Nation-Wide Dimout, Travel Curb May Be Forced by Miners' Strike; Workers Hear President Tonight

Ickes Is Rushing Plans to Reopen Fields Tomorrow

No. 1,988-No. 36,160.

By J. A. FOX. The Government was moving swiftly last night to get the strike-bound coal mines back into production and to safeguard the Nation's war machinery.

Shortly after the issuance of President Roosevelt's unprecedented order directing the seizure and operation-with the backing of arms, if necessary-of the pits where more than 400,000 men have laid down their tools in the last few days, Solid Fuels Administrator Ickes, to whom the task of keeping the mines going service" telegrams to 3,850 operators fields, ordering them and their workers to be on the job tomorrow.

Less Rail Travel Urged.

At the same time, in an effort to relieve the pinch on the dwindling fuel supply, Mr. Ickes recommended elimination of all unessential railroad travel for the duration of the strike, and, it was understood, was prepared to ask for a Nation-wide dimout to conserve the coal used in generating power. The contemplated rail restrictions, being Transportation, would entail a 25

While the order empowering Mr. such arrangements as he deems advisable authorized him to call on the War Department for "protection" for the mines and those who may work them, he expressed hope that the use of soldiers would not become necessary, and declared that "they will not be called in unless it is absolutely essential."

LONDON, Sunday, May 2.-The London Sunday Times, commenting editorially on the United States coal strike, said today that "Lewis and his associates are playing right into the hands of Germany and Japan.

The Times linked the "unpardonable coal strike" with the Polish-Russian dispute as the two unfavcrable developments in an otherwise improving war outlook for the United Nations. All London newspapers put the

A comparatively slim crowd estimated as 60,000 by Col. Matt Winn, compared to the 90,000s of other years-roared him home as he did way he was supposed to do. But he didn't need their roars, because he took the lead when he wanted to in this mile and a quarter "heartbreaker" and there wasn't another galloper in the race with enough get-up-and-go in his hoofs even to challenge him.

Ocean Wave Misses Race.

The only hopeful that might have made him speed up from a waltz to a two-step was Warren Wright's Ocean Wave and the Wave wasn't even on the track. Three hours before the plaintive notes of "My Old Kentucky Home" drifted over this picturesque race course Ocean Wave was withdrawn because of an injured leg-and whatever horse race this Derby might have been stayed right in his barn with him.

As a result, the Fleet broke out in full battle array after bouncing along with some of the others in the field of 10 for half a mile and from there on it was just a gallop. Permitted to Boost Prices of Meals

Rent License Required For Those Feeding More Than 15 Persons

In a sweeping order affecting 1,400 boarding house operators and probably 28,000 boarders, District Rent Control Administrator Robert Cogswell yesterday permitted perators to increase meal charges a new procedure which reduces ime consumed by legal technicalities to two weeks at the most instead of the three months required

The order eliminates the slow and cumbersome individual hearings mandatory since the Rent Control Act went into effect one year and four months ago. At the same time, however, the administrator how requires each landlord to furhish information under oath before allowing increase in rate or change in meal service standards. To protect the tenants from unjustifiable price increases or changes, the administrator simultaneously invokes for the first time his licensing power and makes it obligatory for each coarding house operator feeding more than 15 persons outside his imediate family, to obtain and display a rent license and to post rates and keep a room register.

Order Goes in Effect. Failure to comply with official regulations, false or misleading statement in application for such rent license, or in claim for relief under the new order, is sufficient cause for revocation of the rent license. Anyone operating a boarding house without a rent license after this month is subject to a fine of $1,000 or a year in jail or both. The new order, called General Order No. 8, went into effect today and gives boarding house operators 30 days in which to

The Rent Control Act has always been interpreted to control not only rent but also meal charges in boarding houses. It sets the legal price rate at that received on January 1, 1941, and prohibits price increases or reduction of service standards except when so granted by the administration. For some time landlords have claimed that labor troubles, shortage of supplies and equipment, food rationing problems and rapid rise in prices makes it impossible to maintain any specific standards of meal service as contemplated by the Rent Control

Reminders on Rationing

War Ration Book No. 1-This book governs the rationing of sugar, coffee and shoes.

Blue Stamps, War Ration Book No. 2-To be used for canned fruits, canned vegetables, fruit juices, soups, frozen foods, catsup, etc. Stamps lettered G, H and J are valid now and will remain good through May 31 on the basis of point values fixed by the OPA. Point values recently have been cut for frozen foods and canned soups. Black-eyed peas have been taken off the list of rationed ted Stamps, War Ration Book No. 2 -To be used for all meats, including canned meats, and for butter, margarine, lard, cheese, canned fish, fats and oils Stamps lettered E and F are through May 31. (The E stamps became valid last Sunday and the F stamps become good today.) Stamps marked G will become good next Sunday, stamp H on May 16 and stamp J on May 23. All of these stamps will expire on Wholesale and retail dealers in products covered by the red stamps must register with the local rationing boards between tomorrow and May 14, stating their inventories, figured in points, as of the close of business yesterday. Dealers who fail to register will not be permitted to sell or acquire these rationed foods. Sugar—Coupon No. 12 in Book No. 1 is good for 5 pounds through May Coffee-Stamp No. 23 is good for 1 pound through May 30. Fuel Oil-Coupon No. 5 is valid for 10 gallons through September 30. The provision in rationing regulations that previously has permitted 50-gallon emergency liveries-in cases where lack of fuel oil was a serious threat to life, health or property-has been canceled.

Consumers who have used their fuel oil coupons should retain the coupon stubs until further notice from the OPA.

The coupon stubs should not be turned over to the rationing board at this time. In cases where consumers already have given the stubs to the rationing boards, the board may either return them or file them with the consumers' original application for fuel oil rations.

Gasoline-No. 5 "A" coupons are good for 3 gallons each but must last through July 21. "B" and "C" coupons, good for

3 gallons each, expire according to dates indicated on the individual books, but arrangements are being made to "tailor" supplemental ration books so that expiration dates will be the same for all drivers. "T" rations are issued by local rationing boards after approval is obtained from local Offices of Defense Transportation on the basis of certificates of war necessity. New Automobiles-Any one gainfully employed or doing voluntary work for the war effort or the public welfare is eligible to obtain a rationing certificate for the purchase of cars with a list price of over $1,500, or convertibles regardless of price. The applicant must show need for a car to get to or do his work and must show that his present car, if any, is not adequate. Eligibility for automobiles with a list price of less than $1.500. except convertibles, is confined to persons who can show the need occupations (such as war workers, physicians, ministers, etc.) listed in the "C" group of eligibles in the gasoline rationing regulations and who do not now have the use of an adequate car.

New 1942 model passenger cars with a list price of more than $2,500 and 1941 model cars driven less than 1,000 miles are available without rationing certificates to any one who has need for a car in a gainful occupation, or who needs a car for volunteer work in connection with the war effort or the public welfare. Both dealer and buyer are required to send to the OPA inventory unit in New York a statement certifying the eligibility of the buyer and giving the description of the car sold.

now valid and will remain good Tires-All classes of drivers may now have tires recapped without obtaining certificates from their boards.

Effective next Saturday all motorists whose gasoline ration cards are intended to permit them to drive more than 240 miles a month will become eligible for the best grade of tires. Grade 1 will include pre-Pearl Harbor tires, fac-"seconds," "change - overs' (tires driven less than 1,000 miles). and tires made of reclaimed rubber. (This means that grade 1. beginning Saturday, will include all tires that formerly have been classed as grades 1 and 2. The old classification of "grade 2" will be abolished.)

Holders of grade 2 certificates. by presenting them to a tire dealer. may obtain grade 1 certificates.

Motorists who do not receive sufficient gasoline rations for 240 miles of driving a month will contine to be eligible for only recapped and used tires. Certificates must be obtained from the Rationing Board for the purchase of any type of tire. Certificates are issued only after presentation of tire inspection records showing the need for replacements Weekly Tire Inspection Notice-Motorists holding "B" and "C" gasoline ration cards should have their tires inspected at an official OPA inspection station before next Friday if their license tag numbers are in the following series: "B" ration holders: 97401 to 99200, 147201 to 151200.

"C" ration holders: 85401 to 88400, 109401 to 116000, 164001 to 168800 Holders of "A" cards will not be required to have their tires inspected until June. Motorists who are to combine trict's annual mechanical inspection of automobiles will be notified by post card from the Department of Vehicles and Traffic. Shoes-Shoes made wholly or in part of leather or having rubber soles are, with certain exceptions rationed. Stamps No. 17 in Book No. 1 is redeemable for one pair of shoes through June 15.

Footwear not covered by rationing includes ski and skate shoes, locker sandals and casins, infants' shoes, size 4 or own buildings. smaller; overshoes, waterproof or snow and water-repellent footwear and burial slippers. A special procedure has been sumers who buy shoes they find are defective.

States, but who expect to be away from a source of supply for long periods of time may make arrangements to obtain shoes in advance of the regular time.

The procedure for obtaining "safety shoes" when they are needed in connection with a job has been simplified. Rubber Boots and Rubber Work Shoes-Certificates must be obtained from local boards for certain types of heavy rubber footwear. Exempt from rationing are men's rubber boots and rubber work shoes smaller than size 6. lumbermen's overs, men's arctics, gaiters, work and dress rubbers; women's and children's boots, rubber work shoes, arctics, gaiters

Bicycles-Persons gainfully employed or those who are doing voluntary work in connection with the war effort or the public welfare, as well as pupils, may obtain certificates for the purchase of bicycles if they need bicycles for travel between home and work or school

Stoves-Oil-fired and coal-fired stoves are subject to rationing. Virtually every one who finds it necessary to his health or comfort to supplement central oilheating equipment by the use of a coal stove may obtain a certificate from his rationing board to permit the purchase. Typewriters - Effective yesterday. preference on rental of nonportables made between 1927 and 1935 is to be given to rationing certificate holders.

To get a rental rationing certificate, an applicant must apply to his local rationing board and show that typewriter will be used at least 24 hours a week for purposes necessary to the war effort. Non-portables made between 1914 and 1928, as well as most portables made since 1935, may be rented for a limited time without a rationing certificate.

Generally, sales are prohibited on non-portables made since 1915. Sales and rentals are unrestricted on models made before 1915 and on "stripped" portables, machines lacking at least two of certain modern features.

American Ships Fight Angry Seas to Carry War Goods to Britain

One Vessel Makes Port After Four Months of Battling Heavy Odds

By THOMAS R. HENRY, Star Staff Correspondent.

A BRITISH PORT, April 6 (By Mail).—An American merchantman docked here this afternoon after a four-month crossing of the Atlantic -tossed about by gales in some of the severest storms on record, lost for three days in a blinding snowstorm in the general neighborhood of sinister "Torpedo Junction," part of her deck cargo washed overboard, docked weeks at a time for necessary

Time after time the old cargo carrier of the days of the last war lost her convoy and bucked the gales alone or with one or two companions. But always she was able either to find her own place again or fall in with some other convoy -and she kept doggedly on. Today she is unloading her cargo of essential war materials.

"Really an uneventful voyage, I'm afraid," says the ensign in command of the Navy's armed guard on this craft, a former Arizona school teacher on his first trip.

Story Is Typical.

But his story, say United States
Navy port liason officers here, is rather typical, except for the "flying Dutchman" record, of those told by armed guard officers who come to this port almost daily. These men, who man the Navy-installed guns of the merchantmen, are having some of the most thrilling experiences of the war on the high seas.

Starless night after starless night, blinking blizzards lashing their gur. turrets, their faces cut by ice and snow, these men have kept their lonely watches in what all describe against them as the worst winter on the North Atlantic within the memory of the oldest mariners. Now the weather said the ensign to his chief petty is clearing rapidly. Hungarian Forces Return to Budapest From Soviet Front

2d Army Under Jany Numbers About 100,000. Premier Indicates

The 2d Hungarian Army and its commander, Col. Gen. Gustav Jany, arrived in Budapest yesterday from the Russian front at a time when Adolf Hitler has been demanding even more war aid from his Balkan

A Budapest domestic broadcast reported by the Federal Communications Commission said Gen. Jany declared on his return that his troops had served as "the rear guard of the rear guards" for the Germans during the winter retreat in Russia.

An indication of the number of Hungarians being withdrawn from Russia also was given by Premier Nicholas Kallay who, in greeting the general and his troops, promised that the welfare of the returning army of "some 100,000" would have a first claim on the government because the soldiers had been "through hell."

Stockholm reports last month had quoted usually reliable quarters as saying that Hungary intended to withdraw 200,000 troops from the eastern front, including the 2d Army and 40,000 survivors of the battle of Voronezh where Jany said his troops, despite "unfavorable weather" and "superior numbers' of Russians, had "secured the retreat of the German forces." The Budapest radio did not say why the Hungarians were returning home, and Jany was said to have given this message to Hungary "Everybody should prepare sternly The war is not yet over."

Hungary has been reported weary of the war, and also fearful of Though the Russian people have neighboring Rumania's territorial made many sacrifices and know ambitions. Coal Strike Stiffens Congress Sentiment To Curb Labor Unions

Senate Will Consider Measure Tomorrow to Hit at War Walkouts

Sentiment on Capitol Hill to curb labor union practices stiffened perceptibly last night as the Senate prepared to vote tomorrow on the Connally bill to give the Government vast powers for seizure of strike-bound factories and mines where tie-ups threaten the war ef-

Comment in both branches of Congress, from Republicans and Democrats alike, strongly supported President Roosevelt's firm stand for continued operations of the Nation's coal mines

Senator Johnson, Democrat, of Colorado, a powerful supporter of union labor, said he believed the President had no other choice, but "I don't consider this a full solution. The situation is very ticklish.' Senator Nye, Republican, of North Dakota, a consistent foe of the administration, conceded, no other answer was possible, adding "I hope we can avoid any kind of hostilities that might be invited by the arbitrary

Connally Bill up Tomorrow. The Senate tomorrow will consider the bill introduced by Senator Connally, Democrat, of Texas, which would give the Government great power to deal with strikes. Senator Connally declared yester-

"The President, taking over the mines, followed the only practical course open to him. The American people will support the action of the President in such further moves as may be necessary. If he deems the use of troops necessary, they will support and applaud him." There was talk on Capitol Hill of amending the Connally bill in order to curb drastically strikes during the war, and Senator Vandenberg, Republican, of Michigan, expressed what appeared to be a growing reaction when he told reporters he did not believe "Congress can sit idly by and let a situation of this kind jeopardize the very lives of the fighting forces of this country."

"Labor's right to strike is a fundamental American freedom, but when it collides with the national security it must give way to the public welfare," be declared.

He started immediately to talk about "all of us in the coal mining business." Dispatching telegrams to 3,850 coal operators, he instructed them to fly the American flag on their properties, send him back a pledge of their support and get the mines in operation tomorrow.

Mr. Ickes' new assignment fell naturally within the scope of his duties as fuels administrator, but there probably was more than coincidence of office that led to putting him in charge of the strike-torn Virtually ever since he became

Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes has held a trouble-shooting job, and he has been a party to or a central figure of some of the most controversial issues of the New Deal years. Never one to duck a good fight and holding the reputation of being rough-and-tumble political battler, Mr. Ickes has been called such things as the "bad boy" of the New Deal, "tyrant," "czar" and "dictator"-but in some instances, onetime critics have wound up by hurling bouquets instead of brickbats A case in point was the metamorphosis of Mr. Ickes in the eyes of the oil industry operators. When, in the early days of the New Deal, the Secretary acted as NIRA oil code administrator, the oil industry accused him of inaugurating "regimentation" in the guise of conservation, while he accused the oil men of "squandering" natural esources. He was even called "a visionary"

Hearing Planned Soon On D. C. Tuberculosis Association Dispute

D'Alesandro Expected To Call Up Controversy Within Few Days Chairman D'Alesandro of the

ealth subcommittee of the House District Committee plans to bring he controversy in the District Tuberculosis Association out into the open within the next few days according to indications last night. The exact time for opening a nearing which he promised in a statement to The Star early last reek, has not yet been fixed. Mr. D'Alesandro plans, however, to call long list of witnesses, including Dr. J. Winthrop Peabody, president of the association; Harald H. Lund. who resigned as executive secretary; Edward B. Persons, chairman of the Membership Committee appointed is a result of a recent meeting of protest, and many others.

Mr. Lund to Testify.

Meanwhile, Mr. Lund, who had een asked at the protest meeting o reconsider his resignation, told The Star last night he would not

"I am staying here to help get the association on its feet as a truly democratic institution," he said.
"This is important for the war effort. We have a serious tuberculosis situation here. We need an independent agency. It is not right fundamentally, in principle, to have the people personally interested in the field, to be in control."

Chairman Persons of the Membership Protest Committee said he was "thoroughly dissatisfied" with continued delay of Dr. Peabody. and Charles L. Newcomb, an official permitted to inspect a two-man Japanese submarine captured at operating supplies for equipment of the National Tuberculosis Association, who has succeeded Mr. Lund temporarily as executive secretary. Mr. Persons charged them with unnecessarily postponing again the issue of meeting directly the complaints of the membership.

Annual Meeting Postponed. Mr. Persons said he wrote a letter as a result of the recent protest meeting, suggesting that the Persons committee of five protesting members meet with the board of directors of the association at least Three D. C. Chemists by Wednesday and that the postponed annual meeting be held not later than May 15.

In reply, Mr. Persons said he received a letter yesterday from Mr. Newcomb suggesting a conference between the directors and the Persons Committee May 12. Mr. Newcomb did not even mention the issue of the annual meeting, Mr. Persons said. This is considered one of the most important points of difference,

The annual meeting scheduled in March had been set for last Tues-day night, Mr. Persons sald, then was postponed again, and now the date is indefinite. Mr. Persons said the Newcomb letter did not explain the further delay.

Shop Owners Resentful. Shop owners, unable to resist, are numbling openly, fearful they never again will have their stores. The rapidity with which buildings are being transformed into residences increased this feeling. They are complaining, too, that the closings were on a political basis and those who are in disfavor with Nazi local leaders the first to be hit. The program has increased the power of the party to a vast degree since these local leaders in any district are designated as executors of the decrees. Das Schwarze Korps acknowledges this in an article on abuses. The paper cited examples of one party leader who closed down a tiny residence shop run by an old couple who could not work in factories, but did not close his own shop which had three usable young people, lacked sufficient stock for operation and had large premises suitable for residences under the bombed-out housing program.

Relatives Had Advantage. Schwarze Korps found an advantage, however. It charged many small shops had been kept open merely for the benefit of a family When desirable goods came into stock, the clerks' cousins and uncles were permitted to buy all of them, leaving nothing for the regular customers. Shop owners with writing paper, toothpaste and other rare but unrationed articles used them to barter for food on the black market.

The current drive to get a retailer out of his shop and into a factory or the army is a continuation of a consolidation begun in the spring of 1942. Then small fac-tories were closed and their men and machinery moved into larger plants to keep war production going. Economics Minister Walther Funk, recognizing the worries of middle class proprietors, promised the owners they would be the first to be considered in the reconstruction after the war. But he warned that political and professional suitability would be considered; in other words, their present co-operation in the mobilization would largely determine the retailers' future.

Expects Reich to Share Control. The Frankfurter Zeitung declared, however, that the state certainly would retain a large part of the ownership after the war, that reconstruction, continuing decrees, higher taxes and sinking incomes made it doubtful that the "situation would permit the necessary unfolding of strength of private initiative.

The editorial continued with the statement that Nazi ideology stresses the state as the "guiding influence under which private initiative flowers." It concluded that the state It concluded that the state would remain a strong force to "try" to even the distribution of goods, "but much depends on how." The Zeitung is one of the few papers in Germany which retains a semblance of editorial liberty and has not been taken over completely by the Nazis.

Weltwoche, Swiss weekly, summarized the situation, which can only be considered as an important one with regard to morale, thus: "Total mobilization of labor and power, which takes every citizen without distinction, besides gaining soldiers and workers, serves as a political instrument for the exclusion of possible sources of opposition. German propaganda is in the difficult position of having to try to arouse enthusiasm for an economic system which they had considered Bolshevism and the essence of nonculture."

Wrote Neveste Nachrichten of Munich about this dilemma: "Germany stands between Scylla

Congress Faces Busy Schedule to Finish Appropriation Bills

Multi-Billion Measures Should Be Voted Before Fiscal Year Starts

By J. A. O'LEARY. Congress faces a busy two months to complete action on 12 big annual appropriation bills in time for the new fiscal year, beginning July 1.

The Senate Appropriations Committee will speed up action this week on several of the six money bills that have passed the House in the last two months, including the $54,789,434 District appropriation

Only one of the regular departmental supply measures—covering the Treasury and Post Office-has gone through both chambers and that still requires House and Senate action on the conference report before it can go to the White House. Five more are awaiting original consideration by the House.

The fate of the National Resources Planning Board, the future scope of the Home Owners Loan Corp. and the question of whether to dig a $44,000,000 barge canal across Florida are among the controversial issues to be decided within a few days as the Senate Committee acts on these accumulated appropriation bills.

The five appropriation bills still being written in the House are for the Interior, Navy, the military functions of the War Department, the Federal Security Agency, and a general bill to provide for various war agencies outside of the Army

Mr. Holzer, a self-effacing, earnest young man, is responsible for the system by which ration book No. 3 will be mailed to the consuming public sometime between June 10 and July 21. This will mean that citizens who have been going to school almost as often as their voungsters to register for something or other will not need to stand in line make complicated declarations and get their tempers ruffled.

A matching effort on the part of War Manpower Commission will probably be withdrawn. It was a set of directions to regional and area manpower officials telling them how to use community resources in combatting absenteeism. Principal objections to it, Dr. Frank Sparks, chief of WMC's manpower utilization bureau, said, were that it "represents no one's ideas" and was too general.

After meeting with WMC regional directors who just finished a threeday conference here. Dr. Sparks said the regional directors had a down-to-earth working knowledge of the problem by areas and plants and "we'll help them by specific examples instead of talking in general terms."

Next step on the information side will be a booklet from OWI outlining what the community can do to halt absenteeism. This is expected to be ready around May 10.

Areas Will Be Examples. Meanwhile, WPB and WMC committees will concentrate on about a dozen areas chosen for "special assistance." Mr. Vandeburg said these would then become examples for the rest of the country although each plant and each area had a different problem. He emphasized that steps to combat absenteeism within the plants had to come first. Government, he said, could assist through sending out documentary ready has an anti-absentee pro-

Among the causes of absenteeism cited in the guidebook are illness and accident, fatigue and monotony of job, the hours and shifts worked by employes, transportation difficulties, housing, housekeeping responsibilities, soldiers home on furlough, poor production practices, the attraction of long week ends and "day after pay day" absences, and instability of new workers in industry.

In connection with "Child Health Day" yesterday, the District Health Department released figures for the calendar year 1942 showing 44.6 infant deaths per 1,000 live births, new all-time low here.

Friday Rush Leaves Butchers Groggy but Hopeful of Future

Most Dealers Doubt Point Value Changes Will Alter D. C. Eating Habits

Still groggy from Friday's battles with "point-crazy" customers, District butchers looked back on the first month of meat rationing and wondered whether they were physically and mentally constituted to hold out much longer.

Many meat dealers indicated sadly that if the supply and demand situation during the past few weeks is any indication of the permanent pattern of rationing, they would just as soon have no part in the business for a while. With discouraging irony, the supply of meat has been most plentiful when demand was slightest. When points piled up and potential customers began to hunger for steaks and roasts once more, shipments fell off.

Dealers are hoping that things will settle down to some semblance of normal operations once more, even if sales are decreased. They won't mind the decrease so much as they do the disruption of time-honored buying habits and the recent vagaries of supply.

Tell of Troubles.

They cite this weekend as an example: Friday should have been a good fish day, a fair meat day, Saturday should have been a heavy day for the sale of all kinds of meats. But not this time. Friday was a day of wild meat buying by customers who clutched unexpired coupons and demanded anything, just so they could "spend" their coupons by midnight, when four sets of red stamps became valid. Yesterday with only red E stamps valid for meat, butter, cheese, fats and oils butcher shops did a comparatively light business. It was probably just as well, since there was very little meat left in town anyway.

Immediately after meat rationing started most dealers found they were able to get generous quantities that had been scarce during pre-rationing weeks. Some built up stocks and discovered after a week of almost no business that they would have to hold "point sales" to keep meat from spoiling.

Things Seemed Better. After that, it appeared for awhile that things would level off. A few more customers began coming in as more of the red coupons became cumulatively valid. Meat supplies were holding up. Butchers breathed a little more easily.

As the month wore on, business accelerated. And then deliveries of meat to retailers began to fall off again. During the last week or two, dealers have complained with increasing frequency that they have not been able to get enough meat to take care of the demand properly. Beef, especially, became scarce. One dealer yesterday said the supply situation now was "just as bad as it was before rationing." His orders, he said, are still cut by about and delayed for two or three days.

The OPA decided that the rationed public wanted too many steaks and roasts, not enough of such products as brains, sweetbreads, kidneys, liver, pigs knuckles, scrapple and sausage. Point values on some of these products were lowered a couple of weeks ago, and reductions in the point values of others containers. are to go into effect today, along with increases on certain kinds of steaks and roasts.

Whether these changes actually will encourage Americans to eat more sweetbreads, brains, liver and other "slow" items is doubted by most butchers. Some wholesalers and retailers have pointed out that the supply of these products in the Washington area, at least, is not as plentiful as the OPA point value revisions would indicate. Washington, it is recalled, was always much more of a steak town than one that demanded pig's knuckles and sweet-they would continue to buy these "point bargains" cautiously because they are highly perishable and must be moved quickly. Besides, winter is the season, if any, for sweetbreads, brains and certain other of these public appetite away from steaks and roasts will be a huge success in the District.

"If people can find steaks," one dealer said, "somehow they'll manage to find an extra point to pay

The OPA had hoped by now to have been able to place red coupons on a monthly basis instead of on the weekly cumulative system. whereby a new row of 16 points becomes good each week until, by the end of the month, four or five would help to level off buying habits again, but the OPA has pointed out that supply has not been equalized sufficiently to allow the change.

OPA made an 11th-hour decision from rationing. The action was taken to prevent hot-weather spoilage of highly-perishable dehydrated soup. Although wholesale shipments in March were up 10 per cent, production rose so rapidly that wholesale inventories at the end of the month were 80 per cent larger than at the close of February. The move was made after official point charts

Senators See Revival Of Bill to Require Military Training

President's Suggestion Brings New Life to Controversial Measure

By the Associated Press.
President Roosevelt's suggestion for a postwar year of partial military service for young men injected new life yesterday into controversial legislation to compel peacetime training of 18-year-olds.

Possibility that a universal training bill, dormant in the Senate Military Affairs Committee for two months, would be dusted off for another scrutiny, was foreseen by several Senators as a result of the President's recommendation.

The measure, authored by Senator Gurney, Republican, of South Dakota, would have Congress declare that "the reserves of trained military manpower built up at such enormous expense of blood and treasure during the present war should be maintained in full vigor for the peace and security of future

While the President objected to the term "compulsory military service," he said at a recent press conference that he preferred to speak of a year's contribution of services to the Government. He noted that camps with a capacity of up to 4,-000,000 men would be partly vacated after the war and observed that to avoid a net loss of equipment they could be used to help condition

Suspicious that something's mothe shrimping, Minority Leader Mcepicures yesterday for an expert investigation of America's shellfish resources.

The Senator thoughtfully scraped the bottom of his bowl of clam chowder and told reporters on the Senate Restaurant run that his introduction of a resolution authorizing the investigation was devoid of personal motive. U. S. Battleships Can Use Big Guns to Fight Planes

NEW YORK, May 1.—Battleships of the United States can turn their big 16-inch turret guns to aircraft defense, says Seapower, official magazine of the Navy League. The article, approved for publication by the Navy Department, tells of ammunition especially designed and manufactured for use by the big guns against enemy aircraft. "How far this revolutionary development has been perfected is of course a military secret." said the article written by Gilbert Cant, military analyst, editor and author, "but when it has reached the state of readiness for combat use, if it has not already done so, the battleships will have a multiple role in large combined task forces. They are destined to develop into floating fortresses of the world's largest antiaircraft artillery."

The article continued: "The balance of forces in the Pacific has changed almost as much in the last few months as it did in the first few months after Pearl Harbor. * * * "To avoid the mistake of underestimating the enemy, let us assume the enemy may now have 13 battleships, including five new ones. Against this the United States has a line of 17 battleships, excluding the pre-war Atlantic Fleet's battle squadron of three old ships."

Giraud Asks Workers To Put Everything Into War Effort

Promises Restoration Of Labor Liberties And Early Victory

ALGIERS, May 1.-Gen. Henri Giraud called on French workers in a May Day address tonight to put everything into the war effort and he promised them restoration of labor liberties and an early and total victory over the Axis.

As the general spoke, notices were published forbidding parades or demonstrations tomorrow. The De Gaullist North African Committee had called on workers n proceed to the Algiers war monument tomorrow afternoon to show their respect for fallen comrades and also their support of the principles of liberty as enunciated by Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

At last reports, the committee was planning to overcome the ban by having workers walk to the monument individually with their families.

Confident of Victory. After paying tribute to French troops in battle, Gen. Giraud said the workers also were at war. "And workers labor for us in America, England, Russia and China," he said. "The sum of their work assures us that victory will be early and total."

"The sombre days of 1940 are still in our memory," Gen. Giraud con-"The defeat we suffered had multiple causes but its certain bad organization of work put us in a situation of such inferiority that student at West Point in 1918 and the courage of our soldiers was not 1919, receiving an honorable dis-

Running By The Book: Ever notice a Transit Company inspector standing on a corner, glancing at a little black book as Street Cars or Buses roll by? He is checking them against schedules, for it happens now and then that a schedule gets knocked galleywest by an accident or a fire or some unusual incident. If a Car or a line of Cars or Buses gets behind schedule, the inspector is on the job to do something about it.

If a single car is involved, he may "short route" it to put it back on time again. A single Bus may also be sent "special" to a point on the route where it gets back on schedule. It is not a simple job sto straighten out a line of Cars or Buses, but our inspectors, trained and experienced, do it skillfully and quickly with the least possible inconvenience to Fire Escape Act.

Such cases would apply to buildings three stories high which are being used as boarding, rooming, lodging and apartment houses.

The suggestion was made by some WPB officials after that agency had found it would be unable, due to war demands, to approve high priorities for more than a very limited number of steel fire escapes and could not guarantee provision of fire gongs or fire extinguishers for overcrowded housing units.

The Commissioners were moved by this report, last week, to postpone their determination to prosecute landlords who continued to operate without licenses, denied for failures to comply with existing fire safety regulations.

District officials now are placing the finishing touches on proposed new fire safety rules, under the enabling act which became effective last December 24. Under this procedure and the suggestions made by WPB representatives, certain "stopgap" rules are being considered for the period of the war emergency.

Col. Joseph D. Arthur, jr., assistant engineer commissioner, consulted yesterday with Vernon West, assistant corporation counsel, over possible emergency rules. Their recommendations are expected to go to the city heads for action on policy this week. Col. Arthur said officials of the Bureau of Standards had reported that wooden fire escapes would have a practical usage, in view of the shortage of steel. Previously, he had been advised that wooden structures will not ignite under heat far higher than the human being can stand, although it was agreed there were other limitations as to the use of wooden fire escapes.

American U. Students To Take Carnegie Test

Examinations Are Set For Thursday-Friday

Students in all divisions of the American University will take the Carnegie graduate record examination this Thursday and Friday. These external examinations, administered over a two-day period, provide for each student a "profile chart" of academic attainment.

The graduate record examination, a project begun in 1937 by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, is also given at the following universities: Brown, Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Radcliffe College, Rochester and Michigan. Sophomores and seniors at the col-undergraduate and graduate stuand public affairs will take the examinations this week. D. C. Expected to Fix D. C. Children Honor Troops on May Day

May Day festivities for District children were highlighted yesterday when three youngsters from the Georgetown Playground hung a basket of May Day flowers on the loor of the White House.

The basket had been made by children at the playground and was decorated with five stars, four for the President's sons who are in the service and one for the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

The children who took part in from the War Production Board the ceremony at the White House children were accompanied by their playground director, Miss Orra May Day baskets were distributed by children of the various municipal playgrounds at the doors of neighbors whose sons, husbands and sweethearts are serving with the armed forces. In the Northeast section the first home to be decorated with the homemade paper baskets filled with wild flowers and those from the children's own yards was that of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Jones, 2917 Twentieth street N.E., who have four sons in the service, three in the Navy and one in the Army. Children of that district met at the Langdon Recreation Center, Eighteenth and Franklin streets N.E., with their flower baskets and from there were directed to the various neighborhood communities to distribute the flowers. The May

40,000 in Puerto Rico And Virgin Islands Still Get Relief

The Work Projects Administration stood at ease yesterday, almost ready for the "honorable discharge" President Roosevelt says it has earned.

There were indications that WPA even has "money in the bank" left over from its last and comparatively small appropriation of $280,000,000. How much, for the moment, is WPA's secret, but officials said there will be something to turn back into the Treasury when the "discharge" becomes final June 30.

In the Territories it was different, which hinted that WPA, marshaled to meet the depression employment slump, might be recalled to active duty someday after the wartime employment boom ends.

In Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, economic casualties of war, WPA's relief rolls continued at a high level of more than 40,000, as they neared the vanishing point on the flourishing mainland. By mid-April, United States rolls had declined to 37,400-below the territorial total and far below the 300,000 figure of last December when the President directed it to demobilize.

This was a trifle to the agency that once employed 3,334,594 and had $2,250,000,000 to spend in a single year back in 1938-9, its peak days. Created in 1935, WPA has spent more than $10,500,000,000 in all.

U. S.-Born Japanese From Casting Votes

San Francisco Resident Asks High Court Ruling On Group's Eligibility

Contending that "dishonesty, deceit and hypocrisy are racial characteristics of the Japanese" and that this makes them unfit for American citizenship, a resident of San Francisco asked the Supreme Court yesterday to bar Japanese born in the United States from voting.

A petition filed by U. S. Webb, San Francisco attorney for John T. Regan, sought a review of a decision by the Ninth Federal Circuit Court which was said to hold that Japanese persons born in this country are citizens of the United States and hence eligible to vote.

Mr. Regan instituted action against Cameron King, San Francisco registrar of voters, in an effort to strike the names of a group of American-born Japanese from register of those held qualified to participate in elections.

Japanese Are Denounced. "Japanese wherever born are not citizens of the United States." the petition asserted, adding that voting by Japanese constituted an invasion of Mr. Regan's rights as a citizen.

"The record of events since the adoption of the constitution, including Pearl Harbor, Singapore, Bataan, Guadalcanal, and a hundred other fields and waters in which American citizens have been slaughtered by Japanese," the petition said, "proclaim in thunder tones that Japanese citizenship conflict with the objectives of the constitution, nor should the execution, the martyr of American prisoners of war, but a few days ago disclosed, be overlooked.

"Let no one conclude that this was an abnormal act of the Japanese government nor that it is unapproved by the Japanese people These atrocities are not the result of change in the government of Japan or in the Japanese people. These murders were but a normal happening of the Japanese governfor the 2,600 years of its existence."

Ruling Is Cited. Asserting that the Supreme Court never had decided whether Japanese born in this country are citizens of the United States but had ruled 45 years ago that citizenship was extended to Chinese born in this country, the petition added:

"It is believed that the difference in racial characteristics of the two people and the difference in the Marriage License objectives of their respective governments may justify the conclusion reached in respect to Chinese while compelling a decision that citizenship of Japanese is not thus

Whether the Supreme Court will review the controversy will be announced in a few weeks.

Supplies of Beef for Purchase by Services

All Temporary Quotas For Cattle Slaughter Suspended During May

The War Food Administration moved yesterday to route a larger portion of beef cattle through Fedrally-inspected slaughter houses so the Government might have a better chance of optaining supplies of beef for the armed forces.

Under slaughtering quotas in effect during April. such a large portion of the supply was handled by local butchers and slaughterers that the Government was unable, the WFA said, to fill military requirements. Government purchases are limited to Federally-inspected meats. Civilian Areas Also Affected.

Likewise, civilian areas which depend largely on Federally-inspected supplies were said to have received disproportionately small amounts. To enlarge Federally-inspected supplies, the WFA suspended, during May, all temporary beef slaughter quotas and temporary increases in quotas to local butchers and slaughterers. Temporary increases in such quotas were granted last month under certain emergency conditions to alleviate local beef shortages and to add to quotas of those whose base slaughter quotas were considered too low on the basis of their facilities and meat needs. For the same reason, temporary quotas were granted those slaughterers who were not in operation before April 1, when the present livestock slaughter permit system went into operation.

Measures Diverted Supplies. The WFA said that while the temporary measures operated to alleviate local shortages in many instances, they resulted in the diversion of cattle away from slaughter houses that meet Government re-

Petition Seeks to Bar WFA Moves to Expand First Class of Labor Leaders To Leave Harvard This Month

District Man Among 14 in AFL and CIO Group Taking Course

By the Associated Press. CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 1.-Harvard University graduates its first class of labor leaders this month, a new milestone in its long history, with both the labor men and their professors expressing the hope that the experiment will find favor with unions and universities throughout the country. Fourteen representatives from the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations came to Harvard last fall on scholarships designed to return them to their unions as "better labor leaders." They came from Iowa, Ohio, New York, Wisconsin, Massachusetts. Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. They represented unions of garment, hosiery, hat, cap, millinery, radio, machine, electrical, woolen and worsted workers, paint- for both labor and management. ers, glaziers and railway clerks.

(The District representative is Joseph C. McIntosh, 36, a hydroplant operator, who has been international representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers since 1939. Mr. McIntosh, a native of Alabama, was employed previously by the Alabama Power Co., Birmingham. His family lived in Arlington, Va., but moved to Cambridge during his course of study at Harvard.) The 14 ate, lived and studied on equal terms at the world's richest Learned Other's Viewpoint. Good-natured joshing between the abor fellows and students evidenced a friendly give-and-take spirit by which each came to learn and respect the other fellow's viewpoint,

When Harvard invited the unions to join the experiment, it stipulated that the unions should select the men, and asked that selections be based on "general intelligence, capacity for leadership and devotion to the labor movement," rather than past schooling. The university said it was not interested in training union men who would "use the fellowship as a stepping stone to leave labor."

The result was a group of men educational backgrounds ranged from leaving school at the age of 12 to a master's degree in law. The average age was 271/2, the oldest was 39. All but one were married. Harvard paid half the tuition fee, with the other half coming from the individual unions.

Mr. Wender told an audience of several hundred persons in the departmental auditorium that it would take several days to estimate the exact amount raised in the twoweeks drive. He said he had received no returns as yet from the theater booths which have been issuing agents for the federation through the co-operation of the War Activities Committee of the motion picture industry.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee drew applause when he read the text of a telegram he sent to a West Virginia newspaper on the mine strike in which he said that he fervently hoped and prayed "that loyal labor and responsible unionism will rally back to the jobs so vital to the successful and speedy prosecution of this terrible war." .

Hails Federation Drive.

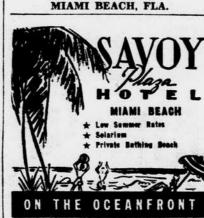

In praising the Federation for its bond drive, Mr. Randolph said that "in time of war you are thinking in terms of concrete effort on the home front."

James A. Crooks, chairman of the War Bond Committee of the Federation, said that the rally was being held in place of the annual dinner of the Federation, which was not attempted because of war conditions. He said that as the committee was trying to think of a substitute for the dinner they were fortunate to receive a letter from Mr. Wender passing on the suggestion of Mrs. Henry L. Mr. Crooks recalled that Mrs. Colman's husband, Capt. Colman, had sent to the federation the key of a bomb his squadron in North Africa dropped on Rommel's Afrika Praising the work of his committee, Mr. Crooks said Mr. Wender, as president, "worked hard at it as in everything he undertakes in civic work." Mr. Wender who, in turn, thanked the committee for its efforts, said that bond sales through the local treasury office had

Proposal for Curfew Will Be Discussed By Alexandria P-TA

Judge Duncan to Speak At Annual Meeting of Council Tuesday

A curfew law for Alexandria, which has been proposed by several city organizations, will be the subject of the annual meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association Council at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Mount

Representatives of organizations that have been considering the proposal will discuss the advisability of a curfew. Judge James R. Duncan of the Civil and Police Court will discuss the question from the jugenile court angle. Miss Edith Snowden, representing a group of churchwomen who first proposed such a law, will present the views of her group.

The Rev. William Basom, presi dent of the Council of Social Agencies, will speak for that organization and Mrs. J. W. Aldrich, president of the Maury School P-TA, will discuss the use of the curfew law in other cities.

Mrs. Warne Will Speak. In addition, Mrs. William Warne will give a resume of the recently completed survey of juvenile detention made by the National Proba-lion Association The survey was tion Association. The survey was authorized by the City Council at the request of the Council of Social Agencies, and copies of the report were made available to members of various city organizations about a month ago.

Peabody Winners Named At Radio Institute's Annual Meeting

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 1.—Dean John E. Drewry of the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism at the University of Georgia presented tonight to winning radio programs the third annual George Foster Peabody radio awards for outstanding meritorious public service in broadcasting.

The ceremony took place at the 14th Institute for Education by Radio, in its second day here. Acting in the absence of Dr. S. V. Sanford, chancellor of the University System of Georgia, who was prevented from making the presentation as originally scheduled, Dean Drewry said "public service and outstanding excellence" were the bases for the selections, as follows: News reporting—Charles Colling—wood of the Columbia Broadcasting System, for his reporting from North Africa. Entertainment in drama-CBS program, "The Man Behind the Gun," written by Ronald R. Mac-Dougall and produced by William N. Robson.

Entertainment in music - The Standard Symphony Hour, National Broadcasting Co., Pacific Coast net-

Dean Drewry announced the Peabody Board was establishing listening post committees at the State universities of California, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Illinios, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin so that a higher degree of perfection could be attained in the administration of the awards, sometimes referred to as the "Pulitzer prizes of radio."

Censorship Violations Few. News Editor Charter Heslep of the Office of Censorship, broadcasting division, reported he had found only 17 censorship violations after reading personally 2,000 scripts of radio commentators and listening to 7,000 network newscasts.

"This is a tremendous tribute to voluntary censorship," Mr. Heslep added. "It is my firm belief there would be many more slips if the censorship was compulsory instead

He spoke at a banquet of the American Society of International Law at the Hotel Statler. Hugh Gibson, former American Ambassador to Belgium and Brazil, also stressed that theme in a speech in which he said the peace conference should "be called into being now rather than after the war."

"We must be grim and practical," Mr. Gibson declared. "The experience of the last peace seems to dis- though I believe morally stronger pose of the argument that the armistice provides a cooling-off period. Some proposals have been made for a longer armistice, perhaps of several years' duration. In view of the demoralizing effect of an said "German industry must not be armistice of seven or eight months, I tremble to think of what would happen if the world was left in uncertainty for two or three years."

Justice Roberts stressed failures of all international movements so far to maintain peace, and suggested a plan for the American "federation of independent sovereigns." He predicted that Great Britain and "many nations" in Western Europe would support such a movement.

Pointing out that experience taught all expedients to which nations have turned so far had been found "insufficient to keep the peace," Justice Roberts suggested that "our own national experience as a federation of independent sovereigns provided at least one avenue to be explored.

In his first public utterance here, Gen. Bethouart, discussing problems of postwar France, said his nation would be "isolated on the European continent * * * physically weak, althan ever.

Declaring France's postwar security depended much on two factors-industry and communications —the Fighting French representative allowed to capture France's fair share of world markets while France is recovering from her present situation * * * Germany must not only give back to France the industry it has either stolen or destroyed, but it must be deprived of the means of developing again the heavy industry necessary for rearmament." Communications speeded during the war, he predicted "will link even closer each day the democracies bordering the Atlantic which draws them nearer together more than it separates them.

"This Atlantic civilization which continues and harmoniously completes today the role which Mediterranean civilization alone has played in the past will be one of the great factors of co-operation between the free nations in the common elaboration of a better world.'

Civic Bodies, Civic Problems

To Restudy Sliding Scale Basis; Good Outlook for a People's Counsel

By JESSE C. SUTER.

Civic problems occupied considerable space in the local press during the past week. Sunday's papers carried the news that Granville Gude had been elected president of the Washington Board of Trade. The new president is the son of the late William F. Gude, who was a president of the old Washington Chamber of Commerce and a leader in other organizations. He was a charter member of the Petworth Citizens' Association and an early president of that body. Many of the early meetings of the Petworth association were held in his home. Granville Gude grew up in that kind of a civic atmosphere.

The District Commissioners figured conspicuously and uncomfortably in two matters during the week. Withdrawal of funds from the Civilian War Services Unit put them in bad with the OCD director and local citizens who have been working earnestly to perfect and carry out an effective civilian defense program.

The other was that of the rooming and boarding houses whose licenses have been withheld because of inability to comply with the fire safety regulations. Prosecutions had been ordered against those who were continuing to operate without licenses. Critical war material not being available for the construction of fire escapes necessitated the Commissioners abandoning the prosecution idea. Their predicament was graphically portrayed by Cliff Berryman in a Star cartoon showing the three Commissioners marooned on a Suggestion by a member of the Board of Education that sex education be eliminated from the high school course has given the groups specially interested in the schools a new matter for consideration. Physical education teachers have been requested to restudy the plan in the light of the objections raised.

The Senate District Committee has before it, with a favorable report of a subcommittee, the bill previously passed by the House which would relieve the owners of adjacent property of the cost of street paving. The cost of gutters and curb would continue to be assessed against the property owners. All street paving beyond the gutters would be paid for from the gasoline tax.

Acid Test for P. E. P. Co. Sliding Scale Agreement

The Public Utilities Commission, having concluded the annual rate adjustment proceedings of the Potomac Electric Power Co., is to prepare for a proceeding which will go into the sliding scale, valuations and other incidental questions. Such an extended proceeding was promised the Government interveners upon the conclusion of the more restricted rate-adjustment case.

The civic leaders in public utilities matters look forward to a protracted, heated fight in which the interveners will go the limit. The attitude of the commission is expected to be far more lenient in admitting evidence, but still requiring that it be real evidence and pertinent to the issues involved.

The civic groups may introduce into the record a challenge of the authority to proceed in the absence of a people's counsel to represent the people as guaranteed to them by the Public Utilities Act. In the Takoma-Chillum-Manor Park-Petworth bus case the citizens' motion for a reopening of the case and reconsideration contained, as the first specification, the absence of a people's counsel. The attitude of the Federation of Citizens' Associations in the forthcoming proceedings is not expected to be developed fully in advance of the hearings.

Citizens' Federation May Sell War Bonds Regularly

The representative of the Treasury Department who has been co-operating with the Federation of Citizens' Associations was overheard the other day to predict that from the enthusiasm he had observed the sale of War bonds would be made a part of its regular

The Federation did not get into the effort for the Second War Loan until more than half of the period set for the campaign had passed. The start was sudden but fair and the response encouraging. The result was reported at the Federation's bond rally in the Departmental Auditorium last night as reported elsewhere in The Star today. The figures of bond sales are not available as this is

The notices to constituent bodies went out so late as to make it difficult for associations to hold meetings and plan their participation. The co-operation of the motion picture theaters was a great help in making it convenient to buy bonds, the sale of which would be credited to the Federation

The associations being given this opportunity to have a real part in the war effort experienced a decided boost in morale.

Optimism as to Appointment of a People's Counsel

Among the civic groups optimism prevails regarding the early appointment of a people's counsel. The inclusion by the House of Representatives of an item for the statutory salary for that office in the District appropriation bill is regarded as a distinct citizen victory. Leaders firmly believe that the item will be retained by the Senate and approved by the President. The salary will be available July 1 and they hope that the President will send a nomination to the Senate prior to that date.

This office being provided, by the Public Utilities Act, for the service of the people, some leaders of organized citizenry feel that it would be both appropriate and considerate for the President to invite the voteless and unrepresented organizations to submit a list of lawyers who would be acceptable as people's counsel. The law requires that this appointment be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

One citizens' association has laid down certain qualifications which the people's counsel should possess. Among the specifications were (1) a well-qualified attorney who is a resident of the District, (2) one who has a real interest in public utility problems, (3) one who is willing to co-operate with all organized citizens' associations in order to interpret public opinion and (4) to cooperate with all members of the Public Utilities Commission and

The success, with the House of Representatives Committee, of the general demand for restoring the salary for the people's counsel has encouraged the belief that it will be equally successful with the Senate. It is now the intent of some groups to turn their demands on the President to fill the vacancy. They feel that, under the law, they are entitled to the services of such an officer and have serious doubt as to the legality of public utilities proceedings before the commission or the courts while denied, illegally, such representation. There is a strong probability that the Committee on Public Utilities of the Federation of Citizens' Associations will take up this question with a view to guiding a general and uniform effort. Those familiar with the work required to include the provision for people's counsel when the law was enacted believe that a similarly persistent effort should be made now to assure having the vacancy filled.

Ex-Federation Delegate Writes of War Experiences

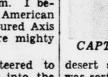

By BAINBRIDGE CRIST.

As the Federation of Citizens' Associations brought to a climax its $200,000 War bond rally last night in the Departmental Auditorium, many of the delegates probably were thinking of one of their former colleagues, Capt. Henry L. Colman of American University Park.

Last month Mrs. Colman presented to the Federation the key of the bomb which had been given the name "Federation of Citizens' Associations" and which was dropped by Capt. Colman's squadron in North Africa on Marshall Rommel's Afrika Korps. Capt. Colman, one of the first pilots to go overseas in 1917, went on active duty with the Army Air Forces in April, 1942, and went overseas last July.

His letters to his family tell pretty graphically of the hardships of desert fighting. Here are a few excerpts from the letters:

December, 1942-"Hell couldn't describe the experiences of the past 10 days-cold, wind, rain, mud, everything that goes to make life miserable, and even with this not a moment to spare. Believe me. the boys in our squadron have got what it takes to keep going when the odds are against them. I believe we were the first American troops to set foot on captured Axis soil for keeps and we are mighty proud of it."

Liberators Set Fires Visible 50 Miles in Solomons Raids

Mr. Editor, the doctors at Garfield Hospital gave my little daughter Flored, aged 3 years, only one chance in a million of living, after being struck by a taxicab last Friday night, April 23, at the corner of Georgia avenue and Kenyon street.

If my little child did not take advantage of that one lion I would not be writing this appeal. Yes, my appeal to those other drivers, that our streets may be safer for those other mothers who have children. Mr. Driver, perhaps you saw me pick up that little pitiful huddle from underneath that cab. I know you must have been horrified when I got into that cab with my poor unconscious child to rush her to the hospital. But you did not see the agonized hours that I spent in the emergency room, nor did you hear the pitiful moaning of my

Mr. Driver, this terrible tragedy could have been averted if the driver of that cab had slowed up when making a right turn at this intersection. My child was in the crosswalk, which the law says is the proper place to cross the street.

Mr. Driver, only a very great

Fight on Trade Pacts' Extension Held Menace to Postwar Amity

Close Vote Is Seen in House on Program Which Is Aimed at Curtailing Economic Causes of International Conflict

By Felix Morley

It probably came as a surprise to many, It follows that the more the emphasis when the Ways and Means Committee of the House, on Tuesday, approved renewal of the Reciprocal Trade agreements Act by the narrow margin of 14 to 11.

Insiders, however, have for some time realized that the Hull program, as the operations under this Act are generally and appropriately designated, is in definite jeopardy. The Secretary of State himself admitted as much in his rather defensive testimony before the Ways and Means Committee on April 12. In concluding this he declared that the mechanism of the Trade Agreements Act is "the central and indispensable point in any feasible program of international cooperation.

By this statement Mr. Hull has himself defined renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act as a major issue. It must, he said in effect, be extended for another three years without substantial change. Otherwise it will be idle to talk about American participation in any regulated system of international co-operation. Without the basis already laid down such a system would not be "feasible."

The Secretary of State has therefore suggested that continuance of the reciprocal trade policy should be regarded by Congress as tantamount to a vote of confidence in the administration's as yet undisclosed postwar policy. Yet in spite of-perhaps because of-this challenge. congressional opposition has flared to unexpected heights. The close vote in the Ways and Means Committee, where the administration retains a three-to-two majority, is indication of an even closer division on the floor of the House.

For this strong opposition, to what has seemed one of the most promising and least controversial of administrative accomplishments, there are underlying reasons. And these reasons help to explain why Walter Lippmann has accused Secretary Hull of making "a grave error." in arguing that renewal of the Trade Agreements Act is "the test case of American foreign policy in the postwar

Central Idea Simple.

The reciprocal trade agreements program was inaugurated in 1934, largely at the personal instigation of Secretary Hull, in order to counter the swing toward economic nationalism which even then was materially increasing the whole complex of dislocations which led to the present war.

The central idea, from which there has been no deviation in the nine years the program has operated, is simplicity itself. Foreign markets for American products are expanded by negotiating commercial agreements which simultaneously enlarge the American market for foreign products. Since the give-and-take process is the essence of the program it is wholly accurate to call it "reciprocal."

The act of 1934 gave the President authority to negotiate these trade agreements only under certain specific re-

Thus, the administration cannot reduce any duty by more than 50 per cent. It cannot transfer any article on the dutiable list to the free list. There is "full opportunity"-though the justification for the adjective is sometimes questioned-for the presentation of views by any interested citizen. No agreement is binding for more than three years. And Congress must renew its consent to the program every three years

Under this last provision the authority was extended, with little congressional criticism, in the spring of 1937. This happened again, over rather more opposition, in the spring of 1940, when American involvement in the war still seemed, on the whole, unlikely. If there is no further extension the reciprocal trade agreements program will terminate on June 12, although the 27 agreements concluded under it would still have varying periods to run.

If the requested authorization is renewed by Congress, for the third time, the program will be secure until 1946. Then extension must again be sought, whether or not the Nation is still at war.

Issue at Present Academic.

Since there is at the moment mighty little competitive international trade the Issue is seemingly rather academic.

Until the end of the war all reciprocal trade agreements will in any case be subject to the emergency restrictions and subsidizations of our own and other goverments. Consequently it would seem that Congress might just as well continue an administrative authority far less sweeping than many of those granted the President "for the duration."

The importance of the controversy lies in the very fact that Congress is not disposed to reason that way. It now draws a sharp distinction between powers which the administration seeks in order to wage war effectively and powers requested to implement postwar policy. That is why Secretary Hull is accused of being politically imprudent in asserting that his program is "the central and indispensable point" for permanent international co-operation.

Significantly enough, the opposition is strongest in the House, the members of which are now engaged in trying to estimate next year's political trends. But it is also strong in the Senate, among men who do not come up for re-election until 1946 or 1948. And for this Senate attitude the campaign against the twothirds' rule is partly responsible.

All the reciprocal trade agreements are of course actually commercial treaties and as such are properly subject, under Section 2 of Article 2 of the Constitution. to a ratification requiring the concur-rence of two-thirds of the Senators voting. Since 1934 Congress has been willing to disregard this cumbersome ratiacation procedure, the more so because in the past it so often led to commercial treaties being arbitrarily blocked by minority interests of jurisprudence since 1931. The Outpost is a small monthly established before Pearl Harbor by a group of Americans in Britain. Its stated purposes were to promote (1) American cooperation, short of nothing, with Great Britain and her Allies in the present war; (2) full understanding among Englishspeaking peoples to assure their permanent association in the establishment and maintenance of a peaceful new world order.

But the nearer we come to the writing of political treaties for the postwar world the more disposition there is to control so easy in Washington. There were 434 the administration and to safeguard the treaty-making prerogative of the Senate. Some ideas, too. He didn't get on the said of most chairmen of a major congressional committee.

Writing with the American viewpoint in mind, Goodhart points out that an explanation of the House of Lords pre sents all sorts of difficulties because no one planning a rational constitution today would create such a body. The general attitude toward it in England, he reports, is that while no one defends it in its present form, no one is anxious to do anything about it. Even the British Labor party, which advocates its abolition, has not made this a major issue.

Nearly 750 Members.

After quoting W. S. Gilbert in Iolanthe that the House of Lords "does nothing in particular but does it very well," Goodhart proceeds with a brief description of the present upper chamber, consisting of (1) the royal dukes who take no part in its activities, as the royal family is careful to remain outside of all politics; (2) the hereditary peers of Great Britain, of whom there are about 675; (3) 16 representative peers of 37 Scottish peers; (4) 14 representative peers of Ireland; (5) 7 Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and (6) 26 Lord Spirituals, that is, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and 24 bishops. In all, there are about 750 persons entitled to membership. Goodhart observes that the title of the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary is odd because there are no Extraordinary Lords of Appeal. These seven members are eminent judges who are given life peerages so they may constitute the House of Lords in its legal aspect as the final appellate court in Great Britain, comparable with our Supreme Court.

These seven jurists. Goodhart points out, constitute an entirely separate judicial body which is connected with the House of Lords as a legislative body only for historical reasons. Although in theory any member of the House might sit as a member of the court, this has never been done during the past century. On the other hand, the Law Lords play an important part in the legislative functions of the House although they rarely vote on controversial questions. "From the practical standpoint," Goodhart writes, "the members of the House of Lords can be divided between those who have inherited their titles and those who have received them during their lifetime. It is the latter, largely composed of former members of Parliament, ex-Ambassadors, colonial governors, generals, admirals and leading industriali ts, who play the major role in the House today.

Less Than 100 New Peers.

"At first sight this would seem difficult to explain as there are fewer than a hundred 'new' peers, but the answer is that only a small proportion of the others ever attend a debate. The quorum for the House is only three, and there are rarely as many as a hundred peers present. In the last 20 years there have been fewer than 15 occasions on which more than 200 have voted. The result is that the work of the House is left in large part to those who are especially

"This work can be roughly divided into two parts: (1) Debates on motions which raise matters of general importance, and (2) actual legislation. It is the first which is of particular interest at the present time. A peer raises a subject for debate by 'moving for papers.' It is rare for the motion to be carried to a division as the purpose is to enable a general discussion to be held rather than to reach a definite conclusion. These debates may prove to be of great value as many of the 'elder statesmen' have had wide experience in public affairs. Having no constituents whom they wish to impress, the peers only speak when they have versy in the past. In the 16th century the Lords equaled the Commons in power, but their importance deteriorated steadily during the 19th century. Although having equal legislative powers with the House of Commons, it was recognized that the Lords must be careful in rejecting bills that had been passed by the lower house as the latter directly represented the people. But even though the Lords might hesitate, as a general rule, to use this power, they did exercise it when they felt that the occasion warranted it. Unfortunately for them their judgment as to what constituted a good occasion did not always coincide with that of the majority of the people." Goodhart briefly relates that the

Turns Out Vast Quantity of Accessories Which Are

Menace to Democracy Is Seen In Dwindling Teaching Staffs

Situation Growing Steadily Worse With No Remedy in Sight, Warns Office of Education, Citing Empty Classrooms

By Jane Eads,

in March.

The growing teacher shortage and other effects of war on America's schoolchildren are "knocking the main corner stone from under democracy," some of the Nation's educators say.

"The situation is getting worse and so far there is no remedy," the United States Office of Education warns, predicting that unless some immediate means are found to solve the problem, education will suffer an "unprecedented loss."

"Without teachers and without pupils, the war effort and democracy itself must suffer . . . without an informed citizenry, democracy can not exist," Dr. Benjamin Frazier, the education office's senior specialist in teacher training declares.

Here is the general shortage picture: Fewer teachers everywhere . . . fewer pupils . . . colleges closing for the duration . . . vacant public school classrooms . . . untrained teachers . . . in the war centers, overcrowded classrooms and overworked teachers . . . everywhere increased truancy, delinquency, illiteracy.

Measures to Combat Problem.

War-borne causes of the teacher short-

Draft deferment . . . salary increases . . using inexperienced teachers . . hiring teachers from other localities and out of the State . . . recalling retired teachers . . . reinstating married teachers ... extending the retirement age ... retraining teachers for other courses . . discontinuing courses . . . increasing the size of classes.

None of these measures, the Office of Education says, has applied the brakes to the downhill slide of standards. It offers some figures:

7,500 Unfilled Positions.

Last October there were 7.500 unfilled teaching positions in the public schools and an estimated 2,700 faculty shortages in the colleges. In addition, close to 190,000 teachers, new to their jobs, were placed on public school payrolls. Colleges, too, experienced many replacements . . . 17,000 of them.

While selective service and the war industries will somewhat decrease normal student enrollments in the colleges, the Army and Navy collegiate training programs inaugurated in nearly 500 institutions are bringing in thousands of service men. There will be a serious need for more teachers in more war-related subjects, educators declare. Unfortunately, the office of education says, teacher shortages are largely in those fields of study and training that contribute to the war effort . . . mathematics, physics, chemistry . . . engineering and the industrial arts . . . physical education and economics.

Turn-over Terrific.

The turn-over rate in the teachers has risen to 20 per cent and in some places to 35 and 40 per cent, as compared with the normal rate of 10 per cent prevailing three or four years ago. Near some war industry centers, the same teaching jobs have had to be filled two or three times in one school year because of resigna-

Requirements for teaching permits are being lowered:

The practice of issuing emergency certificates, or permits, by State authorities upon the recommendation of local school officers, is growing rapidly throughout the country, according to Dr. Frazier, who adds that such issuance usually "indicates that the regular State certification standards are being lowered in order to secure teachers."

In some States only one year of college is required, and the minimum age is but 17 years, when such certificates may be issued to inexperienced applicants. In certain districts, a high school diploma is the only requisite.

37,000 Emergency Certificates.

The number of emergency certificates issued during the '41-'42 school year almost doubled the number issued the preceding year. Approximately 37,000 such certificates have been issued up to March this year, Dr. Frazier says.

At least half of the man teachers have gone into the armed forces, the Office of Education reports, but generally the question of salaries seem to be the main Lear, the Gadget Man of Aviation | cause of the shortage. The only method of solving the problem used by about 64 cause of the shortage. The only method per cent of the schools has been to increase the teachers' salaries, the office

It says teachers' salaries have risen perhaps 7 or 8 per cent in the last two years, while living expenses have gone up somewhere around 20 per cent.

Average Salary Low.

The average salary for public school teachers is about $1,500, the office reports, with 40 teachers in every 100 paid less than $1.200 a year, and nearly eight in every 100 paid less than $600.

Many instances have been reported of successful retraining of teachers for the necessary courses in which there are shortages. In the colleges there was a surplus of nearly 1,400 teachers of courses which could be spared, Dr. Frazier sayschiefly English, history, languages and professional education

New York University questioned its entire faculty and "brought to light much untapped talent in other fields." An ex-French teacher and a teacher of music at the University fo Chicago, after an intensive short-term course, were used to teach direction-finding in the Navy Training School.

Colleges Hard Hit.

Faculty shortages in colleges are reported chiefly in the following subjects: Medicine, engineering, economics, chemistry, physics, mathematics and physical education for men.

City public schools, the Office of Education says, lost a larger percentage of teachers for the entire system than rural schools. Breaking the numbers down, however, disclosed that rural schools suffered the greatest loss in elementary teachers, while the city schools felt the greater loss in high school teachers.

Losses in both rural and city public schools were noted chiefly in the courses in industrial arts, including all war production subjects, physical education for boys, mathematics, commercial education, agriculture (more than 1,000 such departments were closed this year), chemistry, physics and its applications, home economics and the trades and in-

In an effort to determine the causes for these shortages the Office of Education sent a questionnaire to every superintendent and principal in the country at the end of the school year, June, 1942.

Reasons for Losses.

Reasons given, in the order of importance, by approximately 60,000 man teachers were: Entrance into armed forces, other teaching jobs with better pay, usually in the cities; war industries. Government employ, other business or commercial jobs.

Out of more than 91,000 woman teachers questioned, reasons given were: Other teaching jobs, married, war industries, Government employ, retired, other businesses, entrance into WAACS, WAVES, SPARS, marines.

Still, while the need for teachers grows more acute, there is a continued decrease in the student enrollments of all schools. Last October there were approximately 1,500,000 fewer pupils in the public school systems than in the school year '39-'40, the Office of Educa-

Decreases for both boys and girls was more than twice as great in the rural school system as in the city schools. Officials declare this is probably due to the fact that rural school children not only left the classrooms to take jobs but also moved to cities where their parents and older brothers and sisters obtained jobs and thus counteracted the loss of city children from city schools.

The Miners Strike

The long-threatened coal strike has become a reality. With his country in the midst of a desperate war, and with millions of fellow Americans at battle stations around the world, John L. Lewis has permitted his miners to leave their jobs, thereby shutting down an industry which is vital to the life of the Nation.

President Roosevelt has acted to meet this challenge, and the steps that he has taken are wise.

In the name of the Government, Secretary Ickes has been directed to take over the mines, and he is empowered to call upon the War Department for such assistance as he may need. The public, including the miners, will know that Mr. Ickes has no other thought than to serve the interests of the country in this crisis. Likewise, those who know Brigadier General McCoach—and this includes virtually every one in Washington-will be gratified that so level-headed an officer has been chosen to serve Secretary Ickes as his military adviser.

The President, in making these moves, achieved a nice balance of firmness and tact. He served blunt notice that "the production of coal must and shall continue." and that the wage dispute will have to be settled through the facilities of the War Labor Board. But he did this without threatening the miners, or of their services, and expressed confidence in their patriotism and loy-

There the matter stands. If the individual miners desire to fulfill their obligation to their country, the way is open for them to do so. Many of them today must be reflecting soberly on the recklessness of the course they have been persuaded to take. Thousands of these men who dig coal must be wondering what sons and brothers on faraway battle fronts are thinking. Still others must feel within themselves a deep sense of shame that they have struck against their country in this hour of great need. The rest of us should hope. earnestly and fervently, that these and similar considerations will persuade the miners to return to their posts of duty. If not-if this strike goes on-the Government will have to take more drastic action. But that is a bridge which need not be

An Idea Revived

The President came back from his last tour of military camps and war plants thinking again of a plan which he first mentioned in June of 1940, under which the youth of the Nation would give at least a year of service to the country. He is thinking of it now, of course, as a possible postwar program and he is still convinced that mere compulsory military service would fall short of what he has in mind. His conception of universal service might include some military training, but it would also include work in the forests, on the farms and in industry.

On his tour of the Nation he saw thousands of healthy young men in soldiers' uniforms, and other thousands of young men and women working in war plants. The combination of their physical fitness, and the availability of huge camps and industrial plants after the war, evidently led to his reviving the idea. It is an enticing one. Some day it may be realized.

It was only two days before the Burke-Wadsworth Selective Service and Training Act was introduced in 1940 that the President first broached the idea, making known his intentions to seek legislation to provide "some form of universal compulsory government service" by youth. At that time the war was still far away. There were 300,000 young men in the popular CCC camps and another 350,000 young men and women receiving various types of training from the NYA. There was also a lot of talk, then, about the "softness" of our youth. Universal military service alone did not appeal to the President. It was not until a month later, accepting the Democratic presidential nomination, that he came out for military conscription, saying that "because of the millions of citizens involved in the conduct of defense, most right-thinking per- | rugged breadth of Iran has been youth did not mature, although Sidney Hillman and Harry Hopkins were asked to draft a plan. Other things intervened. And in reviving it now the President knows that the form of universal service adopted after the war will be shaped by the war's outcome. About two years ago, in a radio speech, he said that if Hitler should triumph, the United States would require "permanent conscription of our manpower" to maintain even the "crippled independence" that survived. His plan for universal service by the Nation's youth, in industry, forest, farm and Army, is contingent on a happier future.

Dynamic Faith

In the course of a recent broadcast from London, Queen Elizabeth, speaking to the women of the British Empire, testified to her "fullest conviction" that "it is on the strength of our spiritual life that the right rebuilding of our national life depends." Her majesty explained that, according to her personal observation, "in these last tragic years many have found in religion the source and mainspring of a courage and selflessness that they needed." But she conceded "on the other hand, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that our precious Christian heritage is threatened by adverse influences." To guard against the danger, she urged "the women of our nation" to be "deeply concerned with religion." and she insisted our homes are the very place where it should start."

The issue between what religion does for a people and what a people properly ought to do for religion is thus simply yet authoritatively stated. No one seriously questions the power of Christian principle in the day-to-day existence of a community. The problem is to find ways and means for adding to the admitted strength of Christian idealism the enthusiasm of devout multitudes. When Jesus told the Disciples to go into all the world and preach the Gospel. He gave them a program of labor to perform. Again and again throughout the whole of His mission, He taught the necessity for action. The Kingdom of God upon earth could not come to pass by accident nor without effort on the part of those who would be its beneficiaries. A similar logic prevails with regard to the war and its expected fruits of peace, prosperity and freedom. Only by processes of sacrifice and toil can such aspirations as the Atlantic Charter be brought into application for the benefit of humankind. Queen Elizabeth set forth a constructive raising any issue which might make theory of procedure when she deit difficult for them to go back to clared: "It is the creative and work. Instead, he appealed to them | dynamic power of Christianity which on the ground of the country's need | can help us to carry the moral responsibilities which history is placing upon our shoulders." Providence offers the solvent of the world's difficulties, but it remains for the people of the world to put the solution into practice.

It happens that the thought expressed by the gracious wife of King George VI is not vastly different from one which Theodore Roosevelt put into words as long ago as December 30, 1900. Discussing the relation between religion and civic duty on that date, he said: "The true Christian is the true citizen, lofty of purpose, resolute in endeavor, ready for a hero's deeds, but never looking down on his task because it is cast in the day of small things."

Casey Jones in Iran

The shade of that mythical personage, Casey Jones, famed in song and story as the archetype of American railroading, should be hovering gleefully over Iran, these days, for in that ancient land, otherwise known as Persia, an army of picked American railroad men has wrought a transportation miracle. Less than two years ago, these veterans drawn from all our rail systems took charge of an inadequate single-track line twisting and tunnelling its devious way for 1,400 miles over supremely tough mountain country and have transformed it into a roaring traffic artery which is fast becoming Russia's main supply link with the outer

The Trans-Iranian Railway started as a pet scheme of Reza Shah, the strenuous monarch who, come to the Peacock Throne by revolution, resolved to modernize his backward realm. Though intrinsically a notable achievement, the new line was designed to fit Iran's modest needs, which required only single trackage, low speeds, light equipment, and a moderate amount of rolling stock. Also, the terminal ports on the Persian Gulf and the Caspian Sea needed merely limited dockage to handle the small volume of foreign

That was the situation when Russia, attacked by Germany, had to open every possible supply route to get aid from her Allies. Iran was obviously one of those routes, though at first the Russians did not think it would ever be more than a minor one. The combination of a 17.000-mile ocean voyage from Britain or America through submarine-infested seas and a series of bottlenecks from quayside to the Soviet border looked like a pretty hopeless setup. That was where our railroad engineers came into the picture. They examined the situation, made their estimates, and reported that the job could be done.

Then things began to happen which ancient Iran had never dreamed of. They happened so fast that the original trickle of supplies has swelled to a mighty flood. The Axis. The list is almost endless. It ranges from tanks and artillery to canned beef and baby diapers. The core of this transportation system is, of course, the Trans-Iranian Railway, improved almost beyond recognition. But there are likewise broad highroads for an endless stream of trucks, while through the skies overhead roar flights of airplanes. unladen and assembled at gigantic hangars erected at the Persian Gulf ports. The whole achievement is a triumph of American engineering and mechanical genius.

The Iranian route to Russia is of especial strategic importance since it is eminently suitable to the effective supplying of Russia's southern armies, from the Caucasus to the Volga. Those regions were the primary objectives of the German high command last year, and Allied equipment brought in through Iran undoubtedly helped defeat the invaders then. This coming summer, the attempt may be renewed. It is deeply gratifying to know that, in the interim, the volume of supplies has greatly increased and will swell still further with each succeeding month. The Iranian route is thus a waxing factor in the equation which denotes ultimate victory.

Stalin's Reply

Those who have been circulating the rumor—probably of Axis origin that Russia is toying with the idea of a separate peace will find nothing to comfort them in the May Day message of Joseph Stalin.

In this message Stalin went to greater lengths than ever before to emphasize to his people the common interest which binds the powers arrayed against Naziism. While speaking in glowing terms of Russia's own victories, he also paid tribute to the victorious" Allied armies in Africa, and spoke of the "devastating blows" which the "gallant" Anglo-American air forces were inflicting on German and Italian war industries. The effect of all these efforts, he said, is to merge_the Allied operations, for the first time, into one single, common blow.

To be sure, Stalin coupled these tributes with the assertion that they presaged the creation of a second front in Europe, thereby renewing notice that Russia still looks to an invasion of the continent as the full measure of the contribution expected from Britain and the United States. But this was done with the significant difference that, this time, there was no suggestion that Britain and the United States might fail of opening the second front, nor any complaint at the delay in doing so. While not promising a short war or an easy war, Stalin nevertheless assured his people that the Allied nations, standing together, would be satisfied with nothing less than the unconditional surrender of Hitlerite Germany, thus placing his indorsement on the declaration by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill at the Casablanca con-

It is not to be supposed, of course, that this statement of Stalin's will put an end to all friction among the Allies until the war is won. That is too much to expect, but at the least it should serve to silence or discredit those who cannot rise above the temptation to spread rumors which serve no better purpose than to impair that mutual confidence among the Allied peoples which is essential to the successful prosecution of Recreation and Delinquency As measured by complaints to Juvenile Court, there was an increase of almost 50 per cent in juvenile delinquency in March over January of this year. The rate will run even higher in April and is substantially above the corresponding period last year, reflecting here the same trend that has been noticeable throughout the Nation. Several explanations of what seems to be a universal concomitant of war have been advanced, one logical theory being the disruption of home life, especially in those areas where both parents have gone to work.

Fighting juvenile delinquency is a community problem, shared by the churches and all the agencies which have to do with the home and the family. While provision of adequate recreational facilities for Washington is important enough to stand on its own feet-the effect on juvenile delinquency being beneficial but incidental—the problem, at this time, does accentuate the importance of available and supervised recreation. We should utilize it to the fullest extent.

The District's new Recreation Department is showing an intelligent disposition to co-operate fully with the Women's Bureau and Juvenile Court, and, with other community agencies, it can lend a helpful hand. But it is in need of support itself, in the form of funds to operate, and to equip, the fourteen new recreational areas made available through Lanham Act appropriations and now in process of development. The Recreation Department received $416,000 in the pending District bill, recommended by the Budget Bureau. But $79,000 additional is needed to operate the new areas and this sum will not become available, it seems, until a deficiency appropriation bill is

There should not be any delay in this matter. The areas have been bought and should be utilized as soon as possible.

Good News for Civilian Public

By Owen L. Scott.

War is about to enter a new stage for this country. This is the stage in which the immense numbers of men and vast quantities of military equipment are put to use or begin to back up inside the United States.

Some critical decisions are beginning to be forced by the present turn. One of these decisions concerns whether to go ahead with plans for a rather slow-motion war in Europe. Another involves the question of adhering to or of changing the determination to carry on only a limited offensive against Japan. Still a third concerns the issue of Army size. Another involves the use of available shipping-whether to devote that shipping to uses that will bring the quickest possible decision in the war or whether to use it as at present. The United States at the moment is a vast arsenal, producing more weapons than any other nation or probably than any other combination of nations. It also is an armed camp with a great concentration of high-trained soldiers and sailors within its borders. Yet only a tiny fraction of this vast power is being brought to bear to get the war over with. The reason why a slow-motion war is being fought probably traces to decisions reached by President Roosevelt and Britain's Mr. Churchill. Some of those decisions may face changes.

A glance at facts and figures shows best what is occurring to bring about a shift of emphasis in this country's war situation.

For one thing, the United States now has nearly 8,000,000 men under arms. That is twice as many as in World War I and approaches the armed forces of Germany and Russia. It is probably twice the size of British forces. It also is within 3,000,000 of the ultimate goal. Yet relatively few of these men are in places where they can hurt the enemy.

Furthermore, the United States today is spending $263,000,000 a day, or $7,000,-000,000 a month, or $84,000,000,000 a year on its war effort. No nation or combination of nations is even approaching an effort of that size. Britain is spending about $14,000,000,000 a year, Germany's Europe probably $25,000,000,000 or $30. 000,000,000. Yet only a small part of this vast American effort is hurting Germany or Japan.

Or to look at it another way. American industry is turning out nearly 7,000 airplanes a month, which is at a rate of 84.000 a year. It is producing so many tanks that production is being cut back. It is delivering for use a total of at least 134 merchant ships of 10,000 tons each a month, or nearly five a day, or 1,608 ships a year. It is producing naval vessels at an unprecedented rate. Its production of some types of guns and ammunition is so vast that it is having to be checked. Yet, except for ships, the great proportion of this outpouring of weapons is backing up in American camps and American warehouses.

All of this is adding up to new sures for a set of decisions that will permit either a faster war or a check to plans for building an immense Army to be kept inside the United States. At present, the decisions affecting the use of ships apparently do not permit this country to make the maximum use of its gathering strength either for purposes of a quick decision in Europe or for a speedier and larger-scale offensive against the Japanese. Those decisions are stated openly to be based upon a conclusion that the war in Europe must be won before the war in the Pacific can have major attention. Yet ships are used in a way to make the war in Europe slower than it might otherwise be. High British officials talk of a European war that will end in 1945 or even in 1946. American officials had done their planning on an entirely different basis than that. They are very deeply concerned about the effect of a slow war in Europe on the problem of later defeating the Japanese

Then there is another side to this developing situation.

An immense inventory of trained men and of many kinds of war materials is building inside the United States. As this inventory grows the pressure for constantly increasing output will tend to diminish. This already is evident in some slight slowing in the rate of induction of men for military service. It is apparent in the slash now occurring in orders for machinery and in plans for new plant construction. It has showed up in decisions to slow production of some types of ordnance.

The result is that there is a distinct probability that, except in airplanes merchant ships, naval vessels and the components that go toward their operation, the American war effort will approach a maximum toward the end of 1943. Officials are predicting that expenditures for war and production for war may start downward a bit in 1944. That is because the inventory of materials on hand will be so great that the need will largely be for replacement of materials used in war. If this turns out to be the case, then the squeeze on civilian industry is approaching its maximum and may be eased a bit in another year. Some informed officials are saying that this country's productive capacity is so vast that it probably is going to be possible to fight two wars at once and to maintain a fairly high living standard for civilians as well.

Still British Colonies From the London Daily Mail.

To leave the colonial peoples to the haphazard jurisdiction of some international organization, wielding authority without responsibility, and quite conceivably motivated by extranational interests and rivalries, would be a cruel disservice to them. Economic co-operation is another question. Economic rather than political needs are the most urgent for all the colonial peoples in the present stage of development. Quite clearly they must be assigned their proper role in the world economic order which should emerge after the war. There need be no fear that this country will ever attempt to exploit the resources of the colonies for its own selfish advantage. The products of the empire have always been available to the rest of the world, and the markets of the empire have always been open to all traders. AFTERGLOW

By the Right Rev. JAMES E. FREEMAN, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

While the Christmas season with its joyous spirit and its accompanying colorful manifestations lingers for a week or more, the afterglow of Easter gives a lasting interpretation of the meaning of life which no other season affords. Amazing and startling was the reappearance of Christ to His brethren after His crucifixion as on repeated occasions and under varying circumstances He held companionship with them, confirming the fact which the first Easter morning proclaimed, namely, that He had the power over life and death.

This confirmation given hitherto to doubting and weak men resulted in such a change in their character and devotion to Him that they began, under adverse circumstances, a crusade that has literally through the long centuries. engaged the thoughts of men. In one passage we read concerning the risen Christ that, "He showed Himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs." All His appearances to His disciples were made under circumstances that were normal and natural. On the day of His resurrection, He accompanied two of them as they walked on their way to the village of Emmaus, discussing quietly with them the circumstances of His own death. He joined them in their humble home at their evening meal and broke bread with them. Again, He showed Himself to a large company, giving certain testimony to the reality of His presence.

Possibly one of the tenderest and most appealing of His appearances was when He joined a group of men, singling out His disciple Thomas, the disciple who had declared that he would not believe in His resurrection except he could put his finger into the nail-prints and thrust his hand into His open side. The tenderness of Christ's appeal to Thomas is like the appeal of a mother to her child. "Thomas, be not faithless, but believing." It is this record, this afterglow of the first Easter, that has so permeated the world that cathedrals and churches and chapels, great and small, have been built to do Him honor and to affirm and reaffirm the fact that He was what He claimed where He said: "I have power to lay down my life and I have power to take it again."

In many and various forms, beneficent institutions of one kind and another have sprung up to bear tribute to Him over whom death could exercise no power. Now and again, under changing conditions, Christian faith and Christian hope have seemed to suffer serious impairment, but the miracle of it is that, no matter how unresponsive generations may be to the story of the first Easter, it has its revivals that give it freshened impulse and compel men to bow in humility and reverence before Him who was first to break the seal of the tomb.

We are passing through a period today when all that Easter means must have its larger and fuller expression. Not only in a stately cathedral and church, but in the homes of the humble and obscure it is this hope and this faith that solaces and eases the pain of hearts that are filled with deep concern. With sure confidence, men and women the world over are affirming in their creeds, week by week, their belief in unending

History May Repeat

The greatest guessing game of all time relates to the date when the wars of Europe, Africa and Asia will end. These guesses, for they can scarcely be called predictions, range from optimism that the conflict will soon cease to the belief that they may continue for many years. It is interesting to observe, however, that the most conservative guesses do not reckon the time beyond the 1940's, the majority placing the end in 1944 or 1945. History does not repeat itself in such definite pattern as to enable one to foresee exactly what will happen when there are signs of a cycle. It is the frequent parallels that make the study interesting, and which give a sort of assured prophecy that events will repeat series of conflicts more than 200 years before the coming of Christ, and to see how many of the elements involved then are involved again today. This was the series of Carthaginian wars, and the same territory in North Africa was affected then as now. These wars extended over a period of a thousand years, and some of the hardest fought battles of that long conflict were staged on the very fields where American soldiers are fighting today. There were Greeks, Romans, Vandals and others connected with the early struggle, just

worth while to consider one theater of the war, which was involved in a the present conflict. A few observers would not be surprised if the present war in North Africa becomes another Carthaginian struggle. They would not place the period of conflict at a thousand years, but admit the possibility of its lasting far beyond the estimate of the most conservative guessers.

as there are several races engaged in

It is usual to think of North Africa in terms of desert and it is true that wide expanses of the land are given over to drifting sands, to aridity only sparsely relieved by infrequent oases. Yet it must be remembered that the country was not always in this condition. Ancient Carthage, located not far from where Tunis now stands, was extremely rich in the days of the Carthaginian and Roman Empires. Even before the rise of Rome, the Greeks depended upon the general region for their supplies of grain, cattle and much of their other domestic needs. Carthage traded with all the known world.

There have been changes in the character of the surface of North Africa and the desert has encroached, yet some engineers do not think it impossible for its productivity to be restored. Certainly it seems that many elements of the soil and climate which made North Africa the garden spot of the Mediterranean must still be present and could be recaptured just as worn-out farms in this and other countries are reclaimed by scientific methods. In Algeria the French have wrought wonders in restoring land to productivity through irrigation and other engineering works. The same might well be undertaken in Tunisia.

When Italy conquered Ethiopia the purpose was to obtain more room for the Italian people. But before any definite plans could be worked out, the land was retaken by the British and then Mussolini, having sway over Libya, which lies immediately east of Tunisia. took a new interest in the portions of North Africa held by the French and British. Meantime. Hitler came into the picture, using Mussolini as a tool, evidently not for the purpose of helping to win North Africa for Italian expansion, but for German development, hoping to restore it to its former productive capacity.

Thus while Romans, Greeks, vandals and others fought for a land of plenty. Germans and Italians are fighting for a land of potentialities. Taking into consideration the possibility that both sides may be able to match even strength for an extended period of time, it is a conjecture whether nations will fight as long for a land undeveloped as they will for one already developed, as was the case of North Africa during the Carthaginian wars.

It has been interesting to observe Mussolini's tactics in connection with these North African possessions. After the conquest of Carthage, Rome built great cities on that coast and the ruins of them may still be seen. Mussolini has spread the symbols of Roman power over Libya and has, himself, taken part in extraordinary ceremonies such as marked the instatement of proconsuls of the early Roman days. There has been a deliberate and theatrical attempt to bring back the splendor of old Rome as an African suzerain, and openly there were preparations for such an undertaking. For example, in 1937, during Italian naval maneuvers, the fleet stretched a barrage of submarines across the Medieterranean from Italian territory on the north to Tunis on the south. Also Italy placed fortifications on the island of Pantelleria which lies almost under the coast of Tunisia. Meantime, while all this was going on France was not asleep. Bizerte, in Tunisia, was kept fortified and it now seems destined to play an outstanding part in the present North African struggle. But an interesting point is that descendants of some of the same people who participated in the Carthaginian wars are now fighting over the same territory. The history of Carthage began about 550 B.C., when Greeks, who had colonized in Sicily and founded Syracuse, crossed the Middle Sea to North Africa. They soon took on an independent status. severing their ties. They had wara with the Phoenicians, but a Phoenician strain also found entrance. Then there were wars with the Greeks and the Spartans. Even the Persians became involved and there was often civil strife at Carthage. The greatest of all were the Punic wars with Rome, a life-and-death struggle between two great rivals. Carthage had a population of 1,000,000 people, and Hannibal, the Carthaginian commander carrying the war into Italy, led hundreds of elephants over the top of the Roman peninsula, across the Alps and down toward Rome. It is said he could have taken the Eternal City, but civil strife broke out again at home and he returned. 'A force of Romans crossed the seas and laid siege to Carthage. When the city finally fell, after a heroic

Stalin Pledges War to the Finish, Praising Allied African Drive and Air Campaign

America's 73d Week of War 191st Week of World War II

By Howard P. Bailey.

Overshadowing the war news this week from the fighting fronts was the news from the diplomatic front climaxed as the week ended by a forthright, unequivocal pledge by Premier Josef Stalin that Russia will remain in the war until the final defeat of Hitler has been brought about.

Thrusting aside any thought of a separate peace, Stalin in his May Day order of the day declared "It is now clear that only the utter routing of the Hitlerite armies and the unconditional surrender of Hitlerite Germany can bring peace to Europe."

Discussing the babble about peace which is coming from Fascist sources, Stalin asked "but of what kind of a peace can one talk with the imperialist bandits from the German Fascist camp who have drowned Europe in blood and studded it with gallows?"

The criticism of the other Allied nations for failure to open a second front in Europe notably was lacking. In fact, to $ the contrary, Stalin was high in his praise of the destructive air raids over Germany and Italy by Allied planes in which Axis productivity has been badly erippled and he complimented the Allies for the success of the drive to rid North Africa of the Axis armies. These factors together with Russia's winter success have placed Germany in a citical position, he declared.

"Another two or three powerful blows from the west and east are needed, such as that dealt to the Hitlerite army in the past five or six months." he stated, "for the catastrophe of Hitlerite Germany to become an accomplished fact."

This manifestation of Stalin's confidence in the Allies and his intention to stay in the war, not until German troops Reds Break With Poland are driven beyond Russia's borders as he has described the Red Army's purpose in the past, but until the utter rout of Hitler was a highly encouraging development of the week which was marred at the outset by a Russian break with the Polish government in exile in London over the execution of 10,000 Polish officers near Smolensk. The Polish government accused the Russian Army of the executions, but Moscow countered with the statement that it was the Nazis who put the Polish officers to death and that the Polish government in exile in accusing the Russians was furthering German propaganda. Both the American and the British governments are attempting to heal the rift, the only break in the solidarity of the nations united against the Axis.

A disturbing development of the week and one which can have, if too long continued, a most serious effect on the outcome of the war and the length of the American casualty list from the fighting fronts was the failure of the United Mine Workers and the mine operators to reach an agreement on a contract with the result that 500,000 miners failed to report for work after midnight Friday when the old contract expired.

President Roosevelt, prior to the bandonment of work, had warned John L. Lewis, head of the UMW, that if the production of coal should be halted he would use every power he possesses as President and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to see to it that nothing shall occur which might cripple the vital war industries. Price Administrator Brown, also taking a hand in the situation because of the effect on the efforts to control inflation which would likely follow increased pay for miners, promised the miners, and all the rest of us, that he would slash food prices which have gotten out of hand and that he will carry on a vigorous campaign against the black marketeers and the

When the miners failed to heed President Roosevelt's warning, the President ordered Hard Fuel Administrator Ickes to seize and operate the struck mines and call on the Army for all the help he might need to preserve order.

African Front

Slowly advancing Allied armies on the various fronts in Tunisia were temporarily stopped toward the end of the week when great concentrations of tanks and guns were hurled at Gen. Anderson's British 1st Army in counterattacks which approached the extent of a counteroffensive. However, the British, striking back heavily, foiled all efforts after momentarily giving ground earlier in the week.

The British 8th Army under Gen. Montgomery, marking time for a few days west of Enfidaville, closed the week with a terrific barrage which apparently is the signal for a new effort to advance both along the coast toward the peninsula of Tunis and toward Tunis itself.

On the northern front, Lt. Gen. Patton's American corps is moving slowly forward, capturing two important hills dominating the approach to Mateur, which is only 18 miles from Bizerte. Between Anderson and Montgomery, the French are pushing forward toward Pont du Fahs from where an excellent highway leads toward Tunis.

One report places an American force within 3 miles of Lake Achkel, one of the two lakes in the Bizerte area, on the north shore of which is Ferryville, location of the naval base and arsenal. Air activity during the week was not as extensive as in the previous week, but on Friday American flyers attacked a convoy near Cape Bon, raking a cruiser, leaving it aflame, and sank one and possibly two destroyers.

A recapitulation of Axis losses from the first of the year through April 15. made public last week, offers an adequate explanation of the approaching defeat of Von Arnim and Rommel The Axis lost 66,000 in prisoners, 250 tanks, 3.000 motor vehicles, 425 guns and 34 ships sunk by land-based planes. At least 918 Axis planes were shot down in combat and probably 278 more, while 586 were damaged and 586 were wrecked on the ground during raids. To top it off, land-based planes bombed and sank 11 submarines, many of which Germany is reported concentrating in the Mediterranean in anticipation of the Allied invasion across that sea.

Russian Front

Heavy air fighting raged all along the Russian front last week and the artillery attained a new fury in the heavy barrage of shells hurled back and forth across the lines. There were definite indications of big things to come down in the Kuban Peninsula, where Russia was

There were some indications that the summer offensive may be launched by the Russians this year and within a month rather than by the Nazis and especially will this be probable if an Allied front is opened anywhere on the continent of Europe to force Hitler to divide That Germany fears the invasion may be near was evidenced by a renewal of German reports that a large British naval force accompanied by many trans-

Hammering away constantly, never giving the German air force any rest, Alled bombers spread ruin over many German war industries during the past week. Keeping up their constant jabbing actics, Allied flyers struck at the Japanese bases in widely separated areas throughout the week and while none of these attacks packed a knockout punch they served at least to keep the Japs off balance and unable to start a knockout

Just as the British in the critical days after Dunkirk employed their almost fatally limited number of planes in a highly effective program of single smashing raids on vital military objectives, so are the planes under command of Admiral Halsey and Gen. MacArthur sent to carefully selected targets to hamper the Japs until such time as we are ready to go into full-scale assault on the various islands Japan seized in her first almost unopposed drive toward Australia.

Details of the raid 10 days ago on the Island of Nauru, in the lower Gilberts, which were revealed Friday, illustrated the care with which targets are selected. Nauru, which is 1,000 miles south of the great naval base at Truk, serves as an outer bastion of Truk's defenses, but far more important, it produces about onetwelfth of the world's output of phosphates and thus is of tremendous importance to Japan not only for fertilizer but for ammunition.

In a guerrilla-like raid, big Liberator bombers in groups of four swept over the island which contains only about

81/2 square miles, 80 Knocked Out per cent of which is phosphate-bearing, and dropped their bombs so effectively on the phosphate works that it will be many months before they can again be in production The airfield and huge tanks of oil and gasoline were wrecked and raging fires testified to the effectiveness of the bombs as the planes sped back home. There were many manifestations of Japanese nervousness at home and after early in the week the Jap press warned the nation that there might be new air raids on Japan's home islands, the official radio emphasized the warning by saying that undoubtedly there would be new raids and the people must steel themselves for the attacks by understanding "that they were intended for the effect on the people in the United States so that they would forget the confusion and disunity in American war industries." What Americans won't forget is the execution of the Tokio bombers and the thousands of innocent Chinese men, women and children who befriend-

At nome the American people were concerned about the effect of the soft coal strike on the war effort, confused by the controversy over aviation gasoline and encouraged by statements on aircraft and ship production. They were given food for thought also in the President's comments on the huge military camp and war industry setup and the relation of young people to this development in the

The row over high-octane gasoline began when Undersecretary of War Patterson blamed the failure to provide adequate fuel for aircraft on the rubber program and the diverting of equipment to synthetic rubber production which was needed for aviation gasoline.

The Truman Committee began an investigation and called Donald Nelson, chairman of WPB, as a witness. Mr. Nelson denied that the synthetic rubber program was to blame for the shortage. Instead, he testified that Army leaders had underestimated the quantity of high octane gas which would be required. He stated that as far back as July, 1940, the National Defense Advisory Commission had urged the storing of 7,500,000 gallons of aviation gasoline as a reserve but that dispute within the Army prevented any action.

He was followed before the committee the next day by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, the petroleum admnistrator, who stated that the supply of aviation gasoline is higher than the Army's estimate of need. He added that last summer the production program for planes had been stepped up greatly without any corresponding effort to increase gasoline

Jap Headache Aleutians Hold Threat to Homeland

By John Grover, Associated Press Writer.

Obscured by the fog that covers the North Pacific, a grim struggle is going on for the island highway that links North America and Asia.

The 180th meridian divides the Eastern and Western Hemispheres and the Japanese and United States forces with geometric neatness.

The Japanese advance base is at Kiska. The farthest west United States base, so far as known, is in the Andreanof Island group. The east-west meridian almost exactly separates them.

This "front" is a midlink in the chain of islands stretching from the Alaskan mainland to Japan proper. The overwater hops between islands average 50 to 100 miles, with one exception—the big gap between Attu and Paramushiru. northernmost of the Japanese Kuriles.

The United States Navy-Army forces in the Alaska-Aleutian theater have the advantage of shorter supply lines. It is roughly 2,000 miles east to the main United States port at Seattle. The Japanese have a 2,850-mile haul from Yo-

United States Better Based. The United States command has more and better bases supporting its spearhead. Dutch Harbor, 465 miles away, backs up the Andreanofs. The closest major Japanese base is Paramushiru, 760

In addition, the United States has half a dozen major bases in back of Dutch Harbor, plus an alternate, protected supply route via the Alcan highway and Fairbanks.

To the south, the distances also favor the United States. Midway is 1,600 miles away from the Andreanois. Wake, 2,350 miles away, is the closest Japanese base to the south, giving American forces the advantage of flank interception against a thrust from that sector. The area of major operations is from 50 to 55 degrees north latitude and stretches for 10 degrees on either side of "the line." Here is where the war for control of the Pacific Island highway is being waged this spring. Japanese Persist in Efforts.

Kiska, and Attu to a lesser degree. have taken a fearful pasting from United States bombers. The Jap is hanging on grimly to precipitous Rat (Kiska) and Near (Attu) Islands.

Despite bombings, work goes ahead on the landing field at Kiska. Completed and usable, it would give the Japanese a roost for land planes. They have heretofore been restricted to float planes. Spring and early summer is the season or fighting in the murky, weatherbreeding Aleutians. At other times it is a rare day when the "soup" lifts enough for air operations. Beyond routine announcements that Kiska and Attu are being bombed up to 15 times daily, Navy communiques have made a clam seem positively talkative. There has been no hint of landing operations in the "no man's islands" between Kiska and the Andreanofs.

This Summer May Tell.

The stakes are high. A 200-mile advance by United States forces to recapture Kiska and Attu would set the Japanese back on their heels a thousand miles east to Paramushiru. The war would be in their hemisphere then, and the threat to Alaska inherent in a Jananese base on Kiska would be eliminated.

The Kuriles would be the next step on the road to Japan proper. Not a few strategists hold that this short route offers definite advantages over the Southwest Pacific approach to Japan. It is half as far from United States bases and supply ports. It offers more potential havens for aircraft. Just as the Japanese can hop fighter aircraft into the South Pacific along an island chain, so could the United States ferry fighters along the North Pacific high-

It is only 700 miles from Paramushiru o Hokkaido, northernmost of the "main" Japanese islands.

The fighting along the front where hemispheres meet may decide this summer whether the eventual invasion of Japan moves in from the north or south. If Kiska and Attu are regained, they will be potent arguments for the northern approach.

FBI's Vast New Fingerprint Division Is Miracle of Wartime Efficiency

By Oliver McKee.

Transferred recently from its crowded quarters in the Department of Justice, the world's largest storehouse of finger prints and criminal information has found a wartime home in the new District of Columbia National Guard Armory.

Growing at the rate of about 100,000 finger prints a day, this collection—the files of the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation-contains more than 65,500,000 finger prints, over 80 times the number in its possession when the division was created in 1924.

In combatting crime and in apprehending fugitives from justice, finger-print identification has long been a valuable and, in many instances, an indispensable aid to law enforcement agencies. In the hands of FBI experts and others trained in the modern techniques, finger-print identification has become an exact science.

The war against the Axis has placed new responsibilities on the Identification Division, and has greatly increased its work. In addition to handling criminal arrest cards, and identifying criminals, the division receives the finger prints of all military and naval personnel, of workers in war factories, and those of Federal Civil Service employes. It is also the depository for the fingerprint cards of alien Work Is Well Organized.

As the visitor, from his observation nost in the gallery, looks down on the vast drill floor of the armory, filled with thousands of card cases and cabinets, he will be impressed by the quiet and apparent lack of motion among the nundreds of FBI workers engaged in searching the files. For each searcher has been assigned a small group of cases in one particular area, and thus there is no necessity for time-consuming expeditions to other parts of the drill

When the print has been classified, it is turned over to the proper searcher for a check against the prints already in the files. In most instances a search can be completed in a few minutes, for the cards are so well arranged that the searcher usually has to check but a few hundred of the millions of prints in the Identification Division's archives.

Here and there, among the thousands of cards moving through the Identification Division you will note one containing an attached red label. This means that the card has been given priority, because of the need for the transmission of an immediate answer to the submitting agency. Cards with a red labelattached by the receiving room-always go to the head of the line. Through the use of the teletype and telegraph, the FBI can thus report the results of its check in a short time after the receipt

During the fiscal year 1943, FBI director J. Edgar Hoover recently told the House Appropriations Committee finger print search showed that more than 28,000 applicants for civil service appointments had police records.

Interesting Cases Cited.

Among the cases cited by Mr. Hoover was that of an applicant for a position as senior firefighter with the Army Quartermaster Corps. The FBI files showed that the man had been arrested in Texas in 1926 on charges of arson. "This information was immediately furnished the Civil Service Commission so that it would be in a position to judge whether a man who had been charged with arson should be intrusted with the duties of a senior Though a police record need not bar a firefighter," Mr. Hoover explained.

The FBI receives fingerprints for all personnel of the armed services. These are checked against the bureau's criminal files, and if the search discloses a criminal record, that fact is promptly reported to the War or Navy Department.

Soldier Identification.

Finger prints, in battle deaths, or airplane accidents, may constitute the only means of soldier identification. Last September an Army medical officer at Most of Nation's Adults Listed. Each of the three was identified by the FBI-all from the finger prints taken at the time of their

Though there are some duplicates in the 65,000,000 fingerprints now housed in the District National Guard Armory, the files contain the prints of a substantial proportion of the country's adult population. Auxiliary Fire Fighters.

By Miriam Ottenberg.

If bombs never fall, scores of American communities will have reason to be grateful to the men and women volunteers who trained themselves to combat leath from the skies.

Instead of fighting bombs, the volunteers have been fighting fires, floods and cornadoes. The machinery put together to minimize the effects of air raids has become a permanent defense against lisaster "by natural causes."

In many communities, jolted from ceacetime inertia by the threat of air raids, arrangements have been made and machinery has been set up for which there was a crying need long before the Mutual aid arrangements are an example. Sometimes ordinances, sometimes lack of foresight kept fire comcanies from crossing county or municipal lines to aid neighboring communities. The urge to "hang together" in wartime has prompted mutual aid agreements which will be useful long after the war.

Fire Control Centers.

None of the counties around Washingson, for instance, had a fire control center from which all the county's services could be directed. If a volunteer fire company went out on a fire and another fire broke out, the second fire just burned. Nobody knew what companies were "in service" and what companies could be called.

Now all the counties in this area have fire control centers where all fire calls are recorded. The second fire now would not be allowed to burn without an effort ring made to extinguish it. In addition, both Maryland and Virginia have passed legislation guaranteeing protection to their men injured while serving in adjacent communities.

The civilian defense blood plasma banks, established for civilian casualties of air raids, are regarded as another permanent benefit of wartime-bombs or no bombs.

An Army of 12,000,000.

There are dozens of other permanent fixtures arising from the compelling urge of communities to protect themselves but the shining examples are the men and women themselves-an army of 12,000,-000, trained to take orders and do their

Before the war, there were also volunteers in time of disaster but they were untrained. Their leader was usually the man with the loudest voice or the town's most substantial citizen who knew finance but not how to deal with scores of willing but untutored helpers.

Fully manned fire and police forces didn't need as much volunteer assistance before the war but the armed forces have drained away some of the best men.

For the first time, the "master disaster" file was used. The file was part of a system devised to operate during bombings to keep a check on casualties. After the night club fire a list was compiled at Boston City Hall to serve as a basic list for the identification of victims. Civilian defense volunteers handled the thousands of calls for information about the dead and injured.

A courier system had been developed between the city's hospitals, first aid and casualty stations, morgues and headquarters of the Boston Committee on Public Safety. Within four hours 300 volunteers, including those stationed at the various receiving points for the injured, had names of all casualties listed in the "master disaster" file. Within six hours names of those then dead had been listed. From that time on, by checking and cross-checking, an accurate list was kept of all casualties—the victims of a disaster that could have happened in Major Emergencies.

In Everett, Wash., civilian defense units were mobilized for major emergencies twice within three days. The first disaster was a 33-unit apartment building fire. After the auxiliary protective services had done their work, the war aid and evacuation unit found homes for the refugee apartment house dwellers and kept a record of their whereabouts after they had been moved.

Three days later, the volunteers were credited with saving a large portion of a cabin camp outside the city. When the water supply gave out, and flames sweeping from one cabin to another threatened the whole settlement, the regulars called their auxiliaries who controlled the blaze with a fire break.

In Wichita Falls, Tex., a group of men who called themselves the "Chuck Wagon Gang" turned their wagon into an emergency feeding service when the war came and the town fathers of Wichita Falls were convinced their town with its oil tanks and oil "farms" was a logical

The chuck wagon set up its portable lighting system, put the coffee pot to boil and served food for 24 hours—until an Army field kitchen arrived to take over.

A Baltimore & Ohio tank car train was wrecked and caught fire near Tiffin, Ohio. Gasoline from the wreck was being carried by sewer to a number of homes. While auxiliary firemen helped extinguish the blaze, 150 air-raid wardens were dispatched into the town to tell people to put out their fires and ventilate their houses for fear of gasoline explosion.

Early Efforts to Foster Temperance in Washington *

By John Clagett Proctor.

As the older Washingtonians visualize conditions today and particularly the great amount of alcoholic drinking that is going on in this city and elsewhere, especially among the younger people, their minds must naturally turn back to their own early days when a large number of temperance societies existed in the District of Columbia. These not only reclaimed innumerable adult alcoholic addicts, but, through their teachings of sobriety, and their entertainments and social gatherings given for the enjoyment of the younger members of these organizations, many were prevented from taking up a habit that eventually would lead to demoralization and loss of character and respectability.

But the question of temperance in this country is by no means a new one, for Department organized a total-abstinence it dates back even before the birth of the present oldest old-timer, and to the very of the city did likewise. Indeed, at the beginning of the republic, since the first temperance organization seems to have come into existence as far back as 1808. ical Society, for the first time served no In the District, it is probable that the Temperance Society of Washington is the pioneer organization of such bodies. for his many valuable decisions. Congress Takes Interest.

Soon, members of Congress became interested in the temperance movement, especially in connection with the American Congressional Temperance Society, formed in 1833, of which 100 members of Congress and officers of the Government are reported to have signed the constitution and pledged themselves "by example and moral influence to discountenance the use of ardent spirits and its traffic." But apparently they did not stop members of Congress from wanting their toddy, for a few years later the Temperance Union of the city deplored the sale of intoxicating liquors permitted in the Capitol Building.

In 1837 the Senate took the matter up and provided in its standing rules that no "spiritous liquors should be offered for sale or exhibited in the Capitol or in the grounds." At that time the House was apparently wetter than the Senate, for it took seven years to get its consent to the rule covering the whole Capitol, although the Senate, on the surface at least, did make an effort to enforce it from the time it passed upon the subject. However, there must have been some who did not take kindly to this restriction, for we are told that when Cant. Marryat, the English novelist, visited the Capitol restaurant in 1838 he noted in his diary that when one "asks for pale sherry they hand you gin; brown sherry, and it is brandy; Madeira, whisky."

Total Abstinance Society.

Judging by the lack of results achieved by the American Congressional Temperance Society, which sought rather to limit or curb the liquor traffic than to prevent its use entirely, a step further was taken in 1842, resulting in the forming of the Congressional Total Abstinence Society, and the sale of all kinds of intoxicating liquor was a little later prohibited in the Capitol, while the Treasury clerks even included a totalabstinence clause in their pledge, as did other "partly dry" temperance

In our own time-from 50 to 60 years ago-it is not difficult to recall when it was not an infrequent occurrence for members of the Senate, when fatigued from holding the floor for long hours, to have brought to their desks a cup of "tea," which they would sip from time to time until it was all gone, and the page was sent to get another cup. This "tea," according to the knowing onesor so it was averred at the time-was nothing else than just plain "whisky." did make some mighty good speeches in Congress half a century ago and more.

The Congressional Temperance Society referred to, which was organized in 1833, with Secretary of War Lewis Cass as president, had a sort of spasmodic career, for it had no less than four revivals-1837, 1842, 1844, and again in 1866 it was given a new start, only later to give up the ghost entirely.

But, in 1847, while the members of Congress were seemingly still enthusiastic over temperance, Father Theobold Mathey, the Irish temperance advocate, visited the city. A reception was given in his honor by the various temperance bodies here, and both Houses of Congress extended to him the privilege of the floor. He was also entertained at dinner by the President.

In 1842 the clerks of the Treasury society and the same year the printers printers' anniversary celebration dinner, in January, 1845, Columbia Typograph-

Many will recall old Temperance Hall, which stood until a few years ago at 914 E street. The cornerstone of this building was laid in 1843 and it was dedicated four years later. George Savage, the president of the Freemen's Total Abstinence Society, of which Darius Clagett was treasurer and J. I. Henshaw financial secretary, was largely responsible for getting together the funds for financing this undertaking. The ground was donated by Gen. John P. Van Ness. The Church of the New Jerusalem also held some of its early meetings here, as did the Medical Society and the Mission of Calvary Baptist Church, and shortly after the National Rifles was reorganized, in 1880, this fine military organization used the basement floor of this building as its armory.

The site of Temperance Hall is interesting as having been at a rather early date the location of a "ramshackled, tumble-down building," once used as a factory and presided over by a man named Fagin." But at last the old building collapsed from the wear and tear of age. But when this occurred. Fagin was the only one hurt. "He was found in the debris, wrapped all around with the belting and gearing as though he had been seized and throttled by some gigantic octopus."

The Fight Continues.

But though the Freemen's Total Abstinence Society gave up this building at an early date, the cause of prohibition contained active for many years, and in 1880, the city directory gives the names of the following organizations functioning at that time, namely: Sons of Temperance, Independent Order of Rechabites, Sons of Jonadab, Good Templars, Mutual Temperance Endowment Association, Juvenile Templars, Temple of Honor, the Washington Dashaways and the Georgetown Dashaways.

Today there are probably several temperance organizations still existing in Washington, but if so they are certainly not as prominent as they were in days gone by, and it is quite refreshing to look backward a few decades when real constructive work was being done by these bodies for humanity's sake Wholesome Entertainment.

Indeed, at nearly all the temperance meetings in the 80s and 90s, where the young folk would gather, there would always be a wholesome entertainment followed by dancing which afforded them a good time in a good moral atmosphere. Of these organizations the writer recalls especially Minnehaha Lodge No. 1, Good Templars, which met in Timms' Hall, then on the top floor over the clothing store of George F. Timms Co., 400 Seventh street northwest. Miller's, and later John's Restaurant occupied quarters in the basement part of the building.

Minnehaha Lodge met on Tuesday evenings and in addition to dancing, the program put on by the young people, generally included the popular recitations of the day, including "Casabianca," "Somebody's Mother" and "Punch, Punch, Punch With Care," while "Larboard Watch" and "Baby's Left the Cradle" were the songs usually sung by immature talent. However, every one had a good time and went home sober

In pursuing his efforts for prohibition, it was Mr. Savage's practice to give frequent temperance lectures from the Patent Office steps and elsewhere in the downtown section of the city, and upon one occasion he was even pelted with eggs, and though the account of the incident, which occurred in 1853, was printed in a humorous strain, yet it was not likely a laughing matter with Mr. Savage. The report of the occurrence, probably printed in the National Intelligencer, goes on to say:

The battle to keep America on wheels is being won, according to a comprehensive survey just completed by the American Automobile Association

We are winning it as we are winning in Tunisia; not by any one spectacular victory which immediately clears up the situation, but by a gradual, steady improvement of our position, more easily noticed by comparing the situation today with that of a year ago.

Tires for average passenger cars are being made entirely of synthetic rubber, and are proving satisfactory, though recapping must be resorted to for some time to come.

But the recap is better than it was. Not only have the restrictions been lifted -the process has been improved. Recapped tires are superior to tires made entirely of reclaimed rubber, while engineers and chemists are constantly devising still better processes.

The motorist whose tires are too far gone for recapping can buy other recapped tires. According to figures of the AAA, manufacturers are retreading in their old molds no less than 1,500 tires daily, to be distributed through rationing to localities with adequate recapping

Optimistic Outlook.

Mr. Russell Singer, general manager of the AAA, is optimistic for the long pull, though warning that no immediate relaxation in mileage control may be expected. He says: "In brief, with the rubber crisis being liquidated, with mileage controls being modified for purposes of essential driving, with the synthetic rubber program creating a new million-dollar industry that will free the United States from dependence on foreign rubber supplies, and with growing appreciation of the problem of keeping cars in use, motorists can find new hope that they will be able to maintain their cars

"That is all very well," says the Eastern motorist, "and I am glad to hear that the tire situation is improving; but what of my greatest problem, gasoline? When may I expect more?"

Gasoline Situation Better.

Nobody knows, exactly, but here again the AAA is, on the whole, hopeful. In their words, "there is evidence that we are now going through the worst and can hope for some easing before midsummer. The last year has brought about provement. virtually a transportation revolution in ivery of petroleum products to the East. In normal times, we required ap- maintenance as an essential activity, proximately 1,600,000 barrels of petro- and the War Production Board is now leum a day in the Atlantic States to meet moving to give more attention to civilian all demands. In normal times, 95 per requirements, and the repair of auto- and improvise as best they can. For cent of this total was brought in by ocean tankers. Today we are relying entirely on railroad movements, pipelines, barge deliveries and some transportation

This spring there is coming to the East 1,200,000 barrels a day-but still further East, in Europe, there is a demand for more and more gasoline. All benefits from increased deliveries have been absorbed by our armed forces, and will continue to be, for some time to come. This is a gasoline war. By the end of the year we will probably bring in nearly the normal amount needed in peace, but there is no peace and the demands of war are beyond anything anticipated in past planning.

Normally we used 613,000 barrels of gasoline a day. The allotment for this April has been on the basis of 333,000 barrels a day, and May will show no improvement, because even now military and naval withdrawals are cutting into the April stock.

Last winter the Navy "loaned" 4,213,-156 barrels of fuel oil and gasoline for civilian and industrial consumers during the critical winter shortage, from a petroleum pool, and states emphatically that this cannot be done again.

With the bitter memory of last winter's fuel shortage still fresh, Federal officials will take no chance on next winter and will build up stocks at all costs. The amount being diverted for this purpose is quite large, consisting of at least a fourth, and often a third or more, of all petroleum fuel coming into the East

But there are no indications of any further cut on motorists. Already the OPA realizes that 1.37 gallons per week is below the amount necessary to keep batteries charged and cars working, and has said that rationing on civilian motorists cannot be cut further.

Mr. Ickes has publicly announced that he hopes to provide more gasoline before the summer ends. Should there be any change in coupon values it will come in the form of greater allowances for A book holders. It is not likely that B and C book holders will get any more than 3 gallons for each coupon; ration boards, when they issued the books. already took into consideration the fact that in the East they were good for only three, and made up the difference by allowing more coupons than for the rest of the country.

Better Breaks for Motorists.

According to the AAA the motorist will get another break; he will be better able than heretofore to get repair parts for his car. Often he would have to lay his car up for days while he went on a frantic foot search for some small part no longer in stock. Again, no miracle is expected-just a steady imwas the commander of Harlan's Citizens' Defense Corps. He called his senfor warden, got his men together. Along with the other defense units came the khaki-uniformed, gun-toting auxiliary police of "bloody" Harlan.

People were successfully evacuated from their homes, the fires were checked and the panic stopped cold. The civilian defense forces simply substituted "what to do in an explosion" for "what to do in an air raid."

Floods—the recent one on the Missouri River, the year-end Ohio River floodhave called into play all the forces trained for disaster not from the rivers but from the skies.

dawn on December 30 of last year, the commander of the Jefferson County Defense Corps gave the flood alert. Within 20 minutes the control center was staffed and operating as the headquarters for all flood work. Throughout the county all civilian defense forces were mobilized and 2,000 workers went on active flood

Before the high water came the duty of the civilian defenders was to sound the warning. Along 52 miles of river thousands of river-front dwellers were given flood warnings. In one town, which was 90 per cent under water, 400 people were rescued by boat by air-raid wardens, auxiliary police and firemen.

The Steubenville Control Center received all calls for assistance, made assignments of manpower, equipment and supplies. As the flood subsided volunteers started cleaning up the towns. Within a week most of the war production in the flooded area had been re-

A peacetime problem emphasized by the war has been the forest fires striking at one of the Nation's vital sources of supply. In helping to combat the destruction of forests the Civil Air Patrol, which has just been transferred to the War Department, has distinguished itself. The CAP-75,000 strong-is best known for flying the coast patrols in the war against submarines, but its members in heavily forested areas have done a man-size job in assisting the forest

In North Carolina, for instance, when fires broke out in Pisgah National Forest, flyers of the CAP carried rangers over the suspected areas, sometimes fiving on instruments through the dense smoke. The CAP also did a fire-spotting tour of duty in Georgia's Chattahoochee National Forest.

Flying patrol in Ohio, CAP members . signal ranger stations when they spot fires and circle the stations until the rangers signal back what help is needed. The CAP is considered a permanent boon to the United States Forest Service. In many States emergency agreements exist whereby CAP "wings" take to the air whenever forests are threatened. In most civilian defense courses first aid has been a requisite. For that, scores of individuals are grateful. Stories of makeshift tourniquets successfully applied by men and women who took first aid in the course of learning how to assist their neighbors in the event of enemy attack are endless.

Because people believe and still becivilian defenders are doing in wartime what they are not likely to forget when peace comes.

Maryland Continues Lacrosse Streak; Georgetown Golfers Defeat G. W. Team

Conquers Penn State | Sports Program By 9-4, While Ball Team Also Wins

Belvoir Nine 18-16 Prey; Stickmen Now Are Only Big Team Undefeated

University of Maryland's lacrosse team won its fifth game in a row yesterday, topping a rugged Penn State outfit, 9-4, at Oollege Park and setting the stage for next Saturday's big game against Navy at Annapolis that will have great bearing on the national championship.

The victory left the Old Liners the only undefeated title-contender in the country, as Navy had its clean slate, spoiled by Princeto 7-6, at Princeton yesterday.

It was a successful day all around for the Old Liners, as the baseball team lasted long enough to take a free-hitting game from Fort Belvoir, 18-16, for its first win in three starts against service nines.

Old Liners Flashy for Time.

The lacrosse team played superbly in the last 20 minutes of the first half and gained a 5-1 lead to carry into the second half and coasted on to victory. Yesterday's game bolstered the Old Liners' confidence, as they looked to the one with Navy. for Penn State was good enough to hold the Middies to a 4-2 win re-

Five Players Reach Quarter-Finals in Friends Tennis

Coolidge, With Quartet Of Winners, Is Best In Opening Round

Five players reached the quarterinals yesterday as first-round and some second-round matches were played to open the annual interscholastic tennis tournament at Friends School. Britt Schweitzer of Coolidge, individual winner last year, led the advance into the quarter-finals by defeating Garlock of Bethesda in the second round after an opening victory over Beatty of Landon. Another player in the quarter-finals is Bill Rafferty of Leland, only junior high contestant entered. Runner-up in the boys' tourney last year, he was allowed to enter the senior high event because of his record. Lee Wood of Roosevelt, listed with Schweitzer among the favorites, also successfully passed the second round. There was one upset in the second round, with Steve Shafroth of Landon topping Webster Gorkey of Western, 8-6, 6-3. A fifth secondound winner was Ong of Wilson.

Coolidge with four winners led in team scoring at the end of the two each and six other schools earned one win apiece in the first

The boys' invitation tournament reached the semifinals yesterday with Friends School represented by two of the four players, Bob Smith and Pete Hill.

Barse Is Low Scorer With 73 as Hoyas Prevail, 20\frac{1}{2}-6\frac{1}{2}

Donohue, Victors' Coach, Fires 75 in His 1942 Debut as Player

Georgetown University's unbeaten golfers, shaping up as one of the best in a lengthy string of good Hoya teams, took George Washington's linksmen in stride yesterday, licking the Colonials, 201/2 to 61/2, over the windswept course of the Bannnockburn Country Chib. The teams will play a return match at Kenwood May 12.

Joe Barse, District junior champion, playing No. 3 for the Hoyas, led the scoring with a 3-over-par 73. Jack Donohue, coach of the victors, but also eligible for the team, played in his first match of the year, turning in a creditable 75 to whip Bill Brownrigg, No. 1 man for the Co-

Weather conditions were against good scoring as the Hoyas won, 1/2 to 31/2, in the top foursome, annexed all 9 points in the second group and won 6 points in the last

But in defeat the Colonials were not without their moments. Slim Billy Griffin, No. 2 man for George Washington, slapped a second shot on the green at the par 5 18th and squared the best ball for his side. Big Bob Groetzinger and Griffin were the men to win matches for the Colonials, Groetzinger beating Paul M. Stewart, jr., 3 and 1, while Griffin licked George Beuchert of Georgetown, 2 up, with a consistent 76. Each nine and the 18 holes counted a point in individual and best ball contests.

Aided by the 73 shot by Barse the Georgetown No. 2 team scored a best ball of 70. Donohue and Beuchert teamed to score a best ball of 71 against Brownrigg and Griffin.

Jack Donohue (G. U.) won 3 points from Bill Brownrigg (G. W.), winning 3 and 2: Billy Griffin (G. W.) won 2 points and lost 1 against George Beuchert (G. U.), winning 2 up. Best ball even, 1½ points each.

Joe Barse (G. U.) won 3 points from Al Birmingham (G. W.). winning 4 and 3: Jim Fitzgerald (G. U.) won 3 points from Dick Steadman (G. W.). winning 2 and 1. Best ball—Georgetown, 4 and 3, winning all three points. Bob Groetzinger (W. W.) beat Paul Stewart, fr., (G. U.), 3 and 1, winning 3 points; George Rita (G. U.) beat Jim Rausch (G.W.), 9 and 8, winning 3 points. Best ball—Georgetown, 5 and 4, winning 3 points.

One-sided victories also were gained in track over Duke, 972/3 to 231/3, and over William and Mary at baseball, 17-1.

Ball Game Is Easy.

Through the efforts of two second stringers and the three-hit pitching of Jeff Davis, Navy had an easy time with the Indians.

Franky Blum, in his first appearance of the season, rapped out a home run on the first pitched ball in the eighth inning after relieving Tom Higgins in right field at the end of the seventh.

"Jake" Jacobus, replacing injured Art Gillis in left field for the game, banged out a homer and three singles in six trips.

Don Clark, Indian first baseman, knocked out two of the trio of safeties that William and Mary garnered off Davis.

D. C. Bank Clearings At All-Time Peak In Last Month

$179,811,746 in April Lift 4-Month Total Slightly Above 1942

By EDWARD C. STONE.

With a jump of $22,051,633.54 over 1 the same month last year, April bank clearings in the Capital reached the highest point for any N month on record, and more than B wined out the decline of $14,802,536 registered in the first three months of 1943, George H. Bright, manager of the Clearing House Association, announced yesterday.

April clearings soared to $179,811, 746.97, in comparison with a total in canceled checks in April a year ago Coal Mine Stoppage of $157,760,113.43 and $159,125,205 in March of this year. The nearest approach to this new peak was last December, when Christmas holiday business brought the clearings total to $173,299,127, but nowhere near the Steel Production record for the month just ended.

The unprecedented check activity in April was ascribed to two main reasons — the sweeping increase in income taxes and the Second War Bond drive. Tax checks coming back to the banks early in the month not only were much larger than ever in a great many instances, but there were also a great many more of The tax check activity brought about a notable increase in clearings before the bond drive

Easter Trade Also Helpful.

The War bond campaign, accordcheck upswing. In exceeding Washington's non-bank quota of $42,000,-000 by more than $4,000,000, a majority of the bonds were paid for by check, the increase in sales to individuals being a vital factor. Easter trade, the bulk of which came in April this year, was another important reason for the new clearings

Due to a sharp letdown in clearings in January, the total for the first quarter was slightly under last year. However, clearings in April reversed the situation, bringing the four months total to $628,167,978.92 in production of 200,000 tons of steel against $620,918,881.43 a year ago, an increase of $7,249,097.49. Threatens Republic's

20 Per Cent Decline Feared by Middle Of Coming Week

CLEVELAND, May 1.-Republic Steel Corp. said today its pig iron the coming week. Bookings of output would be reduced 20 per cent by the middle of next week if the coal mine work stoppage continues. One blast furnace at Youngstown and another at Buffalo will be shut ing to financiers, started another down this week end unless mining operations are resumed, the company declared. The two furnaces OSF and the WPB, according to have a combined capacity of 55,000 the Wall Street Journal, which retons per month.

> A third blast furnace of 12,000 tons monthly capacity would be down at Birmingham by the end of next week, Republic asserted. In a prepared statement, the company

"With all of Republic's steel output headed for war purposes, the threatened cut in pig iron production would immediately cause a drop per month and seriously handicap the Nation's war efforts.

"Republic has been building up coal reserves, but the reserve stocks -many on temporary sidings-cannot be handled by the facilities 138,252,606 which were designed for direct shipments from the mines at a 100 per cent of operation.

CHICAGO, May 1.-A good demand for rye, some of which was cent to new highs for the past month today. At one time gains extended to about 2 cents, but late profit-taking shaved the upturn. Wheat staged a strong rally around midway in the short session gains amounting to about a cent. but harvest in 1942. With the prospect of redemptions of 1942 warehouse wheat out of the way, now that Government loans conserve fuel and transportation on the grain have matured, a better sentiment developed toward the bread cereal. Reports of heavy greenbug damage in Oklahoma, as well as their presence in Texas and southern counties of Kansas, were an additional buying stimulus.

Cash Corn in Demand. Cash corn dealers reported a good Eastern demand for the grain, but country offerings were restricted. The trade heard rumors that the Government was considering some action to force corn supplies into the market, but what this would inactually the primary objective is volve was unknown. Stocks Edge Higher Despite Coal Crisis At Week's Close

Advance of Fractions To About $2 Scored By Many Leaders

By BERNARD S. O'HARA, NEW YORK, May 1.-Stocks generally took the national coal crisis presumed to be investment buying, in stride today and market leaders sent that grain up more than a ended a successful week with gains of fractions to around 2 points. Mildly improved tendencies were in evidence at the start. Trends turned a shade irregular later but hardened appreciably in the final hour when large-scale bids appeared for pivotal rails, utilities and industrials. Aside from steels, which backed down from their best when the Government announced it was taking over controversial mines, most favorites closed at or near the best, with many at highs for the year or longer.

Old Maxim Followed. Wall Street adhered to its ancient maxim of "Never sell on strike news" throughout the week and while the list did little more than shuffle over a narrowly uneven area during Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, prices rallied briskly Thursday when the President revealed a firm attitude on the mining labor dispute. There was considerable profit cashing Friday, in anticipation of he approaching week end, but quotations, on the whole, finished in the plus column. The war news remained a bullish factor and a big batch of corporate earnings statements, showing better than expected net for the first quarter, propped sentiment. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up 0.2 of a point at which was only 0.2 under the 49.6, peak figure since May, 1940. On the week it was up 0.7. The utility composite touched a new top since April 7, 1941. Dealings, slack in the first hour, picked up briskly toward the end and transfers for the two hours amounted to 843,855 shares, compared with 642,190 last Saturday. It was the largest short session turnover in three weeks.

Set New 1943 Highs. In the day's "new high" class were American Telephone, International Telephone, Southern Pacific, American Car & Foundry, Standard Oil (New Jersey), Radio Corp., Warner Bros., Paramount Pictures, Consolidation Coal, Pennsylvania Coal, Montgomery Ward, Douglas Aircraft and United Aircraft.

Others with advances included Bethlehem, Santa Fe, Great Northern, Chrysler, Anaconda, Consolidated Edison, Public Service of New cent. Jersey, 20th Century-Fox, Allied Chemical and Texas Co.

cumulated dividends of $20.80 a mortgage bonds. share. Lesser improvement was exhibited by Humble Oil, Republic Great Lakes Transit Aviation and United Gas. The aggregate here was 184,900 shares Dissolution Urged versus 270,625 a week ago. Bond Prices Narrow.

Bond market prices were narrowly irregular, but a few rail and miscellaneous issues moved up a point or more. The Associated Press rail and utility averages were a shade lower, while the industrial composite was unchanged. United States Governments were quietly traded near the previous day's levels. Transactions totaled $7,353,350 face value against $7,791,000 last Satur-

NEW YORK, May 1.-Trade sources said today war demands for copper and zinc remained so large that there was little left for civilian consumption.

They said the red metal was especially in demand, but that zinc was receiving increasingly more attention with Government agencies exploring the supply situation. The Government stockpile of lead remained large, although in the last few months it had been necessary to dig moderately into the reserve

Commodity Price Changes in Week

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, May 1.-The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot commodities, on a weekly comparison basis, declined to 106.33 per cent of the 1926 average, compared with 106.41 last week and 99.05 a year ago.

New 1943 highs were established, however, in the grains and cotton component and textiles. Foods also advanced but other subdivisions of the index were lower or unchanged. Eggs, lambs, wheat, oats, rye and wool were individual commodities advancing while hogs, cattle, turpentine and cotton declined. Components of the staple price barometer, showing percentages for April 30, a week ago and a year earlier, follow (the base year 1926 live poultry this week continued so active that it again was impossible to supply all demands. All stock that was available met with ready sale and much more could have been moved. Receipts were light and prices firm.

Confusion over new ceiling prices appeared to have about disappeared and in some instances these ceilings are slightly higher than last week. The wholesale price of broilers and fryers, including commission, increased to 31a32 with fowl bringing 27a2812. Receipts and sales of other stock were so low in volume that it was impossible to determine quotations.

Egg Prices Uneven. Although quotations on best nearby white eggs held about steady during the week prices on some mixed colors were a little lower than a week earlier. Mixed-color quotations gained fractionally toward the end of the week, but did not reach last week's prices. On most days receipts were somewhat lower than average. Best nearby ungraded current receipt whites brought 36a40 dozen, with a few very large ones commanding a somewhat higher price. Mixed colors sold mostly 35½-36.

somewhat higher price. Mixed colors sold mostly 35½-36.

With white potatoes still practically inavailable and the public seeking substitutes, the demand continued heavy for sweet potatoes, prices of which were somewhat firmer than last week. Receipts were rather light. Best nearby Goldens and Jerseys increased to 5.25a5.50 bushel, with some selling a little above these prices. Other nearby varieties sold 5.00-5.50. Best Goldens and Jerseys from the Eastern Shore continued about steady at 5.50a6.00, put ungraded stock was slightly higher. Finging 5.00a5.25. Other stock brought 1.50a6.00. Quotations on Maryland turnips continued about steady at 2.00a2.50 pushel for the best, with some selling higher, and mostly 1.50 for poorer stock. Nearby parsnips also were unchanged, most of them moving at 75a85 half bushel, a few of these also good enough to bring a little higher price. Quotations on nearby minach fluctuated during the week, but the trend was slightly downward, present of them moved at mostly 75 bushel, the poorer stock selling down to 40. Nearby frhubarb declined as receipts continued to increase. It sold 4a6 bunch. Best Maryland mushrooms were a little easier at 1.00a1.15 per 4-quart basket, a few a little higher, bu poorer stock continued to increase. It sold 4a6 bunch. Dr. Benes Due to Arrive Here During Next Week

By Margaret Hart,

The springtime picture in Washington now vastly is changed with wartime transportation restrictions thwarting the traditional multitude of visitors. Foreign dignitaries on goodwill tours, however, will enliven the scene during the next few weeks. Each of the high officials will be accorded the customary state honors and there will be the usual flurry of parties.

Almost 25 years ago-on October 28, 1918—the Czechoslovak republic was born. During the week of May 9, not many months before the marking of the silver anniversary of the founding of the democracy, Dr. Eduard Benes will arrive here. The illustrious Czech statesman who helped to create his republic-now President of the government-in-exile -will be welcomed warmly.

He is no stranger in this city nor in this country. He visited here many times while serving as a professor at the University of Illinois: It was in 1935 that Dr. Benes succeeded his life-long friend. Thomas Garrigue Masarvk, father of the Czech republic, as Chief Executive. Before this he had been Foreign Minister of his country. Jan Masaryk, son of the first President, now holds this position with the Czechoslovakian government in London.

Accompanying Dr. Benes to Washington will be Mr. Jaronir Snutly, chief of his cabinet. Mr. Ladislav Feierabend, Minister of Finance for Czechoslovakia, will time his return from the West Coast to coincide with the visit of his President.

Dr. Benes will go immediately to the White House upon his arrival, probably on the afternoon of May 12. He will be the overnight guest of President Roosevelt, and during the remainder of his stay he will be established at Blair House, the official residence of visiting foreign celebrities. The program for the visit of Dr. Benes has not been completed in its entirety by the State Department. There will be a dinner and perhaps a lunch party or two with state officials as hosts.

The Minister of Czechoslovakia, Mr. Vladimir Hurban, and his American-born wife will entertain for President Benes Friday evening, May 14. Invitations for this fete already have been issued. The Minister and Dr. Benes are old friends. It was Mr. Hurban who was one of the leaders in placing Dr. Benes at the head of the provisional government of his republic about three not do much sight-seeing during his stay. He is familiar with Mount Vernon, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and has visited the tomb of Woodrow Wilson at the Washington Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul. Usually these places are included in the itinerary of a state guest.

Wednesday of the coming week will find the President of Bolivia. Gen. Enrique Penaranda, within our midst. He will be the honor guest at a number of official affairs. Prominent among these will be the special meeting of the Governing Board of the Pan-American Union Thursday. The meeting, to be presided over by the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, chairman of the board, will have in attendance the Ambassadors of the Latin American countries who comprise the membership of the Governing Board. Secretary Hull will welcome the Bolivian Chief Executive officially and President Penaranda will reply. A luncheon will follow the session, with Mr. Hull as the

The Bolivian President again will visit the beautiful Pan-American Building Saturday when he will be the honor guest at a reception given by the Bolivian Ambassador and Senora de Guachalla as one of the concluding events honoring the

The third high ranking official coming to Washington is the President of Chile, Senor Juan Antonio Rios. The chief of protocol, Mr. George T. Summerlin, will leave the Capital between Wednesday, May 19, and Friday, May 21. to meet Senor Rios when he arrives in Miami. The day of his departure will depend on when the Chief Executive can start North. President Rios' visit, originally planned for the end of last year, was postponed until this month. The Sunday Star JUNIOR AIDES. Sally Flinn and Molly Stewart at

After making a preliminary tour of the gardens, she said, "Good turf is notoriously difficult in this area and Georgetown stands for something even more precious than green grass growing all

The something more precious will be seen and felt as the visitors make the rounds of the 13 gardens of varying types open today for their enjoyment-they cannot miss it.

The beautiful gardens of Evermay, estate of Mr. and Mrs. F. Lammot Belin at 1623 Twentyeighth street, with their fine old trees, fountains and magnificent view over the city are to be open to visitors. Mrs. Bowdoin Craighill, Mrs. Hugh Call, Miss Gertrude Good, Miss Jane Smith and Miss Margaret Boteler will be hostesses here.

The old Mackall house, which is part of the Hollerith estate, 1633 Twenty-ninth street, at present the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Blagden, is to be open for the tour, a special added attraction. Built in 1717, it is one of the oldest and most beautiful of Georgetown's landmarks.

Mrs. Frederick Hitts, Mrs. Frederick Bradley, Mrs. Fontaine Bradley and Mrs. Clement Randle will be hostesses with Mrs. Blagdon, showing visitors around the old-fashioned rambling gardens of Mrs. Hollerith, and the lower floor of the house

In the gardens of Mrs. William Burden, 1224 Thirtieth street, and Mrs. Henry Leonard, 3038 N town Convent of the Visitation will serve as hostesses, and Miss Margaret Cross, director of Georgetown Children's House, and members of her staff, will have charge of the gates.

Mrs. David Greenleaf, Mrs. Charles Bittinger and Mrs. Balthazar Meyer will be hostesses in Miss Rose Greely's gem of a garden at 3131 O street. And in Mrs. William Poland's well planned small garden, 1675 Thirty-first street, Miss Ann Smith, Mrs. Ernest I. Lewis and Mrs. Carroll Greenough will look after guests.

Mrs. James Richard Heiskell and Mrs. Eldred Dickinson, granddaughters of William Dunlop, who as children played in the garden of the Lincoln house at 3014 N street, will be hostesses in that garden, also Mrs. Heiskell's young daughter, descendant of the original owner.

Two ladies have served as hostesses in Miss Katherine Dougal's garden at 3030 P street ever since the annual pilgrimages were inaugurated, and they will be there again today, Miss Margaret Shoemaker and Miss Eva Nelson Gilbert. And at Mrs. Thomas Bradley's garden, where her two young grandchildren love to play, Mrs. Rawlins Hume, Mrs. Cresson Newbold, Mrs. John L. Chamberlain and Mrs. Charles Bradley will assist the hostess.

Other gardens listed are those of Mrs. Howard C. Davidson, 3238 R street, in themselves worth the tour; Mrs. R. H. A. Carter, 3231 R street: Mrs. John Ihlder. 2811 P street, and Mrs. Walter Peter, 3027 N street.

Mrs. Whitehead's own charming little house at 1524 Twentyeighth street, with its bordered walk of English daisies, and wisteria climbing over the picket fence, will be tour headquarters. Tickets may be secured there or at any of the garden gates, the AAA and the Willard Hotel.

In the event of rain today, the tour will be postponed until next

Margaret Cary Tuckerman Bride

Family tradition marked the wedding yesterday afternoon of Miss Margaret Cary Tuckerman to Lt. Comdr. Draper Lawrence Kauffman, U. S. N. R., which took place in the Great Choir of the Washington Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul. Following the dictates of the Episcopal Church, no decorations were in the Great Choir except the white spring blossoms in the altar vases.

The Rev. Peyton Williams. rector of Christ Church in Georgetown, officiated at 4:30 o'clock, assisted by the Rev. Albert Lucas, headmaster of St. Alban's School. Mr. Paul Callaway, organist of the Cathedral. played the wedding music. The bride is the daughter of her mother, who formerly was Miss Edith Abercrombie-Miller of Washington. The gown is of ivory satin fashioned with short sleeves of lace which belonged to her grandmother, Mrs. Walter Cary Tuckerman, and trimmed with bands of pearls. A band of rose point lace from her shoulder to the hem of the dress was worn by her other grandmother. Mrs. Frederick Abercrombie-Miller.

Her veil of exquisite lace was loaned by Mrs. Thomas Riggs and was built over chiffon and held by a cap in coronet effect made of rose point lace loaned by her aunt, Countess Bohdan de Castellane. The bride also wore a necklace of her mother's of topaz and pearls and she carried white orchids and roses, lilies of the valley and bouvardia.

The bridegroom is a son of and he with his father, who acted as best man, awaited his bride at the chancel steps.

The bridal procession through the great Cathedral to the altar in the Great Choir was led by the ushers, fellow officers of the bridegroom, who were Lt. Means Johnston, Lt. (j. g.) Thomas L. Boardman, Lt. David H. Northrup, Lt. (j. g.) F. Merle Coover, Lt. (j. g.) Henry P. Scott, III; Lt. (j. g.) James W. Elam, Lt. (j. g.) James M. Werrock, Lt. (j. g.) William Dees, Ensign Frank P. Kaine, Ensign Robert A. Weeks, Ensign S. Irwin Morris and Ensign S. Sitterson.

Mrs. Robert Hugh Williams, sister of the bride, was her matron of honor and Miss Elizabeth Louise Kauffman, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor.

Weddings Away From Washington Attract Attention of Official Society

Official society here turned its attention yesterday to three weddings that took place away from the Washington scene. The weddings also were of interests in Navy Reserve circles, as all three bridegrooms are attached to that branch of the armed services.

In New York the son of the Postmater General and Mrs. Frank C. Walker, Ensign Thomas Joseph Walker, and Miss Ruth Ann Shelare, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse A. Shelare of Brooklyn and Newport, R. I., took place in the Lady Chapel of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The Most Rev. John T. O'Hara officiated at the 11 o'clock nuptial mass and the bride, who was escorted to the altar by her father, was costumed in a Victorian gown of white satin, the fitted basque having long sleeves and a heart-shaped neckline. A bouffant skirt of tulle formed the foundation for the divided satin, which formed a long train. A shirred tulle Juliet cap edged with a wreath of orange blossoms held her veil, which also was of tulle, and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and gardenias showered with stephanotis.

Miss Joy Mari Shelare was her sister's maid of honor, wearing coral marquisette made with long sleeves, square neckline and bouffant skirt and trimmed with pleating of the same material. The bridesmaids were Miss Laura Hallie Walker, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Nancy Tiernan and Miss Dary Tiernan of Essex Falls, N. J. They were costumed like the maid of honor in turcarried a bouquet of spring

The Postmaster General was best man for his son and the ushers were Mr. Robert F. Shelare, brother of the bride; Dr. John Thomas Gilbride, Mr. James Jenkins and Ensign Jules Ameno, all of New York.

A breakfast for the wedding party and the immediate families was given after the cere-

The bride is a graduate of Marymount School and Finch Union College in New York, and Ensign Walker was graduated from Loyola School in New York and the University of Notre Dame. He and Mrs. Walker will make their home in New York.

Simplicity marked the wedding in the Community Church at Miami Beach of Miss Evelyn Lovett, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of War for Air and Mrs. Robert A. Lovett, to Ensign David Springer Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle L. Brown of Ellsworth, Me.

Chaplain Abbott Peterson, U. S. N., officiated, and Mr. Lovett escorted his daughter and gave her in marriage. Her wedding dress was a street-length print frock with a white background bearing figures in rose and fuchsia, and her hat was halo in style and matched her dress.

Miss Fanny Myers of New York was the bride's only attendant and her dress was a street-length model of pale tan, with which she wore a Milan hat. Ensign Albert Lauber served as best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Lovett were accompanied to Miami Beach by their son, Mr. Robert S. Lovett. who is a student at St. Paul's. They are expected back in Washington this evening.

The chapel of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Curch in New York was the scene of the wedding of Miss Patricia Castles, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John W. Castles of New York, and Ensign David C. Acheson, son of Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean G. Acheson.

The Rev. Dr. George P. T. Sargent officiated at the ceremony, which took place at 4:30 in the afternoon, and the bride, who was escorted and given in marriage by her father, was gowned in ivory satin fashioned on medieval lines with a square neckline and fitted bodice with flounces over the hips. The sleeves were long and the full skirt with a circular train was covered by her heirloom veil of Tuscany lace, which formed her tiara headdress. Her flowers were a shower were Mrs. Frederic Heiston and Miss Faith Higgins of New York; Miss Genevieve Roe of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, Miss Virginia Watkins of Warrenton, Miss Yvette Baillieu, Miss Ruth Bielaski, Miss Catherine Clement and Miss Patricia Prochnik. They were dressed in similar

frocks of pale yellow sugar mist chiffon bouffant skirts and long fitted bodices of silk jersey in the same shade. They wore wreaths of flowers in their hair matching their bouquets of spring flowers. Mrs. Williams and Miss Kauffman had blue predominating and in the others green was the outstanding Tuxeden, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tuckerman in Bethesda, was the scene of the reception to which a small number of relatives and a few official and out-of-town guests were invited. Mrs. Tuckerman received the guests wearing a becoming costume of delphinium blue crepe and lace and a small flower hat. She was assisted by Mrs. Kauffman, mother of the bridegroom, who was dressed in a light beige silk gown with matching hat, and like Mrs. Tuckerman she had a shoulder bouquet of orchids.

Assisting at the reception also were Countess Bohan de Castellane, aunt of the bride, and her two godmothers. Representative Edith Nourse Rogers and Mme. Grouitch, widow of the former Yugoslav Minister; Mrs. Alexander Gordon and Mrs. Tunstall Smith of Baltimore; Mrs. Clement Biddle of Philadel-phia, Mrs. Ralph Page of New York, Mrs. Boy-Ed and Mrs. William Bell Watkins of Warrenton, Lady Vennings, Lady Browett, Lady Sinclair and Lady Baillieu of Great Britain. and Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Mrs Frederic Atherton, Mrs. Robert Hollister Chapman, Mrs. Arthur Mac-Arthur and Miss Janet Fish.

Comdr. and Mrs. Kauffman left later on a wedding trip and on its completion will make their home in Washington, where the former is on duty. Mrs. Kauffman wore a Navy blue light-weight dressmakers suit, trimmed with pink; a wide-brimmed hat of Navy blue Milan straw and Navy blue and white accessories. Her shoulder bouquet was of white

Mrs. Kauffman is one of the five very popular daughters of Mr. and Tuckerman. She was graduated with honors from the Cathedral School and was a student at Bryn Mawr for two years, and since then has been engrossed in war work.

Comdr. Kauffman was born in San Diego and attended St. Alban's School. He was graduated from the Kent School in Connecticut in 1929 and from the Naval Academy in 1933. He served with the American Ambulance Corps in France from April to June, 1940, and received the Croix de Guerre and the Croix de Guerre with palm and star. Comdr. Kauffman spent five weeks in a German prison camp and served in the British Navy, from which he has two citations. As a lieutenant in the United States Navy he was awarded the Navy Cross in

Mother, Inspired by Boys on the War Front, Wants to Do as Good a Job as Son Is Doing

Mrs. R. T. Walmsley Among Busy Workers At AWVS Quarters

By Mary MacCracken Jones. Since Pearl Harbor, the time when Mrs. Robert T. Walmsley came to the headquarters of the American Women's Voluntary Services to do her part toward winning the war, she probably has met and helped more persons than any other one person in the organization.

After a brief period of training her post was at the information desk, contact point where every new recruit and visitor comes to set on the way to her objective, where inquiries are answered or referred to the right person, where the spark of friendly helpfulness makes all the difference between drawing volunteers into valuable work or leaving them indifferent

Marguerite Walmsley was the right person for the job, for her quiet, unobtrusive interest and ready helpfulness never failed and her gentle manner and pleasant voice made all comers feel wanted and welcome, inspiring them to find their job and pull their weight. For more than a year she held her post, ready and reliable, often from 9 in the morning to 5 at night.

She thought the information desk the most interesting point in the organization, loving the work, for she enjoyed making contacts and meeting and helping people. She liked setting them on the way to what they wanted, telling of classes and giving information as to the varied activities of the

All this is in the past tense, because Mrs. Walmsley now is office manager of the humming business office that runs the internal machinery of the AWVS. Sometimes, as she assigns typists, arranges for mimeographing or acts as a service of supplies, she may smother a longing for the more varied personal contacts of the information desk-which she speaks of as a sort of "house by the side of the road." But she meets the fevered demands for more typists than have reported, for non-existent messenger service and the thousand and one requests that come from every department to the business office, with the same gentle and quiet ability that distinguished her at the information desk. Four years ago Mr. and Mrs. Walmsley and Edward Robert Peterson, Mrs. Walmsley's son by her first marriage, came to Washington for what they expected to be a brief stay, to reorganize a branch of his business. But gathering war clouds threatened and the Government, reaching for valuable men, gathered Robert Walmsley into the Office of Price Administration where he is now senior specialist. So the brief stay has lengthened and all three of the family are working with all their might for an early victory. One is in the Government, one working for the AWVS and the son is now a lieutenant fighting somewhere in North Africa. Marguerite Walmsley's friends know without a word being said when a message comes from her boy by the brighter look on her face and the buoyancy of her walk. A couple of weks ago she made a visit to her old home and stopped in New York to see her week-old grandson, born to a

"There is so much to be done." she says, and "we are all working hard. Work piles up and more workers are needed. Sometimes I think of going to work in the canteen or the motor corps, for both need more women to meet the increasing demands. But, we need people in the office, too. I want to do as good a job as my son is doing."

Helen V. Oliver Recently Wed To Mr. Moberg

Out-of-Town Guests Attend Ceremony in Alexandria Church

The Washington Street Methodist Church in Alexandria was the scene of the marriage of Miss Helen Virginia Oliver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Oliver of Fairfax, Va., to Mr. Eldon Samuel Moberg, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Moberg of Hampton, Va., which took place April 24 at 7:30 o'clock, with the Rev. H. P. Clarke officiating.

Mrs. Edna Row of Arlington played the wedding music, and Miss Susan Mylroie and Miss Kathryn Mylrole sang two selections.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of ivory satin trimmed with seed pearls. The skirt of the gown ended in a long train, and a long veil of illusion fell from a crown of orange blossoms. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses and sweetpeas.

Miss Edna Oliver, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor. She wore a gown of light green marquisette with an embroidered bodice. Bridesmaids were Miss Glayds Oliver, younger sister of the bride; Miss Anne O'Connor and Miss Jean Nelson of Washington and Miss Maizie Colwill of Toronto, Canada. Their gowns were of marquisette and lace, and they carried old-fashioned bouquets.

The bridegroom had his brother, Mr. Robert Earl Moberg, as his best man, and the ushers were Mr. Charles Edmonds of Washington, Mr. Clyde Oliver, Mr. Daniel Cummings, jr., and Mr. Russell Ruggles

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the George Mason Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Moberg left for New York for a brief wedding trip. For traveling the bride wore a yellow wool suit with tan acces-

Concert Pianist From Kenwood Declares Servicemen 'Most Appreciative Audience'

Planning Another Tour of Camps By Lillian Arthur. Back at her home in Ken-

wood, Md., after a tour of Army camps in four Southern States, Mrs. Courtland D. Ferguson, know professionally as Lucile Ferguson, concert pianist, is planning another trip to meet again what she declares is "the most appreciative audience I have ever known."

Mrs. Ferguson's story of her experiences in connection with her camp appearances is fasci-

"At my first concert," she says, in describing her trip, "I was a little concerned as to whether my selections would be suited to my audience. I had selected compositions by Chopin and Liszt for the first group and three South American songs for the second

"At the close of the concert I asked the boys to select their own music for the encore program. Of course, I thought they would suggest swing or jazz. But, no indeed!--what they wanted was classical music and lots of it! They asked for Debussey and a few requested compositions from MacDowell, our American composer, and one of the most popular numbers on the whole program was the Spanish concert piece for piano, 'Malaguena.' ".

Wherever she went among the different camps in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, Mrs. Ferguson tried to select the programs she felt would meet with the approval of the boys for whom she was trying to provide entertainment. In every camp she had the same requests for classical music and the encore usually lasted longer than the regular program.

The concerts often ended with the singing by the members of the audience of Mrs. Ferguson's own composition, "He's a Yankee Soldier Boy."

They must have liked her and her music, for in every camp she visited they asked her to come back. And that is why she is starting another tour week after

Music has long been both a vocation and an avocation with Mrs. Ferguson, and so it was only natural that in considering what she might do to help in the war program that she should want to share her musical talent and enjoyment with the men in the armed services.

Mrs. Ferguson's work with the men in the camps is on a purely volunteer basis. She pays her own expenses and receives no remuneration of any kind.

Her musical training was much like that of other girls who have chosen music as their career.

She started her study in St. Louis, her home town; went from there to the Chicago School of Music and from Chicago to Fontainbleau, France, where she studied with the famous teacher, Isidor Philipp. Returning to St. Louis she played with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and later did concert work on the radio. It was the war that first interested her in writing military music and it was the chance remark of a man in uniform—that he did not see why some one could not write a catchy, streamlined marching song-that led her to write "He's a Yankee Soldier Boy," now frequently heard on the radio. Capt. Thomas F. Darcy, jr., leader of the United States Army Band, heard the song and liked it, and it was played for the first time in public by the Army Band, with Capt. Darcy conducting. A few weeks ago Capt. Darcy

When the war is over and peace comes, Mrs. Ferguson would like to play again for the same group of service men she has met in the camps. She would like to see whether they will want the same music then as they do now; or if their overseas' experiences will give them a giobal outlook toward music.

Like many present-day musicians she foresees a great era of melodic music in the years that will follow the close of the war, and she would like more than anything else to have a part in writing and playing the music of a country at peace.

Mrs. Ferguson is a quiet sort of person, almost shy, and she doesn't take herself too seriously. At her home in Kenwood she works in the garden a little, makes a dress now and then for her 8-year-old daughter, Lucile, now in Somerset School and, of course, keeps up her study of

The fact that she has two small children does not keep her from carrying on her camp-entertainment activities. Instead of leaving them at home with a nurse when she started on her first tour she packed their bags and took them along; and she is probably one of the few professional women who has taken her children with her on her concert

Elizabeth Hamill Bride Last Night In Cathedral

Is Married to Sergt. Vance of Army Air Forces

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Barr Hamill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chalmers Hamill of White Plains, N. Y., and Washington, to Sergt. James Nelson Vance II, Army Air Forces, took place early last evening in the Chapel of St. Mary at the Washington Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul. Mr. Ellis C. Varley played the wedding music and the Rev. W. Curtis Draper, jr., officiated at 6:30 o'clock.

Wearing a gown of white taffeta, the bride was escorted to the altar by her father and given by him in marriage. Imported rose point lace from the wedding gown of her mother trimmed the neckline of her dress, which was made with long sleeves and a full skirt ending in a train. She wore a half-length veil which was draped from a tiara of orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of gardenias and bouvardia.

Miss Edna Barr Hamill was maid of henor for her sister and wore a dress of pink marquisette. Trailing pink beauty rosebuds formed the headdress which held her shoulderlength veil and she carried a nosegay of pink rosebuds.

The bride attended Brenau College in Gainesville, Ga., and Sergt. Vance attended the Hun School in Princeton, N. J., and the Gunnery School in Washington, Conn. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William McClellan Vance of New York and

Mr. and Mrs. Hamill, parents of the bride, were hosts at a wedding supper following the ceremony, after which Sergt. and Mrs. Vance left for a trip to the Adirondacks. A beige flannel suit was worn by the bride for traveling. They will make their home at 16 Sutton place in New York while Sergt. Vance is stationed in that city.

Pierce Guild Party Friday For Foundlings

Cards and Tea And Sale for the Benefit of Home

The Ladies of the Peirce Guild have issued invitations for a May party Friday afternoon at the Washington Home for Foundlings at 4610 Forty-second street. There will be tables for cards from 2 o'clock, and during the afternoon there will be a sale of bags, fancy articles, cakes and cookies. Tea will be served from 4 to 6 o'clock. Many of the members of the guild are giving much of their time to Red Cross and other work but still are not neglecting their home charities. Because of the needs in repairs and improvements at the home they will have their usual May party from which their funds will be replenished. The Peirce Guild has aided in supporting the home for the past 50 years and with so much effort now being directed to the war aid, support to home charities is more necessary. Sixty beds are equipped for taking care of little tots whose parents are physically or financially unable to take care of them. Of especial interest is the infant ward, where there are a number of babies not yet a year old. This ward was added to the home through the bequest of the late Mrs. A. Lisner and is modernly equipped. The Peirce Guild sponsors many repairs and improvements needed but not provided for in the Community Chest

Mrs. William H. Sholes, president of the guild, is chairman of the Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, former president. Others helping in arranging the party are Mrs. Irving Saum who is chairman for the fancy work table assisted by Mrs. William work table, assisted by Mrs. William E. Washington Interest in Music Has Centered Around Inspiring Leadership of Mary Howe

Pianist-Composer Now Active Worker In Red Cross Unit

By Katharine Brooks.

A musician by avocation and by profession, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe still has time to do her bit in Red Cross emergency work. As Mary Howe she is known for her musicianship not only as a pianist, but as a composer. However, the group of Red Cross workers to which she is attached is one of those never in the public eye, but who hold themselves in readiness for emergencies.

Mrs. Howe was born in Richmond, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, who were prominent in society in Washington where Mr. Carlisle was a leading lawyer.

She was presented here, but preferred her piano work to the less serious business of society. She started her piano studies in Washington before going to the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. There she was a pupil of Ernest Hutcheson and Harold Randolph and probably it was there that she developed her love for two piano compositions and playing.

She has done considerable public playing and was one of the artists appearing at Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's Morning Musicales when they were given in Rauscher's ballroom in their early

During the past few weeks Mrs. Howe has given much of her time to the campaign for the sustaining fund of the National Symphony Orchestra for which she has been an ardent worker since its early days. She, it was, who organized the Woman's Committee of the orchestra and has served as its very able chair-

Through the past week or ten days Mrs. Howe has been watching the rehearsals for the performance tomorrow evening of her quartet for strings which she has written after Emily Dickinson. The occasion tomorrow is a presentation by the Composers' Club of Washington for the Washington Music Teachers Association. The program will be given in the Textile Museum, which Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers have loaned for the man since its start.

Other Washington composers whose compositions will be heard tomorrow evening are Mr. La Salle Speir, Mr. R. Deane Shure and Mr. Emerson Meyers. Mr. Meyers' quintet for clarinet and strings, which will be played tomorrow, is dedicated to Mary

Mrs. Howe as Mary Carlisle was a gifted pianist, but also was a very popular member of younger social circles in Washington. Her marriage to Mr. Howe took place in 1912 and they have made their home at 1821 H street ever since. Mr. Howe is a son of the late Walter Howe of New York and after his father's death his mother married Mr. Arnold Hague and lived at 1724 I street until her death some years ago. Mr. Howe shares his wife's interest in music and is vice president of the National Symphony Orchestra Association and has been an active worker in the campaigns for the sustaining fund each year. Concerts have been frequent in the Howe household, for not only Mrs. Howe is a musician but with her children they formed a delightful group. The older son Bruce, now is a lieutenant in the United States Army, Calderon is a doctor, and the daughter, Miss Molly Howe, has her days filled with work toward the war effort. Mrs. Howe did not develop an interest in composition until her three children were ready for school. She then returned to the Peabody for study and won her diploma in composition from that conservatory.

Not only holding the chairmanship of the Woman's Committee of the orchestra, Mrs. Howe is an active member of the Arts club, the Washington Composers' Club and she also is an

'Keeping Voice and Symbol of Holland Alive'

Spirit of Nation To Pervade Exhibit Opening Friday

"Keep the voice and the symbol of Holland alive," words of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, will be a driving force behind the compelling presentation to be opened at the United War Relief Center by the local committee of the Queen Wilhelmina Fund. Once a time for colorful flower festivals among the Dutch people, May has been adopted this season as the month when exhibits and events will interpret postinvasion Holland for the people of Washington.

This stirring exhibit, now scheduled to open Friday, has been planned by a committee headed by Mme. Loudon, wife of the Netherlands Ambassador.

Tile designs commemorating the invasion of Holland, which are the work of Joep Nicolas, Dutch artist, will appear in the exhibit as a poignant reminder of the invasion by the Nazi armed forces, which occurred three years ago on May 10. Also included in the exhibit will be three large panels painted by Nicolas during the actual time of the invasion. They depict the horrors and the suffering borne by the population both in Holland and the East Indies

A part of the educational exhibit will be large maps in color. showing the Netherlands and the East and West Indies, together with their people and their development. Promised, too, are enlarged photographs of Boroboedoer temples in Java, of Rotterdam after the bombing of the Huis ten Bosch, or "House in the Wood," which was once a home of the Queen and is now believed

Participating in a discussion of the May exhibit month highlighting conditions in the Netherlands at a meeting in Mme. Loudon's home recently, were

Dayton Wedding Is of Interest In Washington

Ensign Jeanne Rowe United in Marriage To Lt. Skinner

An out-of-town wedding that is of interest here took place yesterday in Dayton, Ohio, when Ensign Jeanne Rowe, U. S. N. R., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Lewis Rowe of Lincoln, Nebr., was married to Lt. Carlton Skinner, U. S. C. G. R., son of Mrs. Marian W. Skinner Beach of Milford, Conn., and Prof. Macy M. Skinner of the University of Washington at Seattle.

The wedding took place at noon n the home of the bride's sister Mrs. Harvison Catlin Holland, in the presence of members of the immediate families.

A graduate of the University of Nebraska, the bride is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, Pi Lambda Theta and Psi Chi Sororities and is employed in the Navy Department. Lt. Skinner attended Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., and was graduated from the University of California, where he was affiliated with Delta Upsilon Fraternity. For-merly with the Maritime Commission, Lt. Skinner also was a newspaperman before entering the service and he is at present on duty at the Coast Guard headquarters in

The marriage of Miss Marianne Steger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Steger, to Mr. John E. Pennell, U. S. N., of Portsmouth, Va., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Pennell, took place April 17 at the home of the bridegroom's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Pennell. The house was decorated with spring flowers and the couple exchanged vows before a palm-banked fireplace. The Rev. H. R. Osgood of the Hyattsville Baptist Church officiated.

The bride wore navy blue with a corsage of gardenias and roses. Her sister, Miss Louise Steger, was her only attendant. Mr. H. E. Simms, uncle of the bridegroom, served as best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held for the immediate families and the few close friends who were present at the ceremony. Later in the day Mr. and Mrs. Pennell left for a short trip.

The bridegroom is attending the Navy Service School for Cooks and Bakers at the Norfolk Navy Yard.

By the Way—In Nation's Capital

Mrs. Colbjornsen Had Interesting And Thrilling Life

By Beth Blaine.

The first time Mrs. Ole Colbjornsen ever spoke in public was for the American Red Cross. Less than an hour after she had finished speaking the Speakers' Bureau of the Red Cross was deluged with phone calls from organizations who wanted to know if they couldn't have Mrs. Colbjornsen speak for them, too. And if they couldn't have her, they didn't want any one else . . .

You can put this down to a number of things-to charm, or choice of words or the sheer dramatic appeal of a woman who speaks of what she knows and speaks from the heart. It's hard to say just exactly what it is. But, it is definitely the same quality with which China's First Lady has swayed and held in the palm of her tiny hand the emotions of every audience to whom she has spoken. Perhaps it is the great power of their tremendous sincerity and their love of country, for these are traits the two women share alike.

It was in June of 1941—almost a year after her husband and another Norwegian had foiled the Gestapo by escaping from Norway with all the gold of the Bank of Norway (only the two of them in a small boat)-that Mrs. Colbjornsen too made her escape to the Swedish border.

She made it in almost as dramatic a fashion, on skis and alone. But she made it, and three months to the day later she was safe with her husband in Washington. How she got here sounds like a trip on the magic carpet, except that it was far from being magic or glamorous, but it was exciting! From Stockholm she went to Moscow by plane. Then by train to the Black Sea and by sea on a Russian boat (and a wonderful one she says) to Istanbul. Then to Bagdad where she took a British plane to India and there got a boat from Bombay via Capetown and Trinidad to New that gold) and she is knee-deep in Red Cross work. She has taken both the Nurse's Aide Course in her home country and here. In Norway she was also a "Green Star Sister," which means that she was a graduate veterinarian nurse and as such was sent to duty in the cavalry where she worked in the surgical clinic for horses. (Norway is one of the few countries to have this.)

She worked with the Red Cross in Norway, too, and in the wonderful hospitals of her own country. And she is proud to some one who knows about all & have been a member of that class here in Washington which was first in America to graduate and wear the present blue nurse's aide uniform.

> She is now assistant captain of Nurse's Aides at Georgetown Hospital. For recreation she knits beatiful sweaters which she gives to the men of the Norwegian Royal Air Force as her own personal contribution. Mary A. Baden Is Married to R. O. Parker

Ceremony Is Held At the Home of Bride's Parents

White roses, white lilacs and spring flowers made a lovely setting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Henry Baden for the wedding yesterday afternoon of their daughter, Miss Mary Adele Baden, and Mr. Ralph Owen Parker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Owen Parker of Alma,

Miss Mary Frances Storer played the wedding music and the Rev. Dr. John Keating Cartwright officiated at 5 o'clock.

Entering the room with her father, the bride was gowned in white marquisette made with long sleeves, heart-shaped neckline and full skirt ending in a long train and edged with a ruffle of pleated organdy. A wreath of orange blossoms held her veil of illusion and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and stephanotis.

Miss Patricia McNulty of Forest Hills, Long Island, was the maid of honor and wore a dress of pink marquisette over taffeta and carried a bouquet of spring flowers. Mr. Henry S. Broughall of Alma was the best man. The parents of the bridegroom

Gardening Togs

Costumes Are Charming and Practical

By Helen Vogt

The fashion business, it's time you knew, is one in which diplomacy plays a mighty important

For instance, when walking became a necessity instead of a pastime, up popped the style world with comfortable shoes that were also tempting enough in appearance to make us want to walk. When fabrics had to be conserved, fashion introduced the slim silhouette and made it chic to wear pencil-line clothes. And now when it's patriotic and practical to go Victory gardening, fashion has produced such gay and appropriate clothes that the most fastidious woman will want to go "back to the farm."

It certainly isn't sensible to invest a fortune in gardening clothes, but it is obvious that many of us are going to be spending a lot of time in our own little fenced-in Shangri-las this year. So, better plan a number of casual outfits in your summer wardrobe, choosing the type mostbecoming and practical.

You'll want washable cottons, first and foremost. Moreover, chances are good that you'll succumb to what hit-tune-conscious punsters call "that old blue denim." There are slacks and jacket suits, playsuits with button-on skirts, overalls, pinafores and jumpers. And there are "separates" in the form of shorts and skirts and slacks and shirts which may be selected all in one color or in contrasting, mix-'nmatch combinations. For active wear, slacks or overalls will probably take the most strenuous beating and also protect you from sunburn, inquisitive insects and curious neighbors. However, if

Washington Wears—

Looking back on it, it was quite an Easter parade, fashionably speaking. New suits, dresses and bonnets bloomed. but top honors really went to what very, very young Washington was wearing.

For example, at an Easter-egghunting party, the Misses Clare and Jane Hilgedick wore sister dresses of buttercup yellow covered with tiny bands of colorful ric-rac. Matching hair bows, of course. . . . Cousins Sammy and Sheila Farr were a symphony in red and white, white suit and dress topped with cherry red sweaters and a ribbon hair bow for Sheila. . . Petite Nancy Johnston's braids were caught with blue and white checked gingham bows to match her dainty frock, and she wore the perennially becoming flower-trimmed leghorn hat. Also taking in the spring sunshine was little Margaret Finnan in blue linen with lace-trimmed collar. Barbara Ennis was sporting an aqua beret just like "big sister's." And one of the most fascinating of young Washingtonians, Victoria Hewitt, sported blue hand-made rompers and an Easter bunny as big as herself!

As for the grown-ups, glimpsed at tea the other afternoon was "Chick" MacCracken, in an Easter bonnet to outdo all other Easter bonnets. Immensely becoming, despite its giddiness, it consisted of a coil of shiny black straw, with a hole in the middle for Chick's curls to meet the breezes, and a snood effect of starched tawny lace down the back of the head. . . . Mrs. Philip Coffin, one of Washington's best groomed ladies, wore a flat sailor of white straw, with a tiny black veil with a gray tailleur. . . . Mrs. Loring Christie's smart frock was printed with rosy red penguins on a black ground. Her plain black hat was enormous,

you like to do your gardening in shorts, why not? Particularly if you have a skirt or jumper to slip on over them when the front doorbell rings.

Most attractive this year are the jumpers which may be as "little-girl-like" or as sophisticated as you please. it depends entirely upon whether you choose a pinafore in white and blue checked rayon taffeta and wear it with a frilly white blouse, or whether you go more fashion magazine-ish in a starkly simple spun rayon jumper with extravagantly flowered long-sleeved rayon jersey blouse. There are cotton skirts of white printed with the most mammoth strawberry designs which would be really fetching for moments of relaxation. In fact, there seems to be no limit to the cool, crisp, fresh-looking fashions available for stay-at-homes.

Short-sleeved jackets to be worn with slacks or shorts are very smart this year. So are collarless vestees, such as simple blue denim ones worn over striped or checked cotton skirts. Some of the vestees have pocket flaps of checked cotton to match the shirt beneath, others are made entirely of striped material. Very often contrasting stitching or fringed bands provide a touch of color on simple jackets or overalls in pastel tones or navy.

Those who really go in for casual fashions, whether they choose active work clothes for gardening or decorative styles for summer evenings, are also going to pay close attention to accessories. You can still find comfortable and smart-looking play shoes of the unrationed variety and you'll wear them with socks or suntanned bare legs. There is plenty of "garden jewelry"-pins or necklaces or other ornaments to dress up these simple clothes. Plastics look summery and informal in jewelry displays, and, what's more, there are pins and such with appropriate motifs for gardening. (You might work to keep the bugs out of your garden but you'll pin the inanimate variety on the shoulder of your pinafore.)

The garden is one place where this department gives its blessing to kerchiefs for the head and to flower-trimmed snoods and such. This, it seems to us, is where they belong. Or, if you're worried about your complexion, big-brimmed hats are the answer. Gloves to protect your hands can be the shortie cottonknit variety that wash like a dream and are comfortable to

Back to the farm-and correctly dressed in a cotton striped playsuit with button-on skirt. For your Victory gardening, outdoor exercises or for those delightful leisure moments, such versatile and classic outfits are ideal. Moderately priced, they come in red, blue, brown or green with white, are well-tailored and crisp looking for summer days.

Equipment for Outdoor Dining Available Set Up a Grill Near Your Victory Garden for Fun on Summer Evenings

By Margaret Nowell

There will be many a picnic supper in Washington this summer. Most of us, wishing to enjoy every moment out of doors. will plan to eat an al fresco dinner in the garden or next to the Victory vegetable plot, with no time wasted on the "best bib and

Meat broiled over a grill costs no more ration points than that cooked in the house, but tastes twice as good and is much more fun. The shops still have all types of grills, from a small bucket which holds a few coals to a wonderful affair which has a circular table built in to hold the plates and knives and forks. If your Victory garden is in your own back yard it would be a good plan to set up a grill and a picnic table close by. The simplest sort of table and chairs that can stand all weather are ideal. A simple grill may be set up with a few stones or bricks and a cross bar metal top. This equipment may be in place at all times and removes the only annoyance of an outdoor supper, that of assembling the necessary facilities.

If you have a plot somewhat removed from home there is no reason to waste time going home for dinner. The picnic basket and a collapsible grill may be tucked into the car in the morning. Weiners, hamburger or chops bought during the day may be cooked on the spot and dinner served "hot off the griddle" in between hoeing the corn and weeding the radishes.

Paper plates, cups and napkins are still available. However, if outdoor dinners are to be the family specialty this summer it is a good plan to buy inexpensive colorful pottery plates and picnic cutlery. This saves good silver and makes dinner a little more appetizing, for there are many things which are not especially attractive on paper plates. These may be packed efficiently in a small basket and be ready for each occasion with all the necessary equipment for the meal. At last we have the long handled forks, spoons and flat hamburger grills which make cooking over an open fire so much fun. There are also heatproof mitts, big aprons with large pockets and all sorts of comfortable overalls and aprons which turn the Victory gardener into the cook at a moment's notice. Manufacturers must have known that half of America would move into the garden for the summer months for they have given us the equipment to make it both pleasant and efficient.

However, long before we had portable iceboxes and thermos jugs there were very simple ways to keep things hot and cold. Picnics were just as appetizing in grandma's day as they are now, but grandmother exerted effort to make them so. A whole supper may be baked in an earthenware casserole. Taken from the oven and placed in a pail with a couple of hot bricks or a hot soapstone in the bottom, it will keep piping hot for four hours. Biscuits, corn cake or rolls incased in a dry napkin and placed on top of the covered casserole will be hot and moist as though they came from the oven when the top of the pail is removed. This takes a bit of planning but it is well worth it when dinner time arrives.

Lettuce may be taken from the cooler in the icebox, with the butter and bottled drinks. Take along a few clean turkish towels. When you arrive at the place where you plan the picnic soak the turkish towels in cold water, tie up the milk or bottled drinks in one and suspend the bundle from the limb of a tree in the shade. Place the lettuce in a linen napkin or towel and do the same with it. Within an hour, or by the time dinner is ready, the wind blowing through the wet towels will have chilled the lettuce and the butter and made the drinks cool. This is the way it was done when people liked cold things cold and hot things hot and there were no manufactured ways of accom-

Etiquette Changes in Wartime

By Emily Post.

It is obvious that all conventions in wartime have to be adapted to unusual conditions. The most distressing of these last is the question of whether or not a patriotic woman may go into mourning when the one most dear to her was a casualty of the war. An airmail letter at this moment says: "A young friend of mine has just received word that her husband was killed in action. She would like your advice on the propriety of black clothes. Ordinarily, she says, she would certainly go into mourning, but she doesn't know what the reaction is to mourning in wartime." In answering this, it is plain that for many reasons individual feelings must, insofar as is possible, be put aside. One of these feelings is the impulse to shut oneself away behind the protection of deepest mourning. But one reason against this is that any marked appearance of black in a community would be not only depressing to people in general, but hurtful to morale by adding unavoidably to the anxiety of all whose hearts are with the armed forces. Another reason is the practical one of conservation. New clothes in quantity are not likely to be long available. And therefore, although it is possible to dye most things black, this is not helpful to their durability. Moreover, they could never again be restored to color. One may of course wear a mourning band on one's sleeve, and there could be no crticism of one who goes into "absence of color"—meaning ordinary non-mourning black or white or gray.

* * * * When sending a notice of an engagement to the saciety editor of a newspaper, as much information as can be put into briefest space should be given. This in part answers the following letter explaining, "At a party to be given to announce an engagement, the bridegroom-to-be is a new M. D. and also newly commissioned lieutenant in the Army. What title should be given him when a notice of the party is sent to the newspapers? And also how should his double title appear on the wedding announce-

To the paper it is very simple to explain that the party is to announce the engagement of Miss Mary Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Smith of River street, to Dr. John Jones, who has lately received his commission as lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Army. On the marriage announcements his name reads John Jones on one line and helow it lieutenant, Medical Corps Army of the United States. On the other hand, when he is spoken to (i. e., when his uniform plainly shows his military rank), a junior officer is a ways called "doctor" and not lieutenant.

Helen M. Rennie Bride in Walter Reed Chapel

United in Marriage To Capt. Stubbs Last Evening

Col. Charles D. Drexler, chaplain, U. S. A., officiated at the ceremony Walter Reed Memorial Chapel last evening that united in marriage Miss Helen Margaret Rennie and Capt. Gordon Cornelius Stubbs,

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. George Watt Rennie of St. Louis, and Capt. Stubbs is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rushton Markle Stubbs of Watertown, N. Y.

Spring flowers and ferns were on the altar for the ceremony and the bride was escorted by Col. Georges Frederic Doriot and given by him in marriage. Her wedding dress of white satin was made with a long bodice and full skirt finished with a long train. Her veil was half length and held by a coronet of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white gardenias.

Miss Berniece Rennie was maid of honor for her sister and wore a gown of yellow chiffon with a heartshaped hat of the same material and carried a spray of spring flowers. The two bridesmaids, Miss Eleanor Rennie, another sister of the bride, and Miss Betty Becker, were costumed in pale blue and their bouquets also were of mixed spring Capt. Earl G. Frahm, U. S. Mr. Jefferson or Antrobus, You May Take a Choice

But Whichever You Choose Means Virtually Nothing as Critics' Prize Award Indicates

By Jay Carmody.

There are certain advantages in not being a New York drama critic. True, there also are certain disadvantages. You don't get the opportunity to review all the plays of a year, for instance, unless you come to New York to see those which opened in Boston or Philadelphia instead of in Washington. On the other hand, you do get a chance to associate with people who merely go to the theater instead of those who are of the theater. And, even more importantly, you are not required to commit yourself formally and officially on the subject of the best play of the year.

The latter is turning out to be an embarrassing necessity this year. The New York critics in solemn session a fortnight ago came to the conclusion-after 17 ballots-that "The Patriots" was the best play of the season. For the peace of mind of the 21 participants that should have settled it. "The Patriots" should have been accepted as the best play of the year. There should have been no further discussion of the subject, since, as Plotinus or some other early democrat said, losers should keep their mouths shut and bide their time.

It turned out to be quite the other way. A great many people did not accept "The Patriots" as the best play of the year. And they did go on discussing the subject. The net result of the discussion has been a municipality-wide disagreement on the whole point. That is how "The Patriots" got the prize, "The Skin of Our Teeth" the sympathy, leaving room for a large residue of doubt as to whether the prize or the pity is of the greater merit.

Perhaps There Is No "Best" Among Plays of a Season.

It was with the notion of resolving the doubt in his own mind that this correspondent came to New York to see the two plays. And so he came, he saw, and he was conquered by the conviction that the whole procedure is extremely silly and should be dropped with no further discussion than that necessary to complete this column. Choosing the best play of the season is an impossibility. It is like trying to decide which is superior, a sunrise or a sunset, bacon or butter, going to bed or getting up. It all depends upon factors completely alien to the subject immediately under consideration. The choices are not alternatives, clear-cut and sharply defined. For all the evidence to the contrary, they are not the same thing, or a choice between identical things.

This correspondent knows those things as a result of having seen the two plays in a single day, of having decided in the brief period of nine hours that "The Skin of Our Teeth" is the best play of any season he happens to remember.

How was the choice made? On the perfectly indefensible basis that it happened to fit a feeling that belonged to that day, which happens to have been last Wednesday.

The feeling was, as it so frequently has been, that what the theater needs is better anarchists, a few amiable bomb-tossing playwrights who have come to the conclusion that the whole procedure of drama writing, producing, acting and criticizing is stuffy. Thornton Wilder, who wrote "The Skin of Our Teeth." was the anarchist. Sidney Kingsley, who wrote "The Patriots," was not. Mr. Kingsley wrote about the Revolution, with Thomas Jefferson as his hero, and it was brilliantly executed from the prologue to Wilder is the revolutionist in that he wrote about a fellow named George Antrobus, a mere mammal, who could be written about only by discarding the accepted pattern of the drama involving the classic unities which you were taught in advanced English-and could not believe because advanced English was not so advanced as you were, or thought you were

The choice is that simple, that personal and that close to a mood which might last only as long as it takes to write a column about it. Within those limitations, it is perhaps illustrative of how futile it is to choose one play of a season as best, unless perhaps all the other plays are worthless by any standard. It is absurd. patently, because that is the way life goes, fiercely idealistic in one breath, enthusiastically disenchanted in the next.

The most marked difference between the two plays is in their central characters. Kingsley's hero, Jefferson, was an individual, a great man by the conventional definition of a great man. There was selfiessness about him, and nobility and an idealism which made him want to leave the world a better place than he found ita far better place in that he spoke for the ageless dream of man that he might be free so long as his freedom impinged not at all about the yearnings of other men to be similarly exempt from mass thinking and mass action.

Antrobus Is the Larger Man In Being All Men of All Time.

Wilder's hero, Antrobus, is a much larger man. He is all men of all time, from Genesis to 1943, and of all places, from the primeval ooze to Excelsior, N. J. Actually, he is no hero at all in today's meaning of the term. He merely wants to grow, to invent alphabets and multiplication tables, to eliminate the grounds for disputes and wars, to make men free by no political device but through knowledge of what they are and what the world is like.

Different men, the Messrs. Jefferson and Antrobus, and the latter is no less noble for being vague, confused and groping where Jefferson was sure, articulate and zealous. Both are wonderful characters, but Mr. Antrobus is much harder to write a play about. He exists in the imagination, Mr. Jefferson in scores of historical documents, including the greatest of modern times, the Declaration of Independence. The difference from the standpoint of easy, coherent writing is all in favor of Jefferson, which is why one spectator at the two plays would give his "best" decision to Mr. Wilder for having undertaken the more abstract hero and written around him an equally entertaining play.

It is merely a matter of personal opinion and mood, you see.

Fortunately, there istence to which we had access, and he was very helpful in digging up old songs he'd written-one he'd entirely forgotten until we got on the track of it-so that the going wasn't too difficult. And when we spent the first act making him a very offensive youngster, indeed, he chuctook to the idea immediately, the kled with delight. A lesser person might well have brought a law-Joe Cook was altogether different. We'd ask him for some factual material-say, the date of a certain production-and he'd immediately launch into a very funny incident associated with that date in no mind but his own. We'd ask him how he happened to go into Earl Carroll's "Vanities." and he'd remember how narrowly he got his trunks out of a gangster-ridden night club in Chicago. We'd ask him when he first arrived in New York and he'd remember a hilarious spaghetti party in Des Moines and then launch into an involved description of the particular spaghetti on that occasion. He remembered everything in terms of what nad been fun at the time, of what happened after the theater rather than in it, of what other people had done while he stood around like a stooge. Actually, of course, the shoe was on the other foot. but Joe had enjoyed everything so much he always sounded like an innocent bystander.

When we got through with our sessions with Joe Cook, we had approximately 1,437 gags, and about four minutes of story. So we rummaged his scrapbooks and finally hit upon the method of telling the At one time Pola earned half a facts, gleaned from his clippings, in terms of the fancies gleaned from conversations with Joe over some of the best food we have ever eaten. I think Leo Brady and myseif had more fun writing "Cook Book" than any other of the four or five shows we've done together, and on none of them did we ever get bored enough to take to writing articles for the Sunday papers Whenever we got to a point that smacked slightly of factual exposition, we'd just ask each other: "How would Joe Cook tell it if he was making it up?" and proceed to do it that way. In the end, the whole thing wouldn't have given "Who's Who" an awful lot of information it could sell to its customers, but we thought we'd captured the flavor of Joe, who is one of the most delightful persons you could hope to meet, and we were an Indian movie, but it's not India's. Here in India kisses are not allowed. It's considered indecent to show them on the screen. "Then how, if you please, do you

ulous correspondent as he is being shown through the biggest studio in "Ah," soberly replies the producer,

Mr. Baburao Pai, "we suggest kisses by poetical dialogue." 'And what about legs, those beautiful Indian legs we've heard so much about," I asked the energetic young Hindu in a European suit, who started his film career as an operator in a cinema. "How much cheesecake do you show?"

"We stop at the knee," says Mr. Baburao Pai firmly. "Nothing above the knee.'

"Actually, we're a very prudish nation, isn't it?" interposes a friend of the producer. As he continues talking, I mentally weighed the stories of some of the Manarajah's morals against the historically established fact that few Indian women ever remove all their clothes when they bathe. "Actually you can see more flesh for 10 cents at a Chicago burlesque than in all India."

No Will Hays' organization needed here, he assures you. The public is its own censor. "Would you believe it?" asked the friend of the producer. "One of the executives of an important studio was forced to resign only recently because he had an affair with one of the actresses."

Indian movies are more than twice as long as the average American film. They run two and three-quarter hours on the minimum and some used to go four hours till the government limited the length to 11,000 feet because of the wartime shortage of raw film. They are slow in movement, padded with interminable a motorcycle, but now I have only many who refuse to see foreign songs. But the Indian public insists on music-no matter what the theme of the picture. If a star cannot sing well, a good singer's voice is dubbed in.

The first movies made in India in 1913 concentrated on religious and the film public, which consists historical subjects. It was against naval policy, adopted to avert just such mass tragedies as finally ocurred.

George, the eldest and always the spokesman for the brothers Sullivan, countered: "We've fought together a lot. That way we can fight like hell. We don't know how well we'd do separately. The Navy Department reluctantly acceded. The Sullivans stayed to-gether, at training stations, on shipboard—and in death.

"Can't Keep the Train." Then there's Pop Sullivan, who. when the boys told him they were going, demanded a list of their debts.

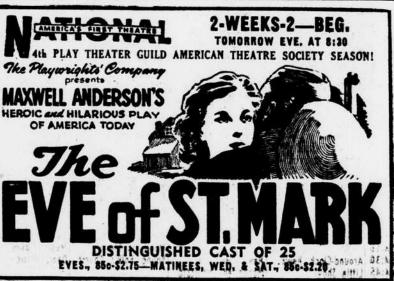

"I mean all of 'em," he ordered. He didn't want the boys to have any loose ends worrying them while they were away. Well, the total came to $190. Sullivan, a railroad brakeman, didn't have the cash handy, so he went to a bank and borrowed it, sending the boys or their way with clean slates

Then, of course, there's the story of how tragedy came into the peaceful middle-class lives of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan.

A Navy yeoman was compiling a ties. He saw the names of the five Sullivans listed as missing. Here was something out of the ordinary. You couldn't just send five curt telegrams to a family which had lost five sons. He consulted a superior, and finally a naval officer in Dubuque, Iowa, the same man who had enlisted the youths, was 28; Francis, 26; Joseph, 23, and detailed to carry the news to the Madison, 22, were all bachelors. Sullivans personally. Sullivans personally. He went immediately to Waterloo arriving at the Sullivan house at 5:30 a.m. Sullivan had just finished ers discussed their plans for en- breakfast and was about to start listment, and thought of his duty to work. The Navy man blurted

Men of Quantico Cheer Their Pals While the Public Listens And Sponsor Looks On

By J. W. Stepp.

The little car bounced and skit- | Virginia the little car bounces and tered over the endless hills of Northern Virginia. Past slit trenches experimentally excavated alongside Route No. 1, near Belvoir, across the Pohick and the Occoquan, through the neatly clipped glade that is member of the cast of "The Home the immediate approach to Quantico. It was at Quantico last week that the radio show called "Vox Pop" stopped in the course of its restless Nation-wide peregrinations in and out of military posts, there to provide something for the boys and for the listening public.

"Vox Pop." of course, was only one of countless entertainment programs, radio and otherwise, to be brought to the armed forces at home of Sadie leaving for the country, and abroad. From the standpoint Mamie confined to the hospital, of the heartily vocal pleasure in- Stoopnagle without an extra foil! variably accorded the visiting Bob Hopes, the Kay Kysers and the at which time Miss Owen's radio Martha Rayes, the advent of CBS's characters may once again return Johnson and Hull show at the Ma- to activity. And, judging by critical rine base was typical. And like-

So up we go into the huge and well-appointed auditorium that has been supplied for the recreation of Quantico's Marines. The place is packed. Men in the traditional dullolive uniform are lined expectantly across the foremost rows two-thirds of the way back. Officers with their families, and added smattering of civilians occupy the less-choice seats remaining. Half an hour before showtime the fun-the less-tense

Marines with their feminine acquaintances, and Marines with their pals are hied onto the stage. The masters of ceremonies twit. The participants blush and giggle as they go through the prescribed absurdities. Everything being in the best of good nature, the spectators roar their delight.

Then the engineer and the Jackof-all-assistance begin to show signs of nervousness. The broadcast hour is at hand. Marines are admonished into silence; the hand goes down. And the introduction and sacred commercial is read to the networks while a banner thoughtfully pinned to the backdrop sternly reminds all that if it wern't for a certain headache remedy this show wouldn't be there at all. By nature unhampered which exclamation point is in part by such pedestrian ailments as headaches, the warriors seem un-

This probably explains the quality of spontaneity which may be noted in military mentator, has been commissioned to camp shows on the air. As for Jack, he is only doing his duty.

The parade of interviews continues, as hundreds cheer. And inasmuch as there must be a climax to every show, no matter what its origin, Quantico throats grow lustiest when their particular hero. Capt. Joe Foss, takes the spotlight. Joe Foss, aviator, who has shot down more than a score of those sons of heavenses, looks embarrassed just as the next civilian in uniform would. He is as popular among Marines as he is among you, you and you. The house comes down. especially when his wife joins him before the microphone and discusses something like washboards.

At last, the assistance fellow waves his final signal for applause. The Marines rise and sing their anthem, a cappella and in a fashion reminiscent of Hollywood. The broadcast over, confusion reigns backstage as Vox Poppers move around thanking and acknowledging thanks, Marine stagehands drop the movie screen into place for the next show, the Movietone sound apparatus relentlessly descends threatening to crush all below, and the post mascot, a heavy-jowled bulldog, pants impatiently in the Over the endless hills of Northern

After witnessing the streamlined exploits of Sherlock Holmes, movie version, in the non-escapist world of today, it is refreshing to find that the ace detective and friend Watson are still battling the underworld of yesterday on the radio. The WOL-Mutual series (Fridays, 9:30 p.m.), in short, remains authentic Conan Doyle, Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce aiding the process in their inimitable fashion. All the while Hollywood goes ahead and plans a junket for the pair in Washington, 1943, a terribly mundane thing to do.

The "Town Meeting" of WMAL-Mutual opens on Thursday an eightweek series of broadcast forum dis cussions on post-war problems While most will originate from Town Hall in New York City, some will be heard from abroad, points as yet unspecified.

Wednesday marks the installation of another important sub-title in Sylvia Milrod's "Victory Starts a Home" (WINX, 12:15 p.m. daily) This one is "Plan Peace Now!" justified by Senator Joseph Ball of Minnesota the day the sub-serie is launched.

Bing Crosby of the WRC-NBC a, race thus is given added impetus

Having impressed publishers by writing the first book, on the Darda nelles campaign of World War I Sydney Moseley, WOL-Mutual comdo a treatise on the Turkish situation as it exists in World War II. * * * *

The annual "Pops" Concerts of the Boston Symphony will be aired throughout the summer months starting next Saturday (WMAL-Blue, 8:15 p.m.). Arthur Fiedle will inherit the baton from Dr Koussevitzky, also according to custom. Contrary to custom, however a musical quiz will be incorporated into the proceedings, Milton Cross doing double duty.

missed him every time he turned the pages of a score while playing because they knew then it was a sure sign that he was reading the work for the first time and had not practiced it in advance. In his nine years at the school Toscanini progressed so rapidly that he had time to read innumerable scores. In a short time, with his prodigious memory, "to read a score" was to "know it by heart." Musical works of all classifications -opera, arias, sonatas and quartets —were transcribed by Toscanini for a miniature orchestra, made up of himself and his classmates, which played secretly under his direction. The orchestra came to a sudden end when all the lads were punished because school rules forbade activities not in the regular curriculum.

Toscanini's quest for musical knowledge soon took him beyond the confines of the school library. which he had already mastered. But he was of poor parents and couldn't afford to buy the scores he desired. He found a partial solution to this problem by selling his allotments of meat, fruit and wine to some of his better-financed classmates for an entire year. It was in this manner that he was able to buy his first score-Beethoven's "Septet," one of the most charming works of the great master.

Family His Responsibility. From Toscanini's school days he disliked being looked upon as a 'virtuoso,'' "phenomenon" or a "star." Although he won high honors at graduation and had proved his outstanding musicianship, he did not dream of being a concert-the Brazilian conductor, Leopoldo Miguez, withdrew from the podium, blaming the bad performance on the disloyalty of the Italian artists in the company. Hence, when the Italian maestro, Superti, took over. the audience hissed and whistled in support of his predecessor. Toscanini reached his place in the pit late that night and welcomed the tumult because it covered up his tardiness. He reached his seat just as Venturi was about to mount the pocium.

Pandemonium still reigned and Venturi was forced to dismount. The company was faced with the situa-

How to guard your Energy during food rationing

From all information we have been able to gather, America will probably eat more starchy, fattening foods this year than ever before. That's why, now, more than ever, you must guard your weight to avoid putting on pounds of ugly fat. And here's probably the easiest way to do this you ever read about. Simply mix 3/2 glass* of Welch's Grape Juice with 3/2 glass* of water. Drink before meals and at bedtime, and this remarkable action follows First, you have less desire to eat starchy, fattening foods. Thus, you cut caloric intake without having to suffer a hungry moment. Second, the natural dextrose in Welch's is quickly consumed. This regime not only aids nature in consuming excess fat, but increases energy at the same time. You lose fat naturally; look and feel better. Don't take chances on gaining weight during food rationing. Get genuine Welch's Grape Juice today, and follow this verified way to lose weight. The Welch Grape Juice Company, Westfield, *8 oz. glass.

How To Save Ration Points

Welch's Grape Juice is richer in energy value than the 4 leading fruit juices. It is so rich, it can be diluted with 1/3 water and still taste delicious. When served this way, it takes less ration points than any of 4 leading fruit or vegetable juices. Serve Welch's reg-

A Fabulous Contract for Fabulous Talent

Yet Hollywood Still Views Don Loper With a Fishy Eye, Which His Personal Traits Doubtless Justify By Kate Holliday.

HOLLYWOOD. A man you probably never heard of has just signed a fabulous movie contract. It allows him to function as production supervisor, choreographer, director, designer, actor, dancer and stylist. That's quite a

He is Don Loper. And don't feel badly about not recognizing the name. Even Hollywood, with the exception of a few cagy individuals, does not know him.

Loper is a theatrical jack-of-alltrades. He is enormously talented. He is also slightly nuts.

He once spent an entire afternoon buying $2,000 worth of furniture for an apartment he never had seen. He recently bought an automobile without discovering whether it would run. He was stranded two minutes after he drove out of the dealer's shop and has spent more dough on taxi fares to and from said car than the car cost Loper has had six or eight careers. At 37 he has finally combined them into one.

His talents as a designer were evidenced at the age of 7, when he arranged a "one-color window" in his father's department store in Toledo, Ohio. After that he studied in Paris, did the clothes of every female dancer he ever worked with, had a shop in New York which charged fantastic prices and made money, was offered the designing job at MGM when Adrian decided to leave and has decorated some of the most beautiful apartments in the

Manifestations Of Affection Have Changed

Censors May Relax Now That Film Love Has Grown Tepid

HOLLYWOOD. What's become of the 20-second ciss? Where are those dynamic love cenes that once singed the cellu-No one has come up with a plausible answer, but it is apparent hat those old-fashioned "huggin' and "kissin" situations seem to have folded their tents and stelen silently away. It's a new kind of love you see on the silver screen these days.

Take the case of Lana Turner in "Slightly Dangerous." She and Bob Young have plenty of love scenes in that film, but it's a bewhiskered old fellow named Walter Brennan who gets all the kisses. And it was Brennan's first film bussing in 18 years! Then there's the strange affair between John Craven and Donna Reed in "The Human Comedy." Audiences never see them so much as hold hands, but they're sweetheats. Craven falls in love with a snapshot and talks himself into a romance, which the audience feels will work out.

Instead of a romantic garden or satin-pillowed boudoir or even the time-honored tiger rug, the great romantic moment for Gary Cooper and Ingrid Bergman in "For Whom the Bell Tolls" is played in a filthy, bullet-riddled sleeping bag.

Although Claudette Colbert is busy with her heroic duties as nurse on Bataan in "So Proudly We Hail." she does find time to fall in love. In hoop skirts and crinoline manner George Reeves, the conventional hero, is her big moment, but they fall in love when Nurse Colbert gives him—a bath!

And this brings us to the stories of wild temperament credited to Miss Negri in the days of her Hollywood fame and the fashions and fac's she started-among them, dead-white make-up, the practice of parading with a lion cub or tiger on a leash, a dressing room decowith zebra skins. public loved its stars to fight. Now was difficult to handle, because that was expected of me. If I had done nothing sensational for a few days my press agent would say: 'What's the matter with you?' And we would invent something new. Now it is different. Life is too short to waste time on temperament. We must now deliver the goods." Miss Negri says she likes the Hollywood of today better than yesterday-"except the weather; something has happened to the beautiful weather. I've been back here four weeks and it has rained most of the time!"

Back to Earliest Days. Miss Negri was first signed to a Hollywood contract by Paramount actress. in 1922. It was after she had appeared in "Passion" with Emil Jan-nings and directed by Ernst Lubitsch and has written five letters to her in Germany. Until the talkies arrived in 1929 and 1930, Miss Negri reigned as the top glamour girl of Hollywood. She almost married Charlie Chaplin. "He wanted me to be his wife and to join him at United Artists. But in ome war occupation, as refer-I refused both. It would have made family!" Instead Miss Negri married Prince Sergei Mdvani. "I retired from pictures at the height of my career," Miss Negri told me. "It's the most foolish thing any one can do. My marriage certainly wasn't worth it. If I marry again I shall keep on working. To work and to be married is the most wonderful thing in the world."

Final picture for Miss Negri before leaving for Europe in 1932 was "The Woman Commands." Across the Atlantic she made pictures in France and Germany. She left France in June, 1941, on a Polish passport, but is now taking out her first American citizenship papers. "From now on." she said. "this is my country. When the war is over I will go back only to bring my mother and family to California." Pola still is partial to the white make-up she introduced in her heyday. And she still wears her black felt sports hats low on her brow. Also, she still is working on her autobiography. "I cannot publish the book for many years," she said. "It is too frank. It will be as thick as 'Gone With the Wind' and just as interesting. I mention names and I tell everything!

Tears Are Many In Miss Dunne's Film Existence

Actress Reflects On the Problems Of Being Weepy By Ted Gill.

HOLLYWOOD. Fair-haired Irene Dunne, who has wept her way successfully through most of her 32 pictures, is looking for something new to cry about! Whereas most people never lack for something over which to shed an occasional tear, this slender, Louisville-born actress says she has about exhausted all her cry-producing resources. "You see," she explains with a smile, "whenever I have to weep for the cameras, I prefer to cry real tears—providing I have time to recover my emotions before I have to make the next 'take'.

"But if I have to do another and greatly different scene immediately afterward, it frequently is easier on my emotions just to put glycerine or some other tear substitute in my eyes.

"However, when I do cry real tears, I usually sit for a few minutes and think of something that has happened to me, something sad that might have happened, or something sad that possibly may happen—then the tears flow freely.

"It's funny, but I have played in so many weepy scenes, I find that one sad thing will produce tears for awhile. But pretty soon it wears out and won't work any more-then I have to find something new to cry

"Perhaps my one real standby is myself. If I get to feeling real sorry for myself, think that everything's all wrong and the whole world's against me, it's not long before the tears start. But finding new things to cry over is a problem!" Oddly enough, Miss Dunne originally was screen-tested as a possible singing star, but has warbled little on the screen. And she much prefers light comedies to drama, but has played in only a few.

Moisture in the Future. Making her first real screen hit in tear-jerking "Cimarron," Miss Dunne tops her long succession of weepy roles with another in "A Guy now being made on the WAAC for Named Joe," a war picture in which both she and Spencer Tracy get in uniform, 50 of them real WAACS killed. And after that, she goes into more pictures. All calling for more tears.

Considering everything, she says she really has got a lot to cry about! Short short—Gracie Allen thinks those guerrillas who are knocking certainly the "Dnieper's creepers."

Most extravagant is Billy Wilder's "Champagne for Everybody!" But the trouble is, co-workers say, the inary!

Building Around a Song. Silly sally—Buy a hit song title and make a movie around it! That's Monogram's philosophy. And it apparently works, judging from box office receipts. "Three Little Sisters" is Jane Withers' new picture. "Sleepy Lagoon" is being prepped for Judy Canova. While "Brazil" will be a lavish musical. "Thumbs Up" was based on the tune "Sleepy Time Gal" and "Johnny Doughboy" also drew upon song titles. Now they're also making "Rosie the Riveter." Chitter chatter-Charles Coburn,

The international censors evidently object to letting an anxious father in an enemy land know that his daughter has become a movie Rita Corday found this out. She has been in pictures for six months,

Swiss father, now attached to the neutral nation's consulate in Japheld Shanghai. That her news has been censored out of her letters became evident from his latest reply: "You must be making your living ences to it are censored out. Sug-

Rita isn't giving up, but she's going to change her method. Her next letter will contain a certain newspaper picture of herself with a caption praising her work in "The Fallen Sparrow."

Hue of Her Hair Is So Unstable

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD. Waiting for her baby, Lana Turner has darkened her hair. She's wanted to do this several times for the screen, but the studio said she was more glamorous as a blond. The moguls did compromise and let her wear a dark wig in the beginning of "Slightly Dangerous."

She figures now that she'll be going straw-colored again about August, worse luck.

Corcoran Biennial Plans Traveling Exhibition Tour

By Florence S. Berryman.

The final opportunity to view the 18th Biennial Exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, is this afternoon. It is regrettable that this interesting display cannot be sent intact to other cities. However, the American Federation of Arts has selected approximately one in five of the paintings on view, to be arranged in two traveling exhibitions, which will visit many parts of the country during the coming year. Judging from requests for these shows, other cities are eager to see even a portion of what Washington has enjoyed for six weeks The circuits for traveling shows will begin shortly in Scranton, Pa., and Manchester, N. H., respectively.

The first exhibition comprises 35 canvases, most of them landscapes; there are also a few still-life paintings. The selection for both shows, made by Thomas C. Parker, director of the federation, ranges from a few works of almost photographic naturalism, to several near-abstractions. Consequently, each exhibition is representative in character, of the biennial as a whole, and has something to appeal to many tastes.

Outstanding landscapes include Ivan Le Lorraine Albright's handsome "Shore Sentinels," a lakeshore in an evergreen forest, viewed from a height, with a marked feeling for distance; Luella Buros' "North Dakota in April," with a stormy sky of such interest as to balance the mont entitled "Goldenrod and This- | would seem particularly timely. tles," and "Early Delivery," by Simka

ing through the dusk, in which field. street lights bloom like fireflies; "Tercentenary," by Molly Luce, showing a celebration in a New costumed as Indians and Pilgrims, making love among the tombstones: Kenneth Shopen's joyous "Sailors' Holiday," and Harold Sterner's meticulously painted "Winter Boardwalk." in which three incidental figures accentuate the melancholy atmosphere of such deserted places in off seasons.

"Still Life in White," by Richard objects rendered with photographic manship is obligatory. exactitude and nice differentiation ph Vavak's colorful r-inting of "Lucile's Basket," a wellcouipped sewing kit which the owner has been using to put fresh lingerie on a red dress, and Anatol Shulkin's v'vid "Marigolds." are three works in this genre most likely to appeal to the public. Other still-life paintings by Louis Donato, "Grapes and Carrots": Frank London's "White Roses," and Nicola Ziroli's "Miscellany" will please those of so-called progressive inclinations.

'April in Washington.'

Although April is past, the exhibition inspired by the month, which opened at the David Porter Gallery in Georgetown on April 18, remains on view another week. This is the second offering of the new gallery which made its debut only five weeks ago. The initial display was by mid-Western artists; the present show is of local origin.

About 40 works, paintings in oil, tempera and watercolor, and a few pieces of sculpture represent 23 artists. Many types of painting are represented. Those which seem to the writer to carry out the exhibition theme most joyously are Sybil Bonbright's "Spring, Georgetown," with forsythia, a budding tree, a garden wall and a glimpse of an ancient house; Sarah Baker's gay "Carousal," Marjorie Phillips' "Li-lacs" against a brick wall, "Spring Tide," by Alida Conover, and Robert Gates' strong capture of a man fishing.

Both of John Gernand's canvases "Early Morning" and "Painted in April" have the feeling of spring, as have also Nan Watson's two flower studies, "April" and "Pansies." Mary Watkins' cool gray and violet transcription of a restaurant under a striped awning, will cheer

Drawings by Famous Artist

At Whyte Gallery. George Grosz, one of Germany's most noted caricaturists after World War I, is the second artist to be given a one-man show at the Whyte Gallery by Mr. Crosby. It opened yesterday and remains throughout this week. This is Mr. Grosz's initial appearance in a solo display here, although his work has appeared in group exhibitions, including the current Corcoran Biennial. Mr. Grosz won his reputatoin for savage caricatures and cartoons on social evils in Germany in the 20's and early 30's. From the outset, he recognized the true nature of purchasing, to begin with, English Fitler and the Nazi party, and at- etchings, which he kept in boxes in tooled them fearlessly, with the result that he was regarded as an outstanding "enemy" of Hitler's re-

He must have been a strange child, very serious, addicted to dreams and visions, but gentle and kind and, despite lack of worldly possessions, contented and happy As occasion offered he saw and studied the drawings of the great artists of the past but he scarcely traveled at all, and practically all his life was spent in London. Needless to say, he was a romanticist and outside a small circle of younger artists who were drawn to him-and adored him-he had little influence upon the art of periods later than his own. Perhaps none other has so persistently had, as did he, his feet on the earth and his head in the clouds, at one and the Value of Blake's Work.

According to present day standards, Blake lived in poverty, and there is a certain irony in the fact that since his death his works have not only increased in appreciation but in monetary value. The complete set of 21 engravings that he did to illustrate the Book of Job was originally published at 3 guineas-about $15-and now brings a king's ransom. For his "Marriage of Heaven and Hell" a collector in 1939 paid at auction $9,000.

But to Blake this would have made little difference; he loved his work; he was a poet as well as an artist; unworldly. In 1782 he made a most happy marriage, his bride, according to Swinbourne, becoming "the most perfect wife on record." Not only was she congenial and sympathetic but capable of assisting him in his work. His death occurred in August,

Not only are there prints by Blake on view at the National Gallery, but water colors and some of his books and plates. The latter are of particular interest to printmakers, inasmuch as they are in a method which he almost exclusively employed. He called it "to wood-cut on coppers," and that is literally what he did, the lines for printing standing up above the surface of the copper plate rather than being cut into it. He also did wood engraving, but rarely, so that when a set of books by him-17, illustrating Thornton's "Pastorals of Virgil"was found a couple or more years ago it was straightway acquired by the Art Collections Fund of Great Britain at a cost of $2,520.

Rosenwald's Collection.

It was in 1920 that Lessing J. Rosenwald began collecting prints, gime, and left Germany in 1932, coming to this country about a decade ago. He has been an American citizen for several years. The current exhibition includes a series of illustrations for "Grimm's Fairy Tales" and recent cartoons on war and social subjects.

Several mural designs which were selected in the national anonymous competition for the decoration of the new Recorder of Deeds Building, have been placed on exhibi-tion at Howard University Gallery of Art. A reproduction of one of these, and a story about the project, appeared in The Star for April 7. The textiles on view, comprise experiments done during the past

National Symphony Announces Plans For New Season

Although at the last report $25,000 still must be raised before the National Symphony Orchestra has the full $115,000 needed to carry it through 1943-4, its management is going ahead with plans for next season and announces dates and soloists for its 13th season of concerts in Constitution Hall.

According to the announcement the following series of concerts will be presented next season: A Wednesday evening all-subscription series of eight concerts; a Sunday afternoon series of 10 concerts, and a series of five "15-30" concerts for young people between 15 and 30. In addition the National Symphony will give three joint performances with the Ballet Theater in Novem-

Artists' Competition Is Announced

To give practical encouragement to some gifted young musician and further his or her career as soloist, Robin Hood Dell Concerts, Inc., Philadelphia, announces a national young American artists' competition -open to vocalists, pianists, violinists and cellists between 18 and 30 who are citizens, either native-born or naturalized, and who have previously been unheard as soloist with a major orchestra.

The winner will be scheduled for an appearance in this summer's Robin Hood Dell "young American artists" series and given an honorarium of $250-such appearance to represent a professional debut with a symphonic organization of national distinction—the Robin Hood Dell Symphony consisting of 90 regular members of the famed Philadelphia Orchestra with conductors of established repute.

Application forms for auditions may be obtained by addressing the Young American Artists' Competition Committee, Room 806 Bankers Securities Building, Juniper and Walnut streets Philadelphia, and when filled out must be sent in no later than May 25. Auditions will be held in Philadelphia at a place to be designated early in June. It is desirable that applicants be prepared to submit letters of recommendation as to their training and qualifications, accomplishments and eadiness for a professional career ial, sent out by the American from musicians or other persons of Port Myer. The Ruling and the Ruled

All Men Are in One or the Other Class, Say the Machiavellian Philosophers

The Machiavellians

By James Burnham. (John Day.)

This book, by the author of "The Managerial Revolution," moved the reviewer to some consideration of the matter of common sense. From the general state of the world today, she, like many other people, had about concluded that common sense is ill-named. The thing that is meant by the term is not currently common; on the contrary, it is one of the rarest commodities in evidence in the scene where the decisive issues of human destiny are being played out. Yet the conclusion that the name is the wrong one is a mistake, an error which arises from asumming that the term "common sense" means a kind of sound intelligence which is commonly met with. It obviously does not mean that. It means the kind of sound intelligence which the ordinary human being uses in relation to common things.

By Mary-Carter Roberts.

Its commonness derives from the matters to which it is applied, not from the universality with which it is encountered. It is common sense, in short, which directs you in backing you car out of your garage, in planning your expenses so that they correspond to your income, in darning your hose, in crossing the street in traffic, in doing your job-in carrying out, that is to say, the manifold common procedures which are necessary to your life, whatever it is. Viewing it in that manner, one cannot complain against the language for inaccuracy in defining the commodity. The complaint, instead, must be directed against those who work in such uncommon fields that they feel no necessity to use therein the sound sort of reasoning which they would apply to any simple operation.

Prominent among these today are the men and women who are engaged in world planning. It is safe to say that most of them are quite common-sensible in the plain procedures of their lives. We do not, at any rate, hear of them salting their breakfast eggs with arsenic or planting the onion sets upside down or driving their automobiles into solid walls of masonry, or committing other acts, as ordinary citizens, which indicate that they have not learned to use common sense as have the rest of us. But as extraordinary citizens, as those who have taken over the future of mankind for their peculiar province, they proceed in an entirely different manner. They break with the whole tradition of human

They plan a world in which people are going to be different from anything which people have ever been before. They do not say just this, to be sure. They say that they are planning a better world in which people can be happier. But the world, in the sense of society, is the people. And if the people are not going to be different, then the world will remain the same. It is in overlooking, or ignoring, this fact that the planners seem most flagrantly to have taken leave of the kind of sense which we call common. They see us all on the other side of the creek, but they do not say how we are to get there.

Planners of Future Believe Human Nature Will Change

More explicitly, they assume that, with the signing of a peace at the end of the present war, an era will begin which will have no relation to the past-except, perhaps, that of obhorrence. From the dawn of history, men have coveted power and wealth, and have fought to get them. That is the story of the race. But, our planners tell us, beginning next year or. anyway, very soon, men are going to be different. They will have no greed for power and wealth, and consequently they will view war with detestation. This is the basis on which they form their various charts and blueprints of James Burnham has written this present book chiefly to point out the hiatus in their thinking. Whatever the future of mankind is going to be, he says, it will still be the future of mankind, and not that of the angels. The lessons which we have to learn lie, he thinks, in realities of the past, and not in imaginations of the day to come. And so, for the edification of such as will have the patience to hear common sense applied to this uncommon subject, he reviews what has been written by realists about the political conduct of mankind over several centuries. As he says himself, he does not expect his presentation to change anything. It is "ludicrous," in his opinion, to expect that a work as sober and unflattering as his own would ever reach "the people." It is the words of politicians which do that, he observes. And his whole finding resolves itself into a warning to take derstood his desire. Great sacrifices politicians' utterances with-at least-common-sense care.

As if to emphasize the unpopular character of his book, he has taken its title from the name of a man generally held in disrepute. Messer Niccolo di Bernardo dei Machiavelli. Machiavelli said plainly in his day that only one motive makes men want to hold positions in public Orientalist learning. In Berlin, he life, and that motive is the desire for power and its perquisites. For his married. With so much, the perelucidation of this statement which he himself holds to be entirely true, sonal side of his history is disposed Prof. Burnham dubs him a "defender of freedom." For it is only by of. The rest of the book relates to understanding the true nature of politics-and hence of politicians-that his work, but is, nonetheless, one of men are warned of the real dangers which beset their liberties, the most fascinating biographies to Machiavelli and the few-the very few-political philosophers who have appear in a long time. held to his line are, in Prof. Burnham's view, the people's dependable

Concluding Chapter Applies Machiavellian Science to Present

In separate sections of his book he gives consideration to Gaetano Mosca, Georges Sorel, Robert Michels and Vilfredo Pareto, all of whom, writing within the last 60 years, repeat and affirm what Machiavelli said in the 16th century. Society, they reiterate, is composed of two classes, the ruling and the ruled. The device of representative government does not assure the people that their will will prevail, for the people, as such, have no will. Representative government does not even make certain that the will of the majority will prevail, for the representative, once he is in power, needs only to win the favor of a small determining group; the great body of the people, of all parties, will follow habit or will believe the promises of politicians, which practically never bear any resemblance to the realities at stake. There is, in fact, in the mind of the politician, or, if you please, the member of the ruling class, only one reality at stake, and that is to remain in office. These lamentable truths are the burden of the Machiavellian philosopher's writings.

In a final chapter in which he attempts to apply the Machiavellian science to the present, Prof. Burnham draws heavily on Michel's opinion that democracies end always in "Bonapartism," or the rule of one man who claims to represent the popular will as if by incarnation. Michel took the term from the careers of both the Napoleons, but particularly from Napoleon III. Both, as pointed out, came into their absolute power by exercise of the franchise. Both declared that, in adopting rule by decree, they were carrying out the common will. Both destroyed a re-Today, says Prof. Burnham, we see a world-wide tendency in that direction; Stalin orders the Russian people to accept a construction; Hitler is elected by popular vote; representative bodies in supposedly democratic countries are abdicating their powers in favor of men who claim to be uniquely and irreplaceably the voice of the people. We seem to be coming into a world-wide era of Bonapartism, in his view.

The way of freedom, as he sees it, lies precisely in the opposite direction. Freedom, insofar as it can be attained, is kept alive by opposition. The danger coming from an active minority, or many minorities, will force the party in power to serve the people's interest, just as competition in business results to the public good. The program of the authoritarian state is always to gather all phases of national life under the Government's control-industry, business, agriculture, education, the arts, the church. Government control or ownership, in short, means the end of the opportunity to oppose, which is also the end of such freedom as society is capable of. This tendency is working today all over the world, Prof. Burnham notes. He ends his book by repeating, once again, that it would be well for the people to remember that politicians seldom say what they mean, just as the old hard case, Machiavelli, noted 400 years ago.

Citizen Tom Paine

By Howard Fast. (Duell, Sloan & Pearce.)

This is a novel on the life of Tom Paine. The chief reaction that the reviewer had to it was to reflect that historical fiction is seldom written with the end in view of presenting the period under examination, but has for its aim, rather, to please the point of view of the day of the author. For in this book we find the American Revolution set down strictly in terms of the prejudices, whims and popular attitudes of the 20th century. That does not mean that Paine and his fellow revolutionaries are portrayed as modern men. It means that they are portrayed as modern men like to think of them.

We have passed the late debunking era and come into one in which rough humanity holds the place of estimation. So Mr. Fast gives us a great deal about Tom Paine's drunkenness, obscenity of tongue and uncleanliness of person. Not that Mr. Fast does not present him as a revolutionary hero-he glorifies him in a hard-working manner. His implication is that such of the Founding Fathers as had clean linen were (probably because they did have it) lightweights. It was Tom Paine, practically, single-handed, one gathers, who made the Revolution while the others (Washington is described as dull) admiringly looked on and asked his opinion on what to do next. It is all right if you keep in mind the fect that it is written for the present-day trade requirements. The reviewer has read several biographies of the great pamphleteer and has to admit that she found little in Mr. Fast's book to make her realize that she was reading about the same person.

A Time to Act

also included in the volume.

By Archibald MacLeish. (Houghton Mifflin.)

This is a collection of addresses which Archibald MacLeish has delivered in recent months. None of the speeches is long, and they cover a variety of subjects. It is obviously impossible to cover a work so divided in an ordinary book review. The most the reviewer can do is to mention certain recurring themes which reappear throughout the addresses, no matter what their particular theme.

First of these is Mr. MacLeish's preoccupation with the war. When he addressed gatherings of newspapermen, he warned them urgently of the press' patriotic duty. When he spoke before college graduating classes, he denounced the spirit of defeatism which, he feels, characterized the literature of his own generation. When he had librarians or writers for his audience, he reminded them of the power which books have to influence events. And when he made a speech before the National Retail Dry Goods Association, he assured his hearers warmly that there are no beaureaucrats in Washington. The ardent quality of Mr. Mac-Leich's patriotism is apparent in all these speeches.

After this, the next most conspicuous feature of the collection is Mr. MacLeish's idealism. He burns for the common man. He hates Fascism. He sees the future good of the world in democracy. He does not merely conceive of the United States as at war for its life. In his view, it is at war for all that is good in the world.

This is the biography of the late James Henry Breasted, America's great Egyptologist. If ever a life history deserved the so-commonly used name "adventure," it is this. It is the story of one of those pure intellectual passions which, in their intensity, reach the heights of genius. Egypt of the late 19th and early 20th century, when archeology had developed little as a science and the great discoveries were still to be made, and the ancient world which. to Dr. Breasted, had obviously more reality than the one in which he actually lived. It is hard to visualize today the disorder and lack of stabilized method which attended the work of the early excavators, when political violence, casual looting and terrible hygienic conditions made archeology in Egypt a dangerous occupation, and lack of knowledge added the quality of a gamble to the other hazards. To read the record of the doctor's adventures in the wild physical and the unexplored historical is to realize that the title of the book is, if

Young Lady Randolph

By Rene Kraus. (Putnam's.)

This book, ostensibly a biography of Winston Churchill's mother, tells little about its subject, but it does three other things for which it may well be commended. It gives us pictures of some of the most colorful periods of the past 80 years, it provides most entertaining reading and serves to remind us, of course, that England's Churchill had an American parent. One suspects, indeed, that if it were not for the lastnamed circumstance, the book would not have been written. But that does not prevent it from being a fascinating document.

Lady Randolph Churchill, born Jeanette Jerome, lived her life out against vivid backgrounds. As a child, her wealthy parents moved in the society of post-Civil War New York and Newport. In her youth, her mother took her to Paris, where she was in the very heart of the court of Napoleon III. When she married Lord Randolph Churchill, she moved into English society in the great late Victorian era. Rene Kraus, getting together the facts of her career, finds more to write about in people and showed it by providing these historic scenes than he does in herself. But he puts it all down with the most picturesque color and charm imaginable, even though, at times, he makes a slip or two in his grammar.

The most he tells about Lady Randolph is that she was a model of devoted wife. Her husband was eccentric and frail of health; much of his life he lived in knowledge that he would have an early death. He threw himself into English politics with an abandon which was startling to his associates. Lady Randolph's tact, support and charm saved him, says Mr. Kraus, from many disagreeable consequences of unconventional behavior

Pictures of the young Jennie as the confidante of Empress Eugenie and the adored of the Prince Imperial; descriptions of fabulous banquets handsome dividends, but because it at Delmonico's, of hunting parties in England and Ireland; the Prince of Wales seeking the lovely Lady Randolph for his partner in the waltz: the old Queen bestowing a decoration on Lord Randolph's wife when society was expecting the award to go to him-of such lush material as of Egyptology at the University of this is the book made. There is not a vestige of irony in Mr. Kraus' Chicago on his completion of his approach to society and its pretensions; it is all plain, straight writing, doctorate and scholars everywhere as if done for the movies-or children. Lady Randolph was a fairy princess who had many adventures. The public should love it-this reviewer did.

Masterson

By Lee Wichelns. (Appleton-Century.)

In his first novel, Mr. Wichelns goes beyond the usual adventure tale to show the effect of the sea on the character of a boy raised in the to "barnstorm" on a lecture tour to slums. Although the story contains all the attributes of a saga of fearless finance himself. His friends were freebooters whose schooners slip mysteriously across the Caribbean-the the enlightened and illustrious in tender love interest, the fearless hero, the swift accomplishmnt of most of the civilized countries. But dangerous missions-it is also a compelling psychological study.

Mr. Wichelns tells the story of Masterson, raised in the slums, jilted by the girl he loves, a woman-hater who falls in love with a little which inspired him. His story, schooner. As its captain, he dreams of the day when he will have amassed however, has a triumphant quality. sufficient fortune to free himself and his ship from the unsavory deals that contribute to his fortune.

When, on his last jaunt, Masterson meets Jean Bart, a fragile English nurse, he transfers to her all the adoration expended on his schooner. Because of her, he allows his ship, his plans and even his life to be wrecked. The most effective passages of the book are the conversations between Masterson and the girl on the subject of death. Masterson tries to show her the ocean as he has known it, touching on the permanence, the rugged strength and courage of life patterned by the ways of the sea. The dominance of the sea through all the action of the book is pointed up by the table of contents, where the various phases in the life of Masterson are likened to "The Tide," "The River," "The Shoals," "The Reef," "The Rock," "The Storm" and "The Wave." The book will be liked best by those who love the sea. MIRIAM OTTENBERG.

Airing in a Closed Carriage

By Joseph Shearing. (Harper.)

This is another of Mr. Shearing's fictional analyses of a crime. It tells the story of the trial of a woman suspected of poisoning her husband and, by the light of the modern concepts, shows that 19th century justice was amazingly subject to distortion. If you like the gloomy and morbid, the work ought to appeal to you.

May Beale, a young American of gentle breeding, marries a middleclass Englishman of almost twice her years. The atmosphere of Manchester mercantile society is repellent to her. She lives a lonely life for eight years. Then her husband dies under circumstances which pose—as indicate her guilt. She is tried, found guilty and sentenced to long imprisonment. That is the story which Mr. Shearing painstakingly tells. His motive, obviously, is to point to the absurdities of 19th century administration of justice. Studied in the light of the present day the trial is far from convincing, and the factors which were deemed Ambush House, by Kurt Steel deciding ones by the trial jury were those which we would hold irrelevant. Chicken Every Sunday

By Rosemary Taylor. (Whittlesey House.)

Every once in a while, a book is published that is fun to read. Such a book is "Chicken Every Sunday." the story of a Tucson woman who loved to board people. Perhaps, it would be truer to say that it is the story of a woman who loved them with superlative board and some of her own zest for living. Mrs. Drachman started her career as a boarding-house keeper because she needed a steady income to tide her over the times when her mercurial husband's finances were more than ordinarily muddled. She kept it up not only because the income was welcome, even though her husband's muddling started to pay gave her an outlet for her homemaking and business talents. Mingled with incidents about mining ventures in old Mexico, superstitious young matrons, moneymaking dinners for charitable organizations, and a host of other affairs, is a sketchy but informative story of the growth of Tucson from a wide place in the road to a tourist paradise. It pictures an interesting side of the growth of the South-R. R. TAYNTON.

Army Brat

By Tommy Wadelton. (Coward-McCann.)

Tommy Wadelton is the boy who by writing a very funny book entitled "My Mother Is a Violent Woman." This was followed by a omewhat less funny book called "My Father Is a Quiet Man." And now Tommy has written still another book, and it is hardly funny at all.

But that, of course, is because Tommy has grown older. He has learned to write better, for one thing, and to take life more seriously for another. It is very hard to be funny and write well at the same time, and to be funny at Tommy's present age-16-to be funny on purpose, that is-is a practical impossibility.

This is not to say, however, that Tommy's new book isn't as good as the two earlier ones. As a matter of fact, it is better in some ways. It tells an interesting story in an interesting manner, and it shows that Tommy is making definite progress as an author, and that he probably will be very funny again-on pursoon as he gets over being 16.

"Army Brat" is the story of Jim Tucker, an American Army flyer in China, and how he grew. And, in spite of Tommy's new seriousness toward life, it has its funny moments -and even if it didn't have, it would still be well worth reading. PHILIP H. LOVE.

The Battle of Wake Island

Last Man Off Wake Island

By Lt. Col. Walter L. J. Bayler. (Bobbs-Merrill.) Col. Bayler of the Marine Corps has written a gripping narrative of Americans in their last stand at Wake Island. He throws new light on news dispatches written at the time, telling how a small ground force, using 5-inch shore guns, destroyed Japanese warships and how four United States planes fought against superior odds until the defenders no longer had air protection. Wake Island constitutes one of the great sagas of American courage in the Pacific.

The Japs, in their first air raid, destroyed seven of the eleven planes; available to the defending force, although the craft had been dispersed in the hope of preventing such a calamity. The remaining four, however, performed amazing service in combat and reconnaissance. One of the pilots was Capt. Frank Tharin, native of this city. He and another officer were credited with being "the first naval flyers of the war to sink a big Japanese warship. They sank her piecemeal with small bombs from land-based fighters."

Another Washingtonian, Maj. James Patrick Sinnot Devereux of the marines, was executive officer on Wake Island. Of him, Col. Bayler writes: It did not take any of the new arrivals long to discover that Devereux is an exceptionally able and efficient officer in peace or war. Now his address is 'somewhere in Japan,' for the International Red Cross has finally been able to report him a prisoner of war-Jimmy Devereux and the gallant fellows who fought to the finish on Wake Island." Col. Baylor, whose mission was to set up radio communication installations, was not at Wake Island when the Japs overpowered it. He had been ordered out, on the last plane leaving before the surrender, to report to Midway. From Midway he went to Guadalcanal. His references to the Solomons campaign are not as complete as earlier tomes on the same subject, since he was not in the original landing force. Col. Bayler's style is pleasing. He gives an intimate picture of life on the three islands—life during peaceful interludes and horrors of war. If you want a close-up picture of the men who have added glory to American arms, this book is an interesting contribution to the war's literature. In view of Japanese admission that they executed some of our American airmen held prisoners of war after the bombing of Japanese military objectives, a revelation made after this book was written, Col. Bayler's concluding words sum up America's reaction: "We must liberate them if they are living. We must avenge them if ROBERT C. HARPER.

Is Germany Incurable?

By Dr. Richard M. Brickner. (Lippincott.) Those who have thought all along that Adolf Hitler is a raving maniac will be even more certain of it after reading Dr. Brickner's penetrating diagnosis of the German national mind. But more startling is his assertion that the Reich is suffering from mass madness, a statement. supported from the psychiatrist's point of view, at least, by a damaging skein of evidence skillfully woven by the author. Dr. Brickner is emphatic about this-that Germany's present, lamentable condition is rooted in the heel-clicking, saber-rattling past; that Hitler is merely a product of this fertile soil rather than a man of destiny who rose to power on the crest of a wave of political and economical unrest.

Our efforts to account for the present war have failed because we have not taken into account this illness of the German mind, the author reasons. Wars are fought by human beings for emotional reasons, and in his analysis this weighs more heavily in Germany's case than material conditions, although this aspect of the problem can not be overlooked, Due consideration of treatment for this diseased mind must be included in the peace parley, he warns, or another similar cataclysm is inevitable a generation hence.

Dr. Brickner's careful study of the problem, extending back over a period of nearly 15 years, has convinced him that a vast portion of the German people have displayed dangerous paranoia symptoms for generations. This most fearful form of lunacy can and frequently does end in murder in individual cases. In Germany's case, it has resulted in bloodletting twice within a quarter of a century. Germany's symptoms parallel those of an individual mental patient:

opinion of one's own importance. Germans found an outlet for their crazy-quilt emotions in racial snobbery which had its beginning even before Napoleon's time. Dr. Bricker believes that other nations' failure to recognize these symptoms was largely responsible for the unrest that permitted Hitler to wangle many demands out of countries which hoped to prevent war. The major purpose of his book, he says, is to put people on guard against the usually unsuspected danger of paranoid thinking. Appeasement of a paranoid, he points out, is impossible, for he piles new demands on old ones, interpreting every concession as a sign of weakness in his opponent. A fair-minded person finds it difficult, if not impossible, to deal with one. Dr. Brickner quotes profusely from works of German leaders to substantiate his charge that Hitler's ascendancy is no mere overnight happenstance. Ironically, it was a Frenchman, Comte de Gobineau, who first gave Theodore Roosevelt and the Rise of the Modern Navy By Gordon Carpenter O'Gara. (Princeton University Press.) At the opening of this century, our Navy's gunnery was so inferior that five ships of the North Atlantic Squadron fired for five minutes at a hulk 2.800 yards distant and scored only two hits. So contends the author of this brief but factual book on the American Navy.

This was only one of many defects in the Navy which fortunately for the wars that have followed, received the full attention of Theodore Roosevelt through his two administrations. It was an uphill fight all the way, however. Mr. Rocsevelt had to fight public apathy, an equally apathetic Congress and old-line officers within the Navy Department. When Roosevelt came into office, the American Navy was a poor fourth in world powers. England, France and Japan were above us, and Japan was making fast strides in achieving the navy that has proved. such a threat in recent times. When Roosevelt left the White House, our Navy was second only to that of Great Britain, and our prestige overseas was firmly established. Building up the American Navy was all a part of the first Roosevelt's "big stick" philosophy. He knew the biggest stick of all was a welltrained, fully-equipped battle force at sea. In time, he won the fight for naval supremacy, which has stood us in good stead in two wars. Mr. O'Gara's book provides excellent background for an appreciation of naval affairs today. The book represents a great deal of research, and includes a number of helpful tables and diagrams. It is perhaps unfortunate that Mr. O'Gara has seen fit to limit his book to but 138 pages. He might have gone into more detail, without lessening its general reader interest. The World of Sholom Aleichem

By Maurice Samuel. (Alfred A. Knopf.) "Sholom Aleichem," common daily greeting of Jews, which originally meant, "Peace be unto you," was the pen name of the great recorder of Jewish folklore, Sholom Rabinovitch. His intimate writings concerned the Jewish Pale of Settlement between 1870 and the first World War, and thousands of Jews lived. A sort of prose-laureate of the poor Jewish peasant, Sholom Aleichem, who originally was a businessman, recollected his own experiences among his people, wrote them as one among neighbors, and left behind him a bounty for many Americans whose predecessors made up the world about which he wrote. As a humorist, Sholom Aleichem was un surpassed. But his humor was, as the author says, "of a mental twist," rather than of situations, characters and incidents." He wrote richly of children and adults. By interpretation, he gave their small lives dwelt chiefly on a section south and west of Kiev, in Russia, where Sholom Aleichem was no apologist. In his writings, he set forthe his people and himself as they were, the good with the bad, the tragic with the joyous, the disappointing with the promising. Kasrielevsky meaning "the townlet of the tiny folk," was the core of his world. Hisbest-loved character was Tevyah, a simple and folk-wise dairyman. Others of his characters were equally earthy and wrapt up in the everyday life of the community. Their stories, as told by Sholom Aleichem, reveal much about the Jews of Russia 40, 50 and 60 years ago, and at the same time take on an almost-classic literary coloring. Himself a forthright writer, Mr. Samuels does a splendid job in carrying the reader on a pilgrimage through what was his subject's world. The love of life, the abiding faith of a people, their superstitions achieved some fame a few years ago and tribulations readily become apparent in what the author tells about Sholom Aleichem's world. Modern Jews and Christians alike should enjoy this book as a preface to understanding. JOE RICHMAN.

AN ECONOMIC PROGRAM FOR A LIVING DEMOCRACY

by Irving H. Flamm

This new approach to our postwar problems is not that of the moralist, the cloistered theorist or the pep-talk philosopher, but rather that of the lawyer accustomed to dealing with realities and working out practical solutions for live problems. Mr. Flamm goes beyond vague generalization and abstract discussion. He presents a clear cut reorganization plan for our national "going business," a plan which will enable us to reduce regimentation, increase production, and to slow up the expropriation process which is now operating through innumerable kinds of taxes.

"If Mr. Flamm's constructive attitude cars set the standard for our thinking, there is still home for capitalism." Springfield-Republican. "He writes with poise and detachment * * * His proposal will startle anyone who has become inured to the charge that what alls us most is our domination by lawyers * * * Unlike most of those who essay the task. Flamm is unfailingly specific. * Howard Vincent O'Brien—Chicago Daily News.

Color Needed in the Flower Border

Several Desirable Annuals and Perennials Give Cheery Note

By W. H. Youngman,

Color in the flower border is especially desirable this year. We need to take the war effort seriously, but at the same time we must maintain morale. One of the best ways frost cuts them down. of keeping our minds clear and relaxed is through growing and workwar gardening effort. We'll grow They are available in many forms— easily grown summer cut flower. the vegetable crops, but we shall balcony, single, double and ruffled.

Last week we discussed briefly the other colorful, desirable annuals the annual and perennial forms of may all be grown from seed. and perennials that can be de-pended upon to succeed in situations hardy chrysanthemums are desirsomewhat more favorable for plant able for late summer and fall bloom loving, and the snapdragon will insuring this.

The outstanding example is, of course, the zinnia, known by many nicknames, of which "Cut and Come Again" is the most appropriate. Vigorous growing annuals that they are, the more they are cut the more bloom they produce. The seed of the zinnia may be sown out-of-doors late in April or early in May, transplanting the seedlings to the border as soon as large enough. One may oftentimes purchase well started plants from commercial growers and so obtain cut flowers in a relatively shorter time.

Prepare Beds Carefully.

Zinnias do best in a well-prepared bed. While they like full sunshine they must also have moisture and plant food to produce the quantities of flowers for which they are grown. Inasmuch as commercial fertilizers are not available for flowers, the best alternative is the working into the beds of liberal quantities of compost or well-rotted manure. The humus thus put into the soil will furnish considerable plant food as well as liberate that already in the soil. Then, too, the humus absorbs and holds moisture until needed by the plants. This extra storage of moisture will be Important to the plant's growth during periods of drought.

Zinnias are available in many forms and colors. They range all the way from the giants (2 to 21/2 feet) to the dwarf forms that are suitable for edging. The singles are attractive for cut flowers. The newer "fantasy" type to some is more desirable than the large doubles. The colors range from white to deep red. For a long season of bloom the tinnia is outstanding.

Space the taller types 18 to 24 Inches apart, while the dwarf forms may be planted as close as 10 inches. Plant a dozen or more of a kind together for mass effects as well as quantities of cut flowers.

There are two closely related varieties listed under "summer squash"

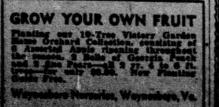

by most seedsmen: 1. Zucchini (matures 55 to 60 days)-A summer squash producing extremely dark green fruits of fine quality. The plants are truly bush, and the fruits when mature about 12 inches long and 1212 inches in diameter (sometimes somewhat larger). They are of best quality, however, if used when young-4 to 6 inches

2. The Cocozelle, or vegetable marrow (matures 65 days)-The fruit is long and slender, of a dark green color at first, but when maturing it changes to a lighter green with yellowish stripes. In best condition to use when 8 to 12 inches long. The young fruits of both may be sliced and fried as you would prepare eggplant. Fruits are also delicious diced and steamed or baked.

Squashes grow best in a fertile. deep soil. Some gardeners prefer a slightly sandy soil. The bush variety should be sown in hills 4 to 6 feet apart. In preparing the soil, be sure to incorporate a complete plant food. The plant food may either be broadcast over the entire area to be planted at the rate of 4 pounds per 100 square feet (equivalent to one rounded tablespoonful per square foot); or plant food may be mixed thoroughly with soil in the bottom of each hill and covered with one inch of soil before seeding. Use one level tablespoonful of plant food per hill. Put six or 8 seeds in each hill, and cover with about an inch of soil, pressing the soil down firmly. When the plants come up, thin them so that only 3 or 4 of the strongest are left in each hill. Sow about the same time you would sow sweet corn, after the ground is warm.

Squash are quite subject to bug attacks and plants must be kept dusted to avoid damage.

He Has Kept Bees Since He Was 7; Owns 500 Hives

By ROSE MARIE WINSLOW,

The other day, the honey man came around. Yes, I said the honey man. He happens to be an acquaintance of ours, so he began to tell us some teresting story about the bees and their habits. He has been raising bees since ne was 7 years of age, and has been stung only a few times. He has been studying the lives of bees for a long

Rose Marie Winslow.time and now he keeps over 500 hives.

The honey man told us that many of his friends-bankers, businessmen and ministers, in particulartake great pleasure in keeping bees, and are exceedingly interested in their habits. It is a hobby with

The honey that is best and most valuable is the pine honey. This brand candies almost immediately. Another interesting little story the honey man told us concerns a boy who was anemic. Physicians gave him treatment after treatment, but to no avail. The boy was in extremely dangerous condition when his mother happened to hear our honey man say that honey is good for anemics. The mother bought two buckets of it and tried it. The boy liked it and ate a goodly amount. In a short time, he was as normal . boy as the next one.

Our honey man told us, too, that one day, he was tracking the bees and he came to a hollow tree where he heard a loud droning. He smoked out the bees, but had to cut down the whole tree to get the honey. The bees often store up more honey than they need and keep storing it up year after year. The time he was telling us about, much to his surprise, he found barrels of honey in this one tree.

In the winter the bees feed their young with honey mixed with water and they also feed the baby bees pollen. So, our honey man said, when you're in the woods and you find a creek or pond, you can line up your hives right there and then. Now that sugar is rationed, it is a good time to try out the different ideas and recipes for honey. To make your butter go further, for instance, mix one-third butter and two-thirds honey; it makes the most delicious spread you ever

Right now, I've made myself so hungry, I've got to go make myself I'm grateful to our honey man for his ideas and stories.

Powell Girl Tells What Our Flag Means to Her.

By ROSALIE WINNIMAN, Powell Junior High School.

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands . . .

Do you know what your pledge of allegiance really means? Being good citizen by respecting the rights of others, selecting able and honest leaders and following tem, fighting for your country's safety, sacrificing your rights when necessary-these and many more things are included in our pledge to the flag. Way back in 1620, when the first Pilgrims landed, we began our long fight for the things represented inthat pledge-fighting the Indians so that we might have a place to live, fighting the government which placed unfair taxes on the early farmers, fighting the French at Quebec, the British at Concord and the Mexicans at the Alamo. Then, as now, blood was shed for our flag. Today, the war for our kinds of freedom - free-Rosalie Winniman. dom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion and freedom of assembly and petition—is being fought. The blood of our sons, brothers, fathers, husbands and even our daughters who were Red Cross nurses at Bataan and Corregidor is being poured over our flag. We are proud of the blood of the men and women who are fighting to keep our homes free from the tyrant nations.

Reading the daily newspaper is one day, our flag will be cleansed always a good habit, but in this instance it also proved a profitable stamps and bonds to keep "The Star-Spangled Banner" high above the Maybelle Pinkerton saw an ad- tyrants' heads. Many Things Go Into the Making Of Our Flag

Prize Contribution. By MARY AXELSON, Powell Junior High School.

It is some cloth and some dye made by a machine or by a needle, a thread and a hand. It doesn't sound like much: vet many men have given their lives for it and, after death, have been covered by its folds. It is the most honored and respected of all things save one and that is not of this world The worst of all crimes is to betray it to its enemies.

Yes, our flag is made of cloth and dye, but they are not all. It is made of the tears, the blood, the sweat, the hopes of men It is made of the dreams of free Americans.

British Vessel Left Harbor in Fierce Storm

Ships That Stayed In Port Were Sunk Or Damaged

By UNCLE RAY. If you were a sea captain, would it be better to keep your vessel in a harbor during a storm, or to steam out into the ocean?

Nine times out of 10-or perhaps 99 out of 100it would be better to stay in the harbor. Yet a British sea captain chose the other course during a fierce storm, and lived to tell the tale. There were seven vessels in a harbor of one of the Samoan islands March day in 1889. Three of them were

American, three German and one British. All had masts and sails, as well as steam power. During the afternoon the barometer fell swiftly, a sign of a coming storm. It went down to 29.1, the

A sharp north wind blew across dered their men to let out all anchors, so the vessels would be moored as firmly as possible. Sails were taken down, but steam was kept in the boilers for use in case of special need.

Yanks fought in earthly hell. Courage and honor were on Bataan; Glory was in their eyes. Yanks were expendable on Bataan;

Their deaths saved American lives All they asked were guns to fire. Bullets and bayonets and knives. Buy bonds! Buy bonds! Is your battle cry. You must give your money—they gave their lives.

D. C. Armed Guard Tells of Terrors of Convoy 'Coffin Corner' For Eckert Brothers

Hubert Sprecher's Ship Met Wolfpack at 'Torpedo Junction'

By a Staff Correspondent of The Star A BRITISH PORT (By Mail) .-'Coffin Corner at Torpedo Junction" is the phrase used by sailors of Navy armed guard crews on American merchant ships in speaking of a vague, shifting location in the mid-Atlantic which, until quite recently, probably has been the most perilous spot on earth.

Blond-bearded, 19-year-old Hubert Sprecher, son of Mrs. Virginia Sprecher, 1359 Newton street N.W., was just a few days out of Torpedo Junction when the merchantman on which he is stationed anchored here the other day after an exciting voyage. They ran into a "wolf pack" and saw several ships around them blow up and disappear. Sprecher, a student at Randolph-

Macon Academy, joined the armed guards about a year ago with two other Washington boys at the same school, Freemont Stansbury, jr., of 1819 Delafield place N.W. and Roy Messick of Arlington, Va. Since then they have been assigned to different crews and all of them have seen much of the world under exciting circumstances. The Torpedo Junction trip was young Sprecher's fourth. One was to South America, one to New Zealand, and one to Casablanca. The service, he says, "is the best in the fleet." Junction's Location Varies. Torpedo Junction cannot be located. It is a rather wide area of the North Atlantic where undersea boats are most likely to be waiting training at and it varies with the reports from day to day. But on every North Tex., and, prior Atlantic voyage some evening the word spreads from ship to ship: 'We're pulling into the Junction.' Coffin Corner is the rear starboard position in the convoy, supposedly the ship easiest to pick off when passing through Torpedo Junction. Regarded primarily as a contribution to the war effort, the university authorities likewise feel that the rapidly expanding uses for aerial transportation will continue after the emergency has ceased, making necessary the remodeling of elementary school curricula to include courses in aeronautics.

With Sister Aquinas as principal instructor, and assisted by Sister Peola, O. S. F., of Superior, Wis., and Dr. M. Gertrude Reiman of the physics department of the university, two series of courses will be given. The first will start on May 31 and be under the direction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, with free tuition. Teachers in and around Washington may avail themselves of this opportunity to get additional knowledge of civilian aeronautics. The second and longer course will be given during the regular summer session, opening on June 25 and continuing until August 7.

PRAIRIE SCHOONER-1943 MODI

MICAGO, home of so many of America's great industries, has given the nation many "firsts"-the first McCormick reaperthe first Pullman car-the first steel skyscraper-the first streamliner*-and numerous others. Now, Pullman-Standard launches the first ocean-going Patrol Craft built in Chicago.

The speed with which these ships will be launched, and how many of them there will be to harass the undersea wolf packs are wartime secrets. But we can tell our enemies this much-there will be enough to make them sorry that, in their thirst for world domination, they forgot to reckon with "verdammte Yankee ingenuity"; yes, ingenuity and engineering skill that found a way to fabricate and launch ocean-going fighting ships where once the sturdy pioneers explored uncharted wastes and pushed their ox-teams on to new horizons to found a great city. * Built by Pullman-Standard

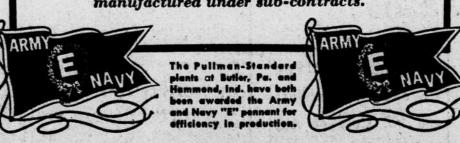

Such persistence and indomitable courage are the heritage of the American people today.

There is reason for pride in the first ship we have produced in our 84 years of service in helping to build America...84 fruitful years that have given us production know-how, expert engineering and metallurgical knowledge, and an organization to utilize that knowledge with millions of man- and machine-hours to speed the flow of armament for our land, sea, and air forces. This co-ordinated effort of employes and management is a demonstration of the tremendous strides American industry-of which this Company is proud to be a part-has made in arming the nation. It is proof of what free enterprise can accomplish to preserve the American Way of Life.

In co-operation with 1,021 firms with whom we have placed 6,254 sub-contracts, there have been or are now being manufactured in Pullman-Standard plants:

TANKS . HOWITZER CARRIAGES AFT MAJOR SUB-ASSEMBLIES AL VESSELS . FREIGHT CARS FOR THE ARMY, NAVY AND RAILROADS

Other materials for the war program are also being manufactured under sub-contracts.

There is reason for pride, too, in our workers for their loyal, patriotic co-operation... their versatility in adapting to shipbuilding the trades and skills they used as carbuilders. Truly, when the full story of Pullman-Standard's accomplishments as shipbuilders can be told it will make an exciting chapter in the saga of American armament production.

QUESTION FOR AMERICANS

by R. L. Nicholson

What did you do for Freedom today? A Marine on Guadalcanal, Through a hail of lead and jungle hell, Crept out to a wounded pal; And he dragged him back through the slime and muck, Then, with never a thought of rest, Back over that deadly route he went And smashed a machine-gun nest. It wasn't much fun - the bullets - the mud -He may have been scared, but he hid it; He only knew of a job to do And he didn't quibble, he did it. What did you do for Freedom today? "All that you could." Think well -One-millionth as much as that Leatherneck did? — They buried the boy where he fell.

What did you do for Freedom today? A Gob on a rubber raft Drained the last wet drop from his water flask Then threw it away and laughed. For eighteen days on an endless sea In a torment of pain he lay; Drenched and chilled to the bone at night, And burned to a crisp by day. He wanted to live, but he knew in his heart That the odds were a thousand to one; But he drifted and hoped, consoled by a prayer, And the thought of a job well done. What did you do for Freedom today? "All that you could," you declare. But when you say it, remember the Gob Who died on the raft out there.

What did you do for Freedom today? Nine lads in a B-17 Ran into a flock of Messerschmitts And died in their wrecked machine.

Oh, they didn't do had with what they had,
But they flew through hell to do it;
They had smashed Berlin and a dozen "one-ten's,"
But their number was up and they knew it.
They were full of holes, with no controls,
And their ship was a comet of flame;
But they stuck to their guns and the useless stick
And hattled on just the same.

What did you do for Freedom today?

"All that you could." O.K.;
But if those nine boys in the B-17

Were to ask you, what would you say?

What did you do for Freedom today? I think they've a right to ask. You're in this fight just as much as they, And with just as important a task. Were you at your desk, or bench, or press, And at work at the starting bell? Did every minute of this day count? And the job — did you do it well? Did you buy a Bond or a Stamp today? Or collect any scrap for the pile? Did you save your grease or throw it away? Did you drive just an extra mile? Have you been down to the Red Cross Bank And given a pint of your blood? Did you send that V-mail letter today? Did you hoard any rationed food? Before you begin to complain and gripe That life is all work and no fun -Would you trade your dinner for Ration K? Or your overtime pay for a gun? Just stop every once in a while today When your lot seems hard and lean, And think of a Gob, and a Leatherneck, And nine boys in a B-17.

SIDELINES

POEM. The poem on this page has double interest, we think: the author, R. L. Nicholson, is now a war worker at the Wolf Creek Ordnance Plant, Milan, Tenn. According to Mr. Nicholson, he was inspired to write his poem by an advertisement appearing in all of the nation's leading magazines. The advertisement, contributed by the magazine publishers of America, asked simply: "What did you do today . . . for Freedom?"

Mr. Nicholson's poem appeared first in the employees' bulletin distributed to the workers of the Wolf Creek plant. Since it has a message for Americans everywhere on the home front, we take pleasure in publishing it on this page.

He has a message

ADDITION. WAAC stories are now a part of Army lore. For example:

One officer we know, stationed in Washington, was leaving a building with a noncommissioned WAAC and had to make an instant decision as to whether to treat her as a lady or as a soldier of inferior rank. He compromised — rather neatly, we think — by courteously holding one door for her to go through first, then preceding her through the next.

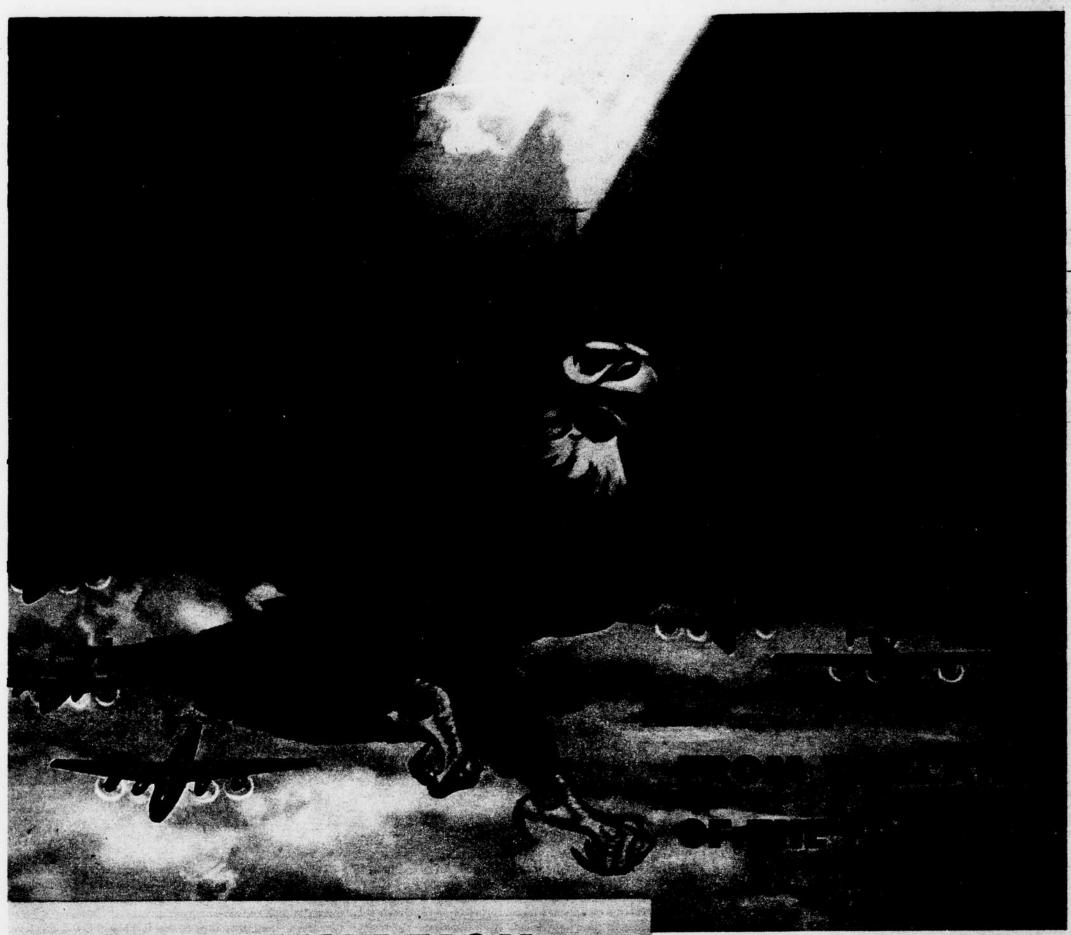

ANOTHER WAAC wrote us that, after weeks of training by lady officers, she finally met a regular Army officer, and, of course, addressed him as "ma'am."

It was not just a group of men who put together today's almost unbelievable American aviation industry, to fling 150,000 planes into the sky in two short years.

It was you, and your neighbor, and your neighbor's neighbor. It was the hands and hearts of free men with a free place to live and work. It was a nation that did this thing—and no place on God's earth is there another nation that could equal this accomplishment.

And so it is as a nation that we must win this war, or lose it.

Your own part may not be to fly or fight or even to wear a uniform. But your part is there and must be done! Your share of work each day. Your share of bends. Your share of sacrifices.

These are the things your country needs now-in return for the best way of living man has ever worked out!

BURGPER CROP. 1942 was our biggest baby year - three million of them. The rate's still going up

RK PACE. Fathers overseas often get their first news of Junior from the Army's newspaper

As our birth rate hits a new high, thousands are being born in trailers, shacks, even chicken houses - often without medical care. Here's an urgent national problem

by Mary Day Winn

HE scene is a Post Exchange at one of our Army camps in Africa. The latest edition of the Army newspaper, "The Stars and Stripes," has just gone on sale and a group of soldiers is searching its pages with all the eagerness of treasure hunters digging at the spot marked "X."

What are they reading? Big-league baseball scores? War news? Gossip from home? No. They are poring over the "mother's page," the department headed: "Blessed Events: Government Issue." These men are getting the first news. supplied to them via Red Cross channels, of little strangers who have come to their homes.

This scene is being duplicated all over the world, wherever American soldiers, sailors and marines are stationed. For the United States is harvesting a bumper crop of babies, many of them children of service men. By the latest Census Bureau estimates, 3,000,000 babies were added to our population in 1942, the biggest annual crop in our history. The rate is still going up. The Children's Bureau calculates that about 70,000 babies will be born to our fighting men and their wives during the first six months of 1943.

There are several reasons why the stork is working overtime. Our birth rate reached its lowest point in history during the depression year of 1933. But in 1936 money began to jingle-jangle in many long-empty pockets, and the birth rate began to climb.

The 1940 draft law gave the rate another boost. Then came Pearl Harbor, followed by a dash for the altar by hundreds of thousands of young people anxious to tie the knot before Johnny went marching off. In 1942 a record number of brides - nearly 1,800,000 - said "I do." The birth rate reached a new high.

The war has also brought a new desire for parenthood to many couples who had previously been indifferent to it. Though the average age of mothers is now much lower than formerly (one well-known specialty house is doing a boom business in maternity dresses size 9, 11 and 13), doctors my that a sizable number of first babies are being born to couples who have been married five to 10 years.

Changed Values

As ONE 30-year-old expectant mother recently expressed it: "We thought we'd wait till we could own our own home ... then a car. . . But the war has changed our sense of values. Material things don't seem so important. We want something real in our lives - something that's all our own."

Here's dramatic statistical proof of this war psychology: About 600 New York City public-school teachers took maternity leave in 1940, this rate having varied only slightly during the previous nine years. In 1941, however, the figure rose to 950, and in 1942 it skyrocketed to 1,615.

Census statisticians feel sure, though, that America's baby boom is only temporary. With millions of potential fathers removed to camps here and abroad, it may even take a sharp down-turn by the end of 1943. That has been the experience of most other warring countries. In the period 1939 through 1942, the birth rate in Europe's occupied countries has fallen sharply, accompanied by an appalling increase in infant deaths. Even in Germany Hitler's frantic exhortations have not been able to stem the falling rate.

One conspicuous exception — and Americans should note this well — was Japan. While Nippon screams in one breath for more living space for her crowded millions, in the next

she demands that those millions spawn in ever greater numbers. And her demands have been met. During the period 1939-'41, while we were pointing with pride to a jump of 9.2 per cent in our birth rate, Japan's increased 13.7 per cent. Which offers another proof that unless Japan is thoroughly licked this time, today's American war babies may have to face a flood tide of the little yellow men 25 years from now.

So let us look to our wealth. We must remember that the birth rate is only one part of the picture in considering a nation's chances for survival. It is equally important to save the babies once they are born. On that score we have been outstandingly successful. In the past quarter-century, we have more than cut in half the number of deaths of babies under one year of age. The question now is: can we maintain that good record under war conditions?

The task will be a hard one — even in those communities that have experienced no spectacular gains in population — for already thousands of trained nurses and one-third of the nation's practicing doctors are in the armed forces.

It will be infinitely more difficult in those war-boom areas whose population has increased overnight from one to tenfold, and more.

The rush of workers to war-industry centers has swamped efforts to provide temporary housing — living conditions are crowded at best, and sometimes are appallingly unhygienic. Similar conditions exist around our big military and naval training camps. The government has urged wives of service men not to follow them to these camps, but the advice often falls on deaf ears, especially when a baby is expected.

As a result, thousands of babies are being delivered in trailers, sometimes with little or no medical supervision. In some localities those fortunate enough to get into a hospital are being discharged 24 hours after the baby is born. In at least one case, reported by the Red Cross, a soldier on furlough delivered his own baby, in a trailer.

Last summer the Children's Bureau made a survey of many communities to which people had suddenly flocked in great numbers. One has mushroomed around the Glenn Martin plant, near Baltimore. Middle River and the three other towns which make up this community had a total population, before the war, of about 4,000. They now have between 40,000 and 50,000. At the time of the investigation, 1,200 families were living in trailers, and several in chicken houses.

Cramped Quarters

OR HOW would you like to be an expectant mother in Jacksonville, North Carolina? Two and a half years ago this was a sleepy little village of about 700 inhabitants. When the Red Cross made a survey of conditions last summer, 11,000 people were living there — sometimes six or seven people in a trailer built for two. The nearest hospital was 50 miles away. Only six doctors were practicing in the whole county, one fewer than before the boom increased the population fifteenfold. Emergency operations were being performed on kitchen tables. The cause of this sudden boom was the New River Marine Base which, when completed, will be the largest in the U.S. The 50-bed hospital which has been planned for this community is still just a plan.

There's a little town in Louisiana which has grown, in two years, from 10,000 to about 60,000, while its listed physicians have been reduced from 82 to 33. In the Middle South, there is another with a population of 12,000 — and no physician at all. The doctor who once practiced there was recently declared "nonessential to his community" by Procurement and Assignment, and is now in the Army. And such conditions exist in boom towns all over the United States, where thousands of future citizens are being born to war workers and service men.

In the case of service men's wives, conditions are often further complicated by inability to pay for hospital and nursing care even when it is available. Federal and state governments and many private organizations are working on this problem, but cutting through the jungle of red tape and miscellaneous individual obstacles makes it slow going. The Children's Bureau has made a special effort to help finance obstetrical and pediatric care for enlisted men's wives. Federal money for this purpose will be administered through state health departments. To date, 28 states and territories have had maternal-aid programs approved by Washington.

Red Cross Steps In

MEANWHILE private organizations have jumped into the breach. The Army and the Navy Emergency Relief are ready to supply advice and, when necessary, money to the service man's wife. And the Red Cross, as usual, is mothering both civilian and service wives. In addition to its well-known public-health nursing service, now stepped up in boom-town areas, it has inaugurated a new department, Home Service. This serves as a tie between the soldier and his family, as a friend to whom the soldier can appeal when he gets a disturbing letter from home, with the knowledge that his home will be visited by a local Red Cross worker, and something will be done, if possible, to set things right. Finally, the Red Cross is putting great emphasis on its Home Nursing classes. Nearly one million persons — a fair percentage of them men — completed the Home Nursing course during the 14-month period ended February 28.

On the priorities front, the baby's troubles are bothersome but not serious. Although boom towns are experiencing shortages of many things a baby needs (Seattle mothers have been advised that milk is milk, even if sucked from a beer bottle) the picture as a whole seems fairly satisfactory — so far. Since high-chairs, play pens and cribs are made principally of wood, their manufacture is theoretically unrestricted. Crib-spring manufacturers, of course, have had to kiss good-by to most of their steel, but, with typical American ingenuity they have devised wooden springs. Enough crude rubber has been allocated to the manufacture of nipples to meet the needs, but there must be nothing fancy; nipples must be all one size.

Baby-carriage manufacturers, limited to six pounds of steel per buggy, have been concentrating on "single sleepers," made almost entirely of wood. Recently, however, the government has been forced to recognize the existence of twins, and has unbent a bit to allow the making of a limited number of "double sleepers." It requires almost an act of Congress to get permission to make a "triple sleeper." First you have to catch your triplets, then fill out a questionnaire. . .

Among those who serve the needs of the high-chair tyrant, perhaps the most vocal complainers are the diaper services. Their business has boomed so that some of them have had to establish their own priorities by turning away all customers who cannot produce a doctor's certificate of necessity.

In food rationing Uncle Sam is giving fatherly attention to the needs of his newest citizens. Canned baby foods were given a break in point rationing; and recently, when there was a threatened shortage of evaporated milk, the Department of Agriculture released five million cans which had been held in reserve for war emergencies.

While the best manhood of America is fighting and dying on far-flung battlefields, it is imperative that government, welfare organizations and the parents themselves, unite to save our little replacements — not, we hope, to throw into a World War III later on, but for the equally difficult job of helping to build World Peace I.

THIS WEEK'S

THE Office of Co-ordinator of Inter-American affairs has a new corps of ambassadors to Latin America. High diplomatic sources report that the new good-will corps has done — and is doing — more for hemisphere solidarity than almost any other government representatives in U.S. history.
Its personnel includes:

José Carioca, a parrot. Pancho, a rooster. Pedro, an airplane. Goofy, a dog. Donald Duck, a duck. All of them belong to a guy named Walt Disney who never went to diplomatic school in his life. But he's doing a top-hat, striped-pants job with them in "Saludos Amigos" and "Surprise Package."

Top man in the Disney corps is Joe, the parrot. He's to Brazil what D. Duck is to the U.S. — only more so. Donald's
outshout, outswagger him — except quick-thinking José.

When "Saludos Amigos" was shown in South America — before U.S. audiences saw it — Disney was bombarded with cables, letters, phone calls from ambassadors, consuls, chambers of commerce. All of them wanted to know if he couldn't do for their countries what he had done for Brazil — create a character like José. In "Surprise Package," Walt will give Mexico Pancho. The rooster is to be a scrappy little fellow who wears a couple of six-shooters slung low on his lean hips.

In "Saludos Amigos," the Disney — and U.S. — ambassador to Chile was Pedro, the baby mail plane.

One afternoon the papa plane couldn't make his regular mail run to Argentina because he had a cold in his cylinder head.

The mama plane couldn't go because she had high oil pressure. So Pedro took over.

Envoy to Argentina is Dianey's Goofy, addle-brained canine. Goofy becomes a gaucho, learns how to swing a bolas, dance a gale. Like "Saludos Amigos," "Surprise Package" will be made up of episodes — each one a trip to a different Latin-American country. The Disney technique does two things: U.S. natives get an accurate picture of Latin-American places, customs, people; Latin Americans get a notion of us as people who like and laugh at the same things they do.

Latin-American officials, too, are well aware of Disney's contributions. Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, Brazil's Minister of Foreign Affahs, for example, presented him with the "Order of the Southern Cross." Walt himself explains the work of his ambassadors by saying that they're not contributing so much to good will as to good understanding. That's an important tip to any diplomatic corps.

death. But the gas most widely used so far in this war saves lives. It is carbon dioxide. This is the gas expired by our lungs, poured into the air by factory chimneys. It makes the fizz in soda water, the "collar" on beer. In its frozen form it is dry ice. Carbon dioxide's lifesaving virtues lie in two characteristics:

First, it smothers flame. It extinguishes an engine fire on a bomber in five seconds — even in full flight. It has saved lives of hundreds of men trapped in fiery tanks, ships, crashed planes.

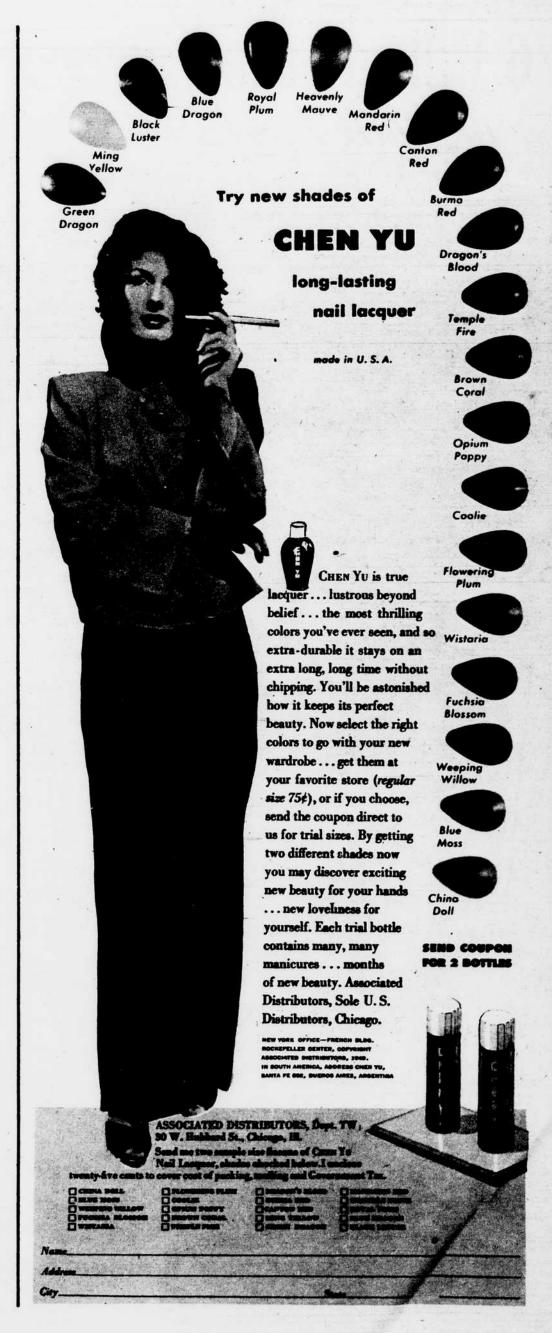

Second virtue is that liquid carbon dioxide expands to make a huge volume of gas. One cubic foot of liquid equals 450 cubic feet of gas. Tiny tubes like the ones used on home seltzer-water bottles inflate Mae West life jackets. Larger ones inflate life rafts. Still larger ones inflate gas cells in plane wings, keeping them afloat at sea.

The gas has dozens of other uses, many secret. It generates the tremendous pressure needed to force jammed wheels down on a bomber. It opens bomb-bay doors when a plane's hydraulic system fails.

This wide variety of uses on planes, tanks, ships has made carbon dioxide big business. One maker — at New Brunswick, N. J. — employs 5,000 men, produces 50 million dollars' worth a year. All of it goes to save lives. — J. D. RATCLIFF

SCHOOLMARMS FOR SOLDIERS

These ladies help train Army men in specialists' jobs

TOUGH U.S. soldiers are now learning a new kind of three R's from a new kind of schoolmarm: thousands of women have gone to work for the Army. They are teaching radio, mechanics, parachute packing to members of the Air Forces; developing of pictures and radio- and telephone-repair work to the Signal Corps; handling of munitions, military procedure, Spanish, Portuguese to other students.

Many are teaching on Army posts. Others are working in civilian schools to which the Army sends soldier pupils. Twenty-five schoolmarms, for example, are instructing members of the Air Force Technical Training Command at the Embry-Riddle school, Miami, Fla. A few months ago, the ladies were housewives, business girls, socialites who knew nothing about aviation. But highpressure training has made them experts in at least one phase of it. They teach complex subjects: hydraulics, sheetmetal fabrication, plane structure.

The school has discovered that any woman over 25 who can think on her feet and has ever used her fingers for sewing or typing has the essentials. Their training course lasts six to eight weeks. After that they can earn up to $300 a month.

Army officers are enthusiastic about the schoolmarms. So are the soldiers themselves. And the women? — they love teaching men a thing or two. - LAWRENCE GALTON

1. PT's ... PT boats are known as the Navy's deadliest vessels. Where did they get the name?

From "propeller torpedoes," with which they have taken a tremendous toll of Jap shipping.

2. DOGS ... Did the U.S. Army train dogs during World War I?

This is the first war in which our Army has trained dogs for war work. During World War I the Army borrowed war-trained dogs from the Allies, but did not train any of its own dogs.

-T. J. M., Middle Village, N. Y.

2. ALIEMS . . . What is the new speeded-up naturalisation process recently instituted?

Men in military service may now obtain their certificates of citizenship three months after induction.—B.L., Pittsburgh, Pa.

4. CEMES... The various precision devices of a modern battleship require more than 4,000 jewels. A modern pursuit plane uses up to 100 sapphire bearings in its instruments. In 1940 this country was completely dependent on Europe for sapphires. Where do they now come from?

Today America makes more synthetic sapphires than we ever imported from Europe.

5. PRISONERS . . . What is the difference between a "prisoner of war" and a "prisoner of state"?

A prisoner of war is released when the war is ended but a prisoner of state has to stand trial after the war.

6. POSTWAR . . . After the war, how might they enlarge, and to what purpose can they put, V-mail facilities?

V-mail machines need not remain small size. They can be enlarged to regulation-letter—even newspaper—size. It will be perfectly possible after the war to film a book, newspaper or document and deliver it to Australia or Russia in two days.

7. RULES . . . Why did the OPA have to excuse Bristol, Va., from the Eastern gas-rationing rules?

Because the Virginia-Tennessee state line runs through Bristel's main street, and the gas stations on the Tennessee side of the street — which could give one more gallon per coupon get all the business!

A Big Day For Mr. Vane

The new president of Flexo Steel had waited eighteen years for this moment. And it was a greater triumph than even he anticipated!

by Edward Stevenson

Elestrated by Michael

T WAS J. Hamilton Vane's day of triumph and he was enjoying it hugely. It wasn't often that a company installed as its president, after luring him away from a rival firm, the ex-clerk it had once ignominiously fired. He wondered what the obsequious well-wishers would think if they knew; for as yet only one other person shared his secret; his secretary, Miss Sherrill.

Throughout the morning Flexo Steel's officialdom paraded in and out of his office, offering congratulations.

"Glad to have you with us, J. H."

"A pleasure to work with you, Mr. Vane."

"You can depend on our fullest co-operation, J. H."

The King is Dead, Vane mused pleasantly. Long Live the King! J. Hamilton (born plain John) Vane was monarch of all he surveyed, and he felt very happy about the whole thing. Not bad for a man barely turned forty. Not bad at all.

He looked up as Miss Sherrill came into the office, and his mouth, which a disgruntled competitor had once described as a steel trap set in a block of granite, broke into a boyish grin. "Well, Sherry," he said to the secretary he had brought with him to Flexo Steel, "have I run out of admirers?"

"I think that clears them up, J. H." Miss Sherrill was both pretty and efficient, but it was the latter which earned her seventy-five dollars a week. On the spur of the moment Vane would have been hard pressed to tell you the color of her hair, which was a lovely golden blonde or her age, which was twenty-six or seven. "Unless you'd like to see a delegation of office boys."

"I believe I'll skip the office boys." He stripped a dark brown cigar of its cellophane vestment, held it to Miss Sherrill's proffered match, and took a couple of satisfied puffs. "I think I'm going to like it here, Sherry. Flexo's big enough to be fun."

Ruth Sherrill smiled. J. H. was an overgrown kid; shrewd, hard-boiled, ruthless when he had to be — but still a kid. And Flexo was a new toy. A colossal Erector set. It would be fun all right. For him. But not for Flexo's competitors. And maybe not for Calvin Henderson.

The Henderson business had really surprised her. Eighteen years was a long time to stay angry, even if you had a good grievance to begin with. J. H. had his share of faults, but she had never suspected that vengefulness was one of them. Vengefulness was a narrow vice, and if J. H. was anything he was expansive. He ate, drank, and worked on a heroic scale; pettiness was alien to his nature.

EVEN in the privacy of her thoughts, Ruth was a little ashamed of being in love with J. H. Such a banal situation. A plot for a B movie! The handsome executive absorbed with his fiscal dreams. The devoted but unappreciated secretary. Seven reels of celluloid heartbreak.

The movies, of course, always knew how to resolve that sort of situation. Girl — if she was a good girl — always got boy. But no resourceful scenario writer came to her rescue. She had been with J. H. for six years and she knew, without flattering herself, that she had become as nearly indispensible, secretarially speaking, as anyone could. He depended on her to eliminate the corny phrases from his correspondence; sought her advice when there were gifts to be bought for maiden aunts; he considered her an excellent judge of ties, and had got rid of some of his more atrocious creations on her say-so. And he now called her Sherry instead of "Miss Sherrill."

But if any tenderness ever crept into his use of the nickname, it was the "Nice Fido" variety, and small consolation to a woman in love.

There was, however, some small solace in knowing that she had no rival; there was no other woman in J. H.'s life. It was even comforting, in a chilly sort of way, to think of them

He felt ill at ease - baffled. "It doesn't matter," he said. "I'll soon see for myself" going hand in hand into a celibate decline; he a sclerotic big business man, she a hard-shelled spinster given to the sniffles...

"I checked up on Henderson," she said.

"Oh, did you?" J. H. had let his face relax — it was quite good looking in repose — but now it reassumed its presidential contours. "What did you find out?"

"He's still here — doing business at the same old stand."
"Still Chief Clerk, eh? What is he like? How did he look?"
His curiosity was indecent. It was like having a cannibal ask if his dinner was to be a blonde or brunette. Ruth wished he wouldn't show such anticipatory relish. He might at least be worthy of her unrequited love, she thought tartly.

ONLY saw him for a moment. I had an impression of someone who was neither particularly young nor particularly old."

"He's fifty-five if he's a day."

"There was gray at his temples, but his face, if you could overlook its — austerity — seemed quite youthful."

"Youthful! That old stick was sixty the day he was born."
"He was tall and quite thin. His suit was black, and he wore a wing collar."

"Wing collar! Oh, gosh! That's good. Old Cal in a wing collar. He must be taking himself even more seriously than he used to."

He laughed, and Ruth had a vague suspicion he was warming up a grievance which had long ago gone cold and flat. There was just a hint of histrionics in his performance, as if he were not sure of himself. "Tell me," he demanded, "did you hear him speak? Did you hear that dry, pompous voice?"

"I didn't hear him speak, J. H."

"By heaven, I still hear that voice of his in my dreams. 'Waste not, want not.' 'Time and tide wait for no man.' . . . Send a memo to Calvin Henderson. Tell him I'll see him at three this afternoon."

"Yes, J. H."

Vane chuckled. "By George, firing that humbug will make my day complete. As Henderson himself would say, 'Everything comes to him who waits.' I've waited eighteen years for this. That's a long time, Sherry."

"A long time, J. H."

Vane shot a quick glance at her. Her expression was noncommittal, but he thought he detected a note of disapproval in her voice. Well, what the devil! Women didn't understand things like this.

He had lunch with two of Flexo's vice-presidents, and while they impressively analyzed problems of wartime production, his mind was filled with Calvin Henderson. He felt curiously defensive

After all these years it was necessary to sell himself the idea of getting even with Old Cal.

HE FOCUSED his memory on the day Henderson fired him, and his anger began to glow with its old intensity. Judas Priest, how ghastly he had felt that morning! Physically and mentally sick — though it was only the mental part that mattered. The physical was simply the result of piling one hangover on top of another until his nerves were raw.

"You were late again this morning, Vane," Henderson had

Tests in hundreds of homes show women overwhelmingly preferred this new SOFTASILK method to any they had ever tried before!

JUST SET OUT all ingredients 1 to 2 hours before mixing (less in hot weather) so they'll be at room temperature. Shortening and butter should be soft, but not melted. Turn on oven so it will be at right baking temperature when cake is ready for oven. Grease and flour two-8-inch round layer cake pans. Sift SOFTASILK Cake Flour before measuring. Now...

YOU'LL NEED: 21/4 cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour . . . 4 tsp. double-action type Baking Powder (or 41/4 tsp. phosphate-type; or 5 tsp. tartrate-type) ...1 tsp. Salt ... 1½ cups Sugar ... ½ cup high grade Vegetable Shortening (use part butter for flavor) ... 1 cup Skimmed Milk ... 1 tsp. Vanilla ... 4 large Egg Whites (at least ½ cup)

THEN measure sifted SOFTASILK, baking powder, salt and sugar into sifter, and sift together into mixing bowl. Measure shortening and milk. Measure vanilla into milk. Then add soft shortening and % of

So easy—this new mixing method! Perfect results are certain only when followed exactly, using SOFTASILK. Superior cake quality is brought out by the unexcelled baking characteristics of this pre-tested cake flour.

NOW mix with electric mixer at slow to medium speed (or beat with a spoon) for 2 minutes by the clock. Scrape batter from sides and bottom of bowl frequently during mixing.

Add remaining milk and egg whites (unbeaten). Continue mixing 2 more minutes by the clock (giving a total of 4 minutes mixing time*). Again, scrape batter from sides and bottom of bowl frequently. Batter

This method is such a time saver! It's taken the Betty Crocker staff years to perfect it. And how wonderfully it matches SOFTASILK'S splendid performance. Specially milled from choice soft, winter wheats, SOFTASILK contains only the most desirable, tender gluten. Has the fine quality necessary to give results with this revolutionary new method!

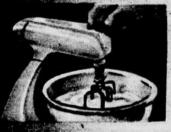

POUR into prepared pans. Bake in moderate oven (350°) for 30 to 35 min. Remove from oven, let layers stand in pans for a moment. Then turn onto wire cooling rack. When layers are thoroughly cool, frost as desired. *NOTE: When you mix by hand, you can let the batter stand while you rest a moment, but be sure total mixing time is just as specified.

IMPORTANT: Betty Crocker SOFTASILK Cake Flour, a product of General Mills, will give unexcelled results with your favorite recipes. So, of course, continue to use it as in the past. Be sure to try new recipes on package ... But don't UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES use this new, 1 bowl, "4-Minute-Mix" method with your old recipes or just "any" flour.

said. "Almost an hour late, as a matter of fact."

"Yes, sir." Now would come another of the Chief Clerk's interminable lectures, delivered in front of all the other clerks. "I'm sorry, sir."
"Sorry, Vane? Regret is a painkiller for

"I was sick, sir. Couldn't get here sooner."

"Drunk, you mean. You're still half drunk." Henderson's face was set in dehumanized lines, but his manner was patriarchal. "My dear boy, don't you realize you're courting disaster? Don't you know a man can't be true to himself and John Barleycorn?"

Vane stared with fierce and painful concentration at the inspirational cards which lined the top of the Chief Clerk's rolltop desk. DO IT NOW! KEEP SMILING! He did not reply to Henderson's question.

"I must say I'm disappointed in you, Vane. And pained. I had great hopes for you when you joined our little family of workers, but now my hopes have turned to ashes."

Is it had been anyone but Henderson, Vane would have said, "Sure, I know I've been falling down on the job lately. Maybe I've even been drinking too much bootleg liquor. But have a heart, won't you? I've just taken an awful wallop. You see, my girl has run off with another man. It's sort of knocked me in a heap. But I'll be all right if you'll only give me a chance to get my bearings. I'll make up every minute I've wasted." But how could you confide in a dehydrated specimen like Henderson?

"It is my painful duty," Henderson went on, "to inform you that we must dispense with your services, Vane. You will report to the cashier and collect what is coming to you. And believe me, my dear man, when I say I have taken this step more in sorrow than in anger; more to protect the others than to punish you. One bad apple, you know, will spoil the whole barrel."

It was such a relief to escape the Chief Clerk's hectoring voice that Vane hardly paused to consider the seriousness of his plight. His head was pounding, his throat was a desert, and his stomach felt as if it were on rockers. "To hell with Henderson," he muttered. "To hell with Flexo Steel."

But the hard slats of a bench in City Hall Park brought him back to reality, and he began to take stock. It was a grim inventory. He had fourteen dollars to his name, ten of them already due his landlady. He had made few friends in his year in New York, for he had devoted all his spare time to Mildred, the girl who had jilted him, and his nearest solvent relative — a brother who had dwelt eloquently on the folly of going to New York and who would welcome the opportunity of saying "I told you so!" — was in Akron, Ohio. Without references, he would have a hard time getting another job.

He was angry, bitter, filled with a black hatred. It wasn't the faithless Mildred who was responsible for his misfortune. It was Calvin Henderson. Calvin Henderson alone. And by heaven he would make Calvin Henderson pay for it if it was the last thing he did!

With the verdict reached and sentence imposed, Vane's spirits had begun to rise. He felt as if he had just decided a man's fate. As in fact he had — his own. At that moment Destiny had laid her hand on him. Then and there the New Vane was born, the Vane who was to evolve from plain John to J. Hamilton; from clerk to president.

Vane could look back now with something like amusement on the weeks which followed that disastrous morning; but they hadn't seemed amusing at the time. There was nothing funny in sneaking like a thief from his rooming house; in sleeping on park benches or riding out the nights in the subway; in living on a quarter a day.

Nor was there anything comical about his desperation as he stood before Max Weiss, the owner of a little iron shop up in the Bronx, and blurted, "Look, I haven't any references. I was kicked out of my last job seven weeks ago. Never mind why; it isn't important any more. A different man was fired, not me. But I need a job - like hell. Give me a job, name your own price, and if you aren't satisfied at the end of the week, fire me. It won't cost you a dime." Sure he was desperate; his supply of quarters would be gone by the end of the week. But he hadn't lost confidence in himself - not with Calvin Henderson, as a private goad, to spur him on. All he needed was a chance.

Max Weiss said dubiously, "I gif you the job, my boy, but you scare me a liddle."

Old Max was retired now and living in Florida, but he lingered long enough to see Max Weiss Iron Works strike terror in the hearts of its competitors with its incredible yet always profitable bids; to see his little shop expand till it was the biggest in the Bronx; to receive a check for a halfmillion dollars when Tapscott Fabricating bought him out, which was a roundabout way of saying - why deny it? - that Tapscott wanted to get one John Vane, who, at thirty-six, was to become its president.

It sounded easy in retrospect, but it had taken a lot of back-breaking, mind-curdling work to put it over. And of course it had meant skipping the grace notes; he hadn't had time for a wife and kids; for summers in Maine and winters in Miami; for bridge parties and golf on Saturdays. But there were compensations: a robust bank account, a portfolio of excellent securities, and an ever-expanding self-esteem. Not to mention his personal devil. Whenever the going seemed too tough, all he had to do was remember Old Cal, with his dry, chiding voice, and obstacles simply evaporated.

And now, Vane thought, the bumble of luncheon conversation bringing him back to the present, he was with Flexo Steel again, and the vow he had made eighteen years ago was about to be kept. . .

On the way back from lunch, one of Flexo's vice-presidents winked at him. "Quite a secretary you've got, J. H. I don't blame you for bringing her with you. She's a regular glamour girl."

Vane laughed good-naturedly. The fine lunch and his approaching audience with Henderson mellowed him. A glamour girl, eh?

He'd have to tell Sherry about that. Come to think of it, Sherry was a damned good-looking girl. Funny it had never occurred to him before.

Ruth Sherrill was placing some papers in his confidential file as he came into the office. She glanced up quickly and two delicate pink stains spread across her cheeks. Good gosh, she was even prettier than he had thought; disconcertingly pretty. Perhaps he'd better not mention the V.-P.'s remark. It might be misunderstood. There was no telling how a girl would take a thing like that. She might even think he was getting fresh. Hang it all, it was unmerving to discover he'd been harboring a beautiful woman all these years!

"Well, Sherry," he said in a needlessly loud voice, "how's every little thing?"

"Everything's fine," Ruth replied mildly. "Good." Her level gaze upset him.

Why did he have to yell like an idiot? He looked at his watch. It was almost three o'clock. "By the way, did you send that memo to friend Henderson?"

"Yes, J. H."

"Take it yourself or have it delivered?"
Ruth hesitated. "I took it myself."

"Ah! And how did Mr. Henderson react?"

Flexo Steel was all agog - J. Hamilton Vane was back

There was that subtle note of disapproval again. He tried to shrug it off. What difference did it make whether Sherry approved or disapproved? This was his show and he'd run it as he pleased. If she thought she could shame him into giving up what he'd waited eighteen years for, she had another think coming. Nevertheless, he now felt ill at ease. Baffled. How on earth had he managed to sit across a desk from a girl all these years without realizing how terribly attractive she was? It was absurd. He prided himself on his powers of observation.

"It doesn't matter," he said. "I'll soon see for myself. Unless Old Cal has changed a great deal, he'll be knocking at that door in about seventy-five seconds. Promptness was one of his favorite virtues."

"I'd better go, hadn't I?"

"If you like. I can see this is all extremely distasteful to you."

"Yes," she said with a kind of reluctant candor, "it is."

"Next time I plan anything like this," he said ironically, "I'll ask your permission."

Their gazes clashed briefly, and he had a panicky feeling that she was going to cry. Her eyes had the brightness which precedes weeping; but no tears came. Again he became disturbingly aware of how pretty she was. Even in tweeds, which he had always considered a badge of efficiency and sexlessness, she was feminine as chiffon.

He stared fixedly at the door she had closed behind her. What the devil was wrong with him? There was a queer congestion in his chest, as if some huge private glacier were slowly breaking into a thousand fragments inside him.

"Come in!" he cried peevishly in answer to the rap on his door. At least there wouldn't be any irritating complications in firing Henderson. By George, he'd get it over with in a hurry!

But as the door opened and Henderson came into the office, Vane found himself unprepared. What was it he had intended to say? Something crushing, he remembered; something that would flatten Old Cal like a pancake. He'd been mulling it over in his mind all during lunch, editing and polishing it, and now it was gone. Blast it, after waiting eighteen years was he going to have to ad lib his big moment?

Calvin Henderson was crossing the office with outstretched hand. Obviously he wasn't a man given to enthusiasm, but he did his best to evoke the alien emotion. His austerity was tempered with a slit of a smile; his eyes gave off a wintry sparkle.

"Mr. Vane," he said, "may I express my sincere congratulations?"

Vane opened and closed his mouth word-lessly. Dumbly he took the proffered hand. It felt like a piece of cold parchment.

"I'd have come in this morning," Henderson continued, "but I was afraid you might think I was presumptuous. Auld lang syne has no place in business, I always say."

"Wha —"
"Nevertheless, I want to tell you how pleased and thrilled I am with your success." He tried to look pleased and thrilled. "I have followed your career with great interest, Mr. Vane.

I have watched you forge to the top. You can't imagine how gratified I have been to think that I have played at least a small part in your triumph."

"You —" Vane was having to content himself with startled pronouns. The whole thing was out of wack. Someone had switched the scenario, and he had been relegated from star to super. Damn it, why didn't he make the old windbag shut up?

"Believe me, I do not exaggerate the importance of my role," Henderson went on, "and yet with all due modesty I can't underestimate it. Every man, as I have often said, is the architect of his fate. But there are humble draftsmen who also contribute their mite. That is how I feel about myself."

Vane said nothing. He was trying to rally his disorganized forces.

"Of course I did not expect any credit for my contribution," Henderson said unctuously. "When I heard that you were to be our new president, I asked myself, "Will John Vane remember that it was I, in a sense, who made all this possible?"

"You?"

"I," said Henderson. "Had I spared the rod and spoiled the child, as the saying is; had I let you drift along as you were doing — coming in late, shirking your responsibilities — you might still be one of our clerks. Some of your former associates still occupy their old desks, Mr. Vane."

Vane slumped weakly against the back of his chair. The Chief Clerk's words were like a blow between the eyes. Good gosh, the old fool was right! It was all devastatingly clear. The old John Vane, his former self, would have been perfectly content with his clerkship and its unsteady, unspectacular wages. Left to his own devices, he would have settled comfortably into his well-worn groove. He'd have spent his entire life in the shadow of Henderson!

And he'd had to have those very obvious facts pointed out to him by Old Cal himself!

"You can imagine my surprise," Henderson said, "when I received your memo. 'Ah,' I said to myself, 'Mr. Vane has not forgotten. He has taken time out of his busy day to summon me, to speak to me, a humble clerk in the organization he now heads.' It is little things like that, Mr. Vane, that reveal the true greatness of a man."

VANE had regained control of himself. "Yes, Henderson," he said gravely, "I have remembered. Indeed, I have never forgotten."

"It is good of you to say so, sir." "I want to thank you, Henderson. From the bottom of my heart, I want to thank you." "It was nothing, sir." The disclaimer was tepid. "Nothing at all." "I disagree. However, as you, yourself, would undoubtedly say, actions speak louder than words. What is your present salary?" "Sixty a week, sir."

Vane smiled faintly as he saw the Chief Clerk lick his dry lips. "Effective today, Henderson, it is seventyfive."

"Oh, Mr. Vane -- !"

"Skip it, Henderson." "I don't know how -- "

"Please don't try. I'm a very busy

"Yes, yes, of course." Henderson beat a hasty retreat to the door. A thin smile lighted his ageless face. "As I have always said, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters -- "

Vane breathed a sigh of relief as the door closed. Another moment with Henderson and he'd have begun throwing things.

HE LIGHTED a cigarette and settled in his chair. Well, that was that. J. Hamilton Vane had been outmaneuvered and put to rout. Judas H. Priest, after eighteen years Henderson still had his number! Vane chuckled dryly. The surprise party was a great success — but the wrong person was surprised.

He pressed the key of the little box communicater on his desk. "Would you mind-stepping in here, Sherry?

She at least would be pleased with the outcome.

Armed with notebook and pencils,

Ruth Sherrill came into the office and seated herself across the desk from him.

Vane grinned ruefully. "Well. Sherry," he said, "you'll be glad to hear I didn't fire old Rain-in-the-Face after all."

"Yes, J. H., I am glad." Her voice was gentle, compassionate, unastonished.

"Great Scott, you might act a little surprised!"

"I'm really not, J. H. You see was sure you wouldn't."

'You were sure - !" Damn it all, he resented her casual certainty. "Have you been hanging around gypsy tearooms - or are you just naturally psychic?"

She did not flinch from his stormy gaze, but her eyes again had that alarming brightness before tears. She smiled wanly.

'It was nothing like that, J. H. I just had a feeling you would decide Calvin Henderson was an unworthy adversary, once you saw him. I was certain you would not demean yourself."

A dazzling light seemed suddenly to flood a dark corner of Vane's mind. Good gosh, she was right! To have taken such an easy and petty revenge on Henderson would have demeaned him; he would have felt like an utter heel after the false glitter had worn off his cheap triumph. What a fool he was not to have realized that!

"I'm AFRAID you overrated me, Sherry," he said humbly.

All at once the brightness of her eyes was awash with tears, her secretarial composure was shattered with

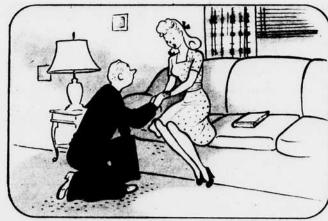

Vane reached across the desk, took her unprotesting hands in his. Tears on top of everything else were too much. He simply couldn't cope with a situation like this.

"Don't cry," he pleaded. "Please don't cry, Ruth."

Her tears continued to flow, but now the brightness was triumph, like an invincible sun in a summer shower. "You called me Ruth," she whispered. "J. H., you called me Ruth!"

Evidently that was exactly what she wanted to be called, Vane decided. Although the now rapid disintegration of his private glacier rather devastated him, he felt he was going to be equal to the crisis after all. Now if he could only somehow measure up to her high opinion of him everything would be fine.

"Call me Johnny," said J. Hamilton Vane.

"But you married me the last time you were in this port!"

Tots love these charming and sturdy play clothes

DRESS THEM GAILY!

For toddlers: These clothes meet the law and look fine too...

by Sally Dee

STALL-PRY PASHIOUS in wartime make a gay parade on Pram Row, a pretty spectacle at home. They bow, on the one hand, to mothers' cries for tot clothes that will wear well and ease the burden of the laundry load . . . on the other, to children's love of novelty and excitement . . . and they win the victory over material scarcities and labor shortages.

color and style are unrestricted; they pick up where economies in yardage and workmanship leave off. Solid colors and print-splashes are a gentle riot in all kinds of durable fabrics: gingham, cotton tweed, denim, broadcloth, gabardine, rayon, chintz, seersucker, cotton knits. Style puts its magic touch on everything from overalls to party dress . . . and demonstrates how quickly inventive, designing minds can turn from traditional fabrics that aren't so

outfit of men's work-wear denim. Designed as tot-sized versions of men's work jacket and overall, they make a hit with mothers... are featured by smart shops like Best & Company's Lilliputian Bazaar. Three-year-olds, like our tot model in the photograph, love them ... wriggle into them gleefully ... feel like small actors, cast for wonderful grown-up roles.

LIG FAVORITE with the little girls ... with mothers, too ... is the triple-purpose pinafore apron with the nursery-book charm of the one illustrated. A pinafore protects good clothes ... doubles as a dress ... pinch-hits for a sun suit. It can be cut from any bolt of cloth on the shelf ... can be self-trimmed with ruffles if novelty trimming is lacking ... can be ironed in a jiffy by inexpert fingers—for it opens up wide on an ironing board.

warring clothes for young fry meet peacetime standards of good workmanship. "Children's clothes are always better cut and have better workmanship than adult clothes," says one manufacturer. They have to. Seams are reinforced for tough wear . . . for the strain of growing bodies. Hems, though they abide by WPB law, allow liberally for beanstalk growth. Sashes and belts, though narrower, still allow for adjustments. Fashions are being designed for children, and as children, not as gill-sized editions of grownups.

TYPECAL DESIGNERS: Meet two who know what it takes to make young-fry fashions click ... who are tops in their respective fields.

One is Hulda Schorr, designer of imaginative clothes for children, aged one to six . . . wife of a leading manufacturer . . . mother of three children who, when she took up commercial designing, were the smallest of fry.

Mrs. Schorr developed her talent through togging out her own brood.
Next step was to transfer them to a little factory, which her husband bought for her. Since she took over the designing end of the business, the house of Bo Peep has become a fabulous success
... has expanded three times.

"All I did," says Hulda Schorr,
"was to introduce ideas of workmanship and fit which I'd learned at home, and to remedy prevailing ready-to-wear faults." She gave little girls dirndls and waistlines ... shortened and puffed-up dowdy little sleeves ... abbreviated and perked up the legs of little boys' pants ... gave to children appealing appliques and novelties which she knew her own children loved ... made clothes which tots, who have to, can get into and out of them-

seives ... created designs that can "take it" in daily wear and tear; in the tub; and on the ironing board.

Now meet Emily
Wilkens...who won her spurs in Hollywood, where she togged out children of famous movie families...who has now been signed up by Saks-Fifth Avenue and a manufacturer with national distribution. Her specialty is clothes for well-dressed little girls from six to 12.

Past smash hits to her credit include her story-book fashions, inspired by Civil War styles ... the Russian peasant designs, with plenty of color and dash ... the famous portrait fashions, which borrowed period charm from children's clothes painted by Renoir, Gainsborough, Bellows and Denis. Present smash hit is a series of French provincial fashions, based upon authentic peasant styles. Our eight-year-old model wears one of them. Translated into wearable, launderable ginghams and chintses, they are gay little dirndl dresses with ric-rac or fringe-trimmed shawls, which can be worn around the shoulders or around the head. They have plenty of appeal for little girls ... fulfill mothers' hopes that there will still be style for their dressconscious young daughters . . . that as long as there is a will to create smart, wearable, small-fry fashions, there will always be a way, thanks to the ingenuity of American designers.

MOVIE BABIES' salaries are based on age. Those under 31 days old get $75 daily; those from 31 to 91 days, $50; and those from one to six months, only $25. Incidentally, a baby cannot begin his movie career before he is 14 days old.

commandos in the British Army are trained to be completely self-reliant. They are not quartered in barracks, but are permitted to live where they choose, being given $10 a week for room and board. Jumpers Luck

A tense minute while men stepped out into space...but a minute they'll never forget

AMN Bill and his dumb ideas! He had to come out of it before tomorrow. Everyone said they were going up for a jump then—sure. Flinch stared down at his deadweight jumpers' shoes and thought.

"I'm so lousy with bad luck it's running out my ears," Bill said. "If I should jump before my luck breaks, d'ya know what would happen? My parachute would have moths in it."

"Aw — forget it," Flinch said.
"There's no such thing as a run of bad luck. Everyone has good luck and bad — all mixed up."

Bill shook his head. "I'm in a run of it now, all right. Not one thing breaks right for me."

"We had the roast beef you wanted, for dinner."

"Yeah — did you see the size of the piece I got?"

"And you got a letter this morning."

"From the guy that took my job. He got a raise." Bill lighted a cigarette. "You haven't seen me getting any mail from a certain party lately, have you?"

So that was it. Trace any soldier's blues back, and you come to a girl. She doesn't write. Or when she does, she tells what a fine time she's having and what the handsome sailor said about her eyes. This Gloria of Bill's was probably a two-timer. Damn it - something had to be done. Bill couldn't be dropped just because a dame had writer's cramp. Tomorrow would be their third jump, and everyone said the third jump was the hardest If Bill got up there thinking nothing could go right for him, he might easily lose his nerve. They give you three chances. If you don't jump, they don't say a word; they just bring you down and transfer you that night. You're through. A disgrace like that would almost kill Bill. He'd go through life hating himself.

Finch went outside and walked up and down, trying to think what to do. There wasn't a nervier fellow than Bill when he was right. Get him through this jump, and he'd probably be jake hereafter. There wasn't time to write Gloria and ask what was eating her that she couldn't buy a three-cent stamp. Whatever was done had to be done today. Could he fake a letter?

As soon as Bill had gone, Flinch went to Bill's locker and took out the little bundle of letters. He couldn't imitate that feminine handwriting. Then he got a swell idea. He took two letters and cut the fronts off neat and pasted them down onto two fresh envelopes the same size. He put blank paper inside and sealed them up. He'd get someone to hand them to Bill the last thing before they went up, so Bill wouldn't have a chance to open them. He'd be all bucked up thinking she had written. When he did open them there'd be hell, but Bill would have jumped okay then, and he'd see there wasn't anything to this streak of bad luck business.

One second black against the sky, and then he was gone

It worked fine. Bud Jones handed Bill the letters just as they marched to the packing shed. Said they got mixed up with his mail. Bill broke into a grin that split his face. Looked at them as though he couldn't believe it. "Well I'm damned... what d'ya know about that?" He waved them at Flinch and then stuck them in his pocket.

Flinch felt fine. He'd been so ashamed of the lousy trick he was playing that he'd kept away from Bill all the morning. "All okay now?" Flinch sang out.

"You bet," said Bill. "You bet your sweet life. I'll jump off the moon if any guy will land me on it."

They strapped on the chutes, went through inspection, and marched to the waiting plane, numbered off and climbed in. Bill was just ahead of Flinch. Some were pretty white, scared and not ashamed to show it. A couple, like always, jabbered away about nothing to fool themselves. Bill was the calmest of the lot.

They threw out Oscar, the Dummy, to get the wind direction. Down below was the ambulance — waiting. The first group stood up, hooked up and each man inspected the man in front. Number Twelve okay. Number Eleven okay, and so on. Then the first man was in the doorway. "Go," said the Sarge. One — two — three — they went out the door like clockwork. But Number Four didn't go. He stood crouched in the door, looking down at the field 800 feet below. "Are you going to jump?" the Sarge asked — nice. With their nerves the way they were, he couldn't rile them.

"You're damn right I'm going to jump," the kid yelled back — but he didn't move. They flew round to the field again, and he got his second chance. "You're damn right I'm going to jump," he yelled still louder, but his voice had a crack in it and his knuckles were white. The third time it came out in a sob. "You're — damn right — I'm going — to jump." He slumped down, and the sergeant helped him back to the bench.

And Bill was the next man to go! A thing like that was enough to break anyone's nerves. The gang were trying not to look at the kid sobbing there. But not Bill. He gave Flinch a jab with his elbow and grinned as though he were just going to jump off a jeep car. One second black against the sky, and then he was gone. Flinch wiped his brow with relief. But what was that! "Pull the emergency," the sergeant was yelling, hanging out the door looking wild. "Pull your cord!" Bill's line had fouled. He was dropping like a bomb. "Oh — the damn fool!" The sergeant was nearly crazy. "Why doesn't he pull it?"

FLINCH couldn't breathe. "Let me out," he said, and shoved the sergeant aside and went, wishing to heaven his own chute wouldn't open. Down there was his best friend—dropping to his death. Killed by him. Wise guy—playing tricks. Bill's hunch had been right.

Flinch's head jerked like a blow from a fist, and his chute opened up, a big white flower. Down he came, sick with thinking what the ambulance men were taking off the field. He took the fall with his shoulders and rolled over and lay, not making any move to get up.

"Anything broken, Flinch?"
There was Bill bending over him.
"Best landing I've made yet. The emergency opened up like an old lady's parasol. I counted an extra thousand just to try my nerve. I knew nothing could go wrong—now my luck has broken—"

Flinch sat up. "Damn you and your fool luck," he exploded. "I faked those letters. Your girl didn't write. That shows you what damn nonsense it all is. She didn't write — and you jumped okay."

Bill laughed. "I knew you faked them," he said. "Those letters you pasted up were from my Aunt Bessie — she died last month."

Flinch stared. "Well then -- "

"Oh, my luck broke all right. Gloria's arriving this afternoon. I got a wire. She'd been sick. I may marry the girl if she sticks around until I can raise some cash."

He slapped Flinch's shoulder and grinned like a fool. What could you do with a dumb kid like that?

Telephone time and service are at war

MAKE IT SNAPPY!

That's the rule for wartime telephoning. Why? Listen in ...

by Emily Post

NE urgent wartime requirement is the speeding up of our use of the telephone - also, the necessity for taking with good temper occasional shortcomings in telephone service.

Every minute we talk on a telephone line, a certain amount of equipment is in use. Until we release this by disconnecting, no one else can use any part of it. Also, the longer the distance of our call the greater is the number of operators involved.

At this point it is important to emphasise courtesy due to the operators. Now even more than ever before, they are under unusual strain; and it is poor sportsmanship to hold them accountable for what they cannot help.

If we could see our operator putting in her plugs over and over again on long-distance calls to ask for our exchange, we would not snap her head off because she does not put our call through more quickly. If she finally calls us only to ask if we "still want that line," we should realize the jam she would be in, were she to put long distance through and then find no reply at our end. An acute sense of timing is a war requirement in our personal use of the telephone. Most people are very conscious of time when talking across hundreds of miles, but only the frugal are keenly aware of the needless length of each local call - except when charges on the telephone bill induce a temporary period of restraint.

Be Brief

HERETOFORE, the problem of those of us who are busy has been how to induce an idle chatterer to let us cut off! But now it is different. We not only can but must learn to be brief or we will find our telephone service rationed.

So to those who have asked for wartime rules, the following are offered: Keep on the tip of your tongue what you have to say and say it promptly. Receiving the reply, say "good-by" and hang up. If you have several things to say, write them down and read them off. Best of all, keep a clock near the telephone - one with minutes clearly marked on it. This will prevent your thinking a 10-minute talk was less than three. You should, of course, keep pad and sharpened pencil beside the telephone. To exclaim: "Wait a minute till I find something to write on!" does not give a picture of a well-ordered house or mind. Don't leave the telephone while you search for the address or the letter, but call back. Or, if it is not a pressing matter, mail the informa-

Be Patient

A DETAIL to keep in mind is to wait long enough to permit one to come to the phone before concluding that no one is at home and

If you have a party line, cultivate awareness of the sound of a 'click'' - meaning that someone has lifted off the receiver. Be ready to ask, if you are in the middle of your message: "Is someone wanting this wire? We'll be through in a minute." When it clicks again, say: "All clear! Good-by, Mary," and hang up.

A peace-time custom now doubly out of place is that of letting a four- or five-year-old child answer the telephone. A lot of time is wasted trying to make the child understand a message, or even to find out if mother is at home. .

WAR TIME

I am sorry to be lacking in tolerance for our younger generation. But if I am to hold my place as a critic of manners, it is really up to me to do what I can to make them realize that it is not the feebly old or the weakly ill who call upon "Information" to a degree that is literally crippling to the service. Investigation has proved that the principal offenders are the lazy young, who have seemingly neither the strength, nor muscle, nor the sense of fairness to lift themselves off their spines to look up a number in a city telephone book. They ask "Information" to do it for them. The result is a serious overloading of the telephone equipment; and a retarding of the war effort — and not lightly!

Be Careful

ONE last word is on the care we should take of our irreplaceable telephone equipment. Don't stand the instrument where it is easily knocked off, or near a radiator, or in the very hot sun, or where it can be rained on.

How? Serve these new egg dishes, created especially for you . . .

by Domohia Taylor

FRANCIS, executive chef of the Hotel Roosevelt in midtown Manhattan, and the 17 chefs under him know how to outsmart food restrictions ... win the battle of production for one of the country's most famous restaurants . . . turn every food into a big success. So we asked Francis to give us some special recipes for one of the U.S.A.'s most plentiful protein foods - the egg.

We hear the British dream up ways to cook their one-egg-a-month each. But in the U.S., commercial egg production reaches astronomical figures . . . private hens scratch and cackle numerously in the swankiest suburbs ... strut their stuff in the cities' backyards. Housewives roll up their sleeves to win the homefront battle of the kitchen . . . accumulate new files of recipes. That's where Francis steps in to help.

Bost Seller

First, however, he takes a minute out to mention Escallopine of Veal Glace Roosevelt - the best seller in the Roosevelt restaurant. It's made of thin slices of veal, sautéed, and served with a sauce of shallots,

Francis creates recipes for THE WEEK readers

mushrooms, white wine, cream, egg. yolk, chopped parsley and chives. Just when it's ready to serve, the sauce is poured over the veal and the whole dish is popped under the broiler flame to brown.

About food shortages, Francis is a practicing optimist. "A good chef goes on serving good food regardless of changes - and so can a homemaker." he says. "Present wartime limitations stimulate a cook's imagination. She can create savory dishes from available foods if she gives thought and care to seasoning and cooking."

The egg recipes Francis creates for This WEEK readers have a fine sophistication at a small cost of cash or ration points. Most of the ingredients are unrationed and easy to get. Others, such as cheese, are used economically for flavor and satisfying characteristics. Cheese adds its extra protein, too ... only a quantity of tomato is called for, enough to contribute a desirable fillip of taste and texture . . . vinegar and capers give zest and new taste-characteristics to shirred eggs. Try the recipes on the next page-and find out for yourself!

• Food Rationing is teaching us to look ahead and plan ahead. Plan meals for the whole week, preferably. List foods and amounts to be purchased. Count points required for rationed foods. Then, if necessary, substitute unrationed foods.

Use Hon-rationed Foods. Fresh fruits and vegetables, etc. Cereals, too, are plentiful. There's an abundance of wheat. Plenty of Wheaties. Enough for "seconds"! * * *

Dinners and lunches may not be quite so hearty now. This means breakfast is more important than ever! Start your family out each day with a nourishing breakfast.

What for Breakfast? At least the breakfast three-some: Fruit, milk, and the whole grain or enriched cereal products. (Such as Wheaties, tousted whole wheat flakes.) Important nourishment in these three basic foods. If desired, add eggs, bacon, etc.

Cheer Em On with this breakfast, tomorrow. Suggested by my staff: Sliced Oranges Wheaties with Milk or Cream Toasted French Rolls Sparkling Grape Jam Coffee, Cocoa or Milk is half done. Does this wise old saying give you some new ideas about breakfast?

WATELL begun — that's what every recious day should be in times like these. And your day is well begun when you get outside a good, nourishing breakfast.

"Don't skip breakfast," says U. S. Surgeon General Thomas Parran. Don't skip breakfast, especially now that other meals are getting skimpier.

Here's a nourishing breakfast dish that's easy to take—a man-sized bowl of Wheaties, "Breakfast of Champions," with plenty of milk or cream and fruit. Three basically important foods here to give you something to go on. Do you know why Wheaties are America's favorite whole wheat flakes? They have a 'second-helping" flavor - and provide all of whole wheat's known essential nourishment. This includes a concentrated supply of food-energy, the "fuel" on which our bodies run.

You can bank on Wheaties, "Breakfast of Champions." It's the breakfast cereal for the hard-working champions of 1943, the breakfast cereal for you.

On the Atlantic Front in the U-Boat War

Heroes, mostly unsung, of the grim struggle of Atlantic convoys to run the gantlet of U-boat wolfpacks are the seamen of the ships bearing the vital cargoes of war. For the men huddled on that liferaft in the picture above rescue is at hand now, but written on them is the long agony of wintry, buffeting seas since their ship was torpedoed. Lifelines from the Coast Guard cutter which has found them are caught and held by numbed, exhausted men as the ship comes alongside. They are saved to sail the rayaged seas again!

And here another survivor of a torpedoed ship has the vigilance of a Coast Guard cutter to thank for his rescue. Almost helpless from exhaustion, he is about to be hauled up to deck from the small boat by the rope tied about his waist. Coast Guardsmen lean out to haul him up in a tumbling sea.

Hope must have been a far thing from the men in this little rubber raft before a Coast Guard cutter found them. On the face of the man at right is written all the agony of freezing hours on a heavy sea in that little dish since his ship went down.

A case of almost, but not quite, too late is the rescue of this survivor of a torpedoed ship from a little bobbing rubber raft in the North Atlantic. Collapsing as he is houled aboard a cutter, the man is carried by Coast Guardsmen to food and warmth below.

Women and Boys Are 'Workin' on the Railroad'

Bouncing around on top of box cars was never the safest job for a man. Mrs. Georgianna Wells knew that before she took the job of brakeman in the Pennsylvania yards at Philadelphia. So, as shown here, she takes everything that goes with it.

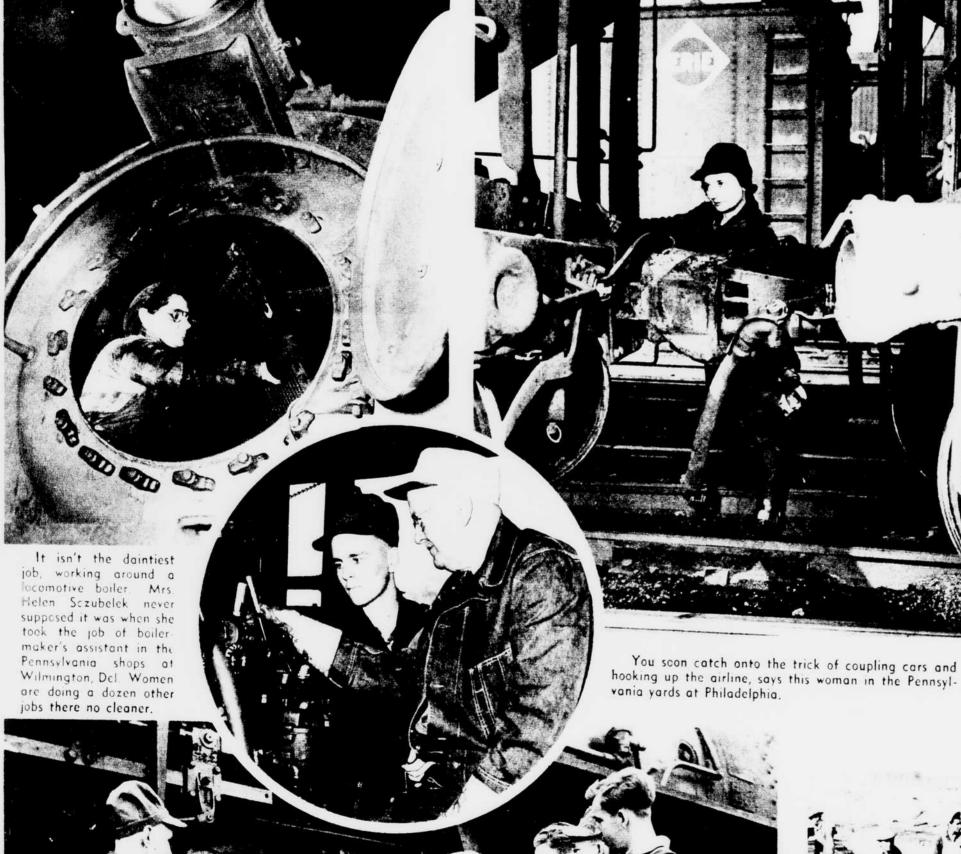

A couple of roundhouse girls enjoy a joke in the freight yards at San 🥌 Francisco. These hearties are dressed for the job, they like it, like its man sized pay and like serving their country in

YOU see strange sights in the freight yards and the shops of some of the country's big railroad systems these days. Railroading was never classed among the light jobs for men, but women are fast measuring up to all its tough demands as brakemen, trainmen, shop worker and even section laborer. With much of its manpower drawn into the war, the Pennsylvania Railroad alone now has nearly 15,000 women in manual jobs. They are a vital force in keeping the Nation's wartime transportation

Many of the women had some second-hand knowledge of railroading before they went into it, as the wives of railroad men who have gone to war. And many of these men are serving the Army in its railway operating battalions, ready to take over and operate railroads in any far-flung part of the world. To serve both its own need and that of the Army for more trained railroaders, the Illinois Central Railroad also is training youths under draft age in rail jobs.

After all, there are cranes to swing 500-pound car wheels around in the Pennsylvania shops at Wilmington. And Mrs. Iva Filiaggi, machinist's helper, knows just how to clamp the hooks on the wheels and put the crane to work.

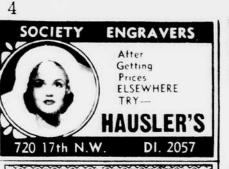

In these war days there's a dream coming true for youngsters who've always wished themselves in the cab of a roaring locomotive. These under-draft-age youths, attending the Illinois Central's railroad school at Carbondale, III., learn about locomotives from a man who knows, Engineer Sydney Laws. In the cab (oval) Laws is with Charles Wilson, one of the group of trainee-firemen.

They're in the Army, but they're still railroadin'. Men of the Railway Operating Battalion at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., more than 90 per cent of them former rail workers, train as a smoothly organized force to do everything from laying track, as they are doing here, to operating a complete rail system that may be taken over by the Army anywhere in the world. Dinner at 8-at 14th and Main!

War is grim, but even in wartime, living can be gay. The Lindsey girls laugh as they sit at dinner, their long day over. But the war job each is doing is no laughing matter. You don't see Dad . . . bis shift's from four 'til midnight. You can't see Joe . . . he's somewhere in North Africa. Joe is missed but nobody broods ... they're all too busy backing him up.

Katherine's in a war plant . . . Martha's in the WAAC. Even 13-year-old Virginia does duty as OCD Junior Messenger. Mother? She gets the meals, does the housework, keeps family morale high, and still manages to get in three days a week as Staff Assistant at Red Cross.

Yes, the Lindseys are an ideal American family. And the sooner millions of others follow their example, the sooner we'll win this war. Are you doing all you can - could you too take a full-time job? You can learn about many jobs open to you by calling at your local branch of the U.S. Employment Service.

Katherine didn't think she'd be able to swing that war plant job - but she's a great success, according to Bill, the foreman. It's "precision" work, and her careful hand and sure eye make her a match for any man. And the husky boy who held down the job before is now in the armed forces.

Two years ago it was a roadster, now Martha jockeys a Jeep for Uncle Sam. She's thrilled at serving in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps and happy in her new associations. The WAAC has hundreds of different jobs for patriotic girls like Martha, with good pay and fine living conditions

Before Mrs. Lindsey can leave for her Red Cross assignments, she's got the housework to do. There's sewing and mending and polishing, to make things last . . . planning nutritious meals and shopping with points as well as dollars. All these things, done cheerfully, keep the Lindsey homefires burning.
