East May Lack Oil for Heat, Official Warns

Associated Press. TEN CENTS.

Lays Acute Shortage To Failure of U.S. To Formulate Plan

By JAMES Y. NEWTON. A high Government official declared last night that of the three pressing problems-manpower, food and oil-now awaiting decision at the White House, oil was the most acute and that failure of the Government to formulate a plan for allocating petroleum supplies may mean freezing temperatures in many Eastern homes this winter. Although transportation facilities have been limited since shortly after the outbreak of war, oil has been extravagantly and sometimes wastefully used. There has been and still is, he said, no over-all plan for dividing the Eastern supplies of petroleum among the various users.

There is no plan for determining how much of the East's petroleum will go to the military, how much will be used for transportation, industrial plants or heating. While there is some rating of the essentiality of the users, the rating is poorly defined. Under the present planless state, he added, it is possible for industry or the armed services to dip far too deeply into the limited oil stocks at the expense of the other users which are no less essen-

Traced to African Campaign.

Oil officials have declared the current critical petroleum shortage is due to military needs for the African campaign and the inability to move as much oil East by tank car as had been hoped. The Federal official said proper planning would have anticipated those eventualities and that considerable savings could have been made by tighter control over consumption before the situation became desperate.

The War Production Board undoubtedly has the power to make plans to allocate petroleum among the different essential users, but has taken no action, he said. Responsibility for handling the oil problem is scattered among a number of agencies, including WPB, the Office of Price Administration and the Office of Petroleum Co-ordinator. The agencies have attacked the problem piece-meal, resulting frequently in contradictory statements

Maladjustments have been the inevitable result of this lack of planning and co-ordination of supply and demand, the official added. Oil for home heating has suffered from the grabbing which has resulted from the absence of a plan.

No Decision on Quantity. While WPB delegated to OPA authority to ration gasoline and fuel oil, there has been no decision as District draft officials will to the quantity of gasoline and oil seek permission to register all to be rationed, no breakdown as to youths who reach their 18th the parts of the over-all stockpile birthday before the end of this which should go to these uses, the year on a single day instead of official declared. OPA, acting on orders from WPB, began cutting consumption. The first was a reduction in value of "A" gasoline coupons from four to three gallons. The oil is believed to have come from a 19,000-gallon storage tank, owned by L. P. Stuart & Bros., located at the foot of Thirteenth street S.E. Curtis Steuart, a member of the firm, said yesterday that an engineer turned the wrong valve on the tank, causing oil to flow into a surrounding concrete moat. About 200 gallons then seeped into the river, he estimated.

Mr. Holland is from Kansas City, and, having headed two small businesses-the Double Rotary Sprinkler Corp. and the Holland Corp.-he knows intimately the problems of such a manufacturer. He has served as president of Mid-Central Associated Defense Industries. Inc., a pool of 32 concerns organized in July, 1941, to get defense contracts. Mr. Holland's pool included steel, glass and aluminum foundries, a pattern maker, machine shops, a woodworking shop, box manufacturers, a tool and die shop. Their Craft Destroyed Off Buna, They Both Refuse Any Help

By MURLIN SPENCER. Associated Press War Correspodent

WITH ALLIED FORCES NEAR BUNA, New Guinea, Nov. 19 (Delayed).—The officer at headquarters who writes the communiques used a half dozen words Wednesday to tell how Japanese bombers sank two Allied trawlers off the Buna coastal area, but he didn't mention that two Allied generals were aboard the trawlers and had to swim ashore.

One general watched the bombers swooping in for their attack and called for a rifle. He blazed away until he was forced to leave the sinking craft. The other also took the attack with fine disdain and remained at a commanding post. Both officers had to swim nearly half a mile to shore with the men and both refused any help, insisting that others needed it more. Their names are still a military secret. Lt. W. H. Thackston of Anderson,

C., telling of the experience, said that "as soon as one man reached shore, he would get his breath and then go back into the water to help some one else.' The Japanese bombers also at-

TEACHES FOREIGN LANGUAGES IN YOUR HOME — QUICKLY, EASILY, NATURALLY

And at Amazingly Low Cost!

Prepare yourself for a better job in Government or Private Industry . . . LEARN LAN-GUAGES. As instant communication and accelerated transportation bring the world to our doorstep, people who know languages are in demand. Knowledge of language is one of the highest cultural attainments—a constant source of pleasure—the key to new friends and learning.

FIRST YOU LISTEN-THEN YOU SPEAK

The Linguaphone Method of learning to speak a language is based on a simple principle: First you listen, then you speak. Hearing the clear voices of native speakers in natural conversation, the listener, child or adult, reproduces the words as readily as repeating a melody. You play these records on your own phonograph—in the comfort of your own home. They bring the living sounds and spirit of another world to your fireside.

AN APPROVED TEACHING METHOD Many authorities in language instruction call the Linguaphone Method the simplest and best way to acquire a new language. You'll be surprised how quickly Lingua-phone gives you the "feel" of a new language. You'll find yourself speaking and understanding it right from

MANY PROMINENT LINGUAPHONE USERS Thousands of notable men and women of all nationalities and walks of life have studied languages the Linguaphone way and praise it highly. Among them are H. G. Wells, George Bernard Shaw, Alexander Woollcott, Sinclair Lewis, Maurice Maeterlinck, Emil Ludwig, Catherine Cornell, Paul Muni, Sylvia Sidney, Joan Bennett and others. Linguaphone Courses have been ordered by leading universities, and many Army, Navy, Air Corps and Marine training centers and schools. High government officials and top-ranking officers of the armed

U. S. Had Inaccurate Report on Strength Of Japanese Navy

Foes Puzzled on Size Now Because of Pre-War Errors

By the Associated Press. Every important naval engagement churns up a wave of speculation as to how the balance of sea power has been altered between the Axis countries and the United Nations. This has been particularly true of the recent United States victories over the Japanese Navy. No question is more vital among the issues which will determine final victory. And no question, in the present state of secrecy in Axis and Allied admiralties alike, is more

In the Atlantic and elsewhere, it has driven the subs almost entirely out of American waters and with Allied ships is delivering the goods to the British, Russian, African and other war fronts.

To do this job the United States had at the start of the war a oneocean Navy built and a two-ocean Navy on the way, and they shaped up in this manner:

It at once defends and depends on a highly intricate system of island bases from which spreads an umbrella of landbased aircraft to shield the surface ships. But the Japanese navy was so badly battered in the Coral Sea, at Midway and among the Solomons that it may even now be a crippled force incapable of recovering any effective striking power before this war ends.

Following is the Japanese naval picture based on what was reported here when the war started:

Turin Raid So Heavy RAF Has Difficulty Locating Targets

200 to 300 Warplanes Believed to Have Taken Part in Night Attack

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 21.-A flery raid on Turin, the RAF's heaviest so far in its growing offensive against Italy, spread such a blanket of fire over the northern arsenal city last night that the raiders had difficulty finding clear spaces for targets, the British disclosed today.

This assault was comparable in size to an "average" raid on Germany, usually carried out by between 200 and 300 planes, well-informed sources believed.

After giving Turin, the home of Italy's Fiat, Caproni bomber and other war works, only two nights of respite from their devastating 2-ton bombs, a heavy RAF group returned in good weather and, indicative of the punishment loosed on the city, one bomber group alone dropped 54 2-ton bombs and 110,000 pounds of incendiaries in just less than an hour. This was an average of one 2-ton bomb a minute and one 30pound incendiary a second.

Ran Out of Target Space. So thorough was the job, the Air Ministry said, that the RAF bombers ran out of target space- and planes arriving in the later waves their bombs amid the explosions and fires already started. The captain of one four-engined Halifax which reached Turin about midway in the attack said he had to make four "dummy runs" before his bombardier could pick out clear spots at which to aim.

Three of the bombers were missing, a communique said. German fighters were aloft all the way from the French coast deep into Southern France, the Air Ministry said, but in spite of weather made to order for interception-thick clouds below the bombers and a bright moon above them-the Nazis had "little suc-

Axis Corps Is Chased Into Approaches of El Agheila Defile

CAIRO, Nov. 21.-Striking swiftly beyond newly-captured Bengasi, the British 8th Army squeezed Marshal Erwin Rommel's chastised Africa Corps into the approaches of the El Agheila defile tonight in a race to deliver a knockout to the hapless Axis survivors before they could burrow into the natural defenses of that 30-mile-wide Libyan coastal

British forward elements, now nore than half way to Tunisia from their starting point at El Alamein in Egypt, caught up with the Axis rear guard at Agedabia, some 70 miles from El Agheila, yesterday. With the 8th Army maintaining its average advance of 30 miles a day, it appeared that the showdown clash on the heretofore unbreached El Agheila line was only a matter of Marshal Rommel was believed already to have gotten the main body of his broken army into the El Agheila area, which lies on the Gulf of Sirte along the border between Tripolitania and Cirenaica. Perilous Position.

With most of his tanks gone and with another opposing army behind him in Tunisia, his position was a perilous one despite El Agheila's strong points. But in all probability another major campaign with heavy fighting will have to be fought before the Axis is driven out of Africa Regardless of what Marshal Rommel does now, his headlong flight before the grimly pursuing British

Tin Becomes Indispensable War Material; Experts Agree on Vital Need for Salvage

D. C. Newspapermen Watch Detinning At Jersey Plant

Star Staff Correspondent SEWAREN, N. J., Nov. 21 .- The much-despised tin can, which once typified the cheap and ridiculous, is becoming more precious than

Ask a tin expert why America has a tin can salvage program and why tin, an element for which there is no satisfactory substitute, is an indispensable necessity in the successful prosecution of World War II and he'll remind you of the fol-

Without the tin can, lease-lend and military supply would fail. The tin can endures the cold of Iceland and the heat of Libya. It withstands bombing assaults. Glass containers don't.

off from their base. A visit to the Vulcan Detinning Co. here elicited this opinion from Gibson Buttfield, assistant to the president of the firm. Local salvage chiefs and War Production Board experts agree. Henry H. Buckman. who was technical counsel to a House sub-committee investigating the tin situation in 1935 and is one of the Nation's leading authorities on the subject, confirms the view. America's critical need for tin brought on by Japanese aggressions in the Far East, will, if unrelieved. touch every phase of twentieth century living and mechanized warfare within the not too distant future, according to Mr. Buckman. "Our tin shortage," he says, "and the need for tin salvage program cannot be exaggerated

DISTRICT TIN FOR U. S. WAR-This carload of approximately 43,000 pounds of tin cans left yesterday for the Vulcan Detinning Co. plant in Neville Island, near Pittsburgh. Almost 100,-000 pounds of tin cans have been shipped to detinners in two weeks, far behind schedule of approximately 450,000 pounds per month. Householders' cans are picked up twice weekly on garbage collection days. Dale Myers is shown in photo.

Vital for Engines. One could not build any kind of serviceable engine without tin. That just about covers all features of modern mechanical America and the mechanized action of World War II. Tin is important for many reasons, the two most significant of which can be summarized as fol-

1. Tin does not tarnish. Only one other element, aluminum, has this property. But aluminum does not have other properties of tin. 2. Tin has a certain "anti-friction" property, the existence of Pittsburgh, Vulcan's larger plant, which has long been known but the reasons for which remain obscure, even in the minds of metallurgists This property is akin to a lubricating quality. Tin keeps the effects of abrasion to a minimum.

Because tin is indispensable in the manufacture of motors and engines, the airplane, submarine, battleship and tank cannot run without it.

The bus and the streetcar which carry you to and from work daily can't operate without tin. Tin not only is needed in engines, but it is needed in keeping engines in repair. Even tin parts wear out eventually. They must be replaced. Component of Solder. Tin is needed in preserving food to prevent contamination from the corrosion of steel And it is needed as a component of solder, which is used in a thousand and one different ways. Solder is approximately half tin and half lead. In some instances, silver can substituted for tin in solder. But the melting point of silver is high compared to tin and silver solder will not work effectively on metals with low melting points, Briefly, the process can be scribed as follows: 1. Prepared tin cans are removed from railroad cars by grab buckets and dumped into baskets with a capacity of about 10 tons. 2. The 10 tons of tin cans are industries, where civilian producwhich dissolves the tin. The scrap wage of 75 cents an hour, an insteel is then baled for immediate crease of 1.7 from August and 12.5 shipment to steel mills.

3. After various chemical treatments, the tin is recovered by an electroplating process, which builds the reclaimed tin to the thickness of an inch on a rectangular sheet of steel approximately three feet wide by four feet tall.

4. The plates are lowered into an oil-fired furnace where the tin is melted off and cast into 100-pound 'pigs" (molds).

5. The tin is then allocated by the War Production Board to various tin users, where it is converted into materials without which America would find it difficult to wage a winning global war.

Central War Agency To Control Manpower do a good job and follow he is that type of man."

Eberhardt Regarded as Man Best Qualified To Head Organization

By JESSE O. IRVIN.

President Roosevelt has asked his confidential adviser, Judge Samuel Rosenman of the New York State Supreme Court, to draft an executive order setting up a central war agency to conprocurement, production and manpower, congressional sources said yesterday, adding that the order, which might be completed this week, would become effective December 7.

The sources said the Army would continue its control over procurement and would have an influential hand in selection of a civilian to head the agency and with the formulation of civilian manpower poli-

Second Report Ready. In this connection the WMC's Management-Labor Policy Committee is reported to have completed its second interim report and plans to submit it this week to Mr. McNutt. Informed sources said the committee in the report pays tribute to Gen. McSherry and Gen. Hershey for their outstanding work. The committee, it was said, would virtually rescind in the forthcoming report its recommendation calling for the consolidation of the selective service system with the manpower commission

The report would recommend, these sources added, certain administrative changes in the manpower organization. Mr. McNutt yesterday turned aside questions about a reorganization pending, he said, a possible formal announcement this week.

Officials said they did not know how many celaners this would make substantial.

Vacuum cleaners held by manufacturers, their affiliates and "private brand sellers" who have 500 or more cleaners remain frozen pending determination of how many of these machines are needed by the armed forces.

Studies have gone far enough to show that the armed forces do not need the machines held by retailers and wholesalers, it was explained. Officials said some of the manufacturers' stock also may be opened for public sale later on.

Express Buses Beating Scheduled Time for Trip

Pleased with the success of the two experimental express buses put into service on the Sixteenth street line this week, J. Preston Swecker, secretary of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association, yesterday reported that the actual running time of the buses was shorter than that scheduled by the Capital Transit Co.

Mr. Swecker said members of his association have timed the morning trips and that in no instance did it take longer than 30 minutes to travel from the northern terminus at Sixteenth street and Eastern avenue N.W. to the downtown terminus at Eleventh and C streets N.W. The schedule for this trip is 42 minutes.

The number of passengers using the new service, Mr. Swecker declared, is steadily increasing, although on the first few days the buses carried less than capacity The new buses run express between Sixteenth and Underwood streets N.W. and Eleventh and K streets N.W. on the southbound trip, and from Twelfth and K streets N.W. to Sixteenth and Underwood streets N.W. northbound

There are, at any rate, some signs that this may be so. The Germans are making no progress at Stalingrad, and in the North Caucasus the Russians appear to be on the offensive. Let us reverse our previous point of view on the campaign in the North Caucasus.

We have been accustomed to examine it from the standpoint of a German offensive with one arm trying to push down the Black Sea coast toward Tuapse and Battum while the other tries to batter its way into the Grozny oil fields and to seize the approaches to the great Georgian Military road at Ord-

Gen. Patton's Theory Cited. It is a favorite observation of Maj. Gen. George S. Patton, who now commands the American armored forces in North Africa, that the whole art of offensive warfare consists in holding your enemy by the nose while kicking him in the seat of the pants. If we consider the Russians in the Tuapse sector as holding the German Army in the North Causasus by the nose, let us speculate on what will happen if the seat of the German pants in the Nalchik area is kicked sufficiently hard.

Weygand Reported Being Held As Hostage to Replace Giraud

Germans Expected To Detain General In Fortress

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.-Gen Maxime Weygand, Allied generalissimo before the fall of the French Republic, has been arrested as a hostage to replace Gen. Henri Giraud in Koenigstein Fortress at the direction tion of war against Serbia touched of Joachim von Ribbentrop, German Foreign Minister; according to reliable information reaching New York from Europe

Gen. Giraud escaped from the Nazi prison late last spring, then went to North Africa where he joined American troops at the head of a fighting French column when Algeria was invaded.

Von Ribbentrop, according to advices, informed Marshal these Petain, French Chief of State, in a letter, that Gen. Giraud's departure meant he had broken a promise to Germany. Consequently, Germany could no longer accept the word of any French officer and would therefore take Gen. Weygand into eustody to play safe.

Gen. Weygand left Marshal Petain's house with his wife and son in Marshal Petain's motor car the night of November 12. The car was halted five miles from Vichy by a Gestapo car blocking the road. Gen. Weygand's son returned to Marshal Petain and told the marshal what had happened.

Gen. Petain nodded affirmatively War, Von Berchtold resigned as and replied he had just, been informed by a letter from Von Ribbentrop which arrived a few minutes after the Weygands had Gen. Weygand had first been ar-

Airfield Ground Crew Described as Unsung Heroes of Solomons

One of Flyers Just Back From Fighting Tells of Being Shot Down by Zero

By the Associated Press. SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21.-The unsung hero of the Solomons, said four young Marine Corps aviators just back from Guadalcanal, is the aviation ground force man at Henderson Field. He is a sweaty fellow who works day and night.

"You see," said Capt. Elmer G. Glidden, of West Roxbury, Mass., a dive bomber pilot, in an interview today, "Flying down there is a 24hour-a-day job.

"But we never could have kept in the air except for the ordnance crews and combat engineers, who kept the planes loaded for combat and filled up the craters the Jap bombs made in the field as fast as they were made, so that when we came in we had a place to land, load up and take off again. "Yes, those ground crews were

In full agreement with Capt. Glidden were Second Lts. Henry W. Hise, Shamrock, Tex., Dale M. Leslie, Madison, Fla., and Forest L. Martin, Memphis, Tenn.

All fought in the earlier stages of the battle which has just ended in rout for the Japanese.

Capt. Glidden was in one of the American flights which went to sea and brought about the ultimate destruction of a half-dozen Jap warships and transports.

Shot Down by Zero. Lt. Leslie was shot down by a Jap Zero while he was on a reconnaissance flight. He lived for 27 days, mostly on coconuts, behind the Japanese lines until he eventually came to a missionary's hut and from there made his way back to "The funny part of it is," he said, "I still like coconut pie. "As for being shot down-I never even saw that Zero until I heard my gunner shooting at it. But the Zero was on our tail, and while the gunner put into him the shots that eventually brought him down, he put three bursts into us. Those bursts killed my gunner and set our ship on fire. "As soon as I saw we were about to crash, I bailed out. I was about 700 feet up when I jumped and I close to shore, I saw that the land was just lousy with Japs. "So, I swam offshore again, and stayed there until dark-about six hours—then I came in again, crawled onto the beach, and made my way through the Jap lines.

Found Native Dugout. "Thereafter, traveling by night and hiding by day, I tried to get back to my outfit, living on nothing but coconuts the while. After some days I found a native dugout and took to the water again, I came to a deserted native village and tried to find the natives in the bush. When they saw me they yelled,

"Jap." and ran.
"But I yelled after them, 'No. American,' and they all swarmed out to meet me and I had to shake hands with the whole tribe.

"That's what they think of Americans - the Japs have mistreated them, you see.

"They took me to the missionary, and he gave me a feed I'll never forget. Boy, fried chicken and potatoes after a straight diet of coconuts! You can imagine how that tasted."

Lt. Leslie lost 40 pounds during his jungle trek, but gained 14 of it back while he rested three days at the missionary's hut.

Meanwhile, the poll tax repeal bill, which led to a seven-day filibuster by Southern Democrats, is slated to be laid aside after the Senate votes at 1 p.m. tomorrow on a motion to invoke the rarely used cloture rule, to limit debate. It was the general expectation at the Capitol last night that cloture will fail to muster the required twothirds, and Senate leaders already have agreed to drop the poll tax be $300,000,000,000 at the end of the fight for this Congress if that happens, realizing that without cloture the debate could go on until this Congress expires January 3. ## Training Program For Farm Workers Planned by U. S.

300 Will Be Given Instruction in Dairy Work as Experiment

By the Associated Press. The Agriculture Department will start next week an experimental program for recruiting and placing year-around farm workers to help meet an agricultural labor shortage expected to reach 1,500,000 in 1943 if its present trends continue.

The program will involve 300 farmers from unproductive farms in Kentucky and Northern Wisconsin. The 150 Kentucky farmers will be given a three-weeks' training at Ohio State University, Columbus, and on nearby dairy farms. At the completion of their training they will be placed on farms needing

Will be Placed Immediately. The Wisconsin farmers will be placed immediately inasmuch as they have had some farm dairy

"Experience gained from the experiment with these 300 potential year-around dairy workers will determine," the department said, "how such a program could be effective on a large scale as a further move by the Government to help alleviate the Nation's farm manpower shortage."

The department's Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimated that the shortage would reach 1,-500,000 workers next year if present military induction and industrial employment trends continue.

The bureau said that agriculture would have to turn to a reservoir of "under-employed" farmers in low-yielding, submarginal areas for workers on better farms.

Wickard Explains Idea.

In announcing the experimental training program, Secretary of Agriculture Wickard said the idea was to "get some of our low-income farm families into agricultural employment where their work will be more productive and where they will be able to earn more adequate

The department will pay transportation and living expenses of the farmers during their training period. Their families will be moved to their new places of employment. The training program will be extended to other States if the Ohio experiment works out favorably and if the department is able to obtain necessary funds from Congress, aides of Mr. Wickard said.

G. W. U. Prom Planned

The semi-formal Red and Gold prom of George Washington University Newmanites will be held Saturday evening, December 5 at the poser, who will appear with the National Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall tonight, shown shortly after he arrived yesterday going over his score before rehearsing with the orchestra. Mr. Grainger said he had been living on trains for 17 nights playing at Army camps and for war charities.

Because of Wartime Conditions

NIGHT OPENINGS OF RETAIL STORES MUST BE LIMITED THIS YEAR ...

In past years, many of Washington's large stores have felt it necessary to REMAIN OPEN IN THE EVENINGS in order to provide EXTRA HOURS for Christmas shopping. Last year, many of the stores were open on SEVENTEEN EVENINGS between late November and Christmas . . . and store hours on those dates were from 9:30 in the morning until 9 at night. This year, because of Wartime conditions . . . and the lack of store personnel . . . it will NOT be possible to arrange ALL of those EXTRA evenings for your Holiday Shopping . . . NOR will it be possible to keep the stores open from 9:30 a.m. till 9 p.m. . . . on those dates. When evening hours are in force, the store hours will be from 12:30 noon till 9 p.m.

THE HECHT CO. Will Remain Open Only 5 Evenings

* Between Now and Christmas *

(And On These Dates Store Hours Will Be)

2:30 Noon to 9

 We realize that this arrangement will materially SHORTEN the number of SHOPPING HOURS . . . and we call to your attention the fact that store facilities will be taxed beyond their capacity during December. We urge you, in the interest of maintaining an orderly and efficient service that you please shop early in the day—and please do as much of your Christmas shopping in November as you possibly can.

HERE IS THE SCHEDULE FOR CHRISTMAS NIGHT OPENINGS

- Monday, November 23rd (12:30 till 9 p.m.)
- Thursday, December 3rd (12:30 till 9 p.m.)
- Thursday, December 10th (12:30 till 9 p.m.)
- Thursday, December 17th (12:30 till 9 p.m.)
- Monday, December 21st (12:30 till 9 p.m.)

NOTE: NITE OPENINGS THIS YEAR WILL BE

5 INSTEAD OF 7

Shopping hours (on those dates) will be approximately:

6 hrs. Instead of 12

Obviously there will be Fewer Hours in December for your Holiday shopping . . . and we therefore urge you to Anticipate your Christmas purchases and DO AS MUCH OF YOUR HOLI-DAY SHOPPING IN NOVEMBER AS YOU POSSIBLY CAN.

Register on 18th Birthday.

The President provided that for the duration of the war, youths born after January 1, 1925, will register at their local boards on the day they reach their 18th birthday or, if the anniversary falls on a Sunday or legal holiday, on the first day following.

As in the case of those who registered on June 30, no lottery will be held to determine the order in which these young men will be called to the service. Instead, the order of call is determined by the day of their birth, with the oldest boys in the 18 and 19-year-old group going first.

Meanwhile, school officials said they had just completed a survey to determine how many youths in the school system might go into the

HALF ENOUGH Isn't Good Enough!

Man's law of traffic safety tells us that proper lighting is imperative. Likewise, nature's law tells us that adequate lighting is essential to good vision.

In these days when eyes are called upon to do increased work, we should protect them from unnecessary strain. Make certain that your portable lamps and fixtures are equipped with bulbs of sufficient intensity. Have all lamp bulbs properly shaded to avoid glare. Keep lamp bulbs and shades clean to assure maximum lighting. And, last but not least, be sure that every empty socket gets a new lamp bulb and that all burned out bulbs are replaced. Your eyes deserve the best of care, for they are the only ones you will ever have. Give them the light they need ... half enough isn't good enough.

Cut in Charges for Long-Distance Calls

A. T. & T. President Says Move Would Increase Burden on Wires

By the Associated Press.

The Government called yesterday for a second reduction in long disance telephone charges.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the Nation's largest corporation. was ordered by the Federal Communications Commission to show why it should not substantially reduce toll rates and other charges in the face of commission figures indicating excess earnings of $47,000,-000 to $62,000,000 this year. A hearing was fixed for December 16.

Declaring that the earnings which It held excessive were reflected heavily in both the cost of the war and living costs, FCC Chairman James Lawrence Fly said that "the Government must make every effort to keep down its bill for the war and to help the consumer keep down his

In addition to defending its charges, A. T. & T. was ordered to show why an immediate reduction in rates pending conclusion of the investigation should not be made.

Gifford Issues Statement.

Shortly after the FCC order was issued, Walter S. Gifford, president of the A. T. & T., issued the fol-

"As to long lines earnings, the commission's figures are misleading ODT Offices Stay Open because they do not include all taxes. Our earnings as a whole, including long distance business, are substantially lower than last year and are short of the dividend which we have paid for the last 22 years."

Some Charges Reduced.

The FCC began an investigation of long distance telephone tolls of the Bell System-by which A. T. & T.'s $5,000,000,000 properties are commonly known-early last year, which resulted in rate reductions estimated to save approximately $14,000.000 a year. At that time charges were cut for most daytime calls of 144 to 1,530 miles, rates were reduced for person-to-person calls longer than the initial three minutes and certain report charges were eliminated

In announcing the new investigation, the FCC said the hearing would cover not only long distance rates but all charges, classifications, practices and regulations of the corporation's long lines department. War demands have taxed long-

Washington's Newest, Finest Most Modern Non-Sectarian Community Mausoleum . . .

CINCE THE CREATION OF MAN, mausoleum entombment has been recognized as the best for the world's great men and women. In testament of their permanence many of the mausolea of ancient Egypt have stood for over five thousand years.

The permanent protection of a mausoleum used to be reserved for royal families and the very wealthy. Cedar Hill's magnificent new Sanctuary is a signal triumph in bringing the finest mausoleum entombment and inurnment within the reach of the average family. In addition to surprisingly reasonable cost, Cedar Hill provides convenient terms of payment.

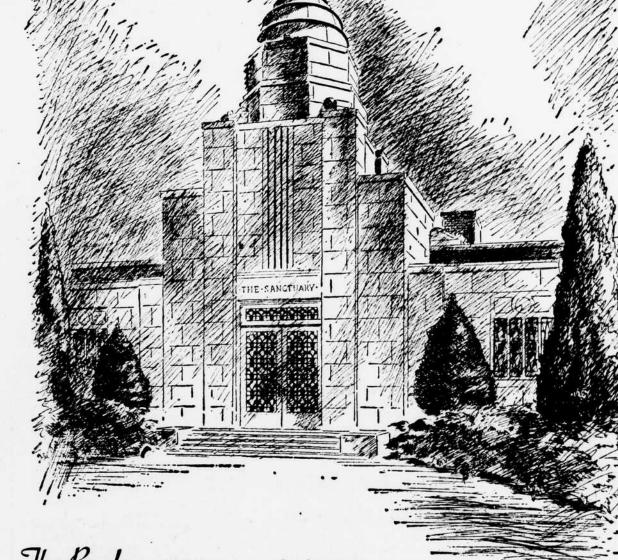

The impressive entrance of the Sanctuary strikes the keynote of dignified beauty throughout their majestic mausoleum. Below the lofty dome is a beautiful Chapel of deep religious character. Great stained glass windows roof the Chapel. And two magnificent stained glass masterpieces, "The Angels of Refuge" Windows are set in the east wall.

Through this vast expanse of painted glass, the changing light of the heavens reflects its mood on the living warmth perfectly matched Botticini Marble, with which the Chapel is finished. The air is alive with majestic organ music that rises in the Chapel and goes out into the four broad Sanctuaries. Roofing the full length of each Sanctuary and at its end are more inspiring stained glass windows.

The Sanctuary will be protected forever by a trust fund. And in addition to this safeguard, the finest materials were used in its construction, purchased long before priorities became effective.

Lines Report Shortage Of Skilled Mechanics And Replacement Parts

Interstate bus service out of Washington may have to be curtailed because of the shortage of skilled mechanics and service men to maintain the vehicles in operating order.

This was the opinion of executives of the industry, expressed here yesterday after the Office of Defense Transportation had revealed that there was a "critical" shortage of maintenance men for interstate buses in all parts of the country. A spokesman for the Greyhound lines here said that the company had only 169 mechanics and service men left on the pay roll and that it was next to impossible to find re-were only 28 mechanics left in its garage. Of these, only eight men are considered skilled mechanics. A spokesman for that company

"We can keep our equipment in shape to operate with the force we have now. But if the force is reduced any more, we may have to curtail service."

The Greyhound spokesman said his men were able to keep the buses moving at present, but that curtailment would certainly follow if any inroads were made on the maintenance force.

Replacement Parts Problem. Both companies said the problem was complicated because of the difficulty in getting replacement parts. Otto S. Beyer, director of transport personnel for the ODT, reported that the local situation was typical of conditions elsewhere in the industry.

A survey of 101 bus companies, he said, revealed that traffic had increased heavily this fall, while the available labor supply had fallen off. He said the need for mechanical help was greater than for drivers.

Treasury Secretary's Wife Urges End of Home Front Luxuries

American women can speed victory on the fighting fronts by giving up luxury on the home front, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, ir., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, said yesterday in urging 43 million women to support the Nation's warriors by purchasing War bonds during "Women At War Week," beginning today and ending November 28.

She told approximately 150 women representing District organizations that our struggle from Pearl Harbor to Tunisia represents "milestones in America's progress." She emphasized that "the harder we struggled up that road from Pearl Harbor to Northern Africa, the stronger we grew."

Faced with the choice of "victory on the fighting front or luxury on the home front," American women have only one answer, and that answer will be to buy more bonds, until victory becomes a reality, she

(The following account of a Japanese attempt to capture Henderson airfield on Guadalcanal with tanks was written by Second Lt. Herbert L. Merillat, a combat correspondent with United States Marines. GUADALCANAL, Solomon Islands, October 24 (Delayed).-Marines have hurled back the first determined Japanese push in the enemy's new counter-offensive against the American-held Guadalcanal airdrome area

Last night nine enemy tanks tried to force a crossing of the sandbar at the mouth of the Matanikau River to break through the American lines four miles west of the main runway. All nine were destroyed in the seven-hour night

Anti-tank guns and carriermounted artillery knocked out the Jap tanks one by one as they made their rush, while American artillery laid down a deadly barrage against Jap infantry massed behind the tank spearhead.

Yesterday was a good day for the American forces on Guadalcanal. Our fighter pilots destroyed 20 Zeros and one bomber without the loss of a single American pilot. It was the biggest bag of the vaunted Zero fighters that our pilots so far have to their credit.

Artilley Fire Increases.

With this air victory to cheer us, some gathered in the hour before sunset yesterday to play cribbage. Japs Feint Before Attack.

The Marines holding the line at that point, under the command of Lt. Col. William McKelvey of Washington. D. C., could see Jap tanks milling about the other side of, the river. Immediately our artillery replied with a heavy barrage, blasting the area from the river to Point Cruz, some 1,250 yards to the west.

Dive bombers took the air and bombed the enemy lines. Marines at the front could hear the screams of Japanese as the bombs and shells crashed among them.

The Japs soon feinted against our line about 500 yards up the river. It appeared they might try to cross the muddy Matanikau at that point, but the strong attack developed at the 50-yard sandbar which closes the rivers outlet to the sea.

charge came. In the evening haze the Marine defenders could see a tank rumbling eastward on the coast road. Then another dashed out from a concealed jungle track to the southeast and across the spit. Before it could be stopped, it overran a machine-gun position on the right bank, then stopped dead as it hit a post.

Tank Runs Into Sea. A carrier-mounted gun quickly swung into position and shot a hole through the stricken tank, but its motor was still running. A hand grenade wrecked the treads on one side. Then the tank turned on full power, went into reverse and ran 20 yards into the sea, where it was knocked out of commission.

The battle grew hot as the Japs pushed more and more tanks toward the spit. The toll of Jap tanks mounted as they tried four times to cross the bar and blast a path for infantry. # Of Coffee, Prepare For Ration Program

Retail Purchases Stop Until Next Sunday Under OPA Order

Coffee was added to the list of war casualties last night as grocers suspended sales at midnight to prepare for rationing, which begins one week from today.

When sales are resumed next Sunday, every person 15 years or older will be entitled to purchase 1 pound of coffee, after surrendering coupon No. 27 from War Ration Book No. 1. This pound of coffee must last five weeks-until January 3.

The OPA announced yesterday that immediate steps were being taken to bring boarding houses, restaurants and other institutional users under tighter rationing

Must Keep Records.

The first step in that direction was the announcement that all such users would be required to keep records of virtually all foods and beverages served in their establishments during December. These records will form the basis for future computations by OPA.

At the same time, an OPA official again warned that supplies of meat and butter were getting short. Meat rationing is to begin within a few weeks, and there is a possibility that butter will also be rationed early next year.

"Regardless of which food commodities are rationed or not rationed, the OPA needs the fullest information on the use of available supplies. # Voluntary Groups Aiding Tuberculosis Victims, Officer Says

Army Surgeon General's Aide Addresses Group On Christmas Seal Sale

Voluntary organizations, such as those supported by the Christmas Seal Sale, are helping in many ways to care for persons suffering from tuberculosis, Lt. Col. Esmond R. Long, chief of the tuberculosis division, office of the Army Surgeon General, declared in an address before the Citizens' Committee on Christmas Seal Sale,

The opportunity for finding persons who have tuberculosis and for controlling the disease at its source, he said at a meeting Friday night, is greater today than ever before.

Revealed by Army Tests. "Thanks to the huge X-ray examination program of the Army and Navy and similar well conducted surveys in industry, a very great number of persons who have tuberculosis are being discovered and treated," Col. Long said.

"In some of the larger induction stations, as many as 25 cases of active tuberculosis are being discovered each day," he continued.

At the same time, he emphasized to the committee meeting at the offices of the District Tuberculosis Association, that the discovery of many persons suffering from the disease and the action of the Army and Navy in excluding sufferers from the service places an even greater responsibility on public health facilities.

Sanitariums Taxed Heavily. Public institutions are being taxed to capacity and depletion of medical and nursing personnel has added to the problem, he asserted.

Paul D. Sleeper, chairman of the Committee on Christmas Seal Sale, reported that co-operation from the community in connection with preparing for the 1942 Christmas Seal sale has been greater than ever be-

Labor Boards Set Up To Act on Pay Rates In 29 War Industries

10 WLB Regional Offices May Grant Increases On Own Authority

By OLIVER McKEE.

The War Labor Board announced last night appointment of acting directors to head its 10 regional offices and gave them authority to pass on requests for wage increases in 29 war industries, employing 8,-000,000 workers.

The industries are those in which the board has applied the "little steel formula." In these industries, the board said, "the regional directors will have authority to pass on requests for general increases in straight time rates up to 15 per cent above the levels prevailing on January 1, 1941."

The board also announced appointment of 10 advisory boards, made up of representatives of the public, labor and industry, to assist regional directors in administering the wage stabilization pro-

Sea Victory Brings Analysis Of Our Next Move in Pacific

U. S. Needs Adequate Reinforcements to Widen Big Advantage Now Held Over Crippled Enemy

By Constantine Brown.

Following our smashing sea victory in | was administering a sound spanking to the Southwest Pacific, this question has been asked in Washington naval quarters: Will sufficient reinforcements be received by our forces to permit them to press their advantage before the Japanese can reorganize for a new offensive?

Between October 10 and 15 not a highranking officer in Washington was optimistic enough to predict that our chances of holding the Solomons were better than 30 to 70. Sheer heroism on the part of the marines who were holding a small strip on Guadalcanal and the Army, Navy and Marine aviators turned what appeared to be certain defeat into victory. Later, thanks to the naval reinforcements received by Vice Admiral William Halsey, jr., the temporary success of holding off the Japanese was turned into a brilliant victory.

Will we rest now on our laurels or will the necessary men and materialand Admiral Halsey needs many men and much material—be sent to the scene

Pacific Fighters Returning.

Officers and men of all ranks are trickling back into Washington from the South Pacific. Some have returned permanently because their services no longer can be used in a theater of operations where a few months of the type of fighting waged there is equivalent to three years in other zones. Other men are home on furlough to mend their wounds and straighten out their nerves.

All of them are somewhat bewildered at the apparent lack of understanding on the part of the American public in regard to the Pacific front. Regardless of whether he has an admiral's gold braid or the insignia of a seaman, the stars of a general or the stripes of a corporal, each is wondering why people at home do not realize what the Pacific really means to the final outcome of the war. These men listen in amazement to the radio commentators, read the newspapers avidly and wonder why so little importance is attached to that area. We have classified our enemies into two groups: Those across the Atlantic and those across the Pacific. The Ger-No. 2. This classification was a psychological necessity. Our supreme command realized from the beginning that we nust fight on two fronts. From the time the Philippines, Singapore and the Netherlands Indies were lost it became obvious that the principal interest of our allies-the British and the Russians -would be directed at the European battlefields. A country like ours, isolationist at heart, and fed up with wars and the quarrels of Europe, was likely to insist on applying our principal military effort to the Pacific where the Japanese were emerging as a first-class military power. Contradiction Pointed Out.

Such a tendency, while logical if we had to fight only for our own interests, would have been, if allowed to continue, in contradiction with the interests of our associates. It is true that the chief riches of the British Empire were situated in the Indian Ccean and in the Pacific. But the threat to the very existence of the British Empire came from Hitler.

The Russians, who were fighting a lifeor-death struggle to preserve not only their territorial integrity but also the political, economic and social philosophy initiated by Lenin, appeared little concerned over Pacific developments.

To allow American public opinion to become geared to the idea that our main effort lay in the Pacific would have meant for the administration to be at loggerheads politically with the themes of our chief associates. In addition, European victims of Hitlerism who were represented in Washington were adding their voices to those of Britain and Russia, and there is no wonder that within a short time after Allied setbacks in the Pacific, the accent of the war turned toward Europe.

Much has been written and argued m the last few weeks about the alleged blunder of the Pacific command and the hastily improvised operations which led us to the conquest of the Gaudalcanal sirfield. Some day, when the truth is known, it will be apparent that the plan conceived by the American high command was excellent and its execution

Our Losses Conceded.

But from the beginning of the campaign it was pointed out here that the capture of Henderson Airfield and Tulagi Island would serve to place us in a difficult position unless we developed the operations and went into New Britain and occupied Rabaul, a major base in the hands of the Japanese. It was evident to professional strategists that unless we could dislodge the Japanese from that stronghold, occupied last August by only one enemy division, the Japs would concentrate against us and return in force to the Solomons and the other islands astride our lines of communication with Australia and New

The occupation of Guadalcanal was not made without losses in men and ships. To continue the operation despite the losses-which were inevitable since we could not, of course, make the same deal with the Japs as we made with the French in North Africa--it was necessary that strong reinforcements be dispatched at once, before the Japs themselves could rush more troops from Java, the Philippines and China. We had to be in Rabaul at least a month before the Japs could reach the scene of action. The spectacular success of our first offensive action against the Japs served to lull the public into a spirit of security, and any intimation that we had a rough road ahead was frowned on as defeatism. And in the meantime the shouts for a second front in Europe became until mally they became irresist its spokesmen, Russian and American, within the approach of greedy enemies. activities.

our Army and Navy chieftains.

The pressure of the public to "do something in Europe at once" became increasingly strong—the need for action became imperative, politically. There was the choice between an attack on the European mainland, which all military men agreed would result in defeat. and a safe operation in Africa which strategically could be considered a part of Europe. Africa, as we know, was selected, and preparations were rushed to start operations early in November.

But while the expedition had to be organized with utmost care and war material had to be sent to Russia at the same time, there was little shipping left for the Pacific. Forces necessary to reinforce units commanded by Vice Admiral Robert L. Ghormley (later replaced by Admiral Halsey) could not be sent from the West Coast in time. The resulting delay gave the Japanese time to concentrate unmolested at Truk and later at Rabaul at least seven and prob ably nine divisions, a much larger force than Admiral had at his disposal.

The Japs took warships out of the home fleet and the Indian Ocean where the Nipponese discounted the offensive ability of the Allied armies. A real armada was massed in the South Pacific -its object to take the Solomons and other islands as far away as New Caledonia at any cost.

When the danger of losing an entire division of marines on Guadalcanal was realized we rushed reinforcements across the Pacific after the Japs had completed their concentration.

Defense Called Miracle.

The Japanese attacked, and it was almost a miracle that we were able to hold them off in October. They attacked again after Gen. MacArthur and Admiral Halsey had received large air reinforcements and the fleet had been strengthened by many units from other

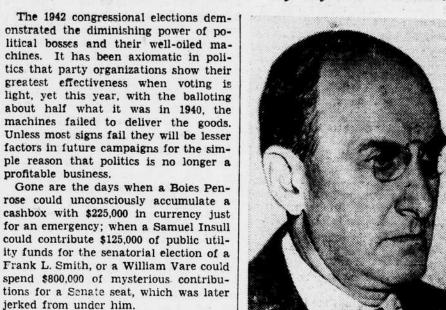

Those who look on the Pacific as our main theater of operations, until we can gain a clear-cut triumph, hope that the high command will not be stingy in the mans rate No. 1 and the Japanese are | sending of additional men and material which our commanders need so badly.

> It is hoped that sufficient forces-Army and Navy-will be dispatched to moves which now appear a logical elections in 1932. sequence to the recent victory—that is, operations at Rabaul and on New Guinea. Only a small part of the tonnage that crosses the Atlantic every week is needed. The men in the South Pacific are fully confident that victory can be repeated if they are given adequate reinforcements.

ELMER L. IREY.

Among those sent to prison besides Pendergast were Robert E. O'Malley, State insurance commissioner; Otto P. Higgins, director of police; John J. Pryor, contractor, and Charles V. Carrolo, gangster. John Lazia, gangster, for whom Pendergast appealed to Postmaster General-Democratic Chairman Farley, was murdered while his conviction was being appealed.

Warnings to Bosses.

Similar prosecutions were started in Louisiana, where Huey Long's henchmen political organizations. The Pendergast had waxed rich on political spoils. Long mob was broken up by Irey and District Attorney Maurice M. Milligan, This was assassinated, but Irey's men convictprofitable outfit included politicians, ofed his principal lieutenants, Former Govs. Noe, Allen and Leche, Seymour Weiss, President J. Monroe Smith of the Louisiana State University and other prominent citizens.

The Missouri and Louisiana convictions were warnings to political bosses throughout the country. Although there were no indictments, it became known that the Internal Revenue agents were investigating the incomes of Bosses Kelly and Nash in Chicago, Mayor Hague of Atlantic City and smaller political fry in the city machines throughout the country. This was enough to make politicians extremely wary about soliciting and accepting "contributions," because the tax laws require reports by the giver and the receiver.

The Treasury and the Internal Revenue Bureau are not primarily interested in political corruption. Conviction of bribe-taking politicians, crooked officeholders and gangsters is incidental to their first duty of collecting taxes from all sources, and it is perhaps significant that the first tangible evidence on the Missouri insurance scandal began with a routine examination of insurance company books in Chicago.

Laws Cover Corruption. The Federal public utility laws are in a different category and contain specific provisions covering political corruption. Thus the notorious Union Electric case in Missouri, resulting in the convictions of Louis Egan, Frank J. Boehm and Albert C. Laun, revealed the devious practices which utilities must resort to, such as "kick-backs" and padded expense accounts, in raising funds for buying politicians and office-holders.

In the old days, Sam Insull could dip into the till of his many utilities and with a few deft bookkeeping entries cover up the tens of thousands of dollars contributed to both Democratic and Republican bosses. Before the electric utilities gained prominence in the political field, the chief big business offenders against clean politics were the railroads, the whisky rings and the tariff-protected industries. Under present tax and securities and exchange laws officials of non-utilities will hesitate a long time before risking corporation funds for political shennanegans, Official returns are not yet available in Washington to show how Tammany and other Democratic machines fell apart in the recent elections; how Kelly and Nash failed to pile up the expected majority in Cook County for Raymond S. McKeough, the Democratic senatorial candidate, and how Boss Hague was unable to re-clect Senator Smathers in New Jersey.

Unofficial returns from New York show that instead of the 250,000 majority Farley publicly predicted for the five boroughs of New York City the actual count was around 75,000. In Hudson County, where Hague is still boss, the Smathers majority was 116,000, but it was not enough to put him over. In Cook County, the Kelly-Nash machine, instead of returning a boasted 300,000 majority for McKeough, could muster only 130,000, which enabled Brooks to win by approximately 200,000. Machine Men Lost.

In Kansas City, although two Democratic Representatives were elected, the discredited Pendergast machine was doubly repudiated on local candidates, who are of more concern to the bosses than the national figures. Machinebacked Judge Marion D. Waltner was ousted and Judge Allen C. Southern, who led the gambling cleanup fight, was retained by a huge majority.

It is far too early to say that bosses and their machines will disappear from the political scene. Tammany Hall is as old as the American Government and has been a national power since 1800. Local dictators like Huey Long are almost certain to get control of State governments, and men with great personalities and abilities such as Jim Farley will work their way to power. But for this brief moment in history at least, bosses and their personal organizations are weaker than they have been for decades. A new set of circumstances will be required for their return to domination.

Efforts to Define War Aims Of United Nations Are Revived

Recent Statement of Churchill Held at Variance With Stalin Who Opposes Disarming Germany: Willkie Pleads for Agreement

By Felix Morley.

The defeat of Rommel and the invasion of North Africa have broken that military deadlock which has characterized the war in Europe since Germany, a year ago, had to admit inability to dispose of Russia. A sense of optimism and opportunity has replaced the frustration and impatience which ruled before the smashing British attack at El Alamein.

Along with the deadlock in military operations another, more fundamentally disturbing, stalemate seems happily to be breaking. With better military prospects has come a revival of concern in regard to war aims. As the fighting intensifies and casualties mount there is parallel intensification of effort to compass the gigantic tragedy with some positive and intelligible purpose.

Three recent speeches, by three men of commanding influence, reflect this desire for sharper definition.

The first of these was the address delivered by Premier Stalin, on November 6, celebrating the 25th anniversary of the revolutionary establishment of the Soviet government. The second was that delivered by Prime Minister Churchill, on November 10. The third speech, differing from the other remarks on war aims in that it presents the viewpoint of one who merely aspires to governmental responsibility, was given by Wendell Willkie

There was expectation that President Roosevelt would take the opportunity afforded by his scheduled broadcast at the New York Herald Tribune Forum to carry official definition of American war aims a stage further. His radio address of November 17, however, avoided this delicate subject. Nevertheless, presidential leadership in this field cannot be withheld much longer, since the outspoken frankness of recent Russian and British pronouncements demands equal executive candor from the United States. The most notable aspect of Stalin's recent speech was not his statement that "it is not our aim to destroy Germany." This he has said before. On November 6, however, the Russian Premier went further, asserting that "it is not our aim to destroy all military force in Germany." To attempt the compulsory disarmament of a defeated Germany, he added, would not only be "impossible," but also "inadvisable from the point of view of the victor."

Since Stalin simultaneously emphasized that one of Russia's imperative tasks is "to destroy Hitler's army and its leaders," the purpose conveyed is one looking toward establishment of a German Red Army, competent to assume control in Germany and perhaps Central Europe generally, as soon as the German people can be induced to overthrow the Nazi dictatorship. This is really effective propaganda, shrewdly calculated to encourage revolt in Germany and thus bring Russia's share in the war to quicker termination.

But is is also way out of line with the Atlantic Charter. For in the eighth point of that historic document President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill agreed that the disarmament of the aggressor nations "is essential."

The desirability of such unilateral disarmament was reiterated by Mr. Churchill in his public statement of August 24, 1941. "The United States and Great Britain," he then said, "do not now assume that there will never be any more war again. On the contrary, we intend to take ample precaution to prevent its renewal in any period we can forsee by effectively disarming the guilty nations while remaining suitably protected our-

Of course, a personal statement by the President does not, as the history of the League of Nations attests, constitute a policy in any way binding on the United States. Still less is our Government committed by the intentions of the Prime Minister of Great Britain. This country may, or may not, eventually insist on the disarmament of a defeated Germany.

Great Britain, however, is at present pledged to attempt that disarmament. And Russia is now just as definitely on record in opposition to such a policy.

In his speech of November 10, Mr. Churchill was admirably precise in defining Britain's war objectives. "We have," he said, "no territorial aims. We desire no commercial favors. We wish to alter no sovereignty or frontier for our own benefit." And then:

"Let me, however, make this clear, in case there should be any mistake about it in any quarter. We mean to hold our own. I have not become the King's First Minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire."

Hong Kong Question Raised. The lack of any qualification in this statement seems to make it also, at least potentially, at variance with the Atlantic Charter. For the third point of the charter asserts that the United States and Great Britain "respect the right of all people to choose the form of governder which they will live.

As to whether "all peoples" means only those recently conquered by Germany and Japan, or should also include those subjected a few decades earlier by Great Britain and Russia, there is admittedly some difference of opinion. But it is scarcely to be expected that the Chinese. for instance, will after this war placidly consent to the return of Hong Kong to British rule, merely because that crown colony on Chinese soil was for a century, by right of conquest, part of the empire which Mr. Churchill proposes to main-

Regardless of how such knotty territorial problems may eventually be resolved, Mr. Churchill deserves the gratitude of all Americans for having so clearly defined the major British war objective. This is to maintain the British Empire intact, and to disarm those nations which have attacked it.

Stalin has now similarly at least indicated the Russian purpose. It is to maintain friendly relations with Japan while destroying the Fascist governments of Germany and Italy, eventually substituting there Communist regimes allied to Moscow but sufficiently well armed to defend themselves against possible capitalist reaction. Must Have a Purpose.

The importance of Mr. Willkie's speech of November 16 lies not in any attempted definition of American war aims. It is found in his eminently reasonable and by no means premature plea that the United Nations "may all come into substantial agreement concerning what we are fighting for."

That such an agreement does not now obtain is obvious from the different interpretations given to the Atlantic Charter by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, as also by the disagreement of Stalin with both Churchill and Roosevelt in regard to the post-war disarmament of a Germany which, undoubtedly will eventually disown Hitlerism. If there is disagreement now, when uniformity of outlook is counseled by the many pitfalls along the uphill path to military triumph, will the chances for accord be likely to increase as the end of the war approaches?

Mr. Willkie thinks not. In his thoughtful and penetrating speech he tells us that a war fought for the mere fun of fighting is, in view of the destructiveness of modern science, sheer imbecility. "A war won without a purpose," he wisely says, "is a war won without victory."

Ideas for peace, says Mr. Willkie, are now every bit as essential for this country as are guns for war. And such ideas, it may be further asserted, are in a sense more important even than the ideals of which we advertise such a conflicting plethora.

That is because the noble ideal, unsupported by the practical idea, is not merely unattainable, which does not matter, but may also prove definitely deceptive, which is disastrous. For it is the embittered sense of deception which leads eventually to disillusionment, cynicism, and such profound and uninteliigent reaction as that which Americans witnessed in the isolationist swing at the close of the last war.

Opening of Allied Offensive Assures Nation Danger of Axis Invasion Has Passed

By John Nasht,

Soon after Brazil's entry into the war the other South American nations sudpossibility. This awareness of a danger that had been brewing for a long time and which increased with the Brazilian declaration of war, caused a great deal of anxiety all around the American capitals. Argentina, instead of being swung into the United Nations' orbit. seemed further away from breaking off relations with the Axis than ever. Chile, the only other dissenter from hemisphere solidarity, again postponed the longawaited action. Later, President Rios visit to Washington was canceled on account of Sumner Welles' speech. An acute tension was rising among the countries of the hemisphere, and at one time it seemed as if inter-American unity would drift into the past before actually reaching the present. Now undoubtedly things will begin to change, but at the time much more lay behind Rios' postponement than his taking insult from a well-deserved rebuff. The Chilean government wanted to play safe for a little longer and avoid a rupture with the Axis until the time came for a United Nations display of power It was not certain if the Allies would be able to forestall a Nazi invasion on the continent, let alone be able to undertake a major offensive themselves. The answer to the Chilean query lies in the success of the American offensive in French Africa. For once the threat to Brazil is removed, Chile will adhere to the unified American policy Nation's Position Was Dangerous. Chile's situation has to be carefully analyzed before one can attempt to solve the riddle of its present policy. Its mild flirtation with the Axis powers is due entirely to the fact that Chile controls some 2.500 miles of Pacific coastline The country's length is 2,600 miles, and its width ranges from 10 to 200 miles. Within this long, narrow strip of land between the Pacific and the Andes live some 4,500,000 proud and patriotic Chileans. They believe in their country, they labor and starve when they must, but they are conscious of an old-established culture and tradition. This population is formed by a mixture of Spaniards, Scots, Jews, English, Germans and Irish, intelligent enough to realize that with such a descent a racial policy could never work in their country. Foreigners have said that their present policy is instigated by Fascist sympathies of the people. Nothing could be less accurate. They are lovers of freedom, they believe in everything the free people of the world believe in. Their isolationism is motivated by the fact that their narrow deserts are rich in ible. The Dieppe raid was not consid- of explosives, and copper. A poor coun- 55,000,000 square feet of store space to his employes in which he severely

With a 2.500-mile coastline not easily defended, facing one of the major theaters of war, open to an attack by the Japanese, Chile flirted with the Axis in is nothing that the Chileans hate more than to have their country managed by others. A gentleman first, the Chilean is a good businessman secondly. When the need arises he becomes an excellent soldier. But to fight alone would be hopeless. So the government wanted to be prudent, observing neutrality as long as it deemed it necessary, until the United States could help efficiently. They, too, remembered Pearl Harbor, Manila and the Philippines, but they remembered it with dreadful anticipation.

Brazil, they knew, came first, for there the danger seemed more imminent. Then when Brazil was involved in the war they realized that until the time came for a relief on the Brazilian bulge to be effected, they had no chance of expecting

British Retailers Forced To Make Wartime Cuts

How war has hit Britain's retail shops comes out in newly published figures showing the reduction during the 12 months ending with June, 1942. Department stores lost 25 per cent of their space and 30 per cent of their personnel. Co-operative stores lost 5 and 15 per cent in each category. Multiple shops are 11 per cent fewer with 22 per cent less staff. Chain stores are 4 per cent fewer with 26 per cent less staff.

These losses are due to rationing and to the Government's policy of concentration of industry to conserve mannower and raw materials

Regionally, business differs widely. London's center and West End shops showed a 25 per cent decline in sales last May, compared to a similar prewar month. But a few other sections benefited through new trade brought by munitions workers and troops, and showed gains ranging from 14 per cent in the Midlands to 25 per cent in Scot-

Black Market Rumors Scouted

'You Can't Bootleg Something You Can't Get,' Price and Rationing Officials Point Out

> By Frank I. Weller Associated Press Staff Writer

"Black market" rumors are going begging around here. Food-rationing and price-control officials are very vigorous about this, telling one and all that "you can't bootleg something you can't get." It seems a lot of high-minded folks start right in to recall the price and condition of prohibition liquor when they think of coffee and meat being as hard to get as sugar, tires and gasoline. They catch some neighbors salting down more of these items than they personally require while other citizens are affairs in Europe winding up in big black Now, they reason, something is bound to happen, considering prohibition taught this country the easy ins and outs and all there is to know about the black market business of creeping up alleys and around dark corners or coming right out in the broad daylight to peddle con-

Dabs of This and That.

And, sure enough, little rings of dishonest characters pop up here and there to offer a portion or two of whatever rationed article you want at profits any fair-minded rum runner would have shut his eyes to ask. Illegal tires are reported selling here at five times their original retail price. Authorities concede that folks in almost every community know where they can sneak a little dab of this and that at unlawful prices—but, say they, it is not in any sense a black market. In the first place, these are purely local violations quickly dealt with by the authorities; they do not result from organized pilfering from ships, shops, boxcars and warehouses; there is no secret national trade route from agent to customer and the whole business will bust up as soon as stores salted away

In no time at all now, authorities assure every one-including the new-crop bootlegger-will be hanging onto everything rationed to him for his own private uses; there will be no chance whatever for any one to get anything the law does not allow.

prior to rationing peter out.

They cite coffee as an example. Coffee would be a prize item for bootlegging what with folks limited to one legal pound every five weeks and velling for more. But, to get coffee hereafter, a Government coupon or certificate for a stipulated amount must pass from the individual to the retailer to the jobber to the wholesaler, to the importer, to the Government. space. The rum-runner owned or chartered a vessel. In these days all craft of consequence are assigned to war duty. Ships and boats are under the closest kind of scrutiny, and couldn't bring a spoonful of coffee not accounted for by clearance papers. Officials say Federal inspection of goods in interstate commerce precludes any such black market for meat here as bedeviled Europe. The Government will know where meat is going, in what quantity and for what purpose, almost to the ultimate consumer. There is nothing, perhaps, to prevent the fellow with a little more legal coffee or meat or sugar than he personally needs slipping the surplus to some hasnot at a jot or so more than he paid for it-providing he is not around when price-control agents come for him. This, however, does not greatly concern any one, since the economic effect is nil. It does not take from the national supply a pound or pennyworth. It merely shifts from one person to another a bit of this or that already discounted on the store

The Government, however, is very unhappy that some folks play these snide tricks, and has managed to gather in 496 defendants in 284 cases they are prosecuting for such things as violating the Emergency Price Control Act, dodging ration restrictions and just plain bootlegging articles.

These unfortunates are subject to somewhat of a jerking around, inasmuch as the law says they can be but in the pokey for one year and fined $10,000 if they dare sell a rationed product illegally. The rap is two years and $10,000 for intentionally making a false statement to get or sell more than their share. Waxy Gordon, the old-time booze baron, found it out when, it is charged, he figured to operate a sugar racket. Federal agents picked him up. Waxy was indicted and is now out on bail.

Small-time bootlegging of gasoline and automobile tires is the Government's biggest headache, but agents have broken up rings in Florida, Pennsylvania and some other spots.

It seems odd on the face of all this that price-control and rationing bosses should be so optimistic that there will be no black market.

But, when you simmer it down, probably 95 per cent of all Americans wish to endure whatever hardship it is necessary to endure to win this war. They know these products are rationed so our own warriors and those of our Allies have supplies needed by men who fight battles. They know we can do with a little less, for after all this is the bestfed, best-housed and best-clothed country in the world. We do not suffer.

The real squeeze on any prospective In that light. Americans by and large | Cornwall in their early 'teens to try their ered an object lesson. #### Wasted Personnel

The annual report of the Civil Service Commission again raises the issue of inefficient supervision and lax personnel practices in the Government, and it is to be hoped that the threat to bring specific cases to the attention of the White House, if this is necessary to work improvement, is more than mere rhetoric.

The commission previously had complained of wasted manpower in a special report to the President and Congress. Now, however, by virtue of an executive order giving it broad powers over the use of personnel, the agency is able to do something to correct these conditions, and this authority should be exercised unsparingly. At the same time, it might be said—and this cannot be emphasized too strongly-that it should not be necessary for the commission to go to the White House to enforce any recommendations for improving the service. The heads of every establishment should be only too willing to effect reforms without compulsion. In some organizations there has been a tendency to excuse inefficient supervision on the grounds that supervisory personnel was new to the job, and that, eventually, a change could be expected. That argument hardly holds water any longer, for the civilian war machine has been in the making for nearly two years now, and certainly that is time enough for efficient standards to be established if ever they are to be.

a "tremendous" recruiting program he could launch his sensational is in the offing, although there al- counteroffensive last summer which ready are about 2.500,000 employes in the service, or 150 per cent more than the peak of the First World Congressional committees which are delving into the personnel question, and the appropriations committees which soon will be called upon for new funds for this vast civilian army, no doubt will want to know why personnel requirements still are being discussed in astronomical figures.

The Curtain

On December 7 last, nearly a year ago, a curtain of silence began to fall over all of that area which commonly has been called the Orient. Hong Kong, the Philippines, the Malay States, the Netherlands East Indies and Burma have disappeared behind the mysterious hush of Japanese conquest. No news of any untainted kind has come to America from the territories seized by the army and the navy of Nippon. The effect of the weird and unnatural stillness is that of death.

Yet life inevitably goes on in the cities and the towns on the other side of the curtain. One day in the future, perhaps sooner than now is expected, the barrier will be removed, and the world will hear what has happened under the rule of the war lords of Japan. Have they attempted to replace the systems of society which they found when they invaded the subjected communities? If so, with what substitutes? Have they imprisoned vast numbers of people? If so, where and under what conditions? Have they been able to feed the masses whose ordinary routine of existence they disturbed? If so, with what? Have they aped Hitler and his methods of tyranny? If so, with what result? Have they encountered resistance from the civil populations as Der Fuehrer did in France and Norway, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia? If so, what have they done about it?

The problems of military government are complex. It is true, of course, that the soldiers of the Japanese Empire have had experience in the domination of Korea, Manchuria and parts of China, but European observers who witnessed their behavior in those unhappy places were not stirred to admiration by their methods. Psychologically and temperamentally, the average Jap commander is not suited for such work. His handicaps include differences in processes of thought (as when he laughs to conceal embarrassment), in language, in manner and bearing, in power to persuade by the use of pure logic.

It happens, too, that the people held by the Japanese have their own traditional patterns of intelligence, imagination and prejudice. The Siamese, for example, are a proud race, unaccustomed to be ordered *hither and yon by strangers. So, by Dutch development of the resources of their island, and they almost certainly must resent Jap interference with their prosperity and liberty. None of the inhabitants of the invaded areas had anything to gain from being taken over by Hirohito and the Black Dragons. Have they been reconciled to their sacrifices?

A clue to the answer possibly may be discovered in the miracle of "the lost Christians" of Japan itself. The converts of St. Francis Xavier in 1549 established a Catholic tradition which, despite official persecution. never perished. After three centuries their descendants were revealed still faithful to the missionary teaching which had been forbidden during the whole era of seclusion which Commodore Perry finally terminated.

African Squeeze Play

The campaign in North Africa can best be visualized as a series of obstacle races, the chief hurdles being distance and time. The Axis is striving desperately to build up a block of resistance including both Italian Tripolitania and the French protectorate of Tunis. The Allies seek to shatter this incipient block by a triple squeeze play. This converging operation is being conducted by the co-ordinated movements of Britain's 8th Army from the east, Anglo-American columns knifing into Tunisia from the west and a Fighting French force speeding across the Sahara Desert from the south. Their common objective is the port city of Tripoli, the seat of Axis power in North Africa.

The theater of action is vast, extending some 700 miles from east to west and an indefinite distance southward into the Saharan wastes. With the exception of Northern Tunis, which is mountainous and relatively fertile, the terrain is desert. This means that the same problems of supply which governed the campaigns in Eastern Libya and Egypt continue to apply to current operations. Although most of the far-flung battleground has scant occupational value, there are a few key points of high strategic signifi-

The first of these is El Agheila, the natural road block on the coastal highway between Cyrenaica and Tripoli. Here the road is backed by extensive salt marshes, beyond which, in turn, is sandy desert. Those natural obstacles prevent effective flanking movements by mechanized forces. It was at El Agheila that Rommel made his successful stand when he was chased out of Cyrenaica by the British a A disturbing note in the commis- | year ago and was thus given time almost took Egypt. By precipitate retreat Rommel apparently has saved the bulk of his German Afrika Korps and is concentrating for a stand at El Agheila. The pursuing British must be having grave supply difficulties from their distant base in Egypt, though the captured harbors of Tobruk and Bengasi will make matters easier when they have been put in shape. At any rate, Rommel has a temporary breathing spell.

The flying column of Fighting French have nearly 1.000 miles to go from their base at Lake Chad to the Mediterranean coast. They are following a caravan route which runs almost due north to Tripoli. Most of the terrain is stony desert, negotiable by light tanks and trucks. Food and motor fuel presumably can be flown to them by transport planes. The chief difficulty is water, the oases being few and widely spaced. The column probably is not a large one. Its value will be as a striking force in the Axis rear while Rommel is fighting the two main coastal

This brings the Tunisian sector into the picture. Here the situation is highly confused. Axis troops flown from Sicily by air seemingly have established themselves firmly in Northern Tunisia, especially at Tunis, the capital, and at nearby Bizerte, the great French naval base. In Southern Tunis, next door to Tripolitania, Axis forces are likewise established. Some of them probably have come overland from Tripoli, where there is supposed to be a considerable Axis garrison, mostly Italians. Central Tunis is a welter of skirmishing between Axis. local French and Anglo-American forces. The immediate aim of the Allies is to thrust a wedge to the coast, thereby isolating the Axis troops at Tunis and Bizerte from their comrades to the south and east. That is the necessary preliminary to an Allied advance on Tripoli itself.

From all this it can be seen that, though the odds clearly favor the Allies, much remains to be done before the Axis is expelled from North Africa. Everything indicates that Rommel will put up a hard fight. Against a determined enemy the Allies have their work cut out for More Merchant Ships A cheering sidelight of the African invasion is the report that it has enabled the Allies to take over a sizable amount of merchant shipping, for the shortage of bottoms, to which Axis submarine warfare has contributed substantially, is a continuing problem.

The British Ministry of Economic Warfare estimates that between 200,-000 and 300,000 tons of shipping that has been lying in African ports or trading between France and Africa will be brought into Allied service. too, the Filipinos for forty years had | This presumably means the addition ized that the average time for building a 10,000-ton vessel of the emergency-type Liberty in which this country now is specializing, is around sixty days. The standard C-type ships and tankers, which also are in production, take longer.

The Maritime Commission building program, it might be said in this connection, is booming along, with steel the only question mark in an otherwise satisfactory outlook. For the year ending October 1, contracts had been let for 1,851 ships, which included 712 of the C-type and tankers and 1,139 Liberties. There were 759 keels laid and 526 vessels launched. Completed ships totaled 403, of which 329 were of the Liberty type, and this output was expected to be doubled in the last three months of this year, a four-a-day schedule being contemplated. Maritime Commission officials have set next year's quota at 1.600, and with sufficient building facilities available are confident of reaching this goal if the steel supply holds up. Alongside of the imposing construction program, however, must be marked about 530 Allied merchantmen reported sunk since Pearl Harbor, although some of this loss is offset by building elsewhere than in the United States.

The building program has a special importance to people in this section of the country where the shipping shortage is responsible for the extent to which petroleum rationing has been ordered. An increase in tanker tonnage probably would not help the gasoline situation, but it could be expected to relieve the fuel oil pinch.

Request Denied The decision of the House Ways and Means Committee to table the President's request for power during the war to suspend any tariff or immigration law marks a significant change of heart in Congress. Heretofore, in all important instances, the President has been given what he asked for in the way of wartime delegations of authority. But, as in the case of the price control legislation, the blanket delegation of power has not always been followed by the kind of executive action which Congress had expected, and the rejection of this latest presidential request can only be viewed as an evidence of congressional intent to be more cautious in the future.

In one sense this is a healthy manifestation of independence. Certainly, on the whole legislative record since Mr. Roosevelt took office, it cannot be said that Congress invariably has acted wisely in delegating power to the President. On the contrary, it has acted unwisely on numerous occasions. But, granting this, it still is necessary to remember that we are at war, and that peacetime standards no longer are valid in all circumstances.

The message which the President sent to Congress on November 2 could hardly have asked for a more sweeping delegation of congressional authority, and the temptation to conclude that he has asked for more power than he needs is strong. But it is necessary to remember that his request concerns matters vital to the conduct of the war, and that it has been approved by some of the ablest members of his administration—men whose judgment is entitled to re-

In these circumstances, the committee has undertaken to write a substitute bill, believing that the powers the President actually needs can be enumerated and delegated without wiping the slate clean of congressional control in these matters. Perhaps the committee's belief is well founded, and if so it is following the proper course. It would be well, however, for the members to bear in mind that, by virtue of their decision, they have assumed a responsibility which is both heavy and inescapable.

Call for Mr. Claus

Due to the scarcity of rubber, iron and other materials once used freely for toys, Santa Claus will have a real problem this Christmas, even though priority damage is an old story to him—the priorities so often exercised by fathers who become fascinated in advance with the toys and wear them out before Christmas. Still, children are resourceful; small ones, in particular, seem to enjoy empty tin cans about as well as anything else. But, hold on-doesn't mother mash them flat and save them for the Government? Oh, well, all children are fascinated by junk piles; if worst comes to the worst, they can play there. But can they? Hardly—the junk pile is reserved for Uncle Sam. All that is left, apparently, is the good old-fashioned mud pie. Surely no one will deprive them

Oh, yes? It just so happens that Uncle Sam now is experimenting with houses made of mud. Mud, mixed in the ratio eighty-five to fifteen with an asphalt emulsion, can be made into bricks, or pressed into entire walls in temporary wood frames, where it will harden. Houses built this way are said to be warmer in winter, cooler in summer. Many new homes are needed for war workers. Perhaps father, if he is a carpenter or mason, may be allowed to play with mud pies, but it will not do to allow mere children to waste valuable building material. Great effort has been put into developing materials useful to the war; will some kind soul please invent something that is absolutely useless for the war, so that children can play with it before their parents go mad?

Sees Inefficiency to Blame For Rationing Difficulties

By Owen L. Scott.

There are some rather serious troubles ahead for this country's civilians. Among them will be food trouble, fuel trouble, manpower trouble and trouble over civilian supplies in general.

These troubles are going to be worse than they should have been. The reason is that Government interfered with the normal functioning of supply and demand as it reacts upon prices-something that must be done in modern warand then did not do the efficient job of managing that must be done when automatic market controls are removed.

The result can be a serious situation in many lines, much more serious than would have been the case had the officials responsible done a more efficient job of managing.

In the case of fuel oil for homes in the East, there is to be something approaching a crisis, particularly if the present winter proves to be a cold one. It may be necessary to reduce the amount of oil delivered to civilian consumers to half of that normally delivered. A reduction of one-third is certain. Yet this situation need not have been permitted to develop in its present critical

What has happened is that there has been one of those internal struggles for personal power between high officials. In this struggle-between Leon Henderson as civilian supply czar and Secretary Harold Ickes as petroleum czar-nobody has shown enough interest in the civilian consumer to take responsibility for safeguarding his interests. The result is that industry has been permitted to hoard large amounts of fuel oil, and the Army and Navy have been permitted to accumulate stocks that may or may not be larger than necessary. At the same time, the flow of gasoline into the East has been permitted to continue at a level that may be larger than absolutely

Because nobody took hold of this situation with a firm hand at a time when it might have been dealt with effectively, millions of families are going to be cold this winter. In fact, there is likely to be a good deal of suffering that could have been avoided.

In the case of food the story is pretty much the same.

Here the struggle for personal power has been among Leon Henderson as price controller and Donald Nelson as instrustrial mobilizer on the one side and Claude Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture on the other. Mr. Wickard has been interested in getting the fullest possible production of foodstuffs and in working out a system of rationing that will assure a fairly even distribution of foodstuffs that are available. Mr. Henderson and Mr. Nelson have go along with a food administration, but not under the wing of Mr. Henderson and Mr. Nelson. Some officials express the opinion that rationing of meat, dairy products and other commodities has been delayed purposely by the Office of Price Administration in order to generate a situation that would lead to a public demand for a firm control of food distribution outside the Department of Agriculture.

Whatever the purpose, it is true that rationing of meat, decided upon many weeks ago, is being delayed. As a result, there is a very uneven distribution of available meat supplies. In some parts of the country it is next to impossible to obtain bacon and difficult to obtain beef, while with rationing a fair portion could be assured to everybody. The problem of meat supply is going to grow very difficult in the months ahead.

The same is true of dairy products. Local milk shortages are appearing in many parts of the country, and they are going to grow more acute. Butter is to be scarce, and eggs may be. Yet little effort is being made to deal with these situations by assuring the public that supplies that are available will be distributed equitably.

Food problems are complicated by several developments. One is the growth of the Army. Another is the rising demand for our Allies for food. A third is the prospect that much food will have to be diverted to Africa to feed populations that are joining up with our side in the war. To top it off there is more than an even chance that Italy is going to be clamoring soon for a chance to get on the American bandwagon, and food, offered in big quantities, will be one of the enticements pulling her away from her German alliance. This means that there will be many demands on the American food supply and that no personal struggles for power should be permitted to complicate the problem of equitable distribution.

In the case of coffee there is a clear illustration of the cause of many present and developing troubles. There had been rather large stocks of coffee in the United States. If those stocks had been divided up evenly they could have been used to supplement the current supplies and all could have had a fairly adequate ration. Instead of acting to freeze coffee stocks and to ration at a time when supplies were ample, Mr. Henderson let it be known that coffee would be rationed at some future

Naturally there was a rush on the part of hoarders to buy up all available coffee. The result is that the selfish few are protected while the masses of the people are to be asked to get along on a cup a day. That is the type of shotgun administration that applies all through this field of civilian supply and civilian rationing. Officals find it much more entertaining and exciting to play the inside political game than to undertake the difficult and rather tedious job of effective administration

It is the same story in the field of manpower. This country has plenty of men for the military forces and for all essential civilian tasks. However, if there is to be an equitable division of men and an assurance of full use of the labor of those not in the military services somebody needs to plan and to act. There has been a long delay in planning with the result that grave inequalities have developed, and there are manpower shortages in agriculture and in some other occupations that may interfere with the war effort if they are not corrected. matives of Java profited immensely on added importance when it is real- said that fright does not make fight. tion, particularly if that administration | tration in the last election.

ANCIENT LANDMARKS

tion of living men has had a deeper significance than the one we observe on Thursday next. As we attempt to appraise our blessings, we are made to realize that there are conditions in our life that tincture our praise and gratitude with sorrow. Many of the homes of our land will have vacant places at their boards by reason of the absence of loved ones who are in the service of their country. While this is a justified cause for making our Thanksgiving festivities less joyous than in normal times, it must provoke in us a sense of gratitude that we have the strength and the will to protect and defend those institutions that we deeply cherish. There is a challenging word in the ancient Scriptures that is pertinent to our life as a people today. It is a solemn admonition that directs us to consider the basic principles and ideals upon which our Government is founded: "Remove not the ancient landmark, which thy fathers have set." It is a word of warning that compels us to look away from the things of the present to the things of the past-in fine, to think of our life today, in this time of grave emergency, in the light of what our fathers set up in the way of enduring principles, principles that were to be our guide at all times, and especially so when dangers threatened the Republic. We have not been too meticulous these late years in looking unto the rock whence we are hewn. The pace of life has been so swift, and the changes so rapid, that we have given little thought to those sure footings on which the superstructure of the Republic has been builded. There have been those who have refused to recognize what they call "the dead hand of the past." True, the hands that fashioned and shaped our life as a people have long been inert and inac-

No Thanksgiving Day in the genera- , tive in the silence of the grave. Notwithstanding this, in times of strain and crisis, we have been compelled to turn again to the basic principles and ideals for which they strove and to think of them as the range finders by which to determine and shape our future course. There are landmarks that our fathers have set up, landmarks that constitute the guideposts to this later generation.

> As a matter of fact, it is to maintain these landmarks and preserve them that this Nation has once again been called to arms. These landmarks were set up by men who unfailingly believed in God. men who believed that God rules in the affairs of men-yes, men who reverently and obediently obeyed the dictates of their Christian consciences. Any reckoning of the landmarks by which we as a people have been guided and directed. indicates clearly that the greatest of our leaders have been men of faith and prayer. We have girded ourselves once again to defend our American institutions and our American way of life, but our defense will prove futile unless we bring back into the present generation those wholesome, clean and enriching ways that in other days were our chief distinctions.

> It is well on this latest Thanksgiving Day to solemnly recall that the days of our finest development were days in which we reverently and obediently recognized the essential and indispensable place that religion occupied in our life. "Remove not the ancient landmark, which thy fathers have set."

"Faith of our fathers; faith and prayer Shall keep our country true to thee; And through the truth that comes from God.

Our land shall then indeed be free. Faith of our fathers, holy faith! We will be true to thee till death."

Fifty Years Ago in The Star

Fifty years ago the mind of the Nation was on Thanksgiving. Churches were filled for special services and Thanks- ministers called the attention giving of their congregations to manifold causes for gratitude. The Star of Thanksgiving Day, November 24, 1892, printed extracts from the address of the Rev. Dr. Oliver A. Brown which are typical of the national feeling: "Thank God for life, with all its opportunities and privileges and glorious ministries. . . . Thank God for our land, and I know not where beneath the sun there is a more goodly land or one better calculated for the happiness and been interested in the creation of a new | development of a great people. * * * food administration that would be under | Thank God for liberty. • • • We enjoy their control. Mr. Wickard is willing to civil liberty. • • • We enjoy religious liberty. . . . Thank God for learning. The press has ever led the way for liberty to victory, and so long as its voice can be heard our rights are secured." No men-

Proposal 1892, it was reported: "Representative Scott Wike of Illinois said: 'I am not prepared to say what this Congress will do. I know what I would do if I had full power. I would pass an income tax bill. I had such a bill in the last House. * * My idea of an income tax would practically enempt the masses, as I would not tax incomes below $5,000, but . . there would be no multimillionaires in this country.'

The opening of the Reichstag was reported in The Star also November 22, 1892. According to the account, the Kaiser could Defense? hardly wait to get it open before proceeding with business. "I cherish the hope," said Wilhelm, "that Germany will not be disturbed in her peaceful endeavor to promote her ideal economic interests, but we have the serious, nay, imperative duty of strengthening the defensive capacity of the empire by thoroughgoing measures." The measures in question were compulsory military service and a staggering appropriation for expansion of the army.

The Star of November 21, 1892, reprinted an article from the San Francisco Examiner concerning the annexation of Annex Hawaii? Hawaii: "It has been understood that the State Department - at Washington has been for some time considering the question of annexation and considerable correspondence on that subject has been exchanged with the Hawaiian Minister. * * It was stated that the Queen (Liliuokalani) favored English in preference to Americans, but this is not so.' The impression was circulated by land owners who wished to retain their property, adjacent to an obscure coaling station of the United States Navy, and not have to give it up to Uncle Sam. The obscure coaling station had a romantic name, despite its supposed insignificance. It was Pearl Harbor.

Many of the troubles that lie ahead could have been avoided or reduced in importance by a little official foresight and a little official effort of a tedious but effective sort. As it is, the present method of some of the high officials is to avoid anything more than a verbal recognition of a problem until that problem has become so acute that it can be handled only by drastic action.

Members of Congress from many parts of the country say that it is a public been educated to appreciate freedom and to object to being bossed. The merchantmen, and the figures take and to object to being bossed. The merchantmen, and the figures take ians, now fearing invasion, it may be

Capital Sidelights

By Will P. Kennedy.

Preparations at the Capitol for the incoming new Congress is a tremendous task, little realized by people generally or even by the Congressmen. The brunt of this work falls especially upon two offices-that of the clerk of the House, South Trimble, and the superintendent of the House Office Building, Edward Brown. The latter has to prepare all of the office suites in the two large buildings, to allocate offices to all of the 106 new members, and to move to more desirable offices most of the heldover members. It is an incredibly difficult task to satisfy the rivalry of many members and to make shifts so that those from one State who desire to have offices that are neighborly may be accommodated. The office of the House clerk is an extremely busy center before and after

dates and members must be kept current, corrected several times. As a result of the election about 15 lists have had to be printed, 1,500 copies of each

Coming at a time when the old Congress is closing its work, with several statutory duties to perform, the clerk personally is hard driven. He ties the two Congresses together-a holdover office until reelected (as he certainly will be) or a successor is elected. He has been receiving the statements of campaign expenditures which each candidate is obliged to file both before and after the election. As there were upwards of 2,000 candidates, this in itself was a sizable task. He compiled the list of all nominess-their names, addresses, party affiliations, both Senators and Representatives, for both the Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth Congresses. Among the new documents that must be prepared are the committee lists, alphabetical list of present members, lists of new members and a list of all members by States. He has requested and is receiving information giving the official report of the vote cast for each candidate in the last election, which later will be compiled as a public document and be used in the new Congressional Directory. He has an extensive correspondence with the secretaries of the States, each of whom sends in a certification of the official vote, and at the earliest possible date a certificate under the State seal for each candidate elected-a total of 435 in the House. The clerk also has busy time guiding each of the 106 new members who already are arriving, regarding their franking privilege and getting copies of their signatures (to be used on their franked envelopes and documents). To aid the new members he has prepared a pamphlet of information for them which this year contains considerable new information, such as the change of date for convening of Congress, "at noon on Monday, January 4, 1943, the date fixed by public law. It explains to them how to proceed in filing for their offices, their allowance for clerks, for mail and special delivery and airmail stamps, the oath of office they must take, how they must file their credentials, their compensation ($10,000 per annum), mileage, stationery allowance ($200 per session), how to file their requests for committee assignments, the information they must furnish for the Congressional Directory now being compiled, their quota of Congressional Records (68 copies), their telegram privileges, how to avail themselves of their Library of Congress privileges, about the liaison officer furnished by the Veterans' Bureau, the Civil Service contact office and the railroad and airlines ticket offices provided for their convenience. The clerk also has written to all incoming members offering them an opportunity to file in advance such bills and resolutions as they may be planning to introduce at the opening of the new Congress so as to alleviate the pressure in the office of the chief bill clerk and the Government Printing Office during the early days of the new Congress and their reference to appropriate committees. Already the clerk is receiving inquiries from several districts indicating that there are to be contests over certain seats. He is engaged on preparing this material to be presented to the House. These contested election cases

A bank that has no safe, no cash, no counters or cages, cashes no checks and writes none, yet deals in billions is something of an oddity. Add to these curious things the fact that this bank is housed in a building which looks more like a modern apartment structure than a banking edifice, and the Bank for International Settlements at Basle, Switzerland, is the prize celebrity in the bank-

World's Great Central

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Bank

Actually, this world bank has a safe, but not in the sense of a vault or large safe as used in other banks. It is a small affair and its contents consist of the bank's records of organization, a $5 Spanish gold sovereign kept as a souvenir, a 25-cent California gold piece sent by some unnamed donor and most of the still unissued certificates of bonds contemplated under the Young plan to pay German reparations of the First World War.

As to cash, there is none on the premises, except in the pockets of the employes, and which is their own. The bank's huge sums of cash are never brought to Basle, but kept on deposit with other banks and disbursements are made by them on order. Since all transfers to other banks and for the payment of bills in which the bank acts as fiscal agent are made by cable or telegraph and confirmed by letter, no checks are written. The bank is not a local commercial establishment, so there are no over-the-counter transactions

Although the Bank for International Settlements was established in 1930 by mandate of the Young plan for the distribution of German reparations, it has ceased to function for that purpose because of the moratorium on such payments, which finally ended in their cessation. But over the years the bank's scope of work has widened and its usefulness increased until it has become a definite international financial institution. Into it figuratively flow the currencies of a score of countries, to emerge as the stabilizers of vast and sometimes world-wide fiscal operations.

Since the Bank for International Settlements was not established by any government, it is not required to report to any, and as no member of a national legislature can be a director, it is one of the most independent financial institutions in the world. The directors must come from industry, finance or commerce, and the voting rights rest with the central banks or their nominees.

There are prospects that when world peace is restored and financial adjustments between nations become a necessity, the work of the Bank of International Settlements will be vastly increased. Already the present war has greatly extended the institution's work. enlarged its functions, and it has not only become a stabilizer for many currencies, but the bank's corps of experts in international finance serves as a board of consultation for the countries allied with it, and also for other countries as well as individual investors.

The realism which will unquestionably be taken into account in the terms of peace will include a stabilization of each country's currency, and that is where the world's best financial experts say this bank of banks will come in for its major task. For one thing, while little is now being said about payment for supplies furnished Great Britain, Russia, China and other allied countries, the subject is certain to come up later and some basic program of payment will be demanded. Those who are familiar with the workings of the Bank of International Settlements say this is the agency which should handle the job of settling these inter-government obligations. Indeed, every new development in European economic affairs seems to find a new job for this financial institu-

Service is the first goal of this bank, and making money from discounts and fees is a secondary consideration. However, stockholders have been paid reasonable annual dividends on their investments since it was established. Among the American organizers and stockholders are J. P. Morgan & Co., the First National Bank of New York, and the First National Bank of Chicago. The Federal Reserve Bank of the United States was asked to participate as were the central banks of other countries. and most of them did, but this country's central bank refused. So the House of Morgan and two national banks took the place of the Federal Reserve in American participation. An American. Gates McGarrah, was the bank's first president.

If ever a bank lived up to the title of international, it is the Bank for International Settlements. Controlling assets in excess of $10,000,000,000 from more than a dozen countries, handling 20 separate currencies, 12 nationalities are represented on its staff of more than 100. Several languages must be used in correspondence, which means that many different letterheads and other types of stationery are necessary.

With the bank's billions in assets, and its ability to command other billions, it can come to the financial aid of any country independently, or if one country wants to render financial assistance to another, it will handle the transaction as fiscal agent. The bank also buys the currency and bills of exchange of a country that is short on funds. It may be likened to a fire department ready to spring into action the moment the financial alarm sounds.

The Bank for International Settlements was located in Switzerland because that was a neutral country during the First World War, and because that country is still neutral the bank's location is even more fitting. The wonder is that the world went on so long without a real international bank-a central bank of central banks. But now that it is well established, has proved its worth and promises to be of even greater usefulness, the Bank for International Settlements may be the central point around which the world will be able to regain its financial equilibrium.

Crippling Defeat of Japanese in Solomons and African Front Turn Tide of War

'America's Fiftieth Week of War (168th Week of World War II)

By Thomas R. Henry.

America expects victory. Its people have never dreamed of defeat. For the past 11 months of the present war, judging entirely by official news releases, there has been relatively little to support this traditional attitude.

This week has seen the sunrise of democracy. It has marked one of the greatest naval victories of all times, a victory comparable to Salamis or Trafalgar. It has seen a vastly inferior American force of light craft strike a crippling blow at a heavy Japanese fleet including several battleships. It has seen a force of American battleships enter the fray on the second day and add to the destruction which cost the Japs at least 28 ships, including one or more battleships, sunk while American losses were confined to two light cruisers and six destroyers.

The victory, the most spectacular of the war, grew out of the strategy and courage of Rear Admiral Daniel Callaghan, former White House aide, who took his light forces at high speed between two superior lines of Japanese to strike with devastating suddenness in the darkness and then speed on while the Japanese in confusion fired on each other.

The news of the great naval victory . in the Pacific-accompanied though it was by sad losses, especially to many in Washington-broke without warning early in the week. There is still some confusion as to details, although the Navy press officers presented these more fully than has been the practice in the past and unhesitatingly gave out our own ship casualties.

The ultimate results of this victory are difficult to estimate at the time. Undoubtedly Japanese sea power has been badly crippled. The fact that the enemy appears to have been without an air arm in the fighting points convincingly to the fact that either they | have no more carriers or withheld those which remain

The Japanese fleet in the Southwest Pacific has for the moment withdrawn. It is useless to deny, of Vigilance course, that it retains a lot of striking power Is Required and is apt to reappear at any moment. Constant vigilance remains necessary to stay in Pacific waters. For the time being the threat to American positions in the Solomons is over. Also the threat to Australia is abated.

The Japanese have lost face-considered the most serious loss its fighting men can suffer. This, of course, must be accepted with caution. First, the Japanese people probably have been told their fleet won a tremendous victory. Second, "face" may not be so important

The victory, of course, lessens the tension which necessarily attends fighting on two fronts. The United States can keep up its supply line to Europe and Africa and pour troops across the Atlantic with much more confidence now that Japan is crippled on the other side of the world.

A major campaign was developing for the capture of the ports of Gona and Buna in Northeastern New Guinea with Australians and Americans under the personal command of Gen. Douglas Maçprogress at the week end all along the American air forces were busy. Medium bombers blasted enemy installations at Rabaul, on New Britain Island, the Japanese base for both the New Guinea and Solomons operations. The New Guinea fighting, correspondents report, is of the bitterest sort between troops on both sides well trained in the difficult techniques of jungle warfare.

The defenders of Guadalcanal were not resting while the great naval victory was being won, a Navy communique reveals. Early in the week they killed half of a Japanese force of 1,500 which was threatening their positions to the east of Henderson Field. Now all the enemy has been driven back into the jungle where he many continue to hold on indefinitely, as long as food and water can be obtained. There is little purpose, it is explained, in attempting to rid the back of the jungles of the big island of the Japanese. While they stay there. they are at the worst, a nuisance. It would be a costly operation to clean them out entirely.

A little of the confusion which attended early accounts of the sea battle was cleared up as the Navy received more complete details during the week. At first it was reported 23 Japanese ships had been sunk. Then 5 more were added. It was not clear whether there might not have been duplications. They actually were not, Secretary Knox says, so the number of enemy losses now stands at 28. The present whereabouts of the enemy fleet is not reported, but it obviously is nursing very serious wounds which came near proving fatal.

North African Front

The North African front remained test of the fighting for Tunisia where there will be a real matching of strength with the enemy near. German and Italian forces have been repulsed in their first encounter on land with Americans in this war. They are reported digging Arthur trying to push the Japanese into | in along a line formed by an arc coverthe sea. There was fierce fighting in | ing Bizerte and Tunis, the main ports of Tunisia, and landing men and equipjungle-baked coast between the two ment from across the Mediterranean. The story of President Quezon's escape with his family by submarine, PT boat, Flying Fortress and Army transport from Corregidor to the United States via Australia is now well known. Gen. MacArthur, who knew how anxious the Japanese were to capture the adored leader of the Filipinos, called President Quezon's successful flight "one of the most epic series of desperate adventures ever undergone by a nation's civilian leader in the history of war."

Washigton welcomed Manuel Quezon with marks of respect that signalized what the American people thought of him and his people. He was greeted at the Union Station by President Roosevelt, his cabinet and many other high officials. He and his family were White

Flank Opened

Allied Supply Lines Are Shortened

By John Grover.

When Winston Churchill said the United States occupation of North Africa exposed "the soft underbelly of the Axis" to attack, it was a conservative and welljudged estimate of Allied gains.

Gen. "Ike" Eisenhower's brilliantly executed coup hands the Allied strategists a wide choice of offensive possibilities. The Axis is vulnerable anywhere from the toe of the Italian boot northward along the north Mediterranean coast to the Spanish border of France.

It is 750 airline miles from Perpignan to the Straits of Messina. As the coast meanders, it gives Hitler 1,200 miles more to add to the vast defense lines he must man and supply. The "military idiots" he scored in his alibi speech have added the most serious headache yet concocted to the Fuehrer's burgeoning troubles.

Bares Axis Flank.

That the American offensive bares the most vulnerable Axis flank to attack is attested by the speed with which Hitler junked the French armistice agreement and scurried down to garrison the French Mediterranean coast.

It is unlikely, however, that fortifications begun at this late date can ever match the defensive effectiveness of the emplacements Hitler has been laboriously constructing on the French Atlantic and Norwegian coasts since June,

The invitingly flat French coast from Marseille to Perpignan must be guarded with hastily-erected fortifications.

The islands of the Mediterranean off the vulnerable French and Italian coasts also must be giving the Axis high command nightmares.

Sardinia, Corsica and Sicily lie too close to the Axis vitals for comfort. Any one of them, occupied by Allied troops, would be an Axis disaster. These islands already are menaced from Algerian coastal positions held by Americans.

Key Point to Strategy.

The Tunisian "hump" that constricts the waist of the Inland Sea is the key point in Western Mediterranean strategy. United Nations control would hold the island stepping stones to the north shore in jeopardy. To Americans, accustomed to thinking in terms of the 12,000 and 15,000-mile supply lines that have been our greatest bugaboo in prosecuting the war, the picayune distances involved in the Western Mediterranean are a welcome surprise.

It's less than 500 land miles from Marseille to Algiers. From Cape Bon to Sicily is 80 miles and it's only 2 miles from Sardinia and Corsica are similarly situated, just a skip and jump from the mainland. From land we hold already, the whole coast is within easy bomber distance. From Tunisia a regular bomber ferry service could be established.

All the distances are relatively short to any point selected for concentration of our attacking forces. There are dozens of likely points for attack on the sprawled northern coastline and the islands. Hitler must guard them all and must weaken some other front to do it.

SECRETARY HULL'S PATIENCE PAYS DIVIDENDS

Prepared Groundwork for North African Success

By James D. White.

The last of our log-cabin statesmen prepared much of the groundwork for our success in French North Africa, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, son of a Tennessee logger, is to the rest of the world our outstanding example of the think-and-act-first-beforetalking-about-it type of mind which has been a notable product of the American

The occupation of Algiers and Morocco climaxed two and a half years of difficult and often uncomfortable diplomacy directed by the white-haired mountaineer who guides our foreign policy.

Execution of such a policy, involving long-range vision and steadfast adherence to essential purpose, is the kind of job Cordell Hull likes and does best. Policy Paid Dividends.

Results this time: Admiral Francois Darlan ordered all resistance to cease in French North Africa after 76 hours of American assault, and came over to the Allied side. Gen. Henri Honore Giraud. France's military Houdini and popular idol, was on hand to take over administration of this new base for Allied counterthrust against the Axis. Still water ran deep in the hills around Olympus, Tenn., where Mr. Hull was born, and he never has been much of a talker.

Now just past his 71st birthday, he has been Secretary of State longer than any predecessor. Somewhere, during a lonely boyhood, he developed distinctive processes of thought which today make his name abroad synonymous with American keenness and integrity. Like Abraham Lincoln, he was born in a log cabin.

At his press conferences newspapermen see a frail man, stooped to a little less than his natural 5 feet 11 inches. More often than not Mr. Hull just asks for questions. He answers, in the drawl of his native Tennessee, with no hesitation even when the boys have figured out queries with hooks in them. If Mr. Hull ever has given anything away, the newspapers haven't printed it.

Gave Up Poker.

He is no longer a poker-player, and few people know he was a captain in Cuba during the Spanish-American War. But a regimental victim recalls:

"He could look sad and beautiful and humble while he held four of a kind, timidly and carefully betting against other soldiers' full houses."

He won three-quarters of all the money in the regiment, and then, he

Mr. Hull early called the turn on the Axis. He branded the Japanese as "bandits" in 1937 when the attacked China, and was one of the first to realize that Germany under Hitler meant to conquer the world.

Worked With Patience.

Foreseeing inevitable war, he concentrated on gaining time for national preparedness. The break with Japan might have come much sooner-and with Germany, too-had not the Hull patience, vision and poker face been on our side.

On November 27, 1941, he informed the President that war with Japan was finally inevitable and might come at any moment. How he abandoned diplomatic language on December 7 and treated Japanese envoys Nomura and Kurusu to some native Tennessee verbiage as they scuttled out of the State Department is now legend around those musty corri-

Accomplishments With France. He kept American diplomats at Vichy, long after it took nothing but German orders, to accomplish these things:

1. Obtain vital information in what was virtually German occupied terri-

2. Keep the idea of freedom alive in France. 3. Keep French friends and encourage anti-Hitlerism. 4. Watch French collaboration with Germany. 5. Prepare the background for an invasion of the Mediterranean. The world knows how that policy has benefited the United Nations. Mr. Hull lives quietly in a Washington hotel. His health is not perfect and in recent years he has taken two vacations to recover from the effects of the long hours he works. Back of our foreign policy there is a Hull statement which runs:

"The first (lesson of history) is that man's innate striving for freedom cannot be extinguished . . . the second is that liberty is truly won only when it is guarded by the same watchfulness, the same courage, the same willingness to fight for it which first secured it."

To one American, back after years in troubled foreign parts where our policy was on trial, "Mr. Hull is, with the exception of our President, one of our few elected overwhelmingly for a second term. Their Nationalist party won all the 24 seats in the newly-revived Philippine Senate and almost every seat in the lower house. But the new bicameral Legislature never met. The Japanese arrived in the midst of elaborate preparations for Quezon's second inauguration.

War Clouds Darken Horizon. On November 15, 1941, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Quezon's long-time military adviser, recalled to active service in the United States Army, had been for three months the commander of the American armed forces in the Far East. Although it was generally believed that Japan, apparently bogged down in China, would not for at least several months more take on any new opponent, war clouds had begun to darken the blue skies of the Southwest Pacific. Filipino leaders, especially President Quezon, again and again reiterated their loyalty to the United States and warned aggressors that they would find the Filipinos fighting on the American side until victory American armed forces had begun ariving in the Philippines in large numbers. The Philippine Army had been incorporated into MacArthur's command. An unnamed "high military authority" disclosed that the combined American-Filipino forces under Gen. MacArthur would reach approximately 125,000 officers and men by the end of 1941. But the Japanese struck three weeks before the ear's end, when the rest of the some 140,000 MacArthur-trained Filipino reservists had to be called to immediate service, relatively unprepared as they were. The number of American casualties has been officially disclosed, but the extent of the Filipino sacrifice probably

Sixteen days after the first Japanese attack on the Philippines, Gen. Mac-Arthur had to order President Quezon and High Commissioner Francis Sayre to evacuate Manila for the nearby island fortress of Corregidor. Mr. Quezon later revealed that whether or not to remain with his people, come what may, was one of the most difficult decisions he had to make. His inclination was to stay with the people, who had long kept him in the highest place of official honor and personal esteem any Filipino can expect to

By John Clagett Proctor. The recent capture of Algiers by the American overseas forces recalls to mind that this is not the only time that American sailors and marines have planted the stars and stripes on the African side of the Mediterranean Sea, though it is certainly far beyond the personal recollection of any one living today to recall such an evente Indeed. the first time our Navy engaged in battle there was in 1801, when a United States fleet, commanded by Capt. Richard Dale. was sent there in an effort to supress the piratical acts of the Bey of Algiers, who, as early as July, 1785-having discovered that a new commercial nation had sprung into existence-began to prey on our commerce.

At this time it was customary for the maritime nations of Europe to pay tribute to the Barbary States, which at an early date, included Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli, and the United States, following the practice of the other countries, thought it good policy to do likewise, until it was finally decided more honorable to appropriate money for ships and defend its rights than it would be to pay money to a band of sea robbers. In other words the slogan soon became "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." However, still believing that discretion was the better part of valor, and not feeling that the time had just arrived when it could enforce its demands upon the Bey of Algiers, our country continued to pay tribute, at least until 1801, when a heavy squadron, under Commodore Richard Dale, was sent into the Mediterranean, with instructions to endeavor rather to maintain peace by presents and bribes, than to enforce any demands by a display of power. Nevertheless, things do not always work out. as we plan them to, and hostilities began there on May 14, by the Tripolitans, and on June 10 following the Bashaw formally declared war against this country.

Old Glory Raised.

But nothing particular happened until August 1, 1801, when one of the smaller vessels of the American squadron, the Enterprise, while on its way to Malta to obtain a supply of water, fell in with a polacre-rigged ship. At this time, in order to deceive the Tripolitan vessel, the enterprise bore the British colors, but upon ascertaining from the captain of the corsair that "he came out to cruise after the Americans, and that he lamented that he had not come alongside of some of them," "Old Glory" was raised to the masthead and the stranger was given a volley of musketry. And then the battle was on.

Three times the enemy struck her colors, and as often renewed the action when the enterprise had ceased to fire. After the third time, however, Lt. Sterrett gave orders to sink the vessel, though this command he later changed for humanity sake, and she was thoroughly dismantled instead by Lt. David Porter, and the vessel and her piratical crew dismissed, and the crew left to find its way home as best it could.

The enemy proved to be the Tripolitan ship Tripoli, and the effect of this successful action is said to have been quite

Of course, people of this type must be controlled and subdued, and yet, a century and a half ago one might expect most anything from the peoples of certain sections of the Mediterranean. Indeed a highly amusing incident is recorded as having occurred during President Jefferson's administration, which shows at least that all the Turks at that time did not understand our customs, nor, perhaps, did we theirs. At any rate, this is the story as copied from an early Washington newspaper:

"A number of Turks visited the United States as commissioners during Jefferson's administration. On arriving in Washington they took quarters at the hotel on Capitol Hill, then kept by Mr. Stelle, on North A street, adjoining the old Capitol. The Bashaw paid a visit to Jefferson, who was engaged planting, at the time of his arrival, the weeping willow trees which stood at the eastern gate of the President's grounds. He preferred the request of Jefferson that he should be furnished with 12 wives! On being told by Jefferson that it was out of his power to comply with his wishes, the Beshaw remarked that he (J.) being king, could make the ladies have him!'

Apparently the decisive engagement between the Enterprise and the Tripoli in 1801 did not end piracy in the Mediterranean and engagements of more or less importance were fought there from that time until June 3, 1805, when the War with Tripoli was ended by a treaty of peace, which included the surrender of all prisoners, for which $60,000 ransom money was paid. During the meantime, however, a squadron under Commodore Edward Preble had spent the earlier part of the year 1804 in a strict blockade of that port, in cruising in that vicinity, and in preparing for an attack on the town.

Prior to this, and toward the close of the year 1803, the U.S. S. Philadelphia had struck on the rocks in the harbor of Tripoli, and it was this mishap that afforded Stephen Decatur the opportunity of distinguishing himself by recapturing and burning that vessel on the evening of February 16, 1804. The Philadelphia, in 1801, had been the flagship of Commodore Stephen Decatur, sr., who served in the Revolutionary War, and naturally the sentiment attached to the ship by the son and namesake, must have had something to do with the latter's unusual exploit.

At this time the Americans had returned to this place to bring the Bashaw of Tripoli to terms, and it was then that Lt. Stephen Decatur conceived the idea of liberating the officers and crew of the Philadelphia, which included its captain. William Bainbridge, who had been made prisoners of war, and then to destroy the vessel.

With 76 volunteers, Capt. Decatur sailed into the harbor and ran alongside the Philadelphia under the guns of the castle, boarded her, killed or dove into the sea all of her defenders, set her on fire, and then under cover of a heavy protective cannonade by the American squadron escaped without losing a man.

Of those who accompanied Capt. Decatur in this gallant night expedition, the following names have been preserved: Lts. James Lawrence, J. Bainbridge and J. Thorn; Dr. Heerman, Midshipmen C. Morris, T. MacDonough, R. Izard, A. Laws, J. Davis, J. Rowe, T. O. Anderson and Pilot Salvadore Catalani and Lt. Charles Stuart in the brig Siren.

Heroic Deed.

On August 3, 1804, in a further engagement in this harbor, Lt. James Decatur, brother of Stephen, jr., and son of Stephen, sr., was mortally wounded, after distinguishing himself. At the same time, Capt. Stephen Decatur, who was in command of gunboat No. 4, again performed a deed of heroism, when in the attack, "after pouring showers of grape and musket balls on the enemy, as he approached, he bore down on and attacked one of the largest of the enemy's squadron."

He engaged in a close and desperate struggle with the captain of the Tripolitan, whom Decatur attacked with a

The Turk was a large and exceedingly powerful man, and as his assailant approached he seized the pike, wrested it from his hand, and turned it against its owner. Parrying the thrust, Decatur drew his cutlass and attempted to cut off the head of the pike, but the weapon broke at the hilt, leaving the American, apparently, at the mercy of the Turk. A second thrust was parried with his arm, and Decatur sprang upon and grappled his opponent. The trial of strength which followed this resolute adventure speedily terminated in favor of the Turk, although, in falling, Decatur so far released himself that he lay on the deck, side by side with his enemy. The latter immediately attempted to reach a small noniard which he carried in his sash, but Decatur, perceiving his object, grasped his hand, and at the same time drew from his own pocket a small pistol, which he passed around the body of the prostrate Turk, pointed inward and fired. The ball passed entirely through the body of the Turk, killing him in-grasp, sprang to his feet. It was while the two commanders were thus struggling for the mastery that the well-known act attributed to "Rubin" [spelling given by the sailor himself] James occurred. One of the crew of the Tripolitan, perceiving the desperate encounter in which his captain was engaged, ran to the rescue and raised his sabel to cleave the skull of Decatur, when Rubin James, a quarter gunner on the Enterprise, who had lost the use of both his arms by wounds, rushed in and received, on the back of his

on, the assailants were not idle, and the release of Decatur from the grasp of the Turk was speedily followed by the surrender of the vessel.

It is a shame to have to question a good story, and yet it is no more than right for those interested in the subject to know that this is one of those controversial happenings where two persons are deemed to be the one who performed the same deed of bravery, Rubin James being one and Daniel Frazier the other. Of the latter, Irving Anthony, in his book called "Decatur," makes this state-

"The Turk received him by a thrust, with a boarding pike. * * * They lost their feet. The fight welled about them. Decatur was on top. The Tripolitan turned him over. A Turkish officer struck at the head of Decatur. Daniel Frazier, an American wounded in both arms, thrust his body in the way of the blow, taking a terrific clip on his own head to save the skull of the lieutenant."

Citing as his authorities "Goldsborough's Naval Chronicles" and "Preble's Papers," in the Library of Congress, Author Anthony says: "Some authorities credit this to Reuben James. Reuben James is not listed wounded in Surg. Heermann's report. Dnl. Frashier (old spelling), two incised wounds on the head. one of them serious, one bad wound across the wrist and seven slightly about his hands, seems to clinch the honors."

Decatur's Romance.

Shortly after Stephen Decatur's return to this country, he was smitten with the fascinating Southern charms of Miss Susan Wheeler, a Norfolk belle of refinement and education, to whom he was married October 8, 1806. She was the daughter of a wealthy merchant of that place. In addition to a commanding beauty, it is said, this young lady "possessed great superiority of intellect."

It has been said that the hand of this fair maiden had been ineffectually sought by Jerome Bonaparte before the great Napoleon's brother had wooed and won the love of that famous Baltimore beauty,

Decatur soon found that he should have a new home in a more stylish neighborhood than that afforded by the Seven Buildings, and so we find him purchasing the site at the southwest corner of H street and Jackson place, where he erected in 1819 the building still standing at that location.

Decatur had only a short while to live in his new home, for it was destined he should be carried from here a corpse but one short year hence, following the fatal duel at Bladensburg with Commodore James Barron, March 22, 1820.

Battle of Aboukir.

To many the Mediterranean, except for what has been going on there in the last year or two, means but little in addition to our own naval engagements. which, after all, are not so well known either. Great Britain has staged a number of battles in this notable body of water, two of its greatest being fought during the period of our own battles

One of the early British engagements was fought in the spacious Bay of Aboukir near Alexandria, on August 1, 1798, England's fleet being commanded by that intrepid sailor, Lord Horatio lson, who achieved a decisi over the French fleet commanded by Admiral Brueys. And here it was that Louis Casabianca, captain of the L'Orient, flagship of the French fleet, was fatally wounded. He fought, we are told, bravely to the last, and was killed with his son, Giacomo Jocante Casabianca, who remained at his post after the ship had taken fire, and all the guns had been abandoned, and perished in the explosion of the vessel.

From this incident, Mrs. Felicia Dorothea Hemans, an English poetess, wrote a very attractive poem, which she called "Casabianca," which was quite popular as a recitation around 60 years ago, and undoubtedly many a schoolboy or schoolgirl who went to school so many years ago, will undoubtedly recall it after reading the first verse. It follows:

The boy stood on the burning deck When all but he had fled; The flames that lit the battle's wreck, Shone round him o'er the dead.

Yet beautiful and bright he stood As born to rule the storm: A creature of heroic blood. A proud, though child-like form.

The flames roll'd on-he would not go Without his father's word; That father, faint in death below, His voice no longer heard.

Gibraltar. About one-half the buildings are built of light yellowish brick, while others are built of a kind of sead-color material. Very little red is seen. The rock itself has an uninviting appearance and were it not used as a strategic military base would probably be abandoned by all those residing there.

This big rock formation rises abruptly out of the Straits of Gibraltar to a miximum height of 1,396 feet, and the buildings are erected on a steep incline for quite a distance up the mountain and for several miles along the shore.

Practically orphaned during peacetime, the merchant marine of the United States sprang into importance shortly after Nazi soldiers invaded Poland on September 1, 1939. Its rebuilding was begun in 1937.

The United States merchant marine of peacetime had been almost forgotten, along with its tremendous history-how our merchant fleet of the clipper days was envied by foreign sailors who clipped their lofty masts and knew little of "cracking on" and "carrying hard."

Now, stimulated by war, the merchant marine again has been called upon to carry the ball-to take cargoes to war zones . . . to supply the men who will

New shipbuilding will call for an additional 100,000 seamen and 25,000 officers in 1943. America has to furnish these men. The academy already has scaled its efforts toward supplying many of the officers needed.

The school was started in January, when the Chrysler estate was purchased. Then the Government also bought the adjoining estate of Movie Magnate Nicholas M. President of the United States, retired after a long and brilliant career of public service, will, for a brief moment. reoccupy the spotlight in Congress. At any time new, a handsome marble bust of him will be set up in the halls of the Senate wing of the Capitol, to join those of his 31 predecessors. It is the law, and has been since 1886. The exact wording, in part, runs: "Resolved, that marble busts of those who have been Vice Presidents of the United States shall be placed in the vacant niches of the Senate chamber from time to time." In 1898 an amendment was made: "vacant niches of the Senate chamber" was stricken out, and replaced by "Senate wing of the Capitol."

The reason—the 20 vacant niches were filled. Ten of the extra 11 are there now. The 11th, that of Henry Wilson, Vice President under Grant, would have been, but for a highly dramatic incident. Mr. Wilson, stricken while at work, died in the office of the Vice President. A resolution was therefore passed in this exceptional case, to place his bust in the room where he died. This was done.

Mr. Garner's bust has been executed by the famous sculptor, James E. Fraser, whose work has been widely appreciated by Uncle Sam. In 1908 he created an inspiring likeness, now in the Senate corridor, of Theodore Roosevelt, as President. More recently he was the author of the majestic statues outside the west facade of the Supreme Court Building; a female figure, "Contemplation of Justice," and a male figure, "Authority of

Senate Awaits New Marble Bust of Garner Howard Chandler Christie, is in the Senate wing of the Capitol. Unusual honors, these, for a Vice President, but then Mr. Garner is an unusual man; he was Vice President, and also Speaker of the House for many years. The one disappointing feature of the occasion is that, according to latest advice, Mr. Garner himself will not be here when his effigy is placed. He is deep in the heart of Texas. Col. Edwin Halsey, energetic secretary of the Senate, personal friend and admirer of Cactus Jack, wrote and invited him to come, but with no success. "Mrs. Garner is indisposed and unable to travel," wrote Mr. Garner in reply, "and I do not like to come without her." Mrs. Garner's condition is not still open; it is earnestly hoped that Mrs. Garner will recover rapidly, and that both will be able to make the trip in time.

The provision of Congress that all Vice President of the United States shall be thus honored does much to disprove the notion, common to political satirists, that the vice presidency is an obscure job-a convenient place to park the obstreperous to keep them quiet. It may even be argued that Congress gives more honor to Vice Presidents than to Presidents; there is at any rate no law providing any statues of Presidents.

Speaker of the House. The other, by thought to be serious. The invitation is because of the fact that they have been Vice Presidents. Not many Presidents, who were never Vice Presidents, have made this hall of fame. They are few enough to mention briefly. In the rotunda of the Capitol are three of George Washington, two of Lincoln, one of Jefferson, one of Grant and one of Garfield. It is the Vice Presidents who get the breaks, not the Presidents.

They deserve it. The task of the Vice President is not nearly so glamorous as that of the President, but it consists of a whole lot more than waiting around for the President to die, a misconception of the ignorant. He is, ex officio, president of the Senate, in the strict meaning of the word "president"-he actually presides over the Senate. He calls it to order, and keeps it functioning evenly. A word from him, now and then, speeds up performance, irons out controversies, smooths rising tempers. It is a job where personality counts; when it is over, Congress gets most of the credit.

By virtue of his office it chances that the Vice President is custodian of the oldest historic relic of the United States still in use, namely, the original gavel used by the first Vice President of the United States, John Adams, and by all his successors. It is an ancient ivory cylinder, about 21/4 inches long, an inch and a quarter in diameter. The handle is long since gone. Other gavels are used occasionally, but the old relic is the favorite weapon used by the Vice President to bring the Senate to order.

What history that old gavel has seen! Heated senatorial history, much of it; Congress is subject to sharp debates. The gavel helps keep these debates within the bounds prescribed by Jefferson's Manual; it is not only a symbol of vice presidential authority; it is a means of enforcement. And what thoughts must have coursed through the minds of all the wielders of that historic instrument that solid ivory gavel in the foreground.

The chic New York stylist who came to live at the White House after her marriage there last July to Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's closest adviser, really works at her war job as s volunteer nurses' aide. And loves it.

Blue-eyed Louise Macy Hopkins makes a pretty picture on sunny mornings, bicycling up Pennsylvania avenue bareheaded, with her black coat flying away from a trim blue and white uniform. Her pert cap, which she is not allowed to wear jutdoors, peeks from a pocket.

Some days she takes the streetcar or Is driven in her husband's car, but her destination is the same. She's en route from the Executive Mansion to Columbia, Washington's biggest mother and baby hospital, where she gives bed baths, feels pulses, rubs backs, fills water bottles, makes beds and answers bells.

Captain of Columbia Aides.

Four days a week, Tuesday through Friday, she checks in before 9 a.m., and works until 3:30 p.m. As captain of the Columbia aides, she also stays overtime once a month to make out reports and to check by phone the aides available for the next month.

Fellow nurses' aides praise her. Onceskeptical regular nurses say she's "responsible." Patients say she's "sweet" and "swell." And she says she's well paid, even working free.

"Why, I think it's the most gratifying work any one could do," Mrs. Hopkins explained when the superintendent of nurses called her down from "third floor surgical" for an interview. She has steered clear of reporters and tried to stay in the background since her marriage three months ago and Mrs. Roose. velt's announcement that the couple had "unselfishly agreed to stay with us in the interest of carrying out the war."

"Anything you do that is really helping some one makes you feel good," the fashion expert-nurses' helper said. "Just to know that a light might have had to stay on nobody knows how long if you hadn't been there to answer it. To know that your presence is comforting to some one just coming out from under the ether."

She looked very earnest, sitting there in her blue denim jumper apron over a white blouse which was clasped at the neck with the nurses' aide pin, a maltese cross in gold with volunteer written on a blue outer circle. Steady blue eyes beneath natural brows looked out from under a white-trimmed, blue starched cap which she had pinned to her netcovered chestnut hair. On the cap and on her left sleeve she wore the joint Red Cross-OCD insignia.

"All the way round, it's very satisfying," the former Paris editor of Harper's Bazaar smiled. "Of course, I simply like it. All my life I've thought I would like to be a nurse, but I probably wouldn't have done it if it hadn't been for the war."

Her Chosen Field.

Asked how Mr. Hopkins felt about her volunteer work, she replied that he "thinks it's wonderful," agrees it's the most needed thing. Of course, she added, she had already decided upon it as her war job before their wedding and had some 250 hours of active service before she left New York.

This nurses' aide job which she chose is no snap. Like 32,000 other American women who now have completed the courses, Louise Hopkins had to take 80 hours of training-35 hours in a classroom under a registered nurse learning medical terms and expressions and practicing on classmates' temperatures and the like, and 45 hours' additional supervised practice in hospital wards in the presence of registered nurses. At graduation they agree to give 150 hours' work a year without pay. They buy their own uniforms and must take the Red Cross first-aid course-another 20 hour proposition.

It isn't hard to get in the 150 hours a year, though, according to Mrs. Hopkins. She figured a minute, half to herself. Four days a week. Six hours a day counting out time for lunch.

At It for Six Months.

"I guess I'll have at least 98 hours this month," she said. "I often give Saturday, too, when Mr. Hopkins is working. I have well over 300 hours and I've been doing it six months."

The former fashion writer might have edded that part of that six months was taken up with a courtship and wedding which claimed the Nation's attention and which would have kept many women "too busy to do anything outside right

Her marriage to 51-year-old Harry Hopkins, former WPA administrator, now chairman of the Munitions Assignments Board of the United States and Great Britain, was the 15th wedding to take place in the White House, the first since 1914, when Eleanor Wilson married her father's Secretary of the Treasury,

William Gibbs McAdoo. They met last January when she went to see him about a job, armed with a letter of introduction from her former magazine editor boss. He called her up the next day and asked her to have dinner. Their engagement was announced early in July. The wedding was quiet with President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the couples families present. The latter included 10-year-old Diana Hopkins, whose mother died in 1937; David, Stephen and Robert, Mr. Hopkins' sons by his first marriage; the bride's sister, Gertrude Macy, secretary to Actress Katharine Cornell, and her brother-in-law and sister, Lt. and Mrs. Nicholas Ludington, U.S. N. Mrs. Hopkins recalled her wedding as she discussed her nurses' aide work with this reporter.

"When I was married." she said. "I got a lot of letters from grateful patients I had met at Memorial Hospital in New York. I got a big kick out of that. I believe they were more satisfactory than any I got. People spoke of the times I gave them baths or rubbed their backs or answered a bell. Which I thought was terribly sweet."

"At Home, the White House."

The fact that the Hopkins' wedding announcements carried a little card which said, "At home, the White House," didn't interfere with the former Louise rented an empty palace in Paris for a party. Her own statement may hold the

"I'm crazy about people," she said, "all kinds and sorts. And, of course, you get them in a hospital."

Columbia, she explained, is very different from her previous hospital, which specialized in cancer natients

"There one of the principal jobs was morale building. Here the patients are in wonderful spirits. Most of them have just had babies and they're pretty proud "

She has noticed other things in her brief hospital experience.

"You can tell when women patients are getting well because they ask for lipstick and make-up," she laughed, "and you can tell when men patients are getting well because they begin to flirt a little—they may call to the nurse as she goes by: 'I think my pulse needs taking.'"

Life at the White House.

At the White House, Mrs. Hopkins leads a fairly quiet life. On a recent Sunday, she and Diana went bicycling in Rock Creek Park, and they have lots of fun playing with her cocoa poodle, named 'Suzie" after the French hat designer.

Told that many New Yorkers groan about how dull Washington is, she said that she hadn't found it so, that she liked going to parties in people's homes as is the Washington custom-liked playing games and talking.

"I haven't been in a night club here," she smiled. "I don't know if there are any. Of course I haven't done much of that in New York for some time either." "I do miss the theater, however," she added. "We saw 'This Is the Army,' and the Lunt's new show here, but we're hoping to take a long week end in New York sometime and take in all the shows

It was time for Louise Hopkins to go back on duty, but her parting remark may help reveal why she makes friends

"Thank you for coming over here to the hospital," she said. "It was so con- roads of the world. venient." If she hadn't put it that way, we might have thought she was doing

Assignment to the War Fronts

Editor's note: William F. Boni. Associated Press military editor, has sailed on a war correspondent's assignment to a forcian fighting front. In this, his last story before embarkation, he describes the trials and troubles of winning his correspondent's credentials.

By William F. Boni, Associated Press Military Editor.

A WEST COAST PORT .- A toothache-like pain which keeps you from raising your arm above shoulder height and makes shaving a feat of one-armed acrobatics; one night of perspiring-andchilled fever; buying a khaki uniform blouse in one store and visiting four others before finding the buttons to go with it—those are high-spot recollections of the mechanics of becoming a war correspondent. It involves a great deal of paper work, many calls on numerous officials, innumerable signatures scrawled on essential documents, and a final dizzy whirl, punctuated (quite literally) by shots in the arm from Army doctors, of trying not to forget any item of equipment.

The process begins with a three-foot long questionnaire, two-sided and in quintuplicate, which asks such question a "where were you from 1914 to 1918?"

United States?" This, complete with ceive (and sign for) a gas mask, helmet, photo, goes to the FBI, which gives your canteen, mess kit, musette bag and barpast a fine curry-combing .

Once approved, the War Department issues you a small, green-backed folder which identifies you as an "accredited correspondent," contains your picture, a full description and a full set of right-

Next you sign four copies of a form whereby you are accredited to a specific command.

Then you go to the doctor. He gives you a smallpox vaccination (I already had six, but got the seventh anyway). injects tetanus toxoid in one arm and typhoid vaccine in the other, each the first of three such shots. The tetanus injection burns. The typhoid makes you feel as if you had a bad toothache just above your elbow. The doctor also takes down the necessary information for your "dog tag"—the metal identification plate which you carry at all times.

Now the process of collective uniforms and equipment begins. This sounds as though it should be fairly simple, but it turns out you have to go to one store and "have you ever taken an oath of for one thing, to another for something allegiance to any country other than the else, and so on. From the Army you reracks bag.

> By this time you are due to check with the Army Transport Service on transportation. You come under the "casual officer" classification-officers not attached to any specific unit. The ATS tells you to report at such-and-such a time, at such-and-such a pier, for inspection of your hold baggage, which is limited to one footlocker and one bedding roll. Your cabin baggage is limited to one piece of hand baggage and the musette bag.

> You are, now, in uniform-officers' uniform, without insignia of rank, and with a green armband with white letter "C" on your left sleeve. You get used to the uniform very quickly. You also try to discourage, as diplomatically as possible, enlisted men from saluting. If one of them does anyhow, you return the

> At the pier, you are startled to find a young lady, sitting on a suit case and surrounded by several other pieces of luggage, including an oil painting of her young son which is packed in a wooden crate. Her husband is in the diplomatic service, and she is going to rejoin him. You are even more startled to find that her home in New York is only three blocks from your own.

> You have forgotten to stencil your name on your footlocker, so while you wait for the baggage inspection you borrow a can of paint from the pier carpenter and slap it on with that. A sailor, in charge of one of the gun crew aboard the transport, watches you. He has several good suggestions to make about small things to take along where you are going.

> Ten Red Cross workers arrive. All are in uniform-but when their footlockers are opened for inspection, they are bulging with evening dresses, bathing suits, and such. Where or when the girls expect to wear them-but why disillusion them?

> Back to the Army now, for a brisk physical check-up and another typhoid shot. This goes into the other arm (which gets just as sore if not more so) and that night puts you in bed with one of the worst fevers you ever had. But it's all cleared up by morning, just about the time the phone rings and a pleasant voice instructs you to be aboard by 6 o'clock that evening.

> Only about three persons outside the Army know where you're going or when. Your family doesn't know. Your friends don't know. Maybe the cab driver knows -at least he knows the way to the pier. She looks to be a sturdy ship, though hardly pretty in her gray-blue war paint, and her actual silhouette is badly obscured by gun turrets, extra life-rafts and such. You are assigned to a cabin as you check in at the gangplank. Your hand baggage is inspected. You climb aboard.

time to come back." Only a little more than 5 feet in height. Seiberling sometimes has been called "the little Napoleon" of the tire industry. But he is much more than that: He is one of its principal builders.

Founded Goodyear Company.

In 1898, just through his first major financial reverse—the collapse of his father's agricultural implement business Seiberling borrowed $3,500, rented a ramshackle old strawboard factory building in Akron and founded the great Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. In 1920 the company was distributing more than $200,000,000 worth of rubber products annually to all parts of the world.

Then came the economic dislocation of 1921. Many companies had to seek outside financial aid. Godyear was one She makes friends easily too. Patients, of them. Seiberling, just past the threetrained nurses and Red Cross aides say score mark in age, stepped out.

Seiberling doesn't coddle himself in his office. Its furnishings are extremely simple. There is an old-fashioned desk, a couple of chairs and two tables; on one table is the first tire the Seiberling company produced; on the other a few articles of experimental work. It is all crowded into a space hardly more than 8 by 12 feet. Here Seiberling talks quietly in short, clipped phrases. He tells you with no waste of words that he regards development of the revolutionary straight-bead tire as one of his most important achievements; that he looks upon synthetic rubber as a stopgap that cannot completely replace natural crude, especially because he doubts whether the cost of producing synthetic ever can be brought down to the level of crude.

Seiberling was born in a small settlement called Western Star, only a few miles from the present site of his rubber company, on October 6, 1859. His father was an inventor of agricultural implements and machinery, including a mower, a reaper and a twine binder.

After elementary school education in Akron, Seiberling went to Heidelberg College at Tiffin, then turned, with a brother, to operating the Akron Electric Street Railway System for a time after it had come into his father's control. But he soon went back to the farm implement business as secretary and treasurer of his father's company.

Industrial Napoleon.

In 1898 competition in the agricultural machinery business had become intense. The Seiberlings went down, and when all creditors had been satisfied, "F. A." was broke. But he foresaw a future for the still cradled rubber industry, and, with borrowed capital, he began the career that has made him one of the outstanding figures in American industrial

Seiberling continued as president of his company until he was 78; then he turned the presidency over to his son, J. Penfield Seiberling. For all practical purposes, however, it still is "Mr. F. A.'s company." The doorway to his office always is open to any employe, and he knows many of them by their given

About the only alteration Seiberling has made in his normal routine of daily climbing the long flight of stairs to his second-floor office is to slightly shorten his work day. He averages five or six hours now instead of the 10 or 12 that was his custom only a few years ago.

On the wall of the first floor reception room in the administration building is one of Seiberling's most cherished possessions, a bronze plaque presented to him by employes of the Goodyear com- . pany on the night of May 21, 1921, when he ended his connection with the company he had founded 23 years earlier. It lauds Seiberling as "the builder of

Winter clothes which were issued to one German division were said to consist of wicker wrappings for the feet, with artificial rubber soles, padded cotton jackets and cotton caps. The padded caps were given only to sentries, Red Star said, other troops being provided only with brown woolen cloths to wrap around their heads. In the 540th German special bat-

It was a blend of good and goofy football, with the jittery Colonials giving Georgetown a strenuous tussle for a half. Georgetown achieved its 7-0 half-time lead by capitalizing on a George Washington fumble and Johnny Barrett fashioned Hoya scores in the third and fourth

The first time G. W. got its hands on the ball to run from scrimmage the Colonials were in trouble. On the Colonials' initial play Fullback Frank Seno fumbled and Tackle George Perpich recovered for the Hoyas on G. W.'s 18. Three plays later, after Johnny Barret had lost a yard and a Frankie Dornfeld pass had been smeared, chunky Bill Mc Laughlin slipped inside left tackle and streaked 19 yards to score Whitey Erickson converted and Georgetown owned a 7-0 lead.

Before Georgetown could line up for another play, however, time ran out.

Paul Weber, who earlier in the third period had punted a mere six yards out of bounds, booted from deep in G. W. territory with six minutes of the quarter remaining and Georgetown then marched 36 yards to its second score. Barrett picked up 15 vards in two stabs at G. W.'s line and Dornfield whisked off right guard and romped 18 yards to the Colonials' 3. Three times G. Duffey then snatched Seno's pass, though, and came back 20 yards to Georgetown's 39, ending that scoring

The teams settled down to exchanging intercepted passes for the remainder of the fourth period and with less than a minute of the tiff remaining Agnew set up Georgetown's third touchdown when he 19 yards to the G. W. 36.

Why should I pay $1.65 to see two teams play when, with a first action was to return a punt substantial lead, one won't give me a chance to see one of the best plays in the game—a possible runback of a kickoff? I know it's their game and they'll play it as they see fit, but why crab if we don't show up to see them play? I, like a lot of others, will go if the teams will attempt to give us our money's worth. Maryland's football game with Washington and Lee yesterday revived painful memories for some Old Line followers. It was in 1925 that Maryland was playing W. and L. and as the game ticked into the waning seconds Maryland held a 3-0 lead by virtue of Mike Stevens' field goal. Coach Curley Byrd chose that moment to give Ed Tenney, reserve quarterback, a chance to earn his letter. Maryland had possession of the ball and needed only to run two or three plays and walk off the field

But Tenney, a brilliant scholar, passed on first down. A General intercepted and sprinted to the touchdown that beat Maryland, 7-3. Tenney got his letter. Tenney got two letters, in fact, for Washington and Lee voted him one and rubbed it in by naming him the Generals' most valuable player.

Impromptu Quarterbacking Wins for Maryland

Four years later Byrd made a quarterback replacement that wasn't as disastrous. Yale was leading Maryland, 13-0, at the half, but at that DETROIT, Nov. 21.—The underdog Arkansas Razorbacks smashed a time Quarterbacks Gordon Kessler and Augie Roberts had been hurt. three-game losing streak today by Byrd turned quarterbacking duties over to Bozie Berger, wrich was all coming from behind to defeat the right except that the nonchalant Berger didn't know the signals.

"Listen," he said to Berger, "you run down the field as far as you can and I'll throw you one." Bozie caught a 70-yarder Virgil Johnson recovered a fumble for a touchdown. Later Chalmers tossed to Bozie for a long gain and in the end zone for one Arkansas then whispered to Berger, "You go out to the side and I'll flip you a touchdown and Bob Forte plunged 2 lateral." Berger took that lateral and romped for another touchdown and that 13-13 tie with a heavily-favored Yale eleven ranks as one of the more notable football feats in Old Line annals.

That University of Delaware team Maryland will face in one of its early games next fall will be no pushover. The Blue Hens own an undefeated string of 21 games-16 triumphs and 5 ties.

Crimson Kicks Goal Early Then Thrusts 93 Yards to Elis' 7 Just Before End

By JUDSON BAILEY,

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 21.—Gridiron glory returned to Yale alike were seized with consternation today as Hugh Knowlton and Townsend W. (Tim) Hoopes maneuvered a 62-yard touchdown pass in the gathering dusk of the final period to whip Harvard's Crimson, 7 to 3, before a small collection of 23,500 fans in Yale Bowl.

It was a sudden, surprising stab that ended Harvard's hex over 1939 and it gave Yale the championship of the Big Three. The blow came with 6 minutes to play in the last quarter and developed so quickly that there was little drama in it. Knowlton, a 19-year-old sophomore, had entered the game a few moments earlier when the Elis were tired and trailing by three points as the result of an 18-vard Harvard field goal in the second stanza. His mildly 7 yards to Yale's 38. Then on his first offensive play he faded back and threw a sharp pass to Hoopes in midfield. The receiver was soon surrounded by a swarm of Crimson jerseys, but reversed his goalward without interference. Harvard Drive Stopped on 7. Fred Dent place-kicked the extra point. Then came the drama, because Harvard took the succeeding kickoff and drove 93 yards before being stopped on the 7 just one play ahead of the final whistle.

With defeat staring them in the face the Harvards showed the power and finesse they never had uncovered before. They worked methodically to their own 35, then Wayne Johnson passed to fleet Cleo O'Donnell on Yale's 44 and he galloped on to the 25 for a total gain of 40 yards. Another pass from John Comeford to Lloyd Anderson brought a first down on the 7 and the Old Blues quavered.

Every one in the great bowl was tense, but it turned out that the NcNeill Beats Hammersley Crimson players were tied up tighter than all the rest. They tried a play over center and Capt. Spence Moseley spilled Johnson for no gain. A perfect bullet pass by Johnson was dropped on the goal line. Then Johnson couldn't find, a receiver and barely got back to the line of scrimmage with no loss. Finally Comeford tried a pass to Johnson in the flat at left end and the toss was right to the mark, but was dropped again and the game might as well have stopped immediately. It did one play later.

ng vesterday but Washington and Lee's exhausted football forces had most of the fun, whipping up a tornadic fourth-period rally that produced two touchdowns and had the alumni holding their hats before the final gun clinched a 32-28 victory for the Old Liners.

It was a prosaic piece of pageantry unfolded before a colorful gathering of 7,000 fans until the Generals fanned the breeze with their desperate pass and pray tactics that failed to overtake the victors but gave the crowd something exciting climax to Maryland's golden gridiron jubilee and a satisfying one from all angles.

Washington and Lee seemed woefully outclassed in the first period when its host rang up three downs without the semblance of opposition and most of the customers And when the Generals came back with their first score in the second quarter nobody gave it a second

But there was an anxious stir on the Maryland bench in the third period when the visitors sent Clark Shaughnessy's red-shirted warriors rocking on their heels like hobbyhorses and the Old Liners' board of strategy, players and old gracis when the visitors gave the boys that one-two punch in the final chukker. This sort of thing wholly was unlocked for from the Lexington Generals Use Daring Tactics. But wait, you haven't heard about the pay-off shot, the hit of daring, desperately reckless strategy that almost carried the day for W. and L. It happened in the last minute of play and the plan succeeded even after it had been revealed by the over-anxious underdogs on a nullified on-side kick-off. Maryland and a son of a former Harvard should have been ready for the second kick and possibly it was. But the plan worked just the same.

The kick dribbled along the soft turf 14 yards and it first seemed that Maryland would let it go. Then Tom Mont reached for the elusive pigskin. As he did a wave of blue engulfed him, the ball bounded from his grasp and when Referee "Dutch" Eberts unscrambled them Harry Baugher, W. and L. back, was hugging the orphan ball tightly to his breast. Precious few seconds remained but enough for Dick Working to get off the last of his long, spiralling passes that recently had wreaked so much havoc among Maryland's secondary. This one missed, as the Marylanders in the stands and on field breathed a sigh of relief, and before the Generals could try another play the game was over.

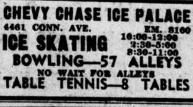

The victory, Maryland's seventh in nine games, adding up to its best season since 1937 when Frank Dobson's eleven won seven and lost two, seemingly was sealed in the opening stanza when the Old Liners could do nothing wrong. Hubie Werner opened the scoring with a 28-yard romp to pay dirt, climaxing a 69yard march sparked by Mont's ess to Red Wright and Bob James.

Mier Makes Fancy Run. Wright's buck from the 1-yard line culminated a 50-yard drive for the second score and Jack Mier, fluttering through a hole in the left side of the line like a leaf in the autumn wind, chalked up the third on a 25yard jaunt. Mont's passing, which accounted for 197 yards, was a prominent feature of all the Old Liners' advances. A blocked punt, knocked down and recovered by Ray Norman on Maryland's 8-yard stripe, set up Wash. ington and Lee's initial score in the period. Norman broke second through to thwart George Barnes' kick, but the Generals were obliged to resort to a pass by Working to Baugher for the score after three thrusts at the line produced a scant yards.

Maryland matched this later in the period-and with a vengeance. Hubie Werner attached himself to Ted Ciesla's errant pass to give Maryland the bali on its 48-yard line. Seconds later Mier broke outside right tackle and raced to the 25 and two plays after that Mont located Jack Gilmore, as footloose as hobo in W. and L. territory, for the touchdown pass.

The Generals' third-period score was stolen. Dave Russell, who kicked all of their extra points, snatched the ball from Werner, as (See MARYLAND, Page C-3.)

Georgia Tech, opening with second-stringers and plainly pointing ahead to Georgia, was outplayed through most of the first half. The Engineers put together only one drive before the intermission, converting it into a 7-0 lead that en-abled them to reach the half all even at 7-7. Then, with the regulars starting the second half, the Techs proceeded to clip off a touchdown in each of the last two quarters against an often-beaten Florida

The golden-shirted winners got their first lead early in the second quarter on a 92-yard drive. Castleberry began running and passing with telling effect, hitting first one Engineer, then another until the Gators were backed up to their 33. Sophomore Eddie Prokop passed 33 yards to Ralph Jordan on the goal for the touchdown. Jack

War Complicates Case In Baseball Beaning

PAOLA. Kans., Nov. 21.-The pop bottle that beaned Minneapolis Outfielder Ab Wright during a baseball game in Kansas City September 1 still is causing headaches. Claude Wayman, 39 - year - old Louisburg (Kans.) farmer accused of the bottle throwing, has since been inducted into the Army.

But Justice of the Peace T. J. Cummings doesn't know what to do. Missouri has asked for extradition. and Wayman is soldiering while under a $1,000 bond. The bondsmen still are liable, and the case still is on the books.

Wright has recovered. He's working in a McAlester (Okla.) war

Kiddie Kars Used As Golf 'Caddies'

Number 1 among the serious links situations around town is shortage of caddies. The Army draft, higher pay elsewhere, and other factors have cut the caddie population at the country clubs almost to the vanishing point, and a lot of people are carrying their own golf bags. It isn't fun to tote a 30-pound

Knox-Walker Battle Headlines Week's Ring Bill Here

Two to Clash at Uline's Tuesday; Torres, Johnson At Turner's Tomorrow

the outstanding attraction probably is the heavyweight argument be tween Buddy Knox and Buddy Walker coming up Tuesday night at Uline Arena.

Joe Turner's arena houses the first of the fistic offerings tomorrow night with Joe Torres and Gene Johnson paired in the eight-round feature. Torres recently dusted off hard-hitting Oscar Wright and is being considered for a bout with Lew Hanbury, the promising young District lightweight who is beginning to attract attention in pro Knox Favored Over Walker.

But for the customers who like to see class as well as dynamite, the Knox-Walker show will have the most appeal. A corporal in the United States Army Air Force now stationed at Bolling Field, Knox gave a masterful demonstration of boxing in his initial comeback effort a couple of weeks ago and figures to win by the same tactics Tuesday Walker is a devastating puncher who can knock your wig off if he connects, but getting close enough to Knox to fire the winning shot threatens to be difficult.

Knox, still a young man, is a veteran among the heavyweights and at one time was reckoned championship timber and in the ring he knows how to handle himself. But he got tagged a couple of times in his last argument and more caution is advisable this time because you're a long time getting up when Walker whams over his Sunday sock.

Torres, fast afoot and clever with his mitts, is the choice over Johnson, but the pair are well matched and should kick up some excitement. Petro After Revenge.

Sharing interest on the card will be the Danny Petro-Billy Reed 8round duel in which the former one-time king of the city's bantamious loss to the colored boy. This probably will be the best battle of the evening and should leave the customers sizzling. Turner's card is rounded out with several preliminaries and a sixadded attraction between Buddy Komar, former National champ, and Clint Conway, New York heavy who once held the ing: Golden Gloves title. At Uline the supporting card includes Horace (K., O.) Thompson

I'M A SALESMAN!

I get around a lot and I have an opportunity to see merchandise and make comparisons. Now you know a salesman has to make a good appearance, so for years I had an idea that the only way to maintain a good appearance was to buy high-priced clothes in "ritzy" stores. Well, sir, that was a delusion and I discovered it when, during the course of my travels, I ran across the Styleplus Factory Salesroom.

I had seen the Styleplus ads and, as I passed the Homer Building, curiosity prompted me to go inside and see what kind of clothese these manufacturers were selling. And did I get a surprise? If I hadn't seen the values with my own eyes I'd never believed it possible to get so much for so little. Now I am an enthusiastic wearer of Styleplus Clothes. I dress better than ever and I save about 40% on every suit or topcoat I buy. And, boy! Does this help me to buy War Bonds and Stamps!

Cargo Plane Contract Held Voided Because Of Pacific War Needs

Navy Spokesman Says Nash Agreement Shelved For Combat Types

By the Associated Press. DETROIT, Nov. 21.-A Navy spokesman said today that an immediate need for more combat planes and fast patrol bombers in the Pacific war theater had led the Government to cancel its contract with the Nash-Kelvinator Corp. for flying cargo-boats, one of the Navy's largest commitments for that type craft.

The statment came from Rear Admiral E. M. Pace, jr., director of the Navy Department's Materials

"That means that some of the facilities available through Nash-Kelvinator for flying boat production will have to be turned over to contractors who are already at work on the types of planes we now need in order to expand their output," the admiral explained.

Facilities Can Be Converted. While cargo carriers are still important, first we must give the men on the firing line the planes and weapons they require for actual fighting," he said.

Admiral Pace said Nash-Kelvinator's facilities were readily adapta-ble to the change-over, and that for this reason the Navy approached the corporation first with the revised production plan.

George Mason, president of Nash-Kelvinator, said the corporation's new plant in New Orleans, now almost completed, would be made available to another manufacturer. The contract cancellation will cause a temporary delay in a part of the firm's war production program, he said, and added

"The immediate needs of our armed forces must be given the green light over everything else."

Firm Makes Engines Now. Some of the facilities set up for flying boat sub-assemblies will be converted to the manufacture of combat aircraft engines and propellers, increasing schedules for two products which already are being turned out by the corporation and avoiding any permanent dislocation of labor in affected plants.

The Nash-Kelvinator Corp. was to have manufactured Vought-Sikorsky cargo planes. Unlike recent Army cargo plane assignments which provided for plastic and plywood construction, the Navy contract called for the use of large quantities of aluminum, officials

Blackout Ball To Aid Canteen December 2

'Dancing in the Dark' To Be Theme Song Of Gala Event

The blackout ball, which in reality will be a dinner dance Wednesday evening, December 2, will have as a theme song "Dancing in the Dark," to assist in the carrying out of the idea of a blackout. Soft lights will be used in the ballroom of the Mayflower, where the benefit will be held, and only spotlights will be used during the dancing in the dark. The unusual fete has been arranged by Mrs. Kittle, widow of Mr. Charles M. Kittle of Chicago, and will add to the funds for the Stage Door Canteen, where soldiers, sailors and marines find entertainment, refreshments and companionship every evening. Diversions, too, are planned for the blackout dinner dance, which will start at 7:30 o'clock, and Helen Haves, vice president of the American Theater Wing War Service, which has sponsored the Stage Door Canteens, will be among the guests. Tables were placed in the boxes which lined both sides of the ballroom and there also were tables in front of the boxes, but not too many to interfere with the dancing.

Reservations have been made by Senator and Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Harold C. Train, Gen. and Mrs. Levin H. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Batt, Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss Coonley, Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim, Mrs. A. G. Robinson, Mrs. Martin Vogel, Baron and Baron-

Miss Joan Wilkinson and Lt. Hall Married Yesterday Afternoon in St. John's Church

The interest of residential society of old Washington was attracted yesterday afternoon to the wedding of a daughter of one of the early families of the Nation's Capital that has been prominently identified with its social life and in Navy and Army circles as well.

The bride was Miss Joan Susannah Wilkinson, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Theodore S. Wilkinson, and her marriage to Lt. (j. g.) George Tait Hall of Wilton, Conn., took place in historic St. John's Church on Lafayette Square at 4 o'clock.

Simple decorations of white chrysanthemums were on the altar with the lighted candles in the seven-branch candelabra and two tall standards of white chrysanthemums were in the chancel for the ceremony, at which the Rev. Dr. Leslie Glenn officiated. Mr. Robert Hawkley organist of the church, played the wedding music.

Wearing the wedding dress of her grandmother, the late Mrs. Richard A. Harlow, who was Miss Maude Barnaby, the bride was escorted to the altar by Mr. Edward Whitman of Montclair, N. J. Mr. Whitman a cousin of the bride's father, who is now on foreign duty and was unable to attend his daughter's wedding.

A square neck and short shoulder puffs featured the tightly fitted basque of the heavy ivory satin gown, which had a deep bertha of chiffon. The skirt was very full in the back and ended in a short, train, over which the bride's tulle veil draped into a full length train. Her veil fell from a coronet of old lace and was also edged with the lace, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and stephanotis centered with white orchids. Miss Ann Harlow Wilkinson was

Miss Schoenfeld Is Married to Lt. Fleming

St. Margaret's Church Scene Of Ceremony

The wedding of Miss Martha-Wills Schoenfeld and Lt. Robert Wright Fleming, U. S. N. R., is of much interest in Washington, where the two families have been prominent for several generations. The wedding took place yesterday afternoon in St. Margaret's Church, the rector, the Rev. Armand T. Eyler, officiating at 4:30 o'clock, and a reception for members of the two families and the wedding party was held in the apartment of the bride's mother, Mrs. Wills Schoenfeld, in the Cordova. Lt. Fleming is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Vedder Fleming and the grandson of the late Col. and Mrs. Robert Fleming and the late Judge and Mrs. Daniel Thew Wright. Dr. Herbert H. Schoenfeld escorted his daughter and gave her in marriage to Lt. Fleming, who, with his best man, Capt. John Lewis Smith, ir., awaited her at the chancel steps. White chrysanthemums were in the altar vases and in the chancel were palms and tall white lighted candles.

The bride wore a very becoming gown of ivory white satin fashioned on princess lines with a long train. The bodice, buttoned down the back with small satin-covered buttons, had a sweetheart neckline and long sleeves finished in points over the hands. Her long tulle veil was held by a cap of rose point lace and she carried white orchids with a shower of bouvardia. Her only ornament was a pin, a large single diamond set in platinum, which is an heirloom in her family, worn at the neck of the dress.

Dropping rose petals in the path of the bride was little Miss Jeanne Renchard, niece of the bridegroom, who were a dainty frock of pink Becomes the Bride taffeta, sunburst pleated and made with long skirt. Mr. Renchard was among the ushers, others including Capt. Hilleary C. Hoskinson, jr.; Lt. Edward C. Ferriday, jr., of Wilmington, Lt. William Goddard Mitchell, En sign Frank Elwood Davis and Mr. Malvern F. Morse

Mrs. Schoenfeld, mother of the bride, was assisted in receiving after the ceremony by Mrs. Fleming, mother of the bridegroom, the latter wearing purple crepe made on slender lines and the front of the bodice embroidered in purple seguins. Her small hat was purple trimmed with a spray of striped ostrich feathers in fuchsia and a shoulder bouquet of orchids. Mrs. Schoenfeld was dressed in gray-blue velveteen, the fitted basque having a high, round neckline and jeweled buttons in gray-blue. Her accessories matched the gown and her corsage bouquet was of lavender orchids.

Lt. and Mrs. Fleming started later in the day for a wedding trip and at its conclusion will make their home in Evanston, Ill. The bride's traveling costume was a brown, webby tweed jacket with threads of green and yellow, a brown skirt, high turban of green and yellow, and a brown fur coat. She is a graduate of Holton Arms School and George Washington University. Lt. Fleming was graduated from Lawrenceville Preparatory School and George Washington University.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Allen of Chicago came for the wedding and among others from out of town were Dr. Harold Stonier and Miss Cora F. Jacoby of New York.

"... THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH!"

Remember when your darlings wore tweed coats over dinner jackets? And the little black wool you lived in all day was good enough to o dancing in wn wedding?

Remember? That was back in the early thirtiesand years before that! But then the picture changed—and everything became gala. The fashion for elegance came to the fore-and people selected clothes that were frankly bent on flattery. Then came the war. And the old order returned. And again it is fashionable to go to dinner in your little black wool that you lived in all day. It's fashionable to wear last year's clothes. And it's fashionable to brag about it.

But here comes Thanksgiving and Christmas. And just for a little bit—for the holiday season —the picture will change again. For just a brief interlude there'll be dress - up parties (mostly at home) . . . and a chance to play up your femi-ninity to a fare-the-well.

Ladies who complain about the terrific servant shortage in Washington might take a few hints from Mrs. Guy R. Ramsdell, chairman of Volunteer Special Services for the Arlington

Chapter of the American Red Cross. For Mrs. Ramsdell not only does all her work, but she does a superb job for the Red Cross as well. When Mr. Ramsdell (who is a dairy research chemist) was transferred to the Department of Agricul t u r e here from Wisconsin eight years ago, the Ramsdells bought a sweet house in Arlington with an MRS. GUY R. RAMSDELL. old - fashioned flower garden and with their daughter settled down to life in Virginia. As a home economics graduate Mrs. Ramsdell knows how to run a house with .the maximum of efficiency and the minimum of time. She is a good cook and she likes cooking. She also likes making food look attractive and her house is spickpieces. But best of all she loves old handmade lace. She has an impressive collection, too. Lace from all over the world . . . France, Belgium, Holland, the Hawaiian Islands. And she says she has never bought a piece. It's all lace that she has either inherited or that relatives and friends have given her. She doesn't just put it away in a box, either. She makes use of it all at one time or another Sometimes she makes a set of collar and cuffs for herself or her daughter and after that's been worn for a while she puts it away again and makes something useful out of another precious old piece. Right now she's designing a tablecloth made from several different kinds of

For the past few years she been on the Board of Directors for the Arlington Chapter of the Red Cross and it was in January that she was made chairman o f Volunteer Special Services.

Her job has been one of reorganization-fitting the women into the places for which they are best suited. She is very popular with her coworkers and Red Cross officials. She has a warm and gracious manner that is most attractive. When she isn't wearing her Red Cross uniform she prefers simple tailored clothes She makes them all herself, too, as well as all the simple schoolgirl frocks that her young daughter wears. She majored in textile study at school and from what we saw of her cutting the day we went to call on her she's practically a professional. All in all, Mrs. Ramsdell is a pretty self-sufficient woman who can do just about everything for herself and her family. For her the labor shortage holds

Comdr. Bartlett And Miss Ford Wed Yesterday

U. S. Naval Academy Chapel Is Scene Of the Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Leah Clagett Ford, daughter of Mrs. Beall Ford, to Comdr. Bradford Bartlett, U. S. N., son of the late Commodore Frank W. Bartlett, U. S. N., and Mrs. Bartlett, took place yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the chapel of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. The chapel was decorated with white chrysanthemums and palms and laurel was on the chancel rails. White bows and ferns decorated the pews. Capt. William Nathaniel Thomas, United States Navy Chaplain Corps, performed the ceremony.

Matron of honor for the bride was Mrs. Carlton Rollo Adams. She wore a gown of ivory, made with a fitted satin bodice and a soft chiffon skirt. Her headdress was of bronze chrysanthemums and the same flowers were in her bouquet.

Also attending the bride were Mrs. Bruce Byron Adell, Mrs. Paul Vernon Cox, Mrs. Robert Garrett and Mrs. John Zahm. Their gowns matched that of the matron of honor and the flowers worn in their hair were lavender chrysanthemums. They carried bouquets of lavender chrysanthemums.

Mr. Addison Bowie gave his cousin in marriage. She wore a gown of antique ivory, styled with a fitted bodice and a sweetheart neckline trimmed with a lacy design of seed pearls. The gathered skirt ended in a long, flowing train and a full-length veil of illusion tulle fell from a Mary Queen of Scots headdress, made from an antique rosepoint lace handkerchief which was carried by her maternal grandmother in her wedding. She carried a bouquet of white roses. The pearls worn by the bride were a wedding gift of the bridegroom, who brought them from the Orient.

Comdr. Bartlett had Comdr. Bruce Byron Adell as his best man and the ushers were Comdr. Richard Wigglesworth Dole, Comdr. Frank B. Gary, Comdr. Samuel Kent Groseclose, Comdr. Omar Archibald Kneeland, Comdr. Ruthven Elmer Libby and Lt. Comdr. John W. Guilder. All of the ushers and the best man were graduated from the Naval Academy in the class of 1922 and were classmates of the bridegroom.

The reception immediately following the ceremony was held at the blue gown and hat and a corsage of to meet the newcomers. red roses. Miss Bartlett wore a sap-

BUY-LINES · by Nancy Sasser A Weekly Sponsored Column of Things Advertised and Interesting

New York, Nov. 21st.—Almost a year since December 7th,—with Thanksgiving bringing a bountiful "harvesting"! True, your second cup of coffee may be missing, . . . the sugar bowl is often low, ... we are forced to walk more, . . . you may face a meatless day, . . . some of our cherished fashions are hard to find. But each civilian sacrifice is helping to give people in all corners of the globe the hope of real and permanent Thanksgiving. So let's rejoice on Thursday, make it a full-hearted day of thanks for every sacrifice we're enabled to make! And remember to invest only in BUY-LINES that will give you real service,here are two I especially recommend . . .

Pilgrims had to make their own soap-today all we have to say is SWAN-and there's a pure white floating soap "at your service!" There's no limit to the soap-tasks SWAN performs; it's pure as castile for baby's bath and your complexion, a hearty "latherer" to please the men in your family, and a sudsin' whiz for fine laundering, washing dishes and cleaning woodwork! You'd imagine that all these SWAN services would cost a lot, but listen to this! SWAN'S thriftier than easy-to-waste package soap. And it gives more soap per penny than any leading toilet soap tested-costs only a few cents for the large-size bar that snaps easily into two smaller cakes.

Between Thanksgiving and Christmas we're gayer than at other times of the year . . . so heed my advice about AMOLIN deodorizing protection! Use AMOLIN Personal Deodorant Powder to keep your personal feminine secrets . . . sprinkle it into your shoes before you go Christmas shopping or holiday dancing . . . see how effectively it controls perspiration odors! You'll find AMOLIN Powder at your Druggist,-in 35c and 60c sizes . . . an absorbent, cool, soothing powder that can't feel sticky or greasy or spoil fine fabrics with stain! I recommend it as an immediate BUY-LINE!

Wedding Yesterday In St. Patrick's Church Here

Miss Ethel Mary Meloy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Stanley Meloy of Lanham, Md., and Mr. Leland James Casey, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Casey of St. Paul, Minn., were married yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed in St. Patrick's Church in Washington, the Rev. Robert Arthur officiating at 3

Miss Marjorie Kempton of Lan-ham was maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Mary Champeno, Miss Mimi Wells, Miss Isabelle Molloy and Miss Marchia Heinrich. Mr. Eric Harslom of Long Island was best man for Mr. Casey and the ushers included Ensign Francis E. Meloy, jr., U. S. N. R., and Mr. Daniel Meloy of Chevy Chase, cousins of the bride; Lt. Sewall Simpson, U. S. A., and Lt. Morris Dalby. Mr. Meloy escorted his daughter and her wedding gown was an im-ported model of heavy duchess satin with an Alencon lace bodice made with long sleeves and a sweetheart neckline. Her veil fell to the end of the train of the dress and was held by a coronet, and she carried white orchids and stephanotis. The maid of honor was in coral color chiffon and lace and the bridesmaids had similar frocks of MacArthur green and they all carried autumn flowers.

The reception was held in the home of the bride's parents in Lanham after which Mr. and Mrs. Casey started on an extended wedding trip in the south. On their return they will make their home at 2929 Osford road in Arlington. The bride wore a winter white frock with a large off-the-face baby blue velvet hat and a dusty rose coat trimmed with skunk fur. Mrs. Casey attended Chevy Chase Junior College and is a graduate of Syracuse University and during her vacations has been active in dramatic circles. Mr. Casey was graduated from the school of engineering at the University of Minnesota and is stationed in Washington.

Art Center Fair Set for Sunday, November 29

Benefit Will Help Maintain Classes For Children

Mrs. Clark Foreman, president of the Children's Art Center, and the other officers and members of the board of directors are hard at work to make their Book Fair Sunday, November 29, the success they feel it deserves to be. The art center, recently moved to 1744 K street, was started about five years ago as a Government project, but when the war came the Government withdrew its support and those who had worked for its establishment have continued through their own efforts and those of their friends to maintain the center. Classes in various branches of art are held Saturday mornings and each afternoon children who have talent and cannot afford to pay for lessons are taught for a very small nominal sum. In addition the center has formed classes in the evenings for young people who are here to work for the Government in the war effort at an equally small sum.

The Book Fair will have its opening Sunday afternoon, November 29, from 3 to 6 o'clock and will continue through the week following. Authors of children's books will be present to autograph their works as they are sold. Among these writers will be Miss Cornelia Meigs of Philadelphia, who is here for the winter. Her "Invincible Louisa," a story of the life of Louisa M. Alcott, won the Newberry Medal a short time ago. Katharine Stanley-Brown, who is the wife of Mr. Rudolph Stanley-Brown, will be there to autograph her book, "The Story of the Printed Picture," which is illustrated by Mr. Stanley-Brown. Miss Ellis Credle, author of "North Carolina Folk Tales," "Down, Down the Mountain" and "Floppy at Home," and Mrs. Eva Knox Evans, who wrote "The Lost Handkerchief," "Araminta" and "Key Corner," will be among other authors ready to autograph their volumes Sunday afternoon.

Miss Stoutenburgh And Mr. Didden Wed In St. Matthew's

Dorothee Mae Stoutenburgh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Stoutenburgh of this city, became the bride of Mr. George A. Didden, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Didden, also of Washington, yesterday morning at 11 o'clock at St. Matthew's Cathedral, with the Rev. John S. Spence officiating. The church was decorated with palms and white chrysanthemums for the ceremony and Mr. Malton Boyce, organist, played the nuptial music.

The only attendant for the bride was Mrs. O'Ferrel Estes, her sister. She wore a gown of winter powder blue, made with a fitted bodice of silk jersey and a full skirt of chiffon. Her headdress of ostrich tips and veiling was of the same color as her dress and she carried a bouquet of large chrysanthemums.

Mr. Stoutenburgh gave his daughline. The sleeves of the gown were fitted and ended in points over the and Mrs. George Hause of Wash-hands and the skirt ended in a train. Her veil of illusion, extending to the Corpl. Henry Fowler is spending tephanotis and orchids.

Now we realize that a pretty pair of shoes won't stop a man in his tracks . . . but still, they DO make a difference in the way a girl feels, and acts, and looks. Of course, you want your feet to be as comfortable as possible ... but a girl might as well be lovely, too!

Ransack Your Old Junk Boxes and the Notion Counters for Odd and Effective Designs

Those snappy comebacks like "It's an ill wind that blows no good" and "Every cloud has a silver lining" may turn out to be more true than trite—at least where fashion is concerned. As in almost every other phase of living, women are learning the meaning of clothes conservation. of buying what is actually needed and of transforming the "personality" of costumes already in their wardrobes.

There are many shortagesyou know most of them from stockings to zippers, from woolens to metal jewelry-but out of these restrictions and such will come some of our best designing, professionally and also by the amateur. When it comes to clothes, we're mighty spoiled, and from here on we're going to find out that we can do with less, if we're just smart enough to make the most of what we do have.

Today's lesson in the gentle art of "making things do" concerns buttons, of all seemingly prosaic things. If you're smart, you'll go through that old button box or have a look at the newest models on the counters of Washington stores. For there are some amazing things to be done with buttons-thrifty and fashion-right things, too.

For example, you can make a smart pair of button earrings with very little trouble. To increase your own jewelry wardrobe or whip up a few inexpensive Christmas gifts, gather together your old, discarded earrings, pry out the settings and put several drops of household cement on the earring disk. Then

New Girdles Do Good Job

By Josephine Lowman.

When the girdle designers and manufacturers were cut on their rubber rationing to 36 square inches of elastic material per garment just what did that do to the "spare" around your

Have you looked for a girdle recently? Well, I have, and let me warn you not to be dicouraged by just looking at them for they give the appearance of much more girdle than the overall elastic ones we have been accustomed to stretching to our own proportions. Try them on and you will find that they are very comfortable, give the support you need, and save your vanity from the scrap heap of priorities!

I am certain that you will feel as I did. If these new numbers exhibit a shortage of elastic they certainly show a lot of clever thought. Spun rayon is used as a substitute, so is crepe, applied in two layers, also a tightly knitted material and some girdles have elastic insets and waist-

We all need a girdle some of the time, both for the best fit of our gowns and for support, but I believe we should mold our figures to such proportions and strengthen our abdominal muscles to such an extent that we will not be desperately dependent on them

Often a woman with a flat tummy will have thickened through the waistline so that any girdle will push a roll over the top. This is entirely unnecessary if you will exercise. This is a splendid one for that roll. Stand erect. Raise the arms over the head, feet comfortably apart. Bend the trunk to the left. At the same time push the hips as far to the right as you can. Return to position. Now bend the trunk to the right and push the hips as far to the left as you can: continue. The bend in both the trunk and the push with the hips is straight to the sidenot backward. Knees are easy as you slowly sway from side to side. This is done slowly so that you have time to feel the pull in the waistline. If you want my exercises which will reduce the waistline and banish the roll around the girdle. send a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request for them to Josephine Lowman in care of The Evening Star.

place the button in correct position and let dry for several hours. If the button shank interferes, snip it off with pliers. And if you find the button sliding during the drying, screw the earrings onto a thin shelf edge, button side up. Some women do say that nail polish will work, if you run out of household cement, and if you have no old discarded earrings, the 10-cent variety will

Smart, too, are button bracelets, particularly for sportswear. For instance, you'll find wooden buttons which look like bowling balls and tenpins and which you may sew at inch intervals on braided knitting wool. Velvet ribbon may be studded with jeweled buttons for an afternoon wrist adornment as well.

Fashion experts further suggest that you do startling things form the top part of snoods. Here's how: Wire four "glittery" buttons onto a side comb, using pliable wire and threading it through the button shank and between the comb teeth, leaving a half inch of slack between button and comb top. Rethread through shank and teeth, fasten wire securely and snip off ends.

Twist buttons several times until the half-inch slack tightens.

Then set buttons at right angles,

so when comb is placed in the pompadour the buttons stand upright, sparkle side forward. To make the snood, gather three sides of a 114 yard of veiling on heavy black thread. Have the thread just long enough to fit around the head. With another thread, tightly gather the fourth side and sew this to the comb top. And there you

Or, still another idea is to make one of the popular cockades, using buttons instead of ornamental pins. To accomplish this, make a rosette of a series of 3inch loops of velvet, satin or grosgrain ribbon fastened around a small ring. (Inch-wide ribbon is easiest to handle.) Then fasten a really striking button to the center, with the rim of it covering the sewing stitches. Use a safety pin on the back to secure it and you have something outstanding in the way of a dress or sweater ornament. To make lapel pins, track down huge buttons—you can get them as big as silver dollars—and fasten them to a corsage pin with a drop of cement. Simple and effective on purses and turbans, as well as lapels.

Try co-ordinating your ensemble with the clever use of buttons as costume rings, too. With pliers, cut the metal shank of the button at one end and into this opening slide an inexpensive band ring. Press the shank closed, add a few drops of household cement and you have a most effective costume ring at very small cost. These make wonderful gifts, particularly if you add matching earrings or buttons to be used as dress fastenings.

By all means, learn to do some of these tricky things with buttons this year, and be sure to save them from season to season, for they will make an old dress look new and different. Think up different ways to use these ornamental gadgets and do poke around the button departments for unusual styles. You may be amazed to find what original and good-looking types are available. and how much you can do with a couple of buttons and a few drops of household cement.

Just one thing more, however. As in the case of all "junk jewelry" or similar ornamentation, it's all too easy to overdo the trimming. Or, in plain words, don't think you have to have button earrings, buttons on your dress, your fingers, your purse and your lapel-all the same time. Far better to limit your use of these ornaments, displaying them in a co-ordinated, but not overdone, manner.

And while we're about it, we'd like to say "Watch your color." Choose buttons that blend with your costumes and other jewelry. Don't go in for every shade in the rainbow. Make use of this economical and fashion-right idea of using buttons. But be sure that you use them smartly and simply. Good taste is the first rule of good grooming.

Particularly festive, and a splendid idea for the holiday season, is the use of buttons to stud a pair of side combs. Try jeweled ones to match those which march down the front of a wool dinner suit and to go with the sparkling ones which form the earrings you've made yourself.

What Is Most Important Cosmetic?

Recent Survey Indicates That Lipstick and Face Powder Lead the Field

sold to American women each year, which ones do they consider the most indispensable? According to recent surveys, lipstick and face powder win hands down. Deodorants are in third place, with facial soap and dry rouge following in that order of preference. Less than 40 per cent of the women questioned considered face creams, eye make-up or nail polish as "es-

Of the many beauty products

One survey-conducted by the makers of a well-known line of beauty products-brought to light an interesting "age difference" in the use of cosmetic and toilet articles. For example, 93 per cent of those in the "under 25" age group used deodorants, whereas only 75 per cent of the women over 45 employed this aid to good grooming. "Soap on face" also scored highest with the younger women, the older "members of the jury" casting their ballot for cleansing cream.

Before issuing the recent cosmetic limitations order, officials of the War Production Board had a group of women Government employes canvassed as to the relative popularity of a long list of toiletries. Here again lipstick and face powder came out on top-though hard pressed by such fragrant products as perfumes, toilet waters and cologne.

Happily, the WPB order restricting the manufacture and articles to their 1941 level, imposes no real hardship on the women of this country. It does place an outright ban on all new products, but the "old reliables" will still be with us-though perhaps not in full force. In order to save precious container material, each cosmetic or toiletryexcept perfume—can be packaged in not more than three consumer sizes. Under the WPB ruling each odor of perfume is allowed her own wardrobe and makes the most of it. In these days of conservation and careful buying, Washingtonians are making a closer-than-ever study of the contents of the closet, emerging with smart ensembles as versatile as they are good looking. Because these also are days when a costume for a football game may well take you to dinner in a ate at any hour of the day or evening. Washingtonians who dashed to Baltimore for the Columbia-Navy game last week found a perfect example of this all-purpose grooming in charming Mrs. "Bud" Rogan's costume. Peg wore a smartly tailored suit of bright green with a perky windresisting wisp of a hat in bright red. Red shoes and a luxurious lynx jacket completed an outfit that took her smartly and appropriately to dinner at one of Washington's brightest "afterdark" spots later that evening.

Glimpsed at luncheon the other afternoon was Mrs. David Moore, a recent bride who's preparing to join her lieutenant husband on the coast. Virginia's black hat was closely draped to hide almost all of her hair, an effect that was ultra chic with her simple costume.

The trend to match fur hats, incidentally, grows stronger every day, possibly because the chapeaux themselves are better looking than ever. Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe is wearing an extremely smart looking hip-length krimmer jacket and a hat trimmed with the fur. The other day she chose a soft gray flannel dress with three-quarter-length sleeves for the final touch of co-ordination. With a golden brown satin afternoon dress, Mrs. Truxtun Beale selects matching pumps in the same fabric and tops the outfit with a sable cape and brown hat with a touch of sable on it. In town last week was Mrs. Henry Kaiser, looking chic at luncheon in a sable cape. Spied at a Newspaper Woman's Club tea later on, she was wearing another beautiful cape, this time in silver fox.

As usual, dinner clothes are attractive and wearable, many of of the first to wear the streetlength, after-dark frock is wellRoemer, one of Hitler's front-office stooges. No doubt. In the United States the cosmetic industry very definitely is "big business." Those who have a special penchant for figuring out such things say that the money American women spend on cosmetics and make-up in a year is enough to put up six towering Empire State buildings complete with inlaid marble lobbies, or pay for a fleet of 18 new-type light cruisers for the Navy. The value of "paint and powder" in maintaining feminine morale goes almost without saying. Yet, in war times, the war industries must, of necessity, have first call on raw material, factory space, labor, etc. The cosmetic industry and other nonessential businesses can expect to survive only so long as they don't hamper the war effort. Whether or not a further scaling down in the manufacture of cosmetic and toilet articles will be necessary, remains to be

Broadway Hails Bizarre Thornton Wilder Play

'Skin of Our Teeth' Seen As More or Less Refined Edition of 'Hellzapoppin'

By Lawrence Perry,

North American Newspaper Alliance. NEW YORK .- Thornton Wilder's new comedy, "The Skin of Our Teeth," strinkingly staged by Elia Kazan, came to the Plymouth Theatre Sisters," in which Judith Anderson, of love, honor and (maybe) obey, one combined comedy, romance and Orleans boarding house for deadbeat here Wednesday night, and Broadway has yet to recover from the impact | Edmund Gwenn, Ruth Gordon, Denof as daringly bizarre a dramatic adventure as Broadway has seen in a nis King, Alexander Knox, McKay

If it were not for the artful concoction of this piece, its sincerity of thought, its moments of thrill.

and humor and its superb characterization one would be tempted to define it as a more or less refined 'Hellzapoppin.' " At any rate, speaking with reserve, it is unorthodox in its various expositions of a theme which is perfectly sane and soundthe thought that mankind will, as so often it has from the ice age to the present time, rise supreme over adversity, frustration, disaster and defeat if only very often by the skin of its teeth. Processes of the will to survive are traced in various scenes dating back to prehistoric

The underlying thought of this olece is not new, but certainly the manner in which the playwright developed it is novel and exciting. The result is a dynamic, a weird, a daringly brilliant conceit, the fate of which remains for ensuing weeks to decide. In all probability the decision will be favorable; for the difficulty which a fair percentage of any audience will experience in catching all that goes into the working out of the meaning of this complex comedy should be offset by the thrilling novelty of the production, by the numerous occasions for mirth and, finally, by the superb acting of a galaxy of outstanding actors and actresses.

Mr. and Mrs. Antrobus are an average couple going through the catastrophes and vicissitudes of the ages with their two children, a boy and a girl, and with their maid, Sabina. ### Comic Opera Black Market Hurt Gilbert and Sullivan

English Composers Were Long Victims of Pirates, Who Stole Their Works

By Andrew R. Kelley.

In Gilbert and Sullivan's day there was no American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, otherwise the librettos and music of 14 operas might have made their heirs wealthy. They were the victims of a comic opera black market.

The Pirates of Penzance" was first publicly produced in America at New York's Fifth Avenue Theater on New Year's eve, 1879. Sir Arthur Sullivan led the orchestra, journeyedsfrom England to avoid pirating of Mikado," by a Negro unit of the can publishers. There existed in those days no international copyright, and "Pinafore" was presented in 1878 all over the United States, without a thought of royalty for the authors and composers.

Ames Venture Failed.

Since then Gilbert and Sullivan formers went creditably berserk. operas have been hardy annuals in the American theater, occasionally before war days, by the periodical visits of D'Oyly Carte companies, more often by seasoned veterans with voices who have sung these comic satires with music over and over again. Winthrop Ames, one of the earlier G. & S. enthusiasts, once conceived the idea of giving these operas with lavish scenic investiture, rich and colorful costumes. He invested a small fortune in productions of "Iolanthe" and "Pirates of Pengreat wealth-but the public response was not sufficient to guarantee a dividend on his investment.

King of Cowboys Told to Stay Off Bicycle

Roy Rogers Warned He Must Never Be Seen Riding Anything but Horse in Public

By Robert Myers. HOLLYWOOD (A) .- Tom Mix was screen, in my opinion, and that goes for Roy Rogers, today's "new king of the cowboys," the Republic Pic-tures bills him.

I told Roy himself about this world shaking thought, and ducked, thinking he might whip out his trusty six-gun and start firin'.

Instead he grinned and agreed: "Darned if I don't think the same thing. Mix was my hero, too."
"I wish I had all the fifteencents I paid to see Mix," he went on, ignoring the fact that he has more fifteen-centses than he knows what to do with now.

One of the things he does with them, incidentally, is to buy fourgear bicycles or motorcycles. That very morning he had been riled by a message from Republic's president, Herbert Yates, demanding that he stay off motorcycles or bicycles. "Republic's king of cowboys must never be seen riding anything but a horse," was the tone of the command.

Roy was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, but now talks with a slight drawl. He probably picked it up from the script for his Westerns, or maybe from Gabby Hays.

Picks Up Easily.

Rogers picks up things very eas-ly. One of the first things he picked up was ambition. His father worked in a shoe factory at Portsmouth, Ohio, and Roy, born Leonard Slye and one of seven little Slyes, seemed destined for a career at a cobbler's bench.

As one punster put it, however, he was one shoemaker who didn't stick to his last. Roy laughs when any one tries to make him out as a real cowboy, although as a youngster he did milk a cow. Tended pigs, too—and spent his nickels at the movie to see Mix, Buck Jones, Ken Maynard and other shoot 'em up heroes of the period prior to 1920.

The discussion turned to the 'Western pictures' and curtailment of the brand by some studios to meet raw film restrictions.

"Huh," snorted Gabby, who hopped along with Hop-Along Cassidy Bill Boyd at Paramount for years before bringing his whiskers under the Rogers banner, "there'll always be Westerns. They're successful in spite of their selves. Can't help. Kids won't let us quit makin'

Instead, it has bombarded the studio with letters, wires, drawings, statements, all suggesting ideas for the screening. Hundreds of candidates have been nominated for the part of the girl who saw the miracles at Lourdes. Only one man can tell how "The Song of Bernadette" will be made-William Perlberg, the man who is producing it.

'The most important thing about the filming of this tale," Perlberg told me, "is that it be done as if it had happened in 1942. It must be a modern story, a story which could have happened any time.

"Remember that in Bernadette's day people said, 'But this can't be true! After all, we are living in the 19th century! This isn't the Middle Ages!' But those people could not credit a simplicity, a faith, an amazing personality any more than the men and women of any time have been able to credit some one who was not exactly the Norm. Those people would have disbelieved the story of Christ, too, even if they had heard him preach.

Set in the Present.

"Consequently, while we will not have juke boxes and the trappings of 1942 evidence, we will make the production timeless but modern. Therefore it will be believable, I think, even to cynics. Bernadette will be alive, not a woman of hearsay. Her thinking will be vital. Her words will be creditable. Without speaking slang, she will speak as you and I speak. She will be one

Washington Artists Sculpture Group At Corcoran

By Florence S. Berryman. The infrequence of exhibitions of sculpture, compared to the large number of shows in other media. gives added interest to the sculpture group in the first annual exhibition of the Artists' Guild of Washington, now at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. It is composed of two works by each of the six sculptor members.

The major exhibition in this section is William H. Calfee's "Deity," carved by the artist directly from a block of Georgia marble. In a statement of his aims, published last December in the Magazine of Art, he mentioned the necessity for a sculptor to conceive of his design as a three-dimensional geometrical unit. He has himself accomplished this in "Deity." It also conforms to a well-known rule for judging sculpture: That it should be possible for the work in question to roll down a hill without any of its parts breaking off.

"Deity" is a purely personal inter-pretation of a goddess having some of the attributes of the Chinese Kwan-yin, although these are expressed more in the figure's mood than in any visual similarity to the beneficent Oriental goddess. Mr. Calfee is also represented with a small plaster model for a bronze, "Little Woman," traditional in character and presenting a contrast in technique.

Dorothea Greenbaum's serene nude nearly life-size "Girl With a Towel" is a good example of simplified naturalism. Isabel Blai's portrait bust, "Lucy." on the other hand, will not impress the average person as being naturalistic because of the subject's swanlike neck; actually, it conforms to the principle taught in anatomy classes, that the length of a neck from the point of the chin to the collar bone is equal to the distance from the chin to the eyes. "Lucy's" proportions will remind some visitors of paintings by Modigliani.

Leo Steppat's two sculptural contributions offer considerable contrast. His head of a middle-aged man with a rugged characterful face appears to be an excellent portrait. His bas-relief entitled "Intermezzo" is undoubtedly the more important, will continue until November 30. from the artist's viewpoint. It is a skillful composition, but depicts a Jack Berkman Paintings subject so gruesome that it is difficult to think of an appropriate At Whyte Gallery. location for the panel, except in torian flavor. There is an interesting innovation in the guild exhibition—a case containing photographs of self-portraits of all the artists represented.

Norman Kent's Block Prints on View.

The exhibition of wood and linoleum block prints by Norman Kent of Geneva, N. Y., which opened in the galleries of the National Collection of Fine Arts early this month, is composed of 30 items dealing chiefly with landscape and picturesque buildings. They are traditional in form, but simplified and broadly handled. The artist makes good use of the white line. He has sence of the subject . . . contemsought his subjects in places as porary Mexican folk costumes which distant from each other as Italy,

Canada and Northern New York. People with a fondness for old buildings will like such prints as "Covered Bridge, East Seneca, N. Y.": several portraits of old mills and barns "(Fringer's Mill" being particularly pleasing); a handsome 18th century residence, entitled "690 South Main Street," and "Abandoned Winery." There is a faithful likeness of the Colosseum in Rome and another Italian subject, "Ponte Nomentano."

Mr. Kent has also essayed industrial subjects, pure landscape, portraits and figures. An aspect of his work, open to criticism, is the aprearance of oppressive solidity he has given to some of his clouds and smoke. A successful rendering of stmosphere is that in the print entitled "Determined," depicting a man fishing in the rain.

Mr. Kent was born in Pittsburgh. in 1903. He studied at the Mechanics' Institute, Rochester, N. Y., and subsequently won a scholarship to the Art Students League of New York City. He has exhibited extensively in the woodcut medium and has received a number of awards, most recent being the Boericke prize of the Philadelphia Print Club last year. He is assistent professor of art at Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva. nent collections of the Library of ### Mexican Costume Plates.

Silk screen prints of paintings of Mexican costumes by Carlos Merida were placed on view at the fine arts division of the Central Public Library early this month, to remain until December 1. This Guatemalan painter was introduced to Washington 12 years ago, when his work was included in a large exhibition of Mexican arts brought to the United States by the The American Federation of Arts.

The plates should be of interest December 7. to students of design and handicrafts, and also to every one with an interest in Mexico's unique people. Rene d'Harnoncourt, in his introduction to the prints, says in part:

"Mexico's wealth of folk costume is almost unlimited, but Carlos Merida has given us the very esare genuine regional developments. untouched by the influence of stage. screen and tourist trade. In these costumes. Merida, the painter of abstractions, has discovered every subtle relationship in color and design: Merida, the admirer of Indian craftsmanship, has noted every essential detail." "Costumes are among the most subtle of all forms of folk art," he points out, and only a people with sensitive understanding of the qualities of their handicrafts, weaving, embroidery, leather work, straw and metal work, "could evolve a costume that relates them effectively to each other and to the movements of the human body." The plates show figures, men. women and children, wearing the costumes. One sees the ubiquitous shawl in its two versions, the sarape, a man's accessory, and the rebozo, a woman's, both indispensable to Mexican costume. They vary extensively, according to the locality of origin. The sarape is used as a coat, as a sleeping blanket, as a carpet. One sees, too, the handsome, dashing Mexican cowboy or charro outfit, which has come to be regarded as a national symbol. Last May the Museum of Modern Art, New York City, opened an exhibition entitled "Road to Victory: A Procession of Photographs of the Nation at War." It is a stirring display, directed by Lt. Comdr. Edward Steichen, U. S. N. R., with text by Carl Sandburg, and has been seen by nearly 100,000 persons. The popularity of the exhibition extended its stay at the museum, after which it began a tour of the country. At the same time, a second addition will be prepared under the auspices of the office of War Information and will be sent to Great Britain. It will differ from the original only in scale (it must be smaller to facilitate transportation) and in amplification of the section devoted to war pictures. Scope, dramatic sequence and general material will be dentical with the original show.

Don Cossack Chorus Gives Concert Here Early Next Month

The Gen. Platoff Don Cossack Chorus, considered one of the most famous bodies of singers in the world. will appear at Constitution Hall on Wednesday, December 9, in the second concert of the current Cappel concert series.

This chorus, under the direction of Nicholas Kostrukoff, is composed of 27 Russians. The reputation of this remarkable band, who are sometimes picturesquely known as the "27 singing horsemen of the Steppes," has preceded them wherever they have traveled, a fame which is due not only to their brilliant recordings and sound films, but also to their remarkable stage successes. Their perfectly matched voices cover the range from high soprano to the lowest bass, singing vivid homespun ballads, opera choruses and soldier songs, with all the gladness and grandeur that is characteristic of their race. The official founding of the Gen.

Platoff Don Cossack Chorus took place at Prague in 1926 under the high patronage of the President of the Czechoslovak Republic, Dr. Thomas Masaryk. It was named after the famous Cossack, Gen. Platoff. who achieved great military feats 100 years ago. The word Don is not a title of distinction, it is merely a distinguishing term, being the name of the River Don, which runs in the district from which these Cossacks come.

Percy Grainger Is Soloist With Symphony Today

Percy Grainger, the distinguished composer and pianist, will share the spotlight at Constitution Hall this afternoon with Arnold Cornelissen, who will conduct the National Symphony Orchestra in the first Washington performance of his composition "Lilac Bush in Bloom." This will be Mr. Grainger's ninth appearance as soloist with the orchestra under Hans Kindler's direction.

Mr. Grainger will play two compositions with the orchestra. Music overs will welcome the seldom heard Delius "Piano Concerto," as well as Mr. Grainger's own compostition, 'Danish Folk Music Suite."

Arnold Cornelissen, whose first symphony was performed with the orchestra last spring, asks to be known as the composer without a country. His ambition is to write music that will have a universal appeal and cannot be identified as Dutch, the country of his birth, or

Harper Award Winners

Prize Marking 125th Anniversary Is Shared by Two Autobiographies

By Mary-Carter Roberts. I Came Out of the Eighteenth Century

By John A. Rice. (Harper.) Memories of Happy Days By Julian Green. (Harper.)

These two autobiographies share the honor of winning the Harper 125th Anniversary Award, a prize of $12,500 offered by the publishers in commemoration of their century and a quarter of business. The accolade of cash is a handsome one, and the fanfare attending its bestowal has been considerable. It is gratifying to be able to report, therefore, that at least one of the books is proportionately meritorious.

"I Come Out of the Eighteenth Century," up to its final chapters, is a first-rate memoir. Its author has spent his mature life as a teacher in American universities and colleges where he has met with increasingly spectacular unsuccess as the years have gone by. In the 1930's, he put a climax to his scholastic misadventures by getting himself dismissed from Rollins College in a battle which raised a notable tempest in the scholastic teacup and became for a time a cause celebre in the intense world where professional educators breathe, burn and have their being. It seems that the grounds for his dismissal were silly enough for the American Association of University Professors to investigate; notwithstanding, Mr. Rice was fired. Bruised but obviously not beaten, he then undertook to help found a perfect college. The "progressive" school at Black Mountain, N. C., was the result.

Mr Rice put his dreams of a modern Academy into this institution, together with much work and all the capital he could borrow. After three years, he was out again, not by dismissal this time, but by being given "indefinite leave of absence." That did discourage han, and he took the course which so many men have taken when their aspirations have let them down. He decided to be a writer. And now his first book (some of which has been published in Harpers Magazine) wins the Harper Anniversary Award, or, anyway, half of it. Plainly, he is an

He reached the discreet conclusion, it appears, that in some manner his outlook differed from the outlook of his contemporaries, and, going into the possible reasons, he decided finally that his was an 18th century point of view—hence his unhappy experiences with affairs in the world of the 20th century. Having grimly made up his mind in advance of this introspection to write—come what might—he naturally wrote of his discovery, and of the nature of the world of his youth which had cut him off from machine-age thinking and made him a lonely survival of the age of reason. He has filled the greater part of his rather long book with reminiscences of his childhood and adolescence in rural South Carolina and urban Alabama, and, since he has written these reminiscences quite objectively, with no preliminary hint in them of his purpose of self-justification, but, instead, with sensitiveness, humor, tenderness and wisdom, he has turned out some exceedingly fine stuff. His pictures of his boyhood on the plantations of his two grandmothers and in the various poor parsonages to which his Methodist minister father was called, are as vivid and broad as Mark Twain's pictures of life in the village of Hannibal, Mo., in the days of slavery.

This was the world of the past which shaped him, a world of fixed feudal relationships, of higher and lower orders of human beings, of handicrafts, of land as wealth, of individualism, of leisure. There was little or no question in it; its spiritual furniture was fixed, but its rooms were large and allowed for plenty of movement without danger of collision with the fixtures. Adults in this world paid only a formal attention to children. The young John A. Rice enjoyed a salutary neglect from his elders and grew up capable of using his mind-except for the great 19th and 20th century purpose of suppressing it.

He follows his excellent pictures of this lost existence with others, equally wise, of the shabby side of the city of Montgomery as it appeared to his adolescent eyes, and of New Orleans as he saw it when, an undergraduate, he attended Tulane University. Then there comes a fine account of Oxford viewed by an early model Rhodes scholar, a "vocational school" he calls it, attended by young men who knew no superiors, who regarded women with automatic contempt and saw Americans much as the Southerner of Mr. Rice's youth saw the Negro-that is, with complete indifference for the American's qualities as a human being. These young men consciously felt on their shoulders the burden of shaping the world. Stanley Baldwin was one of them, remarks Mr. Rice mildly. Sir John Simon was another.

But all this wise and mellow writing comes to an abrupt close when Mr. Rice plunges into the account of his succession of failures as a The detached philosopher then fumes and vociferates. The book goes downhill badly in its final chapters. Mr. Rice should have stayed in the 18th century. However, the gold far outmeasures the dross. Beside its breadth, the limitations of Julian Green's book show more sharply than perhaps is just to mention. Mr. Green has written a strictly personal kind of reminiscence; a record of sensory impressions remembered from childhood, of isolated boyhood experiences which have lived It is the uniqueness of his childhood, and not his reflections on that childhood, which give his book its interest. He was the son of American parents, but was born in Paris and lived in France until he was of an age to enter college. He spoke French as a native speaks it and English with a French accent. Though he was under age, he served in a hospital unit in the First World War and later transferred to the artillery school. After the armistice he came to the United States and attended the University of Virginia for three years. He then returned to France and entered on his career as a writer. All his books except the present one have been written in French. He simply tells these things here, making them an interesting but not a significant record. The books may receive comparable publicity because of their joint honor. It should be plain to readers of this page, however, that the a mixture that makes a good advenreviewer has found one of them of much greater import than the other.

This Was Cicero

By H. J. Haskell (Alfred A. Knopf.)

Sometime ago H. J. Haskell, editor of the Kansas City Star, wrote a lively book on the fallibility of political reforms applied to economic able emeralds, was lost for a long maladies. He called this work "The New Deal in Old Rome" and drew numerous parallels to show that most of the measures sponsored by the Roosevelt administration had been tried out more than once by ancient civilizations. The dole, the economy of scarcity, price-propping, incitement of one class against another, the proletarianization of the middle classes-all these things, said Mr. Haskell, had been experimented with by Roman demagogues with political ambitions even in the days or the Republic's strength. Apparently, the numerous likenesses of the Roman past to the American present have engaged his attention still further, for now he brings out a biography of Cicero written very much from the standpoint of a study of a modern politician.

"There is only one reason, I think," he says, "for my presuming to add another life of Cicero to the 17 biographies in English listed in Appendix II. This has to do with politics. Cicero considered himself primarily a politician. The political aspects of his career fall into the familiar and ageless pattern of political behavior * * * "

It is Mr. Haskell's opinion that much of Cicero's most famous oratory-his speeches against Cataline and Mark Anthony-were no more than perfunctory vilification of a contender for office of his rivals, and he considers that Roman history has been to some extent misinterpreted because later writers have taken these speeches as if literally true. They were just campaign talk, in Mr. Haskell's estimation, and the Romans themselves knew it.

He pictures Cicero as a law student, "reading," as it were, under a prominent attorney; then entering on practice for himself, taking little Later, elevated in rank, he became cases, but never failing to play to the jury, and constantly trying to impress his personality on the Roman public. Then he shows him pleading his first big case—the prosecution of Verres—playing the ruthless champion of justice but considering the whole business a wonderul break duty and service of exceptional for himself, much as many of our prominent "liberal" lawyers today. All | merit." these moves, as Mr. Haskell shows, were related to Cicero's political ambition, and his true course was a trail of intricate compromises, while his London Triumphant ostensible one was that of an incorruptible firmness-in short, the old political skin game to the last detail. Mr. Haskell has brought a cheerful gusto to this interpretation of the Roman scene, and his book pumps real life into the stilted classic picture which still survives. Coming to his conclusion, Mr. Haskell compares Cicero to the French statesman, Guizot, who, like the Roman, was a brilliant man of letters but short-sighted politically

The best thing about the book is its great liveliness, it power to recreate Rome in modern terms without straining the limits of the comparison and the very perceptible enthusiasm which the author has brought to his task. He is not a professional historian, but he could teach a number of the professionals something about making history live to the gentle

Tacey Cromwell

By Conrad Richter. (Alfred A. Knopf.) In this novelette, Conrad Richter, author of the best-selling "Sea of Grass," tells with refreshing novelty of how wickedness can sometimes triumph over virtue without making anything the least bit the worse for it. He has cast his little story in Bisbee, Ariz., in the early days of the century, and starts out with a young faro dealer living contentedly in sin with the girl friend of his choice along with a family of adopted children whom the girl friend has taken under her wing out of pure goodheartedness. Virtue protests, the children are taken away, the young faro dealer reforms, becomes a bank clerk and marries the banker's virtuous daughter. The girl friend is duly ostracized. Then comes trouble with the adopted daughter, and nobody but the girl friend can straighten it out. Discouraged by such injustice, the good wife dies. The faro dealer, one gathers, is soon to reassemble his old family about him. It is a tale of eggshell fragility held together by the charm of Mr. Richter's way of writing. You probably will find it genuinely entertain-

Treveryan

By Angela du Maurier. (Doubleday, Doran.)

Centist and not overly impatient.

This is a gloomy melodrama which may hold your interest if you have nothing else handy to occupy it. It is a trade piece, strictly, and rather inept at that, but it has certain trade virtues—suspense, violence and lavish sentimentality. Its story is based on the idea that hereditary insanity has rendered it criminal for the members of the Treveryan family of Cornwall to marry. A daughter, learning of the doom, sacrifices her love affair and makes a pact with her brother to live for good works alone thereafter. All goes well, if not happily, until the brother breaks his word and takes him a young and pretty wife. Then comes the sister's revenge, the reappearance of her old beau to save her from her rckless deed, and the reappearance of her old beau to save her results after all.

the revelation, at last, that the insanity was a mistake after all.

It is pretty dire, but, as said, you can read it if you're waiting for the interest too.

Mr. Jones, topographical draftsman whose fame won for him the assignment of recording the coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, recalls that Christopher Wren once planned "a new London on an old one" and built a bit of it. Throughout the book, he is, of course, contemptuous of the destruction wrought by the Germans, but he does say: "Now is the chance to create something better than ever known before. Not often do the Huns appear in the light of benefactors to the human race. * * So London, purged, revived and vital, will rise again, glorious, a city worthy of its history; worthy of empire, and of all those who uphold free institutions."

The most vociferously disputed element of modern military strategy, both in and out of print, is of course the rule of air power. Already classic is Alexander P. de Seversky's "Victory Through Air Power," at once the most literate and the most vehement defense of air power against its disparagers. To be sure, Maj. de Seversky stands squarely in his own condemnation when he says (speaking of the naval command) that "minds thoroughly trained and set in a certain direction automatically reject facts that do not fall from his own circumscribed experi- nett's "War in the Air." ence, or "accustomed mental pattern," tends to add to the book's It makes advisable, however, the of which consider air power at some many of its branches.

The Unguarded Frontier

By Edgar W. McInnis. (Doubleday, Doran.)

During most of the last war, President Wilson's policy of neutrality of how a "star reporter" went off to was resented in Canada. This time, in the opinion of Edgar W. McInnis of the history department of the University of Toronto, "the two nations were in agreement as to objectives if not as to action." Describing what piece. he calls the "new intergration," the author points to joint defense measures for the continent, the Joint Economic Committee and the Joint Defense Board as "tangigle recognition by Canada and the United States of the interdependence in confronting a world crisis."

Mr. McInnis has presented in detail the history of something all too rare in history—an unguarded frontier, with common sense coming to the aid of both peoples in time of differences. That is not say, however, that there have not been a number of controversies, jealousies and misunderstandings. The book tells the story from the time Canada was new France and at war with the English colonies to the present war.

No Hiding Place

By William Seabrook. (Lippincott.)

In his previous books, Mr. Seabrook has made it abundantly clear that he is no average citizen. Now, in his autobiography, he leaves no doubt. With a ruthless disregard for himself, his family and a number of other people whom he calls by name, he tries to analyze what he aristocracy of the first water in has done and why he has done it. An author's autobiography always has a certain interest as an explanation of what he has written and why. That is more than usually true in this case, for the author of "Asylum" and "The Magic Island" has traced from babyhood the facets in his own nature that have made the exotic places of the world and the mind fascinating to him.

There are moments when the reader becomes deeply resentful of the man's actions. He doesn't ask for sympathy for himself; sometimes he is more than generous in creating sympathy for the wives he left, for instance. It is hard for the conventional reader to accept a man's statement that he just doesn't like his brother. It is hard to have any respect don. His book is filled with sketches for a man who flaunts mistresses before his wife. By his own admission, and drawings, a large part of them Mr. Seabrook is selfish, ruthless, an egomaniac and a dipsomaniac.

And yet, though you hate him occasionally, are shocked more often and disgusted frequently, you can't help feeling a little sorry for himpossibly because he appears to have the temperament of a genius but only been in the British capital, have a the talents of an exceptionally good reporter. ### Turning Leaves

By Ellen Proctor.

In the Middle West, four generations of traceable family is guaranteed to provide prestige comparable to Mayflower ancestry in New England. The Livingstons, in Mis-Proctor's novel, had not only been in Minnesota a long time, but they boasted, among their forebears, lady whose singing was reputed to have won her wide fame.

So the Livingstons-James Livingston IV and his family—were Riverside, Minn. Broke, perhaps, but proud and patrician nonetheless. The struggle of various members of the family to recoup the splendors once enjoyed by their antecedents is really the substance of Miss Proctor's book.

"Turning Leaves" is the 1942 Dodd, Mead $10,000 prize novel. It is not likely to create any large clamor in literary circles. A thinly developed story, the ramifications of character and plot touched upon by Miss Proctor are never allowed to go beyond a superficial presentation. It is only when the author begins talking about the Livingston house and furnishings, about the clothes worn by the sisters, Julia and Gabrielle, that the book attains the quality suggested by the awarding of a $10,000 prize. NORMAN KAHL.

Our Enemy in the Pacific

Upton Close's Thorough Analysis of Japan Has Kept Pace With Events

Behind the Face of Japan

By Upton Close. (Appleton-Century.)

In the summer of 1934 Upton Close stayed home from his annual journey through the Orient to write a book entitled, "Challenge—Behind the Face of Japan," in which he sketched the history, temperament and aims of the Nipponese and predicted war between them and the United States. The two countries had everything to gain by seeing eye to eye and working together, Mr. Close concluded, but eventually would be in conflict because of differences in their "basic senses of values, ideas of sportsmanship, and spiritual and material hankerings." At this time, though Japan already had overrun Manchuria, seized Shanghai and withdrawn from the League of Nations, the American book-buying public was peculiarly apathetic toward both the author's book and his conclusions. Some European-minded reviewers dismissed him as a "warmonger."

Mr. Close's new book is essentially a post-Pearl Harbor version of his 1934 writings. The old text has been refurbished with up-to-date observations and several chapters inspired by developments of December 7 have been added, with the entire affair being marketed by a new publisher under a slightly altered title.

The new volume seems destined to receive a more enthusiastic reception than did its predecessor. Time has made Mr. Close a prophet, and his stature as an expert has been increased by his commentaries on Pacific affairs for the National Broadcasting Co., a chore he undertook in 1941. Also boosting sales will be the fact that America, finding itself engaged in a brutal war that Mr. Close predicted, at last is evidencing an interest in Japan and things Nipponese.

The importance to Americans of a knowledge and understanding of Japan is emphasized by the author, who predicts that even though we win the war, the Far Eastern island kingdom will become a tourist mecca and trade relations will spring up rapidly. Winning the war, and more important, the peace, is viewed by Mr. Close as no easy task. He pictures our Oriental enemy as a vigorous nation just becoming adult, and warns that its rise, which he calls "the headline development of the present century," has not been based on flimsy foundations.

His sketch of the nation and its people may be divided roughly into three parts. The first deals with the history of Japan, which is compared with that of the other great island power, England. Informal sketches of the country's leaders, in whose lives are reflected the spirit of the people as a whole, occupy the middle pages, while a more abstract and objective discussion of the Japanese temperament and aims con-

By his background, Mr. Close is well qualified to make such an analysis, having been variously an intelligence officer in China for the United States Government during World War I, adviser to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking, aide of War Lord Pei-fu, editor of the Peking Leader, and, as professor of Asiatic culture at the University of Washington, an annual visitor to the Far East to lead seminars of students, teachers and professional people. The reader, after looking behind the face of Japan with the author, may find himself still unable to understand the Nipponese. But this may be attributed not so much to Mr. Close's description as to the paradoxical nature of the people he describes. They are, in his words, "disciplined yet heady, regimented yet strongly permeated with a spirit of non-conforming, reserved and yet surprisingly natural."

Whatever the outcome of the war, Mr. Close decides, we shall lose our "blissful illusion" that there is "inherent behind the white skin a superiority which makes up better fighting, better trading and better thinking people." Japanese engineering, electrical, mechanical and chemical, already is the equal of that existing in the Western World, he warns, and the morale of Japanese workers is high, because of their belief that they are winning and must win over the western peoples.

The fact that many chapters have been lifted almost verbatim from Mr. Close's earlier writings may be put down as a point in the book's favor. The author's judgments thus are not greatly colored by recent events and his picture of Japan is largely from the viewpoint of a disinterested observer. "Behind the Face of Japan" is one of the best books thus far written on a most important topic.

The Murder of Lidice

By Edna St. Vincent Millay. (Harper.)

The fate of the Czechoslovakian village of Lidice has become well known to that part of the world which can still be called civilized. The town was totally destroyed by the Germans last June as a terroristic measure against the inhabitants of all occupied countries. There was a pretense of suspicion that Lidice had harbored the slayers of its "protector," generally known as Heydrich the Hangman, and, in pretended reprisal, all the males of the village were shot, the women transported to An Apple For Eve, by Kathleen German labor camps and the buildings burned to the ground. The authority for this is the German government itself. On June 10, it announced the deed to the world with its usual naivete.

The Writers' War Board of America decided to make Lidice a name Elizabeth Osborne (Coward - Mc- to be remembered forever when totalitarianism is mentioned. The Czech Cann)—Story of poor girl working Lidice, of course, is not unique. Ethiopian villages, bombed by Italian in wicked rich man's home, and her empire builders as long ago as 1935, were Lidices, too. Poland has had scores of Lidices. Greece has had its share. But for purposes of dram-Enemy Outpost, by James Saxon atization the Writers' War Board has decided to choose one from the long score, and wisely it has taken one about which there can be no doubt, since the Germans themselves have confirmed this particular case.

The present poem from Miss Millay's pen is admittedly a part of the board's campaign. It was written by request and has already been broadcast internationally. It is a verse narrative of the crime, highly dramatic. Using the ballad device of question and answer to establish a sense of impending doom, the poet has shown how all manner of villagers-parents. lovers, children, the priest-accepted their fate and waited for their murderers. As a poem and as propaganda, it is an effective piece of

The question of the response of the public remains. The public is being besought by many groups to feel and express indignation, organizations of many descriptions belabor it for its "apathy" and call upon it to put forth greater exertions. Yet its record to date-this public being understood to be the American people—is that it has given its men, its materials, its food, its labor and its money. Let the crime of Lidice by all means be inscribed to German shame for all the world to see. But let our writers, too, in their sincere outpourings of sorrow and pity, give some thought to the American citizen's feeling about his own position-his blamelessness as far as the causation of this war is concerned and his immense sacrifices to bring it to an end and pay for it through coming generations. There is a question in the reviewer's mind as to whether members of propaganda bodies would not be doing as much good if they all took jobs in munitions plants. For dramatic propaganda, after all, suffers from the very fact that it is dramatic-a set piece. Straight news, and plenty of it, is what is simplification of economics will make wanted by the citizen whose son is out there taking it, trying, with Amerieconomics simpler. The reviewer can courage and endurance, to bring sanity back once more to a crazy

The Techniques of Democracy By Alfred B. Bingham. (Duell, Sloan & Pearce.)

Mr. Bingham, for nine years editor of Common Sense, has come forward with an able analysis of the techniques of democracy and dictatorship. "Neither the assembly line nor the drill ground nor the regimental state," he writes, "can muster as effective social energy as the group organized for the maximum contribution of each of its members. We have not realized that the criticisms of democracy were aimed at limited conceptions of democracy or inadequate traditional devices. We have hardly been aware of the new techniques of democracy that have been emerging. * * *"

Back in 1937, the President's Committee on Administrative Management observed that "a government without good management is a house builded upon sand." Following up this theme, Mr. Bingham believes that democracy must be reconciled with the administrative state if it is to survive. He suggests that perhaps three planning groups are needed: First, an inner cabinet; second, a planning body—now the the National Resources Planning Board—to supply the President, his staff, Congress and departments with the raw material for policies; and third, an advisory council on policy, representing the major interests of the country

As for the future, Mr. Bingham believes that if strategic planning can maintain full employment, and if the tremendous productive power can be harnessed to make goods for peace, we can abolish poverty here and later abroad. The prevention of war, he believes, is not to be solved by a formula. "It requires the gradual growth of new attitudes of international solidarity to take the place of nationalism. If it be thought that the problem is merely to find some method of keeping Germany and Japan in check, let it be remembered that a powerful Russia and a powerful China might, quite conceivably, be future antagonists of the English-speaking world." With the atmosphere of the world so charged with hatred and bitterness, it is refreshing to read an author who is courageous enough to maintain high spiritual ideals. "Man must believe his fellow man, as well as love him, if he is to live with him in a free society." writes Mr. Bingham. "A mystical sense of the sacredness and inviolability of the human personality, permeating the highest thought of the community, provides more of a guarantee against tryanny than all the constitutions BAINBRIDGE CRIST.

ever written." Mormon Country

By Wallace Stegner. (Duell, Sloan & Pierce.)

'Mormon Country" will never be a popular book, for, as is the case with all books which deal with religious thought, this one will be a subject of controversy. However, Mr. Stegner has created a wonderful picture of the Mormon country. Any one who has visited that country will find in these pages such accurate and vivid descriptions of the village oases in the bleak desert of Southern Utah, of the beauties of the deep canyons and rugged mountain ranges and of the blinding glare of the salt flats in the Salt Lake Basin, that it will be as if he, himself, were there again. It is when the author tries to delve into the whys and wherefores of Mormon theology that his effort bogs down. The one matter that he clears up for the reader whose only knowledge of the Mormons has come from "tall tales" is that "they don't have horns." Even so, the reader is left with the impression that Mormons are a unique people in appearance as well as in faith. In one instance, the author goes so far as to say that they cannot be so "easily" distinguished as

The monuments and temples of these people are profusely carved with intricate designs and patterns, as are their stellae. Stellae are pillars, not unlike the Alaskan totem poles, carved with figures and faces. These pillars of stone, hundreds of years old, are still in excellent condition and archeologists from many parts of the world have come to study them. But, until now, the meaning of these pillars is un-

The Mayas had, in their city, large and expensive plazas surrounded by large temples. In these temples, they carried on their religion. Mixed in with these temples was a large stadium. The Mayas played many sports, and today we can see at Copan the remains of a stadium, three times as long as the modern football field, with rows of seats on

The inhabitants of Copan were a prosperous people, as is evidenced by the edifices that they left, but little is known of their origin or of the reason they vanished from the site of their city.

The Spanish conquerors asked the Indians what they knew of the origin of these monuments of Copan, but were told only that gods from denly disappeared.

The mystery of their sudden disappearance is still being studied today. Was the disappearance because of a plague, famine, or some other disaster? Until now, no clue has been found as to why they left. Perhaps in the future men will find the lost secret of the Mayas. Until then, we can only gaze with astonishment at these monuments to an ancient race and wonder what stories they could tell of the ancient people of this, our American con-

a broad and beautiful river known to the Indians by several names. among them the Mohican and the Shatamuc. It is now called the Hudson.

Sailed Up River. It was in the month of September that the Half Moon began to sail up the Hudson. From time to time groups of Indians came to the shore and made signs as if to say:

"Come ashore and let us talk with you!" The white men were usually too the North had built them and busy to stop. Thinking that the thrived there for a time, then sud-strangers must be afraid, some of the Indians held arrows in the air. broke them and cast them into a fire. This was done as a sign of friendship. From time to time the Half Moon cast anchor for the purpose of obtaining supplies. The Indians were quick to come with presents. Within 10 days, Hudson reached a point where the river bent sharply to the west. A rowboat was sent ahead to test the depth of the water, and it was too shallow for the Half Moon to proceed safely. This showed that the river was not an arm of the sea, and that it could not be used as a passage toward Asia. Hudson therefore turned and sailed down the river. Feast With Indians.

The bend in the river was in the region of the present city of Albany Hudson and his men went ashore to hold a meeting and enjoy a feast with the Indians. During the feast. the Indians were given their first taste of whisky, or "fire water"-a dangerous taste, for it was to ruin many a warrior in later times.

Hudson returned to Holland safely, but met with tragedy on another voyage. This time sailing under the English flag, he explored Northern Canada, but his sailors feared to go farther and set him adrift in Hudson Bay. He was not heard from again.

were sent across the Atlantic, carrying knives, hatchets and trinkets. These were traded to the Indians for furs. The Dutch were clever a few days last at driving bargains and the trading summer. The brought good profits. In 1613 four farmers had small houses were built on Manhattan Island. We can hardly say crops this year they formed a "colony," but huts the same as they, were at least a beginning. They and perhaps were built on land through which their forefaththe famous street, Broadway, now ers, had always runs. As the years passed, more houses were built and the village of the wires from

While trading with the Indians in the Hudson region, the settlers learned that the Iroquois tribes were the most powerful and that the warriors of those tribes wanted to obtain guns. To discuss the question of guns, the commander of Fort Orange (where Albany now stands) invited the Iroquois chiefs and a group of white men to a friendly

An agreement, or "treaty," was made by which it was agreed that for the white man's guns and powder the Indians were to give the Dutch many fine furs. As a sign of friendship the Indians passed make peace doubly sure, a hatchet church over the spot.

"When we build the church," one Dutch leader said, "no one will dare to dig up the hatchet because if that were done the Great Spirit would punish him." Thus peace was established between the Dutch and the Iroquois Indians.

Army camp. Farmlands totaling nearly 3,000 acres were bought by the Government. The crops were harvested as quickly as possible and the farmers and their families moved away. Large signs warned passersby: Keep out." "Government property.

Two railroads paralleled the camp site and sidings were built for the unloading of lumber and other building materials. With the aid of workmen hired from near and far, rows of barracks were built, and around a pipe for all to smoke. To plenty of mess halls, too. Roads were laid out, a sewerage system was was buried deep in the earth and installed, electricity put in and runthe Dutch promised to build a ning water made convenient. In no time at all these thousands of acres were covered with buildings.

Standing on a hill overlooking this scene I could easily say that workers swarmed over the place like bees on a hive. All entrances to the camp were guarded; no one could enter with-which things were being done when I was there, that this place is a finished Army camp by now, with its 60,000 inhabitants undergoing the most rigorous kind of training. The location is, of course, a mili-

Some Helpful Hints To Gir's on Caring For Their Clothes

By KATHERINE HOUISON. These days, when so many of you girls are wearing rings, costume jewelry and earrings even to school, this tip on cleaning them will be Take an old toothbrush and any dependable tooth paste and give them a light but thorough brushing, then rinse them carefully in running water. They'll look like new again.

If you get a spot on your very loveliest formal, you can safely clean it yourself with a good dry cleaning preparation if you apply it with a piece of white chalk. The chalk will absorb the stain and when it is dry it will brush off without the danger of leaving a "ring" on the dress. What the well-dressed young lady will not do:

Spoil the effect of a frilly dress by wearing anklets or sport shoes, or a tweed outfit with a wide-brimmed, dressy hat.

Prove that she wears a slip by letting it hang below her skirt. Have shoulder straps slipping down on her arms, or showing at the back of a formal. Sew tapes to the shoulder seams of your dresses, with snap fasteners to keep the shoulder straps where they belong, and get a formal that isn't

Buy a skirt so tight it "cups" after a few sittings. Let her hose seams imitate a corkscrew—the straighter they are the better dressed you look.

Third grade pupils at Spencer Street Elementary School, Hyattsville, Md., this month are demonstrating a patriotic method of applying their arithmetic lessons.

Twice each school day two students act as cashiers at a War stamp booth which the children built and decorated. The fact they are dealing with Uncle Sam's finances makes the cashiers particularly careful that they know their arithmetic lessons so they can give the proper change. The booth is operated by two different students every day so that all may have a part in aiding the war effort. For the month of November, only third grade students will operate the booth, but first and second graders will take over in months that follow. Mrs. Margaret Footen, third grade teacher, who is in charge of the project, said more than $50 worth of stamps were sold during the first three days "in business." And that record was made despite the fact that the cashiers are on duty only when school opens at 9 a.m. and at the luncheon recess at 1 p.m. Last spring a similar enterprise set a record of more than $200 in one month and students are now trying to break that record. The booth is sponsored by the Mothers and Teachers' Club of the school. When stamp books are filled, arrangements have been made which will pay dividends when the

If I can get gasoline to drive to St. Petersburg, will I be allowed enough to return home in the spring? The local rationing board has announced that a motorist's qualifications for receiving gas to drive South will be considered adequate for him to be allowed enough fuel to return to his Northern home.

Is St. Petersburg occupied by the Army? Less than one-fourth of St. Petersburg's tourist accommodations have been taken over by the military. Hotel and apartment facilities are ample and suited to every taste and budget. Have rates been increased? All rentals have been frozen, by Government decree, as of last March 1. Are there areas in St. Petersburg from which civilians are barred? All parts of St. Petersburg are open to civilians, including Recreation Pier and the water front. The only exceptions are the actual buildings occupied by the military.

Are visitors permitted on the beaches? Use of St. Petersburg's beaches is as unrestricted as ever, except after dark.

Is St. Petersburg blacked out at night? Except for a slight dimming of bright signs and street lamps, the

MAKE IT EASIER FOR YOURSELF - FOLLOW THESE WAR-TIME TRAVEL SUGGESTIONS

Plan your trip carefully. Avoid disappointment by buying round-trip tickets and making your going and return reservations well in advance. Do not change your reservations in either direction once you have made them for you may not be able to secure similar accommodations. Avoid last minute cancellations, which prevent others from using your reservations. Travel light. Take only one piece of baggage if possible. Check any additional baggage to your destination two days in advance. America is at war; trains may be crowded; they may be delayed; travelers may be inconvenienced; you may have to wait for your

Civic Problems, Civic Bodies Alcoholic Drinks Course Adopted; D. C. Return to Maryland Impractical

By JESSE C. SUTER. The District budget for 1944 was filed with the Budget Bureau on Wednesday. The grand total carried in the estimates as submitted is $58,068,924, or $1,755,073 above the appropriations made thus far for the present fiscal year.

The Health Department has renewed its campaign for the extermination of rats. The civic groups in various sections showed substantial interest in the campaign last year and it is expected that they will give hearty co-operation on its now being resumed.

School Board Adopts Alcoholic Drinks Course

The Board of Education at its meeting Wednesday adopted, without amendment or discussion, the revised outline of the course of study in the effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics on the human system for use in the senior high schools. This was done despite the fact that the board had previously announced that it welcomed the filing by citizens and organizations of statements in writing containing suggestions or criticisms on the course. Interested citizens present at the board session were keenly disappointed and protested against such handling of the matter. Their protests went unheeded and the meeting was immediately adjourned.

Many of those in the civic groups are firm in their belief that the course as adopted still requires further important revisions in order to comply with the full meaning and intent of the basic law. That there was no discussion of the matter at the meeting of the Board of Education, it is said, indicates that a decision was reached at the private meeting of the committee on revision, which was attended by board members.

Wednesday's action by the School Board, some civic leaders declare, will by no means close the matter. Citizen groups that are especially interested in public schools are continuing to study the question and as usual in such cases, there is a strong inclination to appeal to friends in Congress to intervene.

If this plan is followed it is expected that the courses of instruction on these subjects throughout the entire District school system from primary grades through the high schools will be included. Considerable interest is also being shown in learning the degree of thoroughness with which these subjects have been and are now being taught in our school system. It is alleged that numbers of those who had their entire schooling in the District public schools declare they do not recall ever having had instruction regarding the effect of alcoholic drinks and narcotics on the human

One thing that a number of citizens appear unable to understand is the existence of any need for the great haste with which the board acted in adopting a report which the public had had little opportunity to study and against which there are so many objections. Some optimists are encouraged to believe that the manner in which this matter has been handled will in the long run result in arousing a wider interest in the question, the adoption of an acceptable and satisfactory course for the entire school system to be accompanied by more thorough teaching.

Tax Exemption Bill Covers Only Part of Problem

The House of Representatives Thursday passed the McCarran-Hunter District tax-exemption bill redefining the educational, charitable, religious and other institutions which Congress desires to have exempted from the payment of District real estate taxes. Some of the institutions included in the various classifications are clearly entitled to such exemption under usual municipal practice. As to others, there exists no local reason for relief from paying a fair share in the support of the municipality. National and international considerations provide the only reason or excuse for the granting of such relief by Congress.

In the study of this problem one is impressed that the tax-free, extensive holdings of high value by the Federal Government dwarf into insignificance the considerable but much lower value of the property exempted under this bill. This reduces the chief interest of the District in these private exemptions largely to the principle involved rather than the amount.

The passage of this bill, as some civic leaders see it, solves the problem only so far as to relieve Congress from annoying pressure for such exemptions. They hold that the bill in no way touches the vital problem of establishing equitable fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government. Recognition of the justice of and the need for such action is carried in the Mc-Carran report to the Senate on this bill.

Many in civic circles feel that the early passage by Congress of a bill which would establish fiscal equity on a fair businesslike and liberal basis is needed to complete this legislation which as enacted in its present form will be one-sided. Sufficient liberality on the part of Congress, it is contended, would have the effect of minimizing the apparent inequit, of the pending tax-exemption measure.

Voteless Problem Not Solved by Cession to Maryland

Making the District of Columbia area once more a part of the State of Maryland has been offered frequently as a practical solution of the problem of giving the voteless people of the District a part in the government of their country. To the earnest people making such suggestions the process seems to be so very simple and so reasonable as to be acceptable to everyone.

The idea of some is that the entire District of Columbia be returned to the jurisdiction of Maryland. Others endeavor to pick out an area in the heart of the city covered by the Federal Government buildings, which would constitute the seat of the Government of the United States, while the remaining area would be given

Though some such suggestions have come from members of the Congress, those familiar with local conditions and the time-honored attitude of Congress are convinced that the cession of a part or all of the District to Maryland would never be satisfactory to members of the House of Representatives and Senate, nor to this community.

To give to Maryland all but a small area overlooks the fact that members of Congress and Federal officials reside in every part of the District. Also, the Federal buildings and holdings are not confined to one small restricted area, but are scattered into several

The Congress and its members enjoy special privileges in the District of Columbia under the power of exclusive legislation which it possesses under the Constitution. Though it often neglects to enact, promptly, much needed legislation and is seldom inclined to deal generously with its voteless wards it guards jealously the retention of its right of control.

The indications are that few of the people of the country of 1789 really understood the significance of the provision of the Constitution regarding the seat of government. Very few could foresee the gross injustice it would produce and which has continued for more than a century and a half to deny the residents of the National Capital all participation in their national government. The framers of the Constitution could see advantages in having the seat of government located in a Federally controlled area independent

The evidence supporting the wisdom of a National Capital under Federal control appears stronger today than ever, as one studies this problem, which is of first importance to the people of the District. There seems to be no prospect whatever of the Congress relinquishing its control through annexation, of a part or all, to Maryland or by other means.

Advocates of District representation, through retrocession to Maryland, point to the retrocession of a portion of the District to Virginia in 1846 as an example. The case of Virginia was entirely different, for at that time there had been no Federal development there whatever. The act of retrocession did restore to the residents of that part of the District their rights as participating Americans. but it was in no way a partial solution of the Federal District

That the Virginia incident was a mistake has been the opinion held by many citizens for years, but present conditions with the Government establishment overflowing into nearby Virginia and even Maryland offers ample proof that the act of 1846 was an error which will some day have to be corrected. The need of the hour and of the future seems to be for an extended rather than a reduced area for the seat of the Government of the United States.

The solution of this problem of political equity for the voteless and unrepresented people of the District of Columbia, it is believed by leaders, is to be found only in a process which will empower Congress to grant to these people voting representation in the Senate, House of Representatives and among the electors of President and Vice President. While the Congress, under this plan, would continue to exercise the power of "exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever," the District residents would then, through their own elected representatives, be a part of the Congress.

This solution would solve another important problem in that many residents who now maintain their potent American citizenship through voting in the States would be able to do so by voting in national elections here, where their real homes are located. This would reduce the number of local people who vote in the States and at the same time increase and broaden the base of the local electorate through the addition of many very desirable American

In Southeast Area

Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee has informed the Randle Highlands Citizens' Association that he is heartily in favor of procuring a suitable site and acquiring enough land in anticipation of building an adequate hospital in Southeast Washington, east of the Anacostia River, at a later date.

Senator McCarran sent a letter to the association in reply to the group's resolution requesting the hospital. Association officials quoted in more limportant work of the Ender in Important work of the Federation during the past year may be summarized as follows:

"Requested the appropriation of public funds for civilian defense purposes: favored an amendment to zoning regulations requiring future building to provide parking space; favored immediate establishment of a cross-town bus line; opposed the taking over of school buildings by the Federal Government; opposed the abolition of the Accident Investigation Unit of the Police Department; favored an increase in number of policemen: favored increase in hospital facilities; favored increase in hospital facilities in favored increase in hospital fac

President Stull's Report.

Excerpts from Mr. Stull's annual report to the Federation follow:

"Since our country has been at war our business has been largely directed along the lines of national defense. This civilian defense participation, requiring as it does, so much of the time of these individuals (members of associations), has resulted in most instances in a falling off in attendance at meetings and a consequent curtailment of the business transacted. Inasmuch, however, as we are definitely tied in with this civilian defense effort, and so much time of our meetings is devoted to matters directly or indirectly concerned with the war effort, it is necessary that there be a renewal of efforts to preserve the meetings and to broadcast the importance of keeping intact the various organizations which have voluntarily shouldered the responsibility of civic betterment.

Panama Is 'Mystery,' Rationing Is Only Fair Sharing, Wartime Prosperity Woman Economist Declares

Mrs. Howe Urges Housewives to Face Facts on Shortages

By JESSIE FANT EVANS. Rationing makes it possible for food shortages to be shared by all, as they properly should be, according to Harriet R. Howe, editor of Consumers' Education Service, published by the American Home Economics Association.

Mrs. Howe, who makes her home at 2823 Twenty-ninth street N.W., is a home economics expert in her own right, and the wife of Col. Paul E. Howe, nationally known food nutritionist attached to the Office of the Surgeon General, U.S. A. "Rationing is only fair sharing, she emphasized, "it has its brighter side, too, no matter how big its apparent inconveniences are looming in the minds of American housewives just now. For, only when the individual home is geared to all-out

"First," she stressed, "we can in- can do no less for our own Nation telligently modify our home practices to the point of temporarily ing a united patrio ic front on lowering our scale of living, if need be, as a concrete part of an all-out effort for victory. Second, we can accepts the facts as they are, in the spirit of co-operation for which America has always been famous, instead of fussing about them and running around in circles trying to hoard or otherwise beat the game by restoring to numerous time and we can inform ourselves as to why instead of a hampering one."

Discussing the necessity for curtailments and food rationing, Mrs. Howe also called attention to the impossibility of materially stimulating America's agricultural program to any appreciable extent because of such limitations as the shortage of farm labor, equipment, fertilizer, seeds, machinery and parts for farm

This was disclosed today in a survey by the Associated Press of the student employment situation in 114 of the Nation's institutions of higher learning. The survey, which included re-

Despite the easy availability of jobs, however, approximately a score of the schools of higher learning reported declines in the number of employed students compared with a year ago. Among reasons assigned for the decreases were: The lack of time to take jobs because of heavier academic loads students are carrying under the wartime accelerated educational program, more money from the home folks and the fact many students earned big salaries in defense industries during the summer.

President E. O. Holland of the Washington State College, which was among schools reporting declines in work students, made this

"The percentage of students working while going to college is very small this year. Summer defense jobs have provided many of them with enough money to carry them completely through the 1942-43 year. Parents are also employed and are in a position to help their sons and daughters if necessary"

"There's too much money around," was the amazing comment of a spokesman for the University of Rochester. "So many students had good jobs last summer they aren't the least bit interested in working during the academic year."

Meanwhile the drop in college enrollments of regular students, which throughout the country. Estimated ago ranged from less than 1 per cent

Real Estate Concern Votes Back Dividend On Preferred Stock

Mortgage & Guaranty To Pay 4 Per Cent On December 15

By EDWARD C. STONE.

Directors of the Real Estate Mortgage & Guaranty Corp. have declared a dividend of 4 per cent to be applied to accumulated dividends on the company's preferred stock, it was announced yesterday by Robert E. Hazell, secretary.

The dividend will be disbursed on December 15 to stockholders of record December 5, the announcement said. The stock is widely held in the Capital, 166,734 shares being listed on the Washington Stock Exchange. The last sale on the exchange was recorded at 712.

The week just ended was one of the most important in the whole year for dividend announcements The Wall Street list was one of the longest in any 1942 week. It included resumed, extra, regular, and in a few instances reduced payment declarations.

One of these dividends of considerable interest to Washington was voted by the American Ice Co. a 50-cent payment on the 6 per cent non-cumulative preferred stock, payable December 19 to stock of record December 1.

Chicago Turkey Prices Score Sharpest Rise Witnessed in Years

Pre-Holiday Demand In Light Receipts Cause 21/2-Cent Jump

By the Associated Press. CHICAGO, Nov. 21.-Live turkey prices advanced 2 to 212 cents a pound today as a result of brisk pre-Thanksgiving Day demand, stimulated by an unusually slow holiday season movement from farm

This was the sharpest Thanksgiving period upturn in years, poultry men said. Young tom turkeys were quoted 2 cents higher in the wholesale market at 32 cents and young hens were up 21/2 cents at 3512. Gains since Monday amounted to 41/2 to 51/2 cents and lifted prices of live turkeys to within 1 to 412 cents of the ceiling prevailing in this market. A year ago live turkeys were quoted around 22 to 2312 cents.

Labor Shortage Factor. Dressed turkey wholesale prices have been holding steady at ceiling levels. Top-grade hens were priced up to 40% cents a pound. A year ago dressed birds were selling at a top of 29 cents, while in the three previous seasons the top was around 24 cents.

Poultry men said the tardy marketing of turkeys is due primarily to labor shortage, transportation difficulties and uncertainty of growers and dealers regarding price ceiling regulations which were promulgated less than two weeks ago. They estimated the Nation's turkey population is slightly larger than a year ago and almost a record.

Lower Marketings Seen. Some dealers estimated total marketings for the Thanksgiving season may be materially less than a year ago. They said it was possible a larger proportion of the birds will be marketed live, due to the labor situation.

In the live market geese were quoted around 18 cents a pound, compared with 16 a year ago; ducks at a top of 20 cents, compared with 14, and broiler chickens at a top of 28 cents, compared with 20 cents.

We'll Share Thanksgiving

This year we should be thankful for what we lack. The man in charge of lend-lease food shipments to our allies tells us why

by Roy F. Hendrickson

HANKSGIVING won't be quite the same this year," my wife said recently. "There won't be as much to eat."

In our home, as in millions of others throughout the nation, Thanksgiving has always been one of the brightest days of the calendar. It has always been a day of gayety, of happy reunions and, above all, of eating enormously for the sheer joy of eating.

It will be different this year. We shall feast, of course, and there will be turkey, just as in the past, but some of the trimmings will be missing. We won't use pork sausage in preparing the turkey stuffing. There will be no olive oil in the salad dressing, no bananas in the fruit bowl. The array of cakes and pies will be less impressive than in the past. Other familiar palate-tickling delicacies will be absent, too.

In these very scarcities, however, lies a new reason why we should be grateful to our Creator this Thanksgiving. We should thank God that we are sharing our abundance with others. We should be thankful not only for the food we eat, but also for the food we are doing without.

In the past, our ancestors celebrated Thanksgiving in a spirit of deep gratitude for a livelihood wrung from the wilderness. They were poor people who were humbly grateful for the hard-won harvests which made possible their continued survival. They thanked God for having barely enough.

Later, as our frontiers receded and the land was brought under the plow, we observed Thanksgiving with a surfeit of all good things. Too often, I am afraid, there was an element of smugness in our feasting. We were like a fat man dining complacently in a restaurant while the rest of the world looked hungrily through the window. We thanked God for having too much.

This year, in the midst of war, we are neither poor nor complacent. We have just harvested the largest crops in our history, yet the Thanksgiving season finds us scrimping in order to share our great bounty with others. Every day we are taking $5,000,000 worth of food from our larder and running it through a gantlet of bombs and torpedoes to our friends and allies in other parts of the world.

The good which is being accomplished for all freedom-loving peoples by these vast food shipments is so great as to be incalculable. Reports reaching me daily show that in every quarter of the globe American food — the food we are doing without — is sustaining the cause of human liberty and enabling the fighters and workers of the United Nations to strike against the forces of tyranny and oppression.

Recently one of our American officials just back from Russia told me about a woman in Moscow. Her husband had been killed in the fighting at Kharkov. Her three children had grown pale and thin from undernourishment. Now, however, thanks to American food shipments to Russia, she was able to put a bit of lard on the bread which constituted the family's main food every day. As a result, her children were growing stronger again and she was able to work longer hours in the munitions plant where she is employed.

"Please keep sending food," she begged the American representative. "Our own best farm land is gone. We will never give up, but we must keep strong to fight and work."

A member of my staff who returned recently from the British Isles told me of the extreme joy of factory workers, miners and merchant seamen when, because of increased American food shipments, their cheese ration was stepped up. The increase wasn't much. It meant that each worker's daily slice of cheese would be about one-eighth of an inch thicker, but for men and women craving protein food it was like manna from heaven.

AMERICAN food is in the battle wherever United Nations troops are fighting. American dried eggs, powdered milk and dehydrated meat sustain the gallant garrisons at Malta and Gibraltar, in the Solomons and scores of other outposts.

A limited amount of our food is even getting through to our starving friends in the occupied countries — in fighting Yugoslavia, Greece, and stricken Poland.

Everywhere, the food we are doing without is providing strength for the armed forces and workers of our allies and keeping alive the sparks of freedom that one day will blaze into a conflagration to sweep tyranny and slavery from the face of the earth.

Considering all these things, I told my wife I was solemnly grateful that our Thanksgiving dinner table would not be so sumptuously laden this year as it had been in the past. I feel that my 130,000,000 fellow Americans should be grateful too.

And if we are called upon to scrimp still further on food, if we are asked to make much greater sacrifices, let us still be thankful.

Let us thank God for the food we aren't modest. On every desk in one of the more "hush-hush" sections of the Army is a little card which reads, "My Daily Prayer: O Lord, please help me to keep my big mouth shut." A good idea — especially in wartime. But one employee, an attractive young lady, wasn't quite satisfied:

On her card she has neatly crossed out the "big."

UNFAIR. It was a Sunday evening in early fall. Two boys — they couldn't have been much over 20 — were riding in a bus up New York's Riverside Drive. The lady in the seat behind them couldn't help overhearing their conversation. They were obviously seamen on leave after weeks of bringing oil tankers through submarinepacked waters. Then she noticed that they were both peering out of the window with increasing looks of bewilderment on their faces.

She looked, too, and saw a steady stream of cars — all of them, apparently, returning from a nice afternoon's drive in the country. The traffic got heavier and one of the boys, finally, breathed quietly — almost to himself:

"Gee, Joe, look. And for that we burn."

TRADITION. Fort Riley, Kansas, has a well-earned reputation for turning out skillful, tough cavalrymen. One reader's research proves they've been doing it for at least 100 years. He sends along an official Fort Riley Order, issued October 28, 1842:

"Student Officers will discontinue the practice of roping and riding buffaloes."

WORRIED. A friend of ours just back from England tells the story of a group of Londoners huddled in a shelter during an air raid. The bombs were falling at an alarming rate but one lady, blessed with a fatalistic philosophy, turned to a little man beside her, shrugged.

"It's no use worrying — if my name's on a bomb, I'll get it."

The little man wasn't impressed:
"That's all very well for you. But my name is Smith."

3 ways in which delicious NUCOA boosts Good Nutrition

1. As one of the "vitamin-rich spreads" included in U. S. Nutritional Food rules. NUCOA furnishes as much food-energy as the most expensive spread for bread (3,300 calories per pound) and its VITAMIN A value is more dependable. Winter and summer, never less than 9,000 VITAMIN A units in every pound! You'll like NUCOA's texture, too -never "flaky," even when cold.

2. As a nutritious seasoning. NUCOA gives vegetables the rich, tasty goodness they need -without high cost! And your savings on NUCOA (about enough per pound to buy a quart of milk!) leave you more to spend on other "Good Nutrition" foods.

3. As a flavor-shortening with VITAMIN A. Why not use every opportunity to give your family precious, protective VITAMIN A? Especially when you can have NUCOA's tablequality flavor and food value in your cooking at such low cost! NUCOA is a joy to work with -so easy to cream for luscious, light cakes and smooth frostings!

NUCOA FITS IDEALLY INTO THE "GOOD DAILY NUTRITION" PLAN. IT HELPS BALANCE THE DIET AND THE BUDGET, TOO!

NUTRITIOUS LUNCH-BOX MENUS AND RECIPES

you'll want to clip

 Sandwiches are an appetizing form in which to serve many of the important protective foods needed daily for Good Nutrition-eggs, cheese, meats, salad vegetables, whole-grain or enriched bread with a spread recommended by Uncle Sam. With economical NUCOA you can afford to spread your bread thickly, thus giving sandwiches better flavor and added food value, and preventing moist fillings from soaking into the bread.

Mix together 3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped; 1/2 cup chopped celery; 1/2 teaspoon salt; 1/8 teaspoon pepper; and 2 tablespoons of Hellmann's or Best Foods Sandwich Spred. Spread this filling between slices of Nucoa'd bread. Wrap in waxed paper. Yield: 6 sandwiches.

Mix 1/4 cup Nucoa with 1 teaspoon Best Foods Mustard with Horseradish. Spread on sliced rye bread. Mix 3/4 cup cold baked beans, mashed; ¼ cup chopped boiled or cooked leftover ham. Spread between bread slices. Wrap in waxed paper. Yield: 6 sandwiches.

TRANKFURTER-BACON SANDWICHES

Mix 4 tablespoons Nucoa with 1 teaspoon Best Foods Mustard with Horseradish and spread on sliced bread. Mix 4 cooked frankfurters, chopped; 6 slices broiled bacon, chopped; and 2 tablespoons of Hellmann's or Best Foods Real Mayonnaise. Spread between the bread slices. Wrap in waxed paper. Yield: 6 sandwiches.

For table use, tint NUCOA golden yellow with the pure Color-Wafer included in each package. For cooking, use it just as it comes-a pure, natural white.

This war might have been won and packaged and delivered to the democracies long since if we all had Uruguay's determination and courage. Uruguay helped administer the first defeat the Nazis took in this war. Uruguay waged the first successful counteroffensive against the Nazi fifth column in America. Uruguay is still punching.

Down at the foot of the wide Avenida Agraciada in Montevideo, Uruguay's capital, is the lovely marble Paiacio Legislativo — the Congress Building. Just behind Congress is a little bar with a big sign:

LA ENTRADA DE NAZIS ES INDESEABLE — "Nazis Not Wanted!"

I dropped in for a coffee. Was there, I asked the bartender, anything special about the sign, any particular reason for it?

No. None at all. It was just that he didn't like Nazis, any Nazi, any totalitarian.

That's pretty typical, as attitudes go in Uruguay. The little man — Juan Pueblo, as he's popularly called — is a democrat, heart and soul. He's fought some of the bitterest wars in South America's bitter history to preserve his democracy. He's fighting another with every weapon he has.

"Uruguay is the enemy of brute force. Nations which do not know how to defend themselves sooner or later fall before the aggressor. We are defending Uruguay." Trim, gray President General Alfredo Baldomir, with his precise architect's mind, gave me that as his definition of Uruguay's attitude. It, too, is typical.

Uruguay lends itself to facile comparisons. It's "The Denmark of South America" — a progressive, agricultural nation. It's "The Switzerland of South America" — an orderly, honest country with a semi-communal internal structure. It's "The Holland (or Belgium) of South America" — a neat little buffer state separating a couple of jealous neighbors, Argentina and Brazil.

Here's another: Uruguay is "The Greece of South America"— the average Uruguayan is the twin of the average Greek in his belief in democracy, hatred of totalitarian ideology, and willingness to fight for his convictions. Juan Pueblo thinks the world was made for democracy, and he's not going to be happy until Hitler's last tooth has been kicked down his throat.

Two Million Democrats

URUGUAY, as any map will tell you, is about knee-high to most nations. A circle nestled between Argentina and Brazil in the middle of the Atlantic coast of South America, it covers 72,000 square miles and has 2,200,000 inhabitants.

You'd think that a country that size would keep pretty quiet. You'd think that a country that far away from the war would at least refrain from sticking its neck out.

But Uruguay was largely instrumental in delivering the first real punch the Nazis took in this fight. Just as much as the British Navy, Uruguay is responsible for the fact that the Nazi pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee is now a battered wreck sinking into the River Plata mud just outside Montevideo harbor.

Germany demanded that the Spee be allowed to remain in Montevideo for full repairs. Uruguay rejected that arrogance flatly and told the Spee to get out. The Navy that Uruguay possessed to enforce her expulsion of the Spee runs to a total of 4,000 tons.

Apart from the Spee incident, the fact that her small army and navy seemed powerless did not keep Uruguay from slapping the ears off the boldest and strongest Nazi-inspired That's how Uruguay feels about it! And here's what this tiny but scrappy nation is doing to keep Axis plans going awry in South America

President Alfredo Baldomir. Hitler never frightened him

By Herbert M. Clark

fifth column in South America and, in the process, withstanding some powerful pressure from Hitler and Mussolini and their junior messenger boy, Generalissimo Francisco Franco of Spain.

Back in my sandlot-baseball days, the smallest and smartest and scrappiest kid on the team was automatically the lead-off man in the batting order. Uruguay qualifies easily in the international lineup as the lead-off land which has started things moving on a dozen occasions. For instance:

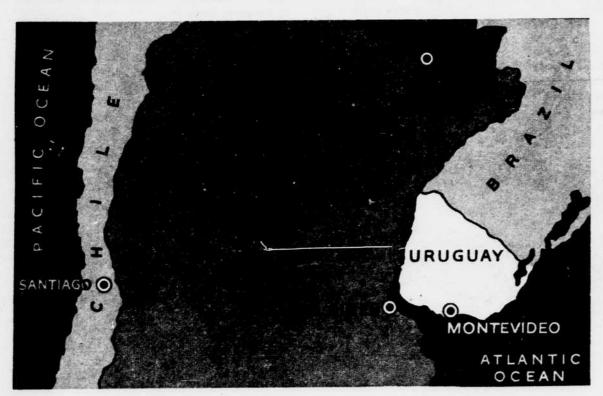

Uruguay invented the concept of "non-belligerency" in World War I by announcing that any American country at war with a non-American nation would be treated as a non-belligerent. Our warships could thus enter Uruguayan harbors at will; a United States squadron under Admiral Capperton was based in Montevideo under that provision.

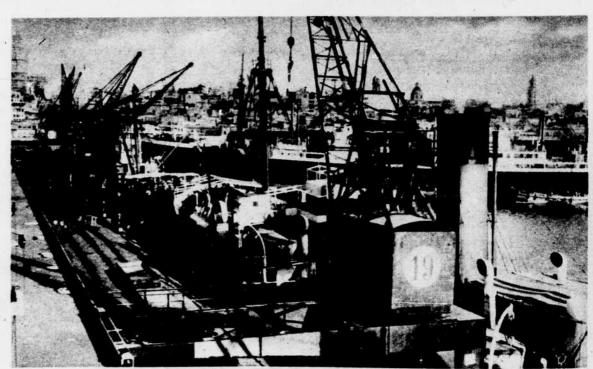

In May, 1939, four months before World War II exploded, Uruguay suggested that the American republics unify their positions and policies "in the face of events which are shaping up." (We were one of several nations which took stock in Chamberlain's appeasement talk!)

In June, 1941, six months before Pearl Harbor brought the war home to us, Uruguay proposed that all the hemisphere governments agree to extend non-belligerent rights to any American nation drawn into war with an outside enemy. Argentina led a bloc which defeated the proposal, but within 24 hours of the Japanese attack Uruguay decreed a non-belligerent status for the U.S. Ten days later those privileges were extended to all American nations which had declared war on the Axis, and last February Uruguay included Great Britain "and other nations contributing to the defense of the interests of this hemisphere."

That list of initiatives, which should also include the fight against Nazi infiltration in 1940, when almost no other American country saw the danger, could be extended almost indefinitely. But it boils down to this:

Uruguay is doing everything in her power to see that the Montevideo - capital city. It will be a coastal military base

GALLOWAY

Uruguay helped deliver the first blow to Germany — the Graf Spee burns

United Nations win this war—and that fascism loses it.

Ninety-nine out of every hundred Uruguayans are behind that policy; and they're behind the two men chiefly responsible for its conception and functioning—President Baldomir and Dr. Alberto Guani, who was until recently Foreign Minister, and, as I write, is a candidate for the vice-presidency.

They are roughly of an age — Baldomir 58 and Guani 64 — and have identical political outlooks, but otherwise you'd look far to find two more contrasting personalities.

The President was educated for the army and for architecture. He took part in his first revolution when he was 19 and helped José Batlle y Ordoñez to power in 1903. His last coup d'état came last February, when he dissolved Congress and postponed elections that were to choose his successor.

Builder and Statesman

BALDOMIR is a builder and an improver, whether working with a nation or with concrete and steel. As an architect he has designed and constructed some of Montevideo's finest buildings, including the handsome Carrasco Hotel.

He looks more like a successful professional man than either a president or a general. His mustache and double-breasted suits are neat. His dark eyes are frank and friendly, and his conversation straightforward. His private life is with his family: quiet gatherings or an evening at billiards.

Dr. Guani's privacy is reserved for work. When he's not working, he wants no privacy: he's a bon vivant in the grand manner. You'll generally run into him at Cassoni's, where they serve the finest food in Montevideo, or at some concert.

Look behind his sparkling conversation and twinkling eyes and you'll find that Dr. Guani is one of today's shrewdest diplomats. He has been busy in international diplomacy since 1911 as Uruguayan Minister to Austria-Hungary, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, France and Great Britain, member of the Hague Court, President of the Council and the Assembly of the League of Nations.

You remember that in his office. His conversation is easy. But there's a new quality. As a diplomat, he's at once capable of the utmost suavity — or of handing out the most stinging lashing you ever heard.

Ask Otto Langmann, who used to be Germany's minister here. Herr Langmann once protested against the "persecution" of Germans in Uruguay.

"The concept of 'minorities' is ignored by our legislation and our history," said Dr. Guani. It's not as blunt as "Shut up and scram," but the idea is as easy to get and the answer's a lot harder to find.

Dr. Guani and his President completely agree on the League of Nations principle. Discussing post-war organization, President Baldomir told me:

"I hope to see the hemisphere united in everything except internal politics. A customs union could follow a technical survey to eliminate wasteful competition and make our economies complementary. Political and military co-operation are already practiced. And a unified America could bring a unified — and peaceful — world."

With the Graf Spee affair, tiny Uruguay became a large and troublesome thorn to the Nazis.

Nazis don't like thorns. They issued speed-up orders to agents already at work preparing the way for what was to have been a grandiose coup.

Six months later, in June, 1940, those agents were ready with the "Fuhrmann plan," the most ambitious, most daring, most detailed Nazi blueprint for conquest yet found in South America. Hitler wanted to crush Uruguay for its temerity and then annex it to the Third Reich as an agricultural colony. Later on he would take part or all of Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay. He designated Arnulf Fuhrmann as Gauleiler, and Fuhrmann prepared a campaign.

He was awaiting the arrival of a detachment of 5,000 German "tourists" from Argentina and others from Brazil to strengthen his own armed Nazis when Uruguay discovered the plans, threw ringleaders in jail and broke up the organization. The Nazi Party was dissolved by executive decree.

No Room for the Axis

It wasn't easy to strike that blow, first in South America aimed at Hitler's fifth column. The Germans were furious. Herr Langmann warned the government: "The time is coming when Uruguay will be deprived of her liberty of action." Dr. Guani quickly demanded an explanation of that threat and after reading the weasling "clarification," told Langmann curtly, "Uruguay will interpret its own laws."

Italy then took up the totalitarian task. Uruguay promptly dissolved the "Directorio Colonial," the Fascist super-council. Franco Spain made an abortive bid for leadership, but the Falangist Party was outlawed before it could get started.

Uruguayan totalitarian sympathizers have been a bit harder to handle because they are not foreigners, but they are rare specimens and they, like the few remaining Axis nationals, are under careful and constant supervision.

Chief of the local pro-fascist group was Luis Alberto Herrera. Herrera opposed compulsory military training. He opposed it in Congress: that was one of the items which led to the dissolution of Congress which was actually a dissolution of Herrera. He opposed it in public: Uruguayans to the number of nearly 20,000 began to take voluntary training in private and rushed to aviation clubs to learn to fly.

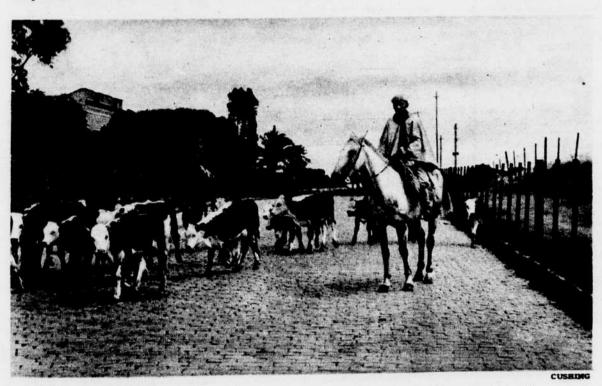

The military situation is not too rosy. President Baldomir put it very simply. "We'd be defenseless in the event of an attack today," he told me. "For modern purposes, we have no arms. And the United States is supplying us through an eye-dropper."

When you read this, that justifiable complaint may have been remedied. Between my interview with the President and this writing, the United States delivered the second of a series of arms shipments. More should be on the way.

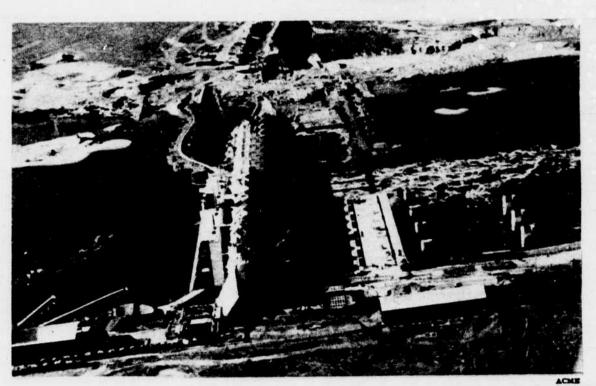

I say that as much for our sake as for Uruguay's. Uruguay, not Argentina, controls the defense of the River Plata, and with it the defense of the South Atlantic. Uruguay's strategic importance is out of all proportion to its size and, even more pertinent, its wealth. But Uruguay is working on base facilities and is ready to construct new air and naval strongholds at Montevideo and all along the coast. Uruguay needs construction machinery to do the work, and weapons to give the necessary defensive striking power.

That big sign in the little bar, "NAZIS NOT WANTED!", is still the best all-round statement of Uruguay's case. Uruguayans will have no part of a totalitarian world. And they're in this fight to prevent one.

FOR GOOD LUCK WITH YOUR COOKING CHANGE TO CRISCO -IT'S DIFFERENT!

The very sight of Crisco-fried foods sets your mouth a-watering! And they're so digestible even children can eat 'em! What's more—you can rely on Crisco for lighter cakes, flaky pie crust. The reason? Crisco is really different! No other shortening at your store is made by its exclusive process!

TRY THIS TASTY SKILLET SUPPER— COUNTRY-FRIED STEAK AND NOODLES

Dredge with flour a slice of chuck steak, pounding in well. Sear quickly on both sides in hot meited Crisco in large skillet. Add onion rings, cover and cook slowly until steak is tender. In separate skillet, heat enough Crisco to cover bottom of pan ¼ inch deep. (No heavy smoke or smell with pure, all-vegetable Crisco!) Add cooked noodles (well drained) and fry till delicately browned. What a delicious meal! Quick! Thrifty! (The average family can do all their frying with Crisco for less than 2r a day!)

NOW! FLAKY PIE CRUST EVERY TIME-

Crisco's New Method guarantees it!

Success or your money back—but only with Crisco—it's different. With Crisco and Crisco's New Pastry Method you're sure of flaky pie crust every time! No more worry about how much water to use—no reason for over-handling the dough. Tough pie crust is out! Follow Crisco's New Pastry Method exactly. It's right on the Crisco label. If you're dissatisfied, write on back of Crisco label, telling how pie crust was unsatisfactory and we'll refund price of one pound of Crisco. Mail to Crisco, Box 837, Cincinnati, Ohio. Offer ends February 28, 1943.

DOCTORS SAY:

"Crisco is digestible!"

When a questionnaire was sent to doctors by a leading medical magazine, two-thirds of the doctors' replies specifically called attention to Crisco's digestibility.

The untiring Husky is a soldier today. And a good one, too

HEY'LL carry sixty-five pounds apiece all day long and still wag their tails!"
So said Father Hubbard, Alaska's "Glacier Priest," when he offered some of his Huskies to the Army.

That was two years ago, and the pups have made good his claim; of the thousands of dogs that Uncle Sam has called up for service, none are so indispensable as the amazing sled dogs of the north. The Army once tried horses for work in Alaska, but they sweated under heavy hauling, and the pneumonia toll was tremendous. Nobody ever heard of a Husky's catching cold—he cools off merely by panting.

troops, toting ammunition, pulling guns, have a long record of service to man. Not only were they a chief factor in the very opening up of Alaska, but they have been the most dependable means of winter transportation ever since. None of us will forget how they saved the children of Nome in 1925, by breaking through the snow fields with diphtheria serum.

The Husky is still not far from wolf, but he loves human companionship and hard, exciting work. The whip is a purely ornamental implement in Alaska. The driver's stock in trade consists of a loud, colorful vocabulary. The dogs enjoy it as much as the driver himself.

With all his sterling qualities, the Husky has some faults, of course. First, he loves to fight with his tracemates. But tough coats and hides make it difficult for Huskies to hurt each other.

His second big failing is a tendency to make off with any food he can lay tooth on — especially bacon. For many years it was a practice among drivers to charge special "insurance" prices for shipping bacon: the bewitching aroma often caused the dogs to stampede and eat up their own cargo.

The Husky has one other short-coming — he can't bark. That's an accomplishment of his more domesticated cousins. But he can howl. And let's add that, with more of his kind being trained to the colors every day, it is surely his day to howl! — CHARLES D. RICE. JR.

"Merciful catfish!" moans the Captain. "He arrested you?"

OR a long time this Dan McGarry, the plain-clothes cop, is not a happy guy. There is a war on, and if you are young and unattached and able-bodied like Dan, you do not like to go around wearing plain clothes. It's a little embarrassing - sort of like walking the streets in your winter woolies.

But whenever he decides the Armed Forces need him — and that's about once a month - the Police Commissioner reads him a lecture. Hasn't he got any loyalty to the lawabiding citizens of his fair city, the Commissioner wants to know? Does he want to strip this beloved metropolis of its stalwart defenders? There will be nothing less than a crime wave if guys like Dan walk out on their jobs.

So Dan lets himself get talked out of it. He carries on in plain clothes, but he sees a lot of guys he knows in uniform, and he has that winter-woolies feeling worse than ever; he wonders if he can stand it for the duration. Then one day he decides he can't. It's the same beautiful May day his mouse, Kitty, blossoms out in a snappy blue-gray Motor Corps uniform. That's the last straw. Something snaps inside Dan. "This does it, so help me!" and before night he is all signed up.

Two weeks later he is ready to leave for the army induction center. On his last night home his Uncle Dennis gives him a farewell party. It is quite a party indeed, with the overflow filling the street in front of the house and Traffic Officer Svenson shunting off traffic so the neighbors can get in on it and make it a block party. Everyone wishes him well - all except his mouse Kitty. Dan cannot figure what is wrong until she says, "I do not like it, Inspector. Every time a soldier gets a big send-off party, something is sure to happen and he ends up right back home where he started from. It never fails, m'dear." At this Dan laughs heartily. "That is only the skinny guys, and such as cannot pass the physical at camp," he says. "You know very well I am a perfect specimen." "The muscles are not so bad, I will admit," says Kitty. "But it might be something like - well, like your feet, maybe."

"My feet only look flat," says Dan, "because they cover a lot of ground. Do not bother your pretty little head. The Army is smart; they will grab me quick and send me wherever the fighting is toughest."

THE party breaks up when the milkman's truck comes rumbling along and ruins the old folks' Virginia Reel-and the kids' jitterbugging. The neighbors go to bed feeling a lot better about the war now that Dan is in it. But it is too near train time for Kitty and Dan to bother with sleep, so they sit on the porch steps and talk in whispers.

At the station Kitty kisses him goodby for the tenth time as the train begins to move, and Dan waves out the window. "I will write you from overseas," he says. "But it may be a few weeks before I get there."

"You needn't wait till then," calls Kitty. "Write me when you take your physical. If you do get sent back, don't feel too bad."

"When you get a crazy idea you sure stay with it," shouts Dan. "But I love you just the same."

A week passes, and Kitty finds out she is all wrong. The Army doctors put Dan down in their book as fit for anything up to wrestling a tank, and he starts his basic training. Twice each week Kitty gets a letter. At first Dan raves about the Army and Army life. Then his letters begin to cool off. He says the big shots in the Army make some pretty bad mistakes.

Then he says the Army just doesn't appreciate a guy. Finally he says he doesn't see how we can win the war unless the Army uses better judgment.

But he never says anything about a furlough, and Kitty is a surprised mouse indeed when she answers the doorbell one morning and sees Dan McGarry standing there, looking bigger than ever in uniform and almost handsome.

He kisses her heartily, but he doesn't seem too cheerful when Kitty gets her breath and is able to talk.

"Inspector!" she cries. "Why, in heaven's name, didn't you tell me you were getting a furlough?"

"That one is easy," says Dan sadly. "This is no furlough."

"Dan! You're not A.W.O.L.?"

"It is worse than that. It's like I wrote. This Army makes some bad mistakes. You cannot guess what they do to me."

"I would say they feed you pretty well, anyway." replies Kitty.

"Oh, it's not the grub," Dan tells her. "What they do is this - as soon as they find out I am a cop, they throw me into a Military Police outfit for training. And now they send me right back here where I came from. I am with the — the M.P. Battalion: I got to patrol the railroad stations and the theater section downtown. All I do is keep soldiers on leave out of trouble and such, and how does the Army expect to win the war wasting a good man that way?"

"But it's wonderful!" cries Kitty. "I'll have you here with me!"

"That part is good enough. But does a cop have to be a cop even when he is a U.S.A. soldier? Ain't this Army got imagination?"
"Stop beefing," says Kitty sharply. "The M.P.'s do an important job and you know it."

"Well," says Dan, "I do not mind directing military traffic if it is somewhere in Europe and heading in the general direction of Schickelgruber's G.H.Q. But when they set me down right in my own backyard —"

"You're needed or you wouldn't be here. Perform your military duties cheerfully."

"I will do my duty, but I will not be cheerful, and also I will not be responsible for what happens in Europe or in Australia."

The M.P. Battalion is quartered in the old 101st Regiment National Guard Armory, which is right across the street from Dan's old school. So he doesn't get much change of scenery there. That very first day, he is sent out with the theater section detail, and what does this detail use for its post but the police booth in Liberty Square!

It is Dan's old hangout when he is a plainclothes cop, and nothing is changed except that he is in Army uniform with an M.P. brassard on his arm, and sidearms, the billy hanging from his leather equipment.

That first day half the cops on the force come up to see him, and all have a grin and a wisecrack, like "So you're going to play on the home grounds?" and "Didn't you say something about Australia when you left?"

Dan's face gets redder and redder. When it is his turn to go on patrol it is even worse. The M.P.'s patrol in pairs; half a dozen cops stop Dan and laugh heartily, and ask him is he afraid to walk around alone? And does he need that other guy to take care of him?

But it is not only the cops that make Dan's face red. There are a lot of mugs hanging around the Square, and they do not have any happy memories of the treatment they get from Dan when he is on the cops. These same mugs know very well that an M.P. can't do anything to a civilian, so they have a very pleasant time yelling out, "Look at Flatfoot McGarry in fancy clothes! Look at Flatfoot McGarry fight the war!"

After a week of this, Dan is terribly glum. Even when he gets to Kitty's house for dinner and samples her fanciest home cooking, he doesn't snap out of it. He keeps complaining about fighting the war right in his own precinct, until Kitty finally says, "Inspector, it is nice to have you near me, but I cannot bear to see you so unhappy. We will have to do something about it."

"In this Army you do not do anything about anything. I have asked for a transfer, but it doesn't do a bit of good."

"There are other ways of getting transferred," says Kitty, who is a smart little mouse at figuring things out. "You can make your captain anxious to get rid of you."

Dan only smiles sadly. "I wish I could," he says, "but he thinks I am a good M.P."

"You could try being too good," says Kitty.
"You are supposed to stop all soldiers who aren't properly uniformed, aren't you? If you carried it to extremes—"

"The Captain wouldn't mind. He is pretty strict."

"But what if you picked on an officer? From what I hear, some colonels get mad awful easy."

Dan's eyes light up. "I am beginning to see! I pick on a colonel and he raises such a fuss my captain is only too glad to give me the old boot out of here!"

"You have the general idea," says Kitty.
"I hope it works out."

Dan is ready to try it next day. When he patrols, he has his eye cocked for a real mean-

"You're not A.W.O.L.?" she asks . . . "Worse," says Dan looking colonel he can put the finger on. At noon he spots one. He is about six feet, and has a square jaw and a West Point snap to his walk. There isn't much that Dan can pick on, except that his pocket flap isn't completely buttoned. But this is enough. Dan, who is luckily alone for the moment, steps in front of this Colonel, salutes, and says, "Sir, button up your flap properly."

The Colonel frowns, fixes his flap, and decides not to say what he is thinking. "Very good," he growls. "Now step aside."

"Damnation!" barks the Colonel. "I'm in a hurry, man."

Dan doesn't move. He is sure getting this Colonel properly stirred up. "Sir," he says, "if you do not show me your identification papers, I will place you under arrest like it says in Army Régulations in the middle of page —"

The Colonel growls 'way down in his throat and dips his hand into his hip pocket. Then his frown deepens and he coughs loudly. "As a matter of fact, my man," he says, "I seem to have left my identification papers in my other trousers."

"Very good, sir," says Dan. "If you will now come with me inside the booth, I will phone the Armory for the prison van."

The Colonel walks alongside of Dan to the booth. "Sort of strict, aren't you?" he barks. "Very, sir," says Dan happily.

"Ever consider that this sort of thing might land you in trouble?"

"Yes, sir!" says Dan, picking up the phone.
"I have had it in mind."

Dan waits outside the booth. The Colonel sits inside, smoking cigarettes. In ten minutes the Army truck arrives and who jumps out but Dan's captain! He looks a little nervous when he asks, "You arrested a colonel, McGarry? Are you sure it's all right?"

"He acts kind of mad, sir," says Dan, pretty well satisfied with the way things are going. "He is waiting in the booth."

The Captain steps inside, and Dan hears him let out a kind of yelp as he stiffens to salute. "Colonel Wipperspoon!" he gasps.

"Precisely," says the Colonel, punching out his cigarette.

"Merciful catfish!" moans the Captain.

"He arrested you?"

"I seem to have that impression," says this Colonel impatiently.

Dan steps inside. Things are going better than he figured. When the Captain turns and faces him, he is the reddest-faced, maddest-looking captain in the whole United States Army. "McGarry, you half-wit!" he screams all of a sudden. "You have arrested your commanding officer! Colonel Wipperspoon is in command of all M.P. Battalions in this Corps Area!"

Dan says, "Yes, sir," and tries to look sorry. But inside he is having a grand chuckle for himself, and thinking what a smart little mouse his Kitty is to figure a way out for him. Because it is a hundred to one that from now on his captain won't be able to stand the sight of him; he will have him transferred to the farthest possible point, Australia or anyway Ireland.

The Captain lets Dan wait and turns back to the Colonel, to smooth the old boy down if he can. "My most abject apologies, sir!" he says. "This has been a ghastly mistake!"

"Indeed," snaps the Colonel, pulling up his eyebrows. "I'm afraid I can't agree." Then he turns to Dan and says, "McGarry, I congratulate you. You did exactly right!"

Dan gulps. "I did, sir?" he moans. "Oh, gosh!"

"Very often, Captain," goes on the Colonel, "I go around with something a little wrong with my uniform just to test the vigilance of the M.P.'s. If I am questioned, I pretend not to have identification. Your man McGarry is the most alert M.P. I have ever met. I tried to talk him out of it, but he was firm. I tried to scare him, and he wouldn't scare. Yes, sir, he is the type of man we need as an M.P. and I will personally see that he never gets moved into any of the other services. Now, Captain," says this Colonel, "perhaps we can ride uptown in the truck for a spot of lunch."

When they are gone Dan stands in front of the booth muttering under his breath. He is so mad he is trying to break his club in half with his bare hands. Here he is doing his best to get himself into trouble and instead he gets a couple of pats on the back from the Big Shot himself. It is enough to break a man down.

B<sub>UT</sub> Dan is not the guy to quit easy. All his life he never has any trouble getting himself into a jam — and he is not going to fail now! There is a grim light in his eye as he looks around.

His luck holds. There is an officer coming toward him, just as mean-looking as the Colonel. This one is only a major, but a lot of majors get mad easy, too. There isn't a thing wrong with him or his uniform, but that doesn't stop Dan now. He is going to get into trouble or bust.

He gives a snappy salute and stops this Major. "Sir, you need a shave," he says.

"Nonsense, man," says the Major. "I shaved this morning."

"You missed a spot under your chin, sir," says Dan. "Now show me your identification, sir."

This Major looks madder than the Colonel, but he whips out a folder and it has in it his name, rank, serial number, signature, fingerprints, description and photograph. Everything seems in perfect order, and the Provost Marshal himself could not ask for more. But Dan's mind is made up. "I got to arrest you anyway, sir," he says.

"In heaven's name, what for?" roars the Major.

"On account of you got a spot under your chin," says Dan. "Come in the booth with me while I phone."

The Major grits his teeth, but he goes peacefully. He stands behind Dan while Dan bends over to phone.

Dan gives the number — and that is all he does. He feels his gun being pulled out of its holster, and he wheels around just in time to see the Major bringing the butt end of it down full force on his head.

The Major's aim is good, but Dan is able to move his head in time, so he doesn't get it full force. After that he can't think very clearly at all.

He only knows that he's been socked—and that means fight in any uniform. He lands a right on the Major's nose and a left on the jaw.

But the Major still has the gun; he now gets it up in the air again and brings it down. But just before everything goes black, Dan sees the two patrolling M.P.'s coming to see what's what.

When he opens his eyes he is stretched out on his cot in the Armory, and his head feels like it has his whole field equipment sitting on it. There is a captain with the medical corps insignia bending over him, and behind this captain is a tall officer with eagles on his shoulders. In a little while Dan can see clear again, and recognizes Colonel Wipperspoon.

"Remember me, McGarry?" says the Colonel. "How do you feel?"

"I remember," says Dan. "And I feel almost pretty good."

The Colonel actually smiles. "For the second time today I congratulate you," he says. "We and the FBI have been trying to find that phony Major for the past ten days. How you spotted him I will never know. His uniform was regulation, and his papers were almost perfect forgeries. McGarry, your judgment is positively uncanny! Or do you arrest every officer you see?"

THE Colonel stops smiling then, and gets real serious. "I am not at liberty to tell you," he says, "just why we needed to get this impostor and get him quick. Maybe your head won't hurt so much if I tell you this — he is a dangerous character. You have probably kept valuable military information from reaching enemy agents. You may have saved the lives of many American soldiers."

With this, he walks around to the side of the cot and drops his hand on Dan's shoulder. "There's a lot more to M.P. work than you'd think," he says. "People remember the last war, and they think all an M.P. ever does is spoil a soldier's good time when he's on leave and pull him out of cafes at nine o'clock. Times have changed, McGarry. So have the M.P.'s." He reaches out and shakes Dan's hand. "Is there any favor you would like to ask? You've earned it."

Dan opens his mouth — and closes it again. It would be easy, he thinks. He could ask for a transfer and get it.

But the way this Colonel talks about the M.P.'s stops him. Maybe it's a big-time job, at that. Maybe every job, everywhere, is important in the Army.

"Thank you, sir," says Dan. "There is one small favor."

"Name it," says the Colonel.

"I wish you would send word to my mouse Kitty," says Dan, "that I have decided to let the Army run the war its own way."

There's nothing better for an army's morale . . .

HARRIS & BWING

Marshall Bartholomew knows how to make U.S. soldiers burst into song. He did it in 1917 — and now he's back on the job.

by Doron K. Antrim

EPORTING the arrival of the first Ameriican troops in Ireland, a radio reporter said: "They were very quiet. The Englishmen and the Irishmen were surprised because there was no singing." That was before Marshall Bartholomew got on the job.

Thanks to him, when the first of the AEF marched through the streets of Paris in 1917, the doughboys were singing "Over There." The song and the singing spirit of the men thrilled the French and bucked up morale on the entire Allied front. And now, once again, he is helping to build a singing army.

To start it. Bartholomew, the nation's greatest expert on community singing, was called to Fort Bragg, N. C., this January by Brigadier General Hoyle of the 9th Division. "I found the boys surrounded with plenty of mechanized music," Bartholomew said, "via phonograph, radio, movies, but there was little of the self-made kind. Music is the best morale booster on the list and since singing is the easiest form for the men to take with them to the front, they need organization and direction in this as well as in fighting technique."

In 10 days, "Barty" had rounded up several orchestras, a crack chorus, quartet and glee club, the last led by Fred Waring's former top tenor. The glee club packed 'em in at concerts in and out of camp, with frequent broadcasts. Over 150 song leaders from the ranks were trained and will keep them singing wherever the division goes.

Better Than 1917

"THERE'S far more talent in the ranks now than in 1917," Bartholomew says. "The men play and sing better, thanks to their training in high school and college. All they need is encouragement and trained leadership."

Barty's goal is one glee club, several song leaders and sundry instrumental groups in every regiment or body of equivalent size in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

One way he plans to do it is with his work as a member of the Subcommittee on Music of the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation. A special training school at Fort Meade, Md., is turning out recreation officers and, every few weeks, Barty takes a trip to Washington to teach the new lieutenants how to be music leaders. These men will have the job of training thousands of soldier sing leaders. Once they are assigned to units, they will use their Bartholomew training to turn selected groups of enlisted men into leaders for camp community singing.

In this war the boys arriving on our scattered fronts carry America's latest popular songs with them. At posts - both at home and abroad — where they can hear U.S. radio broadcasts, their favorites are the same as those of the boys still in mufti. Prime favorites of our troops in England, Iceland, Australia and China are the novelty tunes - "Jingle, Jangle, Jingle," "Roll

Out The Barrel," "Deep In The Heart Of Texas," "Don't Sit Under The Apple Tree." "Der Fuehrer's Face," devastating comedy song from a Disney short, is the latest entry on the servicemen's Hit Parade. Established hits like "Stardust" linger on and singing fighters have fun inventing parodies for old songs like "John Brown's Body."

Popular, too, are some holdovers from the last war: "Over There," "Tipperary," "Long, Long Trail," "Where Do We Go From Here?," "K-K-K-Katy." The first American troops in Iceland sang "Ferryboat Serenade" and a Flying Tiger in China painted "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" on his fuselage. Another U.S. aviator in Chungking reported hearing a merchant singing "Jingle, Jangle" in Chinese.

The difference between the songs of this and the last war is fewer marching songs possibly because there's less marching - and more novelty and love ballads. The boys are thinking of that gal in Kalamazoo, Kankakee and points west.

Music Round the World

PROFESSOR at Yale and director of its famed Glee Club, Marshall Bartholomew is the father of community singing. He's worked miracles with music in prison camps, hospitals, factories and street corners all the way from Siberia to the slums of New York.

When the U.S. entered the last war, Barty organized schools for song leaders here and in France. The 30,000 song leaders trained through him in World War I helped our fighting forces ease the grind of many a hard hike. He has brought together student choruses in musical good fellowship all over the world and founded the Intercollegiate Music Council. Balked by the present war from holding international music meets, he turned his efforts in creating good will through song to South America. He toured there in 1940 as a member of the Music Advisory Council and again in 1941 with the Yale Glee Club.

Our southern neighbors responded flatteringly to his get-acquainted tour last year. "Standing room only" was the story at most of the 25 concerts given.

When war started in 1914. Bartholomew. studying music in Berlin, volunteered for YMCA war work and was assigned to a prison camp in Siberia. On arrival, he found that homesickness, misery and monotony were causing suicides daily. Glee clubs and orchestras were organized. Stringed instruments were carved out by skilled artisans. Bows? delivery horses often left camp minus tails. A battered upright piano was up-ended and played with mallets.

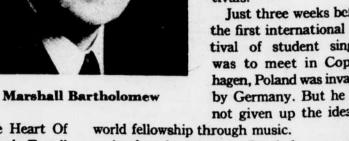

In short order, music ensembles were giving three concerts a day with dinner music thrown in. Suicides fell almost to zero.

"That experience convinced me," said Barlomew, "of the power of music to lift people out of black despair, homesickness, hate and physical suffering."

After the war, community singing spread to the far corners of the country and Barty carried his work into hospitals, factories, prisons. He founded the Intercollegiate Musical Council, composed of university men whose ranks have increased to over 6,000 members, from 170 colleges, holding regional contests and festivals.

Just three weeks before the first international festival of student singers was to meet in Copenhagen, Poland was invaded by Germany. But he has not given up the idea of

As for the present, Bartholomew urges less talking and more singing. "Talking is often prejudiced, opinionated, argumentative; singing, never. One way to help win this war is to keep singing. There's nothing better for war nerves and morale."

In a flyer, sometimes there's nothing

by Corey Ford

Illustrated by George Garland

so dangerous as being too good . . .

ND HE was good; that was what made it so tough. I could tell it the moment he grabbed the controls. He had complete confidence in himself in the air, a way of relaxing and flying by feel; flying by the seat of his pants, as we say. The first time he ever climbed behind me into the cockpit of the little Primary Trainer, I knew he was good.

The trouble was that he knew it, too.

I don't mean cocky; he wasn't that. There's a difference between cocky and cocksure. He didn't have a bit of conceit about him; because being conceited is dishonest, and this pigeon of mine was absolutely honest about everything, including himself; that was the whole trouble. There's nothing so dangerous as over-confidence in the air.

And still I liked him as well as any pigeon I've ever had in my flight, and I've been training these Army Air Force cadets down here since — well, anyway.

I remember him the day he landed at Carlstrom — a nice clean-looking youngster, with fuzz on his cheeks and the kind of kinky blond hair that my wife says the women always start clawing each other over, and frank blue eyes that looked straight through you. You didn't kid this pigeon. The first time I let him have the stick, he handled the airplane like a veteran, and afterward he asked, "That was right, wasn't it, sir?"

I said guardedly, "I didn't see anything wrong with it."

TW-11-22-42

"Then it was right, sir, wasn't it?" he repeated politely.

Everything he did was right. There was nothing I could call him on. His co-ordination was perfect, he always kept his nose down on his glide turns, had a satisfactory feel of elevator pressures, held her straight and level all the time. He didn't make any of the usual student mistakes, horsing the controls, for instance, or using too much rudder coming out of a turn, or booting the T change on a landing.

He'd watch me soberly as I put her through a new maneuver for him, and afterward he would lean forward and inquire courteously, "How much altitude are you supposed to lose on a steep turn, sir?"

"None," I'd snap.

"Well, sir, I notice you lost a couple of hundred feet."

I'd bite my lip. "Sometimes you can't always hit it exactly right," I'd mumble. "Suppose you try it yourself, mister."

Then he'd try it himself — and do it right on the money. Everything was like that. Maybe I was too anxious; but the harder I worked to do a perfect maneuver, the worse I seemed to fumble it, and I could see his cocksureness mounting by the minute.

I was thinking about him so much I got to rocking her all over the sky trying to make a simple 45° bank, or I'd even forget to clear the air.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he'd murmur hesitantly through the gossports, "but there's a plane right behind us..."

He was always very nice about it, but I could see him getting surer and surer of himself all the time. I'd mush out of a maneuver, and he'd lean forward very apologetically, and I'd brace myself with both hands and wince; I knew what was coming. "Sir, what made the ship act like that?"

"I went into it a little slow, that's all,"
I'd answer shortly.

"In that case, sir. wouldn't it be better if I did it a little differently, sir?"

What could I do? He knew he was right—and so did I. And yet I knew, too, that he was heading for trouble; he didn't figure he could do anything wrong, and sooner or later he was bound to get slack. Hot pilots make cold corpses, as we say. I knew I didn't dare let him solo while he was so sure of himself; that's when things happen.

And yet all the other pigeons in his flight had soloed by this time, and he was getting further and further behind them each day. I lay awake nights trying to figure something out. He'd have to solo soon, or else be washed out. Tomorrow was the deadline. Either I had to shove him out of the nest, or turn him in for elimination. I was still trying to find the answer as we started out to the flying line together next morning.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, nudging my elbow.

I braced myself again. "What is it?"
"I'm afraid, sir," he apologized, "that you've forgotten your 'chute—"

This morning I'd planned to shoot a few take-offs and landings from an auxiliary field. He handled the ship perfectly, as usual; in the rear-vision mirror I could see his face beaming with satisfaction, and once he gave me a cocksure wink. My heart sank. It just seemed that he couldn't do anything wrong this morning. He worked his patterns right, his turns and banks couldn't have been improved on, there was nothing he did that I could climb him about.

I guess I gave up right then, and I signaled him to bring her in for a landing. He gave me a confident grin, put on a burst of speed and dove at the field, planning to skid the ship spectacularly to a stop. He was within a hundred feet of the ground when he saw a herd of cattle browsing, dead ahead. At the last moment he yanked the stick all the way back, and the plane shot up nose first into the air.

And then she stalled.

It's funny how you can recall later all the details of a moment, as though they had been photographed on your mind. I can still see his terror-stricken face in the mirror, his mouth lolling open, his blue eyes on me in helpless appeal. I grabbed the plane away from him, shoved the stick ahead, and gave her the gun in the nick of time.

We hurdled a heifer, tickled a treetop with our tail, wobbled a moment and began to climb.

We didn't say anything until we landed back on the flying line again. His face was a sort of greenish-white; he was a pretty humble pigeon as he ran his tongue around his lips a couple of times to wet them.

"I guess this washes me out, sir," he said. And then he gave me an honest grin; I wouldn't have taken a million dollars for that grin. "I guess I thought I was hot. This is what you've been waiting for."

"It's what I've been waiting for," I said, as I climbed out of the cockpit. Then I added, "You can take it around by yourself now. She's all yours."

IT'S WONDERFUL

The things that happened — and didn't happen - to Janet Blair of Hollywood

T's wonderful, the things that happen in Hollywood. Take the case of little redheaded Martha Lafferty. A year and a half ago, she was a band singer without a band. She was in Los Angeles when somebody with a good eye spotted her. He took her up to Columbia Pictures, got a screen test and the executives said: "Okay, she's got good legs and she's pretty and she can sing a little bit. So we'll give her a contract and we'll try her in a couple of B epics. What do we have to lose?"

So that was a year and a half ago and they put her in a couple of B epics, and the next thing you know, audiences and critics are going crazy about her in the title role of "My Sister Eileen."

Of course, her name is Janet Blair now. But she's still redheaded. She says Hollywood is wonderful. But she says the luck of the Irish is even more wonderful.

That Lafferty Girl

HER working tag comes from two middle names - Janet is hers, Blair is her father's. Orchestra Leader Hal Kemp was a friend of his. Hal and his crew came through Janet's home town, Altoona, Pa., at least once a year, and every time he did, the little Lafferty girl would get up and sing a song with the band. Everybody applauded politely, Hal left and Janet went back to her dancing lessons.

But when she was about ready to graduate from high school, she got an idea in her by-now pretty head. She dropped the dancing, took singing lessons. Hal came through, once again risked his popularity by letting the local amateur sing with him. But this time it was different. So different that next day he had a new girl vocalist.

Janet was frightened at first, but when she'd been on the job two or three weeks the band played for a college dance in her home territory. At intermission time, one of the boys she used to know came up, asked for her autograph. She thought the idea was so funny that she insulted the poor guy by laughing. From then on she wasn't frightened.

The band reached California and Janet had her future all settled; she was going to be a good singer and then she was going to marry Lou Bush, the orchestra's pianistarranger. But when Kemp was killed in an automobile accident the orchestra disbanded. Janet sang on a few radio shows, got her screen test - and wham!

Before launching her in B pictures, Columbia intended to put her in a musical with Rita Hayworth and Fred Astaire and let her sing a song. But one of the smarter executives took another look at her test, said: "This girl can be an actress if we're careful. So let's not type her by putting her in a musical. Let's make her work."

They made her work in three nottoo-important pictures. It was an education. She's a smart kid and she learned quickly and well enough to be a natural for the "My Sister Eileen" part. The studio's original plans called for Rosalind Russell to be the picture's only feminine star. After a few weeks of shooting, the Russell lady did a thing unheard of in Hollywood, marched into the front office: "The kid is great. She deserves to get co-star billing." So Russell made Blair a star. It's wonderful, the things that happen in Hollywood.

Other results of the "Eileen" filming: loss of five pounds while rehearsing a Conga routine; a laugh which sounds like a young horse neighing. The latter was an Eileen habit which Janet had to perfect—she's still trying to shake it off.

"My Sister Eileen" was finished in the afternoon; that night Director Gregory Ratoff grabbed her for "Something to Shout About." It's one of those titanic musicals which will have Janet imitating a three-alarm fire she sings, dances, acts.

"The kid is great - " At this point, said Rosalind Russell Janet is 21. She has 110 well-assembled pounds and beautiful brown eyes to go with her red hair. She's pretty much the college-girl type. No makeup except lipstick, no frills -- she sleeps in a sweater and a pair of men's socks.

Her only jewelry is an engagement ring from Corporal Lou Bush, ex-pianist-arranger. It's wonderful the things that don't happen in - JERRY MASON Hollywood.

LISTERINE Quick!

IT MAY MIP THE TROUBLE IN THE BUD

IF you go to one of those late season football games you may be letting yourself in for a sore throat, a cold

Excitement, fatigue, raw temperatures, cold feet, may lower body resistance so that threatening germs can invade the tissue and set up or aggravate an infection.

Nature Needs Help

Then, if ever, Nature needs a helping hand to keep such germs under control . . . to help prevent a "mass invasion" when defenses are down.

That's why it is wise to gargle with full strength Listerine Antiseptic at the first hint of trouble.

Listerine reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill millions of germs... including hosts of the very "secondary invaders" that many specialists believe to be responsible for so many of a cold's troublesome aspects. Actual tests showed reductions of bacteria on mouth and throat surfaces ranging to 96.7 per cent 15 minutes after the Listerine gargle and up to 80 per cent one hour after.

At the First Sign of Trouble

If you feel chilly, under par, have the sniffles and your throat feels irritated, gargle at once with Listerine and repeat every 3 hours. You may spare yourself a nasty siege of cold and a painful sore throat.

GIVE IT A TWIST ...

That wave in your hair will last, if you treat it right

by Sylvia Blythe

YOPY-CAT: It's smart in every meaning of the word to be one, if by copying professional how-to-do-it tricks with hair, you can carry on where your hairdresser leaves off. Such tricks come from a self-service class for war girls, taught at a Fifth Avenue salon. Here, are marched out all the mistakes in technique that most do-it-at-homers make. Easy ways to correct them are pointed out.

But before we plunge in, let me remind you that a good permanent and a good haircut are your coif's best friends.

And now to work! Pin curls? If your wind-'em-ups - needed to set or re-set any coiffure worthy of the name - aren't what your little heart desires, stop doing this: grabbing up uneven chunks of hair; piling one pin curl on top of another; coiling hair so that the ends of a strand go on the outside of a curl.

Stand corrected? Then, section off individual strands of hair of fairly uniform size, one at a time. Keep strands large, if hair is coarse; small, if hair is fine. Map out where all pin curls on your head are to go before you start running up the first one. Keep in mind the need for good spacing with every strand that you square off. Remember that when you are finished, your scalp should very much resemble an hors d'oeuvres plate, ringed with trim rows of anchovies.

If pin curls are to be combed out to make waves — you don't set waves as waves, you know - curls must be as evenly lined up as your teeth.

your strand up and away from its pals. And over a finger of the other hand, which you hold at the scalp, wind the hair, bobbinsmooth, to its very ends. But watch this trick. When you've finished winding, and have eased out your finger, the ends of hair are on the outside of the curl. What you must do, if you're going to be a clever copycat, is to maneuver the ends of the hair into the center of your curl - into the hole where your finger was.

How do you spike your curls? Stop spearing them to your scalp, hit or miss; and stop snagging them with bobbie pins. For a better way, lance with two straight hairpins, not crinkly ones, and as you nail down, be careful not to twist or upset the curl.

PRIORITY NOTE: Better count your hairpins and search on hands and knees for missing ones. Production has been cut down considerably; so they are very precious!

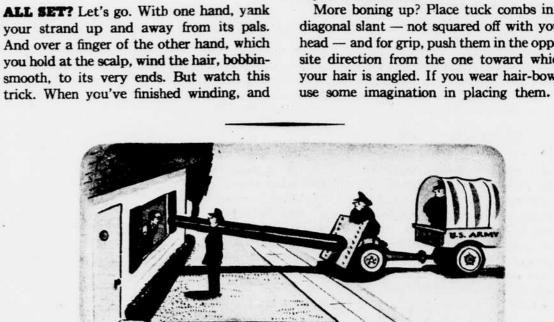

How do you cap your curls? If your fish-net loops out like a mob cap, it's small wonder that you lose hairpins and that curls float from their moorings. Snug a net to your head by tying or folding it close and then stuffing in pins to keep it nailed down.

Do you want a brief refresher on your hair brushing technique? Then, don't be afraid to whip bristles through curls. Not only can they take it; they can be improved by it. Stop holding your brush in a wooden hand and propelling it with a wooden wrist. Hold the brush so that vour wrist can twist like rubber; can keep the bristles turning and tugging through the hair to fluff it up and flip out curls and groove your waves. If you are blessed with two brushes, get double duty, using one in each hand.

DRESS CUES? Don't think of your hair as pieces of dress-stuff that have to be sectioned off and pinned back together for a coif. That's the stamp of an amateur. Think of your hair as all-of-a-piece material to be softly and flatteringly draped around your head - to be molded into the newer headhugging waves or the equally captivating cap of feather curls.

More boning up? Place tuck combs in a diagonal slant — not squared off with your head — and for grip, push them in the opposite direction from the one toward which your hair is angled. If you wear hair-bows,

TALKIN' TURKEY

Bour four months ago, Jake Bullis had an Idea. Ever since he come to work for me, he's been havin' ideas an' most of 'em explode in the region of the cash register, leavin' a few minus signs.
But I got to admit he hit the jackpot on this one.

"Wally," says Jake, "with prices goin' up, how about us contractin' ahead for Thanksgivin' turkeys?"

I couldn't think up any quick answer, so I went up to Lime Wood's place. "Lime," I ask him, "what's it cost you to raise a turkey?"

"About two dollars," said Lime. "Or maybe three dollars," he adds, with a tradin' gleam in the corner of his eye . . . "for a small one," he finishes, to make it safe. He gives me a sharp look to see if I believe him. I don't.

Well, Lime an' me dickered the afternoon away an' he finally agreed to sell me ten turkeys then an' there for 20 bucks, each one to be marked with a string on his leg an' delivered dressed about November 21. If any died, it was my loss. If any grew up to be ostriches or somethin', I won. Yesterday Lime brought in 14 of the biggest turkeys I ever saw.

"Is that No. 2 joint of yours over by the Army camp goin' to be open on Thanksgivin'?" Lime asks.

"Sure," I tell him. "The boys over there like to eat that day."

"Well," says Lime, "you had good luck with your 10 turkeys, an' I added four so you could kind of cut the price for those boys."

Lime is a liar. The strings still on them turkeys' legs was all new. He went an' picked out the big ones for me, out of his whole flock.

So next Thursday, to boys in uniform, the price of a hamburger is 10 cents. But if they would like a turkey dinner with pumpkin pie made especial by my Missus an' Missus Bullis, who prides themselves on pies, the price is still 10 cents.

After all, hamburgers is scarce.

TRAITOR" - AND PATRIOT

A Chinese tailor was aiding the Japanese! So it seemed . . .

EE KUNG-DEE was my Shanghai tailor for many years, but I never rated him as anything more than a man clever at his craft until after the six weeks of bitter fighting there between the Chinese and Japanese early in 1932. During the hostilities, Lee's shop had been blasted into a heap of burned rubble. He was such a decent chap that I joined with several of his other steady patrons in loaning him enough money to get a new start.

A few months later I inquired how business was developing.

"My no so very much work just now, but plenty busy," was his cryptic reply.

Pressed for details, Lee explained that he was taking lessons every day in conversational Japanese.

"My savvy, five year more Japanese own Shanghai," he grimly insisted.

My loan had been long repaid before Lee's prophesy came true in the autumn of 1937, when the Japanese drove the Chinese armies inland, and completely surrounded the foreign areas of China's greatest seaport.

I went to order a new suit, and found Lee troubled and distrait.

"What thing?" he demanded angrily. "I spend plenty time, plenty money - I learn Japanese talk. Two Japanese have come my shop order plenty clothes. Chinese come throw bricks my windows, break fine glass. I lose business, I lose money. What thing?"

A few days later Lee came to my apartment to give me a fitting. He was excited and secretive.

"Next week I no more tailor man." he said, after swearing me to secrecy. "I makee learn drive motorcar. One Chinese man, very big man, he say I must help China. I can find out what Japanese make do. Have now got job drive motorcar Japanese consul man. He no savee my savee Japanese talk. Can listen plenty thing. Consul man know plenty generals, all time they drink plenty whisky, make plenty talk."

Even Lee's family did not know the truth about his new situation. When I went to the shop, Lee's old father, who kept the books, merely spat on the floor when I asked about his eldest son; and his brother, who had taken over the business, called Lee "a dirty running dog of the Dwarf Men." Mei-lan, Lee's wife, sewing in a corner, scornfully declared that she felt herself a despised

A framed crayon enlargement of a photograph of the deceased was carried on a flower-covered platform borne by four uniformed coolies. Then came Lee's brother, clad in the conventional long mourner's robe of white sackcloth; and behind him was Lee's wife, similarly clad, carrying Lee's wailing baby boy. Behind them was the palanquin, with 16 bearers carrying the silk-covered coffin.

mouth with his clenched fist.

The result was instantaneous, and terrific. The released car went temporarily out of control. One fender struck and felled Lee's wife and baby, and the other fender knocked down three of the palanquin bearers. Horrified moans and shrill screams went up from the dense-packed crowd. The coffin tilted, slipped and fell into the gutter. Blood dripped from his agonized face as Lee wrenched the wheel around and headed for the Soochow Creek, half a block away. And he never stopped. ## Little, inconspicuous — but valuable. That's why Colonel Gruenner wanted it

THEN he thought of that old fool LeMaitre, Colonel Gruenner laughed. And when the Colonel laughed, people who saw it did not forget. He laughed with his lips alone, like a girl who giggles a little.

"In Germany," the Colonel would say, "we have a place for idiots like that. A People's Rest Home, for the Aged." Then he would laugh some more, as though at a secret joke.

It was easy to laugh at old M'sieu LeMaitre. Many people did, because he looked like a bearded cricket and could never remember where he had left his hat, or what errand he was on, or that today was any different from a happier yesterday.

The old man sat in the garden of Madame Bourget beside the rioting weeds. He no longer saw things distinctly; he absorbed them. The sun came through his clothing, hot and penetrating, and curled about his bones. The summer singing in the fields reached his ears in one intoxicating tone, blending with the notes of the martins in the eaves.

It was three o'clock. In another hour he would get up and make tea for Madame Bourget, perhaps with the extra teacups this time, as though guests were expected. She liked that. He would not move from his place in the sun for anyone but Madame Bourget. But she was the last of a family he had served all his life, and all the good things he could remember were tied up with her. There were only the two of them left now.

At the far end of the garden stood a large wooden building, ramshackle and rotting. On its side were the words "Bourget & Co., Bottlers of Medicinal Water." M'sieu LeMaitre looked at it and shrugged his shoulders. Was he that old? He remembered when the building had been put up.

It had been before the first war, long before. For many years the Bourgets had made a fine living from bottled water — some said it was the best in France — and as their business had grown they had built larger and larger vats and sheds to cover them. That factory had indeed been a great thing. Old M'sieu Bourget himself had slapped its wooden sides with his hands and pronounced it sound. Well, it was rotting. It had not been as sound as M'sieu Bourget had thought.

There was no business now, there being no sons in the family to carry it on. As a sort of souvenir Madame Bourget still kept the formula for the water, scribbled on a piece of parchment enclosed in a locket, that had been passed from father to son for generations. LeMaitre himself had seen it.

With a sigh he got up and brushed himself off. He wore an old uniform that Madame Bourget had given him. In these times it made no difference that it was a cast-off army uniform that had belonged to the old lady's son. At least it had no holes.

He was very tired, but as he made tea he began to sing a little song he had heard somewhere, an adroit little song that traced the ancestry of Colonel Gruenner back to an unmarried and consumptive hippopotamus of the Nile. Somehow it made him feel better to sing it, and he squared his shoulders and tapped with a fork on a plate. He could teach the Colonel a thing or two, he thought.

But by the time tea was ready he had exhausted all the verses of the song and the feeling of strength had entirely deserted him...

Colonel Gruenner noted the wisp of smoke curling from the chimney of Madame Bourget's house. "Tea," he said, and he put on his hat. He had certain business with Madame Bourget, and the moment seemed right for it.

As he walked toward the house, a platoon at his back, he felt his heart beat faster. He was about to lay his hand on a pleasant dream, and when he remembered the only people who lay between the dream and himself — an old lady and M'sieu LeMaitre — he saw the dream more clearly than before.

For some time the Colonel had considered the possibility of making a little something for himself. For months he had been salvaging everything of value in the town and sending it back across the Rhine. But he had been very careful. He had never touched a penny's worth of it, had never submitted a false report.

Finally, however, he had found what he wanted; something small and inconspicuous and yet valuable. In the back of his mind, in that pleasant dream which occasionally visited him, he could see a brass sign on a neat brick factory. The sign read, "Gruenner and Son, Bottlers of Medicinal Water."

HE KNEW that the water was good, having drunk it himself. He knew it would sell, and that the matter of extracting the formula from old Madame Bourget would be only a minor formality. He hummed a little tune...

M'sieu LeMaitre was clearing away the tea dishes when he saw a column of dust in the road. He blinked at it, wetting his lips. Madame Bourget had gone upstairs for her nap. LeMaitre moved about silently, one eye on the dust in the road. "Colonel Gruenner," he said softly, trying to focus his mind on something. Was there something he should do? If the Colonel came to the house, perhaps he should throw a plate at him or spit in his face. He did not like the Colonel, because every time he passed near him Gruenner would say something about old fools.

He sat down heavily, his face in his hands, trying to bring something to a point in his mind. "How prettily the martins sing," he said to himself at length.

When the Colonel arrived he found LeMaitre waiting. The old man was in the uniform that Madame Bourget had given him, and had buckled on a dress sword that had been in the living room, as though he meant to defend the house. He stood facing the officer, his mouth a little open, searching for some ringing sentence. None came. Then he began, instead, to sing the little song about the Colonel.

At first Gruenner could not believe it. Then his eyes hardened. He leaped across the room and slapped LeMaitre. Then he stepped back and began to count on his fingers: "Insulting a German officer. Wearing a military uniform. Bearing arms against the express provisions of law." His face was scarlet because he sensed the laughter in the ranks of the platoon behind him.

In a moment the soldiers had escorted LeMaitre to the garden and placed him against a wall. He made a ridiculous figure there in his uniform, blinking against the sun. An old French officer's cap rested askew on his head, and bright over his heart hung a bedraggled medal. He began to sing again.

With a furious fascination the Colonel listened until the song was finished. Then he drew his pistol. "Idiot," he said, in a voice so low with anger that LeMaitre could scarcely hear. "Fire!"

It was a moment of great satisfaction for Gruenner. In a split second he saw LeMaitre's foolish decoration fly into pieces, while all the martins in the eaves flew up chattering, and began to whirl in a long arc.

Madame Bourget awoke with the noise and crossed herself. When she came downstairs the Colonel was waiting. "A little trouble," he said.

THE old lady understood and caught her breath, tooing her best to give him no satisfaction. "What is it you wish?" she asked.

"I believe you have a formula for making water — nothing of consequence. Get it for me."

She had no desire to struggle with him, and hoped only that he would go. Wearily she pointed to a table at the other end of the room, on which LeMaitre had neatly stacked the dishes. "It is there."

The Colonel walked over to look. "There is nothing here," he said.

The old lady was puzzled. "I saw it there not an hour ago," she declared. "An old locket with a bit of ribbon, like a medal."

The frightened martins had returned to the eaves. The Colonel's thoughts careened back for a moment to that last, brilliant image of LeMaitre and then returned. "Idiot!" he said with the greatest viciousness, almost as though he were talking to himself.

A "DON" FROM THE U.S.

He is winning South America's friendship for Uncle Sam. And its food has won him

by Grace Turner

ON FRANCISCO is the tall. tweedy, gray-haired, goodlooking West Coast ace among advertising men, who used to help write California fruit growers into the map of American business. He spent half a lifetime inspiring and leading this kind of big business into the prosperous way it has gone. Then in 1940 he gave it all up to work with Nelson Rockefeller, Washington's Co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs. Don Francisco became Director of the Radio Division in that office.

Came then a period of travel and work in South America. Up to then he'd always used the nickname "Don" that his parents called him when he was a child in Lansing, Michigan. But in South America this name involved him in a comedy of errors - since, in Spanish, "Francisco" is simply a first name meaning Francis, and "Don" is a kind of title like our own seldom used "esquire."

All unconscious of causing any international confusion, Mr. Francisco went around being introduced at first, in democratic North-American fashion, just as Don Francisco. And the South Americans hid their smiles, for to hem it sounded as if the handsome

Mr. Francisco considers Inter-American affairs

American were introduced as "Esquire Francis." So Mr. Francisco became Donald, instead of Don, on or near the Rio Grande, and had new personal cards made, especially engraved to read: "Mr. Donald Francisco."

PENDERG A CAREER: Young Don Francisco wanted to be a writer or an artist. But his father died; the answer to education was the Michigan State Agricultural College near his home town. Part-time newspaper jobs produced the necessary kudos for living on campus, made Don feel he had a toe hold on the writing field. Came graduation from college and the question: What to do?

Came also a phrenologist to town, offering special rates of $12.50 instead of $25.00 a head. The perplexed Don went secretly for a consultation. "Drawing? Writing?" pondered the phrenologist. "No, they are not your line. Fit yourself for executive work."

Grudgingly, Don mentioned his agricultural training and a job he had been offered as fruit inspector for the California Fruit Growers' Exchange.

It is an unconventional way to get advice on a career, but it turned out well enough this time. Within a year Don Francisco had become advertising manager for the orange-growers' exchange. "And," he says, "I was able to use everything - my bent for writing and drawing, my agricultural training and knowledge of horticulture and fruit."

An American who goes to South

America for the first time soon begins to get a new line on himself and it is not wholly flattering, according to Mr. Francisco.

"They speak many languages, including English, while we don't. They print more world news in their papers. They know everything of importance that happens up here, and keep track of our elections. We know little of what is happening down there, though we are learning more."

Part of Mr. Francisco's work has been to strengthen the exchange of news and ideas between our country and South America. This involves both press and radio. The staff of the Co-ordinator's Office, in particular Mr. Francisco, is organizing news, news-commentary and straight entertainment radio features, to go via short-wave to South America from a limited number of authorized U.S. sources. "One of the most troublesome parts of this job is to get together a Spanish-speaking cast to keep the programs rolling without hitch," Mr. Francisco tells us.

SOUTH AMERICA IS DEFFERENT in many ways, Mr. Francisco says, different and delightful - from the kind of food you eat, the way it is cooked and the hours you eat it, to the more international outlook on life the people have. In food, chili powder, olives, nuts, fruits are used much more in every day cooking and in combinations not found in our country.

With this in mind, THIS WEEK has chosen two representative South American recipes, for today, after rejecting those which call for ingredients not easily come by up here, or gone from us for the duration.

Fish and Vogotables

1/2 cup kernel corn

1/4 cup fat 6 potatoes, quartered

3 onions, chopped 1 cup canned tomatoes

2 tablespoons chili sauce

1 tablespoon chili powder 1 teaspoon salt

Dash pepper

1 cup peas, cooked or canned

6 poached fish fillets

Fry corn gently in fat until lightly browned; add potatoes, onions, tomatoes, chili sauce, chili powder, salt and pepper; mix well. Cook 20 minutes or until potatoes are tender. Add peas: pour over fish. Yield: 6 portions.

Chichen Turnevers

1 small onion, chopped 1/2 green pepper, chopped 2 tablespoons butter 21/2 cups cooked chicken, minced 8 ripe olives, chopped 1 hard-cooked egg, chopped 1 tablespoon chili powder 1 teaspoon salt 1/8 teaspoon pepper

2 tablespoons raisins 1/2 teaspoon sugar 1 cup thick gravy

1 recipe plain pastry

Cook onion and green pepper in butter until onion is soft; add remaining ingredients (except pastry) and let simmer 5 minutes, mixing well. Roll out pastry to 1/8 inch thickness, cut in 6-inch rounds, spread cooked mixture over 1/2 of the circle and fold the other half over it, pressing edges firmly together. Slash well and bake in very hot oven 15 minutes. Yield: 12 turnovers.

"Imagine! At HIS age, too!"

"He talks fatherly good sense to the children. But he still manages to talk romantic nonsense to me.

"And he still grabs my hand, now and then, like he did on our first date. 'Cause he says I've no right to be stingy with hands as nice as mine.

> "He wouldn't still be thinking my hands are smooth and soft if I hadn't changed to Ivory Soap for dishes.

"Why, I used to think I had to use strong washday soap for speed ... that the rough, red hands I got were unavoidable.

"I was silly not to learn long ago that Ivory's gentle 'velvet suds' clean dishes fast as the strongest washday soaps!

"Thank goodness, my hands got smoother, whiter only 12 days after I changed to Ivory Soap. No wonder it's baby's beauty soap!

"Just see the change in your hands when you change to 'Velvet-suds' Ivory Soap for dishes! Costs only about le a day, too." 994/m % pure ... It floats.

Target sighted! From here on the bombardier is the boss of the plane

HELL-FROM-HEAVEN MAN

Meet the bombardier. Watch him learn how to swat the Axis...

To MOST people these days, the combat pilot is about the most romantic figure in the war, but to several hundred young men at Midland Army Flying School, Texas, largest bombardier training center in the world, the pilot's just the guy who takes you there and brings you back while you tackle the most important job of all, the destruction of the enemy.

It wasn't always thus. In the early days of the present training program everybody wanted to be a pilot. The lads who ended up in the bombardier schools were those who, for one reason or another, had washed out as pilots. In other words, they were disappointed boys making the best of a second-choice job.

Promotion

THEN the system was changed. Recruits to the Air Forces are put through an aptitude test and immediately earmarked for pilot, bombardier, navigator or gunner training. No longer is the bombardier's a second-choice job. The screening test has shown that he has a valuable combination: manual dexterity and the intelligence to learn the intricate workings of that most complicated, effective American weapon, the Norden bombsight.

Graduates selected in this way are turning in about 10 per cent better scores than those that preceded them. Pride in their job is the answer, the Midland officers believe, and the boys have every reason to take pride. After all, they're the men who do the damage, "the most dangerous men in the world." The best pilot and navigator in the world can't do the least bit of harm to an enemy battleship, or munitions factory, or troop concentration. All they can do is get the bombardier into position to do his job.

The bombardier - "Hellfrom-Heaven Men" is the nickname that they've adopted for themselves - is in supreme command of the plane once the target is sighted. The pilot takes orders from him from then on. It's the bombardier, squinting down through his bombsight, who sees the target come under the cross hairs. It's he who pulls the trigger and sends a ton of death and destruction hurtling down on the enemy. It's a soul-satisfying sort of a job, and the boys are working hard on their 12-week course, eager to go out and do their stuff in U.S. bombers.

This new sense of responsibility has changed the attitude of recruits. An increasing number indicate "bombardier" as their first choice of a job.

The boy who comes here from preliminary training schools learns other things besides just how to drop bombs. He studies bombs themselves, learns something of meteorology, navigation and gunnery, since, in combat, he may have to take over some other crew member's job.

But the thing about which his life really centers is that amazing device, the American bombsight. The bombardier must learn all about it. He also learns to prize it and protect it above all else. These bombsights are so secret that they're kept locked up in vaults, and when they're taken out and moved to planes or classrooms they're always under guard. Even in the planes, the covers aren't taken off until the plane is in the air.

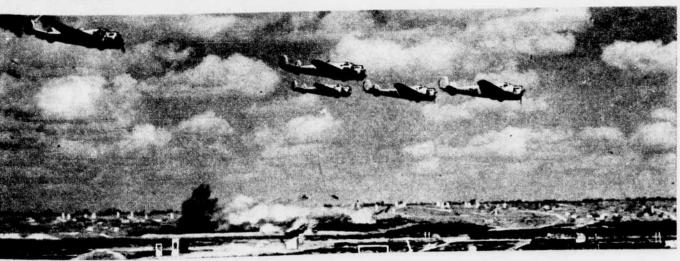

Anybody who saw the demonstration here in which Midland's bombardiers demolished a scale model of Tokyo out on the plains will agree that the bombsight is worth all the protection it can be given. Of course the students and instructors and officers at Midland school all shrugged and said, "We can bomb better than we did today." But to the spectators it was a demonstration of precision bombing that sent chills up and down their spines.

Bull's-Eye!

THE bombardier gets his first training in a contraption that looks like a tennis referee's platform on wheels, and is self-propelling. The student rides this device around a hangar floor, bombing paper targets. Then he graduates to the planes.

Day and night, teams of a pilot, instructor and a couple of students range the air above the Texas plains, practicing on specified targets laid out over a great expanse of cattle range. Their bombs are mostly filled with sand, but in each is a spotting charge of a few pounds of black powder. It's enough to give off a satisfying flash and puff of smoke, and when the flash and puff appear right in the bull's-eye of the target, the student bombardier has every reason to lean back and reflect that he's going to be a pretty important guy in winning this war.

ENNY HAGER was so fascinating to all men that when she was only four years old she caused dashing, gay-Lothario Lt. Carruthers to elope with her mother! She drove her father, Big Tim Hager, to drown himself mother! She drove her father, Big Tim Hager, to drown himself in rum, in fear of his own unholy desire for her! But as a child-bride, she brought banker Isaiah Poster a new zest for living — for all his seventy years!

A strange excitement shone in Jenny's eyes whenever she saw pain inflicted — a passion which drove her to do strange things under its impulse. To Ephraim Poster, Isaiah's son, she showed her true nature more naked and shameless and merciless than death itself! For why would she taunt Eph to kill his father — then jeer at him for a coward when he accidentally caused the old man's death?

Yes, she was more than a match for Ephraim, who had once boasted to his friend John Evered that "he saw a wanton in every pretty woman he met, and usually found it, too!" Eph tried to tell John the truth about Jenny. But the truth was beyond belief — and John, too, fell under her witch-like spell. Who wouldn't — after he had spent a bitter winter's night under a Cape Cod haystack with her — and after gallantly saving her from a shipwreck?

But John was different, Jenny loved him and their four sons—until she deceived even him with pious Elder Pittridge, to whom she whispered, "You're really good, aren't you? I like making you do things you think are wicked. It torments you so."

In The Strange Woman you'll meet an utterly amazing human character at the heart of a rich, gaudy, full-bodied novel — and a character you'll long remember!

Prelude to Their North African Sweep

Overboard from the ship into armored barges is the first move on arrival at the invasion point. Tackle lowers heavy equipment as men go down the cargo net.

ALONG isolated beaches of the Atlantic Coast, selected because secrecy was vital until they struck, American troops who have swept through French North Africa went through long and intensive training in amphibious invasion. At several training centers along the coast invasion maneuvers were held on a scale the Army had never before attempted. Carefully directed under simulated attack conditions, the maneuvers were a thorough training for the men and a test of the many techniques employed. Out of this acid test the best techniques were retained and perfected. The result in French North Africa speaks for methods and men

The result in French North Africa speaks for methods and men.

These pictures are among the first the Army has released showing the training that "built" the North African invasion. It's an operation in which men and equipment must be moved with the greatest possible secrecy, speed and security to get the result we've seen.

Self-propelled invasion barges move in a fleet toward shore. View is from one of the task force transports.

The ever-trusty jeep comes along. Pictures show the start and end of tis trip shoreward. It is slung from ship to barge in cargo nets and drives off the barge into the sea for the beach.

Close-up of a landing barge heading for shore with its load of troops. Note machine gun on bow and armored pits for gunners.

When men had mastered the invasion job in daylight, they got night training. Pre-dawn is the favored time for this operation. Here a field piece is being rolled from a barge to get its sea bath on the way to the beach. Could be one of those praised new mortars that shortened resistance at Algiers.

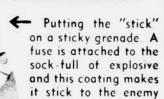

The Yanks have landed and they've come to stay awhile. A beachhead firmly established will then become a temporary supply base, and everything is set for a drive to objectives inland or perhaps along the coast as one flank of a split landing to take a seaport.

Tough Tanks Are Their Meat

hold the tank fighter in respect. They seek to shut him off with every kind of barrier from barbed wire to mine fields. Sgt. John Swayna demonstrates the least conspicuous way to get through barbed wire—under it.

tank until it explodes.

Tank hunters feel their way through a mine field. And to give them the real feel of it a mine explodes at their rear. They carry the special weapons for their quarry—sticky grenades and incendiary grenades.

For this lone job, starting with the courage for it, the tank fighter acquires the wily cunning of the guerrilla. With his sticky grenades, his "Molotov cocktails" of bottled gasoline, gun and bolo knife he pits himself against a rolling, roaring fortress of steel. But not with open defiance. Stalking and ambush are his method. And these and all the incidental niceties of tank and tank crew destruction he's taught at Camp Hood. It's the Nation's only military training area devoted exclusively to that training.

You give the sticky grenade a looping toss as demonstrated by this tank hunter—and if you've got the range it's a hit. Even if the tank is bumping along, the grenade will hang on until it blows a hole in the tank armor.

What a wallop those sticky grenades pack is shown in this head-size hole made in tank armor by a practice toss. This is the first of a one-two punch. Next comes the bottled gasoline, tossed in the hole or near it, and survivors in the tank hasten to get out.

The sticky grenade and the "Molotov cocktail"—twin delights of the tank hunter. The corked bottles are about three-quarters filled with gasoline.

If the enemy crawls out of a blasted tank the destroyer is ready for him with pistol and bolo knife. From his fox hole Corp. Richard Urban lifts a blackened face that won't reflect the sun's glare.

It's speed that makes the mobile destroyer effective against tanks. Here's one scoring a hit on the tank in the distance with its armorsmashing "75" in training maneuvers at Camp Todd.

Close-up of gun crew firing the 75-mm. gun from a mobile destroyer. Moving fast enough to outflank and outmaneuver enemy tanks, firing several rounds from one position and moving quickly to another, the mobile destroyer makes important use of its greater maneuverability.

Concealment and ambush play as vital a part in anti-tank warfare as in any other. Here's a mobile tank destroyer poking the snout of its "75" through tree cover, while you can hardly see Sergt. Lewis Wood spotting "enemy" tank through field glasses.
