Eisenhower Hurries Back.

The choice of Gen. Giraud came after French military and political leaders met yesterday following the funeral of Admiral Darlan, who fell under a young assassin's bullets Christmas eve.

The selection of Gen. Giraud thus was regarded as fortunate. He is respected in his homeland, the colonies, and abroad for his fighting qualities, and integrity. Pearl Harbor Repairs Began Before Jap Raid Ended, Navy Reports

Pacific Yard Doubled Output Immediately After Dec. 7 Attack

By the Associated Press.

The Navy reported yesterday that repair work on ships and shore installations damaged in the Pearl Harbor attack actually started before the enemy bombs stopped falling and that immediately after the disastrous raid, the production of the Navy Yard there was more than doubled.

Several months before the attack which started the war in the Pacific the Navy frankly said, "Pearl Harbor was not in true fact the "Gibraltar of the Pacific' which it was alleged to be."

"When the Pacific fleet began using Pearl Harbor as an operating base in 1940," the Navy resume continued, "many deficiencies became apparent and immediate steps were begun to remedy the situation. * * * Construction of the more important new facilities, which were so badly needed, was approaching completion on December 7, 1941."

Repairs Began Immediately.

The force of workmen at the yard had been increased six-fold by the time the attack came, but many were wholly inexperienced in marine construction and engineering. This handicap was cited as all the more reason for giving great credit to the yard force for successfully accomplishing "by far the biggest and most difficult job which had ever confronted any navy yard."

"Before the heat of the attack had passed and, literally, before the bombs stopped falling," the Navy related, "men not engaged in defense,, rescue, or control of damage were busy at their assigned repair tasks or in the survey and planning of damage to be repaired. A quick survey of the Navy Yard itself showed that only minor damage had been done to the plant fa-

OCD Praises Labor For Contributions To Defense Work

Pledges of Money and Service of Members Cited by D. C. Unit

The local Office of Civilian Deense yesterday paid tribute to organized labor's contribution to the financial needs of the civilian defense organization by citing the numerous occasions when the unions have provided funds not available from Government or other sources.
Of the $130,000 pledged by members of the Central Labor Union. $120,000 has already been collected and $86,000 has been either spent or allocated for definite purposes. The largest item still to be dis-equipment, has been tied up until recently because of priorities. A recent gift from the CLU consisted of three portable "iron lungs, presented to Emergency, Casualty and Freedmen's Hospitals. Previously, two union locals presented portable aluminum lungs to hossalaries of blood bank technicians, but also lined up as blood donors to stock the bank.

Gifts of $7,000 each were pre sented to Prince Georges and Montgomery Counties in Maryland and Arlington County, Va., to purchase helmets, rubber boots and similar equipment for wardens while Fairfax County, Va., received $1,000. The CLU contributed substan tially to the purchase of 15 police scout cars and equipped 11 of them with ambulance units. The group is also underwriting the purchase of 16,640 stirrup pumps for sale to the public.

Other CLU contributions listed by the OCD were the purchase of 52,000 white overseas caps for warboots for auxiliary firemen at a cost of $5,000; food supplies for feeding units, $2,500; emblems for eograph and other equipment for OCD headquarters, the rescue squad, warden headquarters and control

Montgomery Resigns As Consumer Counsel; Protests Food Setup

Hendrickson Will Fill Vacated Post Within Few Days, He Says

Donald Montgomery, consumers' counsel for the Agriculture Department since 1935, tendered his resignation yesterday, protesting that his division "has been excluded from any part of the responsibility with respect to how much food shall be reserved for the civilian population" in the new War Food Administra-

Mr. Montgomery announced his resignation in his regular weekly broadcast, "Consumer Time." Later the department issued a statement, saying:

"In accepting the resignation Roy F. Hendrickson, director of food distribution, said he planned within a few days to choose Mr. Montgomery's successor and added that Secretary Wickard had directed him to greatly strengthen and expand consumer work." Division "Excluded."

In his letter of resignation Mr. Montgomery said "This (the new food administration) should give the Consumers' Counsel Division, after its years of effort, under some difficulty, to represent American consumers in agricultural policy, its first opportunity to do an effective job in their behalf."

But it had been excluded, he said, adding, "Your decision to establish definite consumer responsibilities in another division provides at least a precise termination to this unsatisfactory situation."

In reply Mr. Hendrickson accepted the resignation and added, "No final decision has been made on the place of the Consumers' Counsel organization in the new Food Distribution Administration setup. Now that we have a clear responsibility for determining civilian requirements-and for fighting for themwe must establish a strong branch on civilian supply.

Secretary Hull Asks United Support of Gen. Eisenhower

Darlan Assassination Described as 'Odious And Cowardly Act'

By the Associated Press. Secretary of State Hull, deploring the assassination of Admiral Jean Darlan, called yesterday for unified support of Lt. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and his associates at this "crucial and critical stage" of the battle for Africa.

"The fullest measure of unified support is needed by Gen. Eisenhower and his associates," Secretary Hull said at a press conference in calling Admiral Darlan's assassination "an odious and cowardly act."

As to whether the Secretary thus was appealing to the various French factions to get together, or to public opinion in this country and other United Nations to uphold the ensuing military arrangements to be made by Gen. Eisenhower, no amplification was available.

Mr. Hull went further than President Roosevelt's bare denunciation of the murder and paid tribute to Admiral Darlan's contributions in Africa as being "of incalculable aid to the Allied armies in the battle, which is still raging."

Aid Chiefly Military. At the same time, Mr. Hull said that "it may be repeated that the part he played in North Africa related primarily to the military situation." At the end of the rope his plot almost came to naught, for a sentry challenged the tall, lean French

"Pretty cold, isn't it?" Gen. Giraud remarked in German, which he has learned well as a captive and as a one-time military commander of Metz, near the German frontier.

"Yes, sir," the surprised German said, and Gen. Giraud strolled away, whistling a convincing German air

The Germans quickly sounded the alarm, but Gen. Giraud reached a nearby railway station, grabbed a strange young woman by the arm a fatherly way, ushered her in aboard a train and rode without incident to an Alsatian station near the Swiss frontier. He crossed to freedom in disguise.

Escape Made Hitler Furious.

Hitler was furious when Gen. Giraud got to Vichy, but the Petain government feared his enforced return to Germany would set off a revolt among the admiring-and snickering-French populace. At one stage of some rather ludicrous negotiations Gen. Giraud was said to have offered to go back to Koenigstein in a swap for 500,000 French solider-prisoners, but he said a mere Hitlerian promise was not enough-they had to be delivered. He wouldn't trust a German taking an oath on Mein Kampf.

Then Gen. Giraud ostensibly retired to private life in the Lyon area, but some mysterious negotiations apparently were in the works all the while, for an American naval officer in a borrowed British submarine took him from the French coast to a rendezvous at sea with an Allied plane which plumped him into Allied headquarters for the start of the African occupation.

Now in his 60s and a veteran of 30 years or so in African colonial commands. Gen. Giraud was the Allies' ace in the hole, and he was offered the political command of all French Africa. He refused, leaving the place open for Admiral REWARD for rhinestone bow-knot clip: lost Christmas Day, vicinity Dupont Circle. E. Darlan, and in Gen. His French forces in Tunisia have operated admirably beside the Allies, and his only expressed regret has been that Gen. Maxime Wevgand, the last Allied generalissimo before the fall of France, could not be on hand to run the political and military shows combined in behalf of resurgent France.

Gen. Weygand is in German hands and presumable at Koenigstein as a hostage for Gen. Giraud. The Germans have constantly exhibited their fury over Gen. Giraud's escape from the Reich. Early in the African operations they made the claim on the Paris radio-never sustantiated by any other sourcethat two young French naval officers had attempted to assassinate him in Algiers but that their shots

Austin Will Continue As Assistant GOP Senate Leader

McNary Scouts Rumors Isolationists Attempt To Oust Vermonter

By GOULD LINCOLN. Senator Austin of Vermont, who has been acting as assistant Republican leader of the Senate, will continue in that position in the new Congress, despite rumors that so-called Republican isolationist Senators have been gunning for him because of his views on foreign Minority Leader McNary said flatly yesterday there was nothing to the reports of a fight by "isolationists" to eliminate Senator Austin from the office.

Furthermore, Senator McNary said Senator Austin would continue to serve as acting leader when he was ssent. Since Senator McNary, as leader and chairman of the Repulican conference of the Senate, has full authority in this matter, that brings a touch of finality.

The minority leader said it looked to him as though an effort was being made by some persons to stir up the isolationist issue in this case and thereby cause friction among Senate Republicans. The inference left was that the fires were being stirred by the "interventionists," not the "isolationists."

Denies Participation.

Senator Nye of North Dakota, who has been a leader among the isolationists, denied that he knew of any campaign to take Senator Austin out of the position of assistant leader, or that he himself was participating in any such campaign.

Senator McNary will continue to serve as Republican leader. Under the rules of the Republican conference, the leader has the right to designate an assistant, or "whip." The office of leader is elective. When Senate Republicans organized in the 77th Congress a motion was made by Senator Holman of Oregon to continue Senator Austin as assistant leader and was carried. However, the rule of the conference gives the leader power to designate his assistant. It still stands, and is expected to prevail in the organization

It is true that the views of Senator Austin on international affairs have differed widely in the past from those of Republican Senators who were isolationists before Pearl Har-The Vermont Senator was and is on the side of international cooperation. With some modifications, the resolution was adopted.

Compromise Resulted. In the recent St. Louis meeting of the committee Mr. Willkie and his friends raised the isolationist issue against Werner Schroeder, Illi-nois member of the committee, who had been put forward prominently for the national chairmanship to succeed Representative "Joe" Martin of Massachusetts, who was resigning to give his full time to the Republican leadership of the House. Mr. Schroeder was defeated, although Mr. Willkie's choice, Fred Baker of Washington, did not win either. A compromise brought about the election of Harrison Spangler of Iowa as chairman.

It is apparent that Senator Mc-Nary does not intend to have the organization meeting of the Republican members of the Senate used as a sounding board for the isolationist issue. The meeting probably will be held January 4, two days before the new Congress formally assembles.

97 Inland Vessels Being Built to Speed Fuel Oil to East

32 Coastal Tankers And 65 Barges Slated To Go Into Service

Nearly 100 small tank vessels adaptable to the inland waterway transportation of fuel oil to Middle Atlantic and Eastern States are under construction, the Maritime Commission revealed yesterday. They are part of a construction program of several hundred small vessels to keep the war supplies for the armed forces moving and to fill essential civilian needs. The tank vessels, which are being rushed to completion, include both self-propelled boats and barges.

Thirty-two of them are coastal tankers, many of which soon will be in operation. Twelve are being built on the Great Lakes, 12 on the Gulf Coast and eight in Atlantic The tankers are about 200 vards. feet long with a capacity of 11,500 barrels. Because of their small size and maneuverability they are well adapted to shallow-water operations.

65 Barges to Speed Oil. The commission said that transportation of vitally needed oil will be further facilitated by 65 reinforced concrete oil-tanker barges now under construction at three newly built shipyards. Forced Saving of 16 Billions By Consumers Seen for 1943

Government Wants Excess Purchasing Power Blank Check Spending To Help Finance War, Combat Inflation

Don't look now, but the Government believes you will have $16,- on inflated prices. The danger is 000,000,000 more than you can spend that this attitude might force the legitimately during the next year. It is scheming how to put this money to work to finance the war and keep down the cost of living.

While the problem is not yet settled, more taxes, compulsory savings his prices would technically be a and increased rationing are expected by officials to be used to "mop up" your excess purchasing power.

High officials who have been discussing the problem in various meetings appear to favor compulsory savings for a major part of the Their ideas runs in terms of from $15,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,-000. However, most persons forced to save by this method could be expected to drop the purchase of War bonds, so the net additional take from the public might be only half these figures.

Suggestions Vary. One suggestion is that these "savings" would be collected just like income taxes, starting at 10 per cent and graduating upward to perhaps 20 per cent. As usual, there are all kinds of tax ideas—sales or "consumption" taxes, spending taxes, increased income taxes, special excises and

More rationing is due, whether because of actual shortages or a desire to restrict the public's buying habits. At present, officials are inclined to confine rationing to things which are actually scarce.

Merchandise Limited. Here's how the $16,000,000,000 estimate was calculated: The experts figure that the national income of individuals in 1943 will be about $125,000,000,000. Out of this the public will owe, under existing laws, about $14,000,000,000 of personal—excluding corporation -taxes. They probably will save, voluntarily, about $25,000,000,000 by buying War bonds and other securities, paying old debts, increasing bank deposits and similar methods. That would leave $86,000,000,000 to spend, but the experts calculate that, because of war production, there will be only $70,000,000,000 worth of merchandise and services for civilians to buy. That leaves $16,000,000,000 that the Government

However, if price bootlegging became very general throughout the country it might be more difficult to police than alcohol prohibition was in the '20s.

New Budget Due.

Not all officials use this approach to the problem, however. Some are the least bit skeptical about this "mopping up" theory, but still favor drastic steps because of the war financing needs of the Government.

President Roosevelt's new budget, scheduled to reach Congress in two weeks, is expected to call for the expenditure of roughly $100,000,-000,000 by the Federal Government -about 95 per cent of it for warin the coming fiscal year. Practically everyone here concedes it is impossible to finance all of it on a pay-as-you-go basis but wants as much of it paid that way as the public can stand. To achieve that purpose, they want substantially the same measures as the "mopping up" fanciers.

Except for rationing, the other proposals require congressional action, and therefore may not be determined for many weeks. far, administration leaders are trying merely to work out a joint program to offer to the lawmakers. group," the Senator continued.

Calls on Legislators To Reassert Authority Under Constitution

By J. A. O'LEARY. Senator McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada called on the new Congress last night to put an end to "blank check" appropriations, as one of three ways he believes it should reassert its responsibility under the Constitution.

Predicting the incoming Congress will do "an about-face" and "assume the dignity and responsibility intended by organic law," the Nevada Senator said two other steps to achieve that goal are: Guarding the taxing power as a egislative function. Checking the trend toward transfer of powers from the States to the Federal Government.

At the same time, he indicated he does not share the belief held some observers that anti-New Deal Democrats will join forces with the increased Republican membership to block all administration proposals. It is not to be supposed, he said, that because there has been an increase in the minority party, "progressive legislation will be thrown into the discard."

"Progressive steps in government do not belong to any particular They are growing and continuing things that come out of popular necessities that no democratic government can be deaf to. Adding up the foregoing facts, it is now clear that the Japanese air forces as a whole are diminishing in size, because Japanese aircraft production is not sufficiently great to keep up with the losses. In particular, the Solomons operations are costing the Japanese very heavily, and once again the policy of the Navy Department in under-taking the Solomons offensive last August, considerable though the risks were, is shown to be sound and well considered.

Cost of private building in the Metropolitan Area of Prince Georges County this year totaled approximately $5,400,000, according to Herbert Roby, inspector. The figure does not include Federal or State projects, such as the developments at Greenbelt Beltsville or the University of Maryland. Included in the report is one private hospital costing approximately $50,000; six apartment houses with 651 units costing $1.304,250, and defense housing projects costing $123,000. The cost of the apartment projects showed a $650,000 increase

Although the cost of construction for this year is less than the 1941 total of $6,627,405, there was an increase in the number of one-family dwellings from 1,454 in 1941 to 1,670 in 1942. The increase was due to construction of low-cost homes, the first of which were started last year

Appointment of Mr. Camalier, a native of Washington and a man who for many years has taken an active part in District affairs, was seen by some circles as the biggest step so far toward solving the confused fuel oil problem here. The attorney, it is understood, will serve as a liaison consultant between the dealers and the OPA and will have ready admittance at all times to the office of Mr. Henderson.

Moves Are Planned.

Starting immediately with his new responsibilities, Mr. Camalier revealed yesterday that his first move will be to reconcile ODT and OPA regulations concerning fuel oil. He also plans to hit at the manpower problems of dealers and to investigate the possibility of bringing more oil into the city. He said he would confer early this week with a representative group of dealers in an effort to learn what they would like for him to do to relieve the situation.

Meanwhile the attorney will accompany Mr. Henderson to a conference called by the price administrator to be held within the next day or two. Present also will be officials from the Office of Price Administration, Office of Defense Transportation, Office of Petroleum Co-ordinator and Petroleum Administrator for War.

Regarding his former chief as the "outstanding genius of aerial war-fare so far developed in this war," Col. Cooper was almost apologetic in speaking of that 12-to-1 score which is consistently higher than that of any other United Nations

"We're not doing so well as formerly," he said in referring to the amazing 20-to-1 score that the Flying Tiger dealt the Japs back in the days of the American Volunteer

"We haven't got anything like what it takes to win the war in Col. Cooper explained. "However, things are looking up." Tide Declared Turning.

A "fleeting glimpse" of war fronts from China to North Africa on his homeward swing around the globe has convinced this experienced air fighter and observer that American air power is on the "up and up" everywhere. The tide is turning in our favor, he says.

At the same time, Col. Coope disclosed, the rapid development of air transportation may make it possible before long to gain numerical air superiority in the China theater with movements of supplies by

Col. Cooper attributed the 12-to-1 score to Gen. Chennault's great leadership. "He was formerly regarded primarily as a commander of fighter planes, but he has developed into an even better bomber commander," Col. Cooper explained. In the six months Col. Cooper was with the AVG commander, he said, Gen. Chennault "had though out and executed 83 major air battles and never lost a one.

Col. Cooper was a flyer in the World War and afterwards he joined the Polish Air Force to fight the Russian revolutionists. Later he took to writing and exploration in the Orient and in Africa. Then he began the adventures of a movie director. He helped to produce the film, "King Kong," in Hollywood. But now he's back to flying and frankly he admits that he "likes the China theater and is anxious to get back.

A Southerner to the core, although his home in late years has been everywhere but his native Florida and "Georgia by adoption," · Col Cooper takes pride in the fact that up to a short while ago every leader of the China force was from the "It was an all-Southern team," he explained, "until recently, when Lt. Col. Herbert Morgan, jr., of Preston, Pa., took the place of Col. Caleb V. Haynes of Mount Airy, N. C. Gen. Chennautl is from Water Proof, La."

"I like my job and my employers are lovely to work with," she recently wrote a Broadway columnist who had helped her get the position. She stressed that she'd repay all the kindness shown by friends just as soon as she got her "feet on the ground."

Miss Hibbard, a native of California, played in 16 Broadway productions. She had been on the stage since she was 13.

Only 3 Pct. of Rental Units Registered in Richmond

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 26.-Only 1,200 rental units have been registered under the rent control regulations out of a total of 36,000 units in Richmond, Marcellus E. Wright, rent control director, said today The registered units represent only 3 per cent of the total.

"I want to impress on landlords that regisration is a definite requirement of the law," Mr. Wright said, "and that it is absolutely necessary that every housing accommodation that is rented or offered for rent be registered with the rent control office, whether the accommodation is a house, flat, apartment hotel or rooming house.'

Mr. Wright said the registration period would end January 15. He added that if too many landlords wait until the last few days, there will be such a congestion it will be impossible for the rent control office to finish examining the registrations on time.

Fond memory brings the light

Their hands upon our fevered brow,
Those loving things we cherish now.

Made Causeless Attack On High School Athlete, Montana Prosecutor Says

GREAT FALLS, Mont., Dec. 26 .-A deputy county attorney charged today that an "unprovoked attack" by a military policeman against Bud Kirwan, a high school athlete, precipitated a night-club shooting affray in which four civilians were wounded.

Military authorities prepared court-martial proceedings against the two soldiers involved.

Deputy County Attorney Cleveland Hall said the fracas would not have occurred if a military policeman had not begun the attack, Says Boy Was Clubbed. "All Kirwan did," Mr. Hall said, was to tell these two M. P.'s that another boy at the bar was not a soldier when they ordered the youth to leave. One of the M. P.'s slapped Kirwan several times, and when Kirwan was removing his coat the soldier clubbed him with his gun." Mr. Hall said that on his arrival attempts were being made to pacify the servicemen, and that he had heard of no concerted attack on them by patrons in the establishment, as the military police claimed. Maj, James L. Tax Exemption Code Becomes Law With Roosevelt Signature

Broad Measure Frees Non-Profit Institutions From District Levies

The bill to establish a new code governing tax exemptions for nonprofit institutions in Washington became a law yesterday with President Roosevelt's signature,

The measure restores exemptions to hospitals and religious, charitable, educational and scientific institutions which were declared taxable by the Commissioners during the past two years. It also sets forth definitions to determine types of institutions that will be entitled to exemption in the future.

A committee of local officials appointed by the Commissioners in December, 1940, to survey the tax-exempt list concluded that some of the institutions were not entitled to exemption under a strict interpretation of the old laws on the subject.

The Commissioners favored drafting a new code that would clarify the statutes and restore exemption to about half of the property recently held to be taxable.

The Senate District Committee, mendation did not go far enough, and the bill as finally approved broadened the general definition and May Be Set This Week granted specific exemptions to a group of national organizations that have headquarters in Washington.

The bill was steered through the Senate in the closing days of its session by Chairman McCarran of the District Committee, after having passed the House previously.

Two Ships Reported Sunk, Crews 'Apparently Safe'

The sinking of two medium-sized American and British registry-by Axis submarines was announced by the District Building, but it was the Navy yesterday, with all 93 crewmen apparently saved. The British ship was blasted by two torpedoes without warning in mid-December while almost on the Equator, 350 miles off the coast of South America, by a U-boat whose commander offered apologies and said he hoped the war would end

The merchant captain, who arrived at an East Coast United States port from South America, said the entire crew of 41 escaped from the ship, but one of the lifeboats, with 12 men, was missing. It was reported from South America, however, that 12 members of the ship's crew arrived there recently. The United States vessel was torpedoed in the North Atlantic during the middle of November, survivors disclosed, and the merchant and Navy gun crew of 52 had ample time to get away in three They were rescued an hour later. The sinkings raised to 572 the Associated Press count of announced sinkings of Allied and neutral merchantmen in the Western Atlantic since Pearl Harbor.

Four Papers Raise Prices To Meet Production Costs

Four leading papers yesterday joined the growing list of dailies which recently have announced increases in price due to rising costs of production and distribution, the Associated Press reported.

Effective January 3, the Cincinnati Enquirer will raise its Sun- Panic in Theater Fire day edition from 10 cents to 12 within a 100-mile radius of Cincinnati, and to 15 cents elsewhere. Daily editions will continue to sell for 3 cents.

The Chicago Sun announced an increase in its newsstand price in the Chicago area from 2 to 3 cents. The Chicago Tribune announced a similar increase. Both will be effective tomorrow.

The Buffalo Courier Express will boost its Sunday edition January 3 from 10 to 12 cents. The daily price remains 3 cents.

Dupont Circle Found Suitable For Underpass

Advanced engineering plans for the proposed underpass to be built through Dupont Circle indicate the soil there would make the underpass easy to construct, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of District highways, revealed yesterday.

For the past two weeks workmen of the highway department have been proceeding with 20 borings in terrain of the Dupont Circle parkway. The borings will be com-pleted some time within the next few days.

Capt. Whitehurst said the 1943 appropriations act provides for his department to determine and design the character of the founda-tion for the proposed underpass. He explained that the appropriations and did not provide funds for the

Trade Board Cancels Midwinter Dinner

President Announces Schedule Will Be Resumed After War

Because of war conditions, the annual midwinter dinner of the Washington Board of Trade, originally scheduled for February 6, has been canceled, L. P. McLachlen, president, announced yesterday. "It is with considerable reluctance that the Executive Committee of our organization reached its decision to cancel the 1943 dinner," Mr. Mc-Lachlen said. "We know that our dinner has come to be one of the outstanding affairs in Washington. This decision was based on the fact that present conditions are not conducive to the holding of large gatherings and elaborate entertainment such some of his fellow employes to and as is provided at these affairs. Rather than lessen the quality of the dinner, it was decided to forego the function entirely, to be resumed after the present emergency."

Garrett A. Pendleton, chairman of the Midwinter Dinner Committee, said his committee agreed to the action of the board. What plans had been made for the dinner will be held in abeyance "until the time is more appropriate," Mr. Pendleton

A similar step was taken by the Board of Trade last May when it canceled its annual shad bake. This be able to participate in a small way year's dinner would have been the 25th annual dinner of the board.

500 Temporary Homes ? Approved for War

> ADA Issues Order To Erect Dwellings on Kenilworth Avenue

Workers in Capital

The Alley Dwelling Authority yesterday announced it has issued a proceed order, effective tomorrow, to the C. D. Ross Co., Inc., for construction of 500 temporary dwellings for white war workers on the tract near Shaw Lily Ponds on Kenilworth avenue N.E. The houses are to be completed within 150 calendar days. The homes will be for temporary use, in conformity with the Government's latest program for providing dwellings for war workers, the intent being to remove them soon after the war. The site is suitable for a permanent housing development when the temporary dwellings are removed, ADA said. Tenants will be employes of Government agencies engaged in war work and will be certified to ADA by the personnel offices of their respective employment agencies.

Each dwelling will have a living room, kitchen and bath, and one or two bedrooms. A small number of three-bedroom dwellings are provided by remodeling houses now standing on the site. There will be a community building containing space for a day-nursery, first-aid classes and other wartime activities, in addition to management and maintenance offices.

Japs Must Be Ousted From Pacific Isles, Air Transport Head Adds

Three things must be accomplished before the war can be brought to an end, Maj. Gen. Harold Lee George, commander of the Air Transport Command, declared yesterday at the weekly luncheon of the United Nations Club, at Hotel 2400.

Gen. George listed them as: Destruction of the philosophy of Nazism; the driving of the last Jap from every square foot of soil over which the American flag was flying on December 7, 1941, and dedication of a world to humanity instead of to "gangsterism."

When ships can be spared...

OR more than forty years, ships of the Great White Fleet have played a vital part in the development of trade and commerce between the United States and our Good Neighbors, the Republics of Middle America.

Thousands of men and women sailing on these American flag liners have travelled within these countries . . . promoting good will through science, government, business and the arts.

Below decks these same ships have moved the cargoes that have been the very lifeblood of Inter-American economic health and growth.

They have carried bananas, coffee, cocoa beans, pineapples and other important Middle-American export crops to the markets of the United States . . . carried back the farm and factory machinery, automobiles, radios, household appliances, drugs, and other products so necessary to Middle America's progress.

Today, this traffic is greatly changed. The United States and Middle America are fighting side by side . . . sharing a common stake in the United Nations' struggle for victory. It is a war that must be won no matter how great the sacrifices or how difficult the disruption of peacetime economic patterns. Global war is making terrific demands on United States shipping. Men and materials vital to the actual war effort must be moved first.

Many wartime essentials, formerly imported almost exclusively from the Pacific Tropics, are now being grown and shipped from Middle America ... rubber, abaca or manila hemp, cinchona for quinine, palm oil, rotenone and others . . . while hides, minerals and essential tropical woods such as balsa and mahogany have taken on new importance as Middle American exports.

But when ships can be spared, after Victory and perhaps before, those great food surpluses of Middle America - especially bananas - will again come into their own . . . helping to feed a hungry, war-ravaged world....

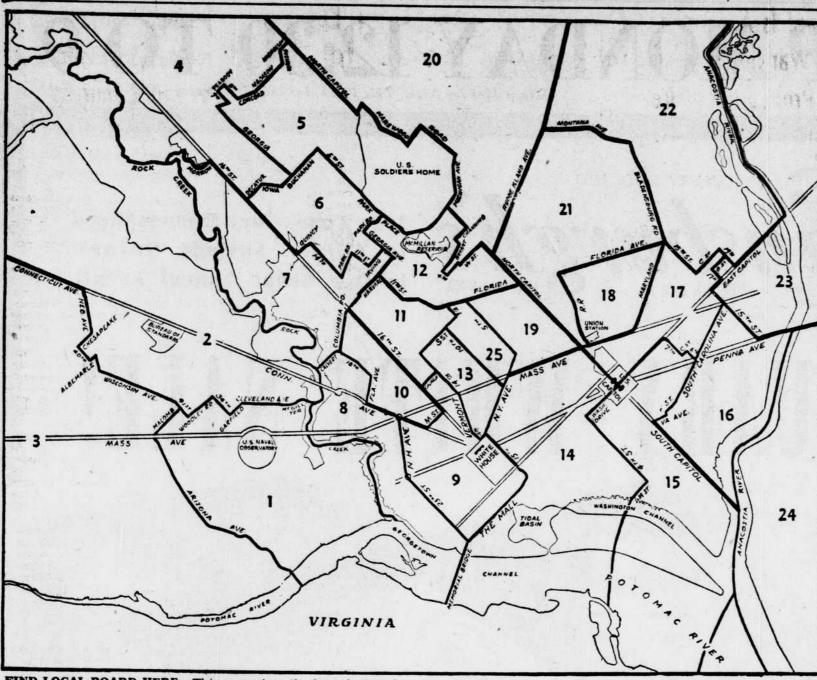

Today, as always, the Great White Fleet is proud to be serving the Americas . . . proud to be wearing wartime grey as it carries out government orders necessary for Victory and the protection of the entire Western Hemisphere. Tomorrow, it will be ready to resume its place in the trade and travel between the United States and Middle America.

U. S. Bomber Crew Fights Off 15 Zeros, Blasts Supply Ship

Gasmata Airdrome Also Bombed; All in Plane Return Without Scratch

Associated Press War Correspondent SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA.

Dec. 24—(Delayed).—Fifteen Jap Zero planes jumped a B-24 bomber over Gasmata, New Britain, today, but the bomber crew exploded a 1,500-ton Jap supply ship, bombed the Gasmata airdrome, and shot down one Zero officially, probably a second, and possibly a third.

Maj. Cecil Faulkner of Bellevue, Tex., reported not one man of the 10 aboard the bomber received as much as a scratch. One of the bomber's engines was shot up, however, and there were bullet holes in the fuselage. It was this bomber's first encounter with Jap Zeros.

In addition to Maj. Faulkner, the plane crew included Second Lt. Robert W. Riley, Los Angeles, copilot; Lt. Vernon D. Harker, Akron. Ohio, navigator; Second Lt. Fred P. Corpl. Ellis definitely claimed two Zeros which he said fell afire after blasts from the waist-gun position. Sergt. Abromovich is pretty sure his gun got a Jap. A "possible" went to Sergt. 1942, Born in Defeat, Ends in Hope As U. S. Goes All Out for War

Course of War Turns From Axis As Allies Assume Offensive

Japanese Halted and Crippled, Nazis Give Ground in Russia and Face Rout in Africa as New Year Nears

By Blair Bolles.

Five days from now the year 1942 will end, but its memory will be sharp in the United States for years to come. During its 365 days this country has gone through changes so far-reaching and profound that 1941 seems long, long ago.

In order to fight the most momentous war since the beginning of time the United States has had its economic and social life forced into strange and narrow channels from which it may not soon escape, even after the war is over.

The United States is celebrated everywhere in the world as a country where the standard of living is high, where political freedom is general and where the automobile is the universal vehicle.

In 1942 these pre-eminent characteristics of the United States have all been modified. Although the national income reached its highest mark in history, $113,000,000,000, the standard of living suffered because materials to purchase and housing space to live in became scarce. The military requirements of war have limited political freedom by putting curbs on freedom of the press on the activities of some American citizens-especially the American-born chil-

The use of the automobile has been severely restricted by the inadequacy of the Nation's gasoline supply, which has been lowered by the requirements of war and by the comparative failure of transportation facilities for civilian needs. It has been restricted further by the scarcity of rubber, which the United States obtained in the past from the Indies and Malayan regions now held by Japan, and by the needs for war industry. The manufacture of the automobile was halted last January, and the factories were converted to wartime uses. The year also witnessed a marked change in the currents of thought in America. Since 1933 the United States has supported the New Deal idea of centralized political authority reaching into every aspect of our lives. Nineteen Hundred and Forty-two, at the very time when war made necessary new political controls, paradoxically brought a falling off in the extent of popular acceptance of control and an increasing vexation with power of the executive branch of the Government. This decline was emphasized in November by the congressional and State elections, in which Republicans gained great strength from the Democrats, who have carried the New Deal banner.

For the United States the war was 24 days old when 1942 arrived. January brought events which drove home the meaning of war. President Roosevelt presented to Congress a budget calling for expenditure of $56,000,000,000. Less than 50 years ago Congress astonished the country by appropriating $1,000,000 .-000 in one year. The President established the War Production Board with Donald Nelson as its chairman, and he issued an executive order which gave Mr. Nelson the power to assume a dictatorship over American industry and to control the procurement program of the Army and Navy. The fact that Mr. Nelson did not choose to exercise these powers plunged the War Production Board into a year-long conflict with the Army and Navy, which sought to dominate the wartime industrial program. The global nature of the war into which the United States has been plunged was stressed in January by two events which took place on far-apart points on the planet—the American Navy took part in a battle with a Japanese flotilla in Macassar Straits, in the Dutch East Indies, and American soldiers landed in Ulster.

February was a month of few political but many military developments and they were invariably unfortunate except for the naval raid on the Marshall and Gilbert Islands in the Japanese region of the Pacific Ocean. This raid demonstrated the potential tactical abilities of the American Navy. The Navy suffered, however, in the popular estimation during February by the mishap to the great liner Normandie, which had been taken over by the United States. At its North River dock in New York

City the ship caught afire and capsized. Workmen repairing it had been careless with blow torches. The Navy was guarding the ship, whose loss was unfortunate dren of Japanese immigrants, who have in a war where it became soon obvious that the issue would be decided only when the Allies had ships enough to move troops and supplies all over the globe.

In February Singapore fell to Japan, and Japan's drive against the Indies opened in earnest. A rich part of the world from which the United States for years had drawn the raw materials that provided the foundation for much of our economy was disappearing into that dark and inaccessible pen known as the Japanese Em-

ADMIRAL HALSEY. In March German The Japs don't like him. U-boats began to intensify their attacks on shipping off the United States coasts, and the gasoline problem became stringent because many of the tankers in which gasoline had been shipped from the Gulf Coast refinery areas to the Atlantic Coast were being sunk. Gasoline rationing was ordered for the Eastern States, and sugar rationing was ordered, to begin in May. Much American sugar is imported to the United States in ships, and ships were at a premium.

March brought some measure of encouragement in the gloom which was settling over America in the escape to Australia of Gen. Douglas MacArthur. He had become a great national hero through his fighting and literary prowess on the tiny peninsula of Bataan, where the issue of whether Japan would take the Philippines would be settled. In Australia, it was understood, Gen. Mac-Arthur would organize the counterattack against Japan. The Navy gave the national feeling a boost by another Pacific raid, this time on Marcus Island and Wake Island. But our enemies strode ahead. The Japs took Java, pearl of the Indies, and moved into Rangoon, Burma, the chief port of supply for advancing Japa. obvious that Burma was doomed. This meant that China, strong ally in the Orient, would be isolated, and that the Japs would move to the borders of India. At once India became a political question. Early in the winter the old cry for Indian independence from England had been raised, and late in Macrh the British government sent Sir Stafford Cripps, a Labor party lawyer with a reputation for liberalism, to India with an offer of post-war freedom. The talks bogged down on the question of the interim governmental arrangements, and in April the Indians rejected the Cripps offer. This was a matter of great importance to the United States, because the Indian political problem was closely allied with the prospects of the war in the Orient. President Roosevelt in April sent Col. Louis Johnson, former Undersecretary of War, to India as his personal representa-

Assistant Secretary of State, to India to make an economic survey of the region. The intense official concern over India served to emphasize the new breadth of political interest which the war has given the United States. For many years Indie has been a sentimental problem for American liberals. Now the role of India has become a factor in victory. In December President Roosevelt sent William Phillips, former Undersecretary of State and former Ambassador to Italy, to India as his personal representative with the rank of Ambassador.

In May, the war invaded every American household; sugar rationing began. Women were invited into the Army as Congress passed a bill creating the WAACS, Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, and their training center was established in Des Moines. At first the strength was fixed at 12,000. Now this has been increased to a goal of 150,000, which is to be reached by the beginning of 1944. May brought the first sign that the Japs had reached the limit of their advance southward in the Pacific, although the news was not presented to the United States until June. In May the United States Fleet licked the Jap Navy in the Coral Sea, where it was crossing toward Australia. The aircraft carrier Lexington went down, but since then the United States has launched a new Lexington. The Japs completed the major part of the Philippine campaign in May by the capture of Corregidor. This is the rocky fort island at the tip of Bataan where the American Far Eastern forces withdrew after the abandonment of Bataan. Maj. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, the commander in Bataan after the departure of MacArthur, was captured with his men. Across the China Sea, the Japs, taking advantage of the Burma, road closing, began a big drive against our Chinese Allies and took the port of

Foochow. In June the United States and our Allies began to flex their war muscles. The British RAF brought together more than 1,000 bombers at a time and raided the great German cities of Cologne, Bremen and Essen. Having stopped the Jap southern advance in May, the United States Navy now stopped the Jap eastern advance by punishing the Jap fleet in the battle of Midway. United States continental territory was invaded in June for the first time since the War of 1812, when the Japs occupied part of the Aleutian Islands, Alaska. The British reeled in Libya and Egypt, and the United States wondered whether the German and Italian armies under the command of Marshal Erwin Rommel would reach the Suez Canal. July was an uncomfortable month. Our enemies enjoyed general successes. In the Solomon Islands, which they captured last February, the Japs were busy building an airfield on the island of Guadalcanal, and they were sending big ships into the deep, sheltered anchorage between Tulagi and Florida Islands. Rommel crept near the Suez, but the heat stopped him at last and he established a line at El Alamein. The Nazi armies in Russia cleared the way for a crushing advance into the Caucasus and toward the Volga by taking Sevastopol, the Crimes stronghold which withstood a long stege.

In July, also, President Roosevelt took a step toward improving the strategical machinery of this country by naming Admiral William D. Leahy his personal chief of staff. Leahy was just returned machinery of this co from France, where he served as the United Sixtes Ambanador to Vichy. He had been third of bearing to Vichy. He made the Joint Chiefs of Staff Com- | bay and important war factories were mittee, on which Leahy sits with the chief of naval operations, Admiral Ernest King; the Chief of Staff, United States Army, Gen. George Catlett Marshall, and the chief of the United States Army Air Forces, Lt. Gen. H. H. Arnold. This committee meets with the central allied strategic committee, the Combined Chiefs of tives only of the United States and Great Britain. These countries during 1942 set up also a Combined Production Board and a Combined Food Board to integrate the factory output for war and the distribution of foodstuffs.

In July the controversy between the Army, as represented principally by Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, chief of the Services of Supply, U. S. A., and the War Production Board became intense. The Army wanted to dominate the production program in the military interest, while the WPB sought to maintain some stability between military and civilian needs. The military services were represented by the Army and Navy Munitions Board. The controversy was complicated by questions regarding lendlease, because the disposition of some military men was to oppose distributing American-made goods to our Allies. In an interview, Denald Nelson, chairman of the WPB, said he was going to "get tough" and run his own show, but months passed before he came out on top.

In August the United States and her Allies scratched the fringes of the enemies' domain by invading the island of Guadalcanal in the Solomons and by raiding the resort of Dieppe on the coast of France. At the year's end the United on jungly Guadalcanal. Dieppe was a disaster, in that 5.000 casualties occurred. After a long trial, a special commission ordered the execution of six here illegally to commit sabotage for their German masters. The men were landed on Florida and Long Island from German submarines. India became s problem once again in August. The All-India Congress party, displeased by the failure of Great Britain to seek an Indian settlement after the Cripps mission collapse, voted to conduct a civil disobedience campaign. While censorship hid most of the facts, there were riots in Bom-

Mohandas Gandhi, the spiritual leader of the Congress party, was put into jail by orders of the Viceroy of India, Lord Linlithgow. whose job is thankless. Lord Linlithgow's term was up in December, but Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of Great Britain, found it impossible to find a successor for him. So Linlith is staying on in a temporary basis.

Domestic affairs were subordinated up to September. There were problems aplenty, but they were difficult to cope with and President Roosevelt apparently preferred to concentrate his attention on the war itself and postpone action on matters born of the war but in a way a side issue of the war. This inaction created much ill-will within the country, and the disinclination of the Congress to take the bull by the horns and act itself instead of waiting for word from the White House brought Congress many heated words of opprobrium. One intemperate columnist suggested that Congress was in danger of disappearing as a factor in American life. The unfortunate position of Congress was increased by two moves-one, in the winter Congress included its members within a scheme of pensions for Government officers; two, in the spring many members of Congress insisted that they be granted unlimited supplies of gasoline under the rationing system.

In September, the way was prepared for an attack on one phase of the domestic problems-rubber. President Roosevelt was given a report by a special committee he had set up to study the problem of rubber and its availability in view of the loss of the Indies sources of rubber to the Japs. The committee was composed of Bernard Baruch, head of the World War Industries Board; Dr. James Conant, president of Harvard. and Dr. Karl Compton, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They recommended that rubber be saved by Nation-wide gasoline rationing, and this rationing became effective in No-

In September also President Roosevelt firmly demanded of Congress a bill which would make it possible for the Executive to cope with the threat of inflation by limiting prices and income. The war news in September was encouraging in that it showed the enemy running out of momentum. Rommel tried a thrust at Cairo from El Alamein. but the British stopped him. The Japs. trying to put themselves in position for a thrust at Australia from Papua, sent an expedition around the eastern end of Papua, but they were trapped in Milne Bay by flyers under command of Gen. MacArthur before they could reach their objectives. The Marines, with Maj. James Roosevelt, the President's eldest son, second in command, raided Makin Island in the Japanese Pacific group. The British protected the communications lines running from the United States to India by occupying the island of Madagascar in the Indian Ocean.

The trail-blazing geniuses of the Air Transport Command, United States Army, developed a skyway route from India into China, but it could not replace the Burma road.

September was travel month. President Roosevelt made a secret journey of the United States, and when he returned and disclosed his travels and voiced approval of what the country was doing in the factories. Wendell Willkie, the Republican defeated by Mr. Roosevelt for the presidency in 1940, took off on a bomber, furnished by the United States Army, for a trip around the globe. The President was pleased with what he saw. Mr. Willkie was disp what he learned. In Russia and in China he concluded that the United States was giving these Allies insufficient aid and that this country had an imperfect un-derstanding of the need for close alliance with those countries. flation bill which President Roosevelt | tember had promised Stalingrad to the asked for-with certain pronounced modifications. The strong farm bloc insisted that labor costs be included in the mystic symbol of parity in adjusting the ceilings of farm products, but the insistence came to nothing and President Roosevelt got the bill pretty much as he had asked for it. It was the last favor he obtained from Congress with one exception—the passage of a bill providing for the drafting of boys 18 and 19. Congress refused to permit him to suspend tariff and immigration laws for the duration in the interest of better prosecution of the war. This step marked the beginning of Congressional revolt that may go far in the coming year, when a new Congress meets.

To head the anti-inflation program, President Roosevelt cajoled James F. Byrnes into leaving his post as Supreme Court justice and into taking the new job of Director of Economic Stabilization. Mr. Byrnes was established in an office in the east wing of the White House, where Admiral Leahy and Harry Hopkins, the President's confidential adviser on the supply needs of the Allied governments, also have offices. He coordinates the scheme for price-control, through the Office of Price Administra-

Labor Board. Requests for increases in wages and salaries for workers in American private business and industry were ordered to cleared through Mr. Byrnes. Wages of farm workers getting less than $2,500 a year-which affects practically all farm labor in the United States—were put in the province of Claude Wickard, the Secretary of Agriculture, who in. December was named war food adminis-

Congress imposed a further curb on the economic freedom of the American people in October by passing the new | revenue bill, which drew into the income tax net millions of low-income persons who in the past knew income tax laws only as something other persons paid. The bill is designed to raise $8,525,000,000 this coming year, or less than one-tenth of the sum of money appropriated by Congress during 1942. As part of the scheme for protecting the United States against the ravages of inflation, the tax bill limits to $25,000 the net on salary that any one person may retain after his taxes are paid. President Roosevelt in December requested that a similar ceiling be placed on incomes derived from investment and other sources. The war news took on a tinge of brightness in October. In the Solomons the Navy scored a major victory over the Japanese which halted their intense efforts to reinforce the Japs on Guadalcanal in order to drive the Americans from that island. Gen. MacArthur returned to the front, this time in New Guinea, and began a long drive from Port Moresby, on the southern shore of Papua, toward the Jap emplacements of Gona and Buna, across the Owen Stanley Range of mountains on the Papuan north shore. November was the greatest month of the year for the United States from the military standpoint. American and British troops, convoyed by the British Navy from England and the American Navy from the United States, converged, on the night of November 8, on the French North African countries of Morocco and Algeria. After brief fighting, the regions fell to the Allies, who enlisted the support of Admiral Jean Francois Darlan, the chief of the army and navy in the Vichy government. He chanced to be in the city of Algiers when the Allies arrived there, and Lt. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the commander of the European theater for the American Army and the command of the Allied armies in North Africa, arranged for the cooperation which led to his death.

The invasion of North Africa had a series of political consequences which probably will influence our future relations with France until the country is put back on its feet after the peace. First, the invasion was the signal for the Vichy government of Marshal Petain and Pierre Laval to break off relations with the United States after a pretense of neutrality for two years and four tion, and wage-control, through the War | months. Second, the severance of relations was the signal > for Hitler and Mussolini to decree the occupation of all France, down to the Mediterranean shore across the sea from the Allied position in North Africa. Third, the arrangement with Darlan prompted a controversy about the wisdom of dealing with a man who had been denounced repeately in the United States and Great Britain as & collaborationist with the Axis. President Roosevelt vigorously supported Gen. Eisenhower's arrangements in a public ment made at his press conference.

ADMIRAL DARLAN. Dies by assassin's bullet.

In November, the Jap Navy made a new try to reinforce Guadalcanal, and once more the Japs suffered disaster. "Kill Japs. Kill Japs. Kill more Japs. Sink ships. Sink ships. Sink more ships." That was the clear direction given to the American men of the sea in November in the Solomons by the officer in charge of the war in that area, tough old Vice Admiral William F. Halsey, jr. They carried out his order, and Secretary of the Navy Knox in December commented that the Japs had lost so many ships in their vain tries around the Solomons that their overseas operations were severly hampered. In November, the British 8th Army in Egypt, supplied heavily during the summer from the United States and fortified by American Army Air Forces, struck at Marshal Rommel and drove him back from El Alamein out of Egypt and into

In November the people of the country disclosed an irksome restlessness about the Government's course in the war. At the polls the United States elected a new House of Representatives and voted on one-third of the Senate. The trend ran away from the Democrats, who, in the new Congress that meets January 6, 1943, will have a bare majority. The Republicans gained 44 seats in the House and 9 in the Senate; the (See REVIEW, Page B-3.)

Make It Self-Supporting

Washington's program for day care of children of war-working mothers has been long in the making. | during the forty tremendous months It required more legislation and still requires settlement of more administrative details, without much guidance in the way of Federal policy, than comparable programs in other | future." cities. Now that necessary statutory approval has been won, it is encouraging to note that only a few steps remain to make it effective.

The Commissioners will sponsor the program in the District, but at least four agencies are involved in its administration—the public schools, the newly formed Recreation Department, the Board of Public Welfare and the District Health Department. Undoubtedly the Federal Works Agency, which will allot most of the funds, will want to deal with one directing head. This detail, and others in connection with a rather involved administrative process, should be settled within a short time and the application for funds sent political logic that its persistence as along.

Those who have been working to formulate a program believe that it can be made partially self-supporting through fees for day care and other services, based on ability to pay. It will be in the interests of the program to make it pay its own way, after sufficient trial. For the taxpayers are correctly skeptical of | metaphysical link of the crown, the those undertakings which, beginning on a modest scale to meet some demonstrable demand, soon become the source of another drain on public funds while reaching only a restricted class of special beneficiaries.

The local program, unless it is administered carefully and with the thought of making it pay for itself, is peculiarly susceptible of becoming a heavy public expense. It is perfectly sound to argue now that the children of war-working mothers require special care and that the employing Government, in need of workers, derives a certain direct benefit. But once this need is met there will be pressure to extend the service to others. The employed mother is better able to afford special care for her children than the unemployed mother. If the program is regarded as a part of the war effort and not as a relief project it should be made substantially selfsupporting and extended only as that principle will permit.

Malta Relieved

Malta, the Mediterranean fortress of Britain, has been under siege since Italy entered the war, June 10, 1940. It has been systematically bombed by Axis planes "coming over" several estimated that the number of raids earth ever has been so thoroughly, scientifically strafed.

But the enemy did not take into account the nature of the island nor the character of its residents. Malta is solid rock, and more than 7,500 underground shelters have been made available to the population. Some of the "hide-outs" are 100 feet deep, others are caves dating back to remote antiquity. The whole area of the colony, including several dependent islets, is approximately twice the size of the District of Columbia. For their water supply the Maltese citizens rely upon springs. Valletta, the capital, and all the smaller villages are constructed of stone. The entire community long ago learned to live, to work, even to prosper, in the face of constant and A vast coalition, the United Nations, unremitting danger.

There is nothing new about such an ordeal, however. Malta has been inhabited since before the dawn of civilization. Phoenicians, Carthaginians and Romans held it prior to 62 A.D., when St. Paul was shipwrecked on the coast near a point still identified with his name. The Vandals overran the island in 534, the Arabs in 870, the Normans from Sicily in 1090. It was ruled successively by the houses of Hohenstaufen, Anjou and Aragon. In 1530 Charles V gave it to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John, who held it courageously against the Turks in 1551 and 1560. Napoleon Bonaparte, on his way to Egypt, took possession of it in 1798; and the English received its surrender in 1800 and were confirmed In their title by the Treaty of Paris in 1814. The traditions of living the seller with a profit. But it may generations of the Maltese thus are | be doubted that this would afford essentially military and naval. Many any genuine relief to the consumer, pride in their legends of heroism distinguishes all classes.

The present, as it happens, repeats the past. An Associated Press reporter on board a British warship at Valletta, wrote on November 29: "For the first time in nearly two years a squadron * * * has sailed the entire Eastern Mediterranean into this picturesque harbor of wrack and ruin without a shot being fired or movements, each seeking bigger and an enemy air or sea craft even being sighted. That the thin and grim, but gallant, Maltese knew our arrival marked a great turn in their history and final relief from siege was shown clearly as they cheered from atop high battlements and waved banners from windows of shattered buildings."

In such a story is there not evidence that modern men and women, sustained by an enduring faith in righteousness and justice, are worthy of the bravest of their sires?

The Empire at Yuletide

The Christmas message broadcast by King George VI to his subjects throughout the globe breathes the same note of restrained hopefulness and confidence in the future that has been evident in recent utterances by Britain's spokesmen, official and unofficial alike. Pointing out that the war's ordeal had shown "the value of what we might have lost," the King declared that "the lessons learned behind us have taught us how to work together for victory, and we must see to it that we keep together after the war to build a worthier

This emphasis on the integral survival, not only of Britain but of the world-wide association of diverse lands and peoples centered in the British Isles, parallels Prime Minister Winston Churchill's recent assertion that he did not become Premier "to preside over the liquidation of the empire." And the extraordinary response, in large part voluntary, of the empire's most remote sections, indicates a common purpose and aspiration that cannot but tend to weld them together in the post-war future as well as in the wartime present.

The amazing fabric usually called the British Empire has so long defied an essential unity is unique in history. The very term has become a misnomer, in the strictly technical sense, because the self-governing dominions have become entirely independent of the motherland since the Statute of Westminster, passed a decade ago. The only tangible bond uniting them today is the almost reigning monarch in Britain being simultaneously King of Australia, Canada, South Africa and New Zealand. Those dominions, together with Britain itself, constitute the British Commonwealth of Nations, a wholly voluntary association which could be legally terminated at any time. To them, perhaps technically, should be added Eire, a wholly anomalous case, since Eire is neutral in the present war and actually maintains diplomatic relations with the Axis enemies of the empire.

The commonwealth of nations, however, is merely one phase of the "British Empire." There are two other phases, the colonies and India. The colonies range in size and population from huge West African Nigeria to tiny islands and purely military or naval bases like Aden and Gibraltar. Many of them, like the British West Indies, have varying degrees of local self-government, but they are still under the authority of the British Parliament and are thus organically connected with the homeland. India's status is admittedly transitional, though Britain's paramount sovereignty is maintained against growing native opposition. The chief problem of India's political future is not so much British reluctance to grant India full dominion times a day. A few weeks ago it was status, or even independence, as it is internal divisions among the vast had passed 3.000. No other spot on population, deeply divided by gulfs of religion, race and outlook. India undoubtedly is the thorniest problem with which British statesmanship is > Nevertheless, the basic self-confidence of Britons everywhere in their future seems to be greater today than at any time since the start of the war. Materially, this is the leanest wartime Christmas of the four which the Tight Little Island has endured. Reserves have been mostly consumed, and further belttightening is the order of the day. But spiritually the mood is exalted. Britain no longer fights alone, as it did for nearly two terrible years of gruelling reverses. Two great powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, now fight in the same cause. is on the offensive on every battlefront throughout the globe. The omens are bright. And the spirit of Britain reflects the change.

End of Subsidy Plan

Although not an unmixed blessing, the reported decision to abandon the plan for general use of Federal subsidies to maintain price ceilings should meet with public approval.

In theory, the subsidy plan, superficially, is an effective means of holding down prices which consumers must pay. But, in practice, it certainly would prove enormously expensive, and probably would create more problems than it would solve.

It would not be difficult, for instance, to freeze the price of shoes at a low level if the payment by the Government of a subsidy provided taxes or an increased debt. Ultimately, it seems, the net result would be the same. Other considerations militating against the subsidy plan are the fact that it would tend to reward the inefficient producer, who fails to keep his production costs down, and the strong probability that it would set in motion a chain of political pressure better subsidies for its own constituents.

At the other end of the scale is the unquestioned fact that, without subsidies, it is going to be necessary to raise a good many of the ceiling prices which have been established. And this, in turn, will boost living costs and lend added vigor to demands for additional wage increases. Once this process gets under way it is going to be difficult to check, and the people might as well face the fact that the more palatable price control policy which is in store for the future is going to force an upward revision of their household budgets. And it also ought to be recognized that this softening process has explosive possibilities. Leon Henderson may have been too "hard boiled," as his critics charged, but an attempt by his successor to please everybody can hardly fail to end in disaster for all.

A Serious Problem Still

The Office of Price Administration is very wisely modifying some of the fuel oil rationing program restrictions to help pull retail dealers, and their customers, through what has been an unexpectedly difficult period. Oil prices are being increased slightly, in view of increased expense to the dealers, and coupon validation periods set forward to permit delivery of more oil at one time. In some States where the cold has been severe, ration allowances have been increased. Beneficial results should follow Mr. Henderson's appointment of Renah F. Camalier to serve as a sort of liaison officer between the dealers and the rationing authorities in ironing out confusing situations in the local program.

But if the people who depend on oil for heat erroneously interpret these modifications as meaning a greater supply of oil, they will make a grievous mistake. Mr. Henderson very properly warned against such an interpretation. "It should be thoroughly understood, and I cannot emphasize this point too much, that the Government cannot heat

The heating of homes depends, of course, upon the individual consumer's ability to make the relatively small and strictly limited supply of fuel last through the cold days that lie ahead. Nothing has happened to increase this supply. What has happened has been the OPA's demonstration of a real desire to work with the dealers, upon whom the home owners depend, in seeing that the rationing machinery functions as smoothly as possible. It will not work, of course, without causing annoyance and real discomfort to many people. But it can be improved.

There is room for improvement, certainly, in facilitating the citizen's contact with his ration board in obtaining oil to meet a demonstrable emergency. But more will have to be done than has been done in simplifying such appeals. It is not enough to tell citizens faced with an emergency that they can get help from their ration boards. Getting such help often involves long periods of standing in line and filling out additional and complicated application blanks, together with supporting evidence as to need. The ration boards are charged with many things other than fuel oil, and most of them are behind in their work. In emergencies, the appeal to the boards should be as quick and as simple as it can be made.

Of all the rationing programs, fuel beset with more actual danger of suffering than any other. For this reason, its successful administration requires quick willingness by the authorities to change those provisions which are shown in practice to be unnecessary or unwise, and intelligent co-operation by the consumers to save themselves from every avoidable discomfort. The program has to work, for there is no alternative. But it should be made to work with less confusion than in the past.

Biggest

There was some discussion at a recent press conference of another name for the Pentagon Building. It is being called all sorts of things these days by the inmates consigned to labor within its fabulous labyrinth. But such terms lack a certain dignity for formal use. Superlative adjectives descriptive of size and quantity are proudly used in the War Department's own references to its handiwork and perhaps one of these may lend itself some day to coinage of another name. Biggest office building in the world. Longest coffee bar-about a tenth of a mile-in the world. One of the largest consumers of coffee in the world. Longest soda bar in the world. Seven hundred janitors and charwomen, 200 rest rooms, 650 water founts, 1,500 electric clocks, 40,000 inhabitants soon to tread its sixteen and a half miles of corridors. Perhaps a few syllables might be added and the name changed to Pentagonohedron Building. That would be geometrically descriptive, characteristically confusing and, in keeping with other attributes of the structure, undoubtedly the longest name in the world for an office building.

Shortages Compel Rigid Rationing

By Owen L. Scott.

Beit-tightening time for civilians really is beginning to come into sight. This is not another false alarm, not another warning far ahead of the event. Officials for more than a year have been predicting that the public would be forced to revise its living standard downward. Instead, the Nation has enjoved more of almost everything during one full year of war. The result is that predictions are going at a heavy discount and people are refusing to take seriously the developing shortages that this time are real. During a large part of 1942, civilian industry went ahead with production of most peacetime products. Inventories of raw materials in the hands of these industries were large. The tendency of War Production Board officials was to talk about curtailment but actually to do relatively little about it. As a result, store inventories of goods continued to rise until September when they were the largest on record.

At the same time farmers were producing bumper crops of food. Military demand for that food was rising but not as rapidly as it now is rising. Civilian demand, too, was rising, but not as rapidly as it is to rise.

Two forces now are at work which soon will jolt people generally into an understanding of what real shortages can mean.

One of those forces is a rapid increase in demand both from military services and from former low-income civilian groups. The other of the forces is a rapid decline in civilian supply due in part to the rising military demand and in part to the actual reduction in the volume of goods being produced. The War Production Board is engaged in drastic curtailment of the volume of raw materials available for civilian industry. At the same time, demands of the Army and of war industry for men is cutting deeply into the working forces of civilian industry.

As a consequence two developments are inevitable. One is a definite decline in living standards as 1943 moves along. This decline will hit the middle class in particular, and it will be hitting very hard by the end of 1943. The second development is to be a wide expansion of rationing programs. Only by rationing can the Government assure that declining supplies of vital goods are divided evenly among the people. Rationing, however, tends to cut down on the supply of goods for the middle and upper income classes and to increase the supply for those who had been in the lower income group

The volume of money in the hands of factory workers is becoming stupendous. During 1942, an important part of the increase in individual income has gone to pay off installment debt and to buy essentials that still were in stock on store shelves. During 1943, workers are to have a vast amount of income that will be seeking out goods in competition with the middle class group whose income actually is being cut by rising taxes and rising living costs.

Competition for goods in 1943 is likely to be rather concentrated in the field of foodstuffs.

People in some sections of the country already have discovered that bacon and beef are short. That shortage in the past has been due, in important part, to the effect of price ceilings. During 1943 the shortage will grow and will be due to rising military demands and to rising demands from former low-income groups whose consumption of meat in past years has not been so large. Food Administrator Claude Wickard already is warning that rations are going to be under 2 pounds of meat a week per person instead of the 212 pounds estimated earlier.

In dairy products the shortages will be even more severe. Butter almost certainly will become a scarce item that will have to be rationed very strictly Fluid milk is due for rationing. The same may be true for cheese. Of dairy products, butter is to be most severely

Shortages of canned goods are inevitable. Orders now issued will result in a cut of approximately 50 per cent in the pack of many products sold in oil is the most complicated and is cans. This includes fruits, vegetables, soups and meats. An exception is made in the case of most baby foods. The supply of fresh fruits and vegetables is likely to be restricted during 1943 as a result of labor and transportation short-

And so it goes. Clothing should be rather abundant during the new year because so many men will be in service Shoes are heavily stocked. Even so, there will be a downward trend in the supply of cotton and wcolen goods

In the light of this situation there is little choice except that of rationing. The alternative to rationing is a scramble on the part of people with almost unlimited supplies of money, all ready to bid against one another for a declining supply of goods. It is on that sort of a base that wild inflation always rests The revolutionary forces that are touched off by a wild inflation are so dangerous that Government will be forced to avoid them by control over distribution of

The American public obviously does not like rationing. Politicians blame the near overturn of Congress in the last election to voter resentment over what the individual voter appears to have felt was an unnecessary or a bungled use of restrictions. That resentment actually may trace to the failure of responsible officials to give a simple and convincing explanation of the reasons why it was necessary to cut down on tire use and to curb, through rations, the use of gasoline, fuel oil and other commodities.

Instead, officials delayed the convincing explanations and allowed the public to go ahead cutting into the available surplus of many types of unrationed goods. The policies actually followed have encouraged hoarding. They have precipitated a situation in which the 1943 rations probably will be much less generous than might have been the case if those responsible had started to ration at a time when inventories were large.

It is a notable fact, however, that not until July 1, 1943, will this country have in effect a formal plan for rationing raw materials to industry. All through the n and during one the community but an honorable have to be offset either in higher added the Automobilicus Americanus. | pended upon hit-or-miss methods for hand.

THE ULTIMATE RECKONING

By the Right Rev. JAMES E. FREEMAN, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

There come times in life when we turn | to come, unless we have plan and order away from the absorbing concerns that occupy us and think more seriously about the real meaning of life itself; its purpose and its ultimate end. Frequently, it takes something in the nature of a crisis, a serious misfortune, to "stab us broad awake." Under normal conditions we drift along in the stream of life, with little effort at self-appraisement or indeed as to life's tendencies and its ultimate aims and purposes. We are too busy, too much occupied to stop and reflect upon what must be the inevitable consequences of a given course. This is true of nations, as it is of individuals.

A CONTRACTOR CONTRACTOR OF CON

Every year about this time it is the common practice of all commercial enterprises to make a careful survey of the records of the past year. The books are opened, the balances drawn indicating profit or loss for the year that is past From such a study, careful plans are made, mistakes checked and frequently the organization changed and a new course prescribed for the new year that lies ahead. Such a reckoning is indispensable to efficient management.

Far more important than this is a just and fair appraisal of life itself. Such an appraisal must disclose either progress or decline. Never before in this generation has such self-appraisal been more indispensable and necessary. We are living in a different kind of a world. We are projected ourselves into a new year, the issues of which are as yet wholly obscured. We have reached the stage where we must make our reckonings from day to day. Our hearts and minds are not only confused, but deeply concerned by what may be impending. Surely such a time calls for a serious reckoning.

It is a dangerous thing to pursue our course on "dead reckoning." We believe we have been made to see, this past year. that we cannot live satisfactorily, or with reasonable expectation of better things in our life. As we study the biographies of men and women who have attained their objectives, we are made to realize that, early in life they set the course they proposed to follow. Despite every hindrance, and frequently despite physical incapacities, they pressed on until ultimately they attained their goal. They avoided detours, they preferred if necesary to press on through ways that were encumbered by obstacles. As a matter of fact they made obstacles the means by which they came to greater strength and purpose.

In planning for a new and uncertain year that lies ahead, we must reckon with God's place in the scheme of life. The human element has proved weak and insufficient; it has failed us in the time of testing and crisis. There is a word in Scripture that might stand at the head of the new diaries we open on January 1. It is a word of assurance greatly needed in times like these "Kept by the power of God, through faith." To put reliance and trust in God's keeping power is a sustaining and comfortable help to us as we enter upon pathways that are confused and difficult to see at the present time. It is literally true that "we do not know what a day may bring forth"; hence to repose all confidence in God's keeping power, and to hold fast by our Christian faith, is to find ourselves ready for any emergency that may occur. The words of Newman's great hymn are pertinent: "I was not ever thus, nor prayed that

Thou

Shouldst lead me on: I loved to choose and see my path; but now

Lead Thou me on!

I loved the garish day; and; spite of fears. Pride ruled my will; remember not past years."

The closing session of the Seventyseventh Congress, recently adjourned sine die, was considered by many persons to be the most trying session in recent years. There was a long tense period of historically important legislation affecting the fate of the world. But, evidently Congressmen thrive on tension and hectic legislative excitement, for the session just closed stands out with a record valetudinarianism. During the past year there were only three deaths in the House-the best record in many years-Representatives Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, "whip" of the House; Frank Buck, California, active member of the Ways and Means Committee, and Philip A. Pygmies of the Congo Forest

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Of all the primitive tribes in the world probably the most uncivilized are the pygmies of the Belgian Congo. Forest dwellers of the first order, nomadic in character, and apparently immune to the ways of civilization, these unusual and often unpredictable people are not found in all parts of that vast and distant empire of Belgium. Although rather widely scattered, most of them are to be found almost on the Equator.

The pygmies of the Belgian Congo have recently been publicized as a part of the primitive mass of natives of that great land which seems destined to play animportant role in the economic reconstruction of the world. The area is an enormous storehouse of raw materials. which makes it all the more important, especially to the have-not nations.

There is widespread belief in the United States, and even in some parts of Europe and elsewhere, that all the black people in the forests of the Belgian Congo are pygmies. This, however, is not the case, for there is a great difference between the Congo natives and its pygmies, who are, so far as known, also natives but not so regarded.

The pygmies of the Congo have different features from those of the natives and do not intermarry with them, mainly because the pygmies are despised and considered an inferior race by the natives. who regard them not as humans but as animals. They are also much fewer in number than the some 12,000,000 other blacks which inhabit the Congo's 918,000 square miles.

The history of the pygmies is an indefinite chapter in the chronicle of mankind. At one time they were slaves to the chiefs of villages and did their hunting in exchange for vegetables from the gardens of their chiefs.

These small people are probably one of the most uncivilized in the world, and not one member of the race has yet been seen who would stay at a white mission station long enough to be taught how to read. On one occasion a pygmy promised to stay and work at a hospital the remainder of his life in appreciation for having been healed of ulcers. He professed to be a Christian and attended church, faithfully worked for a few weeks and then disappeared. When seen again he explained that the call of the forest and his dislike for civilization caused him to break his promise. At one time it was difficult to find any pygmies, for they would disappear into the thick forest as soon as they saw a white person. And even now, many people who have lived in the Belgian Congo for a number of years never have seen a member of this unusual race because of their love for fledgeling Congressman cannot but feel | the wilds and displeasure to live near other people

Camps of the pygmies are hidden in the jungles, and remain in one place of the most characteristic of all the only a short time, for these people are statues contributed by the several States. ardent hunters and persistent travelers. They never plant gardens since they exchange meat with the natives for beans, bananas and corn. A camp is usually located in a clearing of the forest and consists of 10 to 15 huts, not higher than 5 feet. These huts are made of sticks and leaves and not plastered with mud like those of the natives, for they are merely dwelling places for only a few weeks. When the banana peel pile behind a hut gets too large, and everything else into great disorder, the occupants are ready to move to another place. The forest is big, so why worry? That is their carefree attitude toward

> These people do not have many earthly possessions. If they wear any clothing at all, it is a monkey or goat skin or a piece of pounded tree bark, which they tie around themselves or which is sometimes tied around their babies. Some make sleeping mais out of grass, others using only a large banana leaf for a bed, and since they make fires in their huts no covering is needed. Cooking pots are made of clay and hardened in the fire, and to keep the steam in the pot, it is neatly covered with a banana leaf. Lovers of music, the pygmies make their own musical instruments, as well as their pipes, for they also enjoy smoking, But their tobacco is a quality that makes them dull and lazy.

> It often happens that when visitors approach a camp they will find only a few old women and children to greet them, the men having gone hunting. Or again all the inhabitants of the camp may be at home and turn out en masse to greet visitors. The pygmies know their friends and espy at once the jar of salt which it is customary to carry to a pygmy camp. Grinning, they line up and hold out their hands for a portion, which they lick with great relish. Some > try to cheat and get two helpings. These pygmies, like other people, have their entertainers. For instance, one of their number. Piccolo by professional name, is a widely known clown who lives from gifts received for making people laugh. Traveling from village to village, he gives shows all by himself, demonstrating among other things how a monkey eats an onion or a banana and how an elephant walks uphill. He has a monkey skin draped gracefully around his shoulders, a feather and leopard tail in his cap and an empty tin can tied around his neck with a piece of grass. The only way to get rid of him is to give him something, such as an old tin can, some salt, a piece of cloth or

These people are not always peaceful among themselves. On one occasion, for instance, there was war among them, and one of their number came to a mission seeking help. Some pygmies had been injured by poisoned arrows and were dying. The trouble started because a girl had been stolen, but it was stopped as soon as white people arrived.

Mission work among the Congo pygmies is a difficult and often trying task. A missionary packs his cot, a tent and a large supply of food and lives in one of their camps for two weeks. Feeding the pygmies is necessary so that they will remain in camp and not go hunting. The missionary also takes along musical instruments and has classes several times a day. He gives a reward, usually a pair of shorts or a shirt, to those who, after two weeks, know a few verses and a chorus. When a dressed pygmy is seen in the forest, it is known that he has completed a course in jungle Bible school.

Slaying of Darlan Brings Violent End to Controversy Over Place in Allied Setup

America's Fifty-Fourth Week of War (172d Week of World War II)

By Blair Bolles.

In a war where millions have died, the big news last week was the death of one

Admiral Jean Francois Darlan, chief of the armed forces of the phantom government of Vichy and the representative, recognized by the Allies, of French interests and force in North Africa, was shot fatally on Thursday by a young man in the city of Algiers. A bullet pierced his lung. Thus a violent end came to a problem in politics for the United Nations which in time might have become too hot to handle. The agreement made in November with Darlan for co-operation in the aims of the Allies has provoked many protests in Russia, Great Britain and the United States from those who thought it dangerous for any anti-Axis country to employ a man who, as did Darlan, formerly collaborated with the Axis. Just or unjust, the controversy existed, although the tangible benefits of Allied collaboration with Darlan included a respected "cease firing" order to French forces in Algeria and Morocco, the union of French West Africa and its important port of Dakar with the Allied cause and the prospect of a legitimate arrangement whereby the United Nations would get the use of French ships in the British harbor of Alexandria, Egypt. Perhaps Darlan's death will?

raise new and more difficult problems, but perhaps not. In Africa now the concern of the Allies is, above all, military—the elimination of Gen. Erwin Rommel's Afrika Korps and the conquest of Tunisia. The need for Darlan is ever. Decrées, statements, arrangements and manipulations by all the Frenchmen in the world could not hasten the accomplishment of those two ends. Two French military forces are fighting for the United Nations in Africa. That is the best assistance Frenchmen can give

The progress of war in Africa and on other fronts was slow. Mud makes impossible the development of the battle in Northern Tunisia, where the opposing forces are waiting for the day when they can pitch in and fight. The 8th British Army continued its pursuit across Libya after the Rommel forces, which have rot yet taken a stand. On the Mediterranean Sea the British Navy was busy sinking ships sent by the Axis to reinforce and supply Tu-

Sir Archibald Are Bombed Wavell headed from India along Burma's Bay of Bengal shore toward Akvab, while Allied air forces began to pound at points held by the Japs since last spring. They bombed Rangoon, Lashio and Akvab in Burma, and Sebang on the northern tip of Sumatra. On an older battlefield where the Allies are trying to unroll the Jap scroll of successes-Papua-the men under Gen Louglas MacArthur fought against stiff opposition around Buna and their gains were measured in yards. American Navy planes again bombed Munda Field on the island of New Georgia in the Solomons. The Japs are trying to establish an air base in New Georgia from which to assault the American positions on the island of Guadalcanal, 150 miles away. In Russia the Red Armies continued advances. Information for the public from storm in Africa. This poverty of news is one of the most remarkable features about the North African campaign. The news of the assassination of Darlan was made public with only the vaguest of descriptions of his killer, whose identity was kept a secret. The greatest military operation in Africa promises to be the Tunisian war, where the 1st Army of Gen. K. A. N. Anderson is installed around Medjez el Bab. What part are American ground forces to play in this Army Air Force is leagued with the RAF to bomb the Axis Tunisian positions, especially in Bizerte and Tunis, and the airmen's feats are made known, by Montgomery's 8th Army. The British and American sea forces are seeking to reopen the Mediterranean as an Allied roadway from Gibraltar to Suez. The Admiralty in London on Wednesday disclosed progress in this aim by its announcement that large reinforcements of war materials and supplies had been landed at Malta "without major interference from the enemy." Time was not long ago when to reach Malta United Nations ships had to go through a terrible fire from the Germans and

The Allied navies, with the co-operation of the air forces, attacked Axis ships crossing the Mediterranean with aid for Tunisia and Rommel and sank or damaged eight merchant vessels and two fighting ships. So seriously determined are the Nazis to make a fight for Tunisia that reports reached London during the week they were moving Axis forces from Tripoli-where they could assist Rommel-and from Russia to Tunisia, where Gen. Walther Nehring is in command. The Axis plans for Africa were developing according to decisions made the previous week in a conference between Adolf Hitler and Count Ciano, the Italian Foreign Minister.

The delay in opening the major fighting in Tunisia is advantageous for the United Nations in at least one respect. It enables the British and the Americans to develop air bases in Tunisia. A spokesman at the headquarters of Lt. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, commander in North Africa said Allied warnlanes nisian campaign, but they still labor under handicaps such as a muddy airdrome and a shortage of good advance fields. Tunisia today is mud, no fit place for a fight.

The first significant offensive action in Tunisia in two weeks was recorded Friday, when Allied troops drove the Germans from a height dominating the important road junction at Medjez el Bab of French troops responsible to Gen. Henri Giraud-who may become Darlan's successor as chief French soldier in nisia toward the town of Sousse, which is in Axis hands. Bizerte and Tunis are

The arrested tempo of military operations in North Africa strengthens the abundant evidence that Germany still is far from beaten. The Nazi grip on Tunisia, and with it control of the nar-

It will be stronger if Marshal Rommel who must be given credit for extricating much of his army from disaster, establishes himself safely behind the wellfortified Mareth Line. A successful attack on Sicily might really isolate the German expeditionary force in Tunisia and further disintegrate Italian morale. The close of 1942 marks more than an | fication of the effects of war on the home exchange of greetings and a wholesale replacement of calendars and engagement books. In many ways the close of the old year coincides with stern evidence that 1943 will bring fundamental changes in the American way of life. Those changes will come with less social and mental dislocation, and will, therefore, cause less bewildered resentment, if their inevitability is frankly accepted in advance.

There is no certainty, in the first place, that the year about to dawn will bring decisive victory to the banners of the United Nations.

It is encouraging that recent months have seen a fundamental improvement whereby the military initiative in Russia, in Africa and in the Far East has everywhere been lost by the Axis. This would seem to portend eventual triumph. But the quality of resistance encountered war Germany alone fought desperately against a coalition more powerful than the United Nations for four years after the blitzkrieg was definitely checked in

As was the case a year ago, the Russian counterattacks are heartening. The Soviet regime continues to stir almost incredulous enthusiasm by the ability of the Communist system to produce and organize under tremendous handicaps sacrifice of its people. But the extent to which the Germans are being hurled back and the extent to which, as last ening their lines in order to hold more easily the gains regarded by Berlin as essential, remains uncertain is even more indefinite. The attack launched on Guadalcanal last August has not yet ousted the Japanese from this single outlying island, while in New Guinea enemy resistance is scarcely less tenacious. The attack on North Africa did more than reveal the major strategy of the war for the ensuing months. It also introduced the United States to the grim

And while a year ago the Axis appeared to be well on the road to victory, the leaders of Germany, Italy and Japan have begun to experience grave doubts about the final outcome. For the time being their armies and the civilian population-which are forbidden to read or hear anything but official propagandahave not realized the abyss which is confronting them. In Japan it makes little difference whether the people know what is going on; they are so fanaticized that there is no likelihood of an attempt to come to terms with their opponents.

before Hitler took over the reins of gov-shaking off the shackles of the treaty. When Hitler first appeared in German politics his ideas were not far removed from those of Lenin. The Russians in Moscow, however, never trusted this Austrian upstart but believed that he would become so drunk with power that he would defeat his own ends and when he failed conclusively the German people -desperate again-would turn permanently toward Russia.

runoff election of 1928, Hitler obtained a large vote because the Communists following specific orders, voted for him. In the next Reichstag election the Communists again topped 5,000,000 votes. Their main game was to destroy the power of the poorly led German Socialists and in this they succeeded fully. The Comintern-that branch of the Communist Party which deals with the spreading of the dectrine in foreign countries-was never worried about Hitler. Its leaders realized that Hitler could do untold harm to humanity but that it would be the old capitalist-imperialist order which ultimately would suffer while the Communists throughout the world would reap the harvest of his de-

He has drained the whole of Europe of its wealth and has brought has outdone Attila and Genghis Kahn in crimes and cruelties. But in so doing he has not spared his own country. The tional surrender with an effective occupation of the Reich's entire territory will be the only acceptable offer they can

In the early stages of the war the Nazi propaganda machine headed by Joseph Goebbels attempted to incite the German people against the British and the Americans. To the average German we were pictured as the representatives of the old order from which the Germans had suffered the humiliations and inequities of the Versailles treaty. Hence while the Junkers who are still at the top of the Wehrmacht might attempt to apgovernments they are actually too much discredited within the Reich to give them much chance of making real progress toward a peace settlement. On the other hand, the millions of Germans who were Communists before once more toward Russia as the only hope of helping the Reich survive the with imperialism as represented by the Gustav Stresemann-is out of the quesclean slate, in which all ties of the past must be dissolved, is their only possible salvation. And while many civilians such as factory workers and war employes are thinking in such terms, the fact should not be overlooked that in the army also there are men up to the rank of captain or major who share this feeling that a

While the generals and field marshals are leading them to victories they are obedient and devoted soldiers, but they will be first to demand that Germany turn away from its present policies when defeats become more frequent and ultimate victory further and further away,

Military and diplomatic observers who have been expecting the Germans to turn to the United States and Britain for the conventional armistice are beginning to think differently now. The famous saying of Louis XV of France "apres moi le deluge" ("let deluge follow me") may now be applied by those young men who are watching Hitler's waning

The speech which Premier Joseph Stalin made on November 7 placing himself on record as saying that Russia does not seek the destruction of Germany or even of the German armies but of the Hitlerites alone, is said to have created a deep impression in the Reich and to have given new courage to those who have always believed in the doctrines of Lenin.

According to reliable neutral sources in Europe which are watching with intense interest the developments on the Russian front; the Germans both at war and at home much prefer to be defeated by the Soviets than by the Americans and British. The Americans and British, they fear, would lend a receptive ear to the revengeful demands of the subjected Poles, Czechs and others in Hitlerdominated countries.

The widespread belief in some sections of Germany is that the Russians will be harsh, on Hitler and his immediate henchmen but not to the German people who would enthusiastically embrace Communist doctrines.

1. WESTERN PACIFIC—For most of 1942 this was a one-way war with Japan expanding steadily and the Allies giving ground: Manila, January 1: Singapore, February 15; Bataan, April 9; Corregidor, May 6; Burma, in May. Tokio felt Jimmy Doolittle's bombs April 18. United States Flying Tigers paced Chinese infantrymen who hastened enemy's planned withdrawal from Eastern China to bolster New Guinea and Solomon fronts.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-If the flow of supplies across the Pacific via India and the new Burma road to China permits, Allied bombers from Shangri-la may carry the war to Japan's mainland. Gen. Stilwell may march back into

2. SOLOMONS-NEW GUINEA - The Solomon Islands and part of New Guinea fell to Japs early in the year. Then the marines landed August 8 on Guadalcanal and Tulagi. On October 11-12 strong Jap naval units were driven from the Solomons; November 13-15, United States Navy smashed the Jap fleet there. Gen. POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Japs may lose their grasp on this area. Completion of Allied offensives may open a sea-airland drive north to the island stepping stone route to Philippines and Tokio.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-India may be assembly point for proposed invasion of Burma.

4. PEARL HARBOR - MIDWAY-The United States entered the war at Pearl Harbor, spent much of 1942 salvaging the wreckage of her Pacific Fleet. In the battle of Midway, beginning June 4, a Japanese invasion fleet was smashed.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Repaired and strengthened, these Pacific outposts will concentrate on pushing Allied sea and air units westward on the offensive.

5. ALASKA-Jap "diversionary" bombing of Dutch Harbor June 3 became an invasion June 12 of the Aleutian Islands. Six months later Japs still held the outermost islands. position was bolstered by the opening November 20 of the Alcan highway.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Heightened aerial and naval attacks supported by Alcan highway reinforcements, may blast Japs out of Aleutians, build two new Pacific air routes-supplies to Russia, bombers to Japan

NORTH AFRICA-The second front started here November 7 when United States troops invaded French Morocco and Algeria, won Darlan and Dakar by diplomacy, gained another victory in the cuttling of the French fleet at Toulon November 27. POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Allied leaders talk of Africa as a springboard for invasion of Europe. Possibilities are Greece, the Balkans, Yugoslavia, Italy, French coast, Spain. South Atlantic submarine attacks may decline with Allied use of Dakar's air and sea bases, shorter African supply lines.

8. CENTRAL AFRICA-United States troops landed in Liberia, the Gold Coast, Belgian Congo, built way stations for United States-Egypt and Russia and India air ferry, forwarded planes and guns that helped lick Rommel.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Important for Atlantic anti-submarine operations, this area probably will play a secondary role once North Africa is won.

9. CARIBBEAN SEA - Submarines moved south to the Caribbean and created havoc after finding the waters farther north too hot. Axis submarine shelled oil refinery at Arubo February 19, another needing supplies was driven off Costa Rica's shores in November.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Agreement with Martinique leaders following Darlan's switch in Africa should eliminate possibility of sub bases there.

10. EN ROUTE TO MURMANSK-American and Allied merchant seamen fought one of the war's bitterest yearround battles here against Axis submarines and dive bombers.

POSSIBILITIES FOR '43-Shipbuilding should help this battle too. Raids on Axis subplane bases on Norway's shores may clip convoy attacks.

11. RUSSIA-For 10 months of 1942 this was the first and only European land front. Russia early in 1942 drove the Nazis back, but gave ground before the Nazi spring and summer drives. Sevastopol fell July 1. Stalingrad withstood a five-month siege and December counterattacks trapped Nazi troops before the wrecked city, simultaneous with Red assaults on the Smolensk northern front.

December threw across the country a shadow of things to come. President Roosevelt appointed Herbert H. Lehman, Governor of New York, as director of foreign relief and rehabilitation operations. He was given an office in the State Department where he is busy planning the task of the United States involved in putting Europe and Asia back on their feet as the enemies withdraw.

The Republican National Committee met in St. Louis to elect a new chairman as successor to Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., and the national interest grew warm in the question of whom the Republicans would nominate to run for the presidency in 1944. More immediately, the issue for the Republicans revolves around the problem whether they should support a policy of isolationism or support the policy of keeping the United States in a leading and active role in world affairs. Wendell Willkie, the 1940 Republican candidate, favors internationalism. Noncommittally, the Republican named as their new chairman Harrison Spangler of Iowa, who, while his past history is more isolationist than otherwise, has been regarded as a sort of neutral moderator. Washington's Earliest Methodist Church

By John Clagett Proctor.

In the last few decades Sixteenth street, once a strictly residential thoroughfare, has become a street of apartment houses and churches-starting with the latter with old St. John's Episcopal Church at H street on the south and including many beautiful specimens of church architecture between that street and Kennedy street, several miles to the north, where stands the Sixth Presbyterian Church on ground once a part of the Brightwood race track and not far from the spot where once flowed the famous Crystal Spring and, nearby, the wood used as a picnic grounds by early city residents.

Nearly all of these Sixteenth street churches have sprung from small beginnings, and it would not be out of place, in some cases, to refer to their early places of worship as mere shacks. But that, of course, was many years ago, when Washington was only a Capital in embryo and a City of Magnificent Distances, then a very appropriate name, indeed, if we consider the attractive landscape of the District when it was still quite a village, with a large number of streams coursing through it. and with acres upon acres of virgin timber standing where are now fine residences and skyscrapers.

And so it was at this period that Methodism began to get a strong hold in the Federal Capital, after having existed in Georgetown as early as 1772, where it was introduced by Robert Williams, and its first church was built there during the pastorate of John Chalmers and William Pishop, on Montgomery street, now Twenty-eighth street.

The original deed to this property, dated March 22, 1800, was from Anthony Holmead to Llevd Beall, Richard Parrott and others as trustees. The church erected about this time was replaced about 1820 by a more substantial building, which in time became a public school.

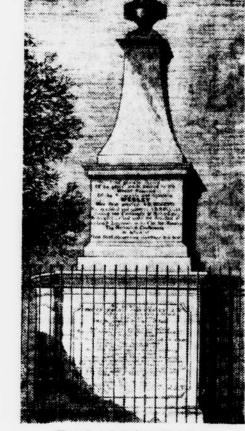

First M. E. Church

The first Methodist Episcopal Church, established east of Rock Creek and known as Ebenezer M. E. Church, held its meetings in the old Southeast section, once known as Carrollsburg, near Greenleaf Point, as early as 1802. The building, in which the first services were held, is said to have been located at the intersection of South Capitol and N streets, and was one of the so-called "Twenty Buildings," begun in 1796, but never completed. From here, the congregation moved to a small frame building on New Jersey avenue near D street S.E., some time subsequent to May, 1807, at which date its occupant, Christ Episcopal Church, evidently surrendered

This early church home had previously served as Daniel Carroll's tobacco barn. and in a pinch seems to have served for other than farm and religious purposes, and so we find that some time in June, 1800, Federal Lodge, No. 15 (now No. 1), F. A. A. M. held here its annual observance of Et John's day

In addition to the purposes mentioned the old tobacco barn is also said to have served as a schoolhouse. However, it was for church purposes that small windows were placed in the sides. of the building, far from the ground Which were protected by solid shutters.

After it ceased to be used as a church, the tobacco house became a carpenter's shop conducted by James and Electius Middleton, and, according to Rev. W. M. Ferguson, "it stood until 1817, when it was destroyed by fire through an accident occurring while a workman was boiling glue. Chambers, Leonard Mackall, John Eliason and Jacob Hoffman. This church was formally dedicated to the worship of God in November, 1811. Beverly Waugh was the pastor. This was the first church built by the Methodists in Washington.

First Methodists Here

Of the earliest Methodist family in Washington, Ferguson mentions John and Elizabeth Lipscomb, who settled here in 1794, having come to this city that year from Prince William County, Va. "Having been converted under the ministery of Francis Asbury," says the author, "they gave three sons to the ministry. Andrew A. Lipscomb, distinguished as preacher, educator and author, was a grandson. It may have been that this family was the nucleus of Washington Methodism. They afterward removed to Georgetown.'

The mention of the name of Henry Foxall in connection with Ebenezer in building the Foundry M. E. Church that stood for many years at the northeast corner of Fourteenth and G streets, where is now the Colorado Building. This early Methodist church, the gift of Mr. Foxall, was dedicated September 10, 1815. In 1349 it was reconstructed, and later an entirely new church building was erec'ed on the same spot and dedicated November 4 1866

In his reminiscences of the Foundry church, the Rev. George V. Leech tells us the first building had no basement, but only a cellar, which was used for the ordinary storage of wood, oil and other necessaries. "It was for a long time" he says, "heated by long cast-iron stoves which burned wood. These were located about three-fifths the distance from the front on Fourteenth street to the pulpit. The pulpit was in the rear of the church. There were galleries on three sidesnorth, south and west. These were supported by large, round, solid columns of wood. From them, suspended on projecting curved irons with hooks, were brass lamps for sperm oil, with flat link brass chains.

"I well remember," he continues, "the arrangements of this building. When but 5 years old, in 1840, my father, then residing on the south side of G street, near Thirteenth, opposite Cowling's stable, placed me in the Sunday school. I was assigned to the class of the late Edward Owen, who afterward became a large benefactor of the Mount Zion Church, erected at the corner of Fifteenth and R streets, where the present St. Paul's building, the temporary Foundry, now stands. I remained in Mr. Owen's class for years.

"The original Foundry had a high pulpit with circular steps ascending on each side of the chancel rail, and doors that closed. I was for some time puzzled as to how the ministers could stand there 'in the air' and preach. At last I discovered that it had a floor. I used to watch those grand old men, the elder Simpson, Abner Young, David Gardner, Robert and Richard Ricketts and others of the trustees, taking the collections in black velvet bags depending from long poles and pushed before the people to

Church Rebuilt

According to an old account, "when the first Foundry church was rebuilt it was widened and a deep and handsome press-brick front placed on Fourteenth street. This extended a number of feet on each side of the body of the church, giving quite a commanding appearance. The cellar was excavated and a basement nicely finished for the Sunday school. It was also used for prayer and class meetings.

"This virtually new and commodious building had no side galleries, but there was a large one at the Fourteenth street end for the choir, supported at the center by one of the round columns from the original building. I remember well that one night, at a crowded service. the wooden cap placed between the column and the body of the gallery split with a sharp report. Quite a little panic ensued until the matter was explained to the congregation. The pulpit was still retained at the rear end of the church.

"It was to this second church that the Rev. Dr. Jesse T. Peck came as pastor in the year 1852, having been transferred from the North. He had a great reputation for learning and as an orator. His style in opening his discourses at least was somewhat 'lumbering.' but as his spirit and great body, too, 'warmed up,' he would send forth a great succession of magnificent sentences, full of fine thought, and delivered like a very Boanerges, until he carried his congregation with him to a height of emotion and spiritual enthusiasm which at times was remarkable.

"He had a fervid evangelical spirit, was a great revivalist and his mind was full of big ideas. The church greatly prospered under his ministry. He was afterward elected a bishop, in 1872, but after came as pastor, remaining three full years. Mr. Ryan was another remarkable man; in some respects crude, peculiar in a very striking originality, tremendous as an exhorter and remarkable also as a revivalist. The second building soon became entirely too small for the increasing membership and the crowding congregations. It was then determined to again rebuild. More ground was secured on the northern side, and the fine edifice recently abandoned was erected in 1864-5 at a cost of about $100,000. The front was changed to G street."

The question of the naming of Founfor both foundries.

Of course, it is undoubtedly true that Mr. Foxall was grateful to the Creator for saving his foundry from destruction from the British, which no doubt would have been done had the British not been practically blown out of Washington by a severe wind and rain storm. that did much damage throughout the city. But whether he did suggest the name of the church on this account, no one seems to actually know, and tradition and hearsay seem to be the only support for this conclusion.

However very good authority tells us that: "The name 'Foundry Chapel' was first suggested by a Methodist minister at the dinner table of Mr. Foxall, where (as was generally the case) several preachers were seated. It was proposed in reference to the foundry of the host. as he had thereby made his reputation and fortune. 'I accept the name.' replied Mr. Foxall, 'but not in compliment to myself. Naturally this noted church, now located at 1500 Sixteenth street, is one of the largest and most handsome edifices in Washington, and its pastor, the Rev. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, ranks among the foremost clergymen of the Nation's Capital. Indeed, this divine is so highly regarded that following the recent tragic death of Rev. Ze Barney Phillips of Epiphany Episcopal Church, Dr. Harris was selected to fill the office of chaplain of the United States Senate, held by Dr. Phillips. And, strange as it may seem, the selection of Dr. Harris, apparently at least, might have a tendency to indicate the preference of members of Congress for Methodist ministers, since the Rev. These fullmooniating caps had grease on them to keep them from getting rusty and the rats came and ate the grease. all one cat could do to get round after those rats, and, fortunately, within a few weeks' time that cat had kittens and there were five of them, so it looked as if he would have

But, in the meantime, that cat was so busy with the rats that she had no time to perform her maternal duties, so he had to bring the kittens up by hand.

But when it came to buying food for all those kittens that belonged to the United States Government, he didn't see why he should have to do that, so he asked the War Deportment to give him $10 to buy milk for the cats. And the War Deportment wrote back and said for the cats to eat the rats.

So he wrote back a long letter to the War Deportment and said that that was all right for the first cat, but not for the kittens, because they were of young and tender years and they couldn't catch rats or eat them if they caught them.

So the War Deportment wrote back and said: "Expend the kittens."

Now, this officer had been a warrant officer before the war broke out, and he knew the way to do things, and he wrote back another long letter to the War

I got a customer yesterday who was | Expendable Property and said that kittens that belonged to the United States Government were Public Animals and that the Army Regulations told you what to do about them.

He said that you couldn't destroy a Public Animal unless it was incurably deceased or unless it was of such advanced age as to be no longer service-

Well, it was easy to see that these kittens were not incurably deceased, because they were spry and lively kittens with good appetites, and that was what he wanted $10 for. And, as for being of advanced age, the kittens were of young and tender years or they wouldn't be kittens-they would of been cats. So he invited attention to the provisions of Army Regulations 5-50, dealing with the disposition because there's always a right way to do a thing and a wrong way to do it, and if the Army Regulations said that those kittens ought to be transferred to the Procurement Division of the Treasury Deportment, then that was the thing to do with them.

The oney thing that bothers me about it is that they kept all those explosives and the fullmooniating caps in a depct with all those people coming and going and getting on and off the trains, and the oney thing I can think is that they had it there so that they could blow up that

'Kill...or Be Killed'

By Sigrid Arne,

Associated Press Staff Writer. CAMP ATTERBURY, COLUMBUS, Ind.—"That next hill—there's a company you'll want to see," the lieutenant said. So we cut cross-country, over dried grass and brush. But I'd be Mahatma Gandhi if I could see more than three men.

"Company?" I asked. The lieutenant grinned. "Wait." We met the three men They had all been New York artists. New they're soldiers in Uncle Sam's Army—infantry, Intelligence Division. "The enemy's out there," said one. He pointed across a small valley, and beyond a second range. "Their guns can't quite reach us. We're fixing to move up tonight."

He sounded so realistic that I unconclously looked for a fox hole marked Miss Arne." There was nothing but flat fills and brush.

"There's a company right around you," said the lieutenant, grinning. "Can you tell where they are?" It sounded like trying to find the Brooklyn brothers, but I finally pointed to one brush clump that looked suspicious. Three soldiers folled out, chuckling.

The lieutenant blew his whistle. Suddenly the whole hilltop was alive. Brush dumps burst open all around me, and soldiers rolled out into the high wind, grinning.

Individual Camouflage.

It's camouflage. The sort that's being taught to every manjack in this country's infantry. Not just camouflage that hides a gasoline dump or an air field, but camouflage that hides a single soldier from the enemy. Something he cooks up himself when he's out in the field, and told to move ahead.

And shortly our infantry will be "moving ahead." They're a little disturbed right now because the public only talks of "rangers," marines, flyers. The boys themselves are being reassured that the Army high command still thinks that when it really comes to taking enemy acreage and holding it, the infantry will come into its own.

Training for "Killers."

But it will be a tough job. So the Army is doing its level best to transform all the American gentlemen we kissed good-by at the railroad station into, well-killers. It's not a pleasant idea. But it should be reassuring.

There seems to be three sections of infantry training which will tie together when they're out in no man's land, wherever that will be. It's this camouflage. It's the use of the bayonet, and finally it's "hand-to-hand combat," which just means how to kill an enemy when you've got nothing but your bare hands. It's all pretty amazing to a civilian. I'll give you some of the high lights.

And I'll give them as I saw them at Camp Atterbury, outside Columbus, Ind. It's a camp that grew up this year. It's so huge it seems to break up into separate villages. It's a tremendously busy place. All that day I felt the earth shaking under me, from the roll of guns on the firing range. Every hill was crawling with different outfits working out war problems.

Camouflage first. The men learn to make themselves the color of their surroundings. They tie brush or tree foliage to their hats and onto their clothes. They smear their faces and hands with mud. Light surfaces, the camoufleurs say, reflect light even though it's only a lad's face or hands. So the point is to get dun-colored all over.

Digging Fox Holes.

The men learn to dig fox holes deep enough to stand up in. They even learn to dig them lying down. In case they're in reach of enemy guns. They have special small picks and shovels for that job. And they're so careful, as they do it, that each fresh shovel of earth is quickly covered with brush by another soldier. Fresh earth can be seen from the air.

The fox hole is finally covered with a mat woven from grass, or brush, or whatever. The mat must look like the surrounding ground.

The fox holes are particularly important to the Army intelligence officers who must get ahead of the line. The men learn to dig so many kinds of holes that it's almost like a shoe sale-sizes 34/2 to 9 available. Holes for one man, two men, three men and a gun, and so

But what about North African sands? Well, out there, if the infantry has to move in daylight the Army jeeps cover them by racing wildly back and forth across the sands stirring up huge clouds.

Bayonet Drill.

The bayonet drill is something to see. The men practice on "bayonet parade grounds." Those are fields with rows of dummies. White posts with swinging arms that represent the bayonet of an enemy soldier. There's plenty of tricks. But the one that tickled my fancy is called the "vertical butt thrust." It's all one, swift motion. It's as fancy a co-ordination of feet and hands as a buck and wing.

Let's take Joe. He's meeting a Jap in the field. They're both lunging with their bayonets pointed at each other. Joe comes in with his bayonet just a little lower than the Jap's. The bayonets cross like swords, and Joe gives a slight unward "umph" to his. The Jap's bayonet slides off, down Joe's gun, and down his left arm. That's called "the parry." It's like a swordsman's parry. But then comes Joe's neat, quick trick. He's too close to the Jap now to use his bayonet, and the Jap is still lunging forward from the momentum of his dash at Joe. So Joe just gives a big, upward kick to the butt of his gun, putting the strength into his right arm. The butt swings up, connects with the Jap's chin. And we hope sends his little broken neck to his forefathers. See it? Joe's rifle butt actually describes a half circle, swinging from his right hip upward through the air to the height of the Jap's chin. Must Be Tough.

There's plenty more like that. The only thing that seems to frighten an infantry officer at this point is that some American doughboy will forget not to be a gentleman. The old school tie is in

In rain or snow, fair weather or foul, the infantryman learns how to dig his own fox hole. Staff Sergt. Leonard Bell of Redwood Falls, Minn., shows how it's done. (Left) Lying flat on the snowcovered ground, Sergt. Bell uses pick to start digging his fox hole. Note that he uses both hands for leverage as his strength is limited lying down. The position of his feet also enables him to work longer without fatigue. (Center): Still lying flat, Sergt. Bell sho vels snow and dirt as he makes the hole. The shovel and pick are carried in the soldier's field pack. (Right): Sergt. Bell draws a bead on an imaginary enemy while standing in the hole. The hole is built so the soldier can crouch down and get his body out of danger of being hit by passing tanks, etc.

This bayonet parade ground is plenty few seconds. Finally he learns to com- He may need to defend himself. That's they are poked right into the chest, the kidneys are. That brings on the time he's running over the obstacle course. That's the toughener-up in

Then comes the hand-to-hand traintough. Joe has to do a whole series of ing. They have been unhorsed three different times—the Austrian upheaval after World War 1, the Spanish Civil War, and Hitler's invasion in 1938. As a result they have lived in almost every country in Europe, and in their current exile are installed in a former gardener's cottage on the estate of the Duchess de Talleyrand in Tarrytown.

Like the story of the man who came to dinner, the archduke and archduchess were invited to luncheon by the Duchess de Tallevrand up at her estate "Lyndhurst" along with 18 or 20 other persons in more or less the same predicament.

The duchess, who is the former Anna Gould, during the course of the luncheon, invited any one of them who so desired to spend the duration in the former gardener's cottage. The Archduke Franz Josef's wife, Marta, just happened to be quicker with her response than the others. So now they are getting their

The 1890 facade of the building is now decidedly Austrian baroque; the interior decor, concocted by her highness, is green and white, and except for certain family portraits the antiques are from New Jersey. A cook and a maid are their only household staff, their car has been turned over to the British American Ambulance Corps, which is under the chairmanship of the archduchess, and the royal routine depends upon a motorcycle and the Westchester trains. Enjoy Domestic Happiness.

Mutually dependent, domestic, pleasantly affluent, there never has been an atom of marital scandal about this Hapsburg pair. "Nine out of ten of our friends are Americans and the tenth is apt to be an Englishman," the archduke claims. They appear to enjoy being royal.

The archduchess' jewels are all in the most up-to-the-minute settings, her. clothes are in good style but not startling, and her blond hair is becomingly fashioned in upswept curls. In addition to her work with the ambulance corps, she did work in this country for the American Auxiliary Hospital in France and like any good Westchester matron she

In this former gardener's cottage on the estate of the Duchess de Talleyrand in Tarrytown, N. Y., live the Archduke Franz Josef of Austria and his wife, Marta, the former Austrian Baroness Kahler. The royal couple have renovated the cottage and its 1890 facade is now decidedly Austrian

Meet a Washington 'Why-Man'

By Richard Kasischke,

DETROIT.-What this country does not need right now, thinks Circuit Judge Homer Ferguson, is a red hot ball of fire in its legislative halls.

In fact, when the judge-who, as a one-man grand jury built a purging fire under grafters in Detroit's big governmental cleanup—goes into the new Congress as Michigan's junior Republican Senator, he'd like to be a fireman.

All possible heat should be turned on the Axis and this can be best achieved. he believes, with Republicans taking a stronger hand in war direction, commensurate with their election gains.

But in the domestic program, Homer Ferguson would apply the brakes. Much legislation of the last decade, he declares, has been "too hurried, too slipshod and consequently difficult to apply.

Not a 'Yes-Man.'

I know that, as a judge."

"In Washington," he said as he swiveled his big solid body around and characteristically brushed back his white crest with a hand, "-in Washington, I shall apply myself to digging for the facts. I shall be a 'why-man,' not a 'yes-man.' I believe the Senate should be a fact-finding, law-passing, policymaking body and that it should contain a vigorous, if loyal, opposition. I shall go there girded with facts on the problems on my State and city.' Ferguson draws one conviction from his election and the nation-wide Republican tide which reclaimed Michigan from the "doubtful" column-that the vote was a "protest against regimentation and bureaucracy which lessen our freedom.'

In the November election the judge's task was the toughest on the Michigan ticket, for he opposed Senator Prentiss M. Brown, who as a Roosevelt lieutenant steered the anti-inflation bill to passage to top off a notable record for a first-

This record was Brown's talking point in the campaign, his theme being "Ferguson has done notable civic service as a grand juror and judge. As a senator he would be a novice and a minority party member, unable to match a majority member who knows the ropes."

Went in Slugging.

But Ferguson went in slugging. On It's a far cry from the regal splendor of his Austrian castles which he vacated when Hitler campaign swings and in a face-to-face stormed into his country, but Archduke Franz Josef is happy in his American cottage, which he is tration was "installing regimentation entered the University of Pittsburgh to from which we shall not escape after the war. And Senator Brown, though he may claim to be a mind-reader, is part and parcel as a follower of these reforming zealots. What the Senate needs is a vigorous opposition." Ferguson won by about 30,000. Then back to his bench he went, diligent as always but with many a thought to what he'll be doing next January and perhaps to retrospect over the long road he's traveled from the Pennsylvania coal mines to the highest legislative chamber

Samuel Homer Ferguson (he has discarded the Samuel) was born in Harrison City, Pa., February 25, 1889. His father, a mine superintendent at $1,200 a year, was a considerable figure in the small community. Homer worked two years in a mine but soon decided that such a life was not for him. So he moved to Export, Pa., taught school for a spell and met Miss Myrtle Jones, whom he was to marry. Then he study medicine, but a squeamish stomach, the judge recalls, changed that. So he switched to law and the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated

He returned to Pennsylvania to marry Miss Jones and they came to Detroit to live in a boarding house as Attorney Ferguson hung out his shingle. A first year's professional income of $862 was augmented by teaching English in night

Gradually Ferguson began to make a reputation as a top-flight civil lawyer; he prospered, became known as a "lawyers' lawyer." When in 1929 the number of circuit judges was to be increased, Ferguson was the leading candidate of the bar association and won appointment from a Republican Governor, taking with it a cut in income.

As a judge his career was distinguished by bold non-conformity. When "hot" cases came along and politically ambitious judges dodged, Ferguson took

Jamieson of Hockey Lions Is Iroquois Indian

The sports scene on a roller coaster:

The Washington Lions can claim one of the few full-blooded ans in organized ice hockey in Jimmy Jamieson, an Iroquois Indians in organized ice hockey in Jimmy Jamieson, an Iroquois who has relatives living on the Onondega (N. Y.) reservation. Jamjeson's first name is Wendell, incidentally, but he was nicknamed Jamie and it developed into Jimmy, much to the confusion of a brother named Jimmy.

Jamieson says he shoots golf in the 70's, plays baseball and lacrosse and is a former marathon runner. One of 12 children and the youngest of six boys, he says his distance running was the offspring of jogging to and from school at Brantford, Ont., where the temperature dips to

"It was a mile from school to home and I ran it in 4 minutes," modestly informs Jamieson. Here, at long last, is the man who can run a mile in 4 minutes, fully clad and over snow. Too bad one of those tuxedoed A. A. U. gents wasn't around to clock him.

Reinhart 'Cools' Zunic to Make Him Star

Matt Zunic, who averaged nearly 11 points a game for 61 contests while playing for G. W. U.'s basket ball teams, became the best player in the history of the downtown school because Coach Bill Reinhart taught him to conquer his temper.

Now playing with the star-spangled Norfolk Naval Training Station team that tackled G. W. last night at Tech High, Zunic frequently was touchdowns in the first half and two out of action before the first half had elapsed in his sophomore season. He was too fiery and was benched on numerous occasions via personal fouls but Reinhart harnessed him and Zunic went on to establish a G. W. scoring record in his junior year, then broke that mark as a senior.

Sanford, Former Griffman, Hurt in Plane Crash

First Baseman Jack Sanford, who was the Nats' most promising minor league prospect when playing for Chattanooga, probably won't play any more baseball. Now Lt. Ticket sales reportedly were increasing by leaps and bounds as game time neared. A crowd of more than 25,000 is expected to turn out for the game and the colorful pre-kickoff and between the halves ceremonies. Proceeds of the game will go to the United Seaman's Service. Stars of stage and screen, as well as high-ranking naval and military officials, are to participate in the pre-game pageantry. Coach Ray Flaherty of the Redskins, who said several days ago the game is in "the nature of an anti-climax to the boys after beating the Bears" announced Steve Slivinski will start at his usual guard post. Slivinski was injured in the playoff against the Bears and will wear a specially designed mask to protect his face. Bill Dudley of the Pittsburgh Steelers, the league's leading ground gainer, will start for the All-Stars, two and would remain at the farm but Coach "Hunk" Anderson made a last-minute shift and decided not to start any of the Chicago Bears. Probable starting line-ups:

Jockey Beats Favorites In Scoring a Double; Crowd, Betting Off

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 26.-No Wrinkles, two-year-old colt from the Milky Way Farm of Mrs. Ethel Mars, won the 6-furlong, $2,000 Key West Handicap at Tropical Park today by coming from behind in the stretch before a small Saturday crowd of 3.973.

No Wrinkles, winning his second race in two starts, won by a half length over the highly favored Through Bound, flying the silks of Mrs. A. R. Smith, and gave Jockey Ted Atkinson a double for the program. The winner completed the distance in one minute, 111/4 seconds and paid $9.20, $3 and $2.30 in the mutuels. Through Bound's short price was $2.90 and $2.20 and the heavily supported Joe Burger paid only $2.70 show money.

Betting Below Year Ago. The crowd, representing a customary drop from Christmas Day, was well below the 5.841 who attended on the equivalent day a year ago, and last year's betting of $231,496 was not matched by today's mutuel handle of $185,142. Jockey Atkinson began a consecu-ive double with a victory in another 6-furlong dash, the fifth, when he rode J. H. Miles' 9-year-old gelding, Speed to Spare, to a head victory in 1 minute 1225 seconds at the good price of $13.90, $5.90 and $3.60. To do it, he outbid the favorite, Balmy Spring, which was second at $3.20 and $2.40, and the semi-favorite, White Time, which saved third and paid $3 for $2. Adams Rides 242d Winner. The Nation's 1942 champion rider, little Johnny Adams, although needing no more victories to assure his leadership, came through with one more first and two seconds with Marked Slump in Bowling. Bowling suffered because of transportation obstacles and labor difficulties which prevented large numbers of pin-spillers from reaching the scene of activities. The slump ranged from 25 to as high as 50

Lou Jenkins, now a cadet attending the quartermaster school at Camp Lee, Va., and Lucy Rose of Rosslyn were the Capital's standout bowlers for 1942.

Inducted in the Army during the summer after a brilliant season of rolling, Jenkins, despite little practice, came back to win the 12th annual Dixie Open from a field of 84 national stars. During the regular season he won four major tournaments and finished out of the money only seven times in 25 other special events.

Winner of both the women's city and national all-events titles, Mrs. Rose put on the finishing touches to a spectacular year with two national mixed doubles records shared by Billy Stalcup. Their marks were 1,371 for five games and 1,633 for six games.

Aside from these two achievements. Stalcup won several important events to land 22nd among the Nation's first 30 ranked pinmen. Others to gain the charmed circle were Fred Murphy, Cletus Pannell, Astor Clarke, Hokie Smith, Ed Blakeney and Karl Gochenour. Smith's biggest feat was winning the District League championship for the second successive season.

Bill Gartrell, Northeast Temple manager, fired 216 in the Red Megaw tournament for the biggest game of the year, while league honors went to Wally Burton of Hyattsville, with 212 in the Prince Georges County loop. Al Wright of Clarendon gained the headlines with 203 as an all-time record for the Districk League, and Russ Spargo of the Times-Herald League posted the only 100 flat score. The Brookland Recreation quint

With the "teen-age" draft now in effect, the Navy finds it must now reach into the high schools for candidates and must consequently secure different norms than those used in the past. To obtain these norms it needed the co-operation of selected

Each of the students was directed by Msgr. Mc-Cormick, as a matter of patriotic co-operation, to do his best in the test so that the Navy's information would be as reliable and complete as possible. Co-operate in Fight On Diseases Found in Amazon Region

By the Associated Press. MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 26.—Medical authorities of the United States and Brazil are co-operating in a battle to protect the health of workers sent into the Amazon region in search of rubber.

Gen. Souza Ferreira, surgeon general of the Brazilian Army, told the story here today as he prepared to return home after a two-month visit to this country as the guest of the United States Government. "The Medical Corps of the Bra-

Gen. Ferreira expressed gratitude for the courtesies shown by military and civil authorities. He said he was convinced of the sincerity of the "good neighbor" policy and predicted that they would yield a rich harvest of friendship.

The Brazilian surgeon general said plans were discussed to standardize equipment used by public health authorities in the two nations to further co-operation in the fight against disease.

Miss Belle W. Roosevelt Bride of J. G. Palfrey, Jr.

President and Wife Among Guests at Ceremony in Fairfax Church

With the President and Mrs. Roosevelt in attendance, Miss Belle Wyatt Roosevelt became the bride yesterday afternoon of Mr. John Gorham Palfrey, jr., at a ceremony marked by tradition and simplicity. Members of the family related to the late President Theodore Roosevelt, grandfather of the bride, also gathered for the wedding, which unites two prominent and distinguished families. The ceremony was held in Truro Church at Fairfax and the wedding reception at Layton Hall, home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Joseph E. Willard, widow of the former United States Ambassador to Spain.

Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, mother of the bride, came from New York the middle of the week and spent several days at the Willard Hotel before joining her mother at Layton Hall for Christmas, and others at the wedding were the bride's aunt, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, and her daughter, Miss Paulina Longworth, who was presented to society in Cincinnati

Yule Parties For Young Set Last Evening

Cunibertis Hosts; Mrs. Gudger Also Entertains

Mr. and Mrs. Fernando Cuniberti gave a Christmas party last evening at the Sulgrave Club for young married people, their 50 or more guest being invited to meet their son and daughter-inlaw, Mr. and Mrs. Victorio E. Cuniberti of Columbus, Ohio, who are here for Christmas. Sharing honors with Mr. and Mrs. Cuniberti were the former's cousin, Mr. Lindsay Alexander Lovejoy, nephew of the senior Mrs. Cuniberti, and Mrs. Lovejoy of Janesville, Wis., who recently came to Washington to live. Mr. and Mrs. Lovejoy, the latter former Miss Priscilla Rice of Schenectady, were married in November and have taken a house at 1105 Portner road in Alexandria.

Although the party was distinctly a Christmas fete, with singing of carols during the evening, the dancing took place during the dinner and a number of young officers in the Capital joined the party. Mr. and Mrs. Cuniberti are enjoying a family reunion for the holidays, having with them at their place, Town Point Farm, at California, Md., their daughter, Miss Julia Cunibreti, who is a student at Vassar, and sons, Roberto and John, who are students at Deerfield.

Another young people's party yesterday was that of Mrs. Gudger, widow of Capt. Emmet Carlisle Gudger, U. S. N., who entertained in her apartment at 1661 Crescent place for her daughters, Miss Elinor Carlisle Gudger and Miss Gloria Gudger, the latter here for the holidays from Vassar College, where she is a student. Miss Elinor Gudger returned for Christmas from & dancing engagement following her work as a model for magalast spring and will have no other

The gown is entirely covered by rare old rosepoint lace, an heirloom in her family. The court train was lined with lace and trimmed with clusters of orange blossoms, and her tulle veil, which completely covered the train, was edged with lace and held by a halo cap of lace with clusters of orange blossoms at each side. carried armsful of Oregon holly. Before the entrance of the wedding party the bride's cousins. Kermit Roosevelt III, now 4, and his small brother, Jonathan, only 2, carried the white satin ribbons up the aisle and attached them to the front pews. Mr. Palfrey, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Palfrey of Boston, had as his best man Mr. Rodman Gilder, jr., of New York, who is a grandson of Mr. Richard Watson Gilder. Mr. Dirck Roosevelt, brother of the bride, was among the ushers, the others including Mr. Eric Witherby of Providence, Mr. Frederick Holdsworth and Lt. John Pierpont Morgan III of New York, Mr. Charles Woodrow of Schenectady, Mr. Langdon Marvin, jr.,

Mr. and Mrs. Palfrey left later yesterday for a necessarily brief wedding trip as Mr. Palfrey must report Tuesday at the training school of the enlisted reserve of the United States Signal Corps at Westfield, Mass. Mr. Palfrey was graduated from Milton Academy and from Harvard University with the class of 1940. He attended the law school of Harvard until his enlistment in the Signal Corps. His bride is a granddaughter of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and the late President. She attended Miss Chapin's School and Foxcroft before going abroad for several years. Her husband, a retired colonel in the Army, was in the cavalary for 40 years and their son is a navigator in the Army Air Corps. Like most Army people they adore Washington and after Col. Before the Edwards came back to Washington they lived in Greenwich, Conn., and before that they had made their home in Evanston, Ill., for 10 years. Care of Christmas Plants

Proper Watering and Feeding Will Keep Them Flourishing

A number of years ago-in December, 1936-I devoted an article to the care of gift plants. Since that date requests expanded and many newcomers would doubtless appreciate a similar article. So here is a new and revised version giving suggestions for care of Christmas

No matter how carefully a plant has been grown by the greenhouse man or florist, if it does not receive proper care in the home, full enjoyment can not be secured from the plant. Good care should enable you to keep your holiday plants in good health for some time.

POINSETTIAS: This plant requires a warm, even temperature, direct sun, and should be kept moderately wet. A sudden change in temperature, a draft or dryness will result in loss of foliage almost immediately. With proper care, the poinsettia should bloom until about January 10. After the blooms have faded, cut off the top, and store the pot in a cellar or some dark place where the plant can be kept dry. About the latter part of April, repot, using a plant food in the potting soil; place in a sunny window; water regularly, and vigorous new growth will start. Feed again when new growth starts.

CYCLAMEN: The most common fault in caring for this plant is keeping it too warm and giving it insufficient water. Always keep in the coolest part of the house; do not allow the temperature to be over 60 degrees at night. It is usually necessary to water twice a day-morning and evening. Some authorities recommend that cyclamen be watered well when received, then no additional water applied until the outer leaves begin to droop slightly. Then water again heavily. The cyclamen is produced from corms which rot if plant is watered on the central growth. It is best to water by setting in a saucer of water, so the moisture can be absorbed from the bottom of the pot. The cyclamen requires a medium light but no direct sunshine. With good care, it should last until the warm days of April. After blooming, gradually withhold water and by May 1 stop watering altogether. Keep pot in a cool dark place, on its side, until September. Then repot, using a balanced plant food in the soil mixture, and begin watering. Pot the corm so the top is from one-fourth to onehalf inch above the surface of the soil, or it will rot. Be sure that the cylamen has good light. without being in direct sun.

AZALEAS: Flowers last longest under cool conditions. Place in a good light and give plenty of water. Do not allow soil to dry out. Bloom should last about two to three weeks under proper conditions. After blooming period, remove faded flowers. With proper care, it is possible to keep an azalea plant for several years. Young growth is made after flowering, and during this stage keep plants warm and in a moist atmosphere. Later, when warm weather arrives, place outdoors in partial shade, plunging the pot, and see that the plant does not get dry. Lift and take in the house before fall, keeping in a temperature of 50 degrees, if possible, until buds show signs of developing. Sometimes azaleas, when purchased it. full bloom, have been forced into bloom by crowding into small pots. Therefore, if a plant does not thrive for you when first purchased, place in a larger pot. One important point in the culture of azaleas is to remember this plant requires acid soil, and it is well to test the soil frequently, and if not sufficiently acid, use a little aluminum sulphate to get the correct degree of acidity.

JERUSALEM CHERRY: Keep fairly cool, water freely when in bloom, and place in good light. Excessive heat, poor light or dry-

VIOLET): Keep in cool, even temperature. Requires good light, but protect from direct sun. East or northeast window is an excellent location. Heat, abrupt temperature changes, insufficient light or incorrect watering will start or spread decay. Keep moist, watering from bottom. This can be done by placing pots in a pan of water until soil is thoroughly soaked and then drain off excess water. Do not get water on the leaves, as this causes spots and streaks on the foliage. To keep surrounding atmosphere moist, set pot in outer pot of wet peat moss. Blooms best when potbound. Cut off all stems of withered flowers to prevent formation of seed pods. Cut off any droopy leaves within 1 inch of the crown of the plant. Feed every three to four weeks by dissolving tablet in water with which plant is irrigated.

HEATHER: Water thoroughly, and with regularity. Plant does well in plenty of light, and should be kept at a cool tem-

Idle Gossip No Longer Idle Axis Has Put It to Work

By Josephine Lowman

What a reputation we women

In Shakespeare's "As You Like It" we hear, "Do you not know that I am a woman? When I think I must speak." There also is an old Dutch proverb which says, "No woman is too bashful to talk scandal." Every woman who is honest with herself will admit that while these accusations are overdrawn there is, nevertheless, some basis for truth in them. Women are quicker to speak than men. We have all known the woman who was timid and dull until some juicy tidbit was dragged into the conversation. How avid and animated and gloating this same woman became! Having nothing really interesting or constructive

Rest Up! For a Gay New Year

By Patricia Lindsay

New Year is more joyous if one is rested and looks her prettiest. Too many are the women who spend all their energy on making New Year Day merry for others and then find themselves so fatigued and discouraged January 1 that the true essence of its celebration is missed completely.

To be lovely you must be rested. Get your work done early. I hope most of your "thank you" notes have been mailed by now and your gifts nicely put away. Now plan your celebration in detail and arrange for time out for

If you can afford it, make an appointment now with a good beauty salon for one day next week. Give yourself this gift. Arrange to have your hair done, your nails manicured, get a facial, too. Most salons have combination rates for these administrations. If the budget allows, buy yourself a box of new matched make-up and fresh supply of beauty aids if yours are running low. Dip into these all weekrefreshing that beauty which has been neglected too long.

Tired - looking hair requires brushing; dry and fading skin needs massage, stimulation and lubricating. Your eyes would benefit from a little attention, too -putting eye cream on at night, bathing them at the end of the day with soothing lotion. Your body would respond gratefully to 15 minutes of exercise a day and it would acquire new grace and becoming poise.

If your hair has been neglected or seems "tired," you will want to recondition it before you have a permanent. Miss Lindsay tells how this can be done in her leaflet No. 39, which can be obtained for 5 cents, coin preferred (to cover costs of handling and postage). Address her in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 75, Station O, New York, N. Y.

to add to life or conversation, such women prey like vultures on the weaknesses and misfortunes

The next time you run into this experience look at the face of the woman who has so suddenly come to life. What you see there will make you feel shriveled up on the inside and will make you careful to sidestep this habit. Habit it may be and the best of us, without malicious intent, can fall into it.

It's so much easier not to come to the defense of the person under fire, and not all of the traits which make us like gossip are bad. Some of them are warm and human! We are gregarious, we like people and we are interested in the problems of those about us.

However, we should guard against careless talk as never before. The lives of so many have been made difficult and complicated by war and the disruption of family life and the world is in such great need of charity and kindness! We should think before we speak.

We should increase our output of tolerance and understanding and should watch for any slipshod habits we may have fallen into. We should do this for the safety of our war effort as well as for the peace of our souls.

Fragile, romantic rayon net frosted with gold sequins make this charming gown for midwinter dancing. The fabulously full skirt flares from a front-pointed basque bodice with natural waistline, and the draped shoulders carry out the "covered up" idea of most gowns this season. Perfect for New Year eve celebrating, it is available in pale pink or aqua, highlighted with earrings, elbow-length gloves and a jewel in the hair.

Don't Be Scornful About Waste Baskets!

Humble Bit of Furniture May Become Work of Art at Your Hands

By Margaret Nowell

The lowly waste basket is a most important accessory to every room. Often ignored, it may be one of the most decorative of all small conveniences. The shops make a specialty of hand-painted tole waste baskets. Designed to go well with a room color scheme they are as exquisitely painted as fine artists can make them and priced accordingly. Usually small trays or desk appointments are designed to go with them and the effect of these small items in a room is as arresting as carefully chosen jewelry on a smart cos-

Now that time spent at home makes it possible for many of us to make household decorations, a waste basket for every room in the house might be one of the first worth-while projects.

Painted ones would be best for the kitchen, nursery and bath. These may be purchased for about a quarter in the small size and about 40 cents for the larger ones. You will still find tin waste baskets on the market or if you prefer there are the nice large ones made of hard pressed board which take either a paint, fabric or paper cover equally well.

With a large one for the kitchen and a small one for the nursery and bath assembled you may treat them all to a priming coat of paint as a foundation for further decoration. Be sure to paint them inside and on the sides of the waste basket. The nursery one should be painted to match the delicate colors of the children's room. It is always more attractive with the inside a contrasting shade. Flower decalcomanias in pastel tones or gay little nursery figures might be used to decorate this basket. Bathrooms are usually sleek and cold with shiny white tile so that a warm contrasting color is best here. A piece of flowered chintz which matches the bedroom draperies may be used to cover one of the baskets. This works much better on a cardboard or heavy paper basket than on tin. Paste it on with wall paper paste, taking great care to smooth all the air bubbles out carefully. Bind it around the top with a finish tape, similar to upholstery guimpe, which is glued on. The glorious natural color photographs from the fashion magazines make a wonderful basket for the young girl's room. Cartoons from the men's magazines make amusing waste baskets for the boy's room or the library.

When the priming coat is dry plan to use two coats of enamel to finish. The one for the kitchen may be painted a bright color inside to match the accent color in the room. The outside may be the color of the walls, white, or one of the lighter tones in the kitchen. For instance-a pale gray basket resting on a gray marble linoleum floor might have a shrimp pink lining. Then decorate with handpainted border or a stencil in shrimp pink, white and black

The rainy afternoon and the evenings spent at home are ideal for these small, interesting jobs. The pleasure in making decorative and useful appointments for each room in the house far surpasses the small amount of time and money expended.

Punctuality True Test of Breeding

The correct dinner guest is definitely on time. And for the same reason, the correct host is definite as to the hour of dinner. When a bit of leeway seems desirable, the invitations may read "Cocktails at 7:30, dinner at 8." But even that is, or ought to be, an unnecessary procedure.

It is due, we infer, to the late prohibition era that many hosts and hostesses no longer expect their dinner guests to be prompt. During that chaotic period it became quite the custom for dinner guests to dawdle on the road, inflicting upon their anatomies first one and then another of the vile concoctions known as "the real stuff.* By the time the diner appointment came around they pantry bar. But with that sort of thing now well behind us there is no valid excuse for delayed arrival. Or. if there should be, the least that can be done is to telephone. Nothing at all can be said for late arrival at a dinner. Everything can be said against it. In the first place, it is a distinct insult to the host and hostess, not to mention the other guests. Furthermore, it shows a total indifference to the food which is being prepared, often with loving care, by a cook who regards his or her work as a noble art-

Washington Wears—

Holiday Costumes Smart and Colorful

Fashionably speaking, it was a sparkling Christmas in Washington. Glitter in fashions prevailed. dresses were bright and cheerful. holiday ornaments were tucked into recently coiffed hair and the whole picture was one of bright spirits and good grooming. Those days preceding the "great day" were interesting ones, too, for the style reporters. As women rushed around on last-minute preparations, they managed to retain the air of chic that has come to be part of the Washington scene. Mrs. James L. Houghteling.

whose pretty daughter's engagement was announced at a tea this week, has a holiday costume of soft, rosy red, that is most becoming. . . . Countess Cassini's black hat flares into a huge rounded brim, setting off her handsome profile delightfully.... Senhora de Barros of Brazil was seen dancing the other evening in a full-skirted frock of black taffeta, banded in stiff white starched embroidery. . . . Evie Robert, hatless as usual, arrived at a tea in a simply cut frock of violet blue wool. Lovely with her golden hair. . . "Toodie" Pierce, charming daughter of Mrs. Robert Herrick, has a twopiece dinner gown that boasts a white shirtwaist blouse, and an

It is true there are occasional snobs at heart who have the misbegotten idea that coming late is an indication of ennui-an indication that with so many dinner invitations, they have become a subject of secondary importance. "Oh, it's not fashionable to be on time for dinner parties!" Is that so? Well, the fact is that it makes it impossible for the host and hostess to offer an agreeable and pleasant dinner

But, of course, the folks who give dinner parties have the situation pretty much in their own hands. One hostess said to me once, "Well, I don't think we give very good dinners, so I don't mind our friends coming late. And then we generally linger over the cocktails, anyhow. So what does it matter if they do drift in when they feel like it?"

The answer is that such creatures are not giving dinner parties. To have one's friends come to one's home, to gather around one's table and partake of one's food-these are evidences of the highest form of hospitality. They must be considered such by he who gives the dinner and he who accepts the invitation.

And we have touched upon the problem of the cook. The preparation of a good dinner requires many, many hours. The element of timing is most important. Many dishes must be gotten under way well ahead of time, but arranged to all be ready at their appointed moments.

But, when all is said and done. I have no great feeling of sympathy for the host or hostess who suffers because of dwadling guests. The remedy is a bit drastic-but very effective. And that it this-if dinner is to be served at 8 o'clock, then, by heck, start

In our home, we long ago solved that problem. All our friends know that we start our dinners on time. And any strangers are duly warned in advance. Any guest who comes late has only been made conspicuous. He, or maybe she, or both, take their appointed places as late comers and they start to eat whatever course is being served at the moment. If the salad is being served, they start with the salad, ter over the dam!

of as many layers as the designers and wearers desire. In addition, those fabrics which must conform to regulations do it so subtly and well that reduced yardage is hardly noticeable. Taffetas, velvets and crepes manage to retain a full, sweeping effect even though they are reduced by several inches and it is something of a joy to see bouffant or near-bouffant skirts after months of slim pencil-line models. Of course, it will be mostly the young set that goes in for very full-skirted frocks and it will take a "sweet young thing" to get away with the hoopskirts that are being shown. More sophisticated women will undoubtedly cling to slender lines, leaving the romantically fragile fabrics to the wide-eyed and

A white Christmas also carries over into a white New Year, it seems, for the stores favor snowy frocks and pastels that are delightfully flattering. It has been decided that servicemen like ethereal, appealing gowns on their best girls, and these pale, full-skirited frocks certainly fill the bill. In many cases the bouffant skirts are complemented by sleek, molded bodices of rayon satin, jersey or taffeta-all fabrics that hold their shape, dryclean nicely and look fresh and pretty as long as they are worn. Necklines are flatteringly designed, heart-shaped, square, round, deep V or camisole type. Many of the dresses have little sleeves, but a surprising number are strapless or with tiny straps to enhance the "bare look" that is so glamorous to the younger

The glitter of evening fashions is of special interest this year. Seguins or brilliants may be used to band a neckline or be scattered over a sleek bodice. In many cases there is a smattering of spangles on a full skirt or trimming of beads, embroidery or sequins to emphasize the layers of net or lace. Tiny little crystal beads are back in the picture once more, done effectively on these flirtatious frocks.

In the evening gowns with slender lines, deep tones and black are popular, with a great deal of emphasis on cheerful red.

Although most of these dresses need little in the way of jewelry, the importance of gay accessories has in no way diminished. Matching or contrasting gloves in long lengths are very popular with evening gowns of all types. Hair ornaments are almost a "must" for these after-dark costumes and very often the wearers will find it practical and becoming to tuck a jeweled clip into the hair instead of a bow, flower or feather. Dainty slippers will be an excellent way to invest that check from Uncle Harry, for with shoe regulations practically upon us, this may be the last season for novelty styles, colors and materials. Be sure to see the exaggerated platform sole slippers with broad, high heels. In bright colored satin they're knockouts. "Ballet slippers" also are becoming and unusual, as well as comfortable. A girl we know tells us that she has a "romantic dress box" which contains all her "delightful memory frocks," including the one in which she made her debut, the one she wore when she met her husband-to-be for the first timeand a scattering of others that have a special sentimental meanings. We have a feeling that many of the dresses bought for the holidays this year also will be gowns with memories to be cherished throughout the years. Certainly they have all the requirements.

So, resolve this New Year eve to look your prettiest and most beguiling. Whether your "date" is a serviceman or not follow the trend to those feminine fashions which seem far removed from the seriousness and tragedy of the world today. Look your most enchanting-and see that your manner corresponds.

Mrs. A. W. Payne Describes Lifein Far-Away Afghanistan

As Far as She Knows, Her 7-Month-Old Son Is First American Born in That Land

Supper Party Set For Servicemen Next Sunday

Postponed Event To Be Given at Laurel USO Club

Postponed by the emergency suspension of gasoline sales last week end, a supper party for the servicemen at the USO Club at Laurel will be held next Sunday by the Junior Guild of the Women's City Club, according to present arrangements.

Members of the guild are preparing to serve a "Kentucky burgoo" to between 300 and 400 men and to provide a program of entertainment. Mrs. John T. Lucker, guild chairman, said a number of guest artists have agreed to help with the program. Others assisting will include a group from the Canteen Corps of the Takoma Park Branch, Montgomery County Red Cross, who will prepare the supper.

The recipe for the "Kentucky burgoo" has been loaned to the guild by Mrs. Ralph Wells, recently elected member of the Maryland House of Delegates. It is well known among her friendls as a dish which provides a meal in itself. Those who have volunteered to help with the entertainment include Earl Hague of Station WWDC, who will be master of ceremonies; the Enezawa trio and three of the Marian Chace dancers, Mary Louise Anderson, Helaine Ellis and Marian Lester.

Among the musicians will be Mary Conroy, Edith Atkins and Pearl Donnauer, soprano soloists; Maurice Cornell, tenor, and Patricia Morales, pianist. The supper will be the second in a series being arranged this season by the Junior Guild. A party in November was given from funds raised at a card party at the club. Funds for next Sunday's entertainment were obtained through a horse show put on in November under the direction of Mrs. Thelma

Three Sisters' of Chekov Focuses on Frustration

Play Is Library Piece With Early Problems Visioned Today as Minor

By Lawrence Perry,

NEW YORK.—Scratch a Turk, so says an old adage, and you get a Tartar. Scratch Anton Chekhov—or, for that matter, any other Russian writer of drama and the novel-and you are likely as not to get gloom, or wavering semi-gloom, dire inevitability, frustration; in sum, almost everything that combines to make life sodden or mournful, or, in any case, hardly worth living.

Miss Katharine Cornell and her husband, Gutherie McClintic-in lieu of something by any one of our leading playwrights, variously distracted just now from their essential occupation—have scratched Chekhov, result being his defeatist drama, "The Three Sisters," now at the Ethel Barrymore Theater. (Play was seen in Washington in early December.)

EIGHT PAGES.

"The Three Sisters" is a library piece taken from shelves where repose the belies-letters of the ages. Playgoers, who appreciate high literary values, who are willing to swap thrill, suspense and dynamic quality for the deft projection of human appeal and subtle emotional content, will surely accept this play in the same spirit in which it is offered and acted. Others, who prefer a more heartening, or, in any case, a less tenuous drama than this one, will nonetheless be drawn to it, because of the alluring brilliancy of those engaged in acting it.

Looks Like Museum Piece.

But still others—who can say how be impatient at the sniveling neudefeat of insignificant ambitions and its ladling of gloom out of a and writing now, his characters, no doubt, would have much more important things to snivel about. If he were true to the Russian mood of today, his work would be characterized by tragedy much more deeply organic than sniveling gloom. Slacks Aren't The statement is hazarded in the face of fact that his tragedies, such as they are, grew out of the unceasing pinpricks of life rather than out of poignant human disaster.

Consequently, in its gloomier phases, audiences at "The Three Sisters" are not so deeply moved as the actors perhaps would like them to be. There are so many things so much more affecting today in this grim world than the petty mental travail of three footling sisters.

Their Problems Minor. One of them, Masha, is married unsatisfactorily to an unenlivening husband, Kuligin, a plodding schooltheir convictions, so nothing comes all very exciting of this-nothing. As Masha, Miss Slacks have always been part of her role gives opportunity for splen-dor—which is not always, and Tom Powers and Dennis King as school-wee hours of the dawn clad in anymaster and colonel, respectively, principled sister-in-law, Natasha by name, has the inestimable privilege of injecting enlivening maliciousness and as much gayety into the piece as Chekhov could find it in his somber soul to provide. (If you recall, in his stories of the 1880-90 decade he could be quite funny and made Russians laugh immoderately-until Muscovite megrims got the best of him.)

Inasmuch as Chekhov dramas never have a dominant central figure, so, in this current play, we find the parts of the four accomplished actresses running pretty level in importance. Miss Cornell is far from outstanding, therefore, as protagonist. Miss Musgrove, Miss Gordon, Miss Anderson, all have equal rights to the spotlight-which, accordingly, rests as often upon them as upon Miss Cornell. Chekhov or no Chekhov, his play as now produced is definitely an event-I might say the event-of the many?—either will stay away or will 1942-43 season, if only because of the distinguished folk assembled to roticism of "The Three Sisters," its play it; because of its inspired staging; and, finally, because of beautiful decor and engaging costuming. shallow bowl. If Chekhov were alive Then, of course, there is the play's pervading literary value—if that means much to you in these days of turmoil. (North American Newspaper Alliance.)

Timid Investors Profit On 'Arsenic and Old Lace'

Mystery Play Develops Amazing Success for Broadway Beginners

By Andrew R. Kelley.

About two years ago this dabbler in things theatrical caused Playwright Russell Crouse some apprehension. It was in Baltimore for the prior-to-Broadway performances of "Arsenic and Old Lace." At the end of the second act of this Saturday matinee an intermission stroll disclosed that snow was swirling with the fury of a young blizzard. Rather than be snowbound 40 miles from home base we climbed into the family coupe and headed D. C.-ward. At Laurel the sun had conquered the snow-flakes, while the Potomac area had likely to do." completely escaped the white crys-

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Crouse jingled the phone. "Didn't you like the play? I wanted to talk it over with you after the final curtain, found you were gone." Mr. Crouse was reassured only weather signals prompted the early exit.

The Crouse-Howard Lindsay anxiety was probably due to the fact that they were protecting the production funds of some 23 investors, who delivered from safe deposit boxes, or maybe the old sock, enough money to put "Arsenic and Old Lace" before the playgoing public. Those 23 investors have shared in many a profit melon since the play opened on Broadway January 11, 1941. These timid "angels" included one humorist, one actress, one bogeyman, two theater treasurers, one was moved to say that although the playwright, two actors' agents, one business manager, one theater manager and one reformed critic.

Produced by Hollywood. Since then "Arsenic and Old

Lace" has had touring companies, has been sold to the movies and produced by Hollywood (but not yet released), has been presented in London, Sweden and South America. It is still running on Broadway. In Buenos Aires they call it "Arsenico Encaje Antiguo," with Narciso Ibanez Menta playing the Boris Karloff role. In Sweden the terrorization is in the hands of Kilbjorn huddled with Oscar Serlin over Knudsen, with Lars Schmidt the which Hollywood company will get production sponsor. It opened in "Life With Father." They put an London last Wednesday night and asking price of $500,000 on the movie Firth Shepard sent the following rights, but they also surrounded it jubilant cable to Lindsay and Crouse: "Delighted to report terrific script changes, choice of actors, and reception. Departs From Formula. Having seen the mystery thriller Make-Up Expert several times since that first momentous Saturday matinee, it strikes one analyst of the drama that rarely have writers been able to combine essential tragedy with laughter, so that the gay mood predominates. One would expect a play with wholesale murders to be grim and foreboding, yet without turning into farce the authors contrive to have the pew holders accept it blithely. It also violates an essential rule of the stage and screen—an unwritten rule to be sure—that laughs founded upon mental affliction, or cripples are hard to sustain, since they are founded upon guilty levity. The public, in this case, has said otherwise, so the play must be noted as

It ought to be noted here that the original idea for "Arsenic and Old Lace" came from Joseph Kesselring. When he completed his script he turned it over to Messrs. Lindsay and Crouse. These playwright-producers reveling in fat dividends from "Life With Father," were casting about for another success. They liked the idea in its crude form, set about polishing it so that the laugh motif would be dominant. They asked Kesselring where he got his unique plot and he explained:

An Original Idea. "I have a good and gentle grandcially fond. She being kindly and repair. sweet and I being under the in-likely to do.' "What, I asked myself-while pixies plucked at my brain and probably jogged my writing arm, would Grannie be completely incapable of doing. In a swoon (complete with swinging doors), the answer came to me: Grannie would be utterly unable to commit a murder. "That gave me the idea for the play. I multiplied the nice old Grannie by two, making two gentle grandmothers. Then I added three imaginary nephews, put each of them to mischievous and nefarious work, mixed murder and roaring comedy into an incredible hodgepodge, and came up, dripping but happy, with what we called 'Arsenic and Old Lace."

All awaited the critical verdict with some perturbation. One writer theater is thousands of years old, it has never produced anything like this. Another member of the opening night jury said: "It is so sidesplitting and terrific it can be guaranteed to make even dramatic critics care for the theater." and after that acidulous barb at the profession added: "Just when it is threatening to make you scream with terror, it compels you to scream with

Gordon Bau Gets An Essential Job

HOLLYWOOD. Gordon Bau, Warner Bros. makeup expert, whose normal field of activity is the beautification of such lovelies as Ann Sheridan, Olivia de Havilland, Alexis Smith and Brenda Marshall, has two new subjects-Humphrey Bogart and Alan Hale. Don't leap, however, to the conclusion that these two rough, tough, burly boys are suddenly being glamourized. It is, in fact, the singularly virile character of the roles they play in "Action in the North Atlantic" that makes necessary their daily submission to the ministrations of Bau. Bogart and Hale have laid their eyebrows and eyelashes, so to speak, on the sacrificial altar of their art. They are portraying a cynical chief mate and a hard-boiled boatswain, respectively. Inevitably, the background to their antics is the most hazardous the North Atlantic affords, which is a tanker set affame from stem to stern by a Nazi torpedo. Dashing a dozen times daily through a wall of flame that would affright even that distinguished fire worshipper, Mayor Fiorello La Guardia, Bogart and Hale have had mother, of whom I am espe- their lashes and brows singed beyond

Today's Movie Puzzle: Try to Find the Villain

Hollywood's Present Evildoers Look Too Much Like Heros For Comfort of Hissing Section

By Harold Heffernan HOLLYWOOD.

Might be nice to drop in on a out movie some day and find the villain of the story typed and tagged as the black-hearted fellow he really is. The film villain today is sleek, sly and subtle-so much that the most discriminating fan can't really hang anything on him until the very

Remember that golden show-going era when the forces of evil dressed the part? You sat in the gaflery and knew instinctively when the villain walked out. They dressed him in black, nothing else. Usually in a cutaway coat, high hat and tirely different. Considering Veidt's curled-up mustachio. And they past record of film villainies, we painted his heart with as black a brush as could be found, slapping it the fans? on inches thick.

So, what happens these days? starts, whether to hiss the hero or the villain, because you can't tell 'em apart. Psychology is so involved, with so much good in the worst of them and so much bad in the best of them, that by the time you've figured out who did what to whom, and why, the second feature is half way through.

Let's take a turn around Hollywood sound stages and look in on what the so-called villains are doing. The more we investigate the more confusing it all becomes.

Investigation on Sets. Stopping first on the set of "Dixie," at Paramount, a certain Mr. Bones is found to be a no-good character if there ever was one. As portrayed by Billy De Wolfe, he's a superconceited, double-dealing card sharp who gyps Bing Crosby out of all his money and leaves him stranded on a ferryboat. Later, he takes all the credit for Crosby's minstrelshow accomplishments. He gets Crosby in and out of one scrape after another, but he does it all so charmingly, so openly and so amusingly that you didn't even resent it when he walks off with Dorothy Lamour. (Especially since Bing has married Marjorie Reynolds in the meantime.) But a heel has really got no right to be so likable.

Then there's that treacherous. black-hearted, vacillating Pablo in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," who back. Made the Leap From Truck-Driving To 'Moon Is Down'

HOLLYWOOD. One of those things that happens only in Hollywood happened to Peter van Eyck, a disappointed truck driver, today when he was chosen for one of the biggest roles in one of the biggest films to be made this Thirty-year-old Van Eyck was signed by 20th Century-Fox to play the role of Lt. Tonder, a frustrated young Nazi army officer, in John Steinbeck's famous novel, "The Moon Is Down.

Van Eyck won the role in competition with a dozen or more experienced film actors, although he had never acted in his life until he made a screen test for Producer Nunnally Johnson and Director Irving Pichel. One day Gummo Marx, an agent and one of the five Marx brothers. saw Von Eyck piloting his truck and toting chairs into a house. He signed him to a contract at once and began looking for jobs for him. But Van Eyck cannily kept his trucking job until Johnson and Pichel gave him the nod.

Annual Miniature Exhibition Has Nationwide Scope

By Florence S. Berryman. The Pennsylvania Society of Miniature Painters' 41st annual exhibition, which opened in the galleries of the National Collection of Fine Arts, Natural History Building, on December 12, is an engaging display of fine craftsmanship and appealing subject matter.

This exhibition came to Washington from the Pennsylvania Acadearly of Fine Arts, where it was shown last month. This is the second oldest miniature society in the United States and its annual exhibition is open to all miniature paint-ers. The national character of the present show can be gauged by the fact that the 46 exhibiting artists represent more than 30 cities in 14 States, ranging from New England to California. Two Washington miniaturists are included: Hattle E. Burdette with an enchanting little figure in a delicate high key, en-titled "Will-o'-the-Wisp," and Jay Trueworthy, who shows two works, "Sisters," a double portrait, and a study of an elderly woman in a violet gown.

The small size of miniatures, the exacting technique, and the fact that most contemporary miniature paintings are portraits give exhibitions of this work a more nearly homogeneous appearance than any other type of show. Nevertheless, study of the present display will reveal no little variety in handling, as well as subject matter.

Some of the works are on ivory, in the traditional stippled technique, others are on paper and painted broadly as aquarelles; still others are little oil paintings on canvas. There are landscapes, still lifes, marines, studies of trees and houses, as well as portraits; and there is a case of illuminated pages by Viola Oakley of a hymn by Mary Baker Eddy.

High Technical Level.

The technical level is so high that it seems invidious to select a few works for mention from so large a group (nearly 100). Nevertheless, one should not overlook "My Mother," by Virginia Hendrickson Irvin, quite marvelous in its handling on so small a scale, of the woman herself, lovingly painted, flowers in a copper cup beside her, and a mirror behind her, reflecting an unseen open window. Betsy Flagg Melcher's portrait of her daughter, Ursula, one of the prize winners, does full justice to an exquisite child.

Elinor C. Turning to landscapes and marines, one should not miss Walter Emerson Baum's dark-toned "River-Town," which received an honorable mention; a little beach scene, "A Bit of Jekyll Island," by Nathalie L'Hommedieu Jackson; John Dull's N. Y. Camera Club aquarelle, "Apartment House," and "The Three Chimneys," by A. Margaretta Archambault. "Camel's Hump, Bethlehem." by Ann Taube landscape. Harriet Wentworth's "Le Port de Cannes" is a little oil on canvas of a harbor scene, while "Apple Picker" by Catharine Morris Wright is done in gouache.

Washington 'Artists

For Victory'

Immediately after the outbreak of war last year, artists all over the country formed into groups to offer their services to the armed forces and the Government. The Artists' Guild of Washington was one of them. In New York City, 21 artists' groups combined to form two large rival organizations, which finally amalgamated under the name "Artists for Victory," and early in the year announced that a comprehensive exhibition open to all American artists would be held this month at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which would bestow the sum of $52,000 in 42 prizes.

The exhibition opened on December 7 (to remain through February 22) and the overworked word "colossal" seems to be the only proper description with respect to size. More than 1,400 works, 532 paintings in oil and water color, 305 sculptures and 581 prints, occupy all but one room of the museum's entire paintings section. It is one of the most gigantic shows ever put on in the United States.

Of approximately 1,100 different artists represented, 17 are Washingtomians by residence, birth or long association. A more painstaking perusal of the catalogue might augment this number, for artists are listed according to the present home addresses, which are sometimes across the Potomac.

Washington artists represented with oil paintings include Edward Bruce, head of the section of fine design must be accompanied by a arts, with "Klamath River"; Nicolai sealed envelope inclosing the artist's Cikovsky (who lived here for several years and taught at the Corcoran School of Art), "Midsummer"; with the same number as the de-Richard Lahey, director of the Corcoran School, "Flowers From Our main unopened until after the se-Garden": Andrea Pietro Zerega. Washington sculptors include Isabel Blai with "Release," William H.

"The Old Doll," by Elsie Dodge Pattee, included in the 41st annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Society of Miniature Painters in the Natural History Building.

America Is Urged To Recognize Its Own Native Talent

By Alice Eversman. This Christmas season more than any within the last quarter of a century has made us realize the blessings which we possess as citizens of the United States. It has changed the character of our patriotism giving it a special kinship with our religious convictions. It has made us proud of our stamina and of our material and intellectual progress. Among the latter is the great strides made in music appreciation and today music of the best quality is considered a spiritual need rounding out our many other accomplishments.

There are in this country men and women who have devoted their lives for many years past to the furthering of musical development in a land necessarily so occupied with the ordinary demands of living as to have little time for the arts. These men and women have struggled against overwhelming odds for they had as ideals an aim that seemed of small consequence beside the pressing purposes of the moment They have become the writers and interpreters of music and have created a national art of no mean

With all our patriotism, however, we are loath to give credit to this special group trying now, as it has tried for many years, to lay a foun-dation of an art strictly of this country. The American artist and the American composer have very little honor from their own people and, for some strange reason, the majority is content to have it so. We are kept fully acquainted with the great masters of all nationalities and when a new light appears on their musical horizons we hasten to recognize him and spread the news of his accomplishment far and wide. Foreign artists and foreign pedagogues still bedazzle the eyes of American musicians who rarely dare to question their ability. Is it not about time that we extend our patriotism to the support of our own musicians? What difference does it make, when one comes down to hard facts, if they are not the equal of a Beethoven, a Tschaikowsky or a Sibelius? They are ours, named, sizes of the wall spaces, giving of their ability to create a musical hierarchy in this country, material on the historical aspects and doing so, not always from a perof the subjects, information about sonal ambition, but with a genuine the contract and other details, are wish to fill a vacancy in our developsupplied in the announcement of ment. Departure From Religion

Alfred Noyes Views It as Cause Of Many Woes Besetting World

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

The Edge of the Abyss

By Alfred Noyes. (E. P. Dutton.)

This is an essay on the present state of the world, but, unlike most of the numerous contemporary works on the subject, it does not deal with politics, war, social wrongs or economic evils. It reaches, instead, for the diagnosis of these ills, the trouble with the modern human soul. And it finds that trouble to be man's departure from religion, his rejection of moral standards and his abnegation of individual responsibility. In spirited, even exalted prose, Mr. Noyes attacks the various prophets who, in his opinion, have led the people from the truth, and pleads for a reinstitution of conscience as the guiding force in human affairs, national as

One of the greatest of the anti-conscience forces, as he sees it, is the modern, controlled state, which, he says, has become so enslaved to political expediency that to use the words "good" and "evil" in connection with it is to be merely ridiculous. It is generally recognized, he says, that the power which determines the collective conduct of a people is not controlled by the principles which govern the separate citizens. And so, he points out, we have the world-wide spectacle of men who, in their private existences, are punished for even slight infractions of the moral law, being ordered out to die in support of governments which conduct themselves, by analogy, as thugs. And it is not only of the totalitarian governments which he speaks. They started the business, he says, but the democracies have followed suit with a terrible alacrity.

As a case in point he quotes the recent history of Finland. "If I can honestly assured," he says, "that the whole of the responsible press of the English-speaking world was wrong about Finland, and that Russia was right, I am ready to believe it. But I cannot help possessing a memory and, in the meantime, those individuals who so enthusiastically worked for 'aid to Finland'-the heroic defense of which, in England and America, only a few short months ago, was compared with that of Thermopylaeare confronted by the fact that the stare has no memory.

Sees Men's Lives Ordered by Anarchy of Expediency.

"It had no memory at the end of the last war to 'make the world safe for democracy.' It will have no memory at the end of this war to 'end armaments and save the world from fear'; no memory whatsoever, except on one possibility. * * * No statement of peace aims can be more than a straw in the wind, or an election promise, unless it implies a radical change of heart and mind. * * * If it is to endure, it must come from the shaken depths of the soul, with a new conviction of the eternal truth: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

The improbability that such a salutary change will come about is Mr. Noyes' theme. Everywhere, in all walks of life, he sees the principles of good being discredited and men's lives ordered by the anarchy of expediency. In literature, as in government, he says, the fashion is to mock at honor, dignity, kindliness and good morals, and to exalt the opposite. He castigates fiercely the whole modern movement in letters for its preoccupation with man's lower nature and its active contempt not merely for idealism but for common garden variety decency and goodness.

It seems to the reviewer that he is a bit inclusive here, for there are modern writers who have not lost sight of the fact that man is an aspiring creature and whose very cynicism has been a lamentation at man's failure to reach his aspirations—not a denial of the aspirations themselves. Aldous Huxley is such a one—the very head and front of the modern school. Moreover, while the lower nature of man has been disgustingly exploited in the name of literature for purely mercenary ends by a large school of writers and, as Mr. Noyes observes, by our most respectable publishers, it cannot be said that the marketing of filth has been the motive of all writers who have dealt in the material. There have been some sincere artists whose study has been man in the round man in his entirety, and these writers, animated by a zeal for truth, do not deserve to be put down as dirt-mongers because they have shown grime in the common composition.

Plea for Return to Religion Is Keystone of Book.

At that, there is enough truth in Mr. Noyes' accusation for it to be received with respect. The public is not given to making fine critical distinctions, and the sordid imitators of the mannerisms of the genuine artists have undoubtedly done harm enough to weigh seriously against the good which the artists may have accomplished. For the good will have to be evaluated on a long-range scale. It will show itself in a disappearance of prejudices some 50 years from now. But the harm is immediate. It is to be found in the manners of the moment, and the moment in which we live is ill suited for any worsening, no matter if

Mr. Noyes' plea for a return to religion is, of course, the keystone of his book, and one feels that it might be commended to religious leaders as well as to the populace. For if men are to return to the churches for their help, then the churches must give that help. Our great present trouble is that we have come to regard leaders in every field with profound cynicism. We associate leadership with its emoluments, rather than with its responsibilities. We think of organizations as being agglomerations of jobs, and our young people-particularly-accept with horrirying readiness the idea that any man will do anything to keep his job and that it is nonsense to expect him to take any other course. What we need-and Mr. Noyes is very clear on the point-is men and women who can demonstrate their incorruptibility in devotion to principles. If the churches were to supply this demonstration, it seems most likely that they would regain their authority over the lives of the people. For, as Mr. Noyes says, the political leaders do not supply it, nor do the intel-

The Mountains Wait By Theodor Broch. (Webb Book Publishing Co.)

At the time of the Nazi invasion of Norway, Theodor Broch was Mayor of Narvik. He was an unusually young man for the job; he was in his early 30s. But when the old Mayor had moved up in accordance with Narvik's established rules of political promotion, he was drafted for the place by his fellowtownsmen because they had found him a fairminded and competent fellow. He had come to the town shortly after finishing law school, deciding that he preferred the personal sort of practice which a small community offered to the more profitable but humanly less rewarding work of a city. He had seriously handled the little disputes of the peasants, showing himself as zealous for the poor as for the well-to-do, building up a reputation for himself in the cautious his score on the rifle range—that Scandinavian minds of his neighbors as a just man who was also hard to fool. But from their very lack of experience with such dubious types, says Mr. Broch, the Norwegians came to disaster.

They did not suspect, until too late, that a neurotic's craving for power could be other than ridiculous. They were all familiar with Mai. Mr. Brock's book is more the formula for becoming a successful correspondent than it is the inside story of anything. Patricial Strauss, an active member of the British Labor Party for more than a decade, tells here the story of Sir Stafford Cripps and his rise to the No. 2 place in Great Britain, as a member of the war cabinet, and as government leader in the House of Commons. A few months ago Cripps was regarded as a possible next Prime Minister. Since this book was written, however, he has been taken out of the war cabinet and made minister of aircraft production and the leadership of the government forces in the House of Commons has been intrusted to other hands. Though he has undergone a partial eclipse, Cripps still holds an important sition in the political life of his country and he may yet become the

Though the book is incomplete in that it fails to cover his recent demotion and the apparent waning of his influence and popularity, it is a good biography of one of Britain's outstanding war leaders. Cripps is a member of an upper-class English family with a long background of liberalism and public service. Beatrice and Sidney Webb, intellectual leaders of English Socialism, are his aunt and uncle, and his father and grandfather both served in the House of Commons.

A Socialist in his political beliefs, Cripps joined the Labor party a few years after the First World War. In 1930 he was apopinted solicitor general in the labor government of Prime Minister MacDonald, quickly winning recognition as one of the party's ablest men. Intensely interested in social reform at home and the improvement of the living conditions of English workers, Cripps also followed closely the ominous course of international developments. Following the rise of Hitler in 1933 he warned that Naziism carried with it the threat of world war. He called for action against Japan when the Tokio war lords moved into Manchuria, urged aid without stint to China and vigorously opposed the Munich "appeasement" agreement. In 1939 the Labor party expelled him for advocating the collaboration of all opposition parties in ousting Chamberlain.

Long an advocate of closer relations between Great Britain and Soviet Russia, Cripps was appointed Ambassador to Moscow in 1940. His tour of duty in the Soviet capital did much to create a better understanding between the two countries. Returning to England early in 1942. Cripps in a speech on February 8 appealed for a greater war effort by both the British people and the government.

"Next morning it was obvious that Cripps had been swept to a pinnacle of popularity comparable only to Churchill's ascendancy after Dunkirk," Mrs. Strauss declares. Then followed his appointment to the war cabinet and his designation as government leader in the House of Commons, the first time that this post had gone to a man without a political

In explaining the secret of his political strength, which reached its peak in March, the author expresses the view that Cripps was not a crisis politician, "hurled from obscurity to high office by the exigencies of war." The people forced Churchill to include Cripps in the cabinet, she says, "not solely because of their aspirations for the future but because of their conviction that social progress and the conduct of the war are indivisible."

Mrs. Strauss adds little to our knowledge of the Cripps mission to India, through which the government hoped to reach a solution of the problem of India's independence and its relation to the empire's war effort. Despite the high expectations for his mission, Cripps returned from India empty-handed and it seems clear now that his failure has resulted in a lessening of his popularity at home.

Cripps owes his prestige, in the author's opinion, to qualities of THE WAR.

Most important, though, although not brought out adequately in the novel, was the fact that Emily, sensitive and honest person that she was, had more than her share of the "New England conscience." She read Emerson and the early Puritan poets. She also read Harriet Beecher Stowe and felt with her on slavery, the leading question of the

News of the Philatelic World, Its Interests and People

By James Waldo Fawcett. The Post Office Department, inactive since July 7 so far as new issues have been concerned, now at last has announced a 2-cent stamp "as a tribute to the unity with which the liberty-loving nations of the world are marching toward victory." Red in color and of regular size, the projected adhesive will replace the current 2-cent Defense label, released October 16, 1940. It will go on sale in Washington exclusively on Thursday, January 14, at 8 a.m. Details of the design are to be disclosed shortly. There has been a hint that it may be an adaptation of a sketch submitted by Paul F. Berdanier of Scarsdale, N. Y., and his group of philatelic artists.

Postmaster General Frank C. Walker, in his authorization of the United Nations issue, acknowledges the validity of the argument long since put forward by collectors and stamp writers for such propaganda productions in aid of the national cause. "Although the burden of wartime work necessarily has resulted in a reduction of the number of new stamps issued," he said, "it was felt that an occasional new issue stressing an outstanding wartime theme would be well worth while because of its psychological effect on the public.'

It may be hoped that the Post Office Department hereafter will be faithful to the sentiment expressed by its chief. There is no reason why a program of two new stamps a month would be impractical. The Northern Virginia tournament, the classic contract event of the Old Dominion which is usually held at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria, has been temporarily transferred, perhaps for the duration, to Washington because of war conditions. The dates for the gathering have also been advanced one week to January 22, 23 and 24. The meet will occur at one of the big Capital hotels to be determined

It is probable that there will likewise be some slight curtafiment of the program following the plan adopted by the recent annual tournament here of the Washington Bridge League when some of the features were combined in two sessions and the team of four game was eliminated. According to present arrangements, however, there will be a men's and a women's pair game played separately but contemporaneously each in one session on Thursday.

There will also be a mixed-pair game in one session and doubtless an open-pair contest in two sessions on Sunday.

The customary trophies will be awarded in each event and also match points in accordance with the listings of the American Contract Bridge League, which is to sponsor the tourney.

A part of the cash proceeds will be donated to the War Orphans' Scholarship Fund, which is pro-moted by William E. McKenney, the secretary of the league, with the proviso that the money shall be deorphan of a Virginia soldier, preferably one from the northern section and Mrs. Robert Patterson, wife decided that the purpose of Jango would be to aid the war effort through fellowship and service. With Virginia Campbell as president and Mrs. Laurence Crolius as vice president, the group wrote a constitution, scheduled meetings and planned projects.

Girls and women between the ages of 14 and 28 who are daughters, wives, sisters, nieces and first cousins of officers in the services were invited to the first meeting. This group contacted other girls and young women and invited them to the meetings. In this way, Jango grew. At present there are 250 registered members.

The organization meets every Tuesday at the Parish Hall on O street N.W. from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m. During the meetings, Red Cross handiwork is carried on. The making of quilts is the most popular Whenever possible, a guest speaker is present to offer new fields of service. Most recently, a Navy nurse spoke of her life as a prisoner of the Japanese. The conditions she said she had to endure were horrible. In their work, Jango girls wear a neat blue jumper, trimmed in red and white, and a white blouse. An emblem designating the type of work the girl does is displayed on the sleeve of the blouse.

At first, the Jango Junior Nurses could do only a few odd jobs because of lack of training, but an intensive course has made it possible for them to enlarge their duties. Nurses have said these helpers are indispensable. Other girls get up at 6 a.m. on Saturdays and go to the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines' Club to serve breakfast. There are 30 girls who help at the canteen during the week. On two Thursdays of every month Jangos crowd into an ambulance which takes them to Walter Reed Hospital From 7 to 9 p.m. the girls hold a square dance with convalescent soldiers. A "caller" has been furnished by the USO: he assists every one and teaches both McNutt Gives Hint.

Paul V. McNutt, the war manwhen he announced last week that more than 150,000 college men would get temporary draft deferment to continue medical, engineering and other specialized scientific training.

The deferment will last until the end of the school year and meantime, Mr. McNutt said, plans will be worked out for the education of a number of civilians by Govern- today

How large the program will be will depend on how much money Congress appropriates, and it is considered certain that the legislators will examine and debate every detail of a plan which involves the question of whether Johnny, son of a constituent back home, shall (a) go into the Army or Navy, or (b) attend college at Government expense. That applies, of course, only to the young men physically fit to be soldiers or sailors.

Dr Francis J Brown consultant to the American Council on Education, says he expects freshmen classes next year will include many 17-year-olds. There is a movement afoot to encourage them to enter college, even though they may not have completed high school. Otherwise, Dr. Brown sees next year's college group falling pretty much into these categories: 1. The women. There may be a slump in numbers due to the temptation to pass up college and grab a high-paying war job. 2. Men not physically fit for the armed services 3. Pre-professional and profes-instance, is having approximately 1.000 women trained as aviation engineers. Other industrial firms and the Government may follow suit. 5. Men and women who continue to work in industry while receiving instruction in classrooms or by extension services. 6. Men and women in uniform.

Revamping House D. C. Committee; Civic Protest Prevails in Housing

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Proposal to Improve House District Committee

Civic and business groups are showing great interest in the announced attempt by Chairman Jennings Randolph, Democrat, of West Virginia, of the House District Committee, and by Representative Everett M. Dirksen, Republican, of Illinois, ranking minority member, to bring about an improved and more efficient House District Committee. The announcement of this effort was one of the civic highlights of the past week.

The first part of this plan is to reduce the committee's size from 21 members to 15. The second is to give parliamentary right of way for the consideration of District bills when ready, instead of being held for the bi-monthly District Days. Because of the quantity of local emergency legislation pressing for enactment at this time, the House leadership is reported to be friendly to the proposed innovation.

It is understood also that an attempt will be made to have more care used in selection of members for service on the District Committee from among the more seasoned representatives who understand local conditions and are willing to give active service.

A practice long followed in the Senate, which has increased the influence of its District Committee, would fit in very well as an addition to the announced plans of Representatives Randolph and Dirksen. The Senate regularly assigns members of its legislative District Committee to sit in as members ex officio of the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the Senate when District of Columbia appropriation bills are under consideration. This practice has had a decided tendency to promote teamwork between the legislative and the appropriations committees. Attempts have been made in the past to have this plan adopted by the House, but without success

This rule of the Senate is applied to all of its committees and not only as a special privilege granted the District Committee. Another feature of the Randolph-Dirksen proposal is to have a non-partisan committee through the naming of eight majority and seven minority members.

Civic Protest Against Temporary Housing Heeded

The action last week by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission in rescinding its approval, previously granted to the Alley Dwelling Authority, for the erection of 44 temporary housing units along Fort Drive, was a prompt and very satisfactory response to the vigorous protest made by the Manor Park Citizens' Association, in which the Federation of Citizens' Associations joined. The property upon which these temporary buildings were to have been erected was acquired for a scenic parkway, connecting the numerous Civil War forts. When originally projected, this parkway ran through undeveloped sections which have since been fully

The citizen groups based their objection upon the injury to the neighborhood such development would bring, with the consequent depreciation of private property values.

All of the land acquired for the Fort Drive Parkway was purchased with the local tax money carried in the District's annual appropriation bills but the title to all such land was taken in the name of the United States Government.

There is still in prospect erection of other large groups of famfly units of this temporary character on private land which is to be leased by the Government for the purpose. Some of these are located in "A restricted" areas where the use of the property for such purpose will materially lower the standard of development in these detached home sections.

Another objection to the location of such buildings on the Fort Drive Parkway was the fact that such locations were not convenient to the places of employment of the war workers who would be housed therein. The same objection could be raised against some of the other locations selected by the Alley Dwelling Authority which by reason of distance from places of employment would increase largely the transportation problem.

In some of these sections property owners have been somewhat reluctant to protest the erection of these objectionable temporary structures for fear of being accused of attempting to interfere with the war effort. Objections were heard at meetings of some of the citizens' associations affected and there was desire hood as planned and developed under the zoning regulations.

These groups hold that the same reasons exist in case of the threatened invasions of their neighborhoods with these undesirable temporary structures that prompted the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to rescind its approval of the use of the Fort

More About a Self-Disciplined Liquor Trade

Reference in this column last Sunday to suggestions by some of the local liquor trade to follow voluntarily a plan of restrictions during the war has excited some interest and a desire for details. Merely to make the picture more comlete there follow quotations from an editorial in the Beverage Bulletin, a local liquor publication, of October 31, 1942.

"The defeat of the Lee amendment carries with it a great danger to the alcoholic beverage industry. That is the plain and important fact that all of those in the industry who are commenting on the event seem to be overlooking.

"This industry cannot afford to sit back and contemplate the defeat of the Lee amendment through rose-colored glasses while telling itself, 'Everybody loves me. I'll go along my merry way and nothing will happen to me.' . .

"A great many people are in doubt as to the wisdom or desirability of continuing the sale of liquors during the wartime entirely aside from their beliefs about prohibition and temperance. They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of leaving thousands of men and women employed in the liquor business when their services might be put to more useful purpose in other fields

"They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of leaving thousands of motor vehicles with rubber tires at the disposal of the liquor business when those tires and those vehicles might be put to serving other purposes. They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to consume thousands of gallons of gasoline and oil when that gasoline and oil might be put to serving more useful purposes.

"They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to occupy space, in stores and warehouses when that space might be used in a direct war effort. They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to use great quantities of materials, such as glass, paper and caps when such materials consume time of workers in manufacturing. They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of devoting to the liquor business railroad cars and shipping space which might be used for transporting men and freight more

"With this skepticism existing not only among the enemies of the business, but among many of its friends, it is obvious that the business exists only on sufferance. The tendency to permit it to operate will decrease as the war pressure increases and you may rest assured that the war pressure will continue to increase.

"Consequently any one who thinks that the defeat of the Lee amendment ends the peril to the industry is living in a fool's

"What is the business doing about this real danger? The answer is nothing. That is probably not the complete answer. The business is doing nothing to abate the real danger. It is doing many things to increase that danger.

"We are beating the drums for the sale of more liquor. We are waving the banners for greater and greater consumption. We are increasing the waste of manpower and material power in the business along many lines. We are consuming materials that we don't have to consume. We are using more gasoline and oil than we need to use. We are using more space than we need to use. And more than that we are shouting to the public that we are using these things while the public knows that we are a non-essential and purely luxury business. "If this business wants to cut down the danger that it finds itself in, if it wants to weather the storm which its own actions are brewing, its course is simple. It must find a seat in the back of the hall and sit in it and keep quiet.

"To carry out that prescription would bring drastic changes. It would mean the end of all advertising, retail, wholesale and distiller. It would mean the end of the display of liquor, in windows, on bars and everywhere else. It would mean that we would have liquor for sale and that is all.

"The public that wants liquor would find it in its legal place. The public that doesn't want liquor and, in fact, doesn't want anything that isn't directly helpful to the war effort, wouldn't have liquor flaunted in its face every time it listened to the radio, read a newspaper, or walked down the street. That is the only way for the industry to meet the real danger to its existence. Has the empaindustry the courage to meet that challenge and conduct itself

> Citizens Supporting Three-for-a-Quarter Plan Promise 'New Evidence' at Hearing

By BAINBRIDGE CRIST. The old fight between the Capital Transit Co. and certain citizens sups over the proposed sale of three tokens for 25 cents by the transit firm may launch the 1943 civic year in a flurry of debate.

On the petition of the Fort Davis Citizens' Association, which has aken an increasingly active part in public utility matters, the Public Utilities Commission agreed to a reconsideration on Tuesday, January 12. of their previous decision against .

the sale of three tokens for 25 cents. The hearing, to be held in the board room of the District Building, is scheduled to get under way at 10 a.m. The order denying the plan was nanded down November 20, although dated May 12. It was withheld to await the dissenting opinion of Commissioner Gregory Hankin.

WAVES Are Replacing Procurement Office Enlisted Men

Administrative Officers May Be Replaced Later; More Women Needed

Infiltrate in to the Naval Reserve Officer Procurement Station here, and are being assigned to work which has been done by enlisted men. The men are needed in combat areas and aboard ships, and as quickly as qualified WAVES complete training they will be sent here to replace them.

Assignment of the WAVES, it was explained, does not mean an increase in the complement of the local offices. Each WAVE assigned here will release an enlisted man for combat duty. While at present shifts are being made only in enlisted branches, it is possible that as soon as WAVES' officer schools begin turning out a number of students, they will be assigned to administrative jobs now held by line

Need WAVES Recruits. Much of this program depends on offices in interesting women in the WAVES services. The Washington office has not been very successful so far. Although some are enlisting, thousands more are needed.

There is no assurance that those who enlist in a particular area will serve there. The prospect of being transferred to other areas in the continental United States-WAVES are limited to duty in this country-probably is one of the main reasons why WAVES enlistments here are slowing down. Procurement officers said they believed that in the case of Government employes many would consider WAVES' service if they could be assured that they would be left on

Many of these are expected to renew the applications, and in the case of those who do not. it is likely that procurement officers will contact them to tell them of the change in the law. In the mafority of these cases, the applicants have been willing to waive all claims in order to enter the service. Many responses were received to the appeal last week for men with construction experience to apply for commissions and warrants in the service, but in most cases the men were either too old or were physically disqualified. Applicants must be engineers or must have had considerable experience in actual construction work, particularly as foremen of construction crews. We are at the close of one of the real blitzkrieg experts consider the radio as a first-line offensive weapon-and use it as such. If the Anglo-American armies are to invade Europe successfully-especially if we are to do so with a maximum penetration and a minimum loss of life-our leaders must know how to outblitz the Nazis. That can never be done if we leave powerful radio stations idle (so far as our own American-prepared propaganda is concerned) for the first two or three

Failure to Use Algiers Radio Compared

Since I was in Moscow when our star-spangled balloon shot up over Morocco and Algeria, and was traveling through Iran and the Middle East as our occupation developed, I had immediate contact with the reaction of Russians and of Iranians and other neutrals to our North African operation. Everywhere they were impressed by the speed of the initial American landings. But almost everywhere, as the Allied thrust against Bizerte and Tunis seemed to lag and falter, there was a natural tendency to be less impressed. In the minds of Iranians, for instance, there was genuine surprise that the Americans had apparently made a deal with Admiral Jean Darlan. To them, and undoubtedly to the great majority of people in every occupied European country, this seemed a confession American military weakness.

Communication and supply obstacles have certainly been very great in North Africa. Nevertheless, the average neutral observer in Teheran, Bagdad or Cairo, is puzzled by the fact that Tunis and Bizerte were not occupied by the Allies within the first two or three weeks at the most. These outside observers do not understand why several thousand Allied paratroops were not landed near these cities before the Germans had recovered from their surprise and begun to move in transport planes. It seems to them that the Americans and British must have had a great preponderance of bombers and transport planes at that stage, but that we shrank from taking the kind of risks that the Nazis took in Norway.

own case to the French people over the ether. By the time OWI broadcasts finally began to go out from Algiers the Germans had ordered confiscation of most radios in France. Certainly, no American war correspondent wants to pour a single drop of ice water on our Army's real achievements in North Africa. For all that, however, factual reporting requires the further statement that neutral Europeans have been baffled by the way the political side of the Allied occupation has been handled. The Russians were frankly dismayed by the late Admiral Darlan's emergence as supreme French official in North Africa. What, for example, would be the effect on the Russians? Already the Darlan incident has cost us dearly with the Russian leaders. They asked themselves: If the Americans will make such a deal today, won't they be capable of making a deal tomorrow with Mussolini, and the day after with Goering or Himmler? Cites Need of Propaganda.

These observations are all pointed to one thing-the imperative importance of having a precise propaganda and political program whenever the Allied armed forces invade the European continent. Liberation of the enslaved European countries cannot be uniquely a military operation. Liberation must be a psychological operation as well, and Americans and Britishers must be prepared to re-establish local government-and then national governments-as their troops fight their way ahead.

In all probability, our forces have been learning some valuable military lessons in North Africa, and, undoubtedly, as with everything in life, they have been paying a certain price for what they have learned or are learning today. That When our North African opera- the next step-the opening up of a second front somewhere on European soil. Certainly our armed forces should function much better, then, as a result of their clash with hard facts in North Africa.

On the political and propaganda side, however, this ought to be equally true. It will not be easy for most of our career Army officers to adapt themselves to the complexities of Europe's present political and social chaos, nor to the necessities of modern, high-speed propaganda warfare. Nevertheless, in order to win the war in Europe and defeat Nazi Germany decisively the United Nations must use every weapon in the arsenal of totalitarian warfare. That means that Americans, above all, must take the leadership in using all these weaponsand use them with ruthless determination and firmness. These are some of the most significant lessons from our North African experiment on occupation and invasion. If North Africa, on the whole, has been a good start, it also has shown where improvements are urgently needed. In the next round, when we come smack up against the master blitzkriegers in their entrenched positions, we shall need to use every weapon at our command-and use them to the utmost of our ability. That's what North Africa is warning all of us

Church Groups Agree To Merger Affecting 30,000,000 Members

60 Denominations Vote To Work Together Under New Program

CLEVELAND, Dec. 26.-Church men and women representing 30, 000,000 churchgoers from the Rio Grande to the Arctic Circle have formally buried competition as a stock in their trade. The report of their action, if you saw it in the papers, looked dry as dust. It said the eight huge "interdenominational agencies" of the non-Roman churches of the United States and Canada had adopted a "report of the committee on closer relationships."

It's a merger to put it simply, but it won't be in full effect until 1945 because the huge agencies who sent representatives to Cleveland still must approve the move in their own conventions, and then some 60 denominations must approve. But it's pretty much a foregone conclusion Merger of Work.

This move was a merger in only one sense-work. It is not a merger that will wipe out all the small ceremonial differences and variations in creeds. There has been talk of this merger for years. Actually the first suggesalmost forgotten Lutheran, Samuel burg, Pa. But quite obviously he was a hundred years too soon.

On the national and international front other church workers, with the best will in the world, found themselves stepping on each others' toes. The outstanding "steppers" were the foreign missions and the Council for Religious Education. It didn't result in scrapping. It just resulted in some one saying to some one else: "I hear you're off for Beirut. Would you look up a matter for us, too?

Mexicans Keep Wishing Shrine Tradition Alive

TUCSON, Ariz., Dec. 26.-One of he most popular spots in the Old Pueblo these days is the historic Wishing Shrine, located in a section of the city now chiefly inhabited by Mexicans, about one of whose heroes the wishing shrine legend is woven

The shrine is the burial place of a Mexican named Ramon; that much s definitely known. The story has it that Ramon was a sort of Mexican Robin Hood, tossing his loot through the windows of the needy. Idolized by the poor and hated by the rich, he was finally killed and buried at the spot where the shrine now stands. Believers in Ramon built the shrine and ever since have burned candles for his spirit. Many of them believe that the burning of sufficient candles causes him to ride

There is little showmanship in the serious ritual of these descendants of peons who nightly bring their pennies and candles to the shrine. While few of Tucson's visitors take seriously the Ramon fantasy, none can fail to be impressed with the obvious sincerity of the Mexicans who have made a rite of attending the simple outdoor shrine.

Big Tips Rare

MONTREAL, Dec. 26.-Big tips are rare but the general standard s good for "red cap" service in Canada, says Henri Lalonde, "red cap" captain for the Canadian National Railways here. And Henri should know because he has been "red cap" for 40 years. Henri always looked after the bags of the late President William Howard Taft when the latter passed through Montreal to and from his summer home at Murray Bay.

North African Sheiks Vie For Honor of Serving Native 'Delicacies'

By WILLIAM H. STONEMAN, Correspondent of The Star an Chicago Daily News.

SOUK-EL-KHEMIS, Dec. 24 (Delayed).—We've been dive-bombed, semi-dive-bombed, shelled, ma-chine-gunned and sniped at during this slight campaign in North Africa, but all of that is nothing compared with Arab hospitality. It is one thing to duck into a trench while the stuff whistles overhead or Stukas create a local earthquake. It is another thing to have to take it inside. Having fallen into the hands of a few local Arab chieftains and big-time Arab fathers for 24 hours, we are now ready to return to the front with pleasure. Food Handled Like Sawdust.

Last night there was what was described in advance as a modest little dinner for two of us. It consisted of a mountain of spaghetti with garlic sauce and a platter of young lamb which they dumped on our plates as though it was sawdust. There followed a quince dessert-a solid and delightful composition which would take the blue ribbon at any American country fair. Later, as full as billy goats, we were forced to go to the neighboring domicile of the local sheik, where we were stuffed with piles of succulent seedless oranges, excellent mint tea and much local

Today we returned to lunch with the brother of the gentleman who had previously entertained us. It a cooscoos luncheon. Cooscoos is wheat meal carefully kneaded and steeped in the fumes of chicken broth, served doused in the broth with meat and vegetables. We had hors d'oeuvres, then cooscoos then boiled chicken, then a spinach omelette and oranges. Asked to Return.

Two local Arab chieftains, whose names cannot be mentioned, sat at the end of the room gazing at us while seven of us bolted our food. making light conversation and demanding that two of us Americans should return to eat there every evening.

are all engaging in competition as to who shall have the Americans in to eat roast lamb first. The sheik insists he has the first call and the others are equally demanding. WPB Order Requires Makers of Photo-Engravings to

by 25%, and 50% February 15

IN ORDER to conserve zinc, essential in the manufacture of vital mall arms ammunition, the WPB has ordered a 25 per cent reduction in the use of zinc by all makers of photo-engravings. And effective February 15, 1943, this reduction must be increased to 50 per cent. (Reductions are based on the amount of zinc used by cut makers during corresponding quarters of 1941.)

To great advertising newspapers such as The Star, these reductions are serious and will require the utmost co-operation by all advertisers and creators of advertising in order that they may be accomplished with a minimum of sacrifice on the part of any individual advertiser.

While the burden of making these reductions is placed on newspaper and commercial engraving plants, all users of photo-engravings will recognize the vital objective to be attained—that is, MORE ZINC FOR MORE AMMUNITION-and will accept the responsibility placed upon them to lend full co-operation in curtailing the use of zinc cuts wherever possible.

The problems created by this order are a challenge to individual initiative; but they will not prove burdensome to a profession of which initiative is an outstanding characteristic. Already the Advertising Club of Washington has formulated a twelve-point program which, if conscientiously followed, should accomplish the necessary result and still permit the professional and judicious use of zinc plates to a satisfactory degree.

The Evening Star endorses this program wholeheartedly and urges every advertiser to make it a daily part of his advertising policy.

Post-War Car to Go 50 Miles to Gallon, With No 'A' Cards

Influence of Airplane To Be Most Striking Change, Engineer Says

By FRANK CAREY, Associated Press Science Writer.
CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 26.— If you're having wartime motoring blues, just think of the car you may be driving in the post-war world: An automobile that would go 50 miles on a gallon of gasoline and have such features as "bounceless" tires, sliding doors and a heater that could be turned on by a

It's a prophecy of the car of tomorrow made today by William B. Stout of Dearborn, Mich., one of the Nation's foremost mechanical engineers, who has pioneered in many developments in the fields of automotive, aircraft and railroad transportation.

Mr. Stout, who built the first American commercial airplane, constructed the first internally braced cantilever airplane in America, started the first exclusive passenger airline in the country and helped design Henry Ford's first trimotored transport plane, said postwar automobile design would be influenced by present trends in aviation toward using every ounce of weight and every cubic inch of space for some purpose.

Sees "Glorious Revival."

In an article in the Technology Review he predicted that "the motorcar will have a glorious revival when peace comes" if the engineer is left alone and the manufacturer is allowed to build his cars as he wishes, unhampered by legislation that might tax a car according to

Here's what else he envisions: Cars will be cheaper to make and buy because of improved production methods and better engineering techniques.

Cars will be wider and stubbier than they are now-perhaps fenderless-with enough room inside for passengers to take a nap on a couchlike back seat during a long drive. The wider bodies will come clear out to the edge of the running

Due to extensive use of plastic materials in panels and body details, the machines will have onehalf the weight of present-day automobiles. Engines, instead of being of the liquid-cooled type, will be of the lighter, longer-lived aircooled type, like those in transport planes and bombers Lighter in Weight.

Because of their lighter weight. engines will for the most part be located in the rear without affecting the balance of the car. Long hoods out front will disappear and practically every bit of space lengthwise and crosswise will be usable. Forward side windows and windshield will be combined in a single piece of glass, or in two pieces meeting in a "V"-to provide greater The entire instrument panel may be eliminated, with colored warning lights replacing dials. There'll be indirect lighting, some form of Venetian blinds for the windows and gadgets to wash and strain air free of dust before it enters the car Due to progress made toward the production of tires that won't bounce, light cars may be conthat won't even need

Limits on Speed.

Declaring that present wartime limitations on speed may well be carried over into the post-war world, Stout said that engines of lower horsepower would be sufficient-perhaps a miximum of 30 horsepower. This, he said, would mean more mileage on a gallon of gasoline at cruising speed.

... . Cars probably will not be made with a view of longer life," he said, "but rather lower first cost, lower maintenance and quicker replacement

"We're going to have new production methods as well as new engineering techniques. We are going to have low cost of operation and of building as well. Cars will be designed for a minimum number of dies and tools, yet with a minimum number of man-hours necessary to assemble the job. Some of the airplane engines can now be assembled in less time than an automobile engine requires. These trends will continue.

Tax Bodies to Be Factor. But he warned that "the position of the motorcar in the hands of John Citizen following the war is going to depend entirely upon the wisdom or the asininity of our taxmaking bodies."

"If they follow the European method of permitting luxuries for only the rich and tax a car on its design-or in any way limit design by tax structure-the car will be designed by the tax assessor and not by the engineer." A final cold-weather thought about those alarm clock heaters: "Heaters," prophesies Mr. Stout, "will be so arranged that they will work for some time after the engine regular classified rate. stops and thus keep the car warm when no passenger is in it.

"The heater could be turned on by the clock an hour ahead of time in the morning so that the car would be warm when the owner sallied forth to his day's work."

New Paths To Freedom

An American concept of a postwar world: Contrast it with Hitler's schemes for a Nazi "new order" of universal slavery

by Vice-President Henry A. Wallace

E ARE witnessing today a race or struggle between geopolitics and the New Democracy. The outcome of that struggle will touch the lives of all of us. of our children, of our children's children.

What is geopolitics?

A generation ago a Scotch geographer by the name of Mackinder, Living in England, unwittingly became the spiritual grandfather of that so-called science. He claimed that the nation which had control of Eastern Europe and Western Asia had control of the "heartland" of the world. In other words, he believed that if Russia conquered Germany or if Germany conquered Russia the heartland would be dominated by one nation, and that nation would, by reason of its domination of the heartland, be able to control the whole world.

A German by the name of Haushofer read the Mackinder thesis and was inspired to work out plans which would give Germans control of the heartland and therefore of the world. These plans are known in Germany as geopolitics.

Hitler put flesh on the dry bones of geopolitics, speaking again and again of Lebensraum (or breathing space) as the road to world empire for the German people. Breathing space was Hitler's excuse for moving into the Balkan States and Russia. He now holds much of the heartland which Mackinder declared was necessary for world control, and has been striking for the rest. All Hitler needs to do under the Mackinder thesis is to consolidate his gains, hold onto them and from time to time move from the center outward in perfecting his world domination.

We in the United States do not believe in the Mackinder-Haushofer-Hitler brand of geopolitics. In the air-power world which is now so rapidly coming into being, America is just as much the heartland of the world as is Eastern Europe. Moreover, we in the United States, while having a full respect for geography, can't help wondering if ideas and organization do not play an even more important part in world destiny.

We believe the New Democracy is a more powerful tool than geopolitics. By New Democracy I do not mean Anglo-American domination of the world. The New Democracy differs from the old democracy in its willingness to realize that democratic principles must eventually be made available to all nations. The New Democracy has faith in Chinese, Russians, Latin Americans and all citizens of the United Nations. It believes in tolerance toward all men except those who have taken up arms to crush democracy.

Today and for the immediate future it happens that the United States and England have an unusual responsibility. Our two countries have great natural resources which we have been able to exploit efficiently through the skill of the political and industrial system which was evolved in the nineteenth century. But that which the United States and England have learned does not belong to us alone. For our own preservation we must pass it on to the rest of the world.

I am thinking especially of the billion people in Eastern Asia, the Middle East and Latin America. Four out of five of these people live on the land. Most of them because of small farms and lack of machines are less than one-tenth as efficient as United States farmers. They buy little - they sell little. Their average income per family is less than $100 a year. Perhaps one out of six knows how to read and write. They are only lightly touched as yet by the auto, the airplane, the telephone and the newspaper. But radio has reached into their lives, and their leaders by the thousands have received excellent technical education. We know that, given a chance, they are as intelligent as anyone. The rank and file want education, too.

They want the machines of modern civilization. They want our capital and our technical assistance, because that is their only quick way to get a higher standard of living. But above all, they want freedom from the fear of being jumped on or exploited by a powerful neighbor.

Whether we of the United States are moved by altruistic or selfish motives, the fact remains that for us the great physical frontier of the future is helping these billion people to conquer peacefully a higher standard of living for themselves. If we help them on a just basis, we in the United States will have security for many centuries and the opportunity of establishing a vast and mutually profitable trade. If we do not help them, World War No. 3 will come and our destruction will not be far behind.

Geographically speaking, I say the heartland of the future is not East Europe alone, but an arc extending from Buenos Aires at the south on up through the United States, Canada, Alaska, Siberia, Russia and Western Europe, and including China and India. Some day there will be a combination air and highway route linking this vast area together, and connecting by collateral water, land and air routes with the rest of the world. When the determined fight of our United Nations has won the peace of victory, no one power will be able to control this heartland of the future. Perhaps there will be a "Joint International Highway and Airway Authority," assuring access to all the nations which are eager to eliminate fear from the world and observe the principles of New Democracy in their dealings.

While this international highway-airway extending along the Americas and across Asia is being constructed, many efforts will be started to increase the agricultural efficiency and improve the education of the billion and more who are now so poverty-stricken. As the standard of living of free peoples is lifted, the peace of the world can be made secure.

SIDELINES

HERE are few American writers who have reflected the heartbeat of the United States and its people with such warmth and understanding as Booth Tarkington. Here, in a few hundred words, he speaks eloquently once more. This time it is on behalf of the hundreds of thousands of American fighting men who are spending the holiday season in camps, on ships, at far-flung posts.

USO. I asked a soldier what the USO had meant in this new life of his. He said, "I was in the Army before the USO got into operation and at first we didn't believe in it. We'd hear some important big shots had given the USO a lot of money and we'd turn on a sour grin, pretty positive that we'd never get the slightest good out of it.

"Then slowly for a while, but more and more as the thing got going, we began to see our mistake.

FUTURE. "But it's not just the material good — the recreation rooms, the books, the games, the cigarettes, the movies, the dinners in private houses and even the music and dancing — it's not those things that are the greatest help that's been brought into a soldier's life. There are two other things that count even more: one is that we're made to feel that the country's interested in us, that the American people think about us and feel friendly toward us, and, most of all, what we get from the USO is something to look forward to. Yes, I'm sure that's the biggest thing of all that the USO does for us: It gives us something to look forward to."

It seems to me that this soldier said it. "Something to look forward to" is what keeps all of us going, isn't it? Take it away and how many of us will have a strong heart for the battle of life? We can bear drudgery, tough routine and a great deal of anguish if we have "something to look forward to." We can't bear much without that.

When this soldier said that because of the USO our men have "something to look forward to" it meant that the day is coming when Hitler won't.

a girl—tall, competent, taciturn. I went in the other day looking for a certain aluminum gadget, and Lee shook her head.

"No more of those," she said.

I said it was too bad.

"What's too bad about it?" she snapped. "I have three brothers in uniform and another going, and I guess they need the aluminum worse than you do."

It shamed me. Somewhat lamely I parried, "But what's going to happen to your business if you can't get things to sell?"

She shook back her hair. "I'll get things to sell," she said, confidently. "I'll get along all right."

Frank Barnes is a barber in an Ohio town. Stuck between trains, I dropped in for a haircut. We got to talking about income taxes, and I said that a lot of us were going to have a tough time meeting the ante this next year.

Frank just laughed. "It doesn't worry me," he said. "After all, I can only eat so much. I only need one roof, and one bed, and decent clothes. Beyond that, the gov'ment can take everything I've got, and welcome. The main thing is to win the war."

That's America talking - America, 1943.

The main thing is to win the war. Let the "gov'ment" take everything it needs to do the job. We'll get along all right.

That's what they're saying in the grass roots, and it makes your insides tingle with pride. It's pretty fine, this tough, hard, confident, new wartime America.

The funny thing is, we will get along all right. It isn't going to be so bad this next year. Sure, we'll sacrifice plenty—if you want to call it that. We'll sacrifice, and we'll win the war, and a few years from now we'll have to think hard to remember what it was we sacrificed.

I've been in Washington trying to get a picture of what 1943 holds in store for you and me. It isn't easy. I talked with such men as James F. Byrnes, director of Economic Stabilization; Donald M. Nelson, chief of the War Production Board; Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Petroleum Co-ordinator Harold L. Ickes; Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard; Leon Henderson, the boss rationeer; Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission; Transportation Chief Joseph B. Eastman; Rubber Czar William M. Jeffers; Brigadier General Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, and others — scores of others. I talked with hard-boiled, far-seeing Washington correspondents, with anybody and everybody who could shed light on the future.

Here's a forecast: Some of it bad, some good—but all of it based on the hard facts of what we must do to win the war

by Don Eddy

Some things they see ahead are not pretty. But when you blow away the smoke, you begin to take heart. For these, I believe, are as true as any prophecies it is possible to make for 1943:

No American is going to suffer from hunger or cold. We'll have sufficient food, homes, heat and clothing.

Americans won't go broke unless they refuse to work, and it may be hard to do even that. Severe adjustments are ahead for many small businessmen and employees of nonessential businesses, and for those who cannot adapt themselves to war work. But for the physically and mentally fit, there will be jobs, at good pay.

No American is going to be taxed to death. Taxes will be higher, but they'll leave enough for necessities and a few luxuries.

If we drive carefully, and protect our tires, most of us will keep our automobiles and keep them running.

We'll be able to travel for essential purposes but not for pleasure. We'll have electricity, movies, radio and beer. We'll even have gadgets. They'll be made of synthetics and non-essential metals, but they'll work just as well.

No, it isn't going to be so bad. We'll get along all right.

And now that we know the best general picture, let's examine the details. Let's see what things are in the minds of the men and women who are running the war — and us.

YOUR JOB. It is entirely possible that you will have to change your job. Thirteen and a half million more individuals will have to be in essential war work by the end of 1943, and you're apt to be one of them. You'll want to be, for nonessential workers won't be popular.

Unless you make the change voluntarily, Uncle Sam may do it for you. A strong Washington faction has been trying since midsummer to get Congress to pass a National Service Act which would make everybody, male and female, above the age of 16, subject to conscription for wartime work. You could be drafted, just as men are drafted for military service.

Once you prove adept in a war job, you are apt to be "frozen" there for the duration. Workers in many lines already are forbidden to change jobs without permission, and this practice will be widely extended. You may work more than 40 hours a week before starting overtime, but probably not longer than 48.

If you don't go to work in war industry, you may be expected to help on a farm next summer. The shortage of farm labor in 1943 will be crucial. A land army will have to be recruited by some means, largely from among city people.

Women will have to come out of the kitchen. About 2,000,000 are in war production now; at least 5,000,000 more will have to start work by the end of 1943.

Shortage of workers is the most serious situation facing America today. What's the answer? Find people who never worked with their hands before! Maybe that means you.

YOUR INCOME. By and large, wages and salaries will be fairly static during 1943. If there are changes they are more likely to be up than down.

What about the "freezing" of wages and salaries? Will that stop you from getting a raise? Not necessarily. Increases in pay will be granted to "correct maladjustments or inequalities, to eliminate substandards of living, to correct gross inequities, or to aid in the effective prosecution of the war." Also, increases can be granted for "individual promotions or reclassifications, individual merit, or increased productivity." That seems to put it strictly up to you.

YOUR CHANCE OF BEING DRAFTED. If you are under 45, single and sound, and have been passed over because you hold a so-called "key" job, you'll probably be taking orders from a top sergeant any moment now. Employers will find it increasingly difficult to hold single men of military age, no matter how irreplaceable they may be.

Childless married men are already being drafted in some localities, and all others may expect to be re-examined early in 1943. Those classed as eligible will be inducted rapidly. Large numbers of married men will be in the Army before the year's end.

The Selective Service System has laid down hard-and-fast rules. They call for inductions in this order: 1. The teenagers and all remaining single men. 2. Childless married men not working in one of the 34 essential industries. 3. Childless married men working in one of the essential industries, but who are not completely irreplaceable. 4. Married men with dependent children.

The first group will be exhausted by the middle of this winter, at which time induction of the second group will begin. The third group will be called by midsummer. Nobody in Washington, so far, expects that the fourth group will be called.

YOUR BUSINESS. You've worked hard all your life to build up a little one-horse business, and now you see it shaking like a hula dancer. You can't get your regular merchandise. Your help is leaving. You can't make deliveries. What's going to happen to you? Well, ask yourself whether your business is a commodity or a luxury. If it is a luxury, lock it up for the duration. But if it is a commodity business, take heart. Help may be coming.

Behind the scenes, Congress is trying to evolve a law intended to save the little businessmen in essential lines. Something is reasonably sure to come of all the talk, possibly by late spring.

Meantime, there are other things you can do. One of the best is to emphasize service. Things are going to get broken, and they'll have to be fixed. Why not be the

You can look into the substitute products. For many items that have disappeared through priorities, duplicates are coming along in nonessential materials. Perhaps it will take digging to find them, persuasion to sell them. So what? You didn't build that business by sucking your thumb, did you?

If you can't get clerks, start self-service. If you can't make deliveries, make jokes and let the customers carry their own.

YOUR TAXES. More than 7,000,000 people are going to pay income taxes in 1943 for the first time. Those taxes will be higher than we ever paid before — but lower than people are paying in most of our allied nations. Taxes will be higher because this year we have spent the equivalent of $600 for every man, woman and child in the United States — on the war alone.

How much income tax will you have to pay? Here's the official dope. The first column represents net income before personal exemption. The second column is the tax for a single person with no dependents. The third column is the tax for a married person with no dependents. The fourth column is the tax for a married person with two dependents. This will give you an idea:

3,000	472	324	191
4.000	686	532	378

These figures do not include the Victory Tax, which, starting next Friday, will nip five per cent off all salaries over $624.

New tax legislation is sure in 1943. One faction is plugging for a sales tax on everything you buy — and they may win. Another faction wants a compulsory savings plan, with savings deducted from pay checks; they may win, too. And there is strong pressure for a plan to deduct all income taxes from pay checks, so that you will pay as you earn and not have a whopping tax bill staring you in the face the following March. Don't be surprised if that goes through early in the year — but not early enough to stave off the jolt March 15. Whatever new laws may be written, you'll have to pay the tax on 1942 earnings in the usual way during 1943.

YOUR FOOD. You'll have all you need — though it may not be the kind you've been used to. For the whole dope, see Clementine Paddleford's article, "What You'll Eat Next Year," in this same issue.

YOUR CLOTHES. Early in the war it looked like we would have a shortage of wool, but that was before we started sending mammoth convoys to Australia. Now those ships go down loaded with munitions and come home loaded with wool. We'll have enough for everybody.

True, our stocks of cloth will have to be used wisely. Women will find fewer styles in ready-made coats, suits and dresses.

Men will continue cuffless, and vests may be ruled out, but who cares? Gloves will be scarcer, but you can have your coat pockets extra deep.

There's considerable fog about shoes. One group says they'll be scarce and rationed; another group says it isn't so. My personal guess is that all shoes will be rationed before the end of 1943. But before that happens, the thousands of present styles will be drastically reduced. If rationing starts, you may be required to turn in your worn-out shoes when buying a new pair. Don't count on that; it's just a guess.

Hats, socks, underwear, shirts, girdles, brassieres, slips — all the essential garments will be normally abundant and reasonably priced. You may not get the precise material you want, but you'll get something that will fill the bill.

By and large, you'll be able to dress just as modishly at the end of 1943 as you do now, and at no material increase in cost.

YOUR TRANSPORTATION. The belief everywhere in Washington is that civilian automobiles must be kept running. We won't have gasoline for frivolity, but we'll have enough for the necessities of travel. Don't try to fool your ration board about necessity, though, because they'll smack you down!

The first synthetic tires are coming out of the factories, and they are good. The Army is taking them now, and it's very doubtful if you will be able to buy these before the end of 1943. Meanwhile Grade III War Tires, made from reclaimed rubber, are now being produced. You can get those, if you can prove you need them. And they'll last you 5,000 to 10,000 miles if you hold your speed under 35 miles.

There is no real shortage of gasoline; there is a severe shortage of carriers to transport it. Ocean tankers used to carry 95 per cent of it to the East; now, 70,000 tank cars are burning up the rails trying to do the job, and not quite accomplishing it. What's the answer? Pipe lines, of course. We're building a 24-inch line from Texas to New York. When it is finished next summer, the gasoline shortage will be materially relieved.

Meantime, treat gas with care — and don't step on it! Judges are going to throw the book at speeders in 1943.

Rail transportation is apt to go on a priority basis by midyear, maybe sooner. You will be asked why you want to travel; you may have to fill out a form to buy a ticket. If your story is good, you get the ticket; if it isn't, you don't. Travel rationing isn't definite, but it is in the wind.

GENERAL FORECASTS. The draft of the teen-agers is expected to revolutionize school curriculums. Educators are making plans to train youngsters for war and war work. New York City high schools switched over last fall, tossing fripperies out the window and concentrating on mathematics and manual arts. Schools elsewhere will follow suit. Many small colleges will close for the duration at the end of this semester; larger colleges and fancy-name preparatory schools will either cut out vacations and cram their courses into three years, or become military-training schools exclusively.

Rugs will get scarcer. So will draperies, all-woolen blankets, bed and table linen. New furniture, too, and candy and cosmetics. You may not get fancy cooking ranges and heating stoves, but "Victory" models will be plentiful.

Mechanical refrigerators will go the way of typewriters, but the iceman will be working overtime. Production of 300,000 iceboxes has been okayed. Banned for the duration are washing machines and ironers, electrical appliances, ranges and fans, golf clubs and balls, lawn mowers, metal household furniture, musical instruments, outboard motors, radios, toys, vacuum cleaners and juke boxes.

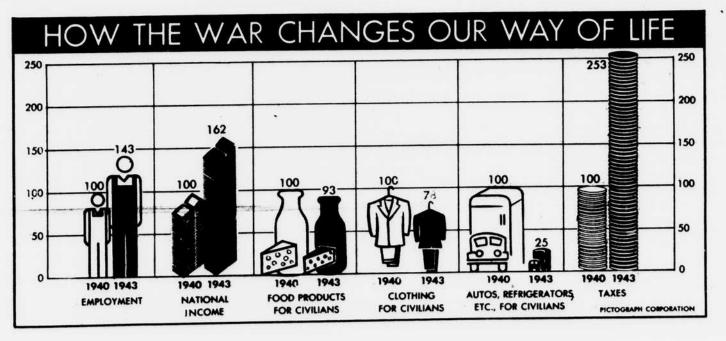

There will be more babies but fewer baby buggies. Also fewer bicycles, coal stokers, hot-water heaters, hairpins and bobbie pins, electric-light bulbs, jewelry, kitchen and house-hold utensils, razors, blades, sewing machines and a number of other items.

The present price-control system, with ceiling prices based on March, 1942, is likely to be junked before midyear, to be replaced with a specific dollar-and-cent ceiling for each item. Government inspectors will be numerous, and any dealer who tries to chisel will find himself behind the eight-ball. Moral: Whether you're buying or selling, don't cheat.

That's the picture of what life is going to be like for all of us next year. We're going to have to make sacrifices — sure. But they're for the best cause in the world — and worth making.

As Lee Glasser told me in her hardware store, "We'll get along all right!"

The End

SHALL not hesitate," his words rang harshly, "to use the utmost severity. The least infraction will be suitably punished."

There was no sound, no movement in the Square. One might almost think that these subdued people had ceased to breathe. Von Hemmel's chest inflated a little; he was aware of all faces turned toward the ancient stone balcony where he postured. This power was not his alone; he recognized its source, and his right arm was upflung rigidly.

"Heil Hitler!"

The hush in the Square was profound profound as death itself.

It held for a moment — to be shattered by a sound. Von Hemmel no longer held the center of the picture. All eyes had turned away from where he was enthroned on his stone balcony. It was at another balcony they stared, a balcony of wood so ancient that

The Square buzzed with voices.

"Silence!" Von Hemmel shouted. "Get me silence. Who is it that dared to laugh?"

They brought him to Von Hemmel, seated now behind a great oak table. "Here is the man," they said. So old a man? He stood humbly enough, a soldier securing each arm. The weight of years had bent his shoulders.

"You are the man who - who laughed?"

"That is so."

"How old are you? Come, speak!" he said.

"I stopped counting at ninety."

"You trusted to your age to spare you," said Von Hemmel, his voice rising. "Has it occurred to you that I have only to speak a word and you will be taken out and shot?"

The old man's head lifted. His eyes challenged Von Hemmel's.

'A few days more or less — does it matter? I have ploughed many a furrow in the good earth, and God has spoken to me when I broke bread by the hedge at the end of my field."

"The old man drivels - "

"Let him have his say," Von Hemmel told his aide. "He amuses me. Speaking of amusement, old man, why did you - tell me why you laughed just now out in the Square?"

"It was the only weapon I had."

Von Hemmel started. "Weapon?"

THE thin cavernous face lighted; the eyes mfited the questioner: rather I had used a gun. Is that not true? An old man's aim is not so good with a gun. But I have laughed at you, and that is more terrible than a bullet, and travels further. All those people in the Square will remember it, and take heart. And you will remember it. Long after you forget what I am saying, you will be unable to forget that I set laughter loose in the sweet spring air."

Von Hemmel sprang up, pounding the table.

"Take this old fool away. He is a mental case. He is in his second childhood. Keep him in custody but treat him well."

"I do not thank you for that," said the old man. "It is not that you wish me to be treated well. It is because you are afraid of me."

VON HEMMEL had work to do. It is good to have work to do. It keeps one from thinking. A sheaf of papers on the table: reports, he could only hope, of civilian insubordination in this district.

These people would find out the kind of man with whom they had to deal.

He went to the window, now that he was alone, and looked down into the Square. Where were all these people now? Of what were they talking? Damn their tongues! He knew. "Ah," they would be saying, "ah, the old fellow! You heard of him, of course?" One would say, "I heard the old man laugh-' And another, "Too bad you were not there to hear him!" And they would be thinking: "In years to come it will be told to our children how the old man laughed in the Square.'

The sunlight was almost gone out there now. Deep shadows growing everywhere. For a moment it slanted against a house whose gallery clung precariously to an ancient fa-

Von Hemmel turned suddenly away.

He summoned his aide. "Who is that laughing?"

"Only the staff in the messroom."

"Tell them to stop. No - no, not that. But see it does not occur again. And have lights brought. Can I see to work in the dark?"

"There were only candles," Kurt said. When brought, they served to emphasize the shadows and the impressive loftiness of the room. They flung Von Hemmel in caricature against the wall.

The pen rustling on paper made a harsh sound which subsided when, now and again, Von Hemmel cocked an ear, listening.

"Kurt!" he called.

"You wanted me?"

"Where is it you have put the old man?" "In a small, empty room along the hall. He sits there in the darkness."

"Doing what?"

The aide shrugged; he said: "At times, I think, laughing to himself after the manner of the old."

"Exactly. Listen."

"I did not know it could be heard from here. I am sorry."

The veins in Von Hemmel's face and neck distended. "So you, too - "

"It is only that I did not wish you to be disturbed."

"Yes, yes. Of course."

The two men eyed each other.

"It is annoying," Von Hemmel said. "See that he is removed at once."

Kurt's eyes lidded. "You mean - "

"Ach Gott, must I put everything in words of one syllable? - Take the senile old fool out and have him shot."

VON HEMMEL felt better. This is what he should have had done at the first. Not parleved with senility. One could now become comfortably immersed in work. Nothing now but the sound of pen on paper; or his own thick voice repeating the lines . . . "The least infraction . . . punished . . . utmost severity." Tomorrow the Square would bristle with placards. Von Hemmel rose and went to the window.

All was quiet. Quiet with a stillness, with a tranquillity that was very old. Old as the sunlight now fled, to return with tomorrow's rising. Old as the immemorial flight of pigeons, whose wings were folded only until daybreak.

Von Hemmel coughed. He spat out of the open casement into the Square. Tomorrow his placards would be everywhere; posted by the door of the church now deeply in shadow; posted upon the walls of buildings. . . and upon that house from whose crazy balcony . . . Gott, they should know the stifling power of force, the silencing power of a bullet. The old fool with only laughter as his weapon.

Von Hemmel almost laughed himself. But not quite. Instead he strode across the room, purple with anger, shouting for his aide. The flame of the candles bent as he passed them, then burned clear again. His words when he spoke them were thick and clotted:

"Can not a simple command be obeyed? Must I speak twice to get things done?" he demanded.

"But - "

"I will take no excuses. How long do my ars have to be offended by his senile laughter?"

Kurt drew back like a man warding off evil. A wind, unsuspected before, moved through the branches of the trees in the darkened square. It lifted the curtains at the window and let them fall again. The aide stared at them, and then at Von Hemmel.

"The old man was executed half an hour ago," he said.

The End

EDNA MAY: Freckles, pigtails, glasses caught Hitchcock's eye

"Want To Be A Star?"

FIND. Hitchcock always casts to type. Edna May's just right

WORK. A scene with Macdonald Carey in "Shadow of a Doubt"

DAD. He's a grocer. Edna May and her father sample the stock

"Yes," replied Edna May: And sure enough, she was!

THIS WEEK'S

EDNA MAY WONACOTT was standing on a corner in Santa Rosa, California, waiting for a bus.

SPOTLIGHT As she shifted her schoolbooks from one arm to the other, she beheld, approaching at an undulating gait, the fattest man she could remember seeing in all of her 10 years.

Fascinated, she watched him. Then the man began watching her. He saw her pigtails, noticed her spectacles, her freckles. Obviously he was fascinated, too.

"Little girl," said he, "what's your name?"
"Edna May Wonacott," she answered.
"What's yours?"

"Hitchcock," he said. "Alfred Hitchcock.
Would you like to be a movie actress?"

"Of course," said Edna May, who could go along with a gag.

But it wasn't a gag. The famed director actually was looking for a little girl with freckles, pigtails and glasses, just like Edna May. He was in Santa Rosa with a location company of "Shadow of a Doubt" and the pigtailed urchins that Universal's casting department had sent him didn't appeal to him.

Mother Said . . .

EDNA MAY didn't become a picture star immediately. She had to ask her mother first. Her mother, wife of a Santa Rosa grocer, said yes in a slight delirium. The next morning a shiny limousine hauled Edna May and her mother to the "Shadow of a Doubt" location. Hitchcock received her in style. So did Stars Teresa Wright, Joseph Cotten and Macdonald Carey.

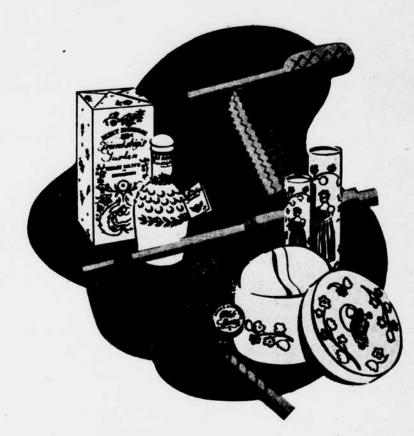

"He gave me a book and told me to read aloud," Edna May says of Director Hitchcock. "I read aloud and then he told me to yawn, like he was going to fix my teeth. I yawned and he said 'Bully!' and then I was in a movie."

Two days later, Edna May was in Hollywood with a dressing room, a stand-in, a private tutor and a seven-year contract, with options. She also had a limousine to take her to the studio, but she declined that. For reasons slightly removed from patriotism, she insisted upon taking the red streetcar which rolls past the Universal plant. There are no streetcars in Santa Rosa.

Edna May Wonacott wants to keep right on being an actress. Hitchcock says she will. In fact, he predicts she'll be a genuine star in six months.

WHAT YOU'LL EAT NEXT YEAR

MEET Clementine Paddleford, noted foodnews authority, who today presents the shape of foods to come: Some of them will be here immediately; others will arrive as war conditions allow. Miss Paddleford's articles will appear twice a month hereafter, as features in our new foodeditorial program to help homemakers meet problems they have never had to face before. The program also includes plans for a late-January special issue devoted to wartime problems in the home.

- The Editor

TAR WRITES THE MENU. Tie on that apron with a double knot. A tough year lies ahead for the cook. The public pantry is comfortably stocked but with substantial, solid foods and in limited numbers. There are foods in new forms. Gone with tin are the luxuries. New Year's ushers in the new order of eating. Food rationing ahead. Sugar, coffee, meat, butter? That's a mere beginning, sister. Before the year is out expect rationing of almost every food you buy.

Book of the month for March is called "all-purpose rationing," now in the hands of the printer. Coupons are in blocks of red and blue, each bearing letter and number designations, to be useable for straight coupon rationing as with sugar, or by a point system being modeled after the English plan, but more flexible.

SPREAD BUTTER THIN; slice bread thick. There's no shortage of wheat, oats, rye or corn. But butter will be rationed; butter will be exceedingly scarce until the cows freshen this spring - and even then not much for home tables.

Fats are in the fight. Rationing of other fats and oils will go along with butter. Growers of the oil vegetables - peanuts, soy beans, flaxseed - have come through with enormous crops but wartime demand is great: civilians must skimp. Kitchen fat is a weapon of war. Use every ounce of the meat drippings for seasoning, baking, frying.

Cream for the coffee is a luxury until the flush milk season brings the cream to the top. Whipping cream will probably remain off the market next year. But light coffee cream is expected around. Even the ice cream industry is asked to curtail production.

Less fluid milk for the kitchen although total production is over last year. There may be enough evaporated milk to stretch; again, maybe not. Dried skim milk, if available, would be adequate for use in puddings, in gravies, in cakes. Skim milk contains virtually all the food elements found in whole milk except fat. Heretofore, skim milk has been fed to chickens and pigs. Now it is used for human food in lend-lease countries. No good for drinking, it reconstitutes poorly.

T DIGGETY! We are going to eat less meat this year than we have money to buy. No meat for Fido or puss unless you share your portion. You will be cooking gourmet dishes from all ends of the cow. Head meat, tail meat, shins and knuckles - these are unrationed. So are meats from the inside. You will be scrambling brains for breakfast, stuffing hearts, stewing the kidney, tendering the honeycombed tripe. Hot diggety!

You'll have plenty of solid food - but almost no fancy trimmings. There'll be more rationing, less variety. Go down the list and you'll see . . .

by Clementine Paddleford

Can women shop successfully in wartime markets? The answer is: Yes

Hot dogs are going to be plentiful, made from the trimmings of beef and pork prepared for the Army.

Poultry and fish are unrationed. But the fishing's not so fine. Canned fish will be scarce. Tuna production is less than half normal as the Navy has enlisted the best of the tuna fleet. The submarine menace has interfered with fishing along the east coast. Only one-fifth of the pack of canned salmon and mackerel and sardines is released for civilian tables. Inland areas far from the sea

Chicken in the pot any night for dinner. No difficulty gathering the breakfast eggs. Poultry and egg supplies promise larger this year than any time in history - a Congressional medal to the little red hen.

ATTENTION, COFFEE-LOVERS! Prospects are looking brighter for the coffee cup. Members of the Inter-American Coffee trade have conferred long and earnestly with the War Production Board, arguing that coffee be provided shipping space whenever possible. Eight countries of Central and South America grow coffee as a major industry. The War Production Board got the point and will do what they can for a fair adjustment.

Chocolate cakes have gone out of style. "No, dear, you can't make fudge. Mother hasn't a spoonful of cocoa left in the house."

tations abound. Your spice cupboard will show a few shortages, but there is pepper enough for two years and a conservation order will make it stretch. Plenty of salt. Most of the common spices are on hand to see us through the year even if all imports should be cut. Louisiana supplies us with red pepper. Chili powder comes from the southwest. Sage is being grown experimentally in Maryland. Paprika is a trial crop in California and Louisiana - this year's harvest totaled close to a million pounds.

The lion's share of dried fruits is absent on war duty. About 20 per cent of this year's crop of raisins and prunes has been released for civilian use. Apricots, dried peaches, pears and apples go in toto for military and lendlease requirements.

NEW CROPS come to the aid of the menu. Soya beans will march to the head of the bean class, a pinch-hitter for meat. Soya has all the food values of the other dry beans but is lower in carbohydrates, higher in protein, higher in fat and a good source of the B vitamins. This year's giant crop will be turned into oil and considerable flour will be milled. Mix soya flour with wheat flour to 10 per cent and the protein value of the bread will be increased ten times.

Many products are promised boasting soya-flour additions. There is a new macaroni around now that has 12 per cent soya. Wheat and soya flours combine in a pancake mix. A canned pork sausage for the Army is using soya flour as a filler. Cereal companies are experimenting with soya flour to add to the protein values of the porridge bowl.

TAKE A POWDER! Dehydration promises new foods in new forms for our men abroad. for lend-lease, and sooner or later for ourselves: shreds, powders, nuggets, flakes, shavings and crystals. Take a few spoonsful of white powder, add water and boil. Cream of celery soup waits in the pot. Take a package of white shreds, add water, follow directions carefully - mashed potatoes for dinner in seven minutes flat. A reddish brown powder is a tomato-cheese sauce to dress a dish of spaghetti. A dehydrated gravy, when it can be widely distributed, should take the country by storm with meat and fats running short. Newest item is the pre-cooked, dehydrated beans. A baked-bean dish for dinner in no longer time than to boil potatoes.

Government orders allow for tremendous increases in dehydrating equipment and production this year. The industry is asked to pool its technical knowledge and do its darndest to produce 400 million pounds of vegetables. This will be about 671/2 million pounds above lend-lease needs. But most of the vegetables for civilian use will be marketed in the form of soup mixes.

Dried egg production is going great guns and will be upped this year from 300 million to 460 million pounds. As military and lendlease requirements take but 350 million, civilians will probably get a chance at this product.

THE BIG FREEZE. The frozen-food industry shoulders a heavy part of the canner's job. Coming is a long line of ready-prepared foods quick-frozen. Boston baked beans, corned beef hash, ready cooked soups are already in markets. Beef stew, lamb stew, spaghetti with tomato sauce are on test in limited areas.

Priorities come to the fresh vegetable kingdom as well as to the canned goods shelf. Production of luxury items will be curtailed to allow land, labor and transportation to be shifted to more essential products in line with eating for health. A watermelon, all

Load Of Brass

"Aye, aye, sir," said the admiral. A rattling good story of adventure over the Pacific

by Hoffman Birney

Illustrated by O. F. Schmidt

Les Curry was enjoying himself; Mary Lou Emmons was not. The night was perfect, the music and the food somewhat better, but whenever he asked her what was wrong she said, "Nothing," so brightly that it meant, "Something, and it's very important."

Supper was served under the palms in the patio, and Sally Howard came by very much on the arm of Lieutenant (J.G.) William B. Thorn, U.S.N.R., who wore the ribbon of the Distinguished Flying Cross on his breast and whom the newspapers had christened, with sundry trumpetings, "Billy-bedamned Thorn." They lingered by the table where Mary Lou and Les sat. They chatted a few moments. They passed on. And Mary Lou said:

"If it was anybody else, I wouldn't mind it a bit!"

Les gulped on a bite of avocado. "Now what?" he asked, and was told that — being a man — he couldn't be expected to understand.

"She's the cattiest cat in the state of California," said Mary Lou, "and I think she's proud of it. She hasn't done a thing all evening except strut around with that aviation lieutenant and show him and herself off and lord it over me because —"

"Because you're with an enlisted man, a C.P.O. Is that it?" asked Les, and Mary Lou informed him with considerable detail that that was it, exactly.

"For the love of mud!" observed Chief Aviation Machinist Les Curry. "You didn't notice Mr. Thorn swinging his rank, did you? If your girl friend's trying to play quarterdeck against fo'c'stle, she'd better look for another Navy, and you can tell her so. It's what you've got on the ball, not what's on your sleeve, that counts in this one."

"Try to make Sally Howard believe that!" remarked Miss Emmons. "Last week she had a lieutenant-commander." Her eyes followed the pink that was Miss Howard, the white that was Thorn, through the crowd. "She's pulling the same trick on Babs Kennedy now. Oh, Les, I wish that you —"

"Would show up all over gold and ribbons? Sorry, but there's not a chance, honey. I'm engineer on a BT-40 in the ferrying service and that's not the ribbon department. We're carting important brass hats all over the Pacific Ocean, and if they paid off on mileage we'd all be admirals. We'll never see action, though, and we know it. Those big tubs aren't fighters, and a crack at a Jap isn't worth the chance of something happening to a million dollars' worth of passengers. Can't you understand that?"

"Yes," said Mary Lou. Then, being entirely feminine, she added: "Just the same, I wish —"

H_E was in the cockpit with Mr. Lang, the co-pilot, when the big ship was eased down the ramp. The four motors crashed into noisy life, and Les studied his dials and gauges as the transport was warped to the embarkation dock where Mr. Sherwin. Lieutenant, U.S.N., and the ship's commander, checked his passengers and their credentials with the embarkation officer. Skolsky and McGuire, tail and bow gunners, were with Hodges, the bombardier, in the little space — chartroom by courtesy — aft of the pilots' seats.

"Same load of brass," said McGuire. "One admiral and three four-stripers already. Say, there's two girls — Army nurses. They're only second looeys. How do they rate this ride?"

"Pipe down, McGuire," Les growled. "Get aft for take-off, both of you." He touched his cap brim as Mr. Sherwin entered the cockpit. "Props set, sir," he said. "Engines okay."

Dawn was a slow paling of the stars and a miraculous westward sweeping, a league a second, of the suddenly visible horizon. The voices of the passengers rose as their surroundings became commonplace. Mr. Sherwin said, "She's all yours, Pete," to his second in command and walked aft.

Les couldn't help envying him at that moment. His shoulder tabs bore only the two stripes of a lieutenant, but he was captain and commander of the big transport, and everyone aboard knew it. As such — and by virtue of custom which stemmed back to Barry and John Paul Jones — no captain or admiral would question an act of his, none would pass forward of the bomb-bay bulkhead except upon his invitation. It was law, absolute and inflexible. Before an apprentice seaman had learned to distinguish bow, beam, and quarter, he had heard stories of ensigns, warrant officers and even C.P.O.'s who, catapulted to command by the deaths in action of their superiors, had temporarily outranked admirals.

Benson followed close behind Mr. Sherwin. He'd had his hot-plate going for half an hour, and he distributed cups of steaming coffee. The radioman passed a cup to Les in the "greenhouse," the topside blister which was the engineer's post when the motors did not require his attention. McGuire's red head passed beneath him, headed aft to relieve Skolsky in the tail. Morning coffee patrol was a formal ceremony on the BT-40. Mr. Sherwin was talking to the two Army nurses.

"This is Wednesday, isn't it?" said one. "Gosh, last Friday we were in Brooklyn. Will we see any Japs, Captain?"

"Not if we see them first," said Sherwin, and the officers in the cabin laughed. "Our job's to get you where you're going — fighting's for specialists."

What did I tell you, Mary Lou? Action? Not one single blistered chance!

It came on the second day, two hours out from Ilo-Ilo. The transport was slipping in and out of the scattered cloud islands as a rabbit dodges from brush to brier when — from behind the high-piled cumulus — three silvery motes danced between Les Curry's eyes and the sun. He swung the twin fifties and fired several warning bursts as he shouted the alarm. Sherwin's voice, calling "Action stations, all hands!" came through the interphone above the stuttering reports.

Les held the leader of the diving ships in the innermost sight-ring. Strange — how even in split seconds one's eyes could observe and one's brain record many things. They were trim but sturdy jobs, these Nip fighters, with big radial motors. Single-seaters, too, with fixed wheels. Carrier-based! Now, what —

The guns bucked under his hands as the first of the diving Zeros came into range. Got him, by gosh! Look at that black smoke pouring out of his engine The two others were firing —

Then the transport's nose dropped, so suddenly that he found himself hanging in his belt and staring at the gray water nearly two miles below. He could see two of the Zeros, one still belching heavy smoke from its engine, the other in flames from nose to tail. Mr. Sherwin could pull out of his dive now—and then Les saw torn metal and clustered holes where the bullets from the other Zero had poured into the pilots' cockpit. He jerked his belt release and let himself drop, sliding along the steep-pitched floor to the nose of the ship.

The cockpit was a mess of blood, mixed with oil from a smashed hydraulic line. Sherwin's body was jammed against the control column, pressing it forward and holding the ship in its dive. Les clawed for the release of the pilot's belt and tumbled the body from the seat. His feet found the rudder pedals, and he horsed back on the controls. The nose rose—thank God the flippers hadn't been shot off—and the transport came out of the dive.

"Good work! Oh, good work!"

Les looked down quickly. A man was sprawled on the messy floor, a man whose golden shoulder tabs bore the twin stars of a rear admiral. "I saw what happened," the admiral said. "I tried to get to the controls, but you beat me to them." And he repeated: "Good work."

Les glanced toward the other seat. Mr. Lang should have taken over when the Jap bullets had crashed into Mr. Sherwin's body. But only his belt held Lang in his seat. His head was between his limp knees, and he fought gaspingly for breath.

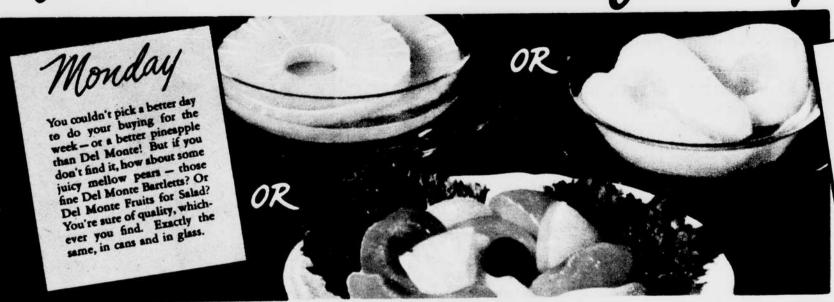

"Those nurses aft!" snapped Les Curry. "Get 'em up here

Del Monte Foods

So please be patient with your grocer today! He's trying to do everything possible for you!

Here's how to help him — and help yourself, too - in these days of war shortages

If we all use our heads, everybody will have enough.

Some foods will be plentiful - use them. Some will be scarce - some will be "out" for the duration. They've gone to our sons and husbands and brothers on far-flung fighting

Who would begrudge them one bit of it? Why, none of us!

Of course we'll have to gear our buying to wartime conditions. But that won't be so hard, if you follow the Del Monte "Buy-for-a-Week" plan. Here's how easy it is to do:

- 1. Plan meals a week ahead. It's really simple, and a great time-saver. The Del Monte Wartime Meal Planner shows you how. If your grocer hasn't a copy, write for one.
- 2. Buy for a week at a time as many as possible of your week's food needs in a single grocery order. Shop early in the week if you can, and when the store isn't crowded, too. Your grocer can serve you better-you'll see! And think what you save - time, work, gasoline, tires!
- 3. Take the foods your grocer has. On this page, you'll see a few of the many Del Monte Fruits and Vegetables. Don't blame your grocer when he doesn't have just the ones you want! Look for others in the same food group, instead. You'll be surprised how often you can "switch and swap" right in the Del Monte line.

Above all-don't buy more of anything than you'll need. Let's prove that this is still the land of freedom - that as individual citizens we are big enough and broad enough to share - and work out our problems together, through the voluntary and intelligent cooperation of all.

FRUIT COCKTAIL

— take care of him!" And the admiral — a two-starred rear admiral of the line — said, "Aye, aye, sir," as he scrambled to his feet.

Sherwin was dead, Lang badly shot up, but the passengers were unharmed. McGuire — he stuck his head through the hatch and muttered "For the love of heaven!" when he saw Mr. Sherwin's body on the floor and Les Curry at the controls — McGuire reported that he had sent the second Zero down in flames. Les sent him back to his guns, and called Benson to cap the broken oil line and clean up the cockpit.

"Get Hodges to help you. Carry Mr. Sherwin aft and — and take care of him."

It was a captain who came forward and reported that Mr. Lang would probably live. He'd been struck three times in the body, but high enough to miss heart and lungs; his right shoulder was a bloody mess, and he had a thigh wound—but he'd probably live.

"He was navigator, too, wasn't he?" the captain asked.

Les nodded and the officer continued: "I thought so. With your permission, chief, I'll get his sextant. If you'll take us above these clouds, Commander Ellis and I will get a solar and put you back on course."

It was not until then, not until that "with your permission," that Les Curry realized his status. "By glory," he said, "that means — that means I'm in command, doesn't it?"

"You are!" The captain's eyes were a bit chilly. "And in the Navy, chief, a commander commands! Do you understand?"

"I think I do, sir." Les Curry was suddenly humble. He had enlisted a few days after Pearl Harbor, and before the ink on his papers was dry had been given his promised rating of chief petty officer. As such, he had dozed through the lectures given by a smooth-faced young ensign on naval history and traditions, on honors and courtesies, on the niceties of rank and precedence; the use of the starboard gangway by officers, the port by enlisted men; and on the countless customs and regulations, to Les supremely unnecessary.

"My job's engines," he grumbled to himself after one session in a stuffy classroom. "What difference does it make to me who rates sideboys, and why? We've got a war to win!"

Three words — "with your permission" — changed that. This man who stood at his elbow, two miles above the Pacific, bowed to custom, too. He was the Navy, a single unit in a mighty team whose playing field was all the oceans of the earth and the heavens above the seas. Behind him, crowding the cockpit, were men of Pearl Harbor, of the North Sea Patrol, of Manila and Santiago, of Mobile Bay and Lake Erie. That was what the ensign-instructor had been trying to put over. The Navy was a team — a team of planes and ships and men, and it was aided to victory by men's obedience to the very traditions and regulations which had made him, a C.P.O., commander of the BT-40 and all aboard her.

"Thank you, sir." Les gulped down the lump which was in his throat. "I'd appreciate it very much. I'm no navigator." "You've got a pilot's rate, haven't you?"

"No, sir. Only a private license — civilian. When I got out of Caltech I went with Barron Aircraft, and was flight engineer on all their tests. I couldn't help picking up how to handle the big ships, but I don't call myself a pilot. I just scrambled in and took over, that's all."

"Damned good work, too." The captain's eyes were no longer chilly. "I'll call Commander Ellis."

The observations disclosed that they were nearly a hundred miles to the west of their course. The air, Benson reported, was full of "monkey chatter," the angry voices of Jap pilots who searched for the transport in the area of the fight. Captain Hammett suggested that they remain in the clouds until they had escaped from the enemy-infested zone. He had taken over the navigator's duties, and was at the table behind the pilot's seat when McGuire gave the second alarm.

"Enemy carrier, chief," said the Irishman calmly. "I just seen it through a hole in the clouds."

Three officers made the identification positive when Les circled and carefully let down until the clouds parted for an instant beneath the blue-gray hull. Jap, they said, when they sighted the yellowish rectangle — a Jap carrier of the Oruku class, with planes on her deck.

"I'd sure like to give her one — for Mr. Sherwin!" said Les thickly.

"Give, then." The admiral's eyes were blue, and hard.

"I'm asking myself what Mr. Sherwin would do," said Les slowly. "I've heard him say a dozen times our job was to get the passengers through."

"Mr. Sherwin is dead," said the admiral calmly. "His second is wounded. Circumstances have placed you in command and your decision is final."

Les felt the smooth plastic of the wheel slip beneath his sweating palms. He could hold the course and save the ship and everyone aboard, and none would censure him — or he could attack. He could invite concentrated antiaircraft fire, the attack of fighter planes, while he made the long bombing run. If lucky, they might put out of action an irreplaceable enemy craft. Otherwise - well, there might be a chance to break radio silence and, before the crash, tell Parrot Island or another base what had happened. These men, the men of the Team, were waiting on his word. He wiped his hands on his shirt. He wasn't Les Curry, Barron Aircraft engineer, and - temporarily chief aviation machinist. He was the Navy, the Team! His hands were dry now.

"Thank you, sir," he said to the admiral. "Gentlemen, we will attack immediately. I will want someone to man the topside guns and another in the port blister." He noticed the gold wings of a naval aviator worn by one of the commanders. "Will you, sir, sit in as co-pilot?"

"Glad to. My name's Cadman."

the reddened linen under the cushion.

He slid down to the nose of the ship

"Battle stations!" commanded Les Curry.

There was a four-striper manning the twin fifties in the greenhouse, a three-striper at the port guns. Another commander, slide rule in hand, crouched beside Hodges to check the bombardier's calculations. His co-pilot leaned forward, Lang's binoculars at his eyes, as Les left the clouds behind and dropped to ten thousand feet to make the bombing run. Flame ripped from the batteries on the carrier's island, and from other guns in outboard blisters below the flight deck. Silvery tracers arched ahead. Shrapnel burst below and aft — Les could hear the sharp spang of the explosions.

"Damn poor shootin'," said the commander critically. "Pour on the coal, chief."

The carrier was outlined in the flame of her own guns. Its speed increased, but it couldn't dodge. It had to keep into the wind if the fighters on deck were to get off. One pilot, desperate, opened his throttle and streaked down three-quarters of the runway. He crashed dead ahead, and the wreckage vanished under the carrier's cutwater. There were other planes, though, and they took the full run of the deck and got away, one after another.

"Bomb doors open!" Hodges called, and then, a second later, "Bombs awa-a-ay!"

THE BT-40 leaped as it parted from the load of explosives. Les pushed the throttle wide open and set the propellors at maximum pitch as he nosed up. If he could reach the clouds —

"Fighters dead astern. Dey're gainin' slow."
"Never mind 'em, Skolsky. Watch those bombs!"

The ineffective ack-ack fire ceased. Seven Zeros had left the carrier and were so close now that the antiaircraft could not risk hitting them. Skolsky's voice shrieked again over the interphone.

"You godt her, Hodges, you godt her! Righdt on d' nose wit' both th' big babies. She's blown up! She's busted in half! She's on fire all over!"...

The Japs in the air were already dead men. Their carrier was gone, and even with full tanks the fighters could not make the distant island bases. There would be no turning them aside with heavy fire; they would shoot him down or ram him—or both. Already they were above him, and through the transparent panel above him he watched them bunch, all seven, into a tight V—a suicide formation formed on the assumption that one, at least, would be able to ram the transport. Farragut and Dewey wouldn't know the answer to this, but Mr. Sherwin would have. What was that stunt he'd tried in mock air combat over Kameha? Les saw the tails of the Zeros go up and their painted noses drop. He watched them, his left hand on the wheel, right on the master throttle for the four bellowing motors.

McGuire was firing already. Now the top guns were going, and the Skibbies were in an all-out dive. Closer . . . closer . . . NOW! Les pulled the transport's nose still higher as he slammed shut the throttles and, swiftly, spun the wheel which dropped the landing flaps in the trailing edge of the wing. It was as though the driver of a speeding automobile had lifted his foot and slammed his weight on the brakes. Mushing, perilously close to stalling, the transport's speed dropped from two-forty to a little more than a hundred. The Zeros, diving on the faster target, must change direction in a fraction of a second or streak harmlessly past the bow.

"Good man!" yelled the commander. "Give 'em hell!"

The leader of the formation tried to swerve, then nosed down even more steeply as the two on his port flank locked wings in the attempt to follow him — locked wings and exploded as their tanks burst. The third man avoided the wreckage in a zoom which left him upside down astern, where Skolsky, the flat-faced Polish Jew in the rear turret, shot him to pieces. "Fry, you snake." Skolsky addressed the man in the flames. "I only wisht you had t'ree Heinies in dere wit' you."

Benson, from starboard, riddled the formation leader. The three other ships flashed past the transport's nose, so close that Les could see the snarling faces of monkey men in the cockpits. Flame was leaping from the wings of one, licking back over the scarlet emblem of the Rising Sun. It was over within the time that a man could strike a match and raise it to his cigarette. Les pushed the throttles open and dropped the nose to regain speed. Then the clouds closed around them.

There was an admiral who gripped his hand and spoke the two words that are the Navy's highest meed of praise: "Well done!" There was a captain who displayed, with grinning pride, a hand which dripped blood from where he'd caught it in the gun gear, and who announced, even more proudly, that he'd accounted for one of the little monkey unprintables. There was Mr. Lang, as pale as waxed paper, who whispered, "Damned good work, Curry. You evened the score for Bob Sherwin!" And there was a commander who kept him on course until he had landed the big ship on the waters of the atoll at Parrot Island. "You should get something sweet out of this, chief," he said, as they taxied toward the dock. "If a pretty ribbon isn't coming your way, my name's Hirohito"

The official photographs didn't cover the whole show. They had pictures of the review, and of the admiral pinning on the medals — the Navy Cross for all hands, even for Mr. Lang, who protested in writing that he didn't deserve it — and of Les Curry with the Distinguished Flying Cross on his breast in addition to the higher honor. The photographers weren't present when — an hour before the ceremony — a marine orderly ushered Les Curry into the admiral's office. Les saluted stiffly; the admiral shook hands and said he was glad to meet him again.

"You'll have to do a lot of handshaking before this day's over, chief," he said, "and it doesn't seem to me you're dressed for it. There's a new suit of whites and a cap in my private quarters that I wish you'd try on."

The cap bore the eagle, shield, and crossed anchors which identify a commissioned officer. On the shoulder tabs of the white uniform were the stripe and half-stripe of a lieutenant junior grade.

"That's the old man's idea of a joke," said the orderly. "They call him hard-boiled, and they say he runs an almighty tight ship, but he's a great old guy when you get to know him, chief — I mean, sir!" He was suddenly aware that Chief Aviation Machinist Curry had vanished; that the tall young J. G. in the spotless whites was a commissioned officer.

The cameramen didn't get that, nor did any reporters listen in on the long-distance call which Lieutenant Curry — with the admiral's O.K. — put in to San Leandro.

"I'll be seeing you, Mary Lou," said Mr. Curry. "Can't tell just when, or they'd cut me off for talking too much, but I'll be seeing you."

The End

TW-12-27-42

R. BOTTLENECK and his cronies, "Too Little" and "Too Late," are in full retreat. They are being routed every day by an army in overalls which is turning out a warplane every eight minutes, a hard-hitting tank every half-hour and three speedy ships each sunup to sundown.

Behind this surging battle of production is the dramatic story of one of our greatest weapons. There is nothing "secret" about this weapon. It is simply American ingenuity. But it works. In barely six months, the nation's factory folk have hatched over 300,000 ideas on how to turn out more and more war goods in less and less time.

We have heard a lot about how handy the Germans are with tools and machines. But our workers go the Nazis one better. They have that happy faculty for improvising short cuts and for concocting gadgets which have saved vital man-hours, increased output and improved the quality of our fighting equipment.

Who are these heroes on the production

The list is long, but let's single out Louis Leonhard as typical of the factory-front soldiers who do their job with brawn — and brain. Leonhard is a quiet, unassuming fellow who helps build tanks at the Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Company in Hammond, Ind. His particular task is to mount the guns on M-3 tanks, those 28-ton battle babies so much desired by both our own and Allied military commanders.

While engineers pondered on how to step up the assembly of this vital weapon, Lou did some thinking on his own. He noticed that when the guns arrived from other factories they were covered with thick layers of grease to protect them from rust. And it took three men three hours to clean each one.

Inspiration

NIGHT after night Leonhard came home, thoughtful, disturbed. There ought to be a quicker way. One evening while reading his newspaper he jumped up, grabbed his hat and ran off to the plant without so much as a good-by to his wife.

Reaching the factory, Leonhard cornered the plant superintendent

"Melt it," he snapped, "melt it."

The supervisor understood. Together they hunted up an old oil drum. In it they placed a grease-encased gun. They then applied heat. The grease disappeared in five minutes. Time saved: nine hours on every tank. Those M-3's began to roll out 30 per cent faster.

Max Harris, a motor mechanic, is another member of America's idea battalion. He hails from Detroit, the nation's No. 1 arsenal. Harris's specialty is tightening bolts on airplane motors. Sounds simple — but mighty important. Working with a little wrench, it used to take him four hours to do a job on a single engine — two engines a day. A long time, sighed the engineers, and Harris agreed.

Industrial bigwigs scurried in and out of the plant where Harris worked, making time studies and checking production schedules.

At night and on Sunday, away from the noise and clamor of the machines, Harris began to putter around in his cellar workshop. There he built an exact replica of the engine he worked on in the factory. Then one day he called at the engineering department of the company. Out of his pocket he took a sheet of paper. On it was a design for a new type of wrench — a simple gadget which now enables Harris and his co-workers to tighten six bolts at once — cutting the operation from four hours to 40 minutes.

Similar inventions and ideas to speed our war machine abound. Some are simple, others more complex; many are so valuable that descriptions of them must be limited to the words "military secret." But whether their contributions are publicly announced or not, the men who make them do not go unrecognized. Like heroes on the battlefield, our heroes of the production line are honored, too. Workers whose exceptional suggestions have helped to increase the output of war goods receive special citations from Donald M. Nelson, chief of the War Production Board.

Not all the award winners have earned their spurs by originating time-saving devices. Thousands of men and women are doing their bit unsung men and women are doing their bit in outproducing the Axis through sheer sweat and elbow grease.

Consider William Morris, the veritable oneman factory. By day, Mr. Morris, a postman in the town of Rockville Center, N. Y., keeps Uncle Sam's mail moving. At night he works at a homemade lathe manufacturing spokes for the steering wheels of our merchant ships. In two months of "spare time" he has turned out equipment for hundreds of ships. The other day Mr. Morris paused long enough to accept a Maritime award for meritorious service on the home front.

Special Delivery

Lost in the drama of battle is this hitherto untold tale of a group of anonymous American workmen who played a nick-of-time role in our victory at Midway. Just a few days prior to that historic battle, word reached a California plant that American forces were in a hurry for more bombers. At that very moment a fleet of powerful Flying Fortresses was almost ready, lacking only certain minor parts. Those missing castings were in manufacture by a firm back East. An anxious telephone call went through. The president of the Eastern plant put the problem up to his workers.

All that day and night the men toiled feverishly at their machines and benches. When dawn broke, the parts were complete and immediately flown across the continent. A few minutes after the castings were installed, the bombers took off. They arrived at a Pacific base early on June 3. By noon, four of the ships went into action in the Battle of Midway. They arrived just in time to sink two Jap aircraft carriers—a toll which may well have turned the fight from defeat to victory.

No less exciting was a home-front performance which took place in a steel mill about the time our flyers were blasting the Japs at Midway. In Pittsburgh the vortex of a furnace used in molding the sides of fighting ships suddenly broke down from overwork. To fix it, the furnace fires would have to be banked. That meant production would be shut down for at least a week, and serious delay in the nation's shipbuilding program. But there was no shutdown. A repair crew volunteered to tackle the job while the furnace fire still roared. They climbed up the unmercifully hot outer shell and in six blistering hours mended the break while the men in the plant just kept 'em rolling. For this death-defying feat the intrepid five won medals, which they now proudly wear - on their overalls.

Such are the examples of fortitude and ingenuity which prove that the man behind the machine has more to contribute to our war effort than just a day's work for a day's pay.

He has ideas.

And ideas are weapons.

Lady, Be Careful !

"These may be my last words to you," said Lily, "so treasure them carefully: Never have anything to do with a horse!"

by Ellen Gatti

Illustrated by Harry Beckhoff

women were as a rule vaguely amiable. In truth, women did not impinge much upon her horizon. Lily was, not to put too fine a point on it, a man's woman.

But on the evening of Sumner Bryce's party, when she first met Carol Burke, her feelings were primitive to a turn. A certain yearning seized her to dig her rosy nails into Carol's becomingly tanned epidermis, for no apparent reason. Or for any hardly apparent reason. The fact that Carol kept pawing at Jason, Lily's own, new and delightful husband, and prattling to him of the good old days they'd had together, might have had something to do with it.

Caro! This diminutive struck Lily as odiously offensive. So Lily, her calm common sense for once immersed in irritation, walked into her own trap.

"We've been missing you at the hunts, Jason," Carol was saying. She turned punctiliously to Lily. "I don't suppose you go in for riding to hounds, do you?"

Now Carol was possibly five years younger than Lily; but implicit in her question and the stressed deference of her tone, was the picture of Lily doddering toward her eighties while she, Carol, remained a charming chit

Lily simply couldn't take it. "Oh yes, indeed," she said heartily. "How I used to enjoy the hunts at the Tor di Quinto in Rome. And the breakfast afterward with the dear Duchessa!"

The moment Lily had made this statement, she regretted it. All of it was true, but for one little point. Lily, though born and bred in New York State, had lived brightly and dangerously over the face of Europe until the war had driven her home. She had attended hunts at the Tor di Quinto. She had been a guest at the Duchessa's famous breakfasts. But strictly as a sports spectator. Lily and saddle leather had never met.

"Why, Lily, I didn't know you rode!"

Jason exclaimed — obviously delighted.

"How odd!" was Carol's comment. Any woman would have understood that her look of sceptical surprise was the deadliest of insults.

"We just haven't got round to it yet," said Lily.

Her eye met Jason's, and the pleasant realization that in their short married life there'd been more pressing matters to deal with than hunts and horses, passed between them. Then their host joined them; the whole thing washed out of Lily's mind.

It was not, in fact, until three days later that horses again galloped into Lily's happy existence. They had been uncommonly crowded days, and nobody had chanced to bring the subject up.

Then Jason came home and said, "I've accepted an invitation for us which I know you'll like. Caro has asked us down to her place on Long Island for a hunt week end after next."

"Oh!" said Lily, trying to conceal the jolt she sustained in the midriff. She clutched hastily at a straw. "I didn't suppose one held hunts in wartime," she said. "It doesn't seem patriotic."

"This one is," said Jason. "Caro's been awfully clever in organizing it. She's let in a lot of outsiders, and everyone kicks in for the USO. Anyway," he added, "this'll be the last hunt for the duration. I'm darn glad we'll get one in together."

This was Lily's moment to escape. She opened her mouth to tell Jason the truth, but at that exact instant he said, "Caro's a swell girl, isn't she? Wait till you see her on a horse. She's a beaut of a rider."

Lily closed her mouth. Carol's insulting look returned to her forcibly. Carol had known, Lily was absolutely certain, that she, Lily, had lied.

"You two," Jason went on fatuously, "will be a picture together." Lily's lush blonde beauty was classic, while Carol looked slightly like Dolores Del Rio.

"Where did you see Carol?" Lily asked, to

"We had lunch together. You don't mind, do you, Lily?"

"But, of course not. She's an old friend of yours, isn't she?"

"Oh, Carol and I grew up together," said Jason easily.

Lily was in a fix. She saw all angles of it with appalling clarity. She simply could not admit that she had allowed Carol to goad her into such a stupid and vulgar boast. She simply could not cut this horrible figure before Jason — and Carol!

Jason chose this moment to kiss her — leisurely, behind an ear.

Lily melted in his embrace, but inwardly she writhed. "I bet you'll be a knockout," murmured Jason.

THE Riding Academy was, Lily decided at first glance, the most loathsome place she had ever seen. She did not find the pungent stable odor inspiring. The riding master was a repulsive little bowlegged runt named Joe, with a gap between his front teeth.

Lily had not reached her decision and her destination lightly. She had fumed and raged all the night — or at least for a good hour.

But only one solution emerged crystal clear. Somehow, in the two weeks at her disposal, she had to learn to ride. For Lily, who considered all forms of exercise barbaric, the decision was cataclysmic.

Joe shook his head mournfully. "I'd advise against it, lady," he said. His eye roved over her form with a clinical regard for her bone structure that was immensely disconcerting.

"Nonsense," said Lily curtly. "I mean to learn to ride."

Joe scratched his head. "Anyway, I'm about to close up here. I'm doing volunteer coastal patrol duty down on Long Island. It'd be hard to work you in."

"But I must learn to ride," said Lily earnestly. "You simply must help me."

Lily's violet eyes seldom beseeched a male without results. Joe grunted. "All right, lady," he told her, "I guess we can manage. You got an outfit?"

"I'll order one today from my tailor."

"You can pick up a pair of practice breeches for the meantime."

"Breeches?"

"Yes, lady. What did you expect to wear?"
"Why, an habit d'amazone, naturally."

"A what?"

"A riding habit. You know —" she sketched airily the gesture of a lady gathering up the long skirt of her habit.

"You mean you want to ride sidesaddle?"

Joe demanded incredulously.

Lily looked at him blankly. It had never occurred to her that in America the European manner of riding was not the mode.

"Of course I've got a couple of old sidesaddles if you want to learn that seat," Joe said, "but nobody rides like that any more."

"How preposterous! Do you mean that all the ladies at the hunt will ride astride?"

"Sure they will," said Joe. "I doubt if any of 'em ever even saw a sidesaddle in their life."

Lily sighed profoundly. This was going to be far worse than she'd bargained for. But it was hers not to reason why.

"Where's the best place to get those breeches you spoke of?"

"There's a little place around the corner."

Lily thoughtfully wended her way around the corner. But as she wended, a faint will-o'-the-wisp of hope began to dance before her.

It was well for the happy home life of Jason Thorndyke that his publishing business took him to the Coast at this juncture. Lily, in the days that followed, was a sight to crack a heart of granite. On the third night, when the crisis was at its worst, she even rode Bernice, her maid and a sceptical soul by nature, to the point of tears.

"Madame," she wept as she ministered, "you will kill yourself."

"I'm as good as dead already," moaned Lily. "And if these should be my last words to you, Bernice, treasure them. Never have anything to do with a horse." She moved, unwisely, and emitted a sharp yelp.

"Do you think another pillow here might ease you?" asked Bernice.

Lily ignored the pillow. "If I die during the night, Bernice," she said dramatically, "remember — Mr. Thorndyke is never to know of this."

"Never, Madame," Bernice promised tearfully.

Each evening, Lily called on all the saints to witness that she would never, never, again approach a horse. Yet each morning she delivered her stiff, aching, lacerated body into the grim hands of that arch-torturer, Joe.

Three things drove her on. First, she was by nature one who, having laid her hand to the plow, never turned back — though she sometimes cut many a fancy furrow.

Second, she wasn't going to lose face before Carol, and let Jason down, if it killed her.

Thirdly, there was the thrifty impulse that she didn't want to waste all that good pain and suffering by quitting now.

By the time they boarded the train for Long Island, however, Lily could lower the rear portion of her anatomy onto the plush without visible signs of agony. She felt decidedly Marie Antoinettish, and the guillotine loomed large. Joe had warned her in no uncertain terms that she'd break her neck if she got any but the gentlest horse. And it did not take a high voltage of feminine intuition to imagine the mount Carol would select for her.

Still, she had gambled her all on her will-o'-the-wisp, and its glimmering faintly sustained her.

THE morning of the hunt could not have been fairer.

Lily, who had prayed for rain, hail, a tornado or a blizzard, could only regard the brazen blue sky as a personal affront.

She made her entrance on the scene a little late.

Her golden hair was knotted low on her neck, and gleamed through the sheer black veil swathing her smart little derby.

A black cape fell to her boots. She looked so superlatively beautiful that Jason, who had preceded her, gasped.

Horses and dogs and grooms, gentlemen in pink coats and ladies in masculine attire milled about the courtyard.

"Lily dear," cried Carol, "I was afraid you'd changed your mind and weren't coming!"

"I?" said Lily lightly.

"That's your mount over there"

— Carol pointed with her crop—
"He needs a good firm hand on the bit."

Lily looked at the horse. Horsemen might have described the beast as a fractious Irish hunter who'd been given too much oats and too little exercise. To Lily, he seemed a mammoth creature breathing fire and brimstone.

Well, it was now or never. Lily braced herself and played her willo'-the-wisp. Tossing her cape to a groom, she revealed herself, a stunning figure clad in a well-cut habit d'amazone.

With one gloved hand she unfastened the loop that held up the train of her habit, and took a few indifferent steps toward the horse. Then she turned, and beamed upon Carol.

"So sorry to be a nuisance," said she, "but I'll have to ask you to have the horse re-saddled. I've never ridden astride, you know." "My dear, how quaint!" cried Carol.

She gave a small shriek which focussed everybody's attention. "How adorably quaint!"

Lily relaxed a little. Better be quaint than fall off the horse.

"And what luck!" Carol went on.
"I've an old saddle of Mother's. I noticed it just the other day." She gave a crisp order to a groom.

Lilly's knees shook so they nearly buckled under her.

Until this horrible moment she had not realized how deeply she had counted on that fiend Joe's words—"Doubt if any of 'em ever even saw a sidesaddle"—to provide an elegant exit.

Though she had put herself through the hoops to prepare for this very disaster if it should befall, she had never actually believed it would befall.

Now only a Miracle straight from heaven could save her.

Lily stared balefully at The Horse, which appeared to be trying to kick the roof off the stable out of sheer excess of vitamins A, B, C and D. She stared so intently that the Miracle took her unawares. She did not perceive the sudden clatter of hooves as a stranger rode into the courtyard.

She did not notice the sudden buzz of comment. It was Carol's voice, raised in sharp protest, that recalled

Lily turned her head. Carol's face was as black as a thundercloud.

Hunched forward on a big horse, a little man was cracking orders at her. Lily's gaze came to rest upon his face, then clung in mute astonishment.

THEN Jason swung toward her, grinning. "Coast Guard's got a tip a U-boat is going to try to land saboteurs tonight. They've commandeered us all for patrol work."

"Women, too?" asked Lily faintly.
Jason shook his head disdainfully.
"They need all the horses, though.
It's rough on you girls."

He was, Lily saw, pleased as Punch. All the gentlemen were pleased.

All the ladies drooped despondently around Carol, as hoof-beats died away down the road.

"I can't understand," said Carol crossly, "how they knew to come here on this particular day."

Lily remained aloof from the chorus of speculation. If anyone had ever told her that the sight of Joe the Torturer would be pleasing, she would never have believed it. But the vision of him, hunched on his big horse, cracking orders at Carol, was now enshrined in a hallowed spot in her memory.

"Dear old Joe," thought Lily fondly. "Thank heavens I told him all about the hunt."

"How about some bridge?" Carol was proposing lamely. A parcel of women in riding clothes to entertain for the day was clearly on the grim side.

"We could add the winnings to the USO fund," said Lily helpfully. Carol herded her guests toward the house.

But Lily tripped lightly after her hostess.

LISTEN, MOTHERS . . .

JUST had a birthday, an' I got a letter from my mother that I'm gonna let you read.

It kinds seemed to me she hit an idea worth thinkin' about, now that we're on top o' the New Year.

"Dear Son," she wrote, "I don't guess you remember your first New Year's. You were only a few days old and I was terribly weak and sick. There was a cold wind blowing outside that crept through the cracks of the house.

"Some of your uncles and aunts came in for a little while and tried to cheer me up. And your dad got up in the night and put one of his covers on my bed, and spread his overcoat on his own bed.

"I lay there scared to death of the future. Of course, you were welcome and I loved you, but I couldn't see how everything was going to work out. It wasn't easy to face the future with all its uncertainties.

"But I got well, and you grew up, and the other children came along and they grew up. And times got better, and you all married and raised your own families. Now I sometimes laugh at that scared little mother.

"I guess, Son, Old Mother Earth is going through some birth pangs these nights. Birth is always hard, and when you think of Mother Earth trying to give birth to a better world, you've got to expect some labor pains. And there must be some sacrifice, I suppose, even the lives of many of Mother Earth's children.

"But I think many of us will live to see this better world. And I'm praying that you and your kids will live to enjoy it — even as you have already lived to enjoy a better world than I brought you into. So may the New Year be happy, Son, and God bless you. — Mother."

BE ON TIME!

WAR TIME

MANNERS

While the nation's at war, promptness is a social "must"

by Emily Post

centered on the winning of the war, the importance of timing is realized by us all. Yet not very long ago this word "timing" was unfamiliar except to the directors of radio and screen, the coaches of sports or the industrial efficiency experts.

The aspects of timing which come within my own province are those which apply to human characteristics. These are aided by perfect timing, or handicapped by lack of timing.

An essential requirement of social skill is knowing when to go forward, and how long to stay. One whose whole sense of timing is lacking is the visitor who overstays his welcome, or the speaker who talks on and on until people look at their watches and shake them to see if they can still be going, or the person who postpones a letter of thanks or sympathy so long that the warmth has grown chilled.

Among the younger generation, there is a new awareness of timing. I might cite Sally Spoilding as an example. Six months ago when meeting her best boy friend in the lobby of a restaurant for lunch, she thought nothing of how long she kept him waiting, but was rather annoyed by the abruptness when he had to rush back to the office.

When he came to the house to take her to the theater, she would let him sit talking with her family while she took her time to put on the finishing touches of her make-up. In greater part this was to let her "make an entrance." It did not occur to her that her "entrance" would have been much more pleasing to him had it made possible their seeing the be-

Today, however, note the change: Not only is she downstairs long before the time set, but out on the front steps anxiously watching for a familiar figure in a khaki uniform who, she knows, may not even appear — who may have gone without a chance to say goodby.

Before the war, the question about time invariably asked me was how long to wait for guests who came late to meals. At present, however, questions about guests invited to meals are comparatively few. The question most often asked is what to do about happen-in visitors who come so late (or stay so long) that they interfere with the routine. Surely everyone going to see a neighbor who has no maid should be thoughtful when late afternoon approaches and should be able to ask frankly: "Tell me, won't you, when you want to begin getting the supper?" If the hostess smiles weakly and says hesitatingly: "I don't think it's very late," a visitor who has any sense at all will certainly leave in a very few moments. On the other hand, if the hostess replies in a positive tone of voice: "Oh don't go yet. I have lots of time; I haven't a thing to do for almost an hour," a visitor would plainly be permitted to stay for twenty minutes or even a little longer.

The answer to the question of how a hostess could courteously tell a visitor that she had no further time to give her was, until the war, "she couldn't." But now that promptness in every war situation is so definitely a factor which can't be set aside, a hostess who is due at hospital or on post frankly looks at her watch and rises to go! Or a visitor, even in the middle of another's half finished narrative, not only can, but must, break in with: "Sorry! but I'm due at my station in ten minutes! Goodby!"

Next Week!

Roger set off across it on a broad reach, a course that would take them out beyond the islands, and out of sight from the shore.

That was the place Roger Hayes had selected for the . . . accident.

Big and blond and looking a few years older than he really was, Roger himself was at the helm. His partner, Dan Wheeler, lounged comfortably on the high side of the little sailboat, just aft the shroud.

"We'll really take a dusting when we get out there!" Dan shouted above the wind. His lean, freckled face was glowing. He was crazy about sailing, and wind and wave never seemed to bother him, even though he was an indifferent swimmer. "If this is our last sail together, it's going to be a honey!"

He was thinking of what Roger had said when they started out: "This may be our last sail together, Dan; the way things are going at the office, I'm thinking of selling the old girl."

"That'll be tough," Dan had said soberly.
"But it might be the smart thing to do, Rog.
I doubt things are going to pick up much for us in the near future."

It was perfectly obvious to Roger that things were not going to pick up in the near future for the firm of Wheeler & Hayes, Architects.

Building was slow, and priorities was a word with a thousand meanings and a million implications. Actually, it was Dan himself who had put this whole idea into Roger's head, weeks before, during one of their all-too-frequent discussions of finances.

"It's a tough situation, and there's nothing we can do about it, Rog. No use kidding ourselves any longer: we're going to be splitting two ways what would be just a fair living for one, until things start breaking again. But if a married man can get along, I guess a bachelor can, eh?"

THAT one significant phrase had kept coming back to Roger: "... splitting two ways what would be just a fair living for one." If there were only one of them, there wouldn't be any split; their partnership agreement took care of that. Mona, Dan's wife, would get his insurance, paid for by the firm; the business would belong to Roger.

An idea like that could grow upon you. It could hammer at you all day, and haunt you by night. Success had been easy for Roger. He'd always made a lot of money, and spent every penny of it. He couldn't learn to get along without it.

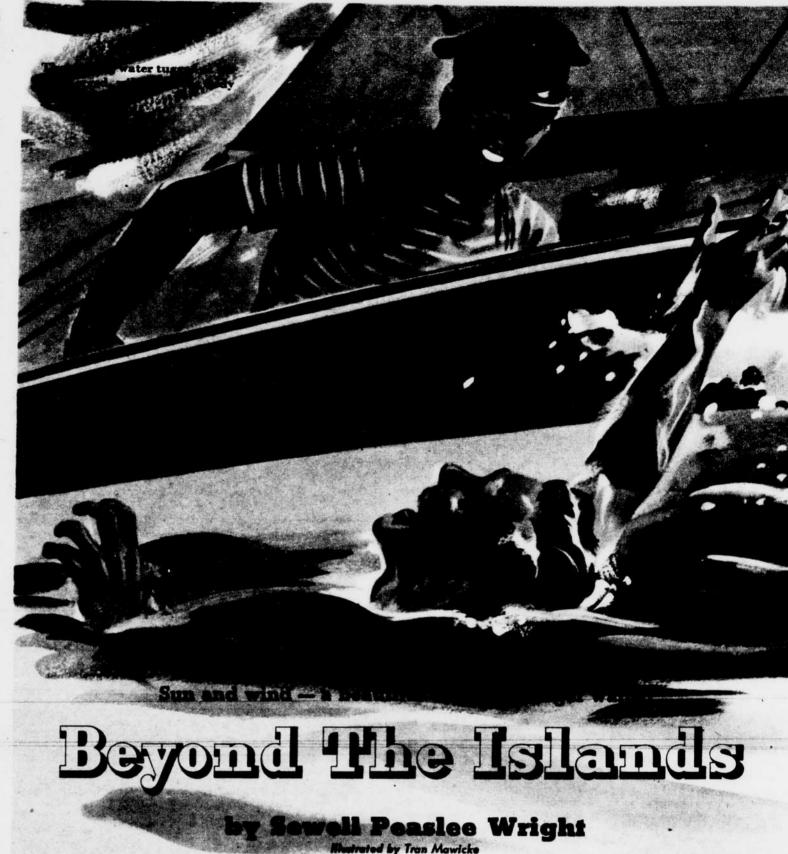

But Roger was not a fool. More than that, he wasn't taking any chances. An accident was an accident, and the smartest cop in the world couldn't prove otherwise.

Roger had thought about it so much, planned it all so carefully, that it all seemed like a matter of course now. He felt a little flushed and feverish, and his heart was pounding just a bit harder than usual, but that was all.

THE little sailboat slipped out from between two islands, and leaped like a live thing as the full force of the wind struck. Dan whooped joyously; this was what he liked.

Roger glanced up at the peak of his sail, and down at the lee rail, which was running just under the surface. "This is the life, Dan," he shouted. He looked all around, carefully. There was one sail in sight, but it was just a remote fleck of white. Behind them, nothing but the islands; ahead, only water, cut off from the sky by the dark, thin line of the distant shore.

Carefully Roger brought the boat closer to the wind, and when she was pointing exactly where he wanted her, he suddenly hauled in the mainsheet, so that the craft heeled sharply, and the rushing water foamed up to the very edge of the cockpit.

Dan leaned far out on the high side to counterbalance the boat, just as Roger had known he would do — and at that instant, Roger slammed the tiller hard down.

As the boat came about, the mast straightened up like a released spring. The sail filled on the opposite tack, and the side of the boat upon which Dan had been sitting plunged under water. With a shout of alarm, Dan let go the jib sheet and grabbed the steel wire of the shroud, the rushing water tugging at his submerged, wildly flailing body.

"Rog!" he screamed. "Help me!"

Roger watched him without moving, holding the boat on its course. His heart thumped loudly, the blood rushing in his ears. Wouldn't the fool ever let go?

"Roger!" Dan's eyes were bulging now with the strain. "For God's sake —"

He was gone, and Roger drew in a deep sigh of relief. He looked back, and saw Dan come up floundering. Roger started throwing lifesaver cushions at him; there were four in the boat and he threw them all — carefully wild, where Dan couldn't possibly reach them.

The sails were flapping thunderously. Twice he almost capsized, which would have been perfectly satisfactory to Roger, for he had planned on the possibility, and staged the accident so that the boat would drift by beyond Dan's reach.

It would have been unpleasant, riding the partially submerged hull for an hour or so, until he was rescued or washed ashore, but that was all.

In three or four minutes it was all over. Dan was gone, and the cushions had drifted almost out of sight. Roger was wet to the skin, and felt bruised and shaken all over. He couldn't have put on a better show if he'd had a thousand spectators. Carefully, he cruised up and down, to make sure there was no sign of Dan, and when he was positive, he headed for the dock.

His story was short, simple. He told them exactly what he had planned to tell them:

"It was all my fault!" he said with convincingly bitter self-reproach. "We were out on the big stretch. There was a lot of wind; about all we could handle. I called out 'Ready about!', but I didn't look to make sure Dan understood, and apparently he didn't hear me over the wind. He went overboard in a flash. I threw him all the cushions, and tried to get back to him, but you fellows know what it is to sail singlehanded in a stiff wind, with the jib flapping like a rag, and — in a spot like that, you're all thumbs. It was awful!"

So somebody gave him a drink, and everybody tried to tell him that accidents are horrible things, but they will happen. And that was all there was to it.

Oh, there was the coroner, and the inquest, and a session with old Ed Beck, the sheriff, but those things were just formalities. Roger told the same story every time, with just variation enough to make it sound natural.

The toughest job of all, really, was the business conference with little Mona Wheeler, Dan's wife, after it was all over.

She was apparently so stunned by what had happened that she just sat there staring at him, nodding her head once in a while, and twisting her handkerchief. "I understand," she said drearily, when he had finished. "I knew most of the details. Dan told me. Is there - anything else that I should know -?" "No, Mona. Unless there's something I can do for you. If there's anything at all - "

"Nothing," she said quietly. "Absolutely nothing." Roger sub-leased what had been Dan's office. and fired one of the girls. A couple of rather nice commissions that had been hanging fire came through. By midsummer Roger Hayes, Architect, had not a worry in the world. He sold his little sailboat and bought a larger one from young Jimmy Grear, who was going into the Army. Got it at his own price.

HE DIDN'T see much of Mona, and he was glad of that. Mona had never liked him particularly, and probably it was only natural that she should feel still less friendly now. She might even have ideas about the accident; she and Ed Beck, the sheriff, had been very chummy at the inquest, and Roger was pretty sure that Ed had been a little suspicious . . . which didn't mean anything, because Ed was suspicious of everything. That was what made him such a good sheriff that he'd held the job, no matter how the political tide went, for at least fifteen years.

But if Ed had had ideas, he obviously had forgotten them. He'd taken up sailing, and Roger ran into him often at the dock where they both kept their boats. He was always very friendly, and he loved to talk.

"I don't know's I'll ever make a sailor, Roger," he said one afternoon late in the summer. "I guess there's a lot to that saying about teaching an old dog new tricks. I don't get the hang of setting my sail right to get the most drive out of it, and the same goes for the jib. Some afternoon mebbe you wouldn't mind giving me some pointers, eh?"

Roger's first impulse was to pass up the very obvious bid, but that wouldn't have been smart. No harm ever came to anybody by being friendly with a sheriff - and Ed had undoubtedly been waiting for him. Roger always went sailing Saturday afternoons when there was a good breeze and the weather was fair. "How about now?" Roger said with forced joviality. "I'm going out, and I'd be glad to have company."

"Well, that's mighty fine of you, Roger." Ed's face beamed. "I was hoping you'd say something like that."

Ed wasn't as bad a sailor as Roger had imagined. After Roger had cautioned him a few times to ease off the jib sheet, so that the jib wouldn't back-wind the mainsail, he was a pretty good crew, and he grinned all over when Roger complimented him.

"I used to sail some when I was a kid," he admitted. "But you forget an awful lot. It's working the mainsail and tiller together that seems to get me down. I wish I could handle a boat like you can."

"It's not so difficult. Look; there's a nice breeze out here. You skipper her for a while, and maybe I can set you right on a few things."

It was a long lesson. Ed was full of questions, but he learned quickly, and it was a pleasure to show the old boy a few of the fine points of sailing. "Maybe," Roger suggested at length, "we'd better be turning back. The wind's freshening, and it looks as though it might get puffy, later on."

It was only a minute or so later that it happened. Roger was leaning out on the high side, looking up at the sail. Suddenly, the boat seemed to drop from beneath him, and plunged him into the water.

He fought his way up, and shook the water from his eyes. The boat was some little distance away, but it was turning, and starting back. Ed was handling her beautifully.

Roger reached down and pulled off both shoes. He wasn't much of a swimmer, but he could manage to stay afloat until Ed reached him; it would take only a few seconds. But as the boat came close, it veered away. Roger shouted angrily. "Here I am, damn it! Throw me a cushion or a rope - quick!"

"No," said Ed calmly, spilling wind from the sail, and keeping the boat just beyond Roger's reach. "I'd kind of like you to know just how Dan Wheeler felt when he went under for the last time. You got that coming to you, Roger.'

"You're crazy! What do you mean? Pull me aboard that boat, do you hear? I can't swim!"

"You can swim every mite as good as Dan Wheeler could. You didn't pull him aboard."

Roger started cursing, and went under. He came up strangling and frightened. "I couldn't! Ed! Get me on board, I tell you, before I drown!"

Again the Sheriff shook his head. "Not until you tell me the truth," he said. "You toppled Dan in just like I did you, didn't you? On purpose, I mean?"

"No! It was an accident, I tell you!"

The Sheriff shrugged, and studied the shaking peak of the mainsail, waiting. Roger went under again, and in that instant the fear of cold, dark death struck home. "Yes, I did it!" he screamed when he broke water. "Pull me in! I did it, I tell you!"

The boat eased close, but not quite close enough. The Sheriff said, "But he didn't pop off quite as quickly as you did. He grabbed something. Held onto it quite a spell. What was it?"

"The shroud!"

"That's what I thought. You did murder Dan!" "Yes! Ed! For God's sake - "

The Sheriff reached out a long, skinny arm; Roger grabbed it with both hands, and a moment later was stretched out, weak and trembling, in the cockpit. "It was a trick!" he muttered. "You did it deliberately. The whole thing was a trick." "That's right. Just a trick. You see, I've known all along there was something awfully wrong with your story. You said time and again that Dan Wheeler just fell backward off the boat, and was far astern before you could do a thing - but the palms of his hands said different. He'd held onto something as only a desperate man, a drowning man, mebbe, would hold on. Plenty long enough for you to have saved him had you been so minded." "Why didn't you say something at the time?"

"Because it wasn't a case. You can't get a conviction on that sort of evidence, Roger. It's too circumstantial. But a confession, now, that's different."

Roger waited a moment before he replied. He thought hard and straight and fast.

"I haven't confessed a thing, Ed," he said quietly. "I don't know what you're talking about. And my word's as good as yours, you know."

Why, so it is. But two against one is pretty good in a court of law, with some good circumstantial evidence," said Ed. "Mrs. Wheeler, come out now!"

Roger turned, following Ed's gaze. From beneath the deck, where she had been hidden, came Mona Wheeler. Her slacks were filthy with bilge water, and she was so cramped she could hardly straighten up, but her small, pale face was shining in cold triumph. "I heard every word," she said.

"Fine." Ed nodded. "It worked out just like we planned, didn't it? But you must be awful uncomfortable; you were hidden away there at least an hour before Roger showed up, and we've been out longer

"It was nothing!" the woman said bitterly. "Ever since you showed me Dan's poor, torn hands, and told me what you thought, I've been waiting for this moment."

New Law Calls For HIGHEST RATES IN U.S. HISTORY!

8th Year of Publication

HE new Income Tax Rates will upset the entire household budget and scale of living of millions of families. Most individuals must pay from TWO to SEVEN times as much Income Tax as they paid last year. Those who last year paid none (or very little) must NOW pay a sizable amount.

Our nation is at war. Each of us wants to do his full share to win it. Our Government needs every dollar we can spare, but it does not expect you to overpay your tax, any more than it expects you to pay more than the right price for food, clothes, or any other article or service.

Furthermore, an incorrect return, whether resulting in overpayment or underpayment, is a hindrance to the tax program, involving extra costs to the Government through expensive readjustments.

Over ONE AND A HALF MILLION taxpayers have used this book in previous years. This year, more than ever before, you need the NEW 1943 Edition! It is NOW READY-to help you determine the legal taxes you are expected to pay, and the legal deductions you are expected to take. The savings it will help you to make can and should be invested in War Bonds.

PLYING the winter-swept waters of the North Atlantic, under silent sails to give no sound warning to enemy subs, this stalwart schooner is one of that little-celebrated "Corsair Fleet" of the Coast Guard whose day-and-night vigilance is making life tough for U-boats. Stalwart as their boats are the men taking the icy blasts and the chance of torpedo and shell that go with their jobs of patrolling the sea on these ships that have quit their fishing, their lumber carrying, their pleasure cruising to go to war for Uncle Sam.

Reefed down under a fresh blow, this Coast Guard "Corsair" can still step along and cover a wide ocean span in her ceaseless vigil to spot any U-boat threatening the vital shipping lanes.

Eternal vigilance is the "watchword" of the Corsairs. Eyes sharpened for distance as only the sea can sharpen them sweep the circle of the horizon day and night.
