soon that no decompression time was needed. Brad Hewitt had the diving rig peeled from the lean gunner's mate at once. while the big rescue chamber was being swung outboard by the boom.

> Jeffries now took over the job of operating the chamber, with another sailor to assist him. But Brad himself manned the telephone on deck.

Under Brad's direction, Jeffries closed the chamber's lower hatch, blew his main ballast tank, and flooded the chamber's lower compartment. He started the compressed-air motor, and the reel began winding the downhaul cable, began pulling the buoyant chamber down into the sea.

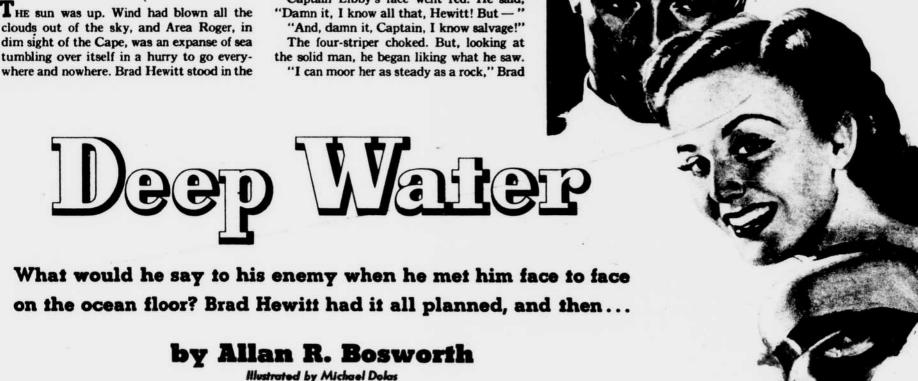

"Slowly - slowly!" Brad ordered. "Take your time!"

On deck, the minutes dragged. Twenty twenty-five - and then the chamber was on the hatch.

"Flood your main ballast!" Brad said. "Blow the lower compartment." He could hear the hissing of the compressed air through the phone.

He said, "Vent the lower compartment," and knew that the vacuum thus created was pulling the nine tons of steel down against the submarine with a seal that was airtight and watertight.

starboard wing of the Chickadee's bridge, listening to wind and sea, and hearing Elinor's sobs.

He needed a shave. And sleep. He had been up all night, planning this operation, working feverishly to rig the gear back on the fantail. The nine-ton steel rescue chamber stood near like a big gray top.

"Smoke bomb off the port bow, sir!"

A little later they sighted the Eighty-Two boat's telephone buoy, a yellow dot on the heaving green water. Brad ordered a selfbailing motor whaleboat lowered, and a drag prepared. Captain Libby, the submarine squadron commander, came to the bridge.

He was a nervous man with iron-gray hair.

went on. "I'm not a battleship sailor. I've worked on the sea, on dirty, thankless, slow jobs. I'm a tugboat man, and - "

He stopped, surprised at himself. He was almost proud of being a tugboat man!

Captain Libby's jaw snapped shut. Then he said, "Very well! You're in temporary command. Proceed!"

LT TOOK time. You had to plan everything. Cruise around the buoys on a rectangular course, taking bearings on the Provincetown monument, on the lighthouse, on a signal tower, on a battleship anchored in the harbor. Study wind and tide on each of the four legs. Mark the bearings down on the chart until Two down. A turn. Down the other leg, planting the starboard anchors with geometrical precision that left the telephone buoy in the center of the rectangle.

Now the Chickadee cruised slowly center with two more motor whaleboats in the water. Each boat dragged a six-inch manila hawser; the sea caught at the heavy lines and bent bights in them. But the boats went on obliquely from the ship, running the lines out through the fantail bitts, and rocking alongside the two spuds until their crews had the hawsers secured. Then the process was repeated on the other spuds. with hawsers paid out through the forward chambers' lower hatch, secure the holding-down rods - and open the escape hatch of the old Eighty-Two boat. And after eight men had been taken into the chamber, the processes were reversed. Twenty minutes thirty — and the eight were looking on sunlight, and feeling wind on their faces. Rand would wait, Brad knew, until the last trip of the chamber to leave his submarine. Brad turned to Captain Libby and brushed his hand across his red-lidded eyes. The job was nearly done, and he had begun to feel a weariness. But there was still his own job to do.

He said, "Captain, if you don't mind taking over, I'd like to go down on the last descent."

BRAD could think, in that steel drum, with his back against a circular wall that grew colder and colder as the depth increased. He could watch the small eye ports, and see the water turn from a translucent green to blackness; he could listen to the little compressed-air motor making a noise like a distant riveting ham-

And all the time he thought of Elinor, and of Whit Rand. He had envied Whit at the Academy - his ease of grasping the things for which Brad himself had struggled so hard his good looks, and his tall, commanding presence. Brad had envied Whit these past few weeks, after coming to the Chickadee and hearing that Whit was commanding the Eighty-Two boat. Reserve officers, like himself, seldom got a command. If they did, it wouldn't be a combat ship, like a submarine. It'd be something like a tugboat - a squat, unlovely, hard-working tug. . .

There was a cushioned jar. The rescue chamber was on the hatch, and Jeffries had shut off the motor and was flooding main ballast. When he blew the water out of the lower compartment, Brad could look down through the floor plate and see the Eighty-Two boat's escape hatch, with the downhaul cable shackled to it and running up through a fair-lead into the chamber.

It gave him a peculiar feeling. There were still men down there. Seven of them, who had depended on the Chickadee - and on Brad Hewitt, and Jeffries, and all the rest of the Chickadee's dungareed crew - for their lives. Seven men, including Whit.

Whit Rand. He was going down the escape hatch and into Whit's submarine. And when the six members of the crew had come up into the chamber, Brad was going to say: "Just a minute, Whit!" He'd see the surprise come into Whit's face, and he'd say: "Remember when you frapped me at the Academy, Whit? It was nothing to you. But it bilged me! I might have been a submarine skipper today, if you hadn't been so duty-struck -- '

You planned out things like that, what you were going to say, and what you were going to do. You planned them out of the stored-up bitterness of the years. Out of the years Whit Rand had been married to Elinor, making her unhappy.

And just when Jeffries' assistant was opening the hatch of the Eighty-Two boat, you were trying to analyze that unhappiness. It seemed to be based on the Navy. On Whit's iob she wanted bands and parades and uniforms, like she'd seen at the Academy. She wanted dances at the Officers' Club, bridge teas, and none of the long and lonely hours while a ship was at sea, doing its work.

You thought, suddenly, Why, she isn't being fair to Whit! . . .

The lights were dim in the forward torpedo room, and the air was bad. There was a vague, impatient stir of men who had been waiting a long time for this last trip. Brad stepped from the last rung of the ladder that was so steep a man had to back down it, and felt water up over his ankle.

Somebody said, very quietly: "All right, men. Up you go.'

It was Whit Rand's voice. Brad looked around, trying to see him, trying to adjust his eyes to the faintness of failing bulbs. A chief petty officer said, "But you, Captain - we're not going up until we've helped you up the hatch! You - "

"That'll do, Smith," Whit Rand said. "It's an order!"

Smith said, "Aye, aye, sir!" and began climbing. Brad moved a few paces into the dimness. Whit Rand's voice said, "Well - I'll be damned! Brad Hewitt - old Anchor Man, himself! Excuse the left hand, Brad. My starboard wing's out of commission."

He was coming through a passageway. His right arm was in a sling made of a sailor's neckerchief, and it was pain that made his eyes so bright. Rut he smiled, the same old handsome smile, and when he turned to shake hands, scood tall and erect.

"The water was coming in so fast, back aft," he said almost apologetically. "We had to dog the doors pretty quick, and get some men out of the engine room. I slipped and fell, and broke my arm. Brad, I'd be glad to see the devil himself down here, but I'm mighty glad to see you - and with that gold on your sleeve. Reserve, eh?

All the things Brad had planned to say and do were slipping away. And the bitterness, with them. He understood, now. Whit Rand was a naval officer, and always had been. He'd put Brad on the report, that time, but it was his duty to do it.

Brad laughed to cover up his confusion and slowness. He said, "Yeah - reserve. I'm just a tugboat man, Whit. I'll always be a tugboat man, I guess."

You said that instead of the things you'd planned to say. You knew, now, that you never really could have said them, and you never could have hit Whit in the mouth, either. You looked at him and knew that some day he'd stand tall on a flag bridge, wearing a broad stripe and making quick decisions that would never be wrong. You were proud to have been his classmate.

And proud, too, to have been a tugboat man. Because Whit was saying, "Captain Libby told us over the phone about that four-point mooring. Brad, that's seamanship! Captain Libby says it was the damndest exhibition of real seamanship he's seen in thirty years. Well - I'm proud it was you who did it! Up the ladder with you, Anchor Man. I want to leave last, and I want to leave under my own

Brad had time to think things out in the half hour it took for the ascent. He knew, now, that he could think about Elinor forever after, without any of the old hurting. Tonight he'd get her aside and tell her a couple of things.

There was still a salvage job to be done. It would take some one who was different - so different - from either Elinor or Whit, to do it.

BACK TO INFERNO

He was on shipboard, bound for America - and freedom. Then he changed his mind

by Maurice Maeterlinck

"The Noblest Act I Witnessed in the War" - eighth in a series by famous authors and war correspondents

T LAST, our ship came in. She was not much to look at. She was scratched and grimy and about her there was the smell of old ships, that curious odor compounded of innumerable coats of paint and thousands of cargoes.

But to us she was the most beautiful thing in the world. It did not matter if she was filthy as a street urchin and slow as a turtle; she was beautiful nevertheless, because she was going to take us from Europe to America.

This was in Lisbon, after the Nazis had torn up France. The loss of my home and belongings, the shattering of my whole way of life was a very minor casualty in the debacle. But, if only because of the terrible suddenness with which it had come upon us, it left me with a sense of unreality, as if I were living in a bad dream. Lisbon increased that nightmare quality. The atmosphere reflected the bewilderment and fear of the thousands of refugees who had crowded into the city. We lived on rumors, and one after another the rumors proved to be false. A ship would be sailing tomorrow. No, not tomorrow, but next week. Next week - next week - the week after next -

One morning the rumors came true, and the ship was there.

They let us on board. I doubt if there has ever been a stranger assortment of passengers. a cross section of the nations of Europe, piled together by catastrophe. There were not many signs of high spirits, not even among the children - too much had happened, and most of these people had husbands, sons, daughters lost somewhere behind.

By and by, with the ship still lying alongside the dock, we heard another rumor. There had been a mistake somewhere; the ship could not transport all those who had come aboard. A hundred had to be cleared out, and even then the old hull would be crammed to the limit. This, of all the rumors, was the one that should have been false; but it was not.

I do not remember what method was used by the authorities to determine which of us must stay behind. Except that, as these things must always be in times of emergency, it was a swift, mechanical and therefore ruthless method. Those who could stay on the ship were given tags of white paper to identify them; the others had to return to land and wait for another ship - if another ship ever came. It must have sounded like a death sentence to many.

It fell on a little group that happened to be near where my wife and I stood. I believe they were Dutch, father and mother and a boy and girl of ten or twelve. Very respectable, their clothes tidy and clean by some miracle - or by habit, I should say - after the inferno they must have come through. You might have called them stolid, for that is what the Dutch are supposed to be, and indeed they can take a good deal of kicking around and still stand firm. It is the southern Europeans who are generally regarded as the emotional ones. And perhaps if this family had come from one of the southern countries. there would have been tears and wringing of hands now when it was known that the father must get off the ship, left only with the hope that he might rejoin his family later.

It might have been a good thing if they had relieved what was inside them by letting it out. But they suppressed it. They could not "make a scene." Looking at them, you would not have known that these were their last few minutes together. Up the deck, officers were coming slowly along, shepherding before them all who did not have the little white tags.

None of this happened easily and quickly, in a series of clear pictures. You must imagine the confusion all around us, the babble of voices, people pushing back and forth, a child crying somewhere. I saw and understood it only in glimpses. I saw the Dutch father saying something to his wife and patting his boy on the shoulder. The next thing I noticed, someone had interrupted him. It was a nondescript-looking fellow, thin, gray, a man you would have passed without a second glance. I gathered that the father could not understand him. Then there was a quick movement, and he was left looking at the white tag in his hand and the other man was walking away.

He passed me. I said, in French, "Did you give it to him?"

He shrugged. "Well, what would I be doing in America?" Then he pushed on toward the gangplank back to Europe.

I made some inquiries later, after the ship had sailed, but nobody knew much about him. Someone thought that he was an Austrian anti-Nazi refugee. If so, it must have cost him many sacrifices to come to Lisbon, and the ship must have meant more to him, even, than to most of us.

There will be many richly deserved medals given in this war by each of our United Nations to their own heroes. But in this war of all wars there should be another form of decoration to commemorate such acts, so that they will be remembered by us all — as this one will be remembered by one little Dutch family now in America.

Spies have mapped all America, are still among us, listening in while we talk. But we can lick them. Here's how

by B. Edwin Sackett

Former FBI Special Agent

HERE is one painful truth about Pearl Harbor that we must remember.

That is the manifest fact that when those enemy bombers swooped down from the skies, their pilots knew the exact location of every strategic objective on the island.

Maps in their cockpits — painstakingly prepared months before in Tokio — pointed the way accurately to hangars and storage facilities of Hickam Field; to soldiers' barracks, gasoline dumps, ship anchorages and ground fortifications. Low-flying fighters knew exactly which roads to strafe to prevent the defenders from reaching their posts or taking the air against them. Pearl Harbor held no secrets for the invader!

Sadly enough, this same fact was true of the Philippines; is true of Alaska, and the Canal Zone. It is true, also, of every vital defense point in the continental United States.

For years Japan has been building up this fund of strategic information with little hindrance from us. Its "fishing fleets," commanded by disguised naval officers, have taken harbor soundings and have studied our coast defenses, our dock facilities, our ship movements along the entire Pacific coast.

Japanese "students" at American universities were actually military officers — and spent their holidays photographing the charming views afforded by our bridges, our water-supply systems and our dams.

Japanese naval and aeronautical engineers attended our finest technical schools and visited every near-by aircraft factory and important industrial plant.

Japanese army officers were even permitted three to nine months of training at our Army posts.

And always supplementing this direct research by military men were the reports of hundreds of commercial representatives of Mitsui & Company and the other huge business concerns of Japan and of so-called Japanese tourists.

For years the general staffs of the world's armies have been tirelessly engaged in "spotting" military objectives in possible enemy countries. Those efforts were not limited to trying to ferret out secrets of new guns and bombsights, warships and planes. It is just as vital to know the location of water supplies, communication and transportation networks, airports, gasoline storage points, naval bases and warehouses.

In the Axis countries, even in peacetime, every effort was made to keep foreigners from getting such information. The secret police scrupulously watched movements of foreigners, searched their baggage, tapped their telephones. Picture-taking was flatly forbidden. Two American aviators who inadvertently flew over restricted territory in Japan were clapped in jail for months.

In America, however, we all but organized tours for these grinning espionage agents — and indignantly slapped down any law-enforcement officer who interfered with their "rights" to go where they pleased and photograph anything that caught their fancy. Great hydroelectric projects like Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee and Bonneville, for example, have been widely advertised tourist attractions for years: Come one, come all, and bring your cameras.

No Secrets

WE PUBLISHED lists of defense plants, with the contracts awarded them, so that anybody could map the exact location and importance of each cog in the "Arsenal of Democracy." As late as last summer a railroad company published a free map showing every military camp in the country, with precise directions for reaching them. It was so good that an Army intelligence officer posted one in his office. "It's much better than anything the Army has put out," he told me.

Scores of these Nipponese photographers were picked up by the FBI for questioning. But with American laws as they were, we had to release them with apologies. Even though every G-man in the country knew exactly where those pictures were going — and why!

The realization that our enemies know the location of every strategic spot in America may be stunning. But at least we know the bad news at the very beginning and can provide against it. And unless I am sadly mistaken, America's response will not be one of dismay, but, rather, a defiant rolling-up of the sleeves.

Part of that response will be a wave of alertness

among the thousands of men who guard our dams and reservoirs, our power plants and railroad terminals, our bridges and tunnels.

They no longer wonder, as they patrol their cold and lonely posts, whether their hardship serves any good purpose. They know the importance of their jobs. And so does the general public.

We must not forget that the ENEMY WITHIN is a graver threat than the enemy without.

Anybody who remembers the devastation of the Black Tom explosion in the last war knows the menace of saboteurs. And those who aren't yet awake to this danger may be interested in a recent report from a New England defense plant:

A foreman, washing up to go home, chanced to glance up at the ceiling. What he saw made him start a tour of the factory. He discovered seven places where the electric light wires had been deftly short-circuited, so that when the current was turned on they would set fire to the plant.

That tampering had been done by the plant electrician himself, who had been in the company's employ seven years - but who was also a loyal Bund member!

Fooling the Mapmakers

 $\mathbf{T}_{ ext{HE}}$  enemy within doesn't have to seize the French fleet or capture Atlantic island bases or invade Alaska in order to strike. He's already here. And with him he has complete maps of every vital spot in America.

Quick alterations made since the declaration of war have in some cases nullified those Tokio maps. A bridge or waterworks obviously can't be moved overnight. But in our military establishments it is standard practice to change things periodically - or to set up alterations which automatically go into effect as soon as war starts. And such alterations are effective.

Remember the doggedness of the Japanese fliers in bombing the daylights out of a naval tanker in Pearl Harbor - because it was moored where their maps said an aircraft carrier should be?

Our cue from that is this: Keep your mouth shut about any military, naval or industrial information which comes your way - especially major changes in location, methods or schedules. That's a lesson the British learned early in the game. They discovered quickly that "the very walls have ears" — and that not only strangers, but even friends, may be channels of information for the enemy.

As a consequence, the British have learned to trust no one. And without resorting to Gestapo tactics, they have imposed a voluntary "code of silence" upon themselves which

When the Queen Elizabeth sailed from Clyde, for example, Captain Duncan Cameron, her skipper, merely said to his housekeeper, "Don't prepare supper for me; I won't be back for some time."

And although some 500 dockyard workers and a large crew knew when the ship was sailing and where, not a whisper of it leaked out until she landed safely in New York.

Likewise, thousands of Britons in the port of debarkation knew of the arrival of the first Canadian contingent, but they staunchly kept it a secret until Mr. Churchill announced it some time later. Indeed, the Prime Minister's meeting with President Roosevelt somewhere on the Atlantic — and his recent visit to Washington - were both known to hundreds of civilians. sailors and government employees and newspapermen, here and abroad. But they resolutely kept their mouths shut.

In view of the enemy's extensive knowledge of fixed and permanent defense facts, that's exactly the spirit we need now. Tearing a priceless page from the British book, here are some of their self-imposed rules which we must follow:

If you're an industrial worker, don't give out information about your work, your plant's production, where orders are shipped - or anything else the enemy might like to know.

If you're in the armed forces, don't talk about movements or transfers, training or equipment. Only the other night an elderly man sat next to a soldier at a show and, during intermission, asked him how he liked it.

"Swell," said the soldier. "And it's the last I'll see for some time. I'm sailing tomorrow on an Army transport."

> With enemy submarines reported off Long Island, what a stupid thing that was to tell, especially to a stranger!

> If you have a relative or friend in the service, don't pass on any military information which he may have written home. The mere fact that he tells it to you doesn't mean that it should be broadcast.

> If you're a civilian, not identified with the industrial or military setup, you can still serve your country by keeping to yourself information you may get. Byron Price, Director of the Office of Censorship, recently said: "The security of our armed forces, and even of our homes and our liberties, will be weakened in greater or less degree by every disclosure of information which will help the enemy.

So keep your mouth shut. And, by the same token, keep your ears and eyes open.

T's LIKE I said to Sammy Steers: when your country is up against danger, you get to thinking of the things and the people you can count on. That led to our speaking of Anne Warren.

I remember I stopped at the schoolhouse that morning on the way down to help fight the fire. I remember how the kids arrived talking and laughing a bit too loudly to show they weren't scared. The smoke was getting thick even then. When Timothy Lutz drove in with the school bus, he was short quite a few of his usual passengers. Their parents wouldn't let them come. Afraid the wind might change. Everybody said it would be bad if the wind changed. He'd picked up the teacher, of course, at Smith's Mills, as usual. When I saw her face I knew what it meant for her to keep school today.

"Well, Anne," I said. "Any news?" And she shook her head. "Keep smiling," I told her. What can you say, anyhow? I guess she hadn't slept a wink since the Doc was missing. Everybody said it was madness for him to try and get through, but there was a baby coming up at Ronsell's, five miles through the bush, and he'd promised Eva Ronsell . . . well, you know how it is. They figured from the way they found his car, blackened and ruined, that he'd had to abandon it and head back for Smith's Mills. Can you blame Anne for wanting to be down there every minute? I tried to tell her the youngsters would be out of mischief up here. She'd be doing a real service.

"Yes," she said, dry-lipped.

better shut up shop and get the kids right home.

I guess it's kind of tough teaching history when nothing matters but what's happening to the man you love; or geography when the only place on the map for you is a bit of smoking forest. The kids were restless, too. At recess time, the sun was a queer red ball. By noon the wind had dropped and it was still as death. Through the smoke they could just see old Mrs. Chandler's house—where Timothy Lutz went to do chores until it was time to take the kids home.

Then, suddenly, the weather vane on the schoolhouse veered, and a gust caught up the grit in the yard and spun it into a cone.

Anne took a look, and I can pretty well guess what her first quick thought was — That now she had an excuse to let school out. She told the young-sters who lived nearby to get started right home, and report to their parents, and she sent Charlie Duckett running to fetch Timothy Lutz.

"Mis' Chandler says," Charlie reported, "that he's gone down to fight the fire. Didn't think he'd be needed until this afternoon."

Anne looked at the bus parked there. I guess it looked big as an elephant to her, and about as clumsy. She knew she wasn't any great shucks of a driver, but she told everybody to get in QUIETLY. No pushing. No shouting, please! She got the bus safely out on the highway. The smoke was drifting heavier all the time now. Hard to see. But the highway was empty. She seemed alone in the world, except for the children. You know where the viaduct is across the gully?

Well, as they got near, some of the kids started shouting: "Gee, Miss Anne—lookit! The trees are on fire!" She figured sparks had started new trouble in the dry bed of the gully, and that it was now or never. In a moment—a rather terrifying moment—they were by. In the clear again. "Everybody all right?" she rallied the kids.

And they went on—toward Smith's Mills. I've thought since that when she saw the man with the red flag, he must have seemed to her like a flaming angel outside Paradise. But it was just Sammy Steers. Little Joan Steers began jumping up and shouting, "Here I am, Daddy."

"Hullo, Miss Anne," Sammy Steers said. He smiled at his kid. "You stop with Miss Anne, Joanie," he said. "She'll look after you all right. Where's Timothy Lutz?" he asked, and Anne told him. He nodded; then shook his head. "Bad business, this wind shiftin'," he told her. "It's no use tryin' to go on from here."

Ahead were men and trucks, and one rumbled into life. Where was that going?

"Smith's Mills," Sammy said. "But not with a cargo of kids."

She told him how it was behind. He whistled. Look, he wanted to know, was this fire the other side of the Route Road?

"Then you go back double quick," Sammy advised, "and take that. It ain't much of a road, but it'll detour you round to Shaw's Settlement." Once there, he said, they could stop safely till the worst was over, and he would himself send word to Smith's Mills by the truck to save folk from worrying.

Then Sammy took a look at her face and he saw how it was. He told me afterwards of the queer little smile she gave him and how it hurt him to see. "Could you help me — turn — this tank?" she asked.

LITTLE he knew to what he was sending her. He watched until the smoke swallowed them up. It was coming thicker all the time. Billy Hall, sitting in front with Anne, said: "Gee, it makes you—almost scared—doesn't it?" And Anne said, "That's when a person has to begin to be brave, Billy."

It was better on the Route Road—at first. It was a road Anne knew. Could you wonder that Anne thought of Dr. Jim when they'd come here together to pick hepaticas in the spring, when it was here he'd told her he was "going to rob the teaching profession to provide a doctor with a mife."

And he had added, "That's grand larceny, all right. I only help bring kids into the world, but you have to teach 'em what adds up into living." I don't know just how far they'd got before Billy said, "It's smoking up again, Miss Anne." Then she took stock and knew that Sammy Steers had been too sanguine.

There was only scrub timber in here, but plenty of dry underbrush, and it was like tinder. Billy was putting on a bit of a show, coughing a lot, and she said, "Must you do that, Billy? I don't think it helps."

And Billy said, "Well, gee, Miss Anne, even the ol' bus is coughing!" That was just about the time Anne had figured the depression ahead and to the left was Shaw's Pond. She'd never thought to check the gas, and Timothy was usually so dependable. His mind, no doubt, was on the fire,

Despair was in her heart, but laughter was on her lips — and in the end it was laughter that won not his work. On the next little rise, the car coughed its last, and would have backed down if she hadn't put on the brakes.

"What'll we do now, Miss Anne?"
When you want to know anything, you ask Teacher. Teacher has all the answers.

That was when Anne had to get control of herself, and of her voice. Youngsters are quick to see. They'd all get out, Anne said, and play a — a game. They'd play soldiers, she said. And march. Billy in front, because hadn't he his mouth organ she'd had to take away during school?

"Jeepers, yes!" Billy cried.

I know all those kids. I can picture them marching through the smoke along that winding road. Claire Adams, dark and elfin. Honey Schutt, with her bright bobbing pigtails. Small Joanie Steers. Millicent Dane, old enough to have terrified eyes behind her heavy glasses. The Abousra twins, whose parents run a tourist camp: sallow, respectful Syrian boys, adoring "ticher." Catherine Jones, always in trouble with her arithmetic, but who surprised Miss Anne with bits of her own poetry and prose. Daniel Webster Smith, the meekest child who ever bore an imposing name. And Billy, of course. Strike up the band, Billy! What'll it be? John Brown's Body? Glory, glory, hallelujah... as we go marching on.

Smoke — and wind — and fear!
"Don't cry, Joanie dear. Listen to Billy's music. We're all soldiers and

THE smoke hurt her, Joan said. And her legs wouldn't go.

"Just a bit further, dear. Keep marching, Billy. Never mind the music. Save your — breath. All good soldiers keep on marching until they're told to halt."

There were flames now—somewhere. You could hear the leap and crackle. There must be no giving way to panic. March. Don't run. Left wheel, Billy. Everybody down to that strip of beach. Halt. Steady, everybody. Sometimes a laugh is worth more than the silence they say is golden. Think how funny it is, children! Going into the water with all your clothes on. Something to tell your fathers and mothers when you get home, isn't it? When you—get home.

"Joan, dear, the water won't hurt you," Anne said. "I'll hold you tight. Look at Billy laughing."

There were things they must do, she said, when she gave the signal: Keep down — like this. Heads just above water. Like a game. Everybody playing. And wet handkerchiefs over noses — like this. And the boys' sweaters soaked and held above, like tents. "When, Miss Anne?"

She would tell them, she said. They must wait, now. Waiting for terror to come, I guess, is worse than when it strikes. You know then. They might try singing, Anne said. Never mind the smoke. So they sang:

"Little Sir Echo, how do you do? Hello, hello! Little Sir Echo will answer you —"

Children's voices carry. Farther even than the cries of birds flying in frightened circles, or the splashings of terrified creatures on the margins of Shaw's Pond. They sang "There's an Old Spinning Wheel in the Parlor" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers." They kept on singing until Miss Anne gave the signal.

Then the fire came to Shaw's Pond. When it had gone, the trees were blackened skeletons and all green things were charred.

I OFTEN think how Anne Warren must have felt when, after the fire had passed, after she was sure her charges were safe, young Billy cried out: "Miss Anne, Miss Anne — look over there!" . . . and she started wading through the water toward that ledge of rock the other side of Shaw's Pond. Wanting to believe, but not quite believing. Not daring to believe. Because miracles are for saints and mystics. Not for ordinary young people who teach children — or help bring them into the world.

When she reached the ledge of rock the water came to her breasts. She put out a hand and touched the man lying on the ledge. He looked at her like a man who'd come out of hell. He was blackened and burned and all in, but he managed a smile.

"Are you one of the angels I heard singing?" Doc wanted to know...

I know it doesn't always happen that way. But if you go to Shaw's Settlement or Smith's Mills, they'll tell you. Or ask Sammy Steers, who commandeered a truck and was first in on the heels of the fire that swept the Route Road that day. Sammy will tell you:

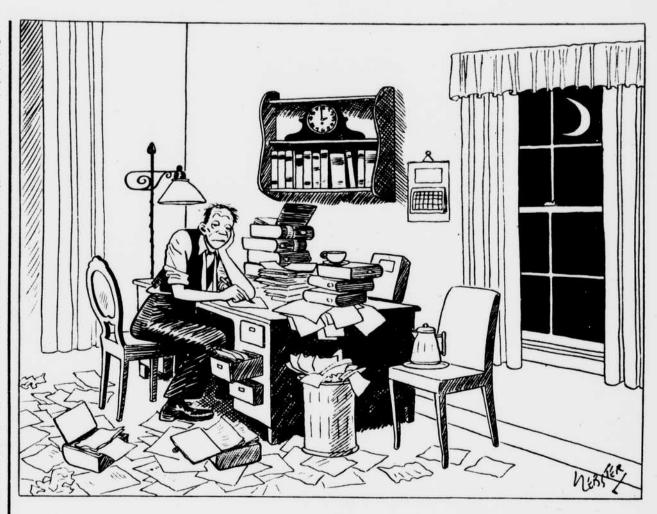

"There she was, thinkin' she was leavin' him, to do her duty by the kids. And it was the kids' singin' that saved him. If you'd been through what he had and wandered as far as he did, maybe you'd think you was hearin' angels.

"Anyway he kept goin' towards the sound — and got to Shaw's Pond." Sammy will tell you, as he told me, scratching the bristle on his chin: "People talk about it bein' a miracle. Shucks, I don't know. Maybe it was. But I reckon both of 'em had something inside — or it wouldn't have happened."

That's why I wanted to tell you about Anne Warren. And why I hope there are plenty like her. We may be needing them.

You know, I've a suspicion — maybe you have too — that victory is inside us, first of all.

The End

The dilemma of C. Edward Lasher

PITY THE PLIGHT OF C. Edward Lasher. His discomfort is the result of having said to himself: "I won't ask an agent to help me plan my life insurance program. I'll do it myself!"

What steps would he have to take...what knowledge must he acquire in order to give himself the service and advice he would ordinarily get from an agent?

▶ First, of course, it is necessary to consider his needs... determine how each of these needs, such as family protection, education of children, debt retirement, and so on, can best be met by life insurance. He could do this by analyzing, just as an agent would, how life insurance has met similar problems in thousands of other cases.

Then, he must study the various kinds of life insurance to see which are best suited to his personal and family requirements. He would learn that there are three basic types of life insurance—Whole Life, Endowment, and Term, each with features especially fitting it for certain purposes, and each more or less interchangeable with the others. He would learn that within these three basic types there are many different kinds of policies, each designed to help meet some specific situation.

▶ Which can contribute most to his family's security? Which will best meet his children's educational needs? Which will build him an adequate retirement income? How much is necessary? Maybe, by using the optional modes of settlement available under the various forms of life insurance, one particular policy answers all his problems.

So, he would want to study these methods of settlement. Also, before determining costs, it is necessary to find out the class of risk in which his occupation places him. He should study the various methods of premium payment to learn how he could most conveniently keep his life insurance in force.

▶ If Mr. Lasher did all these things, he might arrive, at length, at some answer to his personal problem. We think that the deeper he delved, the more likely he would be to seek some expert guidance as to the kind and amount of life insurance he should have...advice which requires the knowledge and experience of a trained life insurance agent.

CHORUS GIRL NO. 12

It was Carole Landis, who didn't know how to dance. But listen...

NCE upon a time 12 pretty girls, about to dance in a movie, were waiting for their turn before the camera. They were grouped in a corner of the sound stage, practicing their dance. A man with a tray entered and called out:

"Candy bars!"

Eleven of the girls stopped dancing and hurried over to the man and bought candy bars and sat down to eat them. The twelfth girl kept on practicing.

Two men came along. One was the dance director, the other was the producer of the picture. The producer looked at the 11 girls, then heard the tapping of the other girl's dancing slippers.

"We'll use that one," he said, "for the solo dance."

"Oh, no," the director said, laughing, "she's just learning."

The producer said: "The part

The producer said: "The part calls for ambition. She has it."

"You're the boss," the director said hopelessly.

"What's her name? Where'd she come from?" the producer asked. The director looked puzzled. "I don't know," he said.

But I know, and if you'll sit quietly for a minute I'll tell you.

Carole Landis came from a Hollywood apartment, and she got on that particular sound stage because three men who were movie extras lived on the floor below.

Carole had ridden in the elevator with the three men several times before she finally spoke to them.

"Hello," was all she said the first time. They said hello. The next time she got in the elevator with them — the ice having been broken — she said, "Well, I see you're movie actors." She looked knowingly at their tan make-up.

"Just extras," they told her.
"If I could even be that," she said, "I'd be happy."

"You're pretty young to be wanting to get into the movies," one of the men said.

"I am not," Carole said.
"I'm seventeen and I came to Hollywood to be a movie actress and I'm going to be one if it takes me all the rest of my life."

Another one of the men said, "Could you dance, in a chorus?"
"Easy," Carole said.

"They're calling a lot of dancers to the studio today," he said. "If you want to come along, maybe you could sort of walk in with us, and take your place as one of the dancers, and nobody'd be the wiser."

So she went to the studio with them, and they got her in, and she found the dancers and took her place in the back row. The dance director had them all dance, and since Carole didn't know how to dance—she had fibbed a little—all she could do was watch the girl in front of her, and glance at those on either side, and try to do what they were doing.

After this had gone on awhile the dance director lined the girls up in a single row — there were about a hundred — and walked along in front of them, and 12 times he stopped, and each time he stopped he told one of the girls to step out of the rank. Among these was Carole. He then told all the rest of the girls to go home, and walked away.

This confused Miss Landis, who up to then had assumed that she and the 11 others had been given the gate. One of her colleagues set her right: they had been chosen.

She looked up the director. "See here," she said, "I can't dance. Except in a crowd. A big crowd."

By this time all the unchosen girls had left the studio. "Well," the director said, scratching his head, "you'll have to learn, that's all. I can't get all those girls back again."

She was put under a quick course of special instruction and she did pretty well, but still not as well as the others, so she kept practicing during every spare minute she could find, including the minute when the candy man came in...

Which brings us back to our starting place.

Big Break

AFTER a lot of extra-special practice she did the solo dance for the picture, which was called "Varsity Show." But if you happen to have seen "Varsity Show," you may recall that there was no solo dance in it. Here's why:

Sometimes in making a picture some of the scenes that are photographed are taken out of the story, for any one of a number of reasons. They took the solo dance out. But it just happened that Miss Landis took a bow with the other principals in the grand finale of the picture; so to explain her presence they had to reshoot some previous scenes and give her a few lines to speak in them.

That is to say, she now was an actress.

And also to say, Hollywood is a funny place.

It would be absurd to say that from this auspicious start Miss Landis went right on. She did not. She had too many brains. What I mean is, Carole discovered two things: (1) that she didn't know how to act; (2) that she wanted to learn.

So she passed up the dancing contract that the big studio offered her and made her way to the smallest studio in town. She persuaded them, on the strength of her appearance in "Varsity Show," to give her a job in Westerns. In such pictures you don't get much chance to emulate Bette Davis, but you do go through a lot of motions before the camera, and you learn a great deal about the fundamentals of acting.

Rough Rider

When she was not eating off the mantel—or riding the horse that was responsible—she was going to night school. She studied diction, dramatics, languages, and picked up some extra coin, between pictures, by modeling clothes. A chance to play the head in "One Million, B.C.," a pantomime picture made by Hal Roach, came along in 1940. She got this, not because of her dramatic work, but through her modeling, which was about all she had to do in the picture.

A friend of mine was working in that picture and I went out to see him, and met Miss Landis. We watched her do one of the pantomime scenes. She was dressed in a leopard skin and looked nice in it. She is blond and pretty and looks nice in almost anything.

"What's the matter?" I said. "Can't you talk?"

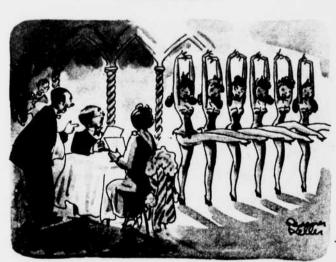

She laughed. "You bet I can talk," she said. "Wait and seed"

I waited and saw. She was given a contract by Mr. Roach and played in a few pictures for him, and did well. Half of her contract was bought from Roach by Twentieth Century-Fox, and this studio is grooming her for stardom in the major leagues. She played increasingly well in "Moon Over Miami," "Dance Hall," "Cadet Girl," and "Hot Spot." Now she is playing in "My Gal Sal," featured with Victor Mature and Rita Hayworth.

Future plans for her are large, and she seems ready to live up to them. She still is working her head off, both on the set and in her spare time, and Hollywood has given her the nod. Maybe it's all because she's always remembered what that first producer said when he saw her practicing her dance steps:

"The part calls for ambition."

FORWARD MARCH! I been lookin' up the month of March in the almanac an' you may like to hear what I found

First off, until the calendar was changed 190 years ago March was the first month of the year. Up till nine years ago March was when we put in a new president or retreaded the old one. It's still the month when the government calls on all the national banks for a statement of their condition. An' while we're on the subject, the Govt. would like to know, on March 15, how you came out last year in the money dept., also.

The Navajo Indians call March the "Month of Little Hail," while Uncle

March marks the beginnin' of spring, which means there is the same amount of daylight as there is dark all over the world, no matter what your clock says, or what you read in the papers.

THERE GOES JOE COLLEGE!

Our Home Front reporter visits a university where pacifism once flourished. It's different now

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. "Atten-SHUN! Forward M-HARCH."

Four hundred pairs of feet hit the turf in rhythmic cadence. Four hundred University of North Carolina students swung across the field. They had no guns, no uniforms. Gym shirts and khaki pants predominated. But the young faces were intent. No grinning, no fooling. The Carolina Volunteer Training Corps was on the march. It was serious business.

"I think it would be a safe guess," said the faculty member beside me, "that half of these students could have been counted as convinced pacifists a year ago."

Remember all the viewing-withalarm the last few years about the pallid attitude of college students? Their "Keep Us Out of War" meetings? Their fiery declarations that youth wouldn't fight any more wars?

The University of North Carolina was one of the hotbeds of that student pacifism. The "Daily Tar Heel," student newspaper, was an all-out champion of isolationism and pacifism. To have suggested compulsory military training would have meant trouble. Just before Pearl Harbor, a turnout of students cheered isolationist Senator Nye to the echo.

And here they were marching. "One - Two - Three - Four. One - Two - Three - Four. Battalion HALT!"

TRAINING STARTED a few days after Pearl Harbor. That event, of course, electrified the university, just as it did the whole country. Campus leaders — many of them had led the peace demonstrations — began trying frantically to get something going to support the war effort.

But it was a sophomore named Henry Wisebram who brought matters to a head. Henry went to see one of the deans. "Look," he said, "this is war. Why can't we have military training?" And he had a plan.

Almost overnight, the C.V.T.C. was born. Students flocked to join it.

The training is a lot more than justen hay-foot, straw-foot stuff. The university agreed to make courses in military science and background part of the regular curriculum. Faculty members with military experience—teachers of English, French, geology and other things—give the courses in addition to their regular work. A retired Army officer, Lieutenant Colonel William A. Raborg, who was living at Chapel Hill, volunteered to help, and was signed up as commandant—without pay. Henry Wisebram is Cadet Adjutant. Other students with previous military training are the officers and drill masters.

"This is no scheme to get out of Army service," Henry Wisebram warned me. "Just the opposite. It is pre-service training. The Army doesn't have anything to do with it, officially. It's not an R.O.T.C. unit. We aren't promised any commissions or any special treatment. We just want to be doing something to get ready."

Pacifists? Well, not just now.

MANY WAR ACTIVITIES tesides the C.V.T.C. are now occupying the university. Two hundred students are training in the Naval R.O.T.C. Forty are learning to become pilots at the university airport, one of the biggest in the country. Co-eds are learning to do Red Cross work and to repair cars. Speed-up schedules are in force, to enable students to finish their education and become available for war service.

Special courses, of wartime value, are drawing heavy attendance. Japanese, for instance. But don't get the idea that the 34 students studying it are preparing to talk with conquerors. The first sentence the class learned to say was: "Watakushi domo no sinhei wa Nihon-jin no sensuitei wo shuzumieta." Which means: "Our sailors have sunk a Japanese ship."

Truman Hobbs, president of the student body here, is a son of Congressman Hobbs of Texas. The Congressman has stood consistently for a strong foreign policy and military power to back it up. Truman was long on the other side of the fence, He told me why — and why he changed.

"It seemed to me," he said, "as I studied history and philosophy, that people had always been fighting wars without any clear or true idea of what they were fighting for. I thought we were heading into the same thing all over again. But finally I began to see—even before Pearl Harbor—that this was a new kind of a situation. A world revolution. Instead of nothing important being at stake, everything was. So I had to change my mind about what we should do about it."

I wonder if that doesn't explain a lot of college students all over the country.

"Anyway," said the editor of the "Daily Tar Heel," "you can mark this war as the end of Joe College. You know, the fellow who was only in college to knock the girls dead, drive an automobile, and get tight. He's done, and he won't come back."

GOOD RIDDANCE! Certainly if this campus is typical — and I'm sure it is — the average college student today is a pretty serious-minded lad. He isn't being swept off his feet by war hysteria. Instead, he is accepting the challenge of war and trying to fit himself into the country's war effort.

I ended my visit by sitting in on an old-fashioned dormitory bull session. The subject: "What are we fighting for, and how can we make sure we get it?" It was the first time in years that I had heard anybody rattle off Wilson's Fourteen Points from memory. I remarked as much to the youth who accomplished the feat. He shrugged away the compliment. "Naturally," he said, "we've all looked that up. If we're going to win this war — and the peace — it would be stupid not to know the mistakes you made in the last one, wouldn't it?"

I nodded. Humbly.

KEEP 'EM FLYING!

Flags of the United Nations

THE BRAVE ARRAY of banners on our cover represents, in the words of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, "the greatest common war effort in history." Every government whose flag appears is a signatory to the Declaration by United Nations. Each is pledged by that Declaration to war relentlessly, with all its resources, against the Axis - and to make no separate peace.

The epochal agreement which 26 nations signed at Washington on New Year's Day contained only five brief paragraphs, but in them is embodied the determination of all mankind for Freedom, and a potent promise of Victory.

For these flags represent two thirds of the earth's population, more than two thirds of its economic power and fighting potential. They represent a possible military mobilization of 163,887,000 men. against only 28,560,000 that the Axis could muster.

Do This at Bedtime Tonight

IF YOU awaken feeling and looking tired and listless—if you seem to be "aging" too rapidly, losing freshness and sparkle in the stress of these strenuous days—here is important news.

Today, modern science is reporting starting discoveries about food. About new-found, almost-magic food elements—with power to revitalize millions of the tired, the nervous or under par, and build them up for clear-eyed morning freshness and vigorous, buoyant days.

As you may have read in recent magazines, these new-found food elements are so important that governments throughout the world are changing na-tional diets to include more of them. Warring nations feed them to their armies, to build up physical stamina and sound nerves. Deny them to their captive people, to sap physical resistance and undermine morale.

Already here in America our own government is seeking ways to supply more of these elements. For government studies show that 2 out of every 3 Americans aren't sure of getting enough of these vital food-factors to be at their best.

What To Do

In light of these new discoveries, thousands are taking a cup of new, improved Ovaltine each night and morning. For Ovaltine is a scientific food-concentrate designed to do two important things.

First: Taken warm at bedtime, Oval-

tine fosters sound sleep—without drugs.

Second: To build vitality while you sleep, Ovaltine supplies a wider variety and wealth of valuable food elements than any single natural food. More than merely a "vitamin carrier," it provides not just two—or four—or six—but eleven important food elements, including vitamins and minerals frequently deficient in ordinary foods. It supplies significant amounts of Vitamins A, B,, D and G—protecting minerals—complete proteins.

So—for clear-aved morning freshness.

So—for clear-eyed morning freshness and more vital, buoyant days—turn to the new, improved Ovaltine, starting to-night. See if you don't begin to look and feel far more "alive" and sparkling with new zest for life.

RABBIT OUT OF A

Joie was all washed up — his "magic" act was corny. Then he went on for the last time . . .

by Louise Baker

Illustrated by Carl Setterberg

JOIE didn't even try to fool Elva, and he couldn't fool himself. He was through. The act was "corny." That's what they called it. He knew he'd never be booked again. His name — "Mantelo, the Marvelous" — had been printed smaller and smaller on the billboards and nearer the bottom on the listing. Now it was to disappear completely.

"Who gives a damn whether or not you can pull a rabbit out of a hat? That was funny when Noah entertained the animals in the ark — but it's corny now. It stinks!" That's what Max Fortner had said, and when Max Fortner quit booking you, you were through. Theatrical people didn't sink lower than Max. Max was bottom.

Mantelo wouldn't even have gone to the theater that night except that they still owed him his pay. Three days they owed him. He'd have to go through with it again — for the money. And tonight there would be no rabbit to pull out of the hat. There would be no beautiful blonde either to put in the casket and cut in half — to the jeers of his audience. His father had taught him the tricks when he was a boy. "Never go through a performance without the rabbit act, Joie. It's a sure-fire winner!" That's what his father had said and he had never gone through one without it. But tonight there would be no rabbit.

Tonight the white rabbit — "Gardenia," they called her — lay on the bed under the frail, feverish hands of Mantelo's daughter, Birdie. "She wants to keep the rabbit with her," Elva had whispered. "Oh, Joie, could you get along without the rabbit and without me? I can't leave her. It's 104 now — her temperature. The doctor said — "

Mantelo interrupted her. "Honey, neither you nor the rabbit can help me now anyway. It doesn't matter. I only wish I could stay with her too, but you know — the pay —"

"Yes, dear, you must go through with it," his wife said.

Mantelo leaned over and kissed the hot little cheek of the child. Then he kissed the weary, cosmetic-worn face of his wife, who had been "the beautiful blonde" in his act all through the years.

As Mantelo laid out the equipment on his table, his hands trembled. Three days pay—four, counting tonight—then no more. What would he do? There was the life insurance, of course. He could borrow on it, but if he borrowed, how would he pay back? If Elva and the kid could cash in on it now—Yes, that was better, that was the only way... His nimble fingers felt too heavy for his hands as he arranged his trick deck, his disappearing boxes, his magic wand. There was no magic now to save him.

Lola and Lester, the trapeze performers, spoke to him. They knew, of course. "How's Birdie?" was all they could say. Lester patted his shoulder. Joie turned his face away.

Flossie, the washed-up opera singer, came over too. "Listen, Joie," she said. "My Uncle Beck has a farm in Illinois and you and Elva and Birdie might like to go out there to fatten Birdie up before you come back for the fall bookings." They all knew and were trying to make things easy for him. Pretending he'd book in the fall!

Even the two Brighties — the little blonde tap dancer and her black-haired partner — spoke to him. "Hiya, Joie — give 'em the works, fella," the boy said.

"Sure, sure," said Mantelo.

"Where's the rabbit? Where's Gardenia?" the blonde asked. "I want to pet her."

Mantelo couldn't answer, but it didn't matter. The two young dancers were off together, whispering excitedly to each other. They were on the way up. Their names were getting bigger and bigger on the billboards and listed higher. Already they'd been noticed by important eyes. They were just marking time until the end of their contract to rise to real lights. "Spencer's out there," Mantelo heard the boy say. "Boy! Give, babe, plenty. This means but everything. Spencer! Get it?"

"Spencer," Mantelo thought, "the top booker in the business." Well, it didn't matter anyway, because Mantelo was finished. His feet would feel the stage beneath them for the last time tonight. And tomorrow night — perhaps his feet would feel the earth beneath them for the last time...

"Mantelo!" It was his call. His card was out. The drums rolled, as they always had. Mantelo ran onto the stage. For the first time in all his years as a performer, he tripped and sprawled beside his table. He pulled himself up and for a moment felt hot tears of defeat in his eyes. Then he forced his lips into the contour of a smile and bowed stiffly. The audience rocked with laughter.

Ignoring the ridicule, he pulled out his aged deck of cards. That strange heaviness was still in his hands, but he flipped the cards about as best he could, racing his tongue through his usual patter. "And so, ladies and gentlemen, where is the ace?" With that, he reached to the center of the pack to draw out the designated card. The entire pack fell from his shaking hands—aces showered about him. The audience screamed their jeers.

Mantelo was an old trouper. He hadn't suffered from stage fright since those first childhood appearances when he had carried the great red-satin-lined cape for Tario, the Magician — his father. But tonight, strange fearfulness added its weight to the burden already heavy on his heart. He went through his act like a child with a well-memorized recitation.

"Hiya, Joie - give 'em the works, fella," the boy said

He didn't know what he was saying, but it was all so familiar, he couldn't forget his lines — even when the laughter threatened to drown out his chatter.

He realized by what unconscious rote he was working when he found himself half-way through the rabbit act. "You can see, my friends, that this is merely a gentleman's opera hat. How, indeed, you ask, could a rabbit be concealed within it?" He paused, and then placed the hat back on the table nervously. "How indeed!" he repeated. And there was nothing left to him but discouragement and the truth. "There isn't any rabbit," he said. "The rabbit — Gardenia her name is — is home in bed —"

THE audience really howled then, and as Mantelo made his last exit he heard applause—applause such as his ears had never known before, even when his name was in big bold type near the top of the billboard.

In his dressing room, he gathered together his things. He'd take them home for Birdie. Birdie could do all the tricks, and loved them.

They were magic still to Birdie.

The loud knock on his door startled him. "Come in," he said. He had never before met the man who entered, but he knew who he was. Every hoofer, every crooner, every performer from Broadway to Hollywood who had ever pawed a copy of Variety knew Spencer.

"Mantelo — you are magnificent!" he said.
"I am ready to pay you $500 tonight for an option, and if you stop in at my office tomorrow we'll discuss a contract. Glory! I thought the day of magicians was over, but I swear, man, that was the most masterful burlesque I ever saw in my life. You're wonderful! Why I never saw anything more corny in the corn belt. It's simply a wow! Here."

Spencer thrust a handful of bills at Mantelo.

Mantelo couldn't lift his hand. He just stood and stared. "The rabbit —" he finally stammered. "The rabbit —"

"Yeah — the rabbit! You're right! The rabbit act is a sure-fire winner! Maybe we can raise my offer a bit when we sit down to talk it over. Okay? And you'll be around to-morrow?"

"Yes —" said Mantelo. "Yes — I'll be around tomorrow."

FOR WAR GIRLS

Shortages won't hit your hair-do if you use these dodges

1. NO HAIR UNTURNED: Brushing is best way to keep your hair in condition, rout flakes that pass for dandruff, and to spread on a mirror-like sheen that won't wash off.

2. KEEP IT CLEAM! Wrap on and take off three turbans of foamy suds. A liquid soapless has a conditioner in it to make a mop soft, silky and more responsive to whims.

3. HAIR-PIN SHORTAGE? Spike your curls with toothpicks. You'll look more bristling, but ringlets speared with tiny sticks comb out in the same professional-looking curls.

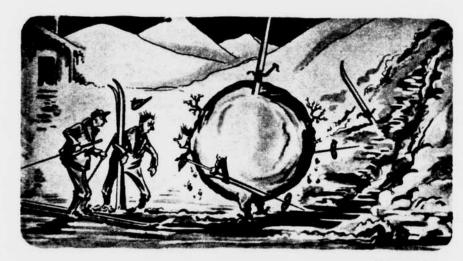

4. VANISHING PERMANENT? If Uncle Sam says "no" to a new one, get out your old linen rags, and wind. For nice results, have rag-strips and hair-strands of uniform size.

5. SOIGNEE COIFFURE. This is the kind you can whip up with either rags or toothpicks. So, is there any reason why you shouldn't bow gracefully to shortages?

VERDICT?

Can You Deduct It?

WHEN YOU FILE your income tax next week, don't forget that Uncle Sam allows you to charge off certain kinds of damage. What are they? See below:

1. When Mr. Hanson's weathercock was stolen in 1939 he was pleased to learn its value could be deducted.

2. In 1940 he was still more pleased to find that he could deduct the cost of repairing his house when a boiler explosion wrecked one end of it.

3. Then, in 1941, a storm-blown oak struck the chimney, dropping a brick on his head. Can the unlucky Mr. Hanson deduct hospital expenses?

DECISION: No. But the cost of repairing the chimney is deductible.

When it comes to fire, theft, storms and similar misfortunes, Uncle Sam gives you a break on March 15 as to property damage. Should your pipes freeze or an earthquake scramble your chinaware, you also take those losses off under item 14 (form 1040). When your car skids on a too-icy pavement you enter the repair bill on the same line. These are "casualties." But expenses resulting from personal injury are out!

If you have an accident in your car you can deduct the cost of repairing the fender-but not your broken bones. You may also enter the value of an auto stolen or destroyed by fire, as well as demolished in a collision. The value of trees blown down in a hurricane may be deducted.

Your loss — remember, you should have prooforiginal cost but the present value. Do not deduct any losses that are covered by insurance.

SUGGESTED FOR SOLDIERS ...

Send them brownies. Here's the recipe of Mrs. Arthur B. Woods

by Grace Turner

NE of the U. S. Treasury's hardest-working volunteer promoters of Defense-Bond sales, is Mrs. Arthur B. Woods, greatgranddaughter of Alexander Hamilton, first Secretary of the Treasury. A tall, willowy, golden-brown woman, with chestnut-colored hair and searching brown eyes, Mrs. Woods can do many things well - run her house, work for the Treasury Department, and take an active part in our War reflet and defense programs. She is also an excellent example of how to be a wartime hostess, with a preference for very simple menus and spontaneous entertaining in her historic Georgetown house.

"There couldn't be a more interesting place than Washington is now," Mrs. Woods says. Nearby her, in charming houses with gardens at the rear and the fronts opening on oldfashioned, brick-paved streets, live some of Washington's most important or interesting people - justices of Supreme Court, the Librarian of Congress, members of the State Department. The Woods house is a haven where they can come in informally.

"We're all ages," Mrs. Woods sees. "We don't segregate the young people from the older ones. There may very probably be a number of people staying for dinner, when one of the boys turns up unexpectedly with his friends."

ROBERT KEENE STUDIOS

Brownies for the boy at camp - yummy!

Two of Mrs. Woods's boys are in the service, John the oldest being an ensign flier in the Navy while Alexander, the youngest, enlisted some months back in the Army Medical Corps. The middle boy Leonard, a senior at Dartmouth, and fourteenyear-old Carolie, are in school. The girl is the artist of the family. "I like to watch her strong young hands at work," Mrs. Woods says, and points to an excellent head of one of the boys - sculptured by Carolie.

The Woods house is old and interesting. "And I love to have people here who like old houses," Mrs. Woods says. "This house was built in 1780 by a Scotch tobacco merchant.

It stayed in the same family for 133 years, being added to from time to time. About 30 years ago it was sold to Lincoln's son, Robert Todd Lincoln - and was always referred to after that as the 'Lincoln house.' When we bought it from the Lincoln estate, we restored the lines of the original house, opening up fireplaces that had been bricked in, replacing partitions that had been torn down.'

In connection with the house, Mrs. Woods demonstrates her practical organizing ability. Money is not so plentiful in her household nowadays and she has turned a west wing, built by Lincoln's daughter, into a separate house - but you would not suspect it. The old coach house was also turned into a separate house. And both have been satisfactorily rented. THE RECIPES which she gave us, Mrs. Woods says, are nothing special except that they are great favorites among the household and guests.

These recipes are not everyday ones, however, being inclined to the luxury side; but they are exceptionally delicious. The cheese soup for six, which in some sections of the country would cost fifty-three cents, can be combined with a fruit salad to make a complete and whole meal - and a very good one. In that case it becomes an economical luxury.

Twenty brownies, made by this recipe at an approximate cost of seventy-five cents, will keep splendidly. If you want to be a little extravagant for your boy at camp, try them: They will not deteriorate on the way.

The vegetable stuffing is unusual - costs thirty-three cents - but it is more wholesome than all-bread stuffing because the vegetables contribute special vitamins and minerals. Mrs. Woods uses it for turkey; but we have cut the recipe in half, in the thought that our readers would find it more practical as a stuffing for chicken.

How Mary Married

by Emily Post

N ANSWER to the war-time brides who tell me that real wedding plans cannot be made in so short a time as a week, I'd like to describe a lovely wedding. Church service, reception, trousseau, and all - it was planned and carried through on a very modest budget within the space of one weekend - and 30 miles from any big city at that! The story is this:

Friday afternoon, Long Distance located Mary at my country house. John - her fiance stationed in the South - had been given a week's leave and would arrive in his car on Sunday. He suggested getting married at once and spending their honeymoon driving back to camp. A number of other brides were living at an Inn near camp and he had already spoken for a room for Mary.

"How wonderful," I said. "You could be married Monday!"

Her gladness flared up, then dimmed. "I've always wanted a real wedding."

"But of course! Why not?"

"With Saturday a half day - and nothing to be done on Sunday?"

"Nonsense!" I said. "In Maintown, Saturday is a long shopping day and by Sunday you'll have finished. So off you go in the morning!"

I knew she had been sewing as well as saving for sometime and I had promised long ago to give her her wedding dress. Also, she had the luck to be a model size 14, and moreover, her idea of a trousseau was a supplement to the things she already had, and not the unreasonable one that every item must be new! So we made a list and she went home.

Later she telephoned me that the wedding would be on Monday at 3 so they could leave on the 4:30 train. She asked about the invitations. They couldn't be printed, or engraved, nor had she time to write notes.

Invitations Phoned

I SUGGESTED that her mother and mark the names of her own and the family's friends in the telephone book that evening; and then cut the pages loose and divide them among a few relatives and intimate friends who would thus share the work of telephoning: "Mary has asked me to tell you that she is to be married on Monday at 3 at the Old Brick Church. She wants you to come to the ceremony and to the house afterwards."

Her parents' house had big rooms;

so the invitations to the church would also include invitations to the house. A few night telegrams to John's family in the South, and distant relatives explained the reason for the sudden wedding. Those near were invited to come; those at a distance were told how much they would be missed.

The one day's shopping was strenuous, but very satisfactory. As for her wedding dress - it was an amazing tribute to modern manufacturers. Never anywhere have I seen a more beautiful one. The material looked like the pure silk grosgrain of yesterday, that was said to "stand alone."

A Simple Dress

THE dress was severely simple, beautifully cut, and exactly suited her. Her veil, a circle of tulle, was held in place with orange blossoms. The evident costliness of her dress puzzled me so much that at the reception I asked her: "Whose dress are you wearing? You could never have got it with what I gave you!"

She laughed with delight. "You not only gave this, but three other dresses too!"

And now, very briefly, the other items of preparation:

The organ was played by a friend. The decorations were sheafs of dahlias from the gardens of several neighbors who each donated one or two white ones cut off at the ground. Four were tied to the ends of the first and fifth pews. The others were placed about the chancel. Since the bridegroom's family and friends were far away as at many other military weddings the bride's brother was best man; and there were no ushers.

Two girl friends of Mary's stood at the foot of the aisle and with the help of a short list, told those who were to sit in the pews between the flowers. The other guests were asked to sit this side of the flowers.

The only refreshments at the reception were a wedding cake made by the baker on Saturday and fruit punch made at home on Monday. In other words, the two days allowed plenty of time to get ready to be married - and this despite the handicap of a rather long drive to the city and back again. Moreover, on Sunday afternoon when John arrived, Mary could devote her attention to him and to their friends.

On Monday morning - setting aside the superstition that it is good luck for the bridegroom not to see his bride on their wedding day until just before the ceremony - Mary and John spent the morning arranging the presents which, to Mary's surprise, had poured in - many on Saturday, a few on Sunday, some on Monday. Many, of course, came after she had gone - but that is another story.

Help your BEAUTY bloom this Spring!

Give your skin Ivory "baby-care," doctors recommend

Help yourself to a fresh complexion . . . to go with your new spring clothes. Use as your model of skin perfection the Loveliest Complexion in all the world . . . baby's own!

Then do as you do for baby . . . take doctors' beauty advice! Give your skin, too, the gentle daily care of New "Velvet-Suds" Ivory Soap . . . now milder and faster-lathering than ever!

What finer beauty care could your complexion have than that advised by doctors for baby's lovely skin?

Avoid WINTER-DRIED "flakiness"

Help bring spring's bloom to your skin by "babying" it this way every night: With New Ivory's creamy, quick lather (lukewarm, never hot!) gently massage your skin upward, following facial contours. Warm rinse. Pat dry. Since your skin is "winter-dried" apply lightly a little cold cream. See how soon your beauty responds to this safe, gentle Ivory care

Avoid OILY-SKIN drabness

Since oily skins tend to hold dirt, give your complexion this thorough spring-cleansing each night and morning: Use a washcloth and gentle New Ivory. Work up a cleansing-mask of thick Ivory lather on your face (notice how quickly lather creams off Ivory!). Then scrub with a vigorous upward-outward motion. Rinse. Repeat Ivorymask cleansing. Warm rinse, then cold. See how soon New Ivory can bring spring to your beauty!

ENJOY "BABY-CARE" ALL OVER!

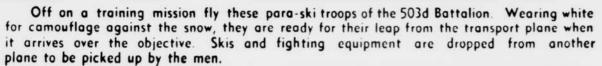

Step into a New Ivory bath. Sink back into a caressing sea of "velvet suds" that quickly creams off your big white floating cake. Ah-h-h, such a grand Beauty Bath . . . every pore responds to gentle Ivory! You'll step out to untroubled sleep . . . and waken with "Spring-Fresh" beauty!

THIS NEW PLAN SHOWS YOU HOW TO END WORRY ABOUT HOW TO PAY YOUR FEDERAL INCOME TAXES BY MARCH 16

If you are like most income taxpayers, two things are true: (1) By March 16th you will have found that your Federal Income Taxes are two or three times larger than last year. (2) The new Revenue Act was passed so late last year that it has been difficult to accumulate the neccessary cash even for the first quarterly payment.

To help you meet this problem, the Morris Plan Bank has developed an economical, convenient program for the payment of these taxes on a monthly basis—available to individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations.

HOW THE PLAN WORKS

Let's assume that the taxes on your 1941 income will amount to $600:

1. Before March 14th you come in and sign a note for $618. The added $18 is a charge of $3 per $100. For other amounts note table below:

- whether you have ever been a customer of this bank or not.
- 1. The money will be credited to a special account in your name, withdrawable for the purpose of paying these taxes as they are due March, June, September, and December 15th.
- 5. Beginning April 1st, you deposit in the Bank each month 1/12 of the total amount. (See Monthly Payment Table below.) And that's all. At the end of twelve months, you will have paid your entire tax bill and you will owe the bank nothing.

Don't put this off until the last minuteif you have not already received your Income Tax blanks, get them now and figure out exactly how much you must pay.

Regular Morris Plan Bank loans are of course available for those who prefer to pay their whole tax bill in one lump sum on March 16th, or for any other purpose for which you require funds. These loans also are made without endorsers in every possible instance.
