MOSCOW, Sunday, Sept. 13 .-The Russians have fallen back from one point southwest of Stalingrad before the massed blows of German tanks and motorized troops, but elsewhere the Soviet legions are holding their own in bitter-end fighting which has cost the Germans at least 10,000 men killed before the city in the last few days.

Henderson Asks All U. S. Drivers To Ration Selves

OPA Indicates Uniform Gasoline Allowances Throughout Nation

By the Associated Press.

Price Administrator Leon Henderson last night asked motorists in unrationed areas to place themselves voluntarily under the same gasoline and mileage rationing controls now in force in the 17 Eastern States.

Declaring it would be several weeks before coupon ration books could be printed to carry out the Nation-wide gas rationing recommended by the Baruch Rubber Committee, Mr. Henderson cautioned that "today and every day that passes until the cut is made we Americans are wasting one billion tire miles in unnecessary driving." His request followed other indications from OPA that the national rationing plan, when placed in effect, would put the rest of the country on an equal footing with the East as to the amount of gasoline allowed motorists.

Chart Made Public.

Easterners receive a basic ration of approximately four gallons weekly, with supplemental allowances for essential driving. The committee headed by Bernard M. Baruch which investigated the rubber situation, recommended that motorists be curtailed to a general average of 5,000 miles a year.

To further the tire conservation program, President Roosevelt made public yesterday a chart showing that a 30-mile speed would make tires last twice as long as those driven 50 miles an hour. The Baruch Committee recommended a speed limit of 35 miles an hour.

The President is expected to announce appointment of a rubber administrator tomorrow and put into effect then the machinery to n other recom After naming a committee of by the Baruch Committee, but for-Commissioners yesterday noted their later. "I don't think we have to wait to make a really good start." Mr. Henderson declared. "We can begin to make a big dent in that pile of wasted rubber if we take this matter into our own hands for the time being."

"German Fascist troops are continuously attacking our positions. "Soviet troops are repulsing attacks launched by the numerically superior enemy forces."

Southwest of Stalingrad, it was officially reported, 6,000 Germans have been "wiped out" in the last five days; west of Stalingrad about 4,000 Germans have been killed.

Another Area Developing.

The communique did not mention the northwest sector, where the Germans have increased their pressure in the last day or two.

With the city of Stalin perilously besieged from three sides, it was disclosed that another area of sharp fighting has developed far to the north.

In the area of Sinyavino, a railway town on the west side of the Volkhov River below Leningrad, the Russians said the Germans have thrown in large forces of reserves, but that all Nazi attacks were stopped and thrown back.

"The enemy lost in killed and wounded about 5,000 men," the communique said of this new battle area.

The sinking of an enemy submarine in the Barents Sea was announced by the Russians. No details were given.

Mortar Batteries Destroyed. At the southern end of the front. in the Mozdok area where the snows of approaching winter already have fallen on the Caucasian Mountains, the Russians said they were fighting the enemy on the southern back of a river (presumably the Terek).

"Soviet artillerymen destroyed three mortar batteries and wiped out a company of enemy infantry," the communique said.

There the Germans seek the Grozny oil fields.

In fighting that raged early yesterday, the Russians had stopped cold all of the attacks by the men of Nazi Marshal Fedor von Bock.

Everywhere the approaches to the Russian positions were littered with carnage and smoking, twisted German machines. The army newspaper Red Star declared German losses at Stalingrad were the largest of the war and declared the Fascists literally were "wading knee deep in blood" at places.

Fresh Nazi Reserves.

As the Germans fell, fresh reserves drawn from other fronts rushed into the breaches under orders of Hitler to take the industrial city, regardless of cost. Overhead, the sky was darkened by hundreds of dive-bombers supporting crawling masses of tanks. spearheading the infantry masses.

Texas Girl Selected As 'Miss America' in Atlantic City Contest

Judges' Choice Also Is Popular With Audience; Chicagoan Is Second

By the Associated Press.

ATLANTIC CITY. Sept. 12 .-"Miss Texas," 18-year-old Jo-Carroll Dennison of Tyler, captured the 1942 "Miss America" crown in Atlantic City's annual bathing beauty contest tonight.

The Texas girl, with dark brown hair and greenish-brown eyes, succeeds Rosemary La Planche of Los Angeles as mythical bathing beauty queen of the United States.

Second place went to Miss Chicago, Bette Brunk, 18, and third place to Miss Michigan, Patricia Uline Hill, 21. Detroit, who boasts she was born in Brooklyn. The judges gave fourth position to Miss New Jersey. Madeline Elizabeth Layton, 18, Maywood, and fifth to Miss California, Lucille Lambert, 20, Hollywood.

Crowd Favors Miss Texas.

By far the favorite with the specators was Miss Texas, who brought thunderous applause, whistling and stomping with her song-and-dance rendition of "Deep in the Heart of Texas "

She had previously been declared to be the most talented and also prettiest-in-bathing-suit among 10 girls with whom she was given preiminary tests.

The California girl attracted the udges' attention with "Embraceable You," which she sang in a silvery evening gown.

Miss Chicago did a hula-hula dance in a very short skirt and bodice, aided and abetted by the roaring crowd, and Miss New Jersey sang "I Met Him on Monday."

Miss Michigan told the judges she didn't know how to sing or dance, so she did a dramatic recital. In the past such recitals have been considered "poison" at bathing beauty contests, but the crowd seemed to believe this one was good for a change

War Reduces Pageant.

Use of Farm Products 'Not Met Squarely,' Critics Declare

By the Associated Press.

A Senate Agriculture Subcommittee advocating the manufacture of rubber from farm crops declared yesterday that the Baruch committee "has not met this question squarely" but decided not to seek at present to override President Roosevelt's veto of their bill for a separate rubber agency.

Chairman Gillette and Senators Norris, Independent, of Nebraska and McNary, Republican, of Oregon issued a joint statement taking particular exception to the Baruch committee's recommendation that there be no further substitutions in present plans for synthetic rubber manufacture.

"In effect." the Senators declared, "the recommendations are for freezing of the present production plans for synthetic rubber and almost complete lack of recommendation for steps to correct the failure in the future to bring the agricultural resources of the Nation into the field of synthetic rubber production.

"The object of the bill which the President vetoed was solely to extend the program so as to include agricultural products in the manufacture of butadiene from which rubber could be produced.

"The Baruch Committee has not met this question squarely. We think it is the only issue involved in the bill which the President has vetoed ' fact that it is designed to conserve rubber rather than gasoline, as is the case in the Eastern States.

In his veto message, Mr. Roosevelt expressed the opinion that the bill would "block the progress of the war production program" by decentralizing control of rubber production.

Thus, there was a possibility, although OPA emphasized that no decisions have been reached, that the 4-gallon coupon value now in effect in the East might be changed. These sources emphasized that, regardless, the coupon values would be uniform throughout the country.

They added that contentions that Westerners did more driving because of longer distances to cover had been shown to be erroneous, and that OPA figures indicated that, on the average, the most driving a car was done in New England.

By the Associated Press. BALTIMORE, Sept. 12 .- A stiff fight over election of a new Republican State chairman, threatening to split the forces supporting candidacy of Theodore R. McKeldin for the governorship, was forecast today for the party's State convention next Friday night.

Principal candidates for the post being vacated by W. David Tilghman, jr., of Elkridge after five years' service, are Galen L. Tait of Chevy Chase, chairman for 20 years, and Paul Robertson, chairman of the Republican Baltimore City Com-

Republican leaders said Mr. Robertson's control of the city organization was bolstered in Tuesday's primary by returns which gave his faction more than 30 of the 42 places on the City Committee. Mr. McKeldin commented that it

Roosevelt Mediation Of Indian Dispute Urged by Strabolgi

British Labor Peer Fears Repetition of Debacle, in Burma

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Sept. 12 .- Indian proposals that President Roosevelt be invited to mediate the troublesome Indian problem found echo in Britain today, now that the way to direct negotiation apparently has been closed by Prime Minister Churchill's sharp criticism of the congress disobedience campaign.

"We should swallow our pride and invite the President of the United States to arbitrate, on India," the labor peer, Lord Strabolgi, said in an address at Basingstoke.

He took cognizance of Mr. Churchill's suggestion that a Japanese fifth column might be working in India by telling labor party members:

"If ear a repetition of what happened in Burma where important elements turned to the Japanese after being rebuffed in London."

Lord Winster, another laborite, spoke at Cardiff criticizing Mr. Churchill's statments, saying: "The time has long since gone by to talk about India in the tone of a cavalry subaltern of the 1870s."

The suggestion that Mr. Roosevelt mediate was made by Syamaprased Mookerjee, leader of the Hindu Mahasabha, who obtained the agreement of that minority party and the Moslem and Sikh minority groups in a campaign for independence now and settlement of the controversies after the war.

Quote Robber Suspect As Ready to Face Electric Chair

By the Associated Press. MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 12 .- State Investigator I. R. Mills said tonight that Vincent Christy, 35, arrested in Jacksonville on a robbery charge had confessed the slaving of Irving Leopold and three other Miamians here last July 17.

Mr. Mills quoted Christy as saying that he came here for the express purpose of slaying Leopold "to settle an old score." He refused to elaborate this statement. Also killed was Mr. Leopold's wife Esther, her son, Stephen, and a motorist, Ralph J. Morin, jr., whose car was commandeered after the Leopolds were slain. Ready for Electric Chair.

"I did it deliberately," Mr. Mills said Christy told the officers coolly "I'm ready for the electric chair and I don't mean 10 years."

Announcement of the confession was made shortly after Mr. Mills, Capt. E. W. Melchin of the homicide squad and other officers returned here with Christy from Jacksonville, where he was arrested earlier in the week. Police Chief H. Leslie Quigg, who signed affidavits charging the man with murder, said Christy's real name was Christowski, and said he had a wife and brother in Buffalo,

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 .- Five former members of the French Farliament now living in the United States today joined Jules Jeanneney and Edouard Herriot, French leaders, in protesting the policy of Marshal Petain, French Chief of State.

The five former deputies in a formal statement declared that "France, which is at present without any regularly constituted government, is not responsible for acts and policies adopted by Vichy.

Secretary of State Hull took cognizance of the Jeanneney-Herriot statement yesterday, saying it was an act of "rare courage."

The five who signed the statement were Pierre Cot, Deputy of Savoy and former Minister; Edouard Jonas, Deputy of Alpes Maritimes; Henri de Kerillis, Deputy of the Seine: Herve de Lyrot, Deputy of Ille-et-Vilaine, and Pierre Mendes France, Deputy of L'Eure and former Undersecretary of State.

Jeanneney and Herriot, respectively, presidents of the French Senate and Chamber of Deputies who ive in Unoccupied France, sent a letter to Marshal Petain in which they warned the Vichy regime that the people of France would not be drawn into war against their former allies.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 (P).-J. J. Singh, president of the India League of America, expressed belief today that if tension over British-Indian problems was allowed to continue "the morale of the Indian Army is bound to be affected."

"I shall not be surprised if defections take place in the Indian Army," Singh declared in a statement commenting on Prime Minister Churchill's recent declaration regarding India.

Singh said he found it "very peculiar" that when the British government came into conflict with the Indian Congress party, the party was represented by the British as having no following. He said this was what Mr. Churchill had suggested

Army Training Field Units to Save Soldiers' Lives

By SUSAN B. ANTHONY, II, Star Staff Corres

CARLISLE BARRACKS, Pa., Sept. 12 .- It was "zero hour." Our troops concealed in an apple orchard wore tense, watchful expressions. Onequarter mile to the east our smoke screen obscured them from the enemy

Suddenly the non-com waved his right arm signalling the moment for "attack" and the first khaki-clad infantry squad, crouching low sprang into action, advancing over the yawning field with guns held at "high port" and bayonets fixed. The sound of rifles, machine guns and trench mortars shattered the still air of the summer afternoon.

Pvt. Bill Jones was the "first to go down" from an enemy bullet. He stopped short, arched himself, let out a sharp oath and fell. His comrades raced on driving to the east to crush the enemy. They could not stop to help the "wounded" man.

But Bill was not forgotten. Hardly had he dropped when a medical soldier, part of Bill's company, red cross on his arm, came running to him, located his "wound," loosened his tunic, quickly applied a dressing taken from his first-aid pouch, withdrew Bill's bayonet from his gun, wrapped a white bandage about the bayonet and stuck it upright in the ground.

Aided by Litter Bearers.

The medical soldier, called a company aid man, left Bill and raced forward with the infantry attack performing the same deft first-aid tasks for every "wounded" soldier he could find in the battlefield.

Bill lay on the ground for only a few minutes when four litter (stretcher) bearers came over to him. The white bandage on Bill's bayonet was the signal for them to pick up a "little wounded," one who could not walk. Meanwhile, "walking wounded" men whose injuries were slight, were walking as directed by the company aid men to the battalion aid station, 500 yards back of the lines, the medical unit which serves one infantry bat-

They carried him back to the mobile battalion aid station, the first stop on Bill's journey away from the infantry battle. One of the medical officers at the open air station, which is the medical unit closest to the front, examined Bill's "wound," gave him a dose of tetanus antitoxin to prevent lockjaw and wrote out his diagnosis on a tag attached to Bill's uniform. Bill was placed under a tree until litter bearers took him to his second stop, the collecting station, one mile back from the front, which collects patients from battalion aid stations.

SETTING JEEPS TO WORK-The 32d Medical Battalion at Carlisle Barracks (Pa.) Medical Field Service School demonstrates still another use for the versatile Army jeep. A further development is the injection of three tetanus toxoid shots in place of the old method of injecting serum. A wounded soldier gets a "booster" dose of tetanus toxoid and is marked with a "T" on his bandaged forehead to warn medical officers at the next station that he has had it. The closed method of treating wounds by which the wound is left undisturbed after once bandaged is taught. So are new methods for individual protection against chemical warfare and methods of self-injection of small morphine doses.

Demonstrations of how to remove wounded men from light and heavy tanks that have been overturned or immobilized in other ways are given to all students. Medical soldiers accompany all branches of

His third stop was 7 miles back of the lines at the clearing staing an infantry division, which is to warn other vehicles on the clears patients from the three collecting stations for evacuation still further away from the battle. For the first time Bill was placed in front of it with a red cellophanea tent. And here he received more definite treatment for his "wound" from running over those sleeping than in either of the other two mobile medical stations.

His fourth journey was by ambuhospital, 15 or more miles back of the lines, and then to a general new patient each lantern is covered hospital in the rear.

From the moment Bill fell on the battlefield his life was in the hands of the Medical Department of the United States Army, the corps of thousands of doctors, dentists, veterinarians, medical soldiers, litter gle recent reason for the greater bearers and clerks. Their main goal is to save Bill's life by emergency treatment administered at the three mobile medical stations which move as do the fighting infantry troops. Their job is to fit a wounded soldier who cannot return to battle for safe exit from the area in which the infantry division is fighting to a comparatively safe hospital in the rear.

Bill in this case was not really wounded. He was a member of the 32nd Medical Battalion of officers and men who put on demonstrations daily at the Medical Service Field School, Carlisle Barracks, Pa., so that medical officers and officer candidates can get an eye witness view of the exact technique for treating and evacuating wounded soldiers in the midst of battle.

Follow Fighting Units. Under the command of Lt. Col. Joseph U. Weaver the 32nd Medical Battalion operates as part of a triangular infantry division. The three types of medical units of the field service, three battalion aid stations to a regiment, three collecting stations and one clearing station to a division advance or retreat with the fighting infantry in the division.

The normal method of evacuating wounded from the front, however, is not in the bright light of day as in Bill's case. In this war of aerial bombardmert, total blackouts are the safest and most desired conditions under which to evacuate. In addition to daylight demonstrations, therefore, the 32nd Medical Battalion demonstration troops illustrate the whole process of evacuation from

Sabotage Clue Hunted As Death Toll Mounts To 12 in Plane Crash

'Plenty of Motor Left' For Study by Technicians, Special Agent Says

By the Associated Press

A-6

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 12 .--Possibility of sabotage was studied today by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the crash of a blazing, pilotless plane which hurtled through the roof of a Curtiss-Wright airplane division building, killing 12 persons and injuring 35.

"The FBI is making an inquiry to determine whether or not there was sabotage involved," Special Agent Kenneth M. Piper said. There was "plenty of motor left" from the plane, he added, for examination by technicians.

Two plant workers were killed outright in the crash of the wildly spinning craft late yesterday, three others died within the next few hours and seven died today. Five of the injured are in critical condition.

Flags at Half Staff As flags at the plant were ordered lowered to half staff for three days, Lt. Col. Clyde H. Mitchell, Army Air Force representative, said the men "died in the service of their country, just like the men in the armed forces."

Nelson Tells Workers 57th Liberty Ship To 'Vote Fast' and Get Back to Tools

American Citizen's Duty Is to Cast Ballot, Says WPB Chairman

America's war workers were advised last night by War Production Chairman Nelson not to stay away from the polls in the November election, but to "vote fast and get back on the machines." Mr. Nelson said he made the appeal because of the many letters he has received from war workers in the last few months inquiring whether it would be "patriotic" to take time off to vote. "I am completely and totally uninterested in what candidates and what parties any one votes for," de-clared Mr. Nelson. "I have only one suggestion-when you vote, vote fast and get back on the machine. "The war worker is first of all an American citizen and the first right and duty of an American citizen is to vote. That is the difference between us and our enemies." Replying to a letter from a war worker whom he did not identify and who said there had been "quite an argument" over whether it was patriotic to take time off from the plant to vote, Mr. Nelson said: "I believe there is only one answer to this question. While I understand fully the men who think they should stay on the job, voting is a duty, not a privilege.

MUSKEGON, Mich., Sept. 12 .-Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson, making a flying tour of Michigan war industries, told a gathering of war workers today that more than 600.000 men of our armed forces now are overseas.

Mr. Patterson, in his address, paid high tribute to Michigan industry. "To my mind, the second front is the production front, and here in Michigan we have a large segment of that front," he said. ### West Coast Shipbuilder Offers $3,000 for Each Way in His Yards

Henry J. Kaiser, West Coast shipuilder, has offered to contribute 3,000 for each of the shipways in his three shipyards to the United Seamen's Servce, Inc., as a start toward the immediate raising of an initial $5,000,000 to provide rest, recreation and recuperation facilities for the men and officers of the American Merchant Marine, the War Shipping Administration reported yesterday.

The Kaiser yards are at Swan Island, near Portland, Oreg.; Richmond, Calif., and Vancouver, Wash. It was stated that because of wartime restrictions the number of shipways could not be announced. Similar contributions probably will be made by other shipyards on the Pacific Coast in which Mr. Kaiser has interests, an associate stated

Kaiser Made President. Mr. Kaiser accepted the presidency of the USS at a meeting held here Friday, over which Admiral Emory S. Land, war shipping administrator, presided. The new organization is sponsored by the Government, shipbuilders and operators, maritime union leaders and representatives of American indus-

Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union, and Matthew Dushane, of the Seafarers' International Union, told the meeting their organizations would make large contributions.

Brookings Institution Says Country Can't Support New Settlers

Hope for settlement of 100,000 refugees in the Dominican Republic is a visionary dream, the Brookings Institution reports in a book published after a study of the refugee problem. The West Indian republic had offered to take up to 100,000 refugees and permit them to settle there permanently, but the report says 5,000 would be the limit.

Suggesting that the problem of regugees after the war will be one of the most serious that the world will face, the authors of the study said that a whole new approach to the problem is needed. They commented.

World War Chief Receives Greetings From Army Men All Over World

Watching the progress of the war today, his 82d birthday, Gen. John J. Pershing told his old comrades in arms that this country faces the grimmest challenge in its history and that he was happy in the knowledge "that the building of American victory is entrusted to strong hands, clear minds and resolute hearts."

The message from the commander of the American Expeditionary Force who led 4,000,000 men to victory in the World War was in response to greetings from Secretary of War Stimson and Army men the world over.

"On behalf of the War Department, and on my own personal behalf, I send you this greeting on your birthday," Secretary Stimson wrote. "Your name and your career have always meant much to those of us who have followed in your path. Today, now that the Nation is again engaged in war, they mean ever more.

Other felicitations included: Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff: "The example of your greatness shines like a light to guide us through troubled days ahead. While serving still as our symbol of military success in the past, you have become our inspiration for victory in the future.'

MacArthur Cables Greetings.

From his Southwest Pacific headquarters, Gen. Douglas MacArthur cabled "devoted greetings."

Lt. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, in behalf of officers and enlisted men under him, conveyed "our respect, reverence and devotion to America's first soldier.' "Gen. Henry H. Arnold, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, looked back on "the inspired leadership which brought our forces victory in the last World War," and told Gen. Pershing that "throughout the years, your name has lived in the hearts of all Americans as one who contributed so much to retain for them their cherished way of life."

Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell commanding general, services of supply, said that the organization today is profiting by the organization and experiences of the supply services which Gen. Pershing developed in France. "Your work then in solving the numerous complex supply problems is today contributing greatly to the defeat of our enemies," he said.

Hydrographic Office, 100 Years Old Next Month, to Move

Agency to Occupy Own New Building At Suitland, Md.

The hydrographic office of the Navy will complete a century of scientific service within the next month and will celebrate by moving into its own new building at Suitland. Md.

The office was founded in 1842 and the law specifically stated that the first building be located in the District. The site chosen then was known as Braddock Hill, until lately occupied by the Navy Medical School, at Constitution avenue between Twenty-third and Twentyfifth streets N.W.

When Congress appropriated $25,-000 to build a "depot of charts and instruments of the Navy of the United States," the appropriation came as part of the law that supplanted the old board of Navy commissioners with the present bureau system.

"Harry Bluff's" Influence. These changes were largely brought about through the pressure brought by the anonymous writings of "Harry Bluff." This reformer proved to be Lt. Matthew Fontaine Maury of the Navy.

They point out that, while a mimimum price level may be found for basic farm commodities, it will be harder to work out the definition of a similar floor for wages, and they do not believe it can be proposed for one without the other. Senator O'Mahoney, Democrat, of

Wyoming, who also took an active part in the debate over the present price law last winter, returned to the Capital yesterday expressing gratification that "we are now apparently going to have an all-out antiinflation measure." He recalled that in January he had an amendment

It costs you less to heat your home in winter after Bird Ashestos Siding is applied. That's because you have two thicknesses of siding instead of one, and the added insulation keeps your house warmer with less consumption of oil or coal in the furnace. Your house will also be cooler in summer because Bird Asbestos Siding insulates against heat-reflects hot sun rays that penetrate ordinary wood siding. Thus your house is protected against outside heat as well as cold! Home becomes more healthy, more livable, less costly to maintain when Bird Asbestos Siding goes on!

SIGNAL CORPS-Here, in the "nerve center of the Army," handling the high-speed communications equipment of modern war, there's a big opportunity for men with mechanical talents and training. Licensed radio operators, experienced radio repairmen, telephone and telegraph men-and other able mechanics-will find a thrill in working with the amazing new secret devices of the Signal Corps. Pre-service training is furnished free-with pay-to those who require it.

AIR FORCES-We're building the biggest, mightiest Air Force automobile mechanics, radio mechanics, armorers, sheet metal workers,

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT-Guns and ammunition are decisive weapons in war, and it takes skilled manpower to keep them shooting fast and straight. Men with experience as automobile, truck and tractor mechanics, armorers, machinists and skilled men of other trades are urgently needed by the Ordnance Department. Technical training in ordnance work is not a requirement.

MEN OF 18 AND 19-Even though you have had no mechanical experience, the Army offers you a special opportunity-the right to choose your own combat branch: Air Force, Armored Force, Cavalry, Coast Artillery, Corps of Engineers, Field Artillery, Infantry or Signal Corps. Or you can qualify as Aviation Cadet. Under 20 you can choose. After 20, this is no longer possible, except for certain skilled specialists.

THIS opportunity to get in now and go places in the Air Forces, Signal Corps or Ordnance Department is open to any skilled specialist between the ages of 18 and 44, inclusive, who is physically fit and does not now occupy a key position in a vital war industry. ### U. S. Airmen Believe Navy Flyers Tell How They Sank Jap Carrier Japan Lost Best of Her Pilots at Midway

Nippon's Prospective Flyer Shortage Viewed As Big Factor in War

By CLARK LEE, ssociated Press War Correspondent.

WITH THE PACIFIC FLEET OFF SOLOMON ISLAND, Aug. 24 (Delayed).-American naval aviators who shot down 47 Japanese planes in the battle of the Solomons reported today that the Japanese pilots definitely were less skillful and experienced than those they had met in previous air battles over the Pacific.

(Marine pilots downed an additional 21 Japs and anti-aircraft fire accounted for 24 more.)

Our aviators are convinced that Japan is short of trained carrier pilots and that she lost the cream of her carrier flyers when four carriers were sunk at Midway. It is belived that most of the Japanese naval pilots who participated in the Pearl Harbor attack now have been killed.

Enemy pilots today made mistake after mistake which cost them their lives. Their mistakes, plus our numerical superiority in the air over our own task force, accounted for our sweeping victory. Furthermore, our pilots now are becoming thoroughly seasoned and trained in combat

The fight ended with a small Japanese carrier afire and dead in the water

I witnessed half the battle-an attack on one of our ships by a large number of Japanese dive-bombers with fighter escort. Most of the Japanese planes were blasted from the air by our fighters and anti-aircraft before they even had a chance to drop bombs. Official reports estimate only 10 bombs were dropped whereas some 30 planes plunged into the sea. The battle was over with amazing speed. It lasted 10 minutes but

Our planes returned, including the attack group which had hit a Japanese carrier. Many of them landed later by moonlight.

Didn't Attempt to Shoot.

The rear gunners on the enemy dive bombers didn't even attempt to shoot at our planes.

Our aviators are not drawing final conclusions from the poor performance of the Japanese pilots today. But they are hopeful that most of Japan's best flyers already have been lost and that opposition henceforth will be weaker.

The pilots believe that Japan's prospective shortage of pilots, rather than her inability to produce planes, may eventually be one of the decisive factors of the war. Especially if our pilots are supplied with new and superior airplanes which, reports say, are being built or planned in the United States.

Forester's Office Urges Use of Wood for Fuel

By the Associated Press.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 12 .- Householders who are worrying about a fuel oil shortage or lack of coal this winter should give serious consideration to the possibility of burning wood, says the office of the State forester.

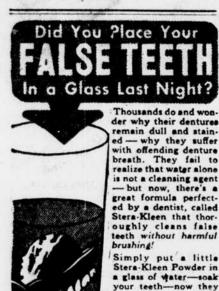

Bulletins showing the relative heating values of various woods. published during the World War, are being pulled out of dusty pigeonholes and brushed off for the benefit of those who want them.

Green wood may be burned, one bulletin said, but dry wood offers greater heating value and is convenient for quick heating of churches, public halls, theaters and the like.

Hickory is best, a cord having 115 per cent of the heating value of a ton of coal, while cords of both locust and oak also have higher ratings than a ton of coal.

Deatherage Quits Job At Ordnance Plant By the Associated Press

POINT PLEASANT, W. Va., Sept. 12 .- An officer of the Army Engineers disclosed today that George E. Deatherage, whose employment on construction of the West Virginia ordnance works was criticized in Congress yesterday, has resigned.

Maj. B. P. Rogers, area engineer, overseeing the building of the $55,-000,000 TNT plant, said the former leader of the Knights of the White Camellia, had withdrawn last night after two months' employment as an engineer for the E. B. Badger & Sons Co. of Boston.

The Badger company is the construction contractor for the works.

Maj. Rogers refused to amplify the statement that Deatherage had resigned, but it was presumed that his action stemmed directly from criticism by Representative Dickstein (Democrat of New York).

A War bond is a vote for victory. Vote early and often at the nearest post office; in this election ballot box stuffing is legal.

The right to COME and GO

when we please

THIS is a fight-to-the-finish we are in-a grim war for survival. The stakes are the highest in all the history of mankind. And one of them is the American's traditional right to come and go when he pleases.

Our enemies say that they will erase this birthright of ours; that they'll tell us when we can come and go. But they'll find that it's easier said than done.

No goose-stepping Nazi; no squint-eyed Jap is going to tell Americans that they can't run down to the seashore of vacation in the mountains or take the children to visit Aunt Mary back home. For we are going to win this war!

How? With the bravery and the brilliance of our men in uniform. With the toil and sweat of millions of loyal workers in forest, field, factory and mine. With our genius for invention, organization and production. With the willing sacrifices of every patriotic American.

Yes, we will win this war-even if we have to lay aside for awhile our right to come and go when we please.

That's why the officers and employees of the Southern Railway System have solemnly pledged their all to the winning of the war. That's why our entire transportation plant; all our resources of man-power and experience are enlisted for the duration in the service of the nation. That's why we put the transportation needs of Uncle Sam first-before any and every civilian need-that your right to come and go when you please may be preserved for you and for the generations of Americans yet to come

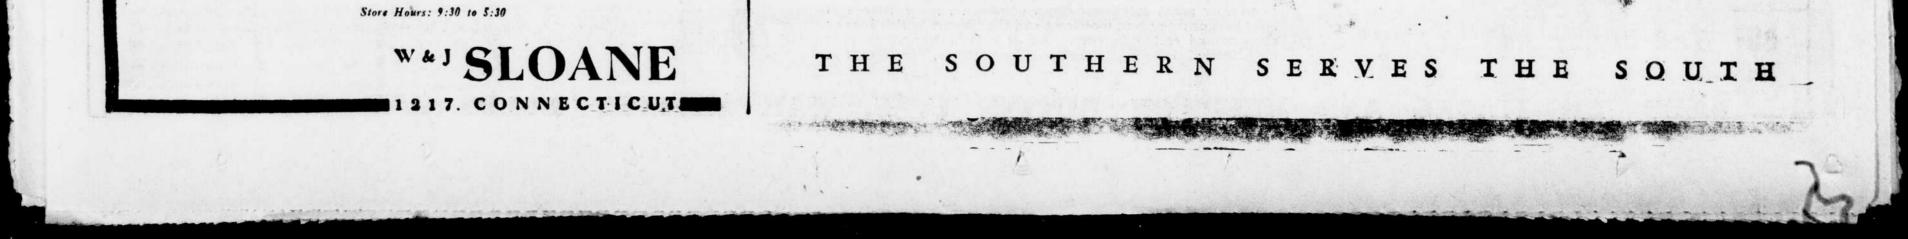

In the first seven months of this year we have carried almost 600,000 men in uniform, all moving under orders. They traveled in 24,915 coaches and Pullmans; in 1,564 special trains and 5,563 extra cars attached to our regular passenger trains. And these figures do not include the additional hundreds of thousands who have traveled over our lines on furlough or in small groups on transfer orders.

That's why our trains are often late-troop trains and war freight have the right of way. That's why they are often crowded-so many boys want to visit home at the same time. That's why we have pressed old coaches into service-in our desperate effort to help everyone to come and go when they please. That's why we have had to lower temporarily the standards of service of which we have been so proud. And that's the way we know you want it to be

Your willing sacrifices of some travel comforts and conveniences are more than a personal contribution to the war effort. They are an inspiration to those of us who railroad to plan for the day when victory comes; to plan for a better Southern Railway System better to "Serve the South". For, with victory, we know that a new day will come to our Southland; a new day of prosperity and happiness and peace; a new day with freedom to come and go when you please.

That is worth fighting ford

New Weapons to Be Shown at Exhibition At Uline's Arena

An eight-day war fair in which will be exhibited military weapons and a dramatization of the war and home front activities of the agencies that will participate in the Community War Fund campagn here next month will be held at Uline's Arena, Third and M streets N.E., October 22-30. Announcement of plans for the event was made yesterday by Edwin C. Graham, general chairman of the Community War Fund board of directors.

"It is of course not possible for every one to visit the war fronts of the world and the nearly 100 agencies participating in the war fund," Mr. Graham said, "so we hope to bring these activities dramatically under one roof to show the people of Washington where their contributions are used when they support this vitally important effort.'

Plans are under way, he added. to exhibit some of the newest weapons in use in the present war and possibly to simulate battle-front conditions. The Army, Navy and Marine Corps have been asked to co-operate in this phase of the fair. In addition there will be exhibits and demonstrations by fund-supported hospitals, United Nations District Bar to Hear war relief groups and by the many home-front organizations listed as members of the Community War Fund.

Bands and stage and radio stars will be included among entertainment features he said.

There will be no admission charge, no distribution of tickets and no solicitation of funds at the fair, he emphasized.

Still further attractions, according to present arrangements, will be special features and a variety of contests in which every age group may participate

"This is going to be a community show by the community, about the community and to show what the community is doing here and abroad in the way of domestic and war relief," Mr. Graham said.

"It is doubly important that the Community War Fund drive has the unstinted support of every citizen of the area. Because of the great importance of this effort we feel that the public should be made to realize fully the necessity of the work of all these agencies which look to the fund for financial support

"That is why we have planned a war fair. It is to impress upon all of us the bitterness of the struggle some peoples of the world are making for survival and to bring home to us the fact that without our help financially the struggle may be lost by some who might otherwise live." First, slow down. Second, see your Goodyear Dealer.

No matter what your tire problem may be - whether you're eligible for new tires or not - he can give you sound tire-saving advice and service.

If you are in war work, and eligible for new or recapped tires, your Goodyear Dealer can help you get a certificate. If you are a truck or fleet owner, his Truck Tire Engineering Service can add many miles to the life of your tires.

Your Goodyear Dealer is the recognized tire expert in your community. Let him help you save the tire miles you may need a year from now.

5 VITAL SERVICES TO INCREASE YOUR TIRE MILEAGE 25% TO 50%

1. Check air pressure at least once a week. An underinflated tire quickly breaks down sidewalls and is much more likely to be injured. An overinflated tire causes excessive wear in the center of the tread.

Z. Have your tires rotated every 2500 miles. This evens up wear on all tires and helps give you maximum mileage. At the same time, have your license numbers branded on your tires to discourage theft.

4. Have your wheel alignment and brakes checked today and every 2500 miles. At slow speeds, a wheel out of line 3/8 to 7/16 of an inch reduces vital tire mileage by 33%. Improperly adjusted brakes scaff off good tread rubber.

5. Have your wheels checked for proper balance now and every 2500 miles. If the wheels on your car are improperly balanced, uneven, spotty tread wear will result.

YOUR GOODYEAR DEALER CAN DO IT FOR YOU

Perhaps you are eligible for NEW_OR_RECAPPED TIRES

· Ask your Goodyear Dealer. He can tell you if you're eligible - and will gladly help you do what is necessary to get a certificate.

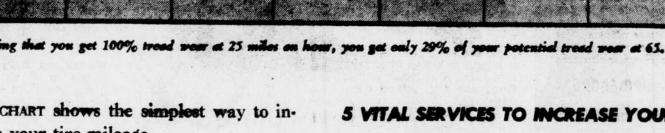

• If you are eligible for new tires, get long-wearing Goodyear Passenger or Truck Tires. If you also need new tubes, get LifeGuards, longest lasting air containers you can buy. They give extra tire protection if punctures occur.

. If you are eligible for recapping, get it done by Goodyear experts with Goodyear materials.

- . Don't wait too long for recapping. It is too late when fabric shows through. When tires are worn smooth, have them inspected by your Goodyear Dealer.
- · Remember, you can't get either new or recapped tires if it is apparent that you have damaged your old tires through unwarranted abuse.

Save your scrap rubber, metals and waste kitchen grease to help win the war.

Engineers in the glider laboratory here are working over designs for powerless air vehicles to carry infantry in the newest development of sible. But the engineers here are keeping their feet on the ground and considering only what seems practical in the present war. This, appears, is quite limited, but highly important.

Sustains Its Own Weight.

The glider is so designed as to sustain its own load in the air as long as it is pulled along at a speed greater than its stalling speed, which increases, of course, with the boost in weight.

Once the glider is in the air all that is necessary is to overcome its own air drag. The glider naturally cuts down the towing plane's speed. Each additional unit slows it up still more.

Eventually there probably will be locomotive planes," designed especially to haul gliders. Hitherto the airplane never has been considered as a cargo hauler, as distinct from a cargo carrier. But at present the glider trains must be attached to types of planes which never were intended for such service.

With the locomotive plane an actuality, it may be possible to have much longer trains of heavier gliders. The essential feature of such a plane would be a great excess of power, extremely sturdy construction so that it could stand the drag and good control at relatively low speeds. There are a thousand intricate problems to be worked out before the full possibilities of the glider can be realized.

Germany Glider Conscious. Up to a year ago the United States hardly can be said to have been glider conscious. Few realized the potentialities. Operation of a glider was an extremely specialized and rather difficult "sport," requiring long practice and the most intimate sort of knowledge of meteorological conditions, especially ways of locating and taking advantage Tennessee highland region, with Lookout Mountain at its hub, is Chattanooga includes the charming continuing to draw a flow of civilian resort town of Gatlinburg with a furlough travel that is but little score of hotels and innumerable log below the normal volume to this and rock cottages that overhang the section. This is traced to a combination of advantages. Most impelling is the fact that thousands of men are in training in Southern camps, notably, for this region,

Camp Forrest at Tullahoma, and Fort Oglethorpe at Chickamauga. Friends and relatives of these boys are taking the opportunity to combine a visit to camp with a tour of the surrounding points of both scenic and historic interest.

This is given impetus by the fact that there is so much to see in the immediate neighborhood of these camps. Many travelers come through beautiful regions of bluegrass Kentucky. Stopping in Nashville, they see the Hermitage that was the home of Andrew Jackson. A short journey to the south permits the visitor to see Shiloh battlefield, and the region traversed to the Eastern Tennessee highlands threads America's newest inland water playground, the 'Great Lakes of the South"-nine mountain-bordered lakes that have been impounded on the Tennessee above the giant TVA power dams. At Chattanooga is Lookout Mountain, with one of America's most impressive panoramas, commanding a vista of seven States.

Few visit Chattanooga without including in their tour a circuit trip through the Great Smoky Moun-The circuit through the park from roaring Little Pigeon River.

Persons planning to visit Miami Beach this season are assured of ample and choice accommodations. Early-season and longterm rates are lower-strong factors in favor of coming now, staying as long as you can. Families may move here now, enter children in tuition-free schools, help conserve fuel oil, release badly needed accommodations in crowded war production areas.

necessity and incidental mileagewill not be cut. Beyond this, the report holds out the hope that production of tires and recaps from synthetic rubbers may begin to relieve the situation in 1943, permitting cars that now have thin casings to join those that now have from 1,000 to 2,880 miles a year for non-occupational travel. Due to the production facilities urged in the report, gasoline rationing might be liberalized in the late summer of next year. But if vacations survive other contingencies of the war, motorists should not expect their recreational driving allotment to be increased to any appreciable extent. In other words, the automobile vacation pattern of 1943 for Washington residents likely will repeat that of this summer-"one spot" resorts within 480 miles of the Capital.

For the vacation family that desires to use its car of civilian furloughs, the report is reassuring on two points: one, that rationing not be carried beyond actual necessity; two, no suggestion that vacation travel be classed as non-essential. Basing its stand on the rationing program only on assuring victory, the Baruch report said: "The committee does not believe in the doctrine of sacrifice for sacrifice's sake." The second encouraging factor was an apparent refusal to state a principle that would ban motor vacations. The report did say that the 5,000-mile average would be for 'necessary" driving. It did not atempt to define the word. To call on the American public to forego relaxation of war tension in trips away from home would have introduced a theory that has been avoided studiously by high Government officials, including the President. Indeed, cabinet officers and others, knowing the pace and pressure imposed on the public by the vcitory effort, have come out openly for vacation enjoyment as a means of maintaining physical well-being and morale.

Great Seashore Park Shaping Up in Carolina

OCRACOKE, N. C., Sept. 12 .- The Cape Hatteras National Seashore Commission, created by the last session of the Legislature, met here recently and heard reports that only about 2,000 acres of land are needed to complete requirements for turning the Outer Banks into a great seaside park. The commission secretary reported he had more than 8,000 acres donated for the project and hoped by November 1 to get the rest. The National Park Service will take over jurisdiction of the area and develop the area when the minimum of 10,000 acres is presented to it. Plans call for ultimate acquisition and development of 100,000 acres from Currituck to Ocracoke Island, with the banks preserved forever as a natural seashore. Included would be Fort Raleigh and Kill Devil Hill.

WITH GOD'S HELP WE SHALL WIN THIS WAR

It will take more than the labor of our hands and the best thinking of our minds; we must bring the full strength of our souls before the altar of Almighty God if we are to win this war.

A MESSAGE TO OUR FELLOW AMERICANS IN A TIME OF SPIRITUAL CHALLENGE:

"Let us convert not only our

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, Minister of the Washington Hebrew Congregation

"A great duty falls upon every American in this hour. America must become the shrine of a great faith in the ultimate victory of God's righteousness.

"It is religion that created the rights of man. It is the tradition of faith that flowed from the vision and discipline of the God of justice and mercy revealed in the Law of Sinai that gave birth to our "In this time of crisis above all, none must forget his obligation to the good God," says

> His Excellency, the Most Reverend Michael J. Curley, The Archbishop of Baltimore and Washington

"In this present hour of dire need our Country has called upon every man and woman for patriotic service. The Nation has a right to such service. Thousands of our people from every part of the Country have answered this call and many of them are now engaged in conscientious work in our Nation's Capital. They are devoting themselves energetically to the task before them. They are in many instances making real sacrifices. But we must not lose sight of the fact that as a godly people we have not only to work,

"Come to the churches and find there surcease from life's confusions," says

> The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal Eishop of Washington

" 'Then thought I to understand this, but it was too hard for me, until I went into the Sanctuary of God: then understood I."

"This was the reflection of one who was confused and distracted by the stern and tragic events of life. Seeking an escape from his bewilderment, he sought the silence and peace of the Sanctuary of God and there the complex problems of life found their answer and solution. On my desk as I write is a thoughtful letter from a woman of refinement. In it she expresses what is common to most of us.

American democracy. It is by the spiritual strength we have derived from our religious tradition that men have had the staying power to labor thru the centuries for a better world. It is by new strength from the fountain of living waters of true religion that America will fulfill its mission of justice and kindness to the generation of free men still unborn.

"Let us convert not only our factories but our souls. It is only by the spiritual insight that will make clear to our generation that this war is not only a struggle for liberation but the result of God's retribution that we will win the war and the peace."

but we have also to pray.

"In this time of crisis above all, none must forget his obligation to the good God. There is not one of us that can afford to forego worship and prayer. With God's help victory shall be ours, but that victory will be hastened in the measure in which we recognize our need of God's help, of religion and of prayer. If this Country is worth fighting for, it is worth working for and by the same token it is worth praying for.

"I urge all to deepen their realization of our need as a nation for the protection, the light, and the help of Almighty God. Particularly, I urge our own Catholic people to be practical in living up to their conscientious obligations. I ask them to familiarize themselves with the hours of Masses and other services in their parish churches. I urge them to be faithful to their duty of Sunday Mass and frequently to approach the Sacraments. Let them give more time to meditation and to fervent prayer before Our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament. There we can ponder on our faults as individuals, yes, and even as a nation. We can examine closely into our lives and see wherein we have failed in our moral obligations. On our knees in church we can pray with a contrite and humble heart and beg of God to give us the strength to abide by His law and to do His will. There we may beg Him in all earnestness and sincerity to protect our men in the Armed Services, and there, too, we can the more effectively pour out our petitions for victory and for a just and honorable peace."

She says: 'Life for me these difficult days has been so bewildering as the stern impacts of events strike against it.' She then goes on to speak of what the church and worship have come to mean to her, something they have never meant before. Her experience is, I believe, that of countless thousands of our people. Like the Psalmist they cry out; 'In the time of my trouble I sought the Lord.' Perhaps it may seem a cowardly impulse to turn to God when dark shadows are upon our pathway; we believe it to be a higher and nobler impulse. Someone has said that, 'he saw God in the tragedies of his life." Why not? Religion and the devotional habit are intensified when material things and the orderly ways of life are threatened and imperilled. The very evidence of their instability, of the insecurity of things that seemed to have permanence, drives men to the consideration of life's deeper, more enduring values. World events, as we see them today, must have a sobering effect upon life and all its interests. Sokolsky put it in a striking way when he wrote: 'The works of man shrink into nothingness before the blazing image of God.' Yes, the church and all that it stands for must make an irresistible appeal to troubled men and women today. The churches of every name in this city open wide their doors and extend their quieting, comforting, refreshing ministry to all our people. Come to them, and in them find a brief surcease from life's confusion and trials. Come to them and with neighbors and friends, forge the ties of a closer comradeship and pray earnestly for a better, more satisfying world. In them restore an impaired confidence and ease the burdens that, without a firm faith, are too heavy to be borne. If the home front is to make strong the battle front, the home front must be made strong through the comradeship of faith and worship."

"We will ments after passing examinations, take all we can get," a spokesman or for examinations. Many were local applicants, it was said.

The commission is seeking to confine the recruiting for this type of work to this area, as far as possible, because of the housing situation. This class of personnel is needed:

Messengers, men and women, entrance age 16, and salary $1,200 and $1.320. Card punch operator trainees, women, 16, $1,260.

Junior clerks, typists and stenographers, men and women, 16, $1,440. Guards, men. 21, $1,500.

The need is particularly acute in the clerical capacities, the turnover being extremely high. The fact that so much night work is required is responsible for the condition, it was explained.

Examinations now are practically a continuing process, and in order to get help, examination standards have been relaxed.

The information office of the commission where applications may be obtained is at 801 E street N.W. One of the principal demands for help, it was said, is at the War Department, where a large force will Deferred draft registrants now face induction whenever the selective service director considers they are not supporting or are "adversely affecting the war effort or the national health, safety or interest.' This policy is authorized in an amendment to the selective service regulations ordered yesterday by Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey.

Deferred Men Face Call If Director Finds Failure To Support War Effort

Draft officials explained that the amendment, which became effective with its publication yesterday in the Federal Register, enabled Gen. Hershey to send out a directive to local boards in the 12 States recently declared a "critical area" by War Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt.

Already sent out to local boards in the 12 States, the directive, it was understood, informs the local boards that deferred loggers and miners of non-ferrous metals who quit these activities for other jobs should have their classification changed. Under the former regulations. it was explained, the matter of classification rested strictly with the local boards and not with the selective service director.

A closeup of the compressor chamber. Solid walls of steel, operated by hydraulic pressure, begin crushing the auto body. A few levers are pulled, the walls close in and recoil, and what was a stout chassis has been reduced to a square pulp. What makes the machine function so smoothly is 800,000 pounds of compressed air, which crushes large objects and bales the mass into a cube. This process makes light scrap available for steel foundries.

Heavy metal must be cut by a shearing machine, as shown we, or by acetylene torches. This type of scrap, when cut into smaller pieces, can be fitted compactly into freight cars. An electro magnet picks up heavy pieces of scrap and conveys them to the torch or cutting machine operators. Without the scrap processor, the steel mills couldn't function.

With the crushing process completed, the bales of scrap are ready to be loaded into flat freight cars for shipment to steel mills. What was an auto body has been reduced quickly to a cubelike bale. Again the crane is a handy instrument to load the freight car.

Civilian Defense Force In Metropolitan Area Close to 100,000

Other Volunteers Are Needed to Complete Protective Units

By MIRIAM OTTENBERG. Approximately 100,000 volunteers in Washington and its Metropolitan Area are now working on civilian defense jobs, it was learned last night.

More than 54,000 of the voluneers are active in the District's protective services. Another 24.000 men and women are doing a similar job in the neighboring counties that complete the Metropolitan Area

The civilian defense volunteer office has assigned nearly 24,000 vol-unteers to jobs in civilian mobiliza-tion, and thousands of other volunteers are active in the Red Cross or the American Women's Voluntary Service

When the CDVO sent out letters recently to women who had regstered in the mass enrollment of volunteers in June, 1941, asking them to serve as daytime wardens, a post card went with each letter on which the enrollee was to fill in whether or not she was already working in civilian defense, and whether or not she had more time to give.

Answer to Inquiries. A total of 326 post cards of the 60 sent out were returned. Here's how the answers ran: Fifteen were ill, 20 had left town, 45 were assistant zone wardens with no more time available, 12 had more time to give to civilian defense, 18 others were in the warden service, 51 in emergncy feeding and hous-ing, 15 in unspecified types of Red Cross work, six doing full-time work as nurse's aides, 30 had small children and no domestic help, 45 merely signified they had no more time available, 10 were in Red Cross Motor Corps, 12 in AWVS, five assigned to the Emergency Medical Service, 10 giving all their spare time to selling War bonds and stamps, 20 in civilian mobilization work, 12 away for the summer and two expectant mothers. In other words, nearly two-thirds of these who responded were already engaged in civilian defense jobs or ready to be assigned to them.

Although most of the services still need volunteers, the consolidated civilian defense strength in the protective services of the Metropolitan Area totals more than 78,000 men

McNutt to Visit Coast.

The wording of Gen. Hershey's ew section of the regulations follows:

"Whenever the Director of Selecve Service advises a local board hat a deferred registrant or a group if deferred registrants is not sunorting or is adversely affecting the var effort or the national health. afety or interest, the local board shall immediately terminate the deferment and consider anew the lassification of such registrant or registrants.'

There was other evidence today of the Government's concern over the manpower question. Mr. McNutt disclosed he would visit the West Coast in about a month to check the ffectiveness of the ban on unretricted job-quitting and also to get close-up view of the West's manower situation generally.

Legislation May Be Asked.

Informed sources said the ban. affecting upward of 200,000 workers in the 12 Western States, would test whether wartime job stabilization can be achieved without legislation authorizing the Government to designate what work everyone shall do. Some even predicted that legislation giving the Government full jobcontrol would be sought eventually in any case because of an increasingly critical manpower shortage in essential war work. These persons pointed out that in griculture, where greater production is being sought and labor shortages are becoming acute, there is insufficient organization to make effective a manpower commission order such as was issued in the miner and logger case.

Charter Board Plan Called 'Trickery' by Cantrel and Smith

Sponsors Contend Big Majority of Voters Favor Proposed Change

The efforts to create a charter board to study proposed changes on local government are regarded as "a piece of unparalleled political trickery," Joseph A. Cantrel and J. Bond Smith, publicity co-chairmen of the United Democratic Organization for Montgomery County, have informed Allen H. Gardner, chairman of the County Charter Committee.

Simultaneously, Mrs. John H. Werner, the Charter Committee's executive director, released partial returns of canvassers indicating that residents in Mr. Cantrel's and Mr. Smith's home election precincts to date have signed petitions for a charter board representing 81 per cent and 60 per cent of qualified voters available in those districts, respectively.

Reply to Gardner.

The Democratic organization officials' letter was in response to a letter from Mr. Gardner earlier this week asking them to obtain authorization from the organization to announce publicly that they favor the right of the people, through petition, to vote in November on the election of a charter board, and that they favor the election of a charter board and will postpone "any opposition until you know what kind of charter is drafted by the board.'

In response to the first question Mr. Cantrel and Mr. Smith said: "As you very well know, this is a right conferred under the Maryland constitution, providing the signa-tures of 20 per cent of the voters In Charter Board Campaign are secured.

"It was not intended, however that these should be obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, or without any disclosure whatever of the specific objectives sought."

"Political Trickery."

To the second question, they declared they were unable to agree to tion in 1915 is being invoked for eral or Congressional election. A its suggestion.

"On the contrary." they said, "we regard the proposal to create a charter board under the circumstances * * * a piece of unparalleled political trickery which the voters of Montgomery County will emphatically reject in November if they get the chance."

Referring to another portion of Mr. Gardner's letter, the publicity co-chairmen said that under the circumstances the suggestion that local government programs should be attacked without partisanship or malice "is not only extremely late, but surely not seriously intended."

A few levers are pulled, the walls close in and recoil, and what was a stout chassis has been reduced to a square pulp. ### Ward-Roe Contest May Be Decided by Absentee Ballots

161 Received From Men Of Eastern Shore Area In Armed Services

By the Associated Press.

ANNAPOLIS, Sept. 12.-With sol-diers and sailors from Maryland's Eastern Shore topping the list, the Secretary of State's office reported today that 473 absentee ballots from men in the armed forces already had been received.

Of this number, 161 are from Eastern Shore residents and the outcome of this tally could decide the battle between Representative Ward and State Senator Dudley Roe for nomination to Congress from the lst congressional district.

With all votes counted except those from service men, Mr. Ward was ahead by 75 votes.

All absentee ballots received through next Tuesday will be included in the count, so the Eastern Shore total of 161 may grow to a larger figure. By polling three of every four of the absentee ballots, Mr. Roe could overtake Mr. Ward's

The heaviest absentee ballotting from any county was from Queen Annes, the home of Mr. Roe. At least one local contest in that county will be decided by the absentees, since two candidates for the Queen Annes Board of Commissioners were separated by only two votes after Tuesday's primary.

On the close Tuesday of the period for receiving mail votes, Secretary of State Thomas E. Jones will distribute the absentee ballots to the appropriate board of supervisors of elections to be opened and counted at noon, September 18.

Absentee ballots have been reeived for the following counties:

Allegany, 5: Anne Arundel, 12; Baltimore County, 41; Baltimore City, 170; Calvert, 2; Carroll, 3; Cecil, 23; Dorchester, 3; Frederick. 14; Garrett, 1; Harford, 13; Howard, 5; Kent, 16; Montgomery, 26; Prince Georges, 4; Queen Annes, 57; St. Marys, 1; Somerset, 20; Talbot, 18; Washington, 15; Wicomico, 20; Worchester, 4.

In district 7, precinct 12 in Bethesda, Mrs. John F. Wilmott, precinct captain, reported official registration of 958 voters including 687 Democrats, 220 Republicans and 51 declines. The number moved away or otherwise not available has not been determined but she reported 435 signatures to date.

A virtually complete report from the 14th precinct of the 13th district shows an increase over the previously reported total signatures there, Mrs. Werner said. The signatures have been raised from 316 to 370 obtained, representing an increase from 85 to 89 per cent of voters available there, she said.

YWCA Street Dance For Men in Service Attracts 2,000

Women War Workers Join Armed Forces For Gay Party

Street dancing, three orchestras, a penthouse party and games entertained 2.000 servicemen and women war workers at the USO dance last night at the YWCA, Seventeenth and K streets N.W.

The uniforms of sailors, soldiers, marines and WAVES of the United States, Great Britain, Norway and Holland mixed with evening dresses and sports clothes of American women civilian war workers in the giant party given to celebrate the anniversary of the first USO dance given at the YWCA for service men. Cries of "Hey, Joe, I haven't seen you since Omaha," when a soldier and marine met, and the softer tones of new friendships springing up in the roped-off street or in the other two dance floors at the Y kept a consatnt excited buzz of talk going. Three orchestras played, in the street, in the Y gymnasium and in Barker Hall. And every dance floor was packed.

All Men in Uniform.

Four different types of police, the Navy Shore Patrol, Military Police, Metropolitan force and auxiliary police silently moved among the dense crowd to keep lanes of traffic clear. Not a man out of uniform other than those in the receiving line or USO officials was to be seen It was the serviceman's night from 8:30 to midnight. Men from Quantico, Aberdeen, Belvoir, Meade, Bolling Field, the Navy Yard, Naval Air Stations and Naval Gunnery School took over the young women's association. Every branch of the service but the merchant marine was represented. Merchant seamen, though invited to USO functions, feel shy according to one soldier present, about coming to these parties. They fear, he said, being questioned about their lack of uniform, and figure that girls prefer the more easily identified war heroes for dance partners.

At 9:15, three-quarters of an hour after the dance had begun, a line still stretched an entire block waiting for admission to the Y. Men and women were "rubber-stamped" on their hands so that they could pass from the street dance "floor"from K street to the Washington Club on Seventéenth street, to the other dance floors.

Punch and Cakes Served.

Punch and 2.000 little birthday cakes with lighted candles were into complaints of alleged subverserved, prepared by 20 USO hostesses.

Tenth Month of War Finds U.S. Still Lacking Uniform Strategy

Dispersed Forces of Allied Nations Fight in Every Quarter of Globe, but Foe Selects the Time and Place

fighting everywhere, it is the enemy who selects the time and place.

Wherever Americans have concentrated enough force to meet the enemy on an equal footing they have come out on top. It can be said without false modesty that so far every time a fullscale American force has met the enemy it has been victorious

It should be understood, of course, that the American-Filipino troops which defended the Philippines were on little pore than a peace basis and were unable to obtain reinforcements in men and supplies. When the defenders were exhausted their resistance necessarily came to an end. Pearl Harbor showed no deficiency so far as the courage of men and quality of war material was concerned. The cause for that disaster must be sought in other quarters.

After nine full months of war we have an improved Navy, Air Force and Army. None of them is large enough, however, to fulfill the role assigned to it by the high command. We do not have enough ships, planes or trained troops to fight the enemy in all parts of the globe. Yet, from the disposition of our forces, it would appear that the high command would like to embrace the whole world

A Divided Strategy.

No one blamed our war leaders for the confusion in which they found themselves immediately after Pearl Harbor. We were trying to apply a two-fold strategy. One, established before December 7, provided for an all-out effort to help the fighting democracies with everything in our power "short of war." This required our sending Britain and Russia planes, tanks and guns as quickly as they left our factories and as soon as they could be taken aboard freighters. After the Axis forced us into the war as an active partner of the democracies. we had to think of our own safety and our own ways of meeting the Axis' challenge, for the accomplishment of which we had another entirely different strat-It was obvious that under the cir-

Although the United Nations are | drawn from a relatively small army. Our fundamental strategy is, of course, to defeat the Axis, but it appears that the choice of the front where we shall begin our victories does not depend on the opinions of military men, but on the civilians who control the armed forces. Unquestionably there are strong and valid reasons why we are sending American troops to Great Britain, in spite of the shortage of warships and merchantmen. We have been told repeatedly that Britain has an army of at least 3.500,000 men, with at least 1,250,000 fully-trained and hardened troops. The balance is half trained and forms either reserves or home guards. We are told in daily communiques about the colossal losses the Nazis have suffered in the Russian campaign. If we were to accept the Russian figures the Axis forces already have been decimated. According to the various Moscow communiques, more than 10,000,000 have been put out of action-killed, maimed or taken prisoner-since June 21, 1941.

Invasion of Britain Impossible.

Even if we accept half of the Russian figure as accurate, the Germans must be so weakened that a large-scale invasion of the British Isles would be impossible. The force undertaking such an invasion would have superiority of three to one. One million Brittons should be more than sufficient to repel an attack by 3.000.000 Nazis, and where could Hitler muster such a force if he has lost as many men and as much war material on the Eastern Front as is reported? Hence, the question arises as to the necessity for stationing a large American force in England.

There is no harm, of course, in having our men continue their training there, but they have to be supplied with everything from bandages and cigarettes to ammunition and planes from the United States, and that requires transports and convoys, wheih are our principal deficiency in this war.

According to official reports, American soldiers are fighting now in Egypt and the Near East. There are also American

Gandhi's Idea of Non-Violence Stems From Thoreau Treatise

India's Enigmatic Leader Made American Author's Article on 'Civil Disobedience' the Basis of His Powerful Doctrine

By Clarke H. Kawakami.

It is a far cry from Bombay, India, to 1 violent non-co-operation against British he quiet little Massachusetts town of rule, and this was soon followed by the Concord. Yet Ripley of "believe it or Armitsar "massacre," in which British not" notoriety might find it interesting troops killed 400 and wounded 1,200 to record that the civil disobedience campaign now centering in the teeming Indian city stems, in part, from the ideas of a pencilmaker's son who grew up in the peaceful surroundings of that old New England town a century ago.

For Concord was the birthplace of Henry David Thoreau, the eccentric naturalist-philosopher, who left to posterity not only his charming tales of woodland life but also a lesser-known treatise entitled "Civil Disobedience." Years later a young Indian nationalist named M. K. Gandhi chanced to read it and made Thoreau's ideas the basis of his own doctrine of ahimsa, or nonviolence-the major weapon with which. for the last two decades, he has led India's battle for independence.

Today one of the world's great popular leaders, Gandhi is perhaps the most colorful, amazing and enigmatic personality of modern times. Over two hundred million Hindus revere him as a saint, yet he is also an astute politician. He is a mystic given to silent communion with the Ultimate, but he can also be a hard-boiled realist. He preaches self-effacement but has a greater sense of showmanship than the Ringling Brothers. He is a physical weakling but has made a life career of bearding the British lion.

Over the three-ood million members of the Congress party and the many more millions of Hindus who support it but cannot afford to pay its membership dues, Gandhi wields the power of a dictator. But he is a dictator without a Gestapo or an OGPU. When his followers disobey him, he disciplines them by punishing himself. Nor does he shout command and defiance like a Hitler or Mussolini. Instead he quietly counsels his followers to obey their consciences rather than him, but no rival has ever successfully challenged his leadership of the Congress party.

Was Married at 13.

Though his countrymen now hail him greatest Indian since Buddha.

Indian nationalists. Gandhi promptly returned to the Viceroy all the British decorations he had received. His conversion was now complete.

Gandhi proclaimed the first full civil disobedience campaign in 1921. He urged his countrymen not to hold any public offices or resort to the British courts, to withdraw their children from public schools, to boycott British goods, particularly cotton goods, and to restore the old-fashioned spinning wheel and loom in every home to make cloth for domestic use. The movement immediately caught the popular imagination. Gandhi was acclaimed "Mahatma" or "Great Soul." Then, in March, 1922, he was arrested and sentenced to six years in prison.

Since then, Gandhi has proclaimed civil disobedience four times, the last of which was coincident with his recent arrest. He has served four terms in prison, though all were brief, and he has subjected himself to six fasts, the longest lasting 21 days. At first he fasted only to "punish" his followers when they resorted to violence in contravention of his teachings-a peculiar Gandhi method of discipline. Later, however, he used it as a political weapon and has, indeed, fasted himself out of jail on more than one occasion because the authorities were fearful of what might happen should he die in prison

His Loincloth a Symbol.

Gandhi's fasts are also an evidence of his keen sense of showmanship. When he fasted, he was world news, and no one knew better than Gandhi the value of headlines in attracting world attention to the Indian problem. Another evidence is his clever use of symbols. The spinning wheel and the inevitable loincloth which he wears are excellent examples. The spinning wheel Gandhi meant to symbolize India's protest against British economic exploitation. Without a cotton-manufacturing industry of their own, the poverty-stricken Indian masses had long been forced to buy the highcumstances, with our industry still on a peacetime basis, we could have only an improvised strategy to protect the shores of the United States while we applied ourselves to building an Army and Air Force.

The Navy was the only fighting arm which was on a full war footing December 7, and the Navy had suffered losses which had to be replaced. But what was more important, it was called on to assume duties for which it was not fully prepared, such as policing the seven seas. We had naval units in the North Pacific and the South Pacific, the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean, the North Atlantic and the South Atlantic, the Arctic Circle and the Caribbean. The American Navy had to fight the Japs. protect convoys going to Russia, guard American waters against submarines and had to accomplish many other chores which cannot be enumerated because they are military secrets.

A Striking Force Now.

Today the fully-trained portion of the United States Army numbers well over half a million men. According to the statement of Assistant Secretary John J. McCloy, there are some 500,000 men at the various stations abroad. The training centers in the United States are working hard producing soldiers with greater speed than in the last war. Navy yards are working at top speed and launching ships far ahead of schedule. From various official statements it appears that aviation is faring at least as well as the Army and Navy in regard to both the training of personnel and the production of machines.

Although we now have a real striking force, we still lack a strategy. The reason is not that we have no military men able enough to conceive the right strategy for the United States and, by implication, for the United Nations. The reason is that military necessities are still subordinated to "commitments."

What these "commitments" actually are, to what extent they engage us and where we are supposed to fight is known to less than a handful of men. It is questionable if more than three men, besides President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin, know what they are. But they definitely influence our military leaders,

Every time our strategists attempt to plan major operations they run up against these mysterious "commitments," which do not allow American fighting forces to go into battle on certain fronts with the positive assurance that they will receive the backing they need. And rather than leave our men high and dry, the high command prefers to engage them in secondary operations or, as in the case of the Solomon Islands victory, after achieving a success by taking the offensive, to return to the defensive because it lacks the means to exploit a brilliant operation immediately. It is firmly believed in many military quarters that if reserve warships and planes had been available after we completed the conquest of the Solomons, the American forces might have been able to continue their advance instead of stopping and waiting for the next Japanese move.

"Commitments" Require Troops.

Our "commitments" do not permit such a strategy, however. From what the outsider can gather these "commitments" provide for assistance with American military forces in addition to the output of the American war industry. And soldiers in India. When Senators ask. for their own information, why these American forces are so dispersed, the answer from official quarters is "commitments," an enigmatic word which answers nothing.

> A dispatch from Moscow a couple of weeks ago said the Soviet government had declined with thanks the offer of American troops on the southern front. The whole matter was treated lightly, of course, since no person in his right senses believes that W. Averell Harriman, who represented Mr. Roosevelt at the Churchill-Stalin meeting, could have suggested that we send troops to Russia. It would be sending coals to Newcastle. The Russians may lack war material. clothing and food, but they certainly do not lack manpower. Yet the dispatch from Moscow was revealing in the light of that mysterious word "commitments."

Too Many Strategists."

To say that the United Nations lack a strategy is not quite correct, for the truth is that there are plenty of strategists, too many strategists, each with his own strategy for winning the war. As is natural, each member of the United Nations is convinced that its own territory is of vital importance in defeating the enemy. Until a few weeks ago the Russians believed Hitler would meet his Waterloo which hitherto had been a route of in the Soviet Union. The British and European members of the United Nations-with the possible exception of the Dutch-believe that invasion of Western Europe would provide the answer to the question of how to defeat Hitler soon. Finally, the Yugoslavs and Greeks believe that the Egyptian battle field is | ing she may be able to grant help when where the defeat of the Axis is bound to begin.

Except for experienced naval and army officers, whose opinion is purely consultative, no one in Washington, London or Moscow thinks that the Pacific area is the place to concentrate our principal

Portugal still is a chin-up neutral after three years of world-enveloping conflictand still is hoping for better days for all. Europe's westernmost nation has taken advantage of both her geographical strength and her military weakness to become Europe's peace-making champion and, at Lisbon, the world's most imporremains untorn by war. Portugal is distressed to see her oldest ally, England, arm-in-arm with Russia, the only country in the world with which Portugal has no diplomatic or commercial relations; to see the United States, her "Atlantic front" neighbor, in it; and above all, to see her beloved sister nation, Brazil, involved, thus bringing the conflict to that part of the Atlantic

All Crops Saved "Goodhue Plan" Sends City Folk to Fields

By Adolph Johnson, Wide World.

ST. PAUL .-- Last spring while harried farmers saw the armed forces and defense industries gobbling the manpower they were counting on to help harvest crops, Leonard B. Ryan, Minnesota director of the United States Employment Service, made a promise:

"No Minnesota crops will go to waste for want of help to harvest them."

He has kept that promise. The answer is the "Goodhue plan"and hundreds of Minnesota shopkeepers, bankers, mechanics, packing house workers, city employes and high school boys. The story began early this year in the village of Goodhue in Southeastern Minnesota, in the mind of L. E. Cook, publisher of the weekly Goodhue County Tribune.

Recalling the days of the First World War when townspeople in his area came to the aid of hard-pressed farmers, he suggested that the current emergency was likely to prove too serious for any hit-or-miss solution and proposed a system under which persons willing to help on farms would register and be available on a moment's notice.

Mr. Ryan sent men to help. Goodhue citizens signed up virtually in a body. The idea spread. Other communities started similar plans and other names were suggested-but the "Goodhue plan" stuck.

Thanks largely to the impetus generated in the Goodhue registration meeting, and the resultant publicity, the employment office was able to add 342 volunteer labor registration offices in as many communities to the 38 full-time and 88 part-time offices in operation at the beginning of the year.

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi sprang from quite unextraordinary beginnings. He was born 72 years ago in Porbander, one of the smaller Indian states, where his father was a fairly well-to-do and respected official. At 13 he did the usual thing by marrying. His bride was an uneducated girl of 10 who two years later gave birth to her first child, which did not live. After graduating from the University

Returning home, he practiced law in Bombay for a short while and then, in 1893, went to South Africa on business. While there he was deeply moved by the maltreatment of Hindu immigrants and, instead of going back when his business was finished, he stayed on to champion the cause of his unhappy compatriots. #### Launches First Campaign.

Versailles came and went without fulfillment of Britain's promise, and the consequent political ferment in India led the London Parliament, in March, 1919, to confer on the British authorities there discretionary power to invoke marquick ending of the conflict "without tial law in order to suppress disturbances. Gandhi was embittered and resentful. destruction of Portugal's oldest, best and He launched his first campaign of non-priced goods of Lancashire and Manchester, which waxed rich on the Indian trade. Few Indians would have understood arguments about empire preference and high cost of production, but they understood when Gandhi told them that the spinning wheel was their salvation. It brought home the point to the world as well.

Gandhi's loincloth is no less interesting. He himself has explained its meaning in these words:

"Millions of Indians own nothing in the world but that little strip of cloth which preserves them from disgrace. I am not leading a back-to-the-loincloth movement. We have been in these straits ever since the British ruled India. In London, if I am invited to visit His Majesty the King-Emperor, I will wear nothing more than that which is the symbol of India's distress-the loincloth."

Stole Spotlight in London.

Gandhi did call at Buckingham Palace when he visited London in 1931 to attend the round-table conference on India, but he compromised to the extent of wrapping himself up in a large shawl specially made for him by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, the Indian poetess. Even then he created a sensation not only in London but all along the route of his travels. In the British capital he stole the spotlight from Charlie Chaplin, another visiting fireman, and was lionized by Lady Astor. Gandhi was careful to bring his symbols along with him on that journey. His loincloth he wore as usual, though he covered it with his shawl when propriety demanded. He also brought three spinning wheels and three looms, in addition to a well-thumbed volume of his favorite author, Thoreau, and an ample supply of canned goat's milk, dried raisins and nuts, which form his customary diet.

With all this, Gandhi gave London, hitherto accustomed only to blazerwearing Hindu students and bejeweled maharajahs, its first glimpse of the real India-the India of poverty-stricken millions. His eccentricities were doubtless shocking to most British aristocrats, but they won him the sympathy and friendship of London's common people. He put on a good show, and it went over.

Lead's Saintly Life.

This is not to say that Gandhi is not genuine. He leads a saintly life. He devised his simple, one-meal-a-day diet of nuts, dates, raisins and goat's milk largely to overcome the lusts of the flesh which beset him in his youth. His solitary meal is always taken at sundown, in the interval before nightfall. If darkness falls before he has eaten, he goes without food for another 24 hours.

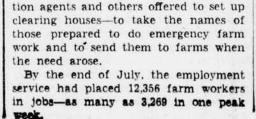

Though tremendously busy with public affairs, he devotes 24 hours each week to silent meditation, listening to the "inner voice" from which he claims to receive guidance even in political matters, and holding communion with "the Absolute and Ultimate." He starts meditating at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon and continues until 4 in the afternoon of Monday. If any one has urgent business with him during this day of silence he receives the caller and listens to him but himself does not speak, writing brief answers on slips of paper. Many of his momentous decisions were taken during these periods of meditation.

Reading few books and newspapers and shunning the radio, Gandhi is woefully ill-informed on world affairs.

Such is the personal background from the moment that we had a nucleus of trained forces our "commitments" required their use in foreign stations where, as far as the layman can see, they could not do much good.

For instance, we sent our first contingent of troops to Northern Ireland last May and more men are being sent to England and Ireland now. Many more

A Present Help

The National League of Women Voters is distributing to its members throughout the country, and through them to many thousands of citizens, a two-page folder about their Capital City. Within the space of two pages it is impossible to discuss in any detail the somewhat complicated nature of the Capital's ailments. The folder does not attempt any such task. It merely recites some of the more readily discernible defectslack of emergency housing, "alarming" health conditions, crowded hospitals, tangled administration of public welfare, snarled traffic and transportation, high rate of crime and juvenile delinquency-and after a brief look at the system under which Washington is governed concludes that "It wouldn't work in your town. It doesn't work in your National home town. Only YOUR representative can change it."

The typographical emphasis placed on "YOUR" representative, the message being addressed to voting citizens of the Nation, is excellent. Washington's only quarrel with the statement would be that insufficient emphasis is placed on what OUR elected representative might do to change these unsatisfactory conditions. But this is evidently a deliberate omission, for the League of Women Voters has been a consistent and helpful champion of Washington's right to a vote, and it is understood that this preliminary discussion of some of Washington's ailments will be followed later by some attempt at diagnosis and cure. The folder refers to the fact that "No citizen of the District votes for any one." a statement that will no incredulity by many citizens who take it for granted that we do. And it appropriately calls attention to the fact that the responsibility (control) for the District is properly placed with Congress under the Constitution, and should remain there. The implication is that the District suffers from an archaic form of government, divided among many hands. It should be remembered, however, that no modernization or streamlining of municipal government would effect more than superficial remedies for conditions which fundamentally are due to the lack of representation in their Government by citizens of the District. The National League of Women Voters and the District Voteless League of Women Voters are to be commended for their efforts to center the attention of voting citizens throughout the Nation on conditions in their Capital. For ultimate remedy can only come through the representatives of these citizens in Congress. Their interest is a primary necessity.

ter. That is the issue before Montgomery County citizens todaywhether or not to sign such a petition. There is no immediate question as to whether a county charter should be adopted. That question may never come before the voters, and it cannot come before them for at least two years. If the Charter Committee fails to get the necessary number of petition signers, the issue is dead, at least until the next general election, when a new effort could be made. Similarly, the voters this fall might disapprove the charter board, should one be appointed, and that, also would dispose of the issue at least until the next general election. If the voters indorse a charter board, however, then and then only will the question of adopting the kind of charter the board draws come before the electorate for final action in 1944.

They Can Take It

There is an interesting paradox in the fact that, while the Baruch rubber report paints a rather dismal picture and is damning in its implications of incompetency, indecision and muddle-headedness in the Government's past handling of the rubber problem, it has evoked high praise and even gratification from those who have digested its findings.

Why is this? Why does this report tend to lift rather than dampen morale when it makes criticism recognized as applying to other conditions besides rubber in connection with the war effort and coldly depicts manifest hardships ahead for our people?

Perhaps the answer lies in the fact that the report is a plain, intelligent statement of fact without the embroidery of policy designed to soften or disguise the meaning of what is said. Perhaps it is because the eminent men selected to make the report were above suspicion as to ulterior motives of their own and were free of entangling political ties, permitting them to speak their minds without thought as to the effect on the electorate in this or that congressional district next November.

Abraham Lincoln was once quoted as saying that it is very difficult to do the sensible thing. The President undoubtedly realizes how true that is, when even the most sensible course must be weighed carefully for its impact on influential and dissident elements within the Nation. But public acceptance of the report on rubber should encourage a greater use of the same tactics in getting at the heart of many of the problems which, left to stew in the caldrons of politics, may go without an answel until it is too late. What, for instance, is the truth of the charge that the war Government in Washington is so overmanned with superfluous personnel that the doubt be received with characteristic | transaction of business is hampered? From casual observation, the statement would seem to be true. From the conversational statements of men who have gone from civilian life into the Government and find themselves working for the first time under conditions where payroll economies are unknown, the condition here is pictured as a scandal. What would be the findings of three disinterested investigators, whose only mission was to get the facts and who were unhampered by considerations of patronage or anything else? Or are we interested in getting these facts? Public reception of the Baruch report furnished new evidence of the cheerful acceptance by the people of whatever burdens the war may impose. The people want the war fought and won. Complacency in the face of the terrific seriousness of the war does not seem to extend very far beyond the perimeter of Washington.

how residing in a superorganism called the state. This expansion of the myth has taken its most gross form in the imagination of the philosophers of totalitarianism."

Prof. MacIver offers in opposition: "We live in an age in which our interests and our activities * * * are for the most part not bounded within the frontiers of a State. The State we belong to is not a self-contained unity, a closed system. The traditional doctrine of sovereignty is a presumptuous denial of this truth." In the field of international relations, if not elsewhere, "the dogma of absolute sovereignty is maintained at an incalculable cost to the well-being of us all. Is it not better to give it up?' The question, certainly, cannot be answered without careful thought about its implications. But it now is not too early to begin to discuss the issue and to reason together regarding the solution of the problem which it represents.

Simultaneous British landings at the principal west coast ports of Madagascar and the rapid advance inland against slight opposition by small Vichy French forces are, militarily speaking, a routine operation. The British government has proclaimed its intention to occupy the whole of Madagascar, and there can be no doubt that this soon will be done. So culminates a chapter which began last May when a British force captured Diego Suarez, the important naval base at the island's northern tip, and continued with similar accies of the colony off its northwest coast. Madagascar is a huge island, larger than France itself and almost the size of Texas. Nearly 1,000 miles long and averaging some 200 miles wide, it parallels the east coast of Africa, from which it is separated by the broad Mozambique Channel. Through that strait run the United Nations' sea lanes around the Cape of Good Hope to Egypt and the Middle East. That is what lends Madagascar its strategic importance. Its west coast harbors are natural submarine havens, while the level, treeless plateaus of the interior are natural airfields. These potential threats to Anglo - American communications could be discounted until Japan entered the war and gained access to the Indian Ocean. Since then, fairly numerous ship sinkings by submarines, undoubtedly Japanese, have occurred in the Mozambique Channel and adjacent waters. The attitude of the Vichy French authorities has been so suspect that Britain has felt

American Manpower Must Bear War's Burden

By Owen L. Scott.

The decision appears definitely to be made to go ahead at record speed, to build a mass American Army. This decision means that two earlier conceptions of how the war is to be won now are either altered or abandoned.

One conception, strongly held, had been that the United States would supply the war materials and the British Empire, Russia and China would provide most of the men for war. German conquests that now almost sever the supply lines to Russia and Japanese conquests that have closed all but the thinnest air lines to China have blasted that concept. The second conception of the American part in the war had been that this country would supply the bombers to bomb Germany into defeat. So long as Russia keeps a large part of the German air force engaged in the East, a very great effort will be made to try out this concept. However, there is far less faith among informed officials that this method of warfare will produce a decision. Instead, the idea is being accepted that only a mass land Army driving across Europe can provide the assurance of victory that the United States must seek It is at this point that the new American plans enter the picture. The British Empire is able to put into the field no more than 5,000,000 well trained and well equipped men. Not many more than 2.000,000 of these men are in the British Isles themselves. Hitler, counting his allies, has at least 12,000,000 men to use in performing the various jobs of policing and of conquest that he tions on the small insular dependenhas set out for himself.

Russia right now is keeping a large proportion of Hitler's men busy. There is no assurance, however, that Russia can continue forever to keep the Germans tied down in the East. If Russia cannot hold down all of the German armies then a very large part of the burden that has rested upon Russian manpower probably will have to shift to American manpower.

A conclusion of this kind appears to lie behind the decision to speed up the creation of a vast American Army. That Army today is larger than it was in the First World War when it reached a maximum of 4.000,000 men. Plans call for the Army to reach 8,000,000 men, plus 2.000,000 in the air forces. That means that 10.000,000 American men out of an estimated supply of 18,000,000 physically fit between the ages of 18 and 45, will be moving into the army. Another 1,500,000 of these men are to be drawn into the Navy.

Creation of an army of this size is proceeding at an unprecedented pace. Mai, Gen. Lewis B. Hershey has advised local draft boards that they will be expected to continue throughout the remainder of 1942 and through 1943 to supply men at the very high rate of call

'THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY'

By the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

"What is the Christian's duty in these unprecedented and tragic times?" This was the reverent inquiry of a man conspicuous in public service. He was doubtless voicing that which is in the minds of many reflective people. His inquiry raises a further question, namely: "Do changed and changing conditions affect in any degree the Christian's duty?" Compelled to live under new and strange conditions, must a Christian adapt himself, by modifying or altering his Christian way or view of life? We dot not believe he does. If Christ gave to men a way of life, as He certainly did. He did not contemplate that it should be subject to change because the fortunes or accidents of life effected sweeping changes. He spoke always with finality and He reckoned with every condition that time and circumstance might bring. External conditions could not, by His standard of judgment, alter the fundamental laws He prescribed, they were immutable, they had to do with life under any and all conditions. A Christian's duty becomes more clearly defined wnen "unprecedented and tragic times" are at hand. If he attempts to live by Christ's standard, His way of life, he faces his difficulties with greater courage and determination to fulfill his Christian obligations. Some one has said that "he saw God in the tragedies of his life." It is demonstrably true that, under severe and trying conditions, Christ's pattern of life is made more evident. 'The present trying days, if any good is to come out of them, must be days when the deeper, finer meaning of life is made clearer and more evident. St. Paul asks this leading question: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" And he answered it with these triumphant words: "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us!' No, the changed and changing conditions of life but make more clear the Christian's duty and more satisfying the assurance of his ultimate victory. Many letters from men in the service, who have been called away from their normal pursuits and who may have to face #### stern days ahead, indicate that they have found in a more exacting discipline a better understanding of Christian duty and a finer meaning of life's purpose From soft ways of living they are learning for the first time the hard way, the way that develops the strongest and best in character. Christian duty is not related to a part, but to the whole of life. It does not restrict the area of its service to some limited field nor its expression to pious phrases or devout practices. Christ's way of life, which prescribes the Christian's duty, is broadly inclusive. It affects the relationships, habits and practices of man's everyday living. It prescribes his obligation to the state, to society, to business; it fixes his outlook on life; in fine, it determines his duty under any and all conditions and circumstances. Loyalty to the Christian ideal of life may prove costly, but it is richly compensating. It may be that a new and severe test is to be applied to the Christian way of life; as a matter of fact it is being applied and in the years that lie immediately ahead it may take more than a pious profession of faith to save our cherished Christian institutions, and by Christian institutitons we mean something other than the churches The writer of the query with which we began concludes his very reflective letter by asking: "Cannot something be done now to strengthen our Christian lives, something constructive and effective? The call now is for Christian leadership-that the idea of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man shall not perish from the earth." The obvious answer to such a reverent observation is, make practice square with profession; make Christian duty in every situation primary, not secondary, If it means a break with popular and prevailing customs, dare to be different in following Christ's way of life. The Christian way demands strong qualities. The finest exhibitions of Christian duty have been witnessed where it meant sacrifice and hardship. Such exhibitions have given the cause for which Christ gave His life a new meaning and made its appeal compelling and Irresistible.

Washington, and indeed the whole United States, could well stop for a moment today and pay fitting tribute to a great American who personifies millions of young men now offering their all, even their lives, for their country's protection and that democracy may survive. That great American is Gen. John J. Pershing, soldier extraordinary, statesman and military diplomat, who was born September 13, 1850. But Gen. Pershing deserves an additional title. He was once a king in France, with 2,000,000 American soldiers as his subjects. At that time the eyes of the world were centered upon his trim, straight figure, which now moves in near seclusion in Washington. The intervening years have aged the great fighter from Missouri, but his mind is still keen and his patriotic interest in his country unabated. Indeed, he symbolizes the men who today are helping to finish the job which Gen. Pershing reputedly wanted to finish instead of signing the Armistice on November 11, 1918.

Many men famous now, and many who will be famous after Washington sees Pershing no more, will in time, without doubt, be forgotten while the one who was head of an organization 2,000,000 strong will pass into history as a figure ever-increasingly to be admired. School children 100 years hence though unable to name the Presidents of the preceding half century will know that it was John J. Pershing who led the first American troops to the Rhine in 1917. Some miracle may bring about world peace in the meantime, but the gallantry of a great American general in 1917 and 1918 will always be recalled. Those men who have served under

Gen. Pershing say they do not understand him. Even Marshal Foch had heard this before he met Pershing. A French staff officer who knew the United States well and knew what "show me" means, once explained the expression to the French general, and after meeting Pershing, Foch remarked to the staff officer: "Pershing must come from the very heart of Missouri."

History has never recorded to any great extent the gentleness of generals. Perhaps it is because their names are associated with the grim business of war. Or perhaps it is because their recorded acts are cast in the language that describes a daring hero who on occasion must be ruthless as well as brave. Yet while Gen. Pershing has always had a personality which leaves the impression that he must be shown, of rigid quarantine of vessels he is, nevertheless, extremely humane, approachable and gentle, though a hard-boiled soldier, and possibly no that it was being violated and other general ever lived who had a greater interest in and affection for

Charter Discussion

Some three years ago an arrangement was worked out between the Montgomery County Commissioners and the Brookings Institution to make a comprehensive study of the county's government. Even prior to that time the Committee on Legislation and Legal Action of the County Civic Federation, with other interested citizens, had felt that such a study was desirable. It was noted that the county had grown rapidly, that its make-up had changed from rural to urban in the territory bordering the District of Columbia, but that its form of government remained much the same as in the horse and buggy days.

The Brookings Institution made an exhaustive study, but not an investigation, and published a 700-page report. Many suggestions were advanced, among them one that Montgomery adopt a charter form of government. Brookings suggested that a charter might be drawn which would give the county more home rule by granting to a county council. which would supplant the present county commissioners, certain powers now exercised by the Legislature. Brookings also recommended that Montgomery obtain a county manager, and made numerous other proposals which could be incorporated in a charter.

After the Brookings report was published, interested civic groups held meetings to study and discuss it. A charter committee was formed to water."

Nature of Sovereignty

Prof. Robert M. MacIver of Columbia University, addressing the recent Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion in New York, raised again for this generation the question of the essential character of supreme governmental authority. With specific reference to "the price of abiding peace after victory," he declared: "It is an old notion concerning the nature of sovereignty that stands in the way. We should apply common sense to it and strip it of its pretensions. Then we would soon discover that this legal concept of sovereignty is a claim of the right to use power without regard for the rights of other states." Implicit in those words, of course, is the suggestion that exemption from responsibility conduces to results which are anti-social in their effect. King Louis XV of France could be quoted as an exponent of the theory to which Prof. MacIver objects. "Sovereignty lies in me alone." the monarch told the Parliament of Paris in 1766. "The legislative power is mine unconditionally and indivisibly. The public order emanates from me, and I am its supreme guardian. My people is one with me." A diametrically opposite point of view is that of Woodrow Wilson, who, speaking at Pittsburgh in 1916, argued that if America stands for one thing more than another "it is for the sovereignty of self-governing people, and her example, her assistance, her encouragement, has thrilled two continents in this western world with all those fine impulses which have built up human liberty on both sides of the compelled to take increasingly severe preventive measures, now climaxing in full occupation. Those measures have, from the first, received the unqualified indorsement of Washington.

The larger aspects of this final step are its effects upon the relations of Vichy France with the United Nations. Governor Annet's formal denial that he has harbored Axis agents or assisted the Axis in any way can be discounted by accumulated evidence such as the shooting of disguised Japanese officers by a British patrol near Diego Suarez last spring. At so critical a period of the war, when every man is needed in Egypt and the Middle East, Britain would not send many thousands of soldiers to Madagascar and immobilize most of them there by occupation unless the need were imperative. Nevertheless, this fresh armed clash with the Vichy French comes at a ticklish moment. Germany unquestionably is putting renewed pressure on Vichy for all-out collaboration. Laval certainly is willing, and is restrained solely by fear of the effect on France itself. Yet the imminence of such a step is shown by the recent protest penned by those eminent French political leaders, Edouard Herriot and Jules Jeanneney, who, at the risk of their lives, warned Marshal Petain against trying to "draw France into war against our Allies." With the German-controlled Paris press in full cry against the "Anglo-American enemy," Laval can be counted upon to make the most of the Madagascar incident to whip up popular resentment and pave the way for his nefarious policy. The French crisis mounts toward a climax which may be tragic in the extreme.

End of a Strike

The termination of the strike at the Western Cartridge Plant, which, according to War Labor Board Chairman Davis, was "jeopardizing the lives of thousands of soldiers and sailors," serves to confirm the belief that strikes in war industries can be prevented if national labor leaders are determined to prevent them It is possible that employes in this case had what normally would be considered legitimate grounds for a strike. There was a difference of opinion in that respect, but the point is unimportant. The essential fact was that a vital war plant was being tied up in disregard of the no-strike agreement. Furthermore, the strikers ignored the appeal from Mr. Davis, as they had rejected two previous requests from the WLB that they return to work. In this state of affairs, William

Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, on Friday ordered the men back to work without delay. Mr. Green said the strikers in September. To do that means that it will be necessary not only to draft 18 and 19 year old youths but to take all physically fit married men without children and to make a dent in the supply of married men with children.

If forced to do so, the United States could build an Army of about 18,000,000 and still be no more strained than Hitler is in building his army of 10,000,-000

The catch, however, is that finding men for a mass Army is the least difficult part of the task. One great problem comes in supplying the weapons for a mass Army. A second problem, equally as large, is involved in moving that Army to the battlefronts and in keeping it supplied once it gets into action. The first problem is being solved none too well up to this time. Men moving overseas are fully equipped for action and it is announced that this number now is greater than 500.000. Yet the great bulk of the American Army still is short of the weapons and ammunition and other equipment that it is going to require. This part of the task will not be well in hand until mid-1943. The second problem only now is yielding to treatment. Movement of an Army fully equipped with modern weapons is a colossal task. It calls for more than 1,000 ships to move 1,000,000 men with their equipment and then it calls for 200 ships in constant service to keep those men supplied. If several million men are to be transported and supplied. even over the relatively short run to Britain, the amount of shipping required is staggering. Yet, until the last month or two, the Germans were sinking more ships than were being built. Despite the problems involved, the task of creating this mass Army and of moving it to the scene of action, are to be tackled. The fact that emphasis is shifting to creation of a very large Army shows that those who shape policy expect this war to continue at least until 1944. The United States by 1944 can have a trained and fully equipped Army of few more than 5.000.000 men, if that many, It certainly will have great difficulty moving that many men overseas.

Army plans concern the war with Germany. They are secondary in the war with Japan. The reason why is that the Pacific war is likely to be primarily a job for the Navy and the Army Air Forces. When and if the time comes to depend upon a large Army in the Far East it probably will have to be a Chinese army using American equipment

The Navy, too, is enlarging its plans The official report now is that the Navy build up its strength to 1,500,000 men That is 500,000 more than the number announced only a short time ago. It reveals that the Navy as well as the Army is raising its estimate of the number of men required to do the job assigned to it. In the case of the Navy much of the increase in personnel may center in the Naval Air Force and in the marines. Warfare in the Pacific will be amphibious and the marines are the forces who have training and experience in this type of warfare

All of the preparations under way here suggest that the United States is getting set to deal with its enemies in two oceans regardless of what may happen to its Allies

Court. Lieutenant Governor and ernor, president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and of the Connecticut Bible Society. This historical fact was witnessed by the famous John Randolph of Virginia, who on January 14, 1828, commented upon changes in the usages of the House, saying that the old Speakers and chairmen of the committees of the whole House on the state of the Union, never asked the privilege of calling others to the chair to relieve them during wearisome debate. The Speakers in later years usually have called only members of the majority party to preside temporarily, although there are a few exceptions. For example, on April 16, 1878, the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, Speaker Samuel J. Randall called Representative Eugene Hale, Maine, a mi nority member to the chair during consideration of a bill relating to the government of the District of Columbia. On May 6 of the same year Mr. Hale was again called to the chair.

The House is about to lose the services of its assistant tally clerk who has held that job most efficiently since February, 1941-John L. Smith, aged 29. He has just received appointment as ensign, D. V. S., U. S. Navy, to take effect October 5. Mr. Smith has been very popular as one of the younger employes of the House. He has been working his way up in the service for 10 years. He came from Barberton, Ohio; received his appointment through former Representative Seiberling, and holds his present post through his own efforts and the patronage of Representative Dow W. Harter, 14th Ohio district. Mr. Smith has been successively elevator operator on the Capitol police force, attendant in the House document room, in the office of the superintendent of the folding room, and in the postoffice before climbing to his present post. In the meantime he graduated in law from the National University.

The renomination of Representative Eugene Cox of Georgia defeated the ambition of a former member to make a "comeback"-John H. Smithwick, then of Florida-and who later was in the real estate business in Florida and Washington. Mr. Smithwick really was a Georgian, born at Orange and graduated at Reinhardt Normal College in Waleska. He started to practice law in Moultrie, Ga., before moving to Pensacola in 1906. He served in Congress eight years-1919 to 1927. Representative Cox won renomination equivalent to election, is one of the outstanding members, ranking Democrat on the important Rules Committee and recognized as an effective orator. Nearly 40 years ago, when only 24 years of age, he was Mayor of his home town, Camilla. Ga. He was judge of the Superior Court at the age of 32 and resigned four years later to enter Congress, where he served consecutively for 18 years.

Any idea of an easy war for the United States now is being abandoned. There was a time when people of this country, and high officials as well, concluded that others would do most of the fighting while the United States supplied the weapons. It still is possible that this died.

The background of Gen. Pershing is almost too classical to be recorded of a living man. His father came to the United States as a workhand on a sailing vessel, and after rafting lumber to New Orleans and engaging in other types of work, took up abode in Linn County, Mo., then a rough frontier. The elder Pershing met and married a daughter of a Virginian who had gone westward over the Tennessee mountains and across the Mississippi. The father, John Fletcher Pershing, at the time of his marriage was section foreman of the old Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad. John Joseph was the first of nine children, but soon after the now famous general was born, the father became a soldier in a Missouri regiment in the Federal Army, Here, it seems, was the beginning of Gen. Pershing's military career. He was old enough to listen to the story of Appomattox and was impressed when his father returned home. The Civil War was over, but in Linn County there were many outlaws such as the James brothers and the guerrilla Cantrell. Bushwackers raided homes at night, and the situation seemed, it soon was under one of these was the domicile of the Pershings in the town of Laclede. In addition, the father of John's first school teacher was killed in a raid. All these happenings made an indelible impression on the boy who was destined to be promoted to a full general, the fourth to hold that rank since Washington.

> In boyhood John J. Pershing worked as a farmhand, studied, taught school, was frugal and saved enough money to attend a term at normal school, which enabled him to obtain a better position as teacher. Meantime young Pershing had an ambition to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point. He did, and being impersonal, matured in thought and tempered by frontier life, he became the president of his class-the class of 1886.

> Pershing chose the cavalry as his branch. At that time cavalry served the frontier, where Indians still occasionally went on the warpath. He saw action at once in the hard Apache campaign of 1886, and then in the Sioux campaign in 1890-1. He served four years as military instructor in the University of Nebraska, and later returned to West Point for two years as instructor in tactics, the technique of moving men forward and directing them in battle, and a subject in which he always was interested.

Gen. Pershing did not rise to military fame by the shortcut, the way was long and hard. His first real chance came when he was given opportunity of service in the Spanish-American War, his gallantry and efficiency winning for him a host of friends. Again he showed the making of a great general in an expedition against the Moros in the Philippines in 1902. Pershing served with distinction and then added to his knowledge by acting as Military Attache in Japan. In 1916 he led the punitive expedition into Mexico against Villa. But in no foray against an enemy of his country or in otherwise serving it, did he seek publicity. He saw no romance in performing a duty.

Always a seeker after peace, Gen. Pershing was slow to fire, but was quick on the trigger when shooting began. Such a temperament, combined with experiences gained on extraordi-

Stubborn Defense of Stalingrad Dramatizes One of Most Critical Periods of War

'America's Fortieth Week of War (158th Week of World War II)

By Thomas R. Henry.

Safe from bombs, safe from hunger, secure for the time from all the penalties of war except discomfort and sorrow, the people of the United States nevertheless came to a clearer realization this week that the Republic might be facing its greatest crisis.

They sat in their homes Monday night while the President and Commander in Chief seemed to threaten a virtual economic dictatorship to avert social disaster beneath the falling debris of a broken world. At the same time, his words seemed to give a distinct promise of a second front in Europe before the year's end.

Overseas the titanic struggle went on, with no momentous change in the picture. Russians were making a last-ditch defense of Stalingrad with one of the finest demonstrations of human fortitude since the world began. From the critical North African front there was silence. Germans and their Italian allies apparently had failed in their first renewed efforts to break through the British lines into Egypt and were gathering forces for a new drive. The Japanese were withdrawing their forces from China-a fact made evident by unexpected Chinese successes. It can only mean that the little brown men are planning a *

before Stalingrad outnumber forces those thrown into any engagement on record. They are well over a million. The master has ordered that the Volga city be taken at any cost. There is not too much hope that it will hold out. It is subjected to nightly air attacks. It is within range of German cannon. Its defenders are ragged and hungry. But they are fighting-fighting and dying. Every day they are forced to yield. Germans occupy most of the suburbs. But every mile they gain is paid for so heavily in sweat and blood and death that the account cannot remain forever solvent.

The value of Stalingrad to the Germans cannot be overestimated. Its capture would mean that they could hold the eastern line this winter in relative comfort and security instead of deadly discomfort and constant peril-meanwhile releasing troops to combat the nightmare of an offensive from the west. the loss of Novorossisk. But the Nazis are worried as the leaves turn vellow.

"The battle for Stalingrad is destined to count among the most colossal and stubborn in military history." admitted the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. The fall of the city, however significant, does not mean the end of Russia. As was stressed by President Roosevelt in his Labor Day night address, not a Russian Army has been destroyed-and until all Red armies are destroyed they can return to fight another day.

Much of Russia's richest territory has been captured. Many of the population are slaves of war. But a good part of the nation's industry survives. Twelve years ago Stalin started shifting Russia's major war industries east of the Urals! Great new cities have arisen of which the outside world has heard little. In 1931 Magnitogorsk did not exist. Today it has a population of 800,000. Scerdlovsk in 1920 had 90,000 people while the latest census credits it with a million. Chelyabinsk has risen from 57,000 and Novo Sibirsk from 5,000 to 750,000 each.

Japan's amphibious troops and catfooted jungle warriors suddenly resumed the offensive in both New Guinea and the Solomons-and with some initial success. By an infiltrating operation, of the type which proved highly successful in their first Malayan moves, they succeeded in flanking Australian positions north of the lofty Owen Stanley Mountains in Southern New Guinea.

There were fewer than 100 planes in Great Britain after the first expeditionary force was sent to France with 10 squadrons of light bombers and two squadrons of Hurricane fighters in September, 1939.

But over 5,000 aircraft sorties were sent out from England in the Dieppe raid and there has been at least one 1,000plane raid over the continent.

From the start of the war the overall superiority of American over Japanese aviation was apparent. Losses were approximately one to two. Now, as they become more familiar with the foe's fighting tactics, American flyers have widened this score sensationally, declared Lt. Gen. George H. Brett, late in command of the Air Corps operations in the Southwest Pacific. Early in August it was three to one. By the end of the month it was five to one.

For the first time in this generation the first Monday in September was not an almost universal holiday.

President Roosevelt made it the occasion for one of his most important pronouncements of the war. Factory wheels did not stop turning. In shipyards all over the country 174 ships were launched-many naval craft of all sorts and a lot of 10,000-ton cargo ships. At the same time work was started on 49 others.

The war is beginning to come home to the American people. The Navy announced that it already had lost nearly 13,000 sailors and marines-killed, wounded and missing. After three years the British war office announced that 77,190 are prisoners of war-not counting those captured at Tobruk and Singapore.

The United States extended its many fronts by occupying the strange Galapagos Islands, desolate possessions of Ecuador in the Pacific. They might have formed fine Japanese bases. The South American republic had no objections to American occupancy.

The United States will invade the colleges for manpower. Students were warned that they face almost certain calls to active duty at 20. To most of them the news was welcome. Latin, calculus, biology Ia, pale in interest before the great adventure.

Up to the present probably the greatest discomfort caused by the war to the American people has been due to the shortage of rubber. It will continue to be the single greatest discomfort until next year's tax bills are received. The reasons for this shortage have been obscured in clouds of verbiage.

begin another series of conversations predict the outcome, it may be reported that expectations of an early wedding are not running high.

Love definitely is not in bloom! Most labor leaders desire a united labor movement, whether they think of it in terms of winning the war, or writing the peace, or just in terms of so-called industrial normalcy. That makes organic unity look easy, but it isn't anywhere near that simple. Here are some of the reasons why: 1. Psychological-The last two peace negotiations, in 1937 HARRY C. BATES and 1939, failed. That contributed to a feeling of defeatism. The present peace move did not spontanespring ously from rival leaders; in fact, when the AFL suggested peace talks last May, the CIO's reply was a counterproposal which the AFL interpreted as a rejection.

Then in August CIO President Philip Murray suggested peace conferences. AFL President William Green interpreted that as a delayed acceptance of the AFL's offer in May. The fact is that President Roosevelt inspired the negotiations, asked both sides to try to work it out, even if it WM. L. HUTCHESON. took a year.

Quarrels and name-calling, personal and otherwise, have been intensified rather than lessened, heightening the psychological barrier. The CIO says the AFL's attitude is patronizing and resents it. The CIO claims about 5,000,000 members in 54 constituent unions. The AFL claims close to 6,000,000 members in more than 100 unions. Both have been growing.

A factor on the other side of the ledger is the interest of President Roosevelt and the rank and file in the success of the negotiations. They may be able to command extended, genuine efforts to find a smaller scale. But there are factors on the other side of the jurisdictional picture.

David Dubinsky of the AFL International Ladies' Garment Workers and Sidney Hillman of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers have been clamoring for labor unity. There is practically no jurisdictional trouble between them. Both could function in a united labor movement. They are concerned over the cynical approach to the peace negotiations, and may be able to pressure the conferees into working long and hard on

Of recent interest are hemp, mustard, wild lettuce, milkweed. Two of these are already in the thick of the fight, and the two others stand a pretty good chance of getting there.

The cultivation of hemp is not an entirely new thing in the Dominion. It has long been known that it will grow here without much difficulty, and that its crops produce satisfactory fibers. The great difficulty has not been inability to grow the infamous weed: it If has been due to human inclination to dry and smoke the pistillate flowers, a practice which produces temporary in-President Henry A. However, so are sisal, jute, manila, and Italian hemp, for far different reasons. The supply of these important cordages have been cut off by Axis activities in the Pacific and other areas. The result was a worrisome shortage for war requirements, and Canada has had to look in other directions for substitutes.

This is where Canada's hemp-growing abilities were recalled, and Canadian agrostologists, fibre experts, and processers set to work. Canadian hemp is now replacing its overseas forerunners, and is doing a variety of war jobs. An important one is cleaning army rifle and machine gun barrels.

Mustard seed has been used for centuries for medicinal purposes, but it was not until 1720 that an Englishwoman by the name of Mrs. Clements discovered how to make mustard flour. This set mustard off on a new tack, increasing its importance enormously. Its sphere of activity took in the kitchen as well as the sick room. From footbaths and poultices to table condiment and roast flavoring, and in later years in pickling and salad dressing, mustard has become one of the near-indispensibles. This fact has made the production of mustard seed one of the major agricultural chores of the modern world. In the past, much of the mustard used in Canada has been grown and processed in Europe. But with the European supply cut off, it was necessary to turn elsewhere.

The American experiment, Dr. Wriston argues, was a genuine new order. For the first time the citizen was explicitly placed at the center and the state was made his servant.

In January, 1940, the State Department set up a committee, with Undersecretary Welles as chairman, to study the long-range effects of war policies. It was sometimes known as "the Peace Plan Committe." According to unofficial report, one valued textbook was Dr. Wriston's "Prepare for Peace!"

It presents a searching analysis of tactical flaws in the organization of the American delegation to the Paris Conference, and also an astute prospectus of terms on which any durable peace treaty must be founded.

It rejects reparations as self-defeating. One suggestion is that the State Department should create a foreign service college to train picked diplomats in the grand strategy of peace.

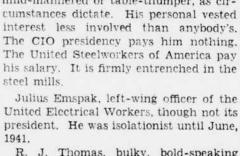

Nominally a Republican, Dr. Wriston is so detached from partisanship as to believe it necessary on principle to strengthen the party happening at the moment to be down. He has written shattering blasts against Republican tariffs, and excoriated the foreign policy of the Harding-Hoover era as a ruinous "flight from reality," which cannot be absolved of responsibility for the current war.

Far from being a devotee of laissez faire, he acknowledges that even in time of peace Government regulation had become imperative in many areas. He insisted, however, that Federal agencies should not attempt management, but limit themselves to regulation-and as little of that as possible.

Long a convert to collective bargaining, he is on record as lamenting that no representative of the Department of Labor was summoned to the Paris Peace Conference, and as declaring that even in wartime labor "should not be deprived of its fundamental rights." But the Wagner Act, he believes, was deliberately framed as an engine of class injustice.

In the speech accompanying the Wallace incident, Dr. Wriston attacked the New Deal on the novel ground that it had "misinterpreted the machine age." The high function of the machine, he declared, is the creation of wealth for mankind on a scale never before known. He brushed technological employment aside as a detail of transition, with the remark that it is easier today for a worker to shift from one assembly line to another than it was in the past to restrain himself in a new handicraft.

He defined autarchy as a regime of scarcity, substitutes and impoverishment; and condemned all systems of statism, from the mildest "planned economy" to out-and-out self-sufficiency in the degree to which they cripple the machine's essential function, the output of popular

Early Public School Days in Washington

By John Clagett Proctor.

B-4

It will be only a few days more now before the school children will again take up their studies to help to fit them for their life's work, and though the vast majority will do this eagerly, yet even those who may not will some day, when they have grown older, retain fond recollections of the days when they were receiving their early education.

But whether they like studying or not, one thing is certain, and that is, that in the meridian or sunset of their lives nothing in this world will appeal to them more than the recollections of their school days and the memory and thoughts of their youthful companions. and the dear teachers who so patiently labored to fit them to be valued and useful citizens.

Indeed, these will be the happiest moments of their lives, moments that will often prompt them to repeat to themselves, in substance at least, the words of the poet and say:

"When I dream of the friends of my youth And the hearts that were dear to me then. I turn with a sigh, to the days gone

Yet I love to recall them again.

"When I dream of the joys that were Of the hearts that were gentle and true. My heart still bends to my good old triends And I sigh when I bid them adieu."

Of course, your first school year will always prove the dearest to you, and one that all your success and happiness and difficulties and troubles will not erase. Upon one occasion, not so long ago, the writer, in one of his early school stories, had this to say about his first teacher, a Miss Marion Malone, who taught the first grade in the old Grace Church School at Ninth and S streets northwest, first opened about 1873:

"Externally Grace Church looks almost the same today as it did in 1873, and, of course, a year or two later, when I was entered there in the primary class, and when I met my first school teacher-Miss Marion J. Malone. What a real, genuinely sympathetic woman she was. All the little tots loved her. Sweet, affectionate, considerate, kind and thoughtful. What more could I add for her pinning my little cape close up around my neck, so that I would not catch cold on my way home. And so she was to all the boys under her charge, always unfailing in her devotion to duty. I know I voice the sentiment of her entire class when I say God bless her dear soul; if she is living, may she be happy and grow old gracefully, and if she is dead, may the blessings of Heaven rest upon her-sweet Marion Malone.'

Well, what would you suppose? Someone in Washington who knew Miss Mane's whereabouts in New York City forwarded a copy of The Star containing my story about her, and a few days later a letter was received from her. Sixty years and more had elapsed, and one can imagine the writer's delight to hear from this dear woman. She told me she and her sister had left Washington many years ago to be with their brother, who was practicing law in New York, that her brother and sister had since died and that she was living in that city alone. Naturally this letter received a prompt and sympathetic reply. But the correspondence was not to be continued, for in about six weeks the writer received a letter from an attorney in New York saying that Miss Malone had died, and as my letter had been found among her effects, inquiry was being made by him as to her relations in Washington, of which no information could be given, and this cut short what promised to be a lovely renewed friendship.

the third grade in the northwest room, haps it would be best to include the place in 1874, and continuing for several years thereafter.

Emma F. Quinlan taught the fourth grade for several years. She was, quite likely, a widow. She was a nice looking woman, though her face wore a sad look -a sort of Madonna face. She was stout, and did all the whipping for the building; and she could do it to a queen's taste. Her experience was no doubt largely gained in connection with her own son Frank, who was one of her pupils when the writer entered her grade. Not like some thoughtless teachers, who would box the boys over their B. ears, she never forgot just where to administer the punishment, and but few boys were ever able to squirm out of her grip once they were doing the jack-knife over her knee. One character connected with the school whom the boys all loved-or 'loathed" would be more correct-was John, the colored janitor. He was about the color of the stove, and when any of the teachers desired to send a note to the home of one of the boys telling his parents of his misbehavior or of his playing hooky, John always took the note, and John was always looked upon as an enemy of mankind.

In the second grade, William Moran was given the silver medal and Wilmer Bowen, Horace Beall, Charles Crider, George Wylie, Jacob Bookbinder, Charles Merillat, John Sinsel, William Martin, William Perry, Herman Fentner and August Dahler were those to receive diplomas.

In the third grade, George M. Kent carried off the highest honors, while John L. Lang, Walter H. Stevens, James W. Tubman, Robert A. Wind, Robert Webb, Joseph M. Prather, Arthur M. Donaldson, George E. Bayliss, Stanley Baker, William A. Furmage, Charles H. White and Thomas J. Martin were rec-

Of these buildings, 12 happened to be regular schoolhouses, 5 churches, 4 dwelling houses, 1 a library building, 4 in public halls, 1 an engine house, 3 indefinite, and lastly, the old Capitol Building at First and A streets N.E., where in 1860 Miss Ellen S. Hawkins taught Primary School No. 7, continuing to do so for a short while in 1881, even after she had become through marriage Mrs. Ellen E. Jensen.

Civil War Prison.

Soon after the beginning of the Civil War this old building was taken over by the Government and used as a prison for political offenders, and, of course, as in a number of similar incidents just about this time, the School Board had to look elsewhere for quarters. The site is now occupied by the United States Supreme Court Building.

A list of names of those who attended this school at this time is not available, but the names of those who received premiums in 1860 are still preserved, and include Anna Carpenter (medalist). Julia Buckley, Redford Bean, Elizabeth Miller, Rosanna Brown, Elizabeth Craig, John Carpenter, Michael Fleming, Frederick Stewart, Francis Meal, Kate Dipple, Mary Carpenter, Mary Craig, James Bassford, Mary Herbert, Edmund Kane and George Bivans. The following year those who attended this school and who received honorary mention of some sort were Elizabeth Wright, Dorbetta Goff, Edmund Kane, Mary Herbert, Washington Wright, Roseanna Brown, Catherine Buckley, Louisa Kraft, Charles Burns, Francis Meade, Julia Hurley, Wilton Griffin and Louisa Kraft.

dren who attended the Old Capitol in the crowded condition of a school-School were surrounded with better conditions than those who were forced to go to school elsewhere. Indeed, an idea of the prevailing conditions existing here about that time can be best had from the report of the Committee on Schoolhouses and Schoolrooms for 1863-1864. And here is what the committee had to say:

"The question with the trustees is, usually, where can any room at all be procured for the location of a school, and not whether it is suitable. Hence the committee found the schools located in the damp and dark basements of churches, in buildings originally designed and constructed for stables and carpenter shops, in the ill-arranged halls over blacksmith shops, market and engine houses, in the chambers and halls of private houses, and, in short, in such buildings or rooms as could not be ad-

Surely we have nothing today quote so bad as this, and none of us would care to have it so.

It was soon after this report was made that plans were laid for erecting in the third school district the first of the modern school buildings in the District of Columbia. Richard Wallach was then the Mayor, serving in that office from 1861 to 1867. He had been a great help in the cause of public education. and it was deemed appropriate that the new building should bear the name of "Wallach," for without his enthusiasm

School stands had to be bought back from one of these for $7,000. However, it was an ideal situation for the purpose, having a front on Pennsylvania avenue of 129 feet 4 inches, on C street of 248 feet 2 inches and on Seventh street of 389 feet. The whole tract contains 107,834 square feet; the price paid being at the rate of about 61/2 cents a square foot, which some of us would like to duplicate today. It was, indeed, a wise selection for the beginning of a new era in local school construction. which was continued even down to the present day. At the time the Wallach, the Franklin and the Jefferson Schools were new buildings, they represented the highest types of school buildings in the United States, if not in the whole world, The Wallach was commenced in May,

Great Changes.

There is a great difference between the schools of today and the schools of bygone days. Old Grace Church School, for instance, had two entrances on the second, or upper floor, one on the north side and one on the south side. To these entrances a long flight of crude wooden stairs led. They were without any covering and, of course, ran from the ground to a platform at the second story. Here a door led into a hallway running north and south, separating the four schoolrooms. In some respects the building was typical of the early country school-no running water, no plumbing and no heating apparatus, except the large round stove used at that period. and which would get redhot and burn up most everything around it while the boys in the far corner of the room would be having difficulty keeping warm.

The rooms were large and airy with nearly 12-foot ceilings, the floor dimensions being 22 feet 3 inches by 31 feet 3 inches. There were accommodations for 60 pupils, and it is needless to say there was seldom a vacancy.

The first grade was taught in the southeast room by Miss Malone, who was temporarily succeeded in 1877 by Miss Mary Celia Jones, Miss Harriet J. Drury, subsequently taking the latter's place. Miss Susie E. Porter taught the second grade in the northeast room. From the beginning, Miss Kate T. Brown taught

This was during the period when the deserving public school children of the District were given medals and diplomas at the close of the year, and at the end of the year 1873 we find the names of the following honor students of Grace Church School to be:

Albert Rheb of the first grade was awarded a silver medal, and diplomas went to William J. Devan, Charles Meyers David E. Wilber, Fred C. Loftus, Harry French, Charles A. Devers, Robert Dorsey, Charles Hurdle, Arthur Lewis, Walter Lockhead, George McDuell, Martin H. Donaldson, Charles Behrens and Fritz Burnett.

Setting a World Speed Record for Tunnel Digging

By Leif Erickson, Wide World.

GRAND LAKE, Colo., Sept. 12 (Wide World).-Long John Austin is as a Babe Ruth in the tough world of hard rock tunnel stiffs.

A slim giant, 6 feet 8 inches tall, he has to duck to get through most doors. The Golden Cycle Corp. hired Long

John to drive the 6-mile Carlton mine drainage tunnel at Cripple Creek, and figured the job would take four years at better than ordinary speed.

Long John finished the job in two years. That's typical.

He's busy now on the western bore of the Alva B. Adams water diversion tunnel, to run 13 miles from Grand Lake to Estes Park through the Continental Divide range of the Rockies. The water will be used to develop hydroelectric power and to irrigate Northeastern Colorado farm lands.

Mining Superstitions.

Austin makes a science of blasting and digging against time through solid granite and crumbling faults. But he never flouts the stubborn superstitions of the hard-rock men. They believe, as sure as death, a miner will be killed if a woman enters a tunnel bore.

"The only time I was badly hurt in a tunnel was the day after I took a woman in to show her the job," said Austin, a slanting grin wrinkling around his piercing pale blue eyes.

"It was the first tunnel job I ever worked on, and it was nearly my last. "A roof fall hit me and pinned my legs. I could see big chunks breaking loose from the roof. I was stuck and couldn't move.

"It was a hellish thing to lie there and wonder if the next chunk would hit me on the head."

Two miners dug Long John loose and hauled him out, with a badly fractured leg.

On the same job, a Louisville & Nashville Railroad tunnel near Quicksand. Ky., a shift of miners lined up at the portal ready to go to work when two Negroes ambled right by the tunnel mouth, one twanging a banjo, the other singing. That was in flagrant violation of the superstition that singing or whistling around a tunnel presages a serious accident.

"I knew," Long John recounted, "the men would never go in if I didn't do something." So he broke the banjo over one Negro's head, and broke his own hand on the singer's skull.

The Negroes made tracks and the men went to work the railroad wouldn't give them trans- operator. portation. They finally had to go back to work to keep eating."

Now 55, Austin was born at Munroe, There's never been another like him. N. C., and was christened John Raymond. He didn't think he had the capacity to absorb an engineering education, so he quit the University of North Carolina after three years to take a construction job.

He worked on railroad tunnels in Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland and then went to Ontario for six years as concrete boss on the Welland Canal. There he met and married Helen Daniels. daughter of Charles Daniels, then editor of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Express. In 1935 Long John was made superintendent of the Palms tunnel No. 1, and finished ahead of schedule. a metropolitan water district project in California, and there started making his job at Cripple Creek. His men there vanced the tunnel heading 1,101 feet. a miraculous rate for a bore requiring continuous steel support.

The water district's chief engineer then put Austin in charge of driving the Lawrence adit, "the job that turned my hair gray," Long John says.

The adit was a bore, pitched downward at a 25-degree angle, aimed to hit the middle of the 17-mile San Jacinto tunnel. The idea was to get crews working both ways from the middle to meet the men driving from says. both ends of the San Jacinto.

Long John had to fight water running 33.000 gallons a minute into the sloping bore, but he boosted the driving rate from 3 feet a day to 30 feet a day In 1939 Austin started the Cariton drove 78 feet in 24 hours through solid pre-Cambrian granite.

In the Carlton, Long John escaped being killed only because of his height. Riding in an empty muck car at the head of a loaded train rolling downgrade out of the tunnel, Austin sighted an inbound train speeding along the 2-foot narrow-gauge track.

Looking back, Long John saw the motorman of his train slumped down. either unconscious or dead from a heart attack.

"I knew we were going to hit and I was going to be in the middle," Austin

"I figured fast. These steel muck cars. see, are just 7 feet long. I figured my only chance was to get on the bottom and brace myself as hard as I could. I did and I just fit on the bottom of that car.

was known. Small and vivacious Mrs. Austin, who has reared their three sons and daughter in homes all over the country, has had some dread moments, too. After the Carlton tapped Cripple Creek mine shafts, flooded with hundreds of feet of water. Austin and his shift bosses were the first to go in to check the water damage and debris and to see if there was any gas.

Long John promised to report back to the outside by a specified time. Inside, he just kept going and forgot to send out word all was O. K. The tunnel office summoned rescue squads and the alarm gathered a thousand townspeople. The wife of one of Austin's men came by Mrs. Austin's house, carrying a blanket. She was sure, she said, her husband was dead and she was taking the blanket to the tunnel to wrap his body in.

"Then I was sure Ray was dead, too," said Mrs. Austin, who alone calls her husband Ray.

"I got a blanket and went with her. "It wasn't long before Ray came out. He was perfectly all right, the beast. He was grinning and he wanted to know what all the excitement was about. "Well, I cried a little because I was so happy. But I didn't speak to him for two weeks." Long John says his system in handling a tunnel job is a simple matter of timing.

On the Adams tunnel he designed and built a seven-ton jumbo drill carriage that puts six drills biting simultaneously into rock. An ordinary tunnel job uses four drills.

Austin runs his muck car trains on a schedule as tight as a crack railroad limited. There are no special trips for big-shot visitors.

Among the rewards Austin has won as a hurrying tunnel man, besides commanding a salary four to six times that of the usual tunnel superintendent, is a to wear.

year and dedicated July 4, 1864. It was built by W. H. Falconer, who, it is said, "cheerfully and faithfully executed all the stipulations of the contract."

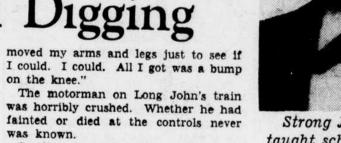

The second modern school to be erected in the city was the Franklin. Construction was begun in 1864 and it was completed in 1869. The ground cost $20.474.01 and the building $187.229.71. It was dedicated Saturday, October 2. 1869. Following this came the Seaton Building in 1871, the old Jefferson on the Island (Southwest Washington), in 1872 -where that able instructor. John E. Thompson, held forth for many years. Then came the Cranch, followed by others.

In 1875 the old first district building at Fourteenth and G streets N.W., generally known as the Jefferson Stable School, and located on the corner where is now the Hamilton National Bank, was sold and the proceeds used in acquiring another site. This building was originally intended as the stable for the horses of the White House, but probably were never used as such. It was used for public school purposes from September 3, 1821 to about 1872, when it was sold by the Government to Andrew Gleason, a local contractor, for $7,706.97. It was demolished in 1886.

In this building was early taught the Lancasterian system by Henry Ould. imported from England for that purpose. He was followed here by John L. Henshaw, Samuel Kelly, Strong John Thomson and others.

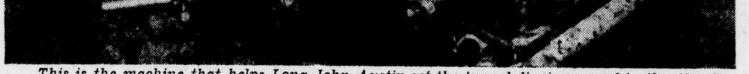

In the days of the Lancasterian system of instruction, hatracks were apparently not in use, since each boy kept with him his hat at all times. Upon entering the schoolroom the teacher gave the order to "sling hats," and to "unsling hats" upon retiring much in the same way a soldier would sling his knapsack.

World's Largest Cafeteria to Feed 40,000 Nearing Completion in War Dept.

By Joseph A. Fox. Star Staff Writer.

An eating project that started a year ago as a trailer lunchcart and developed into a cafeteria handling 20,000 customers daily-15,000 come for lunch-soon will be serving twice that many from a base of operations in a kitchen larger than a football field.

The breath-taking Pentagon Building in Arlington, largest office building in the world, is the scene of this amazing culinary-catering evolutionary process which is keeping step with the steady influx of War Department personnel into the structure destined eventually to house a staff of 40,000.

Food, even now, is discussed in terms of tons, and beverages in the hundreds of gallons, but these imposing figures shrink in comparison with the consumption totals looked for when the peak comes in the next few weeks. And this huge operation, supervised by Army engineers, is only part of a staggering picture for more than 200,000 war workers now are being fed daily in the Washington area, with the Welfare and Recreational Association and some other groups also having a part in the program.

The Pentagon cafeteria, shaping up as the biggest thing of its kind in existence, is a three-unit affair at present, with one dining room set aside for construction workers employed in the vast building project, and two for the War Department workers. The first, occupying a building to itself, seats about 1,000. The other two, in the Pentagon Building, accommodate from 4,000 to 4,500, with space provided for 10 lines of tray carriers.

When the new setup is completed, one side of the five-sided building will be given over to the preparation and serving of food, with six main cafeterias distributed at the most advantageous points on four floors, and four smaller dining rooms for officers, messengers and cafeteria help. It will be possible then to feed 8,000 persons at one sitting, and a lunch hour running from 11 a.m. to 2 or 2:30 p.m. is expected to care for the entire force. The kitchen and serving counters run down through the middle and the dining rooms fan out to the side. The facilities are so arranged that it is possible to serve 10 men a minute from each of its four food lines. In this connection, Mr. McFarland comments that in cafeteria lines in the Pentagon Building where women are served, service is about half that fast. "The ladies enjoy shopping around, he explains." If any one tried to do that over here, there would be murder." With approximately 12,000 construction workers being fed with dispatch daily, Army officers, impressed with the job decided to adapt the setup to Pentagon Building needs when the office forces began to come in, and Mr. McFarland was asked to take over the management. He was given two weeks to start producing in this instance.

Seating and serving space did not present difficult problems, two large sections of the Pentagon being made available for this purpose. Serving kitchens and steam tables also were easy. Another problem wasn't.

At the outset, the cafeteria for the project workers was launched on a nonprofit basis, and the same scale of prices was carried over for the War Department force. Lunch is 30 to 35 cents.

Two Tons of Meat Per Day.

Daily consumption now runs to about two tons of meat, four of fresh vegetables, 18,000 half-pints of milk, 625 gallons of coffee and unspecified amounts of bread, ice cream and other items. The kitchen operates 18 hours a day, and both steam and electricity are used for cooking. Between 30 and 40 refrigerators are required for cold storage.

When the new set-up is ready, service kitchens will be connected with each of the cafeterias, but the main kitchen-a housewife's dream-will occupy an entire floor. One entire end will be devoted to refrigeration, with different kinds of receptacles provided for the various types of food. There will be batteries of ranges; ovens for bread and pastries, machinery for ice cream manufacture and storage, facilities for meat-cutting and grinding, mixers of several varieties. a laundry to care for all linens and uniforms worn by the help. The job of setting up this vast layout is not being taken lightly. By actual measurement, the kitchen will be 500 feet long and 170 wide.

In some instances-War, Navy, Justice and War Production for exampleround-the-clock service is maintained. and food is purchased three weeks in advance to make sure-or as sure as possible these days-that it will be available when wanted.

Here, too, naturally, food figures reach astronomical heights, with a day's consumption of principal items running something like this: 36,000 eggs; 2,400 pounds of butter; 16,000 to 18,000 pounds of meat; 10,000 pounds of fish, on Friday; 9,000 loaves of bread; 16,000 doughnuts; 1,500 gallons of ice cream, and a flood of milk, chocolate milk and buttermilk. Pies and cakes go in proportion.

While a man is at the head of the association-F. W. Hoover is the general manager-the cafeteria business is a distaff-side operation, with Miss Mabel Ashenfelter the supervisor, and Miss Eunice Burns, assistant supervisor. Upon the shoulders of the latter devolves the major task of preparing menus, and if Miss Burns ever discovered that she had programmed baked food in excess of oven capacity-to cite one of the possible hazards of feeding 125,000 people-she no doubt would die of mortification. An expert knowledge of markets also is a part of her job.

The association specializes in a 25-cent lunch that is uniform throughout the cafeteria chain, and the lunch menus are prepared for a month at a time, and sent to the cafeterias two weeks before they are to be used. The managers of the dining places then fill out the a la carte items in accordance with their own ideas. Oddly enough, there are no standardized recipes for any of the dishes served by the association, the preparation of foods that would lend themselves to this treatment being left up to the ingenuity of the managers. When "meatless" Wednesdays were inaugurated suddenly, there was some quick re-writing needed on the menus already prepared for that month. Eating Habits Seldom Changed.

Miss Burns, who has been ministering to the wants of Government workers for a long time, has noticed little change in tastes over the years, and she says that apple pie, chocolate cake and cocoanut custard pie still top all dishes in popularity.

Eating habits are pretty well standardized, too, for about 30,000 to 35,000 patrons usually take the regular lunch, while the rest of the 90,000 or so pick and choose over the entire range of the menu

Business is heaviest at the Navy Department, where from 10,000 to 12,000 meals are served daily.

The net income per tray, as profit is figured, for the Government-wide operation is three-tenths of a cent, according to the last annual report of the associa-

The Welfare Cafeterias-at least those serving the regular lunch-have their own kitchens, and there also is a central kitchen that helps out as needed. More than 3,700 employes are required to keep the wheels turning.

One of the interesting features in connection with the operation of the Welfare Association cafeteries is the training program for supervisors, and, as a matter of fact, for other types of personnel connected with the preparation of food. Members of the supervisory staff cus-

Problem of Shortages.

As if the job of feeding hungry thous sands wasn't already problem enough, the task has been complicated for all cafeterias by meat shortage and sugar rationing. The Welfare Association culinary artists have been experimenting with honey, glucose and maple syrup as substitutes for pie and cake making, but while these ersatz products do all right for pies, they leave something to be desired for cake making according to Miss Burns who avers that the "texture gets kind of waxy for cakes"-which is something for women to worry about. While the Welfare Association has the bulk of the cafeteria trade on this side of the Potomac, there are several independent operations of appreciable proportions, the Navy Yard, Government Printing Office, Bureau of Engraving and Department of Agriculture being among the units which look out for the feeding of their own forces. In each instance, this entails the preparation and serving of food for several thousand patrons.

In addition to the Government trade, the cafeterias as a rule also have heavy patronage from the outside, and in recent months, with congestion increasing, this has caused some difficulties, Government employes complaining that they were being unduly delayed in getting service because of the influx of outsiders. As a result, some places are closing their doors to non-employes at certain hours.

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies Prospect of District Legislation; More About National Representation

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Tomorrow is District day in the House of Representatives but no District legislation is expected. It was anticipated that the Randolph bill, to repeal a rider on an appropriation bill so as to permit the carrying on of day nurseries, would be ready for consideration by the House. Absence from the city of members of the District Committee has made it impossible to get committee action. The rider in question was aimed at an experimental day nursery, conducted several years ago, to care for children of pre-school age whose mothers are employed. There is an especial need at this time for such facilities.

The indications are that legislation will be passed shortly defining the institutions entitled to exemption from the real estate taxes in the District of Columbia. The Senate District Committee on Friday morning postponed until next week action on the revised bill which has just been completed. A hearing is announced by the Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs of the House District Committee on the House bill on the same subject.

Five important bills were approved on Friday by the Senate District Committee, on which early action is expected.

The Paddock Bill (H. R. 7339), to give the District the privilege of electing a voteless delegate to the House of Representatives, was on Wednesday referred by Chairman Hatton W. Summers of the House Judiciary Committee to a subcommittee consisting of Representative McLaughlin, Democrat, of Nebraska, chairman, and Representatives Satterfield, Democrat, of Virginia; Eliot, Demoerat, of Massachusetts; Springer, Republican, of Indiana, and Hancock, Republican, of New York. A hearing will be held within the next several weeks

The neighborhood eitizen groups are resuming meetings. So far interest has been centered chiefly in arousing the section to do its duty promptly in getting together the salvage material needed for the carrying on of the war. Some of the associations have registered opposition to the so-called walkathons and urged legislation for their suppression.

The Sixteenth Street Heights Association is putting up a strong fight against the proposed discontinuance of the Alaska avenue portion of the Sixteenth street bus line. In this opposition they are joined by the citizens of Silver Spring and adjacent territory.

The District Commissioners on Wednesday morning began the hearing of department heads and agencies in justification of their recently submitted estimates for the 1944 budget. These hearings are held in the office of District Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler. It is expected that citizen groups will submit requests for modification in some items as disclosed in the estimates released recently and published in the daily press.

Regarding D. C. National Representation Problem

In these days of the great war not a day goes by without adding emphasis to the unjust discrimination against the voteless and unrepresented people of the District of Columbia who cheerfully bear all of the burdens of national citizenship while deprived of the fundamental American rights of participation in the councils which send them to war and decide what burdens are to be borne. This is particularly true in connection with the soldiers' vote bill just passed by Congress.

Impassioned speeches were made by the national legislators in support of this bill to permit those in the armed forces to vote by mail in the approaching congressional elections. "If a young man is willing to lay down his life in Russia, Iceland, Africa, Australia, and other parts of the world," said a Representative, "he should have the franchise." But these absentees in the armed forces, for whom the solons are so solicitous, are from the 48 States and not from the District of Columbia.

Why the discrimination against the District young men who are showing the same willingness to lay down their lives for their country? They are the same kind of Americans as from the States. Their lives are as precious to themselves and their families and friends as if they hailed from a State. Their lives and their services to their country have the same value as any of the members of the armed forces. Can any legislator on American grounds justify continuing to deny voting participation by the people of the District in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President in the light of the foregoing situation, as outlined?

Sharp Reduction in Requests for Community Improvements Is Indicated

By GEORGE D. BEVERIDGE.

Delegates from practically all District citizens' associations will attend the Commissioners' public hearings on requests for the 1944 budget, to begin September 21 at the District Building, but a survey indicated there will be a sharp decrease over past years, due to wartime conditions, in demands for civic improvements.

Most association heads felt that only the most essential civic problems, principal of which dealt with added recreational facilities and school improvements, should be considered.

At a meeting held late this week, the Executive Board of the Federation of Citizens' Associations reiterated its request that the budget be skept within the "anticipated insaid in her letter.

Last Sunday in this column we were studying factors in the D. C. National Representation Problem and reference was made to the writings of A. B. Woodward back in the year 1801. Representation in the Senate for the people of the District was under discussion, and reference was made to what Woodward had to say on the subject.

This young lawyer had a thorough grasp of the entire subject of the relations between the residents of the Federal District and the National Government. His analyses and logic are so applicable to the problem of today that they seem current literature rather than of the dawn of the 19th century.

In his paper No. 2, published in Washington in 1801, Woodward said: "With regard to its (Territory of Columbia) connection with the Federal Government, two enquiries present themselves-first, whether it ought to be represented in the Legislature of the United States, and, if so, whether in one house only, or in both; and, second, whether it ought to have a part in the election of the President and Vice President of the United States.

"In order to come to a determination of these questions, it will be proper to ascertain, with precision, how far it ought to be contemplated as a State; and in what respects it differs from a State. It must be considered as somewhat analogous to a State, in being an association of men, for civil purposes, under a peculiar and singular authority.

"This Territory, however, differs from a State in this particular, that whereas the Federal Government is entitled, by the Constitution, to exercise over a State, only the authority particularly delegated to it, on certain subjects, and leaves the State in an undiminished possession of its sovereignty as to others, the Territory of Columbia is placed by the Constitution under the absolute and uncontrollable sovereignty of the United States, and possesses in itself none of the attributes of State sovereignty.

"In this situation, the people of the Territory of Columbia do not cease to be a part of the people of the United States; and as such they are still entitled to the enjoyment of the same rights with the rest of the people of the United States, and to have some participation in the administration of their general government.

"It is contrary to the genius of our Constitution, it is violating an original principle in republicanism, to deny that all who are governed by laws ought to participate in the formation of them.

"The people of this Territory therefore ought to be represented in the Legislature of the United States; and to have a voice in the election of a President and Vice President. But shall they be represented in the House of Representatives only; or in the Senate also?

"The Senate of the United States possesses a part of the legislative power, and it is certainly consonant to principle that those over whom that power is to operate should, if it can possibly be done, possess some voice in their transactions. Would it be proper then to place the Territory on an equal footing with a State, and give it two Senators; or ought a distinction be made?

"As a distinction exists in fact between the Territory and a State, it appears proper to recognize this distinction in giving it a representation in the Senate. As it cannot, if a distinction is made, be on an equality with a State, and possess two votes; and as it cannot be represented at all with less than one vote: it would appear advisable to allow it one vote, and to assign it one Senator.

"The Territory will then stand in the situation as it were of half a State, and when it is considered that its population may be one day equal to some of the smaller States, for instance, Delaware, it would by no means appear inequitable to give it half the weight of such a State. (1940 Census-D. C. population exceeds that of each of 12 States and of the combined population of three States.)

"At present the population of the former seat of government is little different from the population of the State of Delaware; and if the permanent seat of government had been fixed there, and an equal extent of territory taken from one or two of the States in the Union, the people thus losing their representation in the Senate as a part of the State, it would be highly unjust that sixty or seventy thousand people in one place should have two votes in the Senate, and that sixty or seventy thousand in another should be deprived of any.

"With respect to its representation in the other house, there can exist but one opinion. It ought to be entitled to a representation in proportion to its population. While it continues, however, not to contain a population sufficient to entitle it to one member, a doubt may exist. In this interval it would be highly proper to place it on the footing of the Territories northwest and south of the River Ohio; by giving it one member who shall be entitled to deliberate, and receive pay, but not to vote."

Woodward's suggestion of a voteless delegate is now particularly pertinent. It should, however, be analyzed carefully rather than to jump at the conclusion that it could be construed as an dorsement of the pending bill for a voteless delegate. Woodward's

With a smaller per capita national income and industrial equipment, the Dominion's war effort has in many respects been put on a more intensified basis than in the United States.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 .- Buying of specialties helped prop today's stock market although leaders generally finished a rather disappointing week without getting anywhere in particular.

Aside from a few broad jumping favorites price changes were small at the opening and closing trends were indecisive. Dealings were relatively slow throughout.

In addition to a religious holiday which limited boardroom attendance, buyers had little to go on in the way of news inspiration and many maintained a neutral attitude pending more definite foreign and domestic developments.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 36.6 but on the week was off 0.3 of a point. Transfers of 116,450 shares compared with 145,270 a week ago.

Homer Smacked By Kurowski in 2d Is Decisive

All Scoring in Same Round; Lanier Bests Macon on Mound

By JUDSON BAILEY, Associated Press Sports Writer.

BROOKLYN, Sept. 12 .- The St Louis Cardinals stormed to another victory over the bewildered Brooklyn Dodgers today, 2 to 1, and moved into an exact tie for the National League lead, ending a reign of 144 consecutive days during which the Dodgers had held uncontested control of first place.

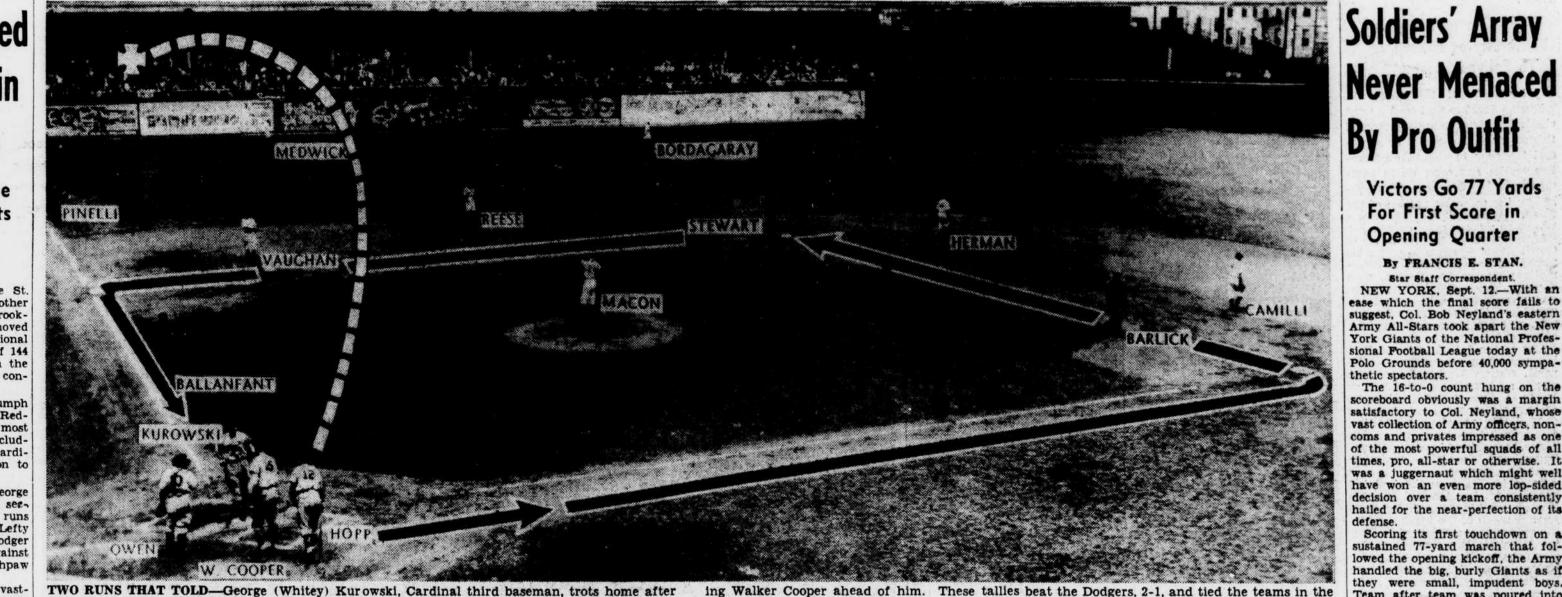

It was the twenty-ninth triumph in 34 games for the rampaging Redbirds and seemed to convince most of the crowd of 27,511 fans, including 1.573 servicemen, that the Cardinals were capable of going on to the pennant from here.

A home run by Rookie George Kurowski with one on in the seeond inning provided all the runs St. Louis needed to win as Lefty Max Lanier, the persistent Dodger jinx, pitched five-hit ball against his one-time roommate, Southpaw Max Macon

The ball game, however, was vastly different from yesterday because all of the Dodgers except Manager Leo Durocher and Coach Chuck Dressen were in the thick of the battle till the end, keeping the outcome uncertain and the home fans hopeful.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 .- With an ease which the final score fails to suggest, Col. Bob Neyland's eastern Army All-Stars took apart the New York Giants of the National Professional Football League today at the Polo Grounds before 40,000 sympathetic spectators.

The 16-to-0 count hung on the scoreboard obviously was a margin satisfactory to Col. Neyland, whose vast collection of Army officers, noncoms and privates impressed as one of the most powerful squads of all times, pro, all-star or otherwise. It was a juggernaut which might well have won an even more lop-sided decision over a team consistently hailed for the near-perfection of its defense

Scoring its first touchdown on a sustained 77-yard march that folowed the opening kickoff, the Army handled the big, burly Giants as if they were small, impudent boys. Team after team was poured into the fray by Col. Neyland and if this Army outfit similarly defeats the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Chicago Bears next Wednesday in Baltimore and next Sunday in Boston it may be the first to win the mythical championship of the world during an 8-day period.

Giants Got Off Lightly.

It was only the second defeat by the Giants in seven annual All-Star games, but in today's battle, which jointly benefitted the Army Emergency Relief and the Children's Fresh Air Fund, the eastern pro champions were up against no mere aggregation of hand-picked college stars. The Giants were lucky to have been let off so lightly because gled into right center and after he had been forced by Mickey Owen, Pee Wee Reese fired a screeching double over Left Fielder Coaker Triplett's head to bring the little catcher racing home without a throw even being made for him.

Dodgers Squawk in Seventh.

Lanier put a prompt stop to this by making Arky Vaughan raise a pop foul. The chunky Cardinal southpaw walked two men after two were out in the fourth, but this time Reese could raise only a short fly to right. Frenchy Bordagaray singled with two out in the fifth and died on base.

In the seventh, Second Baseman Jimmy Brown made a remarkable stop of a grounder behind first base and threw to Lanier to get Leadoff Man Owen out on a close play. The decision stood, of course, in spite of Brooklyn protests that Lanier had not touched the bag. Then with two out Vaughan walked and Brown dropped a throw from Shortstop Martin Marion on a force play at second. This momentarily nettled Lanier, who served a wild pitch, but Catcher Walker Cooper retrieved the ball in time to throw to the pitcher and catch Vaughan trying to score all the way from second

In the eighth, Lanier walked Billy Herman and with two out Joe Medwick singled for the 2,000th hit of his career, but Camilli became an easy out and Lanier set down the Dodgers in order in the ninth.

Kurowski Hits Into Stands.

That single by Medwick, on a bad pitch which he had to step out of the batter's box to reach, was the only consolation any of the Dodgers salvaged out of the defeat. He asked for and was given the ball as a souvenir, but most of his teammates mementoes

The Cardinals almost knocked Macon out of the box in the second banged a single to center and the blond, stocky Kurowski marched to the plate with determination. He fouled a sizzling liner into the left field stands. He dropped another foul not more than two feet outside the line in right field and he tipped a foul over the roof behind the plate. Finally with the count 2 and 2 he smashed a liner into the left field stands 360 feet from the plate for his ninth homer of the year.

Afterward Johnny Hopp hit single to center. Marion flied to right and Lanier beat out an infield single for the first of his two hits, but he was forced by Brown.

Davis Finishes for Brooks.

With two out in the third, Triplett doubled and Cooper was purposely passed before Kurowski hit into a forced play at second. In fact the Redbirds put runners on base in every inning except the first

It is no reflection on the Giants, 1941 Eastern champions of the Rams open their National Profes-National League, to suggest they weren't in the class with Col. Neyland's three hits. Cooper never gave the awesome squad of stalwart young officers, non-coms and privates. Not Dodgers a smell. Today Lanier let many teams ever have a fullback like Corpl. Norman Standlee of the them be tempted and then slapped Coast Artillery. The Army's got him, and four other fullbacks almost as good. They have five tailbacks and two are Capt. There's something about a team like the Army's that sort of gets you. It got Maj. Gen. Alexander Surles, for instance, because after the With one out Dolph Camilli sin- game the old West Point grid star went into the dressing room and, as more than 50 of the finest men in uniform stood at attention, the general said in effect:

"That's the Army way, boys. Let's get the Dodgers and the Bears and then we'll go out and win this-war."

Pvt. Tarzan White Finally Gets His Chance

Just lounging around its hotel, this Eastern Army team can raise your morale. They're big, clean-cut heavyweights who move with the strides of real athletes. Somehow they wear their uniforms better than the average officers and men

As long as they're a football unit they behave as such. Capt. They're momentarily members of a road show, but it's a show that must do more than entertain and raise funds for the Army Emergency Relief. Every show must be a victory. You can feel their fierce pride in their uniforms.

The drive of this big team is hard to believe. Defensively the Army men outclassed the Giants, who for years have been rated consistently as the best defensive team in professional football. They have to speed and power, and the way they handle that ball they might be a 16-10, in Denver. team of vaudeville jugglers. Not until the final few seconds today did a guard named Pvt. White get a chance to enter the game. He scampered in like a senior college scrub, finally getting his name in a varsity summary. Maybe you remember him-Tarzan White? Used to be first-string guard for the Giants.

This could be so. But until you've seen this Eastern

Army gang you can't count them out, even though their career will be only eight days long. And they'll be harder to forget.

The way they outrushed and opened big holes in the Giants' line and secondary was something special. Fellows like 248-pound Al Blozis and Bill Edwards aren't babies, but the Army charged too hard and was too fresh for them. Ask Tuffy Leemans some time how he felt when he faded back to pass. Nearly every time Tuffy looked up he was staring into the indicated they would remember this faces of three or four big, blue-clad linemen. inning with one out, Catcher Cooper Three Years From Game Didn't Rust Pingel

Some idea as to how earnest this Army squad was about getting in shape was given in the performance of Capt. Pingel of the infantry. It was three years since Pingel had touched a football. That's time enough to get very rusty, even for an all-America.

But Pingel wasn't rusty today. He must have worked awfully hard during the five weeks of training at Yale for not even Standlee shaded him against the Giants.

The fellow showed New York's pros the best passing they've seen since Sammy Baugh's. He showed them some running that Leemans, on his best day, would find hard to match.

He showed 40,000 spectators, but not the Giants, something in the way of sleight-of-hand in the final quarter, too. An Army drive was stalling deep in Giant territory. Pingel, from the tailback, took the pass from center, whirled and ducked as if to hit the line. But the ball wasn't in his hand. He gave it one of those behind-the-back flips, like Joe Gordon makes on a tough double play, and Jackie Wilson was all by himself to make on easy first down on the 14.

It takes a real good player to try something like it in a spot like that. You can look awfully foolish if it doesn't work.

War-Minded District College Football Coaches Go in for Attack in Big Way

Colonials' New Coach Probable Pitchers Junks Dull Style of Last Campaign

T System at Maryland, Diversity at Hilltop To Enliven Sport

By BURTON HAWKINS. Due no doubt to that second front chatter, District collegiate football this season will be spiced by a general tendency to discard conservative tactics and open up in spectacular style. Coaches aren't neglecting the defensive portion of the game, understand, but the accent will be on more colorful capers. Maryland, with the importation of

Coach Clark Shaughnessy and his famed intricate tricks off a T formation; George Washington, with a young coach willing to gamble, and Georgetown, with one of the most diversified attacks in the Nation, will provide some interesting afternoons

One of the dullest teams in East last year from a spectator standpoint, George Washington will be given a transfusion by Johnny Baker, a former .Texas scholastic coach who moved on to play at G. Yanks Are in Position To Clinch Their 13th Pennant Today

Victory Over White Sox, 7-1, Leaves Them on Championship Verge

By the Associated Press. CHICAGO, Sept. 12. - Spud Chandler celebrated his 33d birthday anniversary today by pitching the New York Yankees to a 7-1 triumph over the Chicago White Sox, a victory which left the world champions in a position to clinch their 13th American League pennant tomorrow The second place Boston Red Sox also won at Cleveland to remain nine games behind the Yankees, but they have only 11 games left to play and the New Yorkers have only 12.

Thus any combination of three Yankee victories and Boston deeats would put the defending champions into the World Series for the sixth time in seven years. If the Yanks take two from the Indians tomorrow, the Red Sox must win both games from the White Sox to remain in the race.

Yanks Barely Miss Shutout.

In registering his 16th victory against only four defeats, Chandler scattered eight hits, one more than the Yanks collected off Lefty Jake Wade and two relievers. He was only one putout away from a shutout when Myril Hoag's ninth inning single drove in Wally Moses with the

Redskins, Heavy Favorites in Battle With Bears Today, Braced for Surprise

Fans to Flood Park For First View of Touted Tribe

Invaders Behind Hosts In Training, but Are Rated Dangerous

By LEWIS F. ATCHISON. Pro football, a welcome opiate for war-weary minds, comes back to the bustling Nation's Capital today with a star-spangled extravaganza that well may be a preview of the 1942 National League championship playoff, the Redskins vs. the Chicago Bears. A throng of 35,000, all Griffith Stadium can hold in its autumnal, steel-girdled gear, is expected to see the triumphant Tribe in its home debut. Victorious over the Western Army All-Stars and Green Bay Packers in previous exhibitions, the 'Skins are weighty favorites to remain in the realm of the unbeaten. It matters little to the fans that today's game will have no bearing on the title race, although nothing would be more welcome than an official decision over the Halas herd. But a Washington victory would suffice to send them home happy and also help restore a measure of local prestige lost in the last two engagements with the league champions.

Ray Flaherty's men have their eves on the playoff, but of greater import at the moment is this exhibition game. Flaherty himself is apprehensive of the Bears' strength. In an atmosphere dense with tales of Chicago's unpreparedness, admissions of impending defeat from the rival camp and the 'Skins Its Aerial Circus mounting popularity he has maintained an attitude of careful watchfulness. He is taking nothing for granted, least of all the Bears.

Team One of 'Skins' Best.

But this Redskin eleven shapes up as one of the best in the club's history, one that compares favorably with the championship squad of five years ago and in some quarters is considered even better. It is a potent package of pigskin packers. Sammy Baugh has lost none of the lade of the game's greatest passer. Moore is back in shape, Bob Seythe Hare brothers and Ed Justice.

Dick Todd, important in the Tribe's A free-scoring game is predicted offense, is the only ailing back on with the famed Packer scoring comthe squad, but he is expected to be bination of Cecil Isbell and Don dy for duty this afternoon. All are National League teams. The addition of several promising rookies, Dick Poillon, Johnny Goodyear and more recently Steve Juzwik, is some insurance against the disaster that overtook the Tribe last season when Farkas and Todd-and later Moore-were out. Poillon is a triple-threater who comes up to the big show with all the poise and some of the ability of a veteran. He has a good throwing arm, kicks a high punt and can carry the mail. He has a style similar to that of Tuffy Leemans although Flaherty believes he's faster than the Giant Juzwik is a stubby little carrier, quick as a thought and as elusive as a mouse in a haystack in the open field. He packs 190 pounds on his stocky frame and when he hits he doesn't bounce; something has to give.

Goodyear has yet to find himself, although the coach likes his speed and burlesque hip action and believes he'll develop into a fine running back.

Deal a Line Murderer.

The Tribe has an ace in the hole in Rufe Deal, a rip-sorting, hit-'emagain line plunger from the sunny South. Deal created a big ripple in the Southern football pond while at Auburn a couple of years ago, but dropped out of the picture last year, temporarily giving up football. It has taken him longer than the rest to round into condition, but he's tough as nails, runs hard and is beginning to show good punting form and it would not be surprising to see him develop into one of the club's brighest stars. The Redskins, line is massive and mighty. If there is any weakness it is at the flanks where Ed Cifers and Vic Carroll have been injured Vic Baratte, Organizer and their absence merely has detracted from the reserve strength. Of Softball, Joins Army Bob McChesney and Bob Masterson have handled the ends as though they invented the positions, leaving nothing to be desired from either defensive or offensive viewpoint With Carroll and Cifers ready to go. and the former will see service today, and Bob Titchenal, Al Krueger and Johnny Kovatch available, Flaherty will be able to make substitutions with no ill effects. But all the stars will not be on the Redskins' side of the field today. for the Bears, for all their losses, still are bad medicine for anybody. still the team that figures to meet the Eastern representative for the league championship.

They have Sid Luckman to pull the throttle on their powerful formation. Ray Nolting to help heave the passes and a blond, bow-legged newcomer by the name of Charley O'Rourke who can whip the apple around. O'Rourke will be remembered as the guy who snapped Georgetown's unbeaten record of three years in a thrill-doused game at Boston a couple of seasons ago. NEW YORK, Sept. 12 .- Two soldiers who on October 12 will try to slug each other into unconsciousness met today for the first time since they were matched to fight for the heavyweight championship for the benefit of the Army Emergency Relief Fund, and they behaved like long-parted buddies.

Sergt. Joe Louis, wearing corpo-? ral's stripes as "Ah didn't have time to sew on the new ones," arrived this morning from Fort Riley. They attended the Army All-Star-New York Giant charity football game this afternoon and will leave tomorrow night or Monday morning for their respective training camps. Louis, munching a huge apple which his secretary, Freddy Guinyard, had brought to the train, looked fit as a fiddle, although a little on the heavy side. He reckoned he weighed about 215, but agreed when pressed it probably was closer to 220. And, he said, he's only been eating two meals a day. He had little to say about the

Blue Swords Grabs Eastern Shore, 'Graw Inaugural Feature

Favorite Staves Off Bid by Ringmenow, Wins by Length

Only 7,000 Attend Start Of Meet; Abrasion Nips Colchis in Annapolis

By the Associated Press.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., Sept. 12 .- Taking the lead midway down the stretch and moving away easily. A. T. Simmons' Blue Swords scampered to a length victory in the Eastern Shore Handicap today to pick up a purse of $10,800.

A crowd of 7,000 which overcame gasoline rationing obstacles to attend the opening-day card at Havre de Grace saw the son of Blue Larkspur-Flaming Swords, with Jockey Johnny Longden up, stave off a strong bid by Lt. Col. Gustave Ring's Ringmenow and William Woodward's Tip-Toe, which finished second and third, respectively.

The camera was required to separate the place and show horses. Mrs. Ella K. Bryson's Mercury was fourth Blue Swords covered the 6 furlongs in 1:12 and returned $6.50, $4.90 and $3.30 across the board. Track officials estimated the crowd at between 40 and 50 per cent off last year's opening-day attendance, but said that many of the track's customary patrons probably were lured to Camden by the closing day at Garden State. Isolated Havre de Grace ordinarily draws from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington.

Blue Swords, breaking from near the outside in the big field, was well Billies and then Tip-Toe were setting the pace.

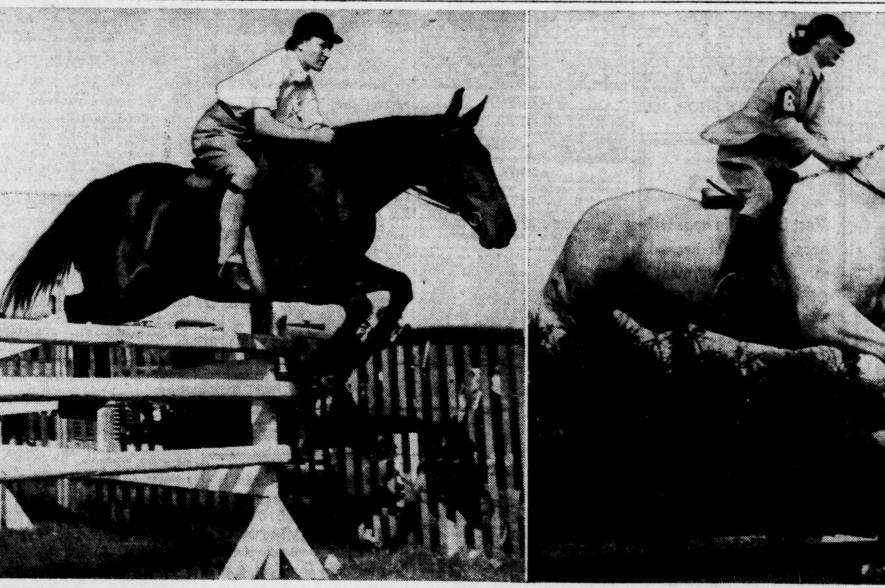

Coming around the turn into the Baksi-Parks Fight stretch, C. C. Van Meter's Ogma and Ringmenow moved up, but midway through the straightaway Blue Swords came on fast to take the Winner Tuesday lead and go on to a one-length victory.

The crowd had backed Blue Swords, a winner in fast time at Aqueduct little more than a week ago, into favoritism at the mutuels. Ringmenow returned $10.50 to place and $7.60 to show, and Tip-Toe, a field horse, paid $4.30 for $2. The secondary feature, the $2.-500 Annapolis Handicap, went to J. W. Y. # Women Prominent in Aircraft Warning Service Efficiently Assist the Army in Policing the Sky

By Margaret Hart,

Bociety Editor. Watching America's skies is another important phase of women's participation in the war effort. Many leading women residents of nearby areas of the Nation's Capital keep daily watch in observation posts set up by the ground observer system of the United States Army Aircraft Warning Service. Their duty is to report to the Army all aircraft which approach or leave the city. Before Pearl Harbor many of these women devoted most of their time to their social programs or perhaps to their favorite civic organization. Now not the most enticing invitation or most lively debate is permitted to interfere with their assignments in the observation posts. Their's is not a glamorous job, they have no snappy uniforms and they do not enjoy pleasant conversation as they man their posts. They are silent watchers and during their four-hour shifts they are on the alert. They do Harris. not take along their favorite novel for the lonely vigil. Their eyes are trained on the skies. their ears on the hum of airplane motors and their thoughts an approaching plane. These volunteer airplane spotters not only play outstanding roles in the policing of the skies, but, in addition, they are responsible for the release for military service or for war production jobs men who might otherwise be needed to take over the home front. -

To call the roll of all the women nearby engaged in the aircraft sighting would be too numerous, but pioneers in the field are Mrs. Francis Goodell. Mrs. Jerome R. Davis, Mrs. Paul Best, Mrs. William M. Vaca, Mrs. Robert Ash and Miss Elizabeth

At what posts are the women stationed? Well, that's just one of the things about the aircraft warning service that isn't published. But if you are out in the country sometime and you should see a white tower with a woman standing watching the sky, you can be pretty sure you are looking at one of the aircraft warning stations. And, by the way, if you think the job of the woman aircraft watcher is drab and uninteresting you ought to talk to a woman (Continued on Page D-5, Column 4.)

Mrs. Robert Ash, one of the leaders in the Volunteer Corps of the Army Aircraft Warning Service, scans the skies from an observation tower for airplanes. The popular young matron lets nothing interfere with her work in checking aircraft that approach or leave the Capital area.

Dinner at White House October 22 Will Honor the Chilean Executive

Reception at Embassy to President Rios Will Follow Dinner Party October 26

By Katharine Brooks. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at dinner Thursday evening, October 22, in honor of the President of Chile. Senor Juan Antonio Rios, who will arrive in the late afternoon of that day. The Chief Executive of the South American republic will be the guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt overnight and the next day will join the other members of his party at Blair House for a week's stay. New Chinese Envoy And Mrs. Wei Move To New Home Here

The newly appointed Chinese Ambassador, Mr. Tao Ming Wei and Mrs. Wei have taken the house at 2718 Thirty - second street where they moved from their house on Ingomar street. Shortly after they became tenants of the Thirty-second street house they went to New York where they expect to be for a fortnight, or perhaps until after the departure of the retiring Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih. Mr. and Mrs. Wei came to Washington on their way to France where the former had been appointed Ambassador. Being unable to assume his duties in Paris, Mr. and Mrs. Wei stayed on here and a short time ago he was appointed to succeed Dr. Hu.

The retiring Ambassador will return this evening from Nashville where he went to address the Chinese Students Association of the South. He made that address last evening and went to Nashville in time to address the Chamber of Commerce the evening before. Dr. Hu will be greatly missed in Washington for his charming personality and delightful wit, and his friends are not limited to the Capital for he has made scores of them for himself as well as for his country in Chilean Embassy, the Ambassador and Senora de Michels acting as hosts, the fetes will be informal and for a small number of guests.

The Ambassador and Senora de Michels will give their party Monday evening, October 26, the dinner to be followed by a reception. This latter festivity also will be limited in the number of guests and probably only officials and diplomats will be included. President Rios, himself, will be host at dinner and a late afternoon party, entertaining in Blair House, before he leaves the Capital.

The Chilean Executive's party has not been completed but among those who will be his aides will be Capt. Don Immanuel Holger, Wing Comdr. Teodore Ruiz-Diez and Lt. Col. Guillermo Lopez-Larrain, Naval, Air and Military Attaches of the Embassy here who will be assigned to travel with their commander in chief while he is in the United States.

The Chilean Ambassador to Bolivia, Senor Benjamin Cohen, who was attached to the Embassy in Washington for some years, has returned to Santiago from his post at La Paz, to assist in the completion of the plans for the President's tour. It is expected that the Ambassador, Senor Cohen, will be a member of the party. President Rios and those who will accompany him will pay visits in Lima, Peru, Quito, Ecuador, and Havana, Cuba, and in each capital he will be extensively entertained by officials of the republic.

Ambassador Cohen has a wide circle of friends at this Capital who will welcome him back, even for so short a time as he will be able to remain, and without doubt he will take time for a few small and personal parties in his honor.

The Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Rodolfo Michels, will

Mrs. Francis Goodell has served as an aircraft observer since the day after Pearl Harbor. She has had many interesting experiences in her work, which is of such vital importance to the Army in the work of policing the skies.

Chrysanthemum Show to Benefit Worthy Cause

The beautiful chrysanthemums at Dumbarton Oaks will be on view the afternoon of October 15 from 2 until 7 o'clock for the benefit of a very worthy cause. For on this day funds will be raised in the garden for the Scottish Clan's evacuation plan to assure the continued support of 100 Scottish children in evacuation quarters of the Scottish highlands. Many interesting features are being planned for the benefit. There will be highland dancers and bagpipe music and articles from the clan's shop in New York will be arranged on tables about the attractive lawn of Dumbarton Oaks. The nominal admission fee will be 50 cents and there are plans for having special highland delicacies on sale.

Mrs. Robert Lister MacNeil is most enthusiastic over the marked interest being shown in this flower show that will aid little children.

Short Frocks for Long Evenings Gain Favor

Tentatively Offered Last Year, They Have Become 'Tops' in Well-Dressed Circles

By Helen Vogt

Way last year, the fashion press timidly put forth an ideaand almost immediately withdrew it. The idea was about a, short dinner dress, a glamorous frock with all the after-dark sparkle of a long version, but without its flowing skirt and decollette bodice. You see, the fashion press had been getting reports from England in those pre-Pearl Harbor days, reports which declared that in wartime the formality and fuss of a long gown had disappeared from London gatherings.

Said the F. P., "Why not interest American women in a practical and pretty fashion of this type? Why not talk about street-length dinner gowns and see what happens?" So, they did-and they found out. Business women screamed in horror. co-eds threatened revolution and even the stronger sex raised heavy eyebrows. The fear uppermost in their minds was that women were destined to return to the hideous short evening dresses of the late 20's. They could just imagine a return of pastel evening gowns with low waistlines and short pleated skirts. They remembered, most of them, the horrors that were

Skin Changes Color When Hair Grays

By Patricia Lindsay When hair has lost its coloring pigment you may be assured that the skin has also faded and changed in texture so that new treatment aids and make-up are in order.

One of the oldest, most conservative of American cosmetic firms has long catered to women with gray or white hair with great success. They, through research, understand what the changed skin requires to keep young and soft, and which makeup colors are the most flattering.

They suggest this face and neck treatment: A rich cleansing cream to keep skin supple and free of grime, a night cream for around the eyes and on throat where networks of tiny lines first appear and a skin lotion to worn when "The Charleston" was wearing evening clothes, so was number one on the hit parade. And frankly, they were having none of it. Then, of course, came Pearl Harbor, and fashion, like everything else in this country at war, underwent a great change. For one thing, the manufacturers of evening gowns began looking around for skyscraper windows out of which to plunge. Nobody naturally nobody was buying new ones. Ominous statistics said that the sale of evening dresses had fallen off some 75 or 80 per cent since December 7 and fashion experts wailed that feminity was on its way out. But they hadn't bargained for one thing: The women themselves. After the first shock and the first period of becoming acclimated to a new way of life, women began to think once more about looking their prettiest in the evening. Uniforms and work clothes are very fine for the serious business of the day, they reasoned, but after work is through, what woman can relax in a pair of overalls? And that, kiddies, is the reason that the short evening dress has returned to the fashion scene in a very big way. Women just have no time for flowing gowns that require elaborate coiffures and the like. Men in uniform declare that they feel conspicuous when their dates are too "fussied up"-and anyway, in a wartime city such as Washington, there are very few public places in which an evening gown is even worn, much less required.

So, the local lovelies began casting around for a dinner gown that would look like a dinner gown yet be in step with the times. No frilly, pastel frock that looked like a long dress cut off at the knees-but a smartly styled, thoroughly new version that would be a happy addition to any wardrobe. It didn't take them long to find it. Summer arrived and in came black sheers, lace trimmed and sophisticated. The sheers ran riot, we saw them everywhere and in all versions, usually aided and abetted by a black rayon jersey here and there. Toward the end of summer, the first fall-like styles came in, some of them in sheer crepe and others in sleek satin. and the short dinner dress became more firmly established. Now that the fall and winter clothes are being shown, there seems to be little doubt that this mode will be the big news of fall. The dinner suit is one of the variations, with slim skirt and little jacket, often accented with a frothy jabot or blouse. The sequin-trimmed crepe, the delightfully feminine "rustly" materials and a flock of others, including velvet and velveteen are making up these fashions. There is no one style that can be set down as "the" short dinner dress for fall and winter 1942. However, chances are that it will be black, that it will have "glitter" in some form and that its silhouette will be slim, draped and infinitely becoming. And it's definite that a "short evening dress" doesn't mean the return of the "hacked-off formal." This year's version is as new as tomorrow.

in the afternoon and go straight through a gala evening. Here's a perfect example of the slim-lined type in black violene crepe of celanese rayon fabric, the marquisette yoke spangled with jet beads. Add "fussy" accessories and the outfit becomes a perfect choice for dancing and dining in wartime Washington.

Fashion's darling, the short dinner dress, is likely to be simple enough to start out tone the muscles after massage and cleansing. The milder lotion for sensitive or dry skin and a more potent astringent lotion for skin which shows rapid aging. The best make-up foundation, they believe, is a face cream which conceals minor imperfections and which decidedly "lightens" the skin tone. It also keeps the face slightly dewy and fresh looking.

Five aids-to be used daily for the best results. For those whose budgets are limited it is suggested that the treatment be given without the skin lotion (chilled water as substitute), and the cleansing cream (soap and water substituted). The three others are considered vital to skin beauty.

For skin which has lost some pigmentation, harsh make-up colors are taboo. Soft shades, which blend as natural blushes into the skin are the more flattering and less obvious. With them one can greatly enhance cheek and lip coloring, and the general skin tone.

There is a soft shade which is highly favored and this comes in liquid rouge, compact rouge and lipstick. There is a powder, especially blended to complement that shade. These used cleverly, which requires a little patience and time, do much to create that well-groomed, youthful appearance which every woman yearns to radiate.

Charles Cooper designed this exquisitely simple dress in black rayon crepe with a braided belt in three shades of satin. One shade, the pink, is "picked up" in a velveteen pillbox and matching elbow-length gloves, to complete an ensemble that is fashion-right and perfect for afternoon and evening wear. This is the type of basic dress that every woman will want in her wardrobe this season.

It isn't asking too much to have children taught to play more quietly in the early morning. It isn't unreasonable to expect car drivers and passengers to be punctual enough so that there is no need to blow horns. It shouldn't be impossible for music lovers to refrain from practicing or playing the radio loudly before breakfast. And what a difference it would make to the poor worker, trying to get some sleep!

Washington Wears—

This business of wandering around town in search of fashion news is fast turning into a fulltime job. Nevertheless, this doesn't mean that there aren't plenty of chic and "different" clothes being worn around Washington. Listen! Mrs. George Sloane, come to town for a recent wedding, set off her slim figure beautifully in a sleekly tailored gown of "horizon blue" crepe, topped with one of the new high-crowned hats with a flaring brim; the hat was of felt, in a luscious shade of fuchsia. Slung over Kay's arm was a soft cape of marten . . . Mrs. Alexander Cochrane Forbes, daughter of Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, has a fascinating "alibi" for a hat. Beyond this there is both "before and after" care which the eagle eye of a good housekeeper and book lover will recognize as important.

First of all when placing your books on the shelves be sure that they are set toward the front, flush with the edge of the shelf. This should leave a good three inches of space in back of the books where the air may circulate. They should be set up straight, not leaning or without support as this puts too much strain on the binding, but they should not be wedged tightly together. If they are, bindings will stick, air will not circulate and the effort to dislodge them will undoubtedly tear the top of the back binding. When books are removed for dusting and shelf cleaning be very sure that the shelves are thoroughly dry before shoulder. 'The bridesmaids' frocks at the Darlington-Pitney wedding were unusually attractive. Made of heavy moire, in a shade between peach and champagne, they had dropped shoulder necklines, edged by a deep ruffle, tight tiny waists, buttoned in back with self-covered buttons, definite bustles and long trains. The little hats of cocoa-colored velvet were hardly more than "a bow on a band," but were most becoming to all the girls, and the great sprays of flowers in shades of bronze, blue and yellow were most effective.

In town for the day was blond Frances Hawkes, wearing a smart green crepe dress and a pair of the new rayon stockings, really sheer and a lovely shade. These were among the first inspected at close range, and they seem to indicate that the stocking situation may reach a happy solution after all! . . . We became even more convinced of that fact after we spied well-groomed Gertrude Allen Dinsmore paying a visit to Washington last week. She, too, wore rayon stockings and was singing their praises like mad. The rest of her costume also rated attention. A black dress with a bright red dickey was set off with a tiny peaked skull cap of red and black feathers and a perky bird smack on top. . . . Black also was chosen by Eva Kiely the other afternoon. Her frock was one of the new front-draped models, very new looking and immensely becoming.

A small air dryer placed in a closed room during the summer will dry the air sufficiently so that mold will not develop. These may be purchased in most stores and are small, neat and compact. They may be placed out of sight, and will work silently removing the dangerous amount of moisture in the air. An electric fan used for an hour or two each day will keep the air circulating, and an ordinary light bulb, lighted for an hour or two and moved from shelf to shelf will warm and dry the air considerably. Quickest way of all is to close the room and turn on the heat from the furnace or fire-

Full leather or half leather bindings may be treated with a special preparation which will keep them in excellent condition. Made of various oils it feeds the surface, keeping it soft and pliable. Books that have been neglected for some time may need two or three applications before the leather begins to glow with renewed life.

Most of the large libraries use a restorative for paper bindings which protects them from hard wear and also keeps the cover fresh and new looking. Though this is seldom necessary for home use it does act as a freshener for bindings which look dull and grimy because of neglect and mold.

Watch for the mean little "book lice" or "silver fish" which usually appear after a damp summer. They feed on the starch in glue and the glucose in the finish of paper stock. Pyrethrum powder dusted on the backs of shelves will help get rid of these little pests and a spray that penetrates the cracks back of the bookcase will destroy the eggs before the new crops gets a

Mrs. Whitehurst Writes Handbook for Clubwomen

General Federation Head Offers Text On Programs and Procedures

By Frances Lide, Women's Club Editor.

Club leaders looking for a handy text on the mechanics and responsibilities of organization work will welcome the publication of a handbook entitled "Twentieth Century Club Woman" just completed by Mrs. Sara A. Whitehurst, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Whitehurst is making the volume available to federation members by including it in the list of program publications going out from national headquarters.

Based on her personal experiences and observations over a 20-year period, it is designed to streamline and modernize the methods and purposes of the many varying groups seeking a common end.

"Although all organized women have been working on many of the same projects," the author comments in her foreword "the absence of continuity of purpose, the misunderstanding about program building, and the great amount of effort expended on amateurish and outmoded procedures have retarded the work."

Book Tells How to Form And Operate Clubs.

Many organizations continue to use methods that were in vogue many years ago, she declared.

Pointing out that the federation Itself has been in existence for 51 Fall Meeting years and now has a membership of over 2,000,000 women, Mrs. Whitehurst adds:

"It should be obvious to all that an organization with such a membership has great potential power, if the energies of its members are directed as a unit and in a modern business like way."

Starting off with the topic, "Why ize clubs, the duties of various offitects as programs, public speaking, Club, 1701 K street N.W. forums and conventions, to name a few.

of organized work in her last two and to members of the Washington chapters, however, Mrs. Whitehurst Club. makes a bid for more active participation by women in the field of politics and public affairs.

In a section headed "Politics and telephone at her home at 3426 Six-Clubwomen" she strongly urges that every club in the country develop a political science department. "Above all," she suggests, "we should see to it that all women in this ident of the club, will report on country register and vote."

WARNER'S ALPHABET* BRAS

"Many believe that there are no more frontiers to cross, but we haven't even touched upon that most important frontier for women-public affairs."

Despite development of departments of public welfare, legislation and international relations, she declared, the majority of women haven't been interested in governmental affairs.

"For some unknown reason," she writes. "our women have not associated legislation with the home. community, State and Naschool.

In legislative efforts, she warns "passing resolutions is not enough." Especially does Mrs. Whitehurst believe that women should serve on all important boards with men. "Not pressed when decisions are made Meeting Tuesday relative to public questions and public institutions." she says, "can we hope to improve conditions." Most of the handbook, however, is devoted to the details of organization work.

In the section on the duties of a corresponding secretary, for instance, she takes up such matters as the forms in which business letters and formal invitations should be handled. Included is a table of the proper form of address for such personages as ambassadors, bishops and lawyers.

During the past eight years when she has been either a national chairman or a national officer in the General Federation, Mrs. Whitehurst has traveled extensively and has had occasion to note how inept some groups are in caring for outof-town visitors.

Planned Handbook As Guide During Meetings.

Under a chapter on "Social Responsibilities" she suggests that the visitor be given a formal program of the event which has caused her presence. In addition, she says, a guest might be handed a slip of naper outlining her personal obligations and definite information on what hours she may expect to be free

Mrs. Whitehurst had intended to include a history of the woman's club movement, but has omitted this section in the interest of keeping the volume small. The need now, she believes, is for a handbook that a woman can carry with her to a meeting for consultation when a problem arises.

She points out in her foreword that "At the time of this writing the world is at war.

And it is with a reminder that "We are fighting at a time when every principle formulated out of the experience of centuries is challenged" that she dedicates the volume "to the cause of democracy and better organization."

Chesterton's Play 'Magic' Comes to Life on Stage As Answer for Critic

From Real Estate Man to Ace Film Director

Sam Wood, Most-in-Demand Producer-Director, Started His Hollywood Career Some 25 Years Ago

By HAROLD HEFFERNAN,

North American Newspaper Alliance HOLLYWOOD.

This is the story of one of Hollywood's greatest directors, perhaps the most colorful veteran left in the film business. His name is Sam Wood. He can tell stories about the old Hollywood that would raise your hair. And he's a real story himself.

If the Los Angeles real estate boom hadn't collapsed under Sam Wood's feet, he might be selling city lots instead of being the screen's most-in-demand director-producer of such hits as "Goodbye, Mr. Chips." "King's Row." "Pride of the Yankees," and, potentially, at least, his current "For Whom the Bell

There was a time when Sam was a fairly wealthy subdivider, who, taking a fling at pictures, could afford to sign Charles Chaplin to a fiveyear contract at $200 a week and 40 per cent of the net. But Essanay offered Chaplin a flat $90,000 and Wood not only permitted him to go, but advised him to take it. In the 32 years that have elapsed since he let that juicy plum slip out of his theatrical names as Lewis Stone. hand Wood has learned plenty.

Hallmark of Quality.

Wood came into the industry in the first place to protect an investment in some early one-reelers. Later he returned to it because he was broke. He developed some of the ontstanding personalities of silent days, among them Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino. Then, after years of good, workmanlike endeavor, he suddenly sprang to the forefront with the inspired "Mr. Chips." Now the Wood name on a film is its hallmark of quality.

Sam comes of a lusty, pioneer stock which had adventure in its realty ventures he had met Cecil B. blood, even though engaged in the De Mille. C. # Exhibition

By Florence S. Berryman.

The division of graphic arts exhibition of prints by George Overbury Hart, generally known as "Pop" Hart (he signed his work thus), now on view in the galleries of the National Collection of Fine Arts, is in the nature of a memorial, as the artist died nine years ago this month.

The group of 30 prints gives a comprehensive review of the media in which he achieved his greatest success. Furthermore, he was that rare type, a self-made artist who came to be regarded as a creative genius. His formal art training comprised a couple of months at the Art Institute of Chicago in the late '90s, and three months at Julien

Academy, Paris, in 1907. "That experience showed me that art schools are no places for an artist,' he said. Although this attitude toward technical training would not enough of tea and cake," he said. have generally happy results, it did "Those artists talking art with a work out successfully for Pop Hart. big 'A' and a hunk of cake in their His university was the globe. At the beginning of his career, besides making innumerable pencil sketches. Pop Hart painted in oils, later took up water color and finally experimented with various print media-etching, drypoint, lithography, aquatint, monotype and mezzotint. Examples of all of them are included in the exhibition now at the National Museum. His prints are concerned primarily with plain people. His chief interest was his fellow man. He was a "good neighbor" long before it became Government policy to be one; an internationalist because of inclination, not from self-conscious affectation. He was "at home" from the Arctic to the Equator. Any one seeing these prints could guess this fact, without reading the artist's own words. by William Spratling. "People have always interested me most," he said. "You may think they're a pretty rough lot-peons, beachcombers, Negro huskies on the levee, tramps in the 'jungle,' but I find them a pretty swell lot." These subjects he recorded with shrewd insight, sympathy, humor and a certain amount of exaggeration. He liked to sketch crowds, and handled them admirably, as in his "Market Place, Haiti," where native women sell watermelons, live fowl and vegetables, and carry enormous burdens on their heads; "Pig Market, Mexico," "Voodoo Dance. "Cock Fight" in several versions and colors; crowds at bathing beaches on excursion boats, at picnic parties, matinees and many other gatherings. The collection includes an aquatint and soft ground etching, "Dias de Fiesta," which Hart considered his masterpiece; also, "Dance of the Centaurs." selected as one of his best prints by the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris. Hart found people "lots of fun' his humor is untinged with malice. as can be seen in his etching en titled "Concert Soloist," which depicts a bawling baby in a park, attracting the attention of every one within earshot; and "Springtime, New Orleans," a lithograph which fetched a medal at the Sesquicentennial in Philadelphia for its admirable design and handling of tones. It shows the partly shuttered interior of a garret in the old part of the city, with a husky shaving himself before an open window looking out upon a sunny spring sky over rooftops to church spires which strongly resemble those of St. Louis Cathedral. It is a caricature with happy implications. In the last 15 years of his life Pop Hart achieved recognition. His work won awards, was sought for exhibitions and purchased for museums and private collections. (Incidentally, the collection now on exhibition was his gift to the National Museum.) He received such honors as being twice elected president of the Brooklyn Society of Etchers. But he did not care for

By Fred Van Devender,

DETROIT .- Army practice forbids stunting in Army planes, but-There he was, flying a P-39 interceptor pursuit ship, diving, twisting and turning in all the gyrations of an aerial circus while the commanding officer, his staff and the pilots watched him.

He was trying to find out why one of the base's best pilots had gone into a flat spin.

When the plane swept back to the field, the pilot, a tall, lean man in dirty dungarees, beckoned to the crowd of pilots and led them to the base's lecture room. For 15 minutes he talked, quickly, surely, dramatically.

This plane couldn't go into a spin unless it was forced into it or there had been an accident. This tall, lean man had gone up to prove it, and in proving it he answered the question I went to the field to ask:

"Why are there so few accidents at this Army air base?" Unanimously, the officers had replied "Bob McIntyre."

Lt. Bob McIntyre-the 26-yearold who had done the acrobatics-is the chief of the Transition School. 3d Ferrying group, Air Transport Command, United States Army Air Corps. The Detroit base is one of six such bases engaged in transshipping Army planes from manufacturers to the fighting forces.

Accidents Are Few.

In the last four months Detroit air base pilots have spent some 15.000 hours in the air, delivering bombers and fighters and learning to fly them. In that time there have been but two fatal accidents, neither attributable to pilot error, only 31 accidents altogether, most of them minor.

Those figures are far below the average prior to April, 1942, when the Transition School was established.

Literally thousands of Army flying craft-everything from training ships to the giant four-motored bombers-have been delivered by these pilots. They fly a different ship almost every time they go into the air-

They Were Expendable

By W. L. White. (Harcourt. Brace.)

Although the names of the Navy's Bulkeley, Kelly, Akers and Cox are by now known to every American, it is a good thing that this full account of their heroism has been written. There have been those who have complained of the performance of our armed forces in the present war, claiming that the dash and initiative which have distinguished American fighters in all our previous wars were lacking. They are the armchair soldiers, of course, but they have managed to air their views very extensively, just the same. It is time they get a rebuttal in the form of cold, specific facts. Nothing could serve the purpose better than this story, which is a lineal, pedigreed, certified descendant of the stories of such historic Navy demons as Somers, Cushing, Decatur or even old J. P. ("I am just now beginning to fight") Jones himself. It is terrific and it's true.

Bulkeley, Kelly, Akers and Cox, more formally known as Lt. John Bulkeley (he is now a lieutenant commander), Lt. Robert Bolling Kelly, Ensign Anthony Akers and Ensign George E. Cox. are, in Bulkeley's words, "what is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3." which was stationed at Cavite when the Japanese attacked us last winter. His description continues:

"Last fall, there were six little boats-and about a dozen men to each boat. Each one is a plywood speedboat, 70 feet long and 20 feet wide, powered by three Packard motors which can send her roaring over the top of the water about as fast as a Packard automobile ever gets a chance to travel on a highway. * * * Each boat is armed with four torpedo tubes. and four 50-caliber machine guns-firing in pairs from each side. * * * There isn't an ounce of armor steel on the boat-we're like eggshells, designed to roar in, let fly a Sunday punch, and then get the hell out, zigging to dodge the shells. * * *

"Little Eggshells" Dealt Systematic Grief to Japs.

"I was commanding officer of the squadron. I'd picked every officer and man in the outfit from volunteers-told them we were heading for trouble * * * that war was maybe days, perhaps even only hours, away. The only thing that surprised us was that it was Pearl Harbor that got the first attack, not us.'

From the opening day of the fighting up until the three surviving boats carried Gen. Douglas MacArthur and his party on their first lap toward Australia, these "little eggshells" dealt systematic grief to the Japs.

They made what amounted to an independent war of their own. The initial Jap air attack destroyed the planes which should have screened them and made scrap of the machine shops which should have kept them in battle trim. They had limited gasoline and that, as they found out, had been sabotaged to clog their engines. They had little ammunition. They had no spare parts. Sometimes they were short of food. But they sank Jap cruisers, tankers, destroyers, landing barges and planes right and left before they finished. They ran in close by Japanese encampments and machine-gunned the soldiers. They used every ounce of their tragically short supplies to effect, and for every loss of their own, they made the enemy pay with interest. To quote Bulkeley again:

"* * * We had probably sunk a hundred times our own combined tonnage in enemy warships. * * * For every man in our combined crews we'd probably killed or drowned 10 Japanese. * * * We were to lose more men later, and all our boats, but the Japs were to pay at almost the same ratio.

For a last-ditch fight under hopeless conditions, they turned in a performance which not only adds to the glory of American arms, but, of itself, deserves a place in the list of the world's truly great military exploits.

Their story, as it is set down here, is largely in the words of the four surviving officers. It is so rich in heroic episodes that the reviewer finds it hard to view it as anything but a magnificent drama. But it is plain from the emphasis used by the speakers that their purpose in giving the record to the world has not been to tell of their own heroism, but to crouse and warn the American people. We were unprepared, they say, At a time when there was no possible excuse for unprepardness. We lost thousands of lives and millions of dollars in equipments because of that unpreparedness, and, as these men, emerging from the holocaust, see us, the lesson is still unlearned. As one of them puts it:

"We were expendable. * * * In a war anything can be expendable -money or gasoline or equipment or mostly men. They are expending you * * * to get time. They don't expect to see (you) again. They expect you to stay there * * * until you're killed or captured, holding up the enemy for a few minutes or even a precious quarter of an hour. Kaleidoscope of Scenes of

Germany's 'Officer Clique'

The Guilt of the German Army

By Hans Ernest Fried. (Macmillan.)

In this solid and scholarly work, Hans Ernest Fried, one more expatriate German, undertakes to trace steps by which the old-time Imperial German Army became the modern Nazi horde. As he sees it, the process was a deliberate one which was started as early as November, 1918, only a few days after the armistice. But it had to be long, and it involved many complicated maneuvers, and 15 years passed before it brought its planners into power. In that period, its trail was underground, and its aims were systematically misrepresented. Dr. Fried has been interested in digging the trail out and in showing how the older officer clique trimmed to the various political winds with the undeviating determination to make Germany once more a militaristic power. It cannot be said that he writes with much animation; it has to be said, indeed, that he is downright soporific as a stylist. But so important is his story, and so carefully has he built it up that one reads him with interest, as it were, in spite of his efforts to the contrary.

Beginning with the end of World War I, he produces abundant evidence to show that, long before Hitler appeared as an influence in German affairs, there was on foot a determined conspiracy against the Weimar Republic and the terms of the Versailles Treaty. So early, he says, did the military clique adopt the claim usually attributed to Hitler that the German armies had not been defeated in the field, that Germany did not deserve the stigma of the war guilt and that the destiny of the German nation lay in the resurgence of German arms to make World War II. These officers, as Dr. Fried points out, lacked political skill, and at that time no program could be launched except through a political organization. They systematically investigated various parties and finally chose the obscure and struggling Nazis. While this process was going on, they took advantage of every possible opportunity to spread their ideas and keep the spirit of revenge alive in their countrymen.

They were not, however, animated by revenge themselves, as Dr. Fried sees it. They had no higher motive than a blind resolution to maintain their own privileged places in society, a resolution which becomes even more contemptible in the light of the figures which Dr. Fried produces to show that even in the inflationary period, the officer class suffered less, economically, than did any other group of the German people. There was almost no unemployment among those who had retired, and their pensions were, on the average, higher than the full salaries of public officials. But the long tradition of the military as a superior class was the sole real item of faith in these men's lives, says Dr. Fried, and they could not abide a government which honestly looked toward peace as its aim. In some form or other, they were determined to have militarism.

The merging of this group with the political organization of the Nazis is finely explained. In the immediate post-war period, says Dr. Fried, a process took place which brought the old arictocratic level of militarism down to the common level-that was the rise of the free corps and volunteer companies which were recruited from the picked shock troops of the World War army. These shock troops were men trained in the technique of sudden attack and hand-to-hand fighting; during the war, except when they were in action, they enjoyed great privileges and were never assigned the grim labor of simply holding a line. They regarded themselves as privileged aristocrats, which meant that they soon degenerated into rowdies. They not only formed the nucleus of the Nazi hoodlum bands; they brought about what Dr. Fried calls "the nihilization of military qualities." They destroyed any tradition of gallantry Longmans)-The story of the wast- or honor which may have pertained to the old-time soldier. Far from being affronted by this development, the officer clique exploited it, delibof our soil, told by the head of the erately entering on a program of wholesale corruption of youth, to the end that they might win back their favored places. Hitler worked on the same thing from the political end, and, eventually there came about the wedding of true minds.

Dr. Fried does not offer this theory as theory. He documents every step of his argument.

Coming to his conclusion, he warns the United Nations against attempting a second time to disarm Germany in the event of an Allied victory. The revenge mentality has been too strongly cultivated to tion which a "Christian realist," as allow such a method to be a success, he says. #### Terror and Greatness.

"You know the situation-that those few minutes gained are worth the life of a man to your army. So you don't mind it until you come back here where people waste hours and days and sometimes weeks, when you've seen your friends give their lives to save minutes. * * *"

The book is a kaleidoscope of scenes of terror and greatness. Pictures of the horrors of the air raids are drawn in with laconic vividness. Ensign Cox, after the destruction of Cavite, watched "staggering Filipinos" collecting the dead, "maybe dragging a trunk toward a crater, pulling it by its one remaining leg, or else maybe rolling a head along like over a putting green." Again, there was a time, on a raid by the MTBs when a torpedo did not go off properly and threatened to destroy its own ship. A torpedoman, Martino. "jumped astride that wobbling, hissing torpedo like it was a horse, and * * * jammed the vanes of the propeller, stopping it." Bringing his boat up beside a Japanese troop landing barge, Bulkeley tossed in hand grenades "from about 20 feet away." And so on.

At the close the work is concerned with Bulkeley's and Kelly's account of the removal of Gen. MacArthur's party, and, one is obliged to signed its hitherto subordinate role note, in those chapters the Navy views the Army with somewhat lacknote, in those chapters the Navy views the Army with somewhat lack-luster eyes. Most of the generals aboard the MTBs were seasick. The be found there, bard to understand Navy boys found that very hard to understand.

Next to the actual enemy, these seasoned fighters evidently feel, the the worst menace which faces America is smugness, delay, politics and old-fashioned military thinking. We have heard these things before, but it is hard to ignore the warning when it comes from men whose lives have been, as they put it, "expendable."

Campaign of Treachery

By Henry Torres. (Dodd, Mead.)

Another sad-hearted Frenchman here relieves his feelings on the subject of the Fascist plot which, as now seems well-established, aided the Germans in their overthrow of the French Republic. Henry Torres, well-known lawyer and author, whose recent biography of Pierre Laval excoriated the group which formed the Vichy government, saw, for several years before actual hostilities began, that there was an anti-republican conspiracy in progress in his country and kept notes and records of its machinations. His work is an arrangement of this material, together with the story of his own efforts to bring the traitors to book, when he became a member of the war government. Needless to say, he accomplished nothing. He is now a refugee in America, definitely in the bad graces of the Vichymen.

Mr. Torres takes up the case of the French press, large sections of which are now well known to have been in German hire. He discusses highly placed officials who likewise played the German game, sometimes out of sympathy with Fascism, sometimes out of hatred of England and sometimes for plain cash bribes. There were, he says, many out-and-out German agents and spies in Paris, going about their work with very little pretense, since they knew they were sure of protection from the government which they were betraying. He puts the deeds of these gentry as much for them. They finally said less vicious and harmful than those of the French Fascists, and again good-by to it, not without some and again establishes strong cases to prove deliberate collaboration between the two breed of traitors.

He is episodic in his method. He tells how the Fascists spread their border. There they made a down propaganda through the tourist agencies and travel bureaus, the youth payment on a partly-built cabin in organizations, the radio and the cinema. Repeatedly, he reports the ex- 40 acres of woods and settled down posure of some enemy agent, and the subsequent refusal of French to hard work. They had only $30 authorities to take any decisive action, on the ground that international in cash and a trailer that contained relations required toleration. He gives a bitter chapter to Italian propaganda which was carried on in a particularly flaunting style. If his story was the account of one man only, its sensationalism would make it hard to believe. However, it only repeats, in effect, what every honest writer has said on its subject to date-a Fascist conspiracy composed of wealthy industrialists, financial adventurers and shady politicians sold France out to her enemy. Mr. Torres merely confirms. Except for its passionate bitterness, his book is much the same thing as has been done over and over again already.

As to his own experiences in the war governments of Daladier and Reynaud, he tells how he asked for a post in Belgium where he had information on the extent of German propaganda and felt that he could do valuable counteractive work. He was promised the place, but, after his bags were packed, he was told that he was to remain in Paris, directing the work from that city. He was rendered impotent by a dozen carefully planned strategies. Then he was shifted to the directorship of the cinema for propaganda and there witnessed more of the enemy's effectiveness interesting, and Mrs. Davis tells than of France's. As events moved toward the disaster,, the gloating of the Fascists became more open and insulting. By the end of the republic's life, there was virtually no pretense, he says, as to where For the Mystery Fans loyalties lay. After making valiant efforts to influence authorities to move the government to Africa and carry on from there, he fled. His book will be a valuable source to historians. It should also be a warning to contemporaries.

It is not an "answer" to anything; it is a full-bodied piece of fiction describing an important episode in our history. It has the drama of brothers fighting brothers but it lacks, of course, the pathos and grandeur of the lost cause.

The booths from which the stamps and bonds are sold were furnished by the theaters. Members of the honor society decorated them, however.

Partnership.

During the first few years of your life, your parents had to do practically everything for you, and the most important thing in the world to them was giving you a good start. They guarded your health, trained your mind, and tried to help you form the habits that are the basis of good character. But when boys and girls are as old as the readers of The Junior Star, they ought to be taking over some of the responsibility themselves. It's time for you to be looking after your own health to some extent. You know what is good for you and what isn't and you ought to govern your conduct according-And you ought to have a definite goal of developing a strong and healthy body.

The same is true of your mind and your character. You should see the value of getting your lessons well and developing a well-trained mind. And you ought to realize the value of simple virtues, honesty and courage and kindness, that everybody admires.

Your parents are not ready to let you "go it alone" yet, of course. But you can be their partner in their important job of making you the kind of a man or woman they hope and believe you will be.

The 10-B students, during their semester of nutrition, will learn the effect of a national diet on the strength and temperament of a people. The diet of the Americans, Italians, Germans, Japanese, English and of the people of the occupied countries will be explained in terms of vitamins and minerals, according to Mrs. Ola Day Rush, chairman of the Home Economics Department, which will take over the nutrition instruction.

Every effort will be made to relate the nutrition to every day living, she said. A schoolboy will be apt to pop in the kitchen some night to observe how long his mother keeps her vegetables cooking. Under these conditions, it seems best to keep busy, to work hard and to play hard. Do everything you can to develop strength and courage. We must be strong and we must be courageous. You must be well prepared to face the future. This is no time for weaklings. By all means, in your study, learn to understand and to appreciate your country and its history. You will find that we Americans have much to be proud of, to cherish and to defend, Our constitutional liberties and our democratic ideals are priceless. Your education should help you to understand what these things mean to you. If you do know what they mean, you will never give them up.

Course Meant to Train Students for Posts as Business Executives

The American University, which observes its 50th anniversary next January, is offering for the first time in its history a bachelor of science degree in secretarial science as part of its wartime curriculum which begins September 23.

Designed to train students for jobs as executives in the business world, the new course combines the training given in a business college as well as studies offered in an arts and science schools, an official of the university points out.

"A student majoring in secretarial science not only will take the business courses offered but also the basic courses of the College of Arts and Science," he said. "Accordingly, a student receives his degree as a well-rounded college graduate."

In step with the requests of the armed services for emphasis on physical fitness, the university will institute a revised physical education program when classes begin this month. Where heretofore students were required to take only three years of physical education two hours each week, they will now have to attend such classes through their senior year.

More Calisthenics Due.

Men students in the Army and Marine Reserves will attend such classes three hours a week, while youth in the Air Forces and Naval Reserves will attend five hours each school week, it was pointed out.

To ascertain what the armed services desired in training future officers while still in college, the university's new physical education director, Bernhard Kalaijarvi, has conferred with Army, Navy and Marine leaders in physical fitness programs

"There will be more calisthenics and more intramural sports," commented the official.

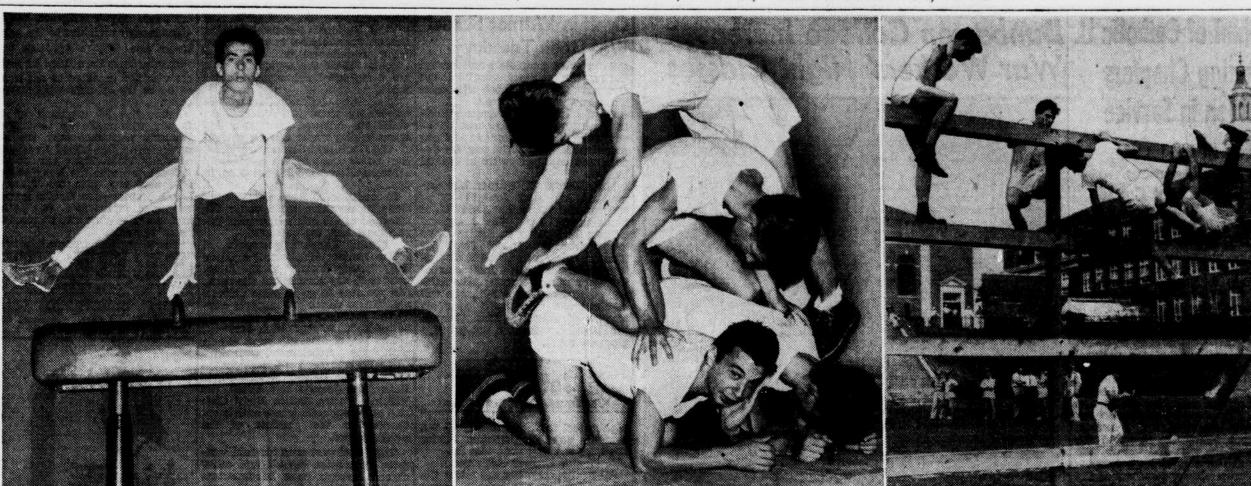

Because the Government has stressed the importance of more training in the natural sciences, the university also is offering additional courses in physics and mathematics to students in the reserves.

Among the courses offered in the secretarial science school are shortmatics and secretarial procedures. as well as training in social and natural sciences.

Apprenticeship Served.

During his senior year the student serves an "apprenticeship" in some business establishment, thus affording him first-hand knowledge of work he will do on entering the business world.

The university also will offer the schools are trying to find a "brushup" evening classes in short- reasonable formula. hand, typing and office management. It was stressed that these classes are designed to increase the speed and efficiency of secretaries and others, inasmuch as a student will not have to start training from "scratch" in such a course but will begin at the point of his existing ability Another innovation at the university will be the requirement that all new day students live at the college during an orientation period beginning Friday, registration day, and ending September 22, the day before classes begin. Having the newcomers live in dormitories for that period will give them "the feel of college life" and set them off on the right foot, it will be given room and board at less than cost during their orientation. Activities include a series of lectures by faculty members.

The unprecedented and sudden demand for trained employes in the field of broadcasting is creating opportunities for talented and ambitious young people, according to Miss Alice Keith, director of the National Academy of Broadcasting.

Green Acres School To Open Sept. 21

Beginning its ninth year, Green Acres, a school for children from 3 to 8, will open September 21. The school is on Old Georgetown road in Bethesda.

Three separate groups, for the 3 and 4 year olds, the 4 and 5 year olds and the 6 and 7 year olds, will have their own program of play, song, nature study, paint, clay and wood work, trips and more formal studies. There are, of course, certain activities common to all groups, such as feeding the rabbits, planting gardens, shelling peas, cleaning the yard, planning trips and other participation in the democratic life of the school.

Mrs. Ruth Edgerton Hoge, who has been at Green Acres since 1935 and whose experience includes work in schools in Europe as well as in Hessian Hills School in New York, is director of Green Acres and teaches the 6 and 7 year olds.

Kramer Junior High Opening Delayed by Materials Shortage

School, Being Built to Accommodate 1,100, to Be Ready in January

With the acute shortage of critical materials the chief cause for delay in the construction of the Kramer Junior High School in thickly populated Anacostia, the scheduled September opening has been postponed until the beginning of the spring semester in February.

Difficulties encountered in obtaining steel priorities for the building have created the greatest problem. The school, which is being constructed along standard lines, will have to do without all "doo-dads." Steel lockers are no longer on the market, and unless some can be borrowed from other sources, the school will have to do without them. Wooden trusses have, been substituted for the steel in the foundation structure. The Kramer School, being constructed to house 1,100 students during the school sessions, will have a teaching staff of 38, all to be transferred from the junior division of the Anacostia Junior-Senior High School. the District of Columbia. In September, 1939, the college adopted the standards of the American Bar Asits curriculum until this year it is offering under the new standards ing to the degree of bachelor of laws.

Another feature of the schedule this year is the planning of all subjects on a semester basis, with final examinations in January and June making possible the completion of any subject in one semester rather than the extension of some courses throughout the year. This will enable students in Washington temporarily on war work to take advantage of the study of law.

In addition to the full-time members of the staff, the part-time faculty members who will continue their teaching assignments at the college during the coming semester include the supervising library consultant, Mrs. Rebecca L. Notz, who will conduct the class in legal bibliography; John L. Laskey, assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia, who will conduct the freshman course in contracts, and Prof. William Clark Taylor, former deputy register of wills for the District and author of "Probate Forms and Procedure." who will teach the subject of wills and probate law.

War training courses designed to meet shortages in essential war activities have been instituted by four Washington universities in co-operation with the United States Office

Covering the fields of engineering, chemistry, physics and production supervision, the courses are designed to prepare qualified persons for active participation in the war effort, according to Dean George W. Case, director of the programs. Cost of tuition is borne by the Federal Government, the only expense of the trainee being books, materials and subsistence. The courses usually cover 12 or 16 weeks, but individual training may range from 30 or 40 hours, for those employed who wish to advance themselves by specialized training, to as high as 600 hours for unemployed qualified persons.

At present there are 200 colleges and universities throughout the country which offer the training. Do you know what these men are doing? They're getting ready to fire an "ash-can" from the Y gun of a destroyer to knock the daylights out of a Nazi submarine. Those submarines that are coming right up to our shores to sink American tankers and kill American men. Are we going to let them get away with it? Not when we have enough red-blooded men firing enough of these "ash-cans." Come on, give us a hand! Enlist today!

O THEY THINK we're going to stand D by while they menace our free government, torpedo our ships, kill our men, set our women and children adrift in lifeboats?

Not as long as there are Americans who are ready to stand up and fight for their rights and their freedom!

We've taken plenty. Now we're ready to start dishing it out. We're getting the ships. We're getting the guns. We're getting the "ash-cans"-those deadly depth charges that can blow a sub clean out of the ocean.

What we need now is men. We need YOU! How about it? It's your war. And you know you're going to be in it sooner or later. Why not choose the Navy-now-while you still have the chance?

What the Navy offers you

In the Navy you can do a real man-size job for your country-and for yourself. You'll go places, do things, meet people. You'll lead a rugged outdoor life that will build you up physically. You'll help make history!

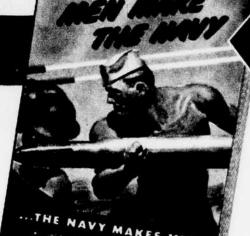

With Navy training you'll have the chance to become an expert in radio, aviation, electricity-dozens of top trades that fit you to do a better fighting job now . . . fit you for a better civilian job after the war is won.

You'll get good pay, quick promotion. Your first pay increase comes after approximately 2 months upon completion of recruit training. By the end of your first enlistment you can be making up to $138 a month, plus allowances. And that pay is all yours because your food, quarters, uniforms, dental and medical care are free.

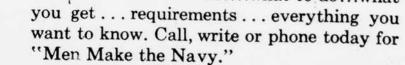

Most important of all, you'll be doing a job you can be proud of. A job your family, your friends, your country can be proud of - the biggest job ever offered any American.

THESE photographs have been judged to be the best in their class of all those published during the 12 weeks of The Star's Amateur Snapshot Contest. Each thus wins a final grand prize of $25 in one of the four general classifications of children and babies, young people and adults, scenes and still life, and animal life. In addition to this distinction, these four pictures also will compete in the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards for prizes totaling $12,500, including grand prize worth $1,500. These awards will be made at the national exhibit to be held in Washington in October.

"WHISKERS." Something of a personality study is achieved in this picture of a pet tabbie by Harvey Colpe, 402 E. Custis avenue, Alexandria, Va. It wins the grand prize for him in the class "D" pictures of animal life.

For once, the Missus is firm. Not only is it a salad plate, but Sarah has to do the serving, her-

Later . . . it's dinner time. The Missus and I sneak back. And, jumping catfish, Sarah fairly purrs!

"Mother darling, that was a wonderful salad. And it was such fun serving ourselves! The girls simply raved about the salad dressing. They all want the name!"

AT THIS the Missus rallies. "Sarah, for heaven's sake, don't tell them salad dressing. Tell them it was Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise!"

"Why, Mother-I didn't know there was any difference!"

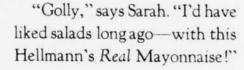

"Neither did I until-at the grocer's-a demonstrator had me taste Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise. And this is what she said:

'Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise is the home kind made with only eggs, added egg yolks, salad oil, vinegar and seasonings-no starchy filler!

'And it's really fresh - made with "FRESH-PRESS" Salad Oil, prepared each day as it's needed. That's why Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise tastes fresher even than home-made.'

"ANOTHER THING that demonstrator told me," the Missus adds, "is that you can vary Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise-make it go farther too-by adding milk or fruit juice. It contains no starchy filler, so it doesn't turn watery. Always tastes just so creamy-rich and delicious!"

A LESSON FROM THE KIDS

Just a couple of high-school football players - but they have a message for all of us

by Robert Keith Leavitt

Last fall I sat on the sidelines at a high-school football game. Things weren't going well for the home team. There were too many weak spots. One was a wing halfback — a small kid who had speed and nerve, but no savvy. He hadn't had enough experience yet to know all the tricks of the game. Even as I watched, the opposing team threw a pass into his territory. It was a good pass, cleverly masked, and it fooled him. He came in too fast, realized his mistake too late, dove desperately for the receiver — and went down with a crash into the dirt.

The play swept by for a touchdown, but I wasn't watching the carrier. My eyes were on the boy who had missed the tackle. He lay on his face not three yards away, bruised and breathless, his head buried in his arms. And because I was so close I could see that the kid was crying. In bitterness and humiliation he wept alone, unnoticed save by me and one other. The captain and star of his team, a big, husky guard who had gone down in the scrimmage, came over to where he lay. My heart bled for what he might say to the youngster.

But I needn't have worried. The bigger boy helped the smaller one to his feet, clapped him on the back and said, "Never mind, kid. We're all with you. We're all for you. We'll get 'em yet!"

And they did — through the rest of a game in which that pint-sized halfback distinguished himself by some of the most savage tackling and blocking you will ever see in a kids' game.

Sometimes, reading the papers, listening to the radio and talking to my neighbors, I wish more Americans had played team games instead of watching them. For the playing kids of America know one thing about a special kind of courage that the rest of our big, sprawling nation needs to learn. It takes more than physical endurance, more even than personal grit, to win. It takes team fortitude: forbearance and charity and loyalty to the fellow who is doing his best on your side, even when it seems he is letting you down.

R<sub>AW</sub> human nature succumbs instinctively to the impulse to blame others, to crab, to pass the buck. It's so easy to reproach the kid who missed the tackle, the partner who chose the wrong lead — or the general whose plan didn't click, the ally whose army lost a critical battle. But that isn't the way to win either a game or a war — which is an inexorably savage game, played across a whole planet, by teams of half-a-world on a side, for stakes of life and death. We civilians play a remote but vitally important part in this game. We play it everywhere — in the offices, in factories, on farms. Not only our work but our loyalty is important to all the hundreds of millions of others playing on our side. Yet in this we sometimes act like raw bleacherites — as though we were sitting outside the game.

ARMCHAIR strategists, we fume at admirals and generals of whose intricate, gigantic problems in tactics and logistics we have no faintest conception. Sitting safe, some thousands of miles from the concussion of bombardments, from the hunger and thirst and exhaustion of field campaigns, from the ever-present > threat of death — we blame this army or that for not holding in a spot whose soul-shattering terror we cannot even conceive.

Our kids set us a better example. Knowing what it is like to face a tough decision when you are all-in and all a-jitter, they are tolerant of the fellow who misses his assignment. Knowing what part unity and loyalty play in the winning of team games, they lay off criticism, even when it seems well deserved. "Never mind," they say, as they pick up the exhausted teammate, "we'll all get 'em yet."

What they know, the whole history of nations at war bears out. The Romans won so long as they were all for one and one for all; they lost and crashed when consuls squabbled and stay-at-homes crabbed the legions. Louis XIV dominated the Continent over jealous allies until William of Orange got those allies to forget their mutual criticism and upset the Magnificent Louis. Napoleon overran Europe and parts of Africa and Asia as well — until the Allies got together, sank their differences and drove him back from Leipzig and from Waterloo — to St. Helena. Germany by 1918 had her disunited foes hanging on the ropes; but when they got together under a unified command while she went internally to pieces, the whole face of the war and the world changed.

No team, in any nearly-matched contest, ever crabbed its own players without losing, or ever won without loyal team-forbearance. And that goes for world combats as inevitably as it does for high-school football games.

We are in a game that knows no timekeeper's whistle, no such thing as a tie score. We win or we lose utterly. And in these days, against our foes, losing can make a Nanking of Seattle, a Lidice of Lexington. Let us learn a lesson, if not from history, then from our own kids.

DUPLICATION. It is no mere case of mistaken identity that has two Bob Leavitts — both spelled with two t's contributing to this issue of THIS WEEK. To the left is a stirring editorial by the writing Mr. Leavitt. Only he is no longer just plain Mister. After volunteering for military service, Robert Keith Leavitt has given up a successful writing career to accept a major's commission in the Chemical Warfare Service.

On Page 11 you'll find the work of Bob Leavitt, photographer. He's the lens expert whose flag picture on our cover of June 28th won for THIS WEEK the U.S. Flag Association's Patriotic Service Cross. In all modesty, we'd like to observe that his pictures of a boy farmer in this issue are of prize-winning calibre, too.

CONTRIBUTORS. The Boys' Clubs of America may seem a little removed from the fighting fronts, but here's one fact about their contribution to the war effort which made us sit up:

The national average of armed-force rejections because of physical unfitness has been close to 40 per cent. But out of a total of 604 former Pittsburgh Boys' Club members examined, only one got a physical rejection.

CAUTION. Recently we printed a poetic tribute to slacks for ladies. Now, from his

WPB office in Washington, Rhymer Bernard Cogan sends us a lyrical sequel:

READY TO FIGHT - ANYWHERE

HAWAII

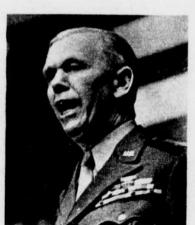

NE minute from now, General Mac-Arthur could pick up his phone, call the General Staff in Washington, say "I want three divisions for desert warfare." Immediately the Army could reach out and collect tank regiments, paratroops, tank destroyers, air-borne infantry, mechanized cavalry, mechanized infantry. Every member of those divisions would be an expert in desert warfare. They would arrive at their destination a co-ordinated group, ready to fight the minute they set foot on shore.

AUSTRALIA

Just as easily, he could ask for and get

General George C. Marshall, U. S. Chief of Staff, says: "Ours must be an all-purpose army ... We must be prepared to operate in the Arctic or in the tropics, in deserts or mountains..." We are building that all-purpose army now. Here's its amazing story

by Jerry Mason

jungle troops, mountain troops, invasion troops.

You've heard that we're building an army of specialists. But few civilians know anything of the miracle of training taking place in U.S. camps. The Army has not talked about it; but there's an inspiring story to tell. It's the story of how U.S. boys who have lived their lives in one state have been transformed in 12 months into fighters able to hold their own in deserts, in jungles, on mountain tops — into skilled specialists in global warfare, ready to fight anywhere in the world.

Much has been written about Marshal Rommel, foxy Nazi commander in Africa how he trained his men in hothouses, had them ready for desert fighting before they reached Africa. But our Army's commanders have shown amazing foresight, too. Day after day, we are turning out our own experts in desert warfare. Plus skillfully trained mountain troops. Plus troops who know every trick of jungle fighting. Plus troops all set for an invasion — anywhere — whenever the order comes.

We are holding a dress rehearsal for this invasion right in our own back yard. Army leaders have set up training centers, scattered over the face of the U.S., which duplicate the climate, terrain and operating conditions under which our troops will fight on foreign fronts. The Army found a Libya — in California. A Western Europe in the Carolinas. A Norway — in Colorado. Tropical jungles — in Florida.

Last spring, Colonel Riley Ennis of the Armored Forces came back to the U.S. after 10 months in the African desert. Immediately he and his superior officers staked out a training area 180 miles long, 90 miles wide, in the California desert. Eight thousand men. from every unit of service, went to work there, building and rehearsing our Desert Warfare Command. An American desert became a replica of Libya. Men were trained to fight under a sun which shot the thermometer up to 110 degrees and over. Systematically, their bodies were dehydrated. They learned how to make one gallon of water a day do for all purposes - to drink, wash in, shave in. Special uniforms were tested, then made for them. A diet for desert warriors was developed, and special refrigeration was perfected to keep it fresh.

NORTH AMERICA

Nothing has been overlooked that would make these desert-warfare boys better soldiers. Army doctors have been specially trained to take care of injuries and illnesses peculiar to desert fighting. Army Ordnance has set up a special section to figure out how best to protect equipment from desert sand and weather. Special camouflage has been developed for them.

All Set to Go

THE toughened, sun-blackened men of the Desert Command are ready for work. They have helped develop new weapons — things like the tank-destroyer and the tractor-like jeep which are calculated to set the Nazis back on their heels — and they've learned how to use them.

They can go to Africa, as a very small group of "observers" did and bag 25 Nazi tanks.

Page Four

But they are not limited to desert war - they can roll into France, up the frigid Russian steppes, almost anywhere.

The Army won't give figures on the numbers of desert troops trained in the Southwestern U.S. But, with 8,000 men as a nucleus in March, you can be sure that by now it's a good-sized gang.

The Mountain Front

WHILE these men are perspiring under a desert sun, thousands of others are trying to keep warm in the snow and ice of the Colorado Rockies. Ranks of our first mountain troops were filled by expert skiers, mountain climbers, trappers, prospectors, guides and sportsmen. Army leaders know that soldiers born and raised in the North and Northwest will make better mountain troops than boys from Mississippi or Georgia. Result: among the first men to go into snow-troop training were the National Guards of Wisconsin and Minnesota. And already formed, in Minnesota, is a snowtroop battalion made up of Norwegians and Norwegian-Americans.

These snow experts, plus men from the regular ranks, are being trained as mountain fighters just as thoroughly, just as skillfully as are our desert warriors. Camps are pitched on mountain slopes which range as high as 15,000 feet. Troops are learning to fight in deep snow and over glassy ice, on high cliffs and in deep forests, over rocks and in streams. When the first mountain battalions were formed, orders went to the Army's testing laboratories to design uniforms for men fighting at 30 degrees below zero. The Ordnance Department got a request for special lubricants for guns and machines. The Quartermaster Corps went to work on food.

To supply these mountain men, the Army uses the most ancient and most modern transportation facilities - from burros to airplanes. Men have been trained to deliver supplies by animal-pack or parachute.

Glider troops are learning to land or be picked up from a 50-foot square on a mountain slope. Paratroopers are being turned out who can start traveling on skis or snowshoes the instant they touch the ground. Mountain-troop doctors know how to treat frostbitten men, quickly, effectively; have learned how to make a snowsled for the wounded out of skis.

Our mountain soldiers are ready. An order today could, on a moment's notice, send them - fully equipped, raring to go - to any mountain battleground on earth.

Down in the jungles of northern Florida and the swamps of the deep South, members of our new Army are preparing for jungle warfare, are being made ready for expeditions into any jungle in the they're using the same tricks. Only this time it's for keeps. They've become adept at proceeding single file, taking advantage of trees and brush, sneaking up on light feet.

Men on 48-hour maneuvers in the swamps learned to live on two-day emergency rations. They learned to purify polluted water, then drink it - poisoned wells will hold no terror for them. They fought chiggers and ticks and poison plants. Tanks were sent against them; in self-protection, they dug their own foxholes. Planes zoomed overhead, dropping flour-bag bombs. Either the troops took cover as they had been taught or they were klonked on the head. New kinds of land mines were developed. If a man was caught napping coming through the woods, an observer in a tree exploded a mine close to him. He wasn't hurt - but he hit the ground hard enough to remember to be careful. Jungle troops are now masters in the art of live camouflage. No artificial leaves or vines for them. They use the real thing. And they must be perfect in it. Their commanders have devised a neat way of testing their skill: cameramen with color film become the "enemy." If, for example, troops use leaves they've picked from a tree six or seven hours before, color pictures show up the difference between the fresh green of new leaves and the darkening green of old ones.

When it comes to equipment.

American industrial ingenuity can take a bow. When U.S. oil companies went south to get oil, they discovered that ordinary boats and trucks would not take them through marshes and swamps. So they developed a flat boat with an airplane motor and propeller which skims over stumps, hidden logs and muck. Army engineers took these craft, developed them into combat boats and troop convoys.

The engineers are the boys who are paving the way for our invasion parties. They're developing assault boats, rubber boats, mosquito boats, amphibious jeeps and tanks. They practice for the blown-up bridges they'll find when they hit Germany by building bridges here at home. Just recently, they finished a pontoon-trestle bridge between Virginia and the District of Columbia. It's for civilian use - but the engineers are ready to build others just like it over German rivers.

Mental Training, Too

But this training to make men ready to fight anywhere is not limited to terrain and climate and equipment. One of the most important of all the phases of the Army's makeready plan is the Orientation Course. The Army is eliminating every element of possible surprise: Teachers are now in every U.S. camp. They are men who have lived with our enemies, watched them fight, studied their tricks, know their language, understand what sort of people they are. This knowledge is skillfully transmitted to our troops. Our soldiers see colored pictures of Jap and Nazi soldiers in actual combat, know exactly what they look like, what their insignia are, what they are like psychologically. Put the whole picture of U.S. Army training together and you have something which can keep the German and Jap General Staffs up nights. It doesn't make them happy to know that every time our troops go on maneuvers, U.S. soldiers are practicing on perfect reproductions of the world's fighting fronts. They won't sleep better for knowing that there isn't a spot in the wide world that our troops aren't trained for. Let Hitler and his pals name the place: American soldiers are ready to fight anywhere - and they're ready to lick 'em anywhere.

SNOW TROOPS, picked from northern states, learn to fight in icy cold

DESERT UNITS, trained on hot U.S. sands, are ready for African warfare

By the time he's finished his training, the jungle fighter is as adept in the woods as Tarzan ever was. He can hack his way through jungles, wade swamps, ford rivers, follow game trails. He carries snake-bite antidote, compasses, mosquito netting and machetes. He can swim a river carrying a rifle over his head. And he knows the trick of bending over, when he gets to the opposite bank, and letting the water run out of his pack. He has learned how to live off the jungle because tin cans are too heavy to carry and other food moulds. He can eat and thrive on fruits or on the meat of tapirs, snakes and monkeys.

The Japs showed themselves masters at infiltration: every man for himself, each working cleverly as an individual fighting unit. But Americans are being taught to outinfiltrate them. And our men are learning fast. As boys they played Indian games - now

Drugstore Dream

HE snazziest dream that Freddy Martin had ever beheld, in a sheared beaver coat and a beany pushed back on her red-gold curls, walked spang into the drugstore. Right then was when Egbert, who was sounding off on what Cragwood High should be doing for the rally, started things. And right then was when Freddy decided that he was fed up over his ears with Egbert Smythe. and that something had to be done.

"Disgusting!" said Egbert. "Here we should be thinking how we can help the war and all, and a girl walks in and right away Freddy has to forget he's an American." Egbert's soda straw made a faint gurgling noise in the bottom of his glass. He glanced at the girl in the beaver coat. "As though anyway," he went on crushingly, "a girl like that would even look at Freddy."

Instantly all eyes in the crowded soda booth turned on Freddy. "You heard him insult you, Martin." was suggested pointedly.

Freddy managed the finest sound effect in his last bit of soda that he had ever been able to achieve. "That," said he, "is my friend Egbert talking. A lot of gas or something. Takes more than gas to insult me."

The gang looked at Egbert. They looked at the dream. Then they looked at Freddy.

Freddy stared back at them. "Listen," he said scornfully, "if it wasn't Egbert I heard talking, I'd show you guys a thing or six. I'd have that girl right here in the booth drinking a soda with us inside of half a minute."

The gang merely shrugged. "You wouldn't dare."

Freddy got to his feet and yanked up the collar of his old tweed coat. Jeepers! A dare was a matter of honor. "What do you mean I wouldn't dare? I never walked out on a dare in all my life."

Nobody answered, but heads tilted in silent eloquence toward the dream in the beany. "My gosh," Egbert exploded, his face turning a scandalized pink. "A nice looking girl like that and all. It's a shame."

"Aw, shut up, Lacy-Pants," someone grunted. "Okay, Martin, we heard you talking."

Freddy sent his bright red hair on end. Like walking a plank, he thought wildly. was what this was, but he had to do it on account of he was dared and on account of that fatheaded Egbert Smythe was the dumbest, sorriest apple he had ever run across in all his fifteen years of life. Imagine him getting a perfectly innocent guy into a spot like this, could you?

"What you waiting for, Martin?"

She was really worth seeing, this new girl. Watch how she makes life a song for Freddy the horrible snicker that rose from the soda booth, and he wished he could fold on the spot and never be heard of again.

He'd remember, he thought as he plodded home, till he slid head-first into his grave how he felt when the dream's silken eyebrows rose; and if it took him the rest of his natural life he'd get back at Egbert Smythe.

His father called to him as he scuffed into the living room. "See here, Freddy," he said, puffing on his pipe, "I've just thought of a way you youngsters might assist with the War Rally.'

by other names, but that's my general idea." Disgust filled Freddy's eyes. He thought of the way his voice had cracked just when he wanted it smooth as oil. "Honest, Dad," he snorted, "you do get the darndest -- "

Then all at once his mouth clamped shut and a slow grin spread over his freckled face. Why, say. If he could only pull it, revenge was right in his mitts! His index finger rubbed a path up and down the middle of his forehead. Could he fix Egbert's wagon for him, figure out what we could do to help. So you see."

Mr. Martin knocked the ashes from his pipe, and refilled it slowly. "Perhaps I'm misjudging you," he conceded at length.

Freddy's red head jerked up. "Sure you are. Dad. Why, good gosh, any one of us would be glad to do all we could. Why, I'd get up and do a solo if I thought it would really help out, only, of course, I can't sing." His eyes widened guilelessly. "But, gee, Dad, I just happened to think. Eggie Smythe can sing. Boy, he's got one swell voice, when I come to think about it. I bet if you were to tell this new teacher. Miss Owen, about Eggie, she'd make him do a solo."

"Seems odd," Mr. Martin reflected, "that I haven't heard of Egbert's voice before."

REDDY agreed solemnly, but inwardly he chuckled. It would be odder, he thought, if his father had. The only one who thought Egbert could sing was Egbert himself. And as good luck would have it, he loved to sing.

"Honest, Dad, if you could get Eggie to do The Star-Spangled Banner, say, or, maybe Onward, Christian Soldiers, you'd really have something."

Mr. Martin rose. "Well." he said, "I've a pile of papers to correct right now, but I'll talk to Miss Owen in the morning. There's no time for rehearsal, I'm afraid."

"Good night. Dad, what's anybody need to rehearse Onward, Christian Soldiers for? Why, any of the kids could sing it standing on his head."

A paroxysm of mirth seized Freddy as his father left the room. Murderation! Did he have Egbert right where he wanted him? All he had to do now was get busy on the telephone and tip off the gang. Just a little bit of the good old organizing stuff was all he'd have to pull, and tomorrow night at the rally. when his good friend Egbert got up to sing, there'd be a catcall here and a whistle there and boos galore; and fat-faced Egbert would be standing in the same kind of spot that he had been in at the drugstore. Only much, much worse, thank you.

"I must say." Freddy told himself in Egbert's perennially reproachful voice. "it's a dirty low-down trick, but you got it coming to you, Mr. Stinko Smythe."

OUTSIDE the auditorium along with the Buy-War-Bonds-Rally poster, was a notice of the Glee Club tryout. Freddy grinned at it triumphantly as Egbert joined him.

"Hiyah, Smellerino," he said to Egbert. "That's a nice name to call anyone, I must say." Egbert's voice was offended.

Shoving open the auditorium doors, they began their march down front, when Freddy suddenly froze to the aisle and his throat gave out such a hideous squawk that he had to cough his head off to cover himself. There at the center of the platform, introducing herself to the boys, was his drugstore dream.

So Freddy walked up to the dream and desperately he plunged. "Look." he fairly shouted, and his voice, to his horror, cracked, "I'm Freddy Martin, and I guess maybe you don't know on account of you're new here. I guess, that this store has the biggest and best chocolate sodas in town - " He choked and grinned and couldn't go on.

HE dream just stood and stared for a moment. Then she raised her eyebrows.

"Really," she said, so the whole store could hear. "Isn't it a pity I particularly loathe chocolate sodas and drugstore gallants who forget themselves."

"Wait a minute," Freddy gasped, "I'm not -- "

He felt his blood boil into his face. He heard Egbert's sepulchral tones: "What'd I tell you? A fine thing, I must say." He heard

"Yeh?" Freddy's voice was gloomy. He pulled a log from the woodbox and threw it on the fire; squatting cross-legged on the hearth, he watched the red tongues of flame that crept along the log. What he wanted to think about was revenge, not rallies.

But his father didn't seem to notice. "I met the new music teacher, Miss Owen, this afternoon. She wondered whether she couldn't help some way, and it just this moment occurred to me that you fellows might reorganize your old glee club - "

"What?" Freddy gasped. "Sing, you mean, at the rally?"

His father, professor of English at Cragwood High, grinned most unprofessorially behind his hand. "Well, I've heard it called or could he fix it?

"ON SECOND thought, Dad," he said thoughtfully, "maybe you got something." He stuck his tongue in his cheek. "Yessir, on second thought, I'd say the professor hit the bull's-eye that time."

Mr. Martin looked at him suspiciously.

"On second thought," he repeated, "I'm not so sure. A faint aroma from the State of Denmark seems to reach me."

Freddy shook his head. His voice held reproach. "Honest, there's just no pleasing some people sometimes. Here I am agreeing with you, and what happens? You think I got something up my sleeve or something." His eyes stared steadily at the crackling fire. "Matter of fact," he said carelessly, "we had a sort of meeting down in the drugstore to "Come right down front, boys, please," she said, and a queer little gleam came into her eyes as Freddy dragged down front in Egbert's wake.

"Gee," Egbert whispered, as they took their seats in the empty fourth row, "look who it is, would you?" He turned reproving eyes on Freddy. "What'd you have to go and cough like that for? Wasn't it bad enough what happened to her yesterday without you got to make it worse?"

Freddy, for once, had no answer. He felt sick and empty down to his feet. He hadn't meant to come in the first place, on account of the way things were with him, but he had to know, for sure, that Egbert got a solo. Miss Owen was looking at a list in her hand. "A few names have been suggested to me by the faculty," she said. "as possible soloists. TW-9-13-42

Will Egbert Smythe stand up, please?" "Yes, Miss Owen," Egbert said respectfully, and the smirk on his face made Freddy even sicker. Talk about your toadying!

"All right, Egbert." Miss Owen walked over to the piano and ran up and down a scale. "Will you sing that for me, please? And do sing out."

Egbert smiled ingratiatingly. He cleared his throat and opened his mouth. Freddy, to show his contempt for such tactics gave the seat of Egbert's pants a violent pinch.

Egbert, to say the least, sang out. He shrieked the scale. Miss Owen looked startled for a moment, then she frowned with annoyance. "You needn't have taken me quite so literally," she snapped. "I'm surprised at you, Egbert. I'd been led to believe that you would be glad to co-operate." She shook her lovely red-gold head. "You may be excused," she said.

"I can do better than that," Egbert burst forth furiously. "I was -er - pin -"

"I feel sure you must be able to do better than that," Miss Owen said bitingly, and the boys howled uproariously. "But that will do for now." She indicated Freddy with a nod. "Will you stand up, please?" She placed a very faint emphasis on the pronoun. Freddy flushed crimson. "Who, me?" he gasped. "I'm only — er — watching. You don't want me in this club. I can't sing."

"Suppose," Miss Owen was saying coolly, "you let me be the judge of that."

Horror overwhelmed him. A rat in a trap - that's what he was. And Egbert was the one who should be in the trap.

"After all," Miss Owen was saying sweetly, "whether you believe it or not, that's one of the things I'm here at Cragwood for." Freddy's heart began to thunder against his ribs. Rubbing it in was what she was doing She was standing up there saying to herself, "Here's the little twerp who tried to pick me up, imagine." Only probably she wouldn't say twerp.

"All right." She ran the scale again. "I feel sure I won't have to remind you to sing out."

Freddy's knees began to shake. Good night, he couldn't tell what might happen when he opened his mouth. "I can't," he choked. "I got a sore throat." And by the Great Horned Spoon, it was true. All of a sudden his throat felt like something you'd throw to a dog.

"Perhaps," Miss Owen suggested, "you might stop at the drugstore on your way home — " Instantly the boys caught on, and pandemonium broke loose. But Miss Owen brought order quickly with an upraised hand. She played the scale a second time. "If you please," she said firmly.

Freddy opened his mouth, but nothing came out. He gripped the seat in front of him and tried again. To his horror, his voice burst forth in a deep bass bellow.

"Again," Miss Owen said sharply, and Freddy, anguished to the depths of his soul, did the same astounding thing again. "Splendid," said Miss Owen. "We're to be congratulated. We have a bass soloist, and I might add that it is rare in boys of your ages."

FREDDY gripped his throat in nameless terror, but Miss Owen was playing again. She was playing the opening bars of Any Bonds Today? Oh, he'd kill Egbert Smythe for this. If he hadn't been such a sissy and yelled like that for a little bit of a pinch —

"I don't remember the words," he pleaded: beads of perspiration shone on his forehead. "I'd be ashamed to admit it if I were you," Miss Owen said quietly. "Sing la, la, la, then. You certainly know the melody."

Freddy felt as though he were bursting. La, la, la, imagine!

"I'm waiting," Miss Owen warned.

"La, la, la," Freddy moaned, "la, la, la." Like an old cow's bellow was how it sounded, but Miss Owen seemed to think otherwise about his voice.

"You will sing a bass solo at the rally tomorrow night," she announced. "It's unfortunate that there won't be time for rehearsal, but all you'll have to do is to learn the words thoroughly."

She smiled directly at him for the very first time. "After all, we'll be among friends, you know. And by the way, will you tell me your name, please?"

"Freddy Martin," Freddy choked.

He never knew how he got out of there. All he knew was that everyone in Cragwood would be there tomorrow night. He, instead of Egbert, would be catcalled and whistled at. There wasn't any help to be had at home, because he had said that any kid would be glad to do what he could for the war.

"La, la, la," he thought wildly. That's what he'd be in Cragwood from now on. You couldn't go around explaining things about yourself. A la-la was what he'd be. A lu-lu. A big solo sissy.

His family would be disgraced, too. Imagine having your only son get up and — Maybe if he told his mother. But no — He clapped his hand to his clammy forehead — She'd say Miss Owen was probably the best judge of what he could do. A teacher, he reflected bitterly, was always right in his house. His whole body sagged as he walked the road home. Egbert, he vowed, would pay for it in the end.

It was all on account of that fatheaded, moon-faced hippo_that he was in this spot.

THE flag-draped auditorium was jammed to the doors. Everywhere you looked were great big posters. Put Cragwood Over The Top — Buy Uncle Sam's War Bonds. The American Legion Band was in the pit before the stage. They struck up The Star-Spangled Banner, and Freddy, in the midst of a crowd of sophomores standing in the wings, saw the audience surge to its feet. His heart gave one wild leap; then his throat locked tight with cold again. He couldn't, not even for the national anthem, forget the ordeal ahead of him.

"Everybody sing," he heard Miss Owen cry out front. She was waving a baton bedecked with the red, white and blue.

Freddy opened his mouth with the rest and sang. Hearing his own voice, he turned hot and cold as his worst fears were realized. He couldn't sing, but, cripes, he couldn't just stand there either. Then when the song was ended, he turned and saw Egbert's eyes fairly popping from his head.

"Heh," said Egbert, "I thought they told me you were a -"

"Shut your trap," Freddy snarled.

The Mayor of Cragwood got up and talked. The principal of Cragwood High got up and talked. Mr. Martin got up. He reviewed America right straight back to the thirteen colonies, and at the wild burst of applause Freddy swallowed painfully. His father sure could talk. And look how tall and proud he looked and all, and look what was going to happen to him. He ached clear down to his Please turn to next page

"We will now hear," Miss Owen announced, "from Professor Martin's son. Freddy Martin will sing the theme song of the National War Savings Program, Any Bonds Today?"

He didn't know how he got out there. Kids down front were calling out his name and his stomach was doing a sailor's hornpipe. Up and down and in and out his stomach was going. Gosh, he thought achingly, he wouldn't have minded singing if only he could. He'd be glad to sing for the war.

Miss Owen struck a low deep chord on the piano. She smiled up at Freddy encouragingly.

Freddy tugged wildly at his collar. He felt his eyes begin to bulge. His father. His mother. They were going to wish they were dead. It was awful - what was going to happen to them. He opened his mouth.

"The tall man with the high hat, and the whiskers on his chin -he began, and cold sweating terror seized him. Just as he had feared, he wasn't singing bass. He was singing high soprano. He looked down and saw a quick look of horrified amazement cross Miss Owen's face; then in a moment of horrible quiet Egbert's funereal voice came clearly from the wings: "He did that on purpose, that's what. A nice thing, I must say."

Fury and helpless terror caught at Freddy. There was nothing he could do. The faces of the audience swam like a lot of white swollen moons. He heard Miss Owen begin a second time, in a very much higher key, and his throat began to ache. It was getting sore again, just as it had at the tryout.

'Dum, dumpety dum dum," Miss Owen was playing frantically, trying to give him the pitch. Her big brown eyes were imploring him. "Dum, dumpely dum dum.'

Wild with desperation, Freddy opened his mouth and roared, and he felt as though he were going crazy.

This time, with the piano playing high soprano, he was singing bass. He felt sick in the pit of his stomach. He looked wildly at the wings, then all at once Miss Owen came in with him and he was singing with her. A river of perspiration streamed from his forehead. Jeepers, creepers, cripes! At last he was singing, and all right too. His knees ceased their shaking and he stood up as tall as he could. Honest, he thought, could you imagine it? He was practically swinging "Any Bonds Today?".

RIGHT in the groove, was what he was. He was putting it over, that's what! He grinned from ear to ear. This wasn't bad. Not bad at all. Then right at the end, to his unutterable dismay, he slid clear up the scale and ended liltingly:

"Bravo, Freddy," he heard his father call.

He managed, he didn't know how, to swagger off-stage, and his gang began to pummel him. They banged the wind clear out of him; said he was swell, and they wouldn't have believed he had it in him. So Freddy stared and grinned and gulped as Miss Owen came round back with Egbert Smythe beside her.

She took both of Freddy's hands in hers.

"That was the bravest thing I ever heard of," she said a trifle huskily. "I certainly put you right up into the front lines, didn't I. Freddy? But I didn't realize that your voice was changing. I should have, but I didn't."

Freddy's brain began to loop the loop.

Then Egbert had to cut in: "A regular credit is what it was to Cragwood High. That's all I got to say." His round face puffed and he sniffed. "And look, Freddy, I explained to Miss Owen how it was all my fault about what happened in the drugstore. I told her you were dared and everything."

"And I think," Miss Owen laughed, "that was rather decent of Egbert."

FREDDY swallowed hard. "Well," he said grudgingly, "I guess maybe that was all right -

He shot a glance at Egbert's smiling face. He saw the pride and friendliness in Egbert's eyes, and a strange thing happened to him. All of a sudden he wasn't hating Egbert any more.

Why Eggie, underneath where it didn't show, was a real good guy. A little on the soft side, maybe. He wasn't front-line stuff, but good night, you couldn't have everything. He stared around at the gang. Could you imagine? Not a single catcall on account of he was singing for the war. Jeepers, Cragwood High was sure All-American!

Freddy swallowed twice before he could talk. He looked shyly at Miss Owen.

"Gee," he said in a low voice, "honest, Miss Owen, Eggie here was the one who should have done the singing. You see" - his freckled face flushed painfully - "I - er well, sort of pinched him yesterday vou know, when he got up?"

"That was nothing," Egbert muttered, "I'd of done the same to you, I guess."

"Well," said Miss Owen, "confessions seem to be in order." Then all at once she looked just like the dream again. "And, Freddy, while I think of it, did you or did you not offer to buy your music teacher the biggest and best chocolate soda in town?"

"-buy a share of F-r-ee-d-o-m today."

"Why I practically never heard of such a clever act," someone shouted in the audience.

They thought it was an act. Abjectly, Freddy stood and waited for the whistles and the catcalls. But nothing of that sort happened. The audience clapped and shouted, and Freddy, after a few dazed moments, made a sweeping bow of sheer relief.

Freddy's mouth and eyes popped open. Right in front of the gang, imagine! Boy, was the basso riding the waves!

"Not now," Miss Owen laughed softly. "Later. After the rally."

To everyone's astonishment, and for no good reason that he could have explained, Freddy stood on his bright red head and winked at the gang from the floor.

"La, la, la," he growled in a deep bass voice, and ended in a simpering soprano, "la, la, la, la."

Which reminds me of a guy I once knew that wasn't sure where he was goin' when he died.

THE FLAG of the United States of America is the fourth oldest national flag in the world. Only the flags of Denmark, Sweden and the Netherlands are older.

ONLY ONE FLAG is ever flown above the Stars and Stripes in any branch of our armed forces. This is the Chaplain's pennant on Naval vessels to signal: "The crew is at divine services."

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER which inspired Francis Scott Key to write our National Anthem had 15 stripes and 15 stars. This flag, with 11 bullet holes, is now in the National Museum.

BOTH STRIPES and stars were added to the Flag when Vermont and Kentucky were admitted to the Union, in 1791 and 1792. But, in 1818, Congress reduced the number of stripes to the original 13. After that only a star was added for each new state. - KATHLEEN MASTERSON

HIGH POINT of David's day comes when he gives "Mrs. Fisher" her dinner - straight from the source

FARMER, 1942

HIS is the story of David Akin, age nine — farmer and patriot.

■ Farming is nothing new to David. His forebears were tilling the family acres — on Quaker Hill, near Pawling, New York — when Washington was leading his troops down the near-by pike to White Plains. When he was three, David could milk a cow. Farming was in his blood, and when his father's last hired man left for a defense factory. the boy's one thought was how to keep the farm going.

Before long the oats in the south field would be ready to be harvested. The golden hay in the upland acres was waiting to be cut; there were 118 cows to be cared for. Will Akin and his sons stood at the top of the hill and looked down over the rich land which their forebears had cleared. Legend has it that when the first seven pioneers came to Quaker Hill, the Indians agreed to sell them all the land a man could walk around between sunrise and sunset. Americans were built of sturdy stuff in those days, so the parcel of land they got was a big one. of farm machinery broke down and a new part had to be ordered. When it arrived there was a pamphlet telling how to put it together. Father Akin, hard-pressed, said, "I can't stop to do the job this morning." But after he had gone young David read the instructions, took off the broken part, and replaced it with the new one.

"Just what was it you did?" I asked him.

"Oh, nothing much. I just replaced the sweeping bar of the side-delivery rake," he answered. Greek to me, but everyday language to this young farmer!

WILL, David's older brother, only 12 but in his second year of high school, runs the electric milking machine, although the nine-year-old can do this job too.

NINE-YEAR-OLD David runs his dad's tractor now that the last hired man has left the farm

OXEN, raised by David himself, are used to help out with hauling to save tires and gas

BUT Will Akin was not thinking of all this while he gazed at his ripening fields. He was wondering how, unaided, he could harvest the grain and hay to feed and bed so many cows, when David spoke up. "The Akins have run these farms since Adam was a pup," said the nine-year-old boy. "and we'll go on running them. I can run the tractor."

It sounded like a small boy's boast, but it wasn't. David not only drives the tractor, but uses his oxen to do some of the heavy hauling. He does more. One day recently a piece David loves all living creatures. He cares for the geese, suffers when they are sent to market. He loves the calves, and a new one is a great event; he begs to sit up through the night and help with the "bornin'." As a farmer, he knows that most of the "bob calves" must go to the market — but he isn't around when they are taken away.

Down the road lives David's grandmother. She owns a table once used to serve George Washington huckleberry pie. Another ancestor, on his mother's side, named Ferris, built the Quaker meeting house where later the first protest against slavery was made.

This little American is such a credit to his forebears and his country that we asked Photographer Bob Leavitt to make these pictures. They are blueprints of the qualities which made — and will preserve — our freedom. — M. M. M.

English and French soldiers, left behind, were still trying to escape. A very few did get away, hidden by tight-lipped French peasants until they could be smuggled aboard fishing boats.

Christine Aubonnet, who lived alone in her little stone cottage surrounded by rich farm land, had helped several of these boys and was determined to help more, as long as she was able to do so.

Fortunately her cottage was not on a main highway, where the thunder of mechanized units was heard day and night. Only a German patrol came along her narrow dirt road, for the purpose of searching the houses of the peasants and speaking of frightful reprisals for aiding English soldiers. Even before the Germans had swept through the peaceful countryside, Christine had had few visitors from the village, six kilometers away. Now she discouraged visitors of any kind. She deliberately drew her graying hair over her face, looking as sinister as possible. She wore old black dresses and a ragged shawl. With the help of a hired man, old Anatole, she worked her farm. She put on an act of being dull-witted - even allowed people to think she was slightly demented; all of which suited her purpose. It kept prying eyes away.

"Perhaps," she said slowly. "But we can "Help me, please," he said. "I'm wounded. I can't go on"

"Report him, madame?" Anatole said, horrified. "But surely - "

"If he is dying, there is nothing we can do to help him. But by reporting him, we turn suspicion away from ourselves and we can possibly save others," she told him.

"Yes, I understand. It is wise."

"Get on your bicycle and go into the village and report that you have found an Englishman trying to escape. God help him."

She knew she would be visited by the German patrol. The same two, the young arrogant Prussian officer and his orderly, would come again to thank and possibly question her. She detested the officer's arrogance, his shiny boots, his mocking formality of speech. But he spoke adequate French. So many of the swine did!

But not quite all prying eyes. Anatole came in from the field in the middle of one afterbeing spied on."

Christine felt alarm go through her like a sudden chill. "From where?" she asked.

"The big tree beyond the ditch. I saw a reflection of light in the tree, where there should be no light. I saw it again later when the sun was in the west. Like a mirror flashing, it was."

"Binoculars," she said, stilling the alarm in her mind. "They're watching the house. But they will see nothing. We will go on with our work as usual. You must pretend you do not see the tree."

"Yes, madame." Anatole scraped a thicksoled boot along the floor. "But, madame, I think there is some one in the woods beyond the field. When I gathered wood for the kitchen I saw the dead leaves scuffed up as not bring him here." She was silent for a moment, thinking. "Cut some bread. Put it inside your shirt. Some food may help him — if you find him. Get your axe, as if you were going after more wood. Be sure you bring back wood. The man in the tree can see you."

"Yes, madame." ·

ANATOLE, with an armful of cut wood, returned within the hour. "I found him, madame. A young English. He can hardly talk. He cannot possibly walk. He has been in the woods for three days. He is bleeding. He will die unless a doctor reaches him."

"Then we must report him," she said firmly. "That's the only way he can reach a doctor." They came as she was preparing the evening meal. She heard the car stop. The German officer rapped on the door and opened it without waiting for her "Entrez."

He said, "Good evening, madame. We have caught another English dog trying to escape — thanks to your vigilance. But we might as well have left him in the woods. He is probably dead by now."

"I only did my duty," she said dully. "That is what we want — the co-operation of the French. A grateful fatherland — " Please turn to next page

She sighed. She knew exactly what he was going to say. He made the same statement every time he came to her house: "A grateful fatherland knows how to reward loyal subjects."

When he had repeated that statement he added, "But we have reason to believe, madame, that there were two of them. The dying man could not have gone so far in the woods without help. There are indications of a second man." He leaned forward and looked at her quizzically. "You have seen no one, madame?"

"I have seen no one," she said stiffly.

As if by a pre-arranged signal, the orderly went into the kitchen, the bedrooms. She could hear closet doors being opened and closed. They never missed an opportunity to search the house. When the orderly came back the officer turned toward the door.

"The second man cannot get far. He must be in the neighborhood," he said pointedly. He clicked his heels and bowed, "I bid you good evening, madame."

After the sound of the German car had died away, Christine turned to Anatole, who had been standing near by. "If there is another English boy in the woods — if he comes here" — she put her hand to her forehead — "we are in danger, Anatole."

"Yes, madame, but if he comes for help - "

"We cannot help him now," she said, shaking her head, "or we will never help another. They will be watching for him." "Yes, madame," Anatole said sadly.

Some time about midnight, Christine was awakened by a scratching, then a knock on the door. Before she could get out of bed she heard Anatole, who slept in the little room off the kitchen, open the front door. Hastily she put on a dressing gown and shoes. Anatole met her at the door of her bedroom. "It is the other English boy," he whispered. "Come."

She walked into the room and motioned to Anatole to lift his lantern. She saw a young, sandy-haired boy of not more than twenty-two, with smooth, tanned cheeks and pale gray eyes. He appeared to be wounded. He pressed one hand to his shoulder where, she could see, blood had seeped through his dirty uniform.

"Help me, please," he said in English. "I'm wounded. I've been hiding in the woods for days. I can't go on."

Christine looked at him with pitiless eyes. "I am sorry," she said in an even, flat voice.

"I cannot help you."

His eyes appealed to her. "But I'll probably be shot if I'm caught." "I probably will be shot if I am caught helping you escape. I will do nothing to disobey German orders. They have not bothered me, and I want it to remain that way."

"Then for the love of God give me something to eat," he said. "I have had nothing since yesterday."

"I cannot even do that, for that would be helping you," she said in an inflexible voice. She turned to Anatole and said in rapid French, "Rush to the village and report this man." She could see the pain in Anatole's eyes. "Don't argue. Hurry."

Anatole, with bowed head, went out.

The boy looked at her with reproachful eyes. "I thought you would help me. You've helped others. I - I don't want to die."

"Wait," she said. "Wait until he gets back."

ANATOLE was stopped by a patrol car before he reached the main road. Sadly he told the arrogant young officer that Madame wanted to see him.

The German looked at him strangely and uttered an oath.

"Here is your man," Christine Aubonnet said with great dignity as the German officer strode into the room.

"You are to be congratulated on your vigilance, madame," he said in his usual mocking tones. She saw the look of hatred he threw at the wounded soldier. He drew his gun.

"So, you thought you could escape, you English dog!" He motioned the boy to the door, then turned to Christine. "I bid you good night, madame. I hope your sleep will not be further disturbed."

The door closed and Anatole started to speak. "Sh-h-h," she warned. "Listen."

They went to the window and heard the German officer say, "You stupid fool." There was the sound of a blow struck. Then two voices spoke rapidly in German.

Anatole gaped. "That — he — that boy was a German, madame?"

"Yes. It was a trap." Her voice was cool and firm.

"But — but he looked like the English, he spoke English. He had on a uniform like that English boy in the woods."

"Probably the same uniform. And he spoke excellent English. Cambridge, I think." She was smiling.

"But, madame, I do not understand. How did you know he was not English?"

"He said he had been hiding in the woods for days. When a man is hiding, trying to save his life, he does not stop to shave. Did you notice that boy's face?"

A light came into Anatole's eyes. "Ah, madame, yes. How wise you are. That one was clean-shaven; he had no beard." The End

LITTLE CORPORAL

RATIONS. Corporal Snafu fueled up for a busy day at the field

FLIGHT ORDERS. He gives Lieut. Douglas last-minute low-down

Only a non-com, but he's the big noise of the whole airfield

SOMEDAY, some Army brasshat is going to get a surprise when he runs through the official Service Record file of our 63rd Pursuit Squadron. For under the S's he is going to find a certain Corporal M. Snafu, and he'll probably raise a brass eyebrow — not only at the Corporal's singular name, but also at the fact that he's 11 inches high.

Snafu is the youngest registered corporal in the U.S. Army (being six months old) and the hairiest (being a cocker spaniel). If you plan to visit him out at his base, Mitchel Field, L. I., we advise you to take along some soda pop. He likes that better than bones.

Pilot

NEXT to soda pop he likes flying. Whenever he's allowed to, he sticks his nose out of the cockpit and snaps at the rushing wind. He already has over a dozen flying hours to his credit; technically, that entitles him to a solo flight. Who'll be the first passenger?

Snafu was given to the 63rd Pursuit when he was six weeks old. Shortly after his induction, he was advanced to Private First Class but was demoted again because of indiscretions in the Orderly Room (his Service Record tells the whole story, in impressive Army terms). He improved with age, however, and soon won his corporal's stripes. They're regulation, too. He also wears his regulation "dog tag," just the same as every other U.S. soldier, giving his name, age, etc. Corporal Snafu is on duty all day long in the Orderly Room, and no pilot in the Squadron would think of taking off without a farewell cuff. He bites them all impartially, but especially he bites Major Gilbert Meyer, with whom he bunks every night. "He won't get away with it when he gets his second teeth," says Major Meyer. Meantime, he keeps 'em flying. - CHARLES D. RICE, JR.

HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED

PONESTLY, I think that marriage is more fun than anything else - especially for two people. And if the two people are in love it's even better. Of course, my marriage to George has probably been the happiest one in the world and I'm sure George's marriage to me has been just as happy because, after all, it's the same marriage. I'll admit we have little quarrels now and then and often much oftener but we know how to handle them. Our motto is forgive and forget - so, regardless of who starts the quarrel, George forgives and I forget about it. It's this 50-50 spirit that has made marriage what it is today and I'm sure it's here to stay.

GRACIE ALLEN TELLS

One of the nicest things about marriage is that there's always someone there to share your sorrows and troubles. By actual count this cuts your troubles in half, which is a very good thing because when you're married there always seem to be twice as many troubles popping up. That's why, when it comes to marriage, I always say, "Two can feather birds as cheap together as one flock can live of." It's this understanding of marriage that's really the secret of my success. In fact, the reason I'm writing this article is because my friend Paul Whiteman said I owe it to the world. "Gracie," he said, "why don't you tell the husbands and wives of America how you make George's life so interesting and exciting. I'm sure it would make them all feel much happier about their own matrimonial affairs."

「なる」である

"Two can live as cheap as one," says America's dizziest housewife. "I mean if they just take turns eating"

by Gracie Allen

is food, even though I don't feel a bit hungry just now. Food is a big factor in a happy marriage. If there wasn't any food we'd have to find some other way to spend the time we've been accustomed to spending on meals and most of us have too much leisure as it is. All men like to be surprised with their food if it isn't too much of a surprise. For instance there's my special cheese sauce which always catches George unawares so to speak. Sometimes I put it in his soup - sometimes on a salad - and the other night I served it to him on some pound cake.

"That shows how much you know about cooking. Of course you have to keep putting in one finger to see that the sauce is warm enough."

Without marriage George and I wouldn't have a home for our darling little son, Herman. Of course, we aren't Herman's real parents but we love him just as much as if he were our own baby monkey. And I really believe that saying that people who live together begin to look alike. We've only had little Herman with us about six months and George is beginning to look more like him every day.

Another very important thing in a happy marriage is to have complete confidence in each other. I know that when I was first married I made myself very unhappy by suspecting George unjustly. The thing that aroused my suspicion was that my half of our salary was one-fifth as much as George's half. Until he explained I didn't realize that he has to take most of our salary - otherwise he couldn't list me as a dependent on his income-tax return. He even has to deduct an extra $400 a year from my half on account of our little son, Herman.

But married happiness isn't all taxes, recipes for cheese sauce and relatives. Two other big problems in running a home are (1) Dust and (2) Visitors Who Won't Go Home. Of course, in the case of dust, many people think they have the perfect solution - sweeping it under the rug. I, for one, think this is a terrible thing to do, especially when there is so much more room under the sofa.

Trumped Out

But visitors are much harder than dust. After all, there's no place at all that you can sweep visitors. I've got a system, though. Suppose the Hathaways come to call on you, the way they did on us the other night. All you have to do is follow my system. At midnight George and I went into the bathroom and brushed our teeth, took a bath and put the cat out. But the Hathaways didn't quite get the hint, so at one o'clock we turned out all the lights. But still they sat there, so we played our trump card.

"Mr. Hathaway," we said, "what is your address?" He said: "Twenty-three South Newton Avenue."

So George and I put on our coats, called a taxi and went there. In that way, all four of us had a good night's sleep.

Well, I think that just about covers all the problems of housekeeping. Oh, yes, I almost forgot mice. I suppose I should give you some rules for mice. But on the other hand, it's very hard to get mice to follow rules, so maybe we'd better forget it.

Speaking of rules, here are a few which are for husbands only. The reason I emphasize them for husbands only is because they're actually for wives and this will insure wives reading them.

Rule No. 1: Be sweet and affectionate. Many wives are only affectionate when they want some money - but then again, that's often enough.

Rule No. 2: Don't let your husband monopolize your life. I know a Hollywood girl who's been married 11 times in 15 years but her married life has been very happy because she's had the same grand cook all that time. Rule No. 3: - Oh, excuse me a minute. George just came in to look over the rules I'm writing, and he says that

So the first thing I'm going to talk about

Lady Fingers

"GRACIE." he said, "this sauce is delicious. How did you make it?"

"Why, George," I said, "it's very simple." And I showed him the recipe. Here it is, and all you have to do is heat the whole thing slowly in a saucepan:

1 Pinch Salt
ger
. Cheese
ger

"That's very interesting," George said, "but what's this '1 finger' business you keep putting in?"

"Oh, George," I said, and I had to laugh.

But to get back to marriage. You seem to have so much more when you're married - more friends, more relatives to share. Besides myself, I brought George three sisters, four brothers, one father, one mother. five aunts, two uncles, one grandmother on my mother's side, a grandfather on my father's side and another one who's strictly neutral. George is luckier than most people because he already had dozens of relatives of his own and relatives are one thing you can't replace - at least, nobody ever does.

I've forgotten to put down the most important rule of all for happiness.

Rule No. 1: BUY UNITED STATES WAR BONDS AND STAMPS!

B ARTHOLOMEW MASON, aged twenty, lately commissioned Second Lieutenant in the U.S. Army Air Corps, home on leave, stood at attention in front of the long mirror in his mother's bedroom.

The silver wings above his left pocket glittered as Lt. Mason paced smartly away from his dazzling reflection, turned, and approached the glass once more.

He halted. He cracked his heels together. He saluted himself. And then he did it all over again.

The uniform was new. The wings were new. And Bart Mason was a new man. "Oh, boy," he said softly. "Oh, boy."

His mother entered. "You look like your father looked," she said, and Bart knew she was remembering another war. "He was so elegant in his uniform — I had to marry it."

That absurd joke was music to Bart's ears. At this very moment he was counting on his. uniform to do what tweeds had never done — make him highest ranking officer in the heart of Miss Penny Nichols.

His mother must have read his thoughts — a disconcerting habit she had — because she said, "Poor Penny."

"Poor Penny?" repeated Bart, panicked. "Why poor Penny?"

His mother laughed. "She hasn't a chance at the party tonight in the face of all that splendor. Braced for it, maybe she could resist you, but there's not another lad in town with anything but a private's uniform. You beat them all to the draw, didn't you, handsome? Poor little Penny."

Bart grinned. So his mother saw through his plans, and she was building up the old ego for him. She knew he'd always been tongue-tied as a giraffe around Penny. She was trying to tell him he had a clear ceiling, and for gosh sake to fly high, wide and handsome when he had the chance.

SURE, he'd try, but the odds were he'd be as dumb as ever with Penny. She was so darned pretty, with her yellow-curls caught up with colored bows, and sweet, with her soft laughter like doves in the eaves. Just the thought of her overwhelmed Bart with the old shyness. He could manage a P-40 at 400 miles per hour, but a little upstart of a girl gave him jitters inside and out. If only he knew how he stood with her; but he'd never asked for fear of hearing the wrong answer. Until he'd gone off to train, each of Penny's suitors - Bart and his three best friends - appeared to receive the same amount of attention, though it sometimes seemed to Bart's fevered eye that when she looked in his direction, she didn't really see him at all.

won. I'm won." She kissed him swiftly, and gave him a shove.

Bart's progress down the street was purposely slow; he meant to make a late entrance and knock the room cold with his getup. It wouldn't be a big party. Over the phone Penny had said, "Oh, Bart, what fun you're here! I'll round up the boys for a reunion." That meant five altogether — Penny, Bart, and his three chums.

Bart was the only one of the gang

who had foresworn college to join the Army. The others wanted to, but their fathers weren't old Army men like his dad, and hadn't understood the need to get going quick. "A diploma first," they had said.

At last Bart turned up the Nichols' brick walk. Once on the porch, he could hear laughter from the sitting room. Noiselessly he moved to one of the windows and peered in. Penny was at the piano, the three boys grouped around her — Scott, Jason, and Jim, all in plain old suits, tweed and flannel.

Bart, in khaki and gabardine, swelled with pride, tasting his inevitable triumph.

They were singing college songs.

It was all so familiar, and, for Bart, full of nostalgia, that his mind got away from him. Those were the boys he'd grown up with, from spitballs to their first highballs, girl-hating to girl-chasing, multiplication tables to college algebra. He visualized them in the uniforms they would soon wear. Together still, though separated, he and they would fight this war and win it.

But for this brief interim, through no fault of theirs, Bart was different from the rest. Until this minute, they'd all had the same chance with Penny, and may the best man win. Now a uniform would disguise Bart as the best man; maybe it was going to win the girl. The man inside it had nothing to do with the winning at all.

Out loud Bart said, "Oh, nuts. All's fair in love and war." But was > it? Bart didn't know much about love, but he'd learned plenty about war, and all wasn't fair by a long shot. Was Hitler fair? Was Pearl Harbor fair? Bart knew the answer.

Was it the same with love? Was it any more fair to take his advantage and win Penny because by chance he possessed an unfair weapon? Bart knew the answer to that too.

ALL his elation was gone. He didn't want to go in there dressed to the ears. He didn't want to cheat his friends. And he didn't want Penny to love a uniform.

He wanted her to love Bart, in mufti or out.

The front door opened. Penny's small figure came onto the porch. Bart moved into the shadows.

Penny went to the steps and peered down the street.

"Penny!" whispered Bart through the darkness.

She whirled, and ran to him. "Oh, Bart, I thought you'd never come!"

"I — " he said, and could go no further. He was dumb with love.

"Oh, Bart," she said once more. "I've missed you so!"

And then, before he knew it was going to happen, her arms were tight around his neck, and her lips on his mouth that no longer needed to speak.

All in the middle of that kiss Bart knew two things: He knew that under cover of night Penny couldn't see him, so his uniform had nothing to do with this; and he knew that until here and now Penny had been as tongue-tied as he.

It's the difference between what I call "raw" powder and "finished" powder

or Lady Eather

Does THE POWDER you use help hide little lines in your face? Does it help hide little freckles and other skin-faults? Does it give your skin that lovely smooth finish that looks so young and fresh?

Lady Esther Powder does – and here's the reason! It's made a new way, by a method so different that the government has granted an exclusive patent on it! This method makes the difference between what I call "raw" powder and exquisitely finished powder.

Texture is much finer!

You see, Lady Esther Face Powder is twice-blended. First it's just mixed, in the usual way-and its texture is that of ordinary powder. Or "raw" powder, as I call it. But then it goes through a second blending-my patented TWIN-HURRICANE blending. particle of powder is shattered into tiny, tiny fragments! This method of blending makes the texture of Lady Esther Face Powder much smoother and finer-much more flattering to your skin-than was ever possible by ordinary methods.

Shades are different, too

But here's the most important difference! Instead of being just mixed in, the color is blown in by TWIN HURRICANES! That's why the Lady Esther shades are so much richer -why they make your skin look much more interesting.

To see these thrilling differences for yourself, on your own skin, just try Lady Esther Face Powder! You'll see at a glance what I mean when I say my new-texture powder makes ordinary powder seem "raw"!

How to find your Lucky Shade

Send your name and address for the 7 new shades of Lady Esther Face Powder. Try them all! When you come to the one that's most flattering to your skin, you'll say, "This is really my lucky shade!"

And Now, Fruitleggers!

HE last war, with its aftermath of Prohibition, produced a new generation of drinkers. The grilled door of the speakeasy opened to old and young alike - and very much alike they proved to be. Capitalists and collegians shared the same dubious distillation, and the Colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady were sisters over the gin. Thousands who had been quite content with root beer or ginger ale, were coaxed into their cups by the fascination of the forbidden; bending the elbow was a gesture of defiance before it became a conditioned reflex.

And now it looks as if the present war might produce a new generation of eaters. Deprivation has altered our gastronomic standards and given us a fresh set of appetites. The gourmet who once scorned anything less than a registered brook trout, now goes into ecstasies over a humble unpedigreed Norwegian sardine. He can still get the brook trout whenever he wants it; but the sardine is one of a rapidly diminishing stock, and its tin casket is guarded as carefully as any miser's hoard. Authentic Swiss cheese is doled out in thin slices, like gold leaf in price and texture. Tuna fish is so expensive that many delicatessens are making their chicken sandwiches out of chicken.

No Pistachios

ALL these are luxuries we can very well do without. But that doesn't keep us from desiring them with an urgency we have seldom felt before. For instance, I never used to care much for pistachio nuts. They always seemed to be mostly shell, and the insides tasted like something that had begun to decay before it got ripe.

But last week I bought a box of assorted nuts, and as I worked my way through the pecans and filberts and cashews — there were too many cashews, as usual — I became conscious that something was missing: there were no pistachios. By the time I had finished the box, a pistachio was the one nut in the world I really craved. It still is; but apparently there are no more pistachios coming from wherever it is they come from. Another dwindling delicacy is bananas. The banana has always been regarded as one of the more plebeian fruits, esteemed by small children with hearty appetites, and occasionally eaten by adults to relieve the monotony of a railroad journey. Its flavor is more pudding-like than piquant. Though poets have celebrated the grape and the pomegranate, they waste no words on the banana.

Bananas Up

Now, however, the banana is in a class with golden caviar. Passing Benny's fruit stand the other day, I noticed that the banana tray was empty except for one small blackened bunch. "How much?" I inquired, idly curious.

"Twenty cents a pound," said Benny apologetically, "but I don't think you'd want 'em."

"I don't think so either," I agreed. "Twenty cents a pound for those! Why, it's ridiculous!"

"Sure it is," said Benny with an eager nod. "How about some nice fresh rozzberries?"

But on the way home I got to thinking it over. Anything that cost 20 cents a pound, I reasoned, must be pretty good. No doubt there were hidden virtues in bananas which I had never appreciated. And quite suddenly a new hunger gripped me, that only bananas could satisfy. I hurried back to the fruit stand. The banana tray was empty.

"Sorry," said Benny. "No more. Fact is, I was sorta saving that last bunch for an old customer." He added, "You really want some bananas?"

"Oh, I do!" I cried earnestly. "Well, listen." Benny took me aside and thrust a grimy card into my hand. "There's a little drug store up on Third Avenue where you can get a genu-wine old-fashioned banana split — with pistachio ice cream and crushed pineapple. It'll set you back six bits a dish, but it's worth it. Real prewar stuff! Just say Benny sent you." — WEARE HOLBROOK

P.S. Spinach is only four cents a pound. Ah, the irony of it, and the calcium, and the phosphates!

THE PERFECT 36

They're the 3-dozen Rockettes, who dress as precisely as they do their dances ...

HE 36 famed Radio City Music Hall Rockettes are an optical illusion. Look at them from the audience and each girl seems to be the twin of the Rockette next to her - same height, same weight, same figure, same costume. But watch them at rehearsal and it's a different story. Clothes make the women: it's the costumes which give that impression of 36 facsimiles.

Actually, the Rockettes range in height from five feet two to five feet seven; in weight, from 112 pounds to 120; in age, from 17 to 23. Some are long-waisted, others short-waisted. There are wide variations in shoulders, length of arms and legs.

But Music Hall designers and costumers have discovered how to make them look exactly alike from out front: they know what type of costumes are best; how to graduate skirt lengths, how to achieve a uniform waist, shoulder and head-dress line.

Aside from the problem of making them look alike, the mere costuming of the Rockettes is a major worry all by itself. Materials must be analyzed for colors, light-absorbing and reflecting qualities. Bold patterns are best - delicate ones fade out under the lights.

> Fittings are a problem since the girls must be fitted when not at work. Worst headache is when plans for a new show are changed and the designers and costumers start all over again. But they're used to it: they've created 4,000 different designs for Music Hall shows, made over 60,000 costumes. In one show, for example, there were 50 designs, 425

DO YOU KNOW HOW TO STAY YOUNG?

Ask Chocolate-King Hershey, who "quit" at 70 - and is now going strong at 85

UR fighters in the torrid climates of the Far East carry in their pockets a new secret weapon. The Quartermaster's Department calls it United States Army Field Ration D. It's a chocolate bar that does the impossible: It withstands melting in the most sizzling heat. It's charged with 150 international units of vitamin B-1 to guard against beriberi and other tropical diseases. It's crammed with 600 calories of nourishment, a sustaining meal to tide over a starving flier, soldier or marine when no other food can be had.

Score one for Uncle Sam, and in the same breath, for Milton S. Hershey, of chocolate fame. who celebrates his 85th birthday this Sunday.

When the Quartermaster's Department faced the problem of an emergency field ration that would stand up in tropical weather it seemed like a stopper. But not for long. Someone suggested Hershey.

Solution

WHY not?" responded Mr. Hershey, who has quizzed himself through hundreds of man-sized posers. With Col. Paul T. Logan, delegated from the Army, and S. F. Hinkle, chief chemist of the company, experiments got under way at the Hershey plant. Result was the day when the company, working on three shifts, completed a shipment of 90,000 bars to be tried out by soldiers in far-flung tropical ports. Today -- with the U.S. government owner of the patent huge emergency rations of the bar are being shipped to our fighters all over the world

Why? asks Mr. Hershey. Or, more often, Why not?

If you were walking along the Atlantic City boardwalk a year ago you might have seen a grayhaired man - sixtyish to you demonstrating a new kind of soap powder. Sleeves rolled up, arms deep in suds, the poor fellow was apparently working hard to earn the $20 a week they probably paid him. But the man was no demonstrator. This was Hershey. He was doing an experiment with his new product, soap.

They aren't old-man businesses. They are young-man enterprises. The nation's call for food sent "M. S.," as he is affectionately called in Hershey, headlong into frozen foods. All summer long he had boys at the Industrial School up to their ears in quick freezing of all the surplus peas, green beans, lima beans, corn, asparagus and fruits from the school's broad farmlands.

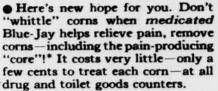

M. S. has never learned that an old man should have old thoughts. In fact, he has not yet learned that he is old. He's too busy running into things that puzzle him and then going on a one-man hunt to dig up the answers.

his table he will say: "It'll take some time to digest these facts. But we've got the question clear. Now one of us has got to find the answer."

There was a real poser in Cuba, where some thousands of acres of Hershey cane produced sugar, and where quota restrictions limited the amount of cane a farmer could harvest. Since sugar was virtually the only crop of the cane-growers, it meant many a sad, lean year.

The farmers' plight kept M. S. awake nights. But next time there was a planting, peanuts sprouted around the rim of the cane. Today peanuts are a ranking crop of the island, and the oil refinery is humming. Millions of pounds of peanuts come from the ground each year -and many who were idle and hungry, are busy and fed.

A quarter of a century ago, with little ado and no publicity, Hershey put all his money into boys, founding the school where today 1,000 orphans live in homelike cottages. At one stroke of his pen he gave to this future boy empire his entire personal fortune - vast holdings in the Hershey Chocolate Company, and Hershey town itself - lock, stock and barrel.

The man who was once a Pennsylvania farm boy cares little for luxury. He makes his home in the three rooms to which he whittled down his house after the death of his wife in 1915. The rest of the comfortable mansion has been turned over to his employees for a clubhouse. And his three rooms are warmly alive with company young and old - his own people. For M. S. gets a rich social life out of lively give-and-take with the men who have helped and are helping to build his business.

Hershey's parents were both Mennonites, which is another way of saying that thrift is ingrained in him. Squandering of time and ideas seems to him incredible waste. He hates to see long lines of people waiting to see some chief, himself included. So his busy day is often a staccato of informal engagements. As each one finishes, that conferee telephones the one that is to come next.

Question

THERE'S a reason for Mr. Hershey's being the original Doctor Quiz. The method changed his whole life. He chalked up three failures before he reached 40. "Why?" he finally asked himself. Why should other men get ahead and not he? When he had finished this quiz of his life, he really had the answer. He had been going ahead without having all the facts. Since then his whole life has been dedicated to the philosophy of asking why. Illness is no stopper to this questioning mind. Lately he was laid low with a cold. The doctor shipped him off to a seaside resort. Sympathizing friends came to commiserate. They found him prone in bed, waiting for bulletins -- but not on temperature. Below, along the boardwalk railing, sat his nurse, in a rolling chair, notebook in hand. She was compiling statistics; how many went in the boardwalk Hershey soap exhibit and how many dared to pass it.

radio, he journeyed to Chicago for the broadcast. The program over, he vanished without a trace. Two days later he turned up in Hershey. It developed he had gone on a busman's holiday. How do they do it in Boys Town? He could not resist dropping down to visit Father Flanagan's Boys Town, near Omaha. He was guided around by a voluble youngster who told him the fascinating all. His thanks at the conclusion was a banknote that left the lad gaping. But no name was given.

SERVICE MEN LIKE MAIL!

Send them news and packages from home. Write "V..._letters" to those abroad

by Emily Post

AVING long done my best to discourage young girls from writing too many letters to their boy friends, I must now go so far as to urge them not only to write to them while the boys are in training camp, but to make it a point to send "V..._Mail" letters as often as possible to those overseas.

But before taking up overseas mail in detail, let me say a few words about mail to camps or posts over here. The easiest and most welcome letter to send to John Neighbor is one supplemented with items clipped from his favorite home newspaper.

As for gifts, nothing takes the place of a carton of cigarettes or a can of tobacco. A nice thing to send a man in training camp — and perhaps even overseas — is a Round-Robin box from a dozen or so neighbors, each enclosing a few chocolate bars, packages of chewing gum, rolls of lozenges, or fruit balls; and each signing his name.

An enclosure in your letter, of course, can only be sent in regular mail, and this cannot go as fast as " $V \dots - Mail$ ." Any letter of importance is now sent by this newest, quickest method.

Uncle Sam's forces with "V ... - Mail"

Even those who live on an R.F.D. route can obtain a "V  $\dots$  Mail" form from the local post office. Be sure to follow the directions given in the form, and this additional one: Paste a three-cent stamp in the space indicated.

The Letter Becomes a Film

A LETTER in this form goes to the nearest post office or licensed censor and bureau where the micro-filming is done, with the result that approximately 50,000 letters can be transported in one small box. The microfilm-letter form on which you write is 8 inches square. You write only on one side — as on a telegraph blank. The form you write on is destroyed and a microfilm sent in its place and photographed back into a letter at its destination.

As to packages: Since of necessity regulations are changing every day, it should be noted that these rulings are of August 8, 1942. According to the Information desk at the New York General Post Office and to the Bureau of Army and Navy information, the sending of packages is permitted, within the limits of the following exactions: No more than one package a week from any one person. All packages sent out must be directed to the A.P.O. number of the addressee and marked "ship at local rate." Food must be in sealed, air-tight containers. Five pounds are the limit of weight of food packages, with 2 pounds the maximum allowance for any one item in the package. If the content is not food, 11 pounds are allowed. The package itself must not be more than 18 inches long, nor measure more than 42 inches all the way round. Mark the contents plainly on the outside.

The Army and Navy Information Bureau asked me particularly to urge the families and friends of men overseas to "write them often and keep on writing," and not to be discouraged if a letter written last May arrives at the same time as one written in August. The post office is moving things through as expeditiously as possible — but this is War and delays are unavoidable.

Of course, there are certain "don'ts" as well as "do's," about what to write or send. Among the "don'ts" to a girl writing to a man, the principal one is: Don't write anything that could embarrass you were it left lying around for everyone to read.

Another "don't" is: Don't write any home news that will cause needless distress or worry. Don't say: "Your mother is better, but she looks very frail," or: "I hear your father's business is about closed down." Bad news should come only from one who can give it authoritatively and in full detail. Nothing is more cruel than bad news that does not tell what is wrong.

One last word — although the letter written to the one who is dearest to you is quite outside of the province of this article — it can do no harm to remind you not to sob over him, nor to emphasize the anxiety with which you are praying that he "will come through safely." Pray in your own heart, by all means. But don't pray out loud to him. Above all, don't say: "If you ever come back — ". Tell him how much you love and think of him, not how miserable you are without him. Don't write how brave you are, either.

What hair-do's for wartime? Here are the creations of two Hollywood experts WAR-DORN Hair-Do: For ways to take care of this fashion-baby, let's turn to Hollywood, its place of birth, and see what two famous studio stylists have to say. Both rate screen billing along with the bigname stars, whose heads they dress.

SIDNEY GUILAROFF gets credit for his sleight-of-hand trick on such famous heads as Greta Garbo's, Greer Garson's, Marsha Hunt's. Cut hair short, he says. Short hair, chic for any woman from sixteen to sixty, needs no pins, combs, stickum or fussing fingers, and it slicks up quickly.

Marsha Hunt

Short hair does need a good permanent, if you haven't born-curly locks. Curls, when yanked at the ends, should be able to snap back to the head, like tightly coiled springs. Upflung curls, if they are to stay on the up and up, must have dirt, which is weight, lifted often. A shampoo, that lifts all weight and at the same time curbs flyaways, can be had when you combine two types of cleansers: The first, a soapy liquid. The other. used as a follow-up after the soap is rinsed out, is a soapless oily shampoo.

To revive wilted curls, wind them, one at a time, around your finger, nail down with pins, and tie your head up with a damp net.

If you want your hair to look as though it grew that way, try brushing out the hairdresser's work, as Katharine Hepburn does. After she has been shampooed, set and dried, her hair gets brushed for an hour. This explains her superbly-casual hair-do, and the sheen that hits you in the eye. make-believe hair pieces on hand; those with a few twists of the wrist will turn a Botticelli cherub into a femme fatale. When Marsha Hunt grows weary of her short hair, she tucks it in with bobbie pins, and clips on a grand-lady chignon.

PERC WESTMORE, director of make-up and hair-styling for a leading film company, is responsible for, among others, Bette Davis's, Ann Sheridan's and Alexis Smith's war-styled coifs and their simplified upkeep. He scorns curls and covered ears. Likes to see little pink auricles exposed, and hair smoothed out in subtle waves. Likes five inches of length in hair to allow for waving, which he says gives the head a newer, sleeker appearance, moulds hair closer to the head for simplified upkeep.

Waves can be easily revived between visits to the hairdresser, he says, by dampening slightly, pressing them in with your fingers, sticking in combs.

If you need to cushion your waves, try wads of crepe hair. If you run into a war-shortage of this soft, malleable stuff, build up your fullness by French combing or "ratting."

Dispense with bangs. They're either an untidy mess or a nuisance to keep. If yours are in the growing-out stage, comb them up and back in a reverse bang, as Bette Davis does. Have them set in two waves, and set your pin-curl ends so that they'll do a disappearing act into the furrows. If

Hair-partings are news. Make the most of yours, no matter what shape or length you choose, just so long as it isn't straight.

HEESE FOR TOMMIES: Since March, 1941, the U.S. Government has purchased 300,000,000 pounds of American cheese for export under the Lease-Lend Act: and the safe arrival of a cheese shipment is headline news for Britishers. Meat is scarce and strictly rationed in the British Isles; and cheese - though also rationed - is one of the best and most economical meat substitutes. For his supper a soldier in the British Army gets cheese, bread, jam and tea - likes it and thrives on it. A Welsh coal miner depends on it to help keep the brawn in his arms, and commonly consumes almost a pound of cheese a day. A plain, ordinary Englishman eats as much cheese as the civilian rationing allows.

U.S. NEEDS US STRONG: That is the Victory slogan of our own Government's National Nutrition Program. Important among the eight groups of food which Uncle Sam is thus asking us to eat everyday, is milk in any form, including cheese, which has the essential nutritional qualities of milk itself.

Ordinary American cheddar cheese is rich in calcium and phosphorus. It is a very good source of the important riboflavin - sometimes called Vitamin B: or Vitamin G. It even contains a little of the hard-to-get thiamin and plentiful Vitamin A.

But that is not all. There is the matter of proteins. Cheese supplies "complete" proteins of excellent quality. Do a little simple arithmetic and you find that, ounce for ounce, it gives you almost exactly as much protein as meat gives. Eat 1% ounces of roast pork, for example, and you get 131/2 grams of proteins. Eat the identical amount of cheese and you get 13 grams.

CHEESE IN AMERICA: Right now in the U.S.A., we are short on meat and long on cheese. One solution is to substitute cheese for our vanishing favorites among beef or pork or lamb. Not that we serve cheese on a meat platter and carve off portions as we would a steak; but that, cooked in special dishes, and served in its fancier forms for dessert, it is good to eat and is nutritious. Also it is relatively inexpensive, and there is plenty of it.

In 1938, cheese manufacturers produced about 500,000,000 pounds of American cheddar cheese. But when John Bull put in his request for 250,000,000 pounds a year, the U.S. Government said to the American cheese industry: "Please step up production." And they did.

How long will the surplus last? No one can quite predict - since the answer depends partly on men like Henry J. Kaiser who are turning out boats to carry cargoes to our

DON'T FOOL YOURSELF: We are making as good cheese in the United States as ever was imported from abroad. With controlled temperatures and humidity, we equal anything from France or Switzerland.

For a number of years, Wisconsin has held first place as the producer of American cheddar cheese. The first cheese maker was doubtless the wife of one of the Swiss colonists who began to settle there between 1840 and 1860. It was not very delicious cheese, for it was made of skimmed milk. It was coarse in the mouth, bluish in color, but nourishing in a poor man's stomach.

The colonists' first idea was to grow wheat, but the chinch bugs destroyed crop after crop.

"After that it was either cheese or nothing; happily we got cheese," says one of their historians.

So they built cheese houses; began to use whole milk in cheese; and almost unwittingly started a new industry at home. In 1869 Swiss Nick Gerber built the first real cheese factory in Green County, Wisconsin. Gradually other families also built factories, and today the same families in the third and fourth generation are still making cheddar cheese.

Other heavy cheese-producing states are New York, Minnesota, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Texas, Washington, Idaho, Oregon and, increasingly since the war, the Southern States.
