Jeffers Resigns As Rubber Czar; Work Praised

Job Done, He Says; Receives Tribute From President

By JAMES Y. NEWTON. Rubber Director William M. Jeffers, who successfully guided the gigantic rubber program through many official storms, resigned quietly last night, telling

President Roosevelt that "the big job was done.' Assuring the President that the rubber problem "is well in hand." the stocky Irishman said. "the greatest contribution I can make turn to an on-the-job handling of the operations of the Union Pacific Railroad," Mr. Jeffers is president of the railroad The President accepted the resignation and wrote Mr. Jeffers that "you have performed a real public service and you have my sincere appreciation . . . much as a dislike to have you leave the public service at this time, I can not ask you to make a further sacrifice."

Dewey Named Acting Director. Col. Bradley Dewey, the deputy director, was named acting director of the rubber office. It was learned that Mr. Jeffers suggested Col. Dewey as his successor, and it was believed he will get the job and the full title as well. Head of the Boston chemical firm of Dewey & Almy, Mr. Dewey came to Washington a year ago and has had almost complete charge of the huge synthetic program. The outspoken Mr. Jeffers denied reports that he was resigning as a result of another disagreement with Chairman Donald M. Nelson of the War Production Board. He said he was "mad with no one and was having "no trouble." He answered an emphatic "no" to a question as to whether he would accept another Government posi-

"I've got a hell of a big railroad that needs attention," Mr. Jeffers told reporters. "It is just a case of feeling that I can contribute more in this emergency out there where are having traffic than I can sitting here in Washington. There is only one job that belongs to me and I want to get 25,000 tons will be S synthetic, the basic type to be used in passenger car tires and heavy-duty military tires. Mr. Jeffers has said he expects to have 5,000,000 synthetic passenger car tires released for civilian automobiles by the end of this year, and 30,000,000 tires in 1944. After recent labor-management conferences, he said he was shooting for an immediate upturn in tire production which would carry this year's output even beyond the 5,000,000 mark.

Colorful Figure. Mr. Jeffers undoubtedly is one of the most colorful figures brought to Washington during the war. An observer summed up his Government career well when he remarked that submission of the resignation to Mr. Roosevelt was the only "quiet" thing Mr. Jeffers had done since coming to the Capital last September. The Baruch rubber report of last

Return of Murphy From North Africa Is Expected Soon

By HAROLD D. CALLENDER. (Copyright, 1943, by the New York Times and N.A.N.A.))

Robert D. Murphy, chief civil affairs officer on the staff of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and holding the rank of minister representing President Roosevelt, is expected soon to return to Washngton for conference with the President and the State Department, and it is understood that he may not return to Algiers.

It is pointed out here that Mr. Murphy is considered by his superiors to have done extremely good work in North Africa before and since the Allied landing there, and it is said that if he retires from that post, it will be because of ill health and the strain of the last year. It is understood that no decision yet has been made regarding his transfer or his successor.

There are reports that the War Department would suggest he be replaced by a military man, and the names of Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, provost marshal general, and Brig. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, have been mentioned as possible success-

U. S. Tank Production Cut 40% at Request Of Soviet and Britain

The Army's tank production program has been cut back approximately 40 per cent in the last six or seven months, principally because of cancellations of British and Russian orders for medium tanks.

Maj. Gen. Lucius D. Clay, director of materiel for the Army Service Forces, said yesterday in an interview that the cutback represents a dollar value reduction in this year's program of slightly more than one-

For 1944, the reduction will be about 50 per cent, he said, but production will be still slightly ahead of 1943. For both years, said Gen. Clay, the original schedules were fixed nearly two years ago.

Few Plant Shutdowns. Few if any plant shutdowns have resulted from the cutback. Gen. Clay said he knew of no prime contractors whose plants had been closed, though some sections of larger plants may have been shut down. The result among the many thousands of subconstructors is more difficult to determine, he added, but even among these the majority, at least, had shifted to other war production.

The cutback began early this spring, when the Russians suddenly canceled orders for between 5,000 and 6,000 medium tanks, Gen. Clay said. That was followed shortly by wholesale reduction of British orders. Subsequently, the Russians renewed some of their tank ordersthis explains the higher production outlook for 1944 than for 1943but their overall requirements for American tanks still are only about one-third the original 1943-44 sched-

All the factors influencing the action of the Russian government are not known, said Gen. Clay, but the primary consideration undoubtedly was that the Red Army needed other things - particularly trucks and locomotives-more than additional tanks. Shipping space and port facilities were limited, so the tank orders were reduced.

Many Reasons Given. (A similar explanation had come earlier from other quarters. As long ago as April, the Russians cutback was attributed officially to "the assistance given to that country to build up its own tank industry, to changes in battle conditions, and to the limiting of port facilities." Also, the Red Army is understood to have a substantial "windfall" of captured German armor.

(No such full explanation is available on the British cancellations, but it was said in informed quarters that probably had overestimated their tank requirements because of an optimistic time-table on the war -assuming more rapid progress of operations, and therefore greater losses of armored equipment than have occurred.) Contrasted with these heavy cutbacks in British and Russian requirements for American tanks, said Gen. Clay, is the reduction of estimated requirements for our own Army by only 10 per cent. All American armored divisions are now equipped .with medium tanks, he added.

Shift to Locomotives.

When the lease-lend orders were trimmed heavily, the plants first affected were those of three locomotive manufacturers-Lima, Baldwin and American. There were no plant closings, however, said Gen. Clay-all three were shifted immediately to production of locomotives for Army and lease-lend requirements. Still other tank plants had to be shifted, however. The tank orders at Pacific Car and Foundry, Seattle, next were canceled, and this plant is now converting to production for the Boeing Aircraft Co. The decision to cancel the tank orders at Pacific Car and Foundry rather than at some other tank plant, said Gen. Clay, was based on the critical labor situation in Seattle and the urgent necessity to increase the output of heavy bombers by Boeing. Latest of the large tank contract terminations is that with Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Co. Chicago, where a $60,000,000 order is being tapered off, with the plant shifting to production of aluminum parts for the afreraft industry. With all the cutbacks, said Gen. Clay, there are still three large working at capacity to fill replacement needs of the United States and its Allies.

War Mobilization Director James Justice and a former Senator from South Carolina, said last night there was "no excuse" for a statement that he would interest himself in next year's contest for the Senate in South Carolina.

Peace Calls Sounded By Italian Journals As Invaders Advance

BERN, Swizerland, Sept. 4 .-The Italian press today commented on the Allied invasion of the Italian mainland with unrelieved pessimism, which was regarded as virtually preparing the people for a coup de grace, and some of the newspapers renewed their calls for peace.

La Stampa of Turin said Italians must "find a way out of the war" in the "quickest and best way possible."

The Badoglio government, La Stampa added, is "conscious of this necessity and favors it."

After displaying a calm, almost Indifferent manner toward the invasion yesterday, the press broke out today with editorials which contained few words of resistance.

All Italy Exposed.

"The tragedy is in its culmination," declared Rome's Il Messaggero, adding direly that further attacks are "possible rather probable, at every point on the peninsula. All Italy is exposed to blows."

Turin's Gazetta Del Popolo commented that defense of the southern part of Calabria presented many difficulties against an enemy holding dominion of the sea and air.

(A manifesto demanding "an immediate peace with all democratic nations" and abolition of "the guilty monarchy" has been distributed throughout Italy by the Italian League for Human Rights, the Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter said in a dispatch reported to the Office of War Information tonight.)

Raid Impresses Italy.

The pounding which American Fortress bombers gave Bolzano and Trento Thursday, crippling rail traffic through the Brenner Pass, had impressed Italy, a Milan dispatch to the newspaper Der Bund said.

The fact that the Allies decided to strike the southernmost point of the Italian mainland, instead of hitting farther north, provided the chief surprise for Italians concerning the invasion, a Rome dispatch to the Gazette de Lausanne said.

This dispatch, passed by the Italian censor, said that behind the Italy, but may be planning to use "apathetic attitude" of the Italian bases in Southern Italy for an atpopulation still rests hopes for peace | tack on the Balkans. -hopes which have been given impetus throughout Italy by words

CHURCHILL LUNCHES WITH WRITERS-British Prime Minister Churchill, in Washington after attending the Quebec conference, attended a luncheon given in his honor yesterday by press organizations. On the left is Raymond Gram Swing, radio commentator, and on the right, Barnet Nover, president of the club. Mr. Churchill gave an "off the record" talk. The luncheon was sponsored by Overseas Writers, the National Press Club and the White House Correspondents' Association, with members of the Gridiron Club, the Women's National Press Club and radio press organizations as guests.

Sicilians Cheer Allied Troops As Invasion of Italy Is Started

By DANIEL DE LUCE. MESSINA, Sicily, Sept. 2 (Delayed).—Carefree Sicilians gawked, cheered and sold fruit to the Allied invasion army deploying along Messina Strait today. Although 1,000,000 civilians from Syracuse to Messina could easily guess that the next few hours would bring an attack against Italy by troops who conquered their island, they waved British and Canadian troops on to battle as if they were their own sons and brothers.

For several days long lines of troops, guns and motor transport have moved through the cities to docks for embarkation. The highways were packed today with forces moving to the beaches directly opposite the tip of Italy.

In virtually every cove, landing craft were drawn up on the sand awaiting their cargoes of men and weapons of war.

Handed Out Bouquets.

Scores of "ducks," those amazing 21/2-ton amphibious trucks which were the mechanical stars of the bumper around sharp curves in the mountainside coastal highway. They were the prize sight of the day for the Sicilians.

Mussolini Protected By Nazis on Island, Italian Paper Says

By the Associated Press. AT THE ITALIAN FRONTIER. Sept. 4.—The newspaper La Stampa of Turin reported today that Benito Mussolini still is held on Ponza under German protection. This supported a report that custody of the fallen Duce had caused a conflict between the gov-ernment of Marshal Pietro Badoglio and the Nazis, with the latter holding Mussolini and threatening to restore him to power.

This report added it was believed that Mussolini soon would be moved to a new location, possibly in Germany where Roberto Farinacciformer Fascist party secretary and Grand Council member now spoken of as an Italian Quisling—escaped disguised in an SS uniform. Count Galeazzo Ciano, Mussolini's son-inlaw, also is said to have gone to Germany after a Nazi-aided flight from his house in Rome. Meanwhile, the Italian press continued its intense campaign against former Fascist chiefs, while the Badoglio government stepped up its arrests of leaders and sequestration f their properties.

patch form Chiasso said the latest arrests included Marshal Emilio de Bono and Luigi Freddi, Italian movie chief. But the government also was speeding release of anti-Fascists, among them Francesco Zanardi, mayor of Bologna from 1914 to 1919. The Tribune de Lausanne said the anti-Fascist campaign clearly was directed toward discrediting forever in the eyes of the masses the former regime whose return would mean "resumption of complete Axis politics -the principal if not the only cause of the fall of Mussolini."

It added that the Germans had planned a coup similar to that in Norway in 1940, planning to oust Badoglio and replace him with a cabinet fully devoted to Germany with Farinacci in the role of a Vid-

BALTIMORE, Sept. 4.—One reason for the speed of the American advance in Sicily was the efficient timing and co-ordination used by the Ordnance Department in getting ammunition to the front line, the Holabird Ordnance Depot reported today.

Months before the invasion, the report stated, every possible ord-nance operation in Sicily was carefully timed and long experience enabled ordnance to predict almost to the minute how long a given field operation would take.

Holabird officials said that "in unloading from a railroad car to the ground, or from a truck to the ground, one ordnance soldier unloaded ammunition at the rate of 1,665 pounds per hour for four continuous hours. "Whenever possible, he rested four down, hours. The soldier's average in unloading ammunition during one day was 13,332 pounds." The average time for unloading a train of 30-ton cars was reported at 31/2 hours with 11 men working on each car if the unloading was from side only, and 18 men if conditions allowed unloading from both

"A deep revolt is brewing inside Germany which must in the end be more catastrophic for Hitler and for Nazidom than even the horror of the air war by night," Premier Smuts said.

Although he cautioned that the Allies may have "very heavy losses" in the coming year, he declared "we are now rapidly approaching the great moment which will open the final phase of the war."

For example, in the Poltava region, the vital area between the Donets and the bend of the Dnieper (where the decision probably will be taken), the Russians are driving for the Dnieper on a broad front of something like 120 miles, instead of hastily thrusting forward spearheads which can be lopped off by flank attack. The results obtained are slower and less spectacular. But they are solid.

It is notable that while the main Russian effort is in the south, with the destruction of the German Donets army as its objective, the Russians appear to have plenty of reserves to keep up their pressure in the Smolensk and Bryansk areas. so the Germans can hardly dare to switch troops southward from the central front lest the Russians break through clear to the German lifeline on which all their Russian operations depend—the Leningrad-

Lack of Religion in Reich

BERN, Sept. 4.—The German bishops of the Fulda Conference have expressed regret in a pastoral letter that even "in this dangerous and costly period in our father-land" the battle has been continued

The letter, dated August 19, was read in most Catholic pulpits in Germany on August 29 and declared that education in the Reich was aimed at "de-Christianizing" people, especially youth. Evacuated children in camps, schools and homes have been refused religious instruction and attendance at church and the reception of the sacraments is often difficult, if not impossible, the letter said.

"Heavy pressure" has been exerted on many Christians amounting to "almost complete suppression" in the Warthegau area, the bishops asserted.

The letter was signed by Adolf Cardinal Bertram of Breslau, Michael Cardinal Faulhaber of Muinstitutions and correctional insti- nich, Theodore Cardinal Innitzer tutions where such foods would not of Vienna and by 26 archbishops and six other representatives of German religious districts.

Thousands of Soldiers On Leave Delayed By Baltimore Wreck

BALTIMORE, Sept. 4 .- Five persons were injured and thousands of vacation-bound soldiers and Washington Government workers were delayed more than an hour today when two Pennsylvania Railroad trains, a Washington-to-New York passenger and a south-bound freight, sideswiped on the main Philadelphia-Baltimore run.

The injured, all of whom were treated at Baltimore hospitals, were: Mrs. Martha Hedler, 24, of Baltimore, fractured nose Frank Hedler, her husband, 28, shoulder abrasion.

James Quigley, 33, of Baltimore elbow and back cuts. Louis White, 24, Wilmington, Del. brakeman on the passenger train cuts of foot William H. Richards, 28, of Jersey City, fireman on the passenger train, possible arm fracture.

Apparently Ran Through Signal. The accident occurred at the north end of the new Bayview freight yard, one of the largest in the East. J. A. Schwab, superintendent of the railroad's Maryland division, said apparently one of the trains went through a signal and the two collided as the freight was pulling from the main line into a yard

The freight was bound to Baltimore from the Enola freight yards near Harrisburg, Pa.

The passenger engine was derailed as were two passenger coaches, a freight car and three loaded coal

Most of the injured persons were riding in the second coach of the train, which was thrown on its side. the freight car crushed down on

Crews Work to Clear Line. While railroad wrecking crews worked feverishly to clear the main line for the heavy holiday traffic, numerous trains, both North and South bound waited for passage on the only one of the four main line tracks not blocked by wreckage or rerouting through yard tracks around the scene of the accident.

Immediately after the crash, passenger trains were thrown an hour and one-half off schedule, a spokesman from Mr. Schwab's office re-Late in the afternoon, however, trains were no more than half an hour behind schedule, he added. Numerous soldiers on trains blocked by the wreckage were reported to have walked to the nearby Philadelphia - Baltimore boulevard and hitch-hiked rather than wait for the road to be cleared.

A simulated bombing attack with searchlights picking up the "enemy" plane and 90-mm. antiaircraft guns firing dummy ammunition at the invader will be a spectacular night feature of the show.

Big Gun Arrives.

One of yesterday's highlights was the arrival of an 8-inch gun, the heaviest piece of mobile artillery used by the American Army. The weight of the gun and breech mechanism is 15 tons. It fires a 240pound armor-piercing projectile a distance of 20 miles.

The gun carriage and crane were in charge of a crew of specialists from Aberdeen, Md. A large crowd gathered yesterday as the crane first lifted the carriage from its rubber-tired mount and put it in exhibit position. The gun tube. nearly 34 feet long, then was hoisted by the crane onto the carriage. The gun and mount weigh 35 tons.

Another formidable piece of artillery to be exhibited is a 240-mm. Ordnance experts emphasized that the same carriage and prime movers serve the Army's heaviest hitting field pieces—the 240-mm. howitzer and 8 inch gun. The 240-mm. howitzer fires a heavier shell than the 8 inch gun, but the latter has a longer range. Specialists from the 293d Ordnance Company (MM), Camp Devens, Mass., set up the exhibit and will explain its operation during the show.

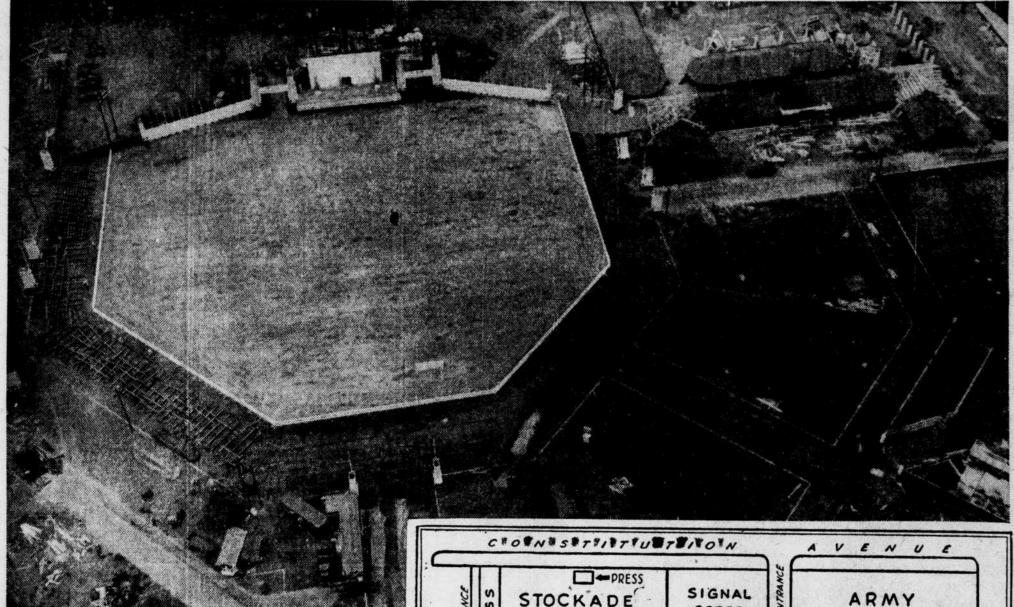

Landing Boats Arrive. Also arriving were boats used by the Army in landing operations. They were hauled to the grounds on large trailers.

Another "interesting" arrival was that of a detachment of 18 WACS from Daytona Beach, Fla., in charge of First Lt. Wilma S. Vogel and First Sergt. Anna H. Depriest. It was explained they were selected, not only for their ability and soldierly appearance, but also from a photogenic standpoint. Mr. Jeffers had many battles with Mr. Nelson. Following one argument in the WPB chief's office, Mr. Jeffers told his "boss" in effect though in more expressive language, that he could "go jump in the lake." When Mr. Jeffers arrived in Washington the rubber program was in great confusion. He quickly gathered a staff of the Nation's most competent construction men, rubber experts and chemists. He selected the processes for making synthetic rubber from a huge number which were being promoted and set to work erecting the plants. Rapid progress has been made since until now the rubber program is far from America's greatest problem.

First 'Troop Sleeper' Viewed by Officials At Union Station

The first "troop sleeper," a tripledecker Pullman car designed especially to transport soldiers in comfort, was on exhibition yesterday at Union Station.

High Army and Navy officers and others viewed the new type of sleeping car and pronounced it an in-genious coach which looked thoroughly comfortable.

The car will accommodate 30 men. It opens in the center, and the three-high berths contain standard Pullman equipment—springs, mat-tresses and bedding. There is ample aisle space, and at each end of the car are wash basins, toilets and drinking water. Plenty of window space has been provided throughout the car.

Seats in Daytime.

During the daytime, the top berths remain fixed, while the middle and lower berths form long seats, giving the car somewhat the appearance of Continental coaches. The troop sleeper was the first to come out of the Pullman-Standard Car manufacturing plant at Michigan City, Ind., and it arrived here yesterday morning attached to the Pennsylvania Railroad's crack Liberty Limited.

Some 1,200 of the new cars are to be delivered to the Defense Plant Corp., subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corp., by the end of

Postwar Use Planned. While the sleepers will be used exclusively by troops, they are similar in principle to designs which Pullman worked out just before the war. The company, it was announced, expects to introduce these on a wide scale after the war. Thus, in the postwar era, ticket agents may tell prospective passengers: "I haven't a lower berth. But I can give you a top or a middle, whichever you prefer."

The cost of the troop sleepers is described as a fraction of the expense of building a standard Pullman car. Non-critical materials are used in the new type to a large

Those who inspected the sample car included Maj. Gen. Charles P. Gross, chief of the Army Transportation Corps., and Brig.-Gen. Robert H. Wylle, assistant chief in charge of operations.

It is doubtful if any person in the world, holding a job of responsibility comparable to that of Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the world's largest fleet and chief of naval operations, leads such a disciplined life.

On Tuesdays Admiral King lunches across Constitution avenue in the former Public Health Building that now houses the offices of the United Nations joint chiefs of staff. At these affairs the heavy strategy is discussed. Besides Admiral King's air and submarine officers there will be Gen. George C. Marshall, Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of staff to President Roosevelt, and Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces. At these meetings the plan of battle takes form. Usually these meetings have to do with military action that is strictly an American affair, a joint Army-Navy attack.

Workers Over Nation To Mark Labor Day At Machines

Tomorrow's Labor Day will find workers in war plants throughout the country, along with those who toil for the Federal war agencies in Washington, carrying on their daily tasks to hasten victory instead of spending the holiday in traditional fashion.

Countless others employed in essential industries will keep their machines moving instead of enjoying the picnics and parades which always have marked the day.

Yet there's still a holiday for a vast number who work in stores, banks and offices, and these workers are resting—or trying to travel today and tomorrow.

Union Station Thronged. Union Station officials said the throngs that gathered in size as the day wore on yesterday were larger than usual, and they've become used to daily crushes, with peaks at every weekend.

While incoming and outgoing servicemen on leave made up a majority of the travelers, there were enough civilians to indicate that many had disregarded the advice of Joseph B. Eastman, director of defense transportation, to stay home.

The railroads, having put on all the extra equipment they have, said. in effect, "Come and get it." There was a scramble for unreserved space. and there were no berths or Pullman seats to be had, except in rare instances where reservations had not been taken up. Long lines clamored in vain at the uptown ticket office and at the station for reserved space.

While it was thought that the noholiday, no-leave edict in Government departments and bureaus had slowed to an extent the travel out of Washington, this was not noticeable on the surface. As one veteran station attache put it, "I don't miss any one."

Priority travelers used most of the plane space this week end. These include military and naval personnel and Government officers on official business. Others who hadn't made reservations were told, when they phoned or went to ticket offices, that there wasn't a chance.

The holiday week end demand did not greatly increase gasoline consumption in the metropolitan area, Harry Wainwright, representative of the Gasoline Retailers of Washington, Inc., reported. He added, however, that there was some shortage of high test gasoline but that standard grade supplies were considered sufficient to meet current established in connection with construction of temporary school buildings. Accordingly, the school officials have not proposed estimates for any temporary buildings, believing that such estimates should be submitted as imperative needs may arise in the future, rather than in anticipation for such needs.

"The program for replacement of $200,000. old elementary school buildings is deferred for the duration of the war. However, the need for the acquisition of land for future school buildings is imperative and hence a program of land purchases is provided. In view of the extensive building of homes now going on in the District, the need for additional schools inevitably will arise and unimproved land should be acquired for school sites while it is still available."

Expansion Outlined.

The proposed postwar construction projects, for which planning money is asked now, would provide: A junior high school building in the vicinity of Ninth and C streets S.E., to replace the present Hine Junior High School, the construction cost of which would be not more than $980,000;

A 15-room junior high school addition on the second and third floors of the Banneker Junior High School, estimated to cost $175,000.

Real estate values in the District, on which tax assessments for this fiscal year are based have reached a new high of $1,354,348,720, Tax Assesor Edward A. Dent reported yesterday. Bills for the first half-payment, due by the end of this month, now are being sent to property

This assessment base is a net inrease of $27,355,905 over the valuation level for the last fiscal year. This increase was not as high, however, as that of last year's over the 1941-1942 fiscal year, when the assessment base jumped $59,704,386. Other Increases Noted.

An even more gratifying increase was reported by Mr. Dent for seven major revenue sources for the past year as compared with the previous year and three years ago. The assessor submitted figures to the Commissioners showing that during the past fiscal year, ended June 30, tax collections from these sources totaled $38,630,859.

This constituted in increase of more than $3,826,000 over the past fiscal year, and an increase of more than $9,393,000 over collections in 1940. A large part of these increases was attributed by District officials to the drive the assessing division has been making in recent years to force full reports and tax payments from District residents and businesses and the remainder to the growth of Washington and its busi-

Outstanding was the increase in the District tax on corporate income. This amounted to $1,260,000 over the 1942 fiscal year and an increase of $3,513,000 over the 1940 fiscal year collections, totaling but $956,000. The motor vehicle personal property tax collections in the past fiscal year showed a decrease over the previous year, due to the affects of gasoline rationing.

Mr. Dent also revealed that perproperty taxes assessed for this fiscal year, in keeping with returns filed during July, last, would result in a total tax of $2,488,402 or an increase of more than $257,000 over collections indicated a year ago. However, by the end of the past fiscal year personal property collections totaled some $2,700,000 and Mr. Dent anticipates this year's collections will be raised to $2,800,000 by the end of the year, due to audits and discovery of new accounts.

In a summation for the past fiscal year, Mr. Dent showed that the total of valuations placed on all land and buildings in the District as of June 30, last, was $2,210,461,712. Of this taxed by the District-about 60 per

War Fund Workers Quota in One Day

Volunteer workers for the Navy Department's part in the coming Community War Fund drive hope to reach their quotas in one day and Society of the District also recomtop last year's percentages, Navy mends establishment of a bureau officials reported yesterday.

The 25,000 Navy employes here are expected to be contacted within a regular eight-hour work day. Last year 1,000 keymen began their campaigning at the beginning of office hours one day and by closing time produced pledges amounting to 146.9 per cent of the quota. During the following "cleanup" campaign the department's pledges raised the total to 153 per cent.

The drive for pledges among civ ilians and military personnel will be under the direction of Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph A. Bard. Vice chairmen are Rear Admiral W. B. Young, chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and Rear Admiral F. L. Reichmuth, Washington Navy Yard commandant.

Including among those to be can-

"Thirty-eight of the States have cancer-control divisions. The Unit-ed States Public Health Service, in its survey of health conditions in the District, stated: "There is need in the District for a well-organized cancer-control program. Certain deficiencies exist in the present program, owing in a large part to the fact there is not a central co-ordinating agency.' The Medical of cancer control."

Activities of Bureau.

Such a bureau would have the following activities, officials said: Establishment of a diagnostic service, related both to the work of the Health Department clinics and private physicians; establishment of a laboratory and surgical biopsy service by the Health Department; co-ordination of efforts of other clinics and private physicians, and lay education.

In general support of the plan, the department reminded that 1,108 persons died of cancer during 1942 in the District, and that the death rate from cancer per 100,000 population had increased from 75.6 in 1905 to 132.8 in 1935 and to 151.9 in

Establishment of a mental health service in the Health Department would cost less than $40,000 for next year, as proposed by Health Officer George C. Ruhland, who said this new service "will save District funds by reducing the number of cases requiring hospitalization."

Services Proposed. Services proposed for this division would include: Out-patient clinic facilities at Gallinger Hospital for the treatment of adults, establishment of a child guidance clinic, to include preventive efforts as well as kindergarten facilities for children; and a central office to co-ordinate the efforts of all agencies, public and private, now dealing with the prob-

"An average of 4,700 District cases are cared for continually at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, at an outlay of $3,250,000. The cost of an average commitment to a correctional or mental institution is $5,000. If this proposed mental hygiene service, in the course of a year, prevented only nine cases from being committed to an institution, it would save more than the cost of operation."

It was recalled that establishment of the mental health service had been recommended by the Child Care, the District Medical Society and the Council of Social Agencies. The 1942 report of the mental observation."

Meanwhile, an additional $485,000 was requested to cover the cost of department. "You have been indispensable to me, and you are in truth irreplaceable," he wrote Mr. Fortas. The administration's action in obtaining deferment for Mr. Fortas. who is also a member of the Food Advisory Committee and secretary of the Petroleum Reserves Corp., holding a number of other Government positions as well, aroused criticism in Congress last spring.

Representative Barnes, Republican of Indiana, charged that the President and Mr. Ickes were endeavoring to circumvent selectiveservice routine in the case of the "hitherto little-known Undersecretary of the Interior."

Senator Chavez, Democrat of New Mexico, citing the Fortas case as an instance which he said could be "multiplied by thousands," called for the induction of Government employes like Mr. Fortas, who is childless and whose wife is a Government employe, before "honestto-goodness fathers who have family responsibilities."

In his letter to Ickes, Mr. Fortas

"As you know, I have been and still am eager to enter the armed services. In order that I might do this, on April 30 I submitted my resignation as undersecretary of this department and as a member of various governmental boards and committees. On May 11 the President wrote me stating that I should continue to do my job as Undersecretary of the Interior. Thereafter, on May 14, I asked that you advise me when circumstances became such that I could be released so that I might join the armed forces.

"My selective service board placed me in class II-B until November 15, 1943, at the request of this department. The department will soon have to decide whether it will request an extension of my deferment. I feel most deeply that no such request should be made. I realize that the position which I occupy is one of great public trust, but I feel that I should not be denied the privilege of joining the fighting forces of my country.

"If you will advise me that no request will be made for my further deferment I shall be most grate-

Potter Palmer Dies In Santa Barbara After Long Illness

CHICAGO, Sept. 4 .- Potter Palmer II, inheritor in 1902 of an estate valued at approximately $8,-000,000 which he built up to an estimated $100,000,000, died last night in Santa Barbara, Calif., after an illness of three months, it was announced today.

At 67, Mr. Palmer was president of the Chicago Aft Institute and a director of the First National Bank of Chicago. He also was trustee of the vast Bertha Honore Palmer estate, which includes the Palmer House and extensive holdings of real estate on Chicago's Gold Coast and in the loop.

A series of colds, complicated by a heart ailment, had kept him confined to his bed for the last three months. Recently he had seemed better and had planned to return to Chicago but suffered a relapse. Accustomed to winter at Sarasota,

'Foul Play' Is Denied In Yachting Death

CHESTERTOWN, Md., Sept. 4.-Kent County State's Attorney H. W. Vickers reported today that "nothing at present indicates foul play" in the death last Saturday of a 33-year-old Laureldale (Pa.)

Mr. Vickers added that the police of Laureldale had been asked to aid in the investigation by Maryland and county police of the death of Mrs. Mary Stuber, whose body was recovered from the Sassafras River Monday.

Explaining that "there are some baffling, questionable and unex-plainable things" about Mrs. Stu-ber's death, Mr. Vickers said Mrs. Stuber and her husband were guests aboard a yacht owned by the wife of Dr. H. R. Hartman, Laureldale, on the week end Mrs. Stuber Mr. Vickers said Mr. Stuber reportedly jumped in the river Saturday night after Mrs. Stuber, but that she never came up. The attorney explained that "the woman's head and face were cut and bruised but there were no bruises on other parts of her body," and "whether the bruises were from falling from the top deck of the boat or from other causes is undetermined."

Mr. Vickers said that the autopsy report by State Medical Examiner Dr. Howard J. Maldeis would state, he understood, that the "body was found drowned.'

Chemical Society to Show Patents Enemy Developed

By the Associated Press. PITTSBURGH, Sept. 4-Scientists and industrialists attending the 106th meeting of the American Chemical Society here Monday through Friday will see displayed some 10,000 chemical patents and patent applications that were formerly enemy-owned or enemy-controlled. In announcing the exhibit which will be a feature of the society's fourth national war conference, the organization said

"Leo T. Crowley, alien property custodian, invites critical examination of these patents and patent applications and hoped that the American chemical industry will realize the full potentialities of the information covered therein by employing these inventions in the war effort wherever possible and developing them for the postwar era." Manpower problems in chemical industry, the food supply, methods of increasing the productivity of the Nation's farms, petroleum research, synthetic rubber, aluminum in the war and vitamins and proteins are some of the topics listed for discussion.

Doctor of Laws Degree At G. U. Sunday

Georgetown University commence- pretty nice to know that there's ment honor's will be conferred next the Senate District Committee, and know what happened to you. Dr. Hugh J. Fegan, dean of the Georgetown Law School.

The Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., president, said last night that Senator McCarran would deliver the address to the graduating class at 3 p.m. in Gaston Hall. The two honor guests of the commencement are to be awarded honorary doctor of law degrees.

Graduates from the college, law and foreign service schools are to receive degrees at the exercises. Seniors of the medical and dental schools will not graduate until next

One-day Commencement.

With wartime restrictions on travel, the commencement activities are to be limited to the one day. Baccalaureate services will be held at 10:30 a.m. in Dahlgren Chapel. The preacher, a Georgetown graduate of 1929, will be Capt. Paul A. McDonough, chaplain with the Army Air Forces at Rome, N. Y.

Senator McCarran, a prominent Catholic layman, is a graduate of the University of Nevada and a lawyer, being a member of the bar of the United States Supreme Court. From 1913 to 1916, he served as associate justice and chief justice of the Nevada Supreme Court. He also is a former vice president of the American Bar Association.

A chairman of the Senate District Committee, he has sponsored much local legislation. He also is a leading proponent of a unified air force and was one of the sponsors of the law creating the Civil Aeronautics Few Georgetown men are better known in Washington than Dr. Fegan, who succeeded to the deanship of the law school upon the retirement of George E. Hamilton last June. Dr. Fegan holds several academic degrees from its college and law school.

He recently spent a year of study at Oxford University in England. He is prominent in the Association of American Law Schools, the American Institute of Law and the American Bar Association. A member of the law faculty for 32 years, he served a long while as assistant dean. He was born in Washington.

D. C. Auto Registration Drops 19 Per Cent During Fiscal Year

A 19 per cent drop in District motor-vehicle registration during the last fiscal year was reported yesterday by Traffic Director Wil-liam A. Van Duzer.

Mr. Van Duzer informed the Commissioners in his report that new auto registration for the year end-ed June 30 totaled 142,594, com-pared with 176,176 for the 1941-2

A decline in the number of drivers' permits has also been recorded according to Mr. Van Duzer. Only 70,978 permits, including new licenses, renewals and duplicates, were issued last year. In the previous year 87,981 had been issued.

Driver-permit examinations fell off 43 per cent, according to Mr. Van Duzer's report. In the last year only 43,432 persons applied for these tests, compared with 76,292 in 1941-2. Contrary to the trend in most divisions of the Traffic Department, the Board of Revocation and Restoration of Operators' Permits reported that suspensions and revo-cations against motorists totaled 4,374 for the last fiscal year as against 3,222 for the year before. Cape Bon, and the transports evidently were flying from Sicily

Edward R. Deane, secretary of the board, said the incease was due to violations of the wartime 35-mile-an-hour speed limit, plus infractions committed by people unfamiliar with Washington safety régulations.

Inspections at Washington's two motor-vehicle inspection stations dropped 12 per cent, to a total of 245,650 or 34,726 less than the previous year, it was said.

French General Escapes Riom Prison, Berlin Says

By the Associated Press. LONDON, Sept. 4. — A Berlin broadcast recorded by the Associated Press today reported the escape from Riom prison of Gen. de Lattre de Tassigny, who attempted a military revolt in Southern France when the Allies invaded North Africa last year.

Gen. de Tassigny, who was sen-tenced to 10 years by a special military court, was one of the youngest generals in the French Army and at one time was associated with Gen. Henri Giraud and Gen. Charles de Gaulle in the French Army command. He was commander of the Montpellier district in France when he rose against the German occupation authorities, and before that commanded French forces Tunisia.

Washington College of Law will begin on Wednesday, September 15. In addition to the regular four year evening course leading to the bachelor of laws degree, special courses in legislation and labor law are being offered. Dr. Alexander Holtzoff, special assistant to the Attorney General, will teach the course in legislation. The practice court and the evidence course will be handled by Dr. Edwin A. Mooers of the full-time faculty, and the property courses will be taught by Acting Dean Helen B. Arthur. John L. Laskey, attorney for the District OPA, will teach the course in contracts. William Clark Taylor, former deputy District register of wills shortage when the available labor and author of Probate Forms and Procedure, will teach wills and probate law. Two scholarships covering full tuition still are available. One is for a man and one for a woman. These scholarships are awarded on the basis of scholarship, character, legal aptitude and financial need. Applications may be made to the dean of the college.

All courses now are arranged so that they may be completed in one semester. Under this plan, a student beginning his first semester is enrolled in only two courses, contracts and torts. Classes also are scheduled so that a student who does not wish to take a full program needs to be present as few evenings a week as possible. For instance, a two-hour course will meet for two hours on schedules of war factories or other Tuesday, instead of one-hour on

Protest Meeting Set On Montgomery Ban For Profit On Outside Lawyers

By J. B. ZATMAN. A protest meeting of lawyers from Montgomery and Prince Georges counties will be held at 8 p.m. Wednesday at the Indian Spring Country Club as the result of a ruing restricting attorneys from prac-

members of the County Bar.

The ruling, effective October 1 was issued recently by Chief Judge Edward S. Delaplane and Associate Judges Charles W. Woodward, Stedman Prescott and Patrick M. Schnauffer of the Sixth Maryland Judicial Circuit, which comprises Montgomery and Frederick counties. It provides that all actions carried on in the Montgomery County Circuit Court, with the exception of those brought by the plaintiffs themselves, shall be conducted by enrolled members of the County Bar. Members of other bar associations may bring such proceedings provided they are associated with regular members of the Montgomery Bar Association. Ruling Called "Outrageous." Under the ruling, members in good standing of the Maryland Court of Appeals, who regularly maintain bona fide offices in Montgomery County for the practice of law and who spend a "reasonable amount of time" in such offices, shall be eligible to become members of the Montgomery Bar on making application in writing on forms provided by the Circuit Court clerk.

Describing the ruling as "outrageous"- and "unjustified," prominent Montgomery County attorney, who maintains offices in Washington but who also has a large practice in Montgomery County, said at least 25 lawyers living in the suburban area of the county are affected by the new law. "This ruling," he said, "would deprive a large number of lawyers, who have clients in Montgomery County but who maintain offices in Washington for business and personal reasons, of their livelihood. In addition, it affects many Prince Georges County attorneys who often carry on actions in Montgomery County. He pointed out that if such a ruling were applied to doctors, a a physician living in Washington could not treat a patient living in Montgomery County.

Would Bar a Magistrate.

Among Montgomery County attorneys who would be prohibited Court unless, as one attorney said, they "split fees" with a member of the county bar are Judge Albert E. Arlington Refuses Chicken Law Repeal; Won't Push Cases

Members of the Arlington County board yesterday unanimously opposed repeal of a zoning ordinance restricting the raising of chickens, but indicated no action would be taken against persons raising poultry for their own use.

If warrents are sworn out by neighbors, however, the cases will have to be tried under the ordinance, it was pointed out.

The issue was brought up by G. M. Parkinson of 2408 North Florida street, and Norman Hodkinson, 2323 North Florida street, against whom complaints had been lodged for keeping chickens.

After discussion of the ordinance and reading of a report requested at the last meeting, board members told the men "to go on home." Against Commercial Farms.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, board member, emphasized that raising of chickens commercially would not be feasible in the county and asked that any health problems arising be checked with Dr. Ralph Beachley, county health examiner.

Stating that complaints were small in proportion to the population, Basil De Lashmutt, board chairman, said he felt that the ordinance should be left on the books but that the county should not prosecute violations unless complaints were lodged and warrants sworn out.

A report from Frank C. Hanrahan county manager: Lawrence Douglas. commonwealth's attorney, and Donald R. Locke, zoning engineer, recommended that the ordinance be left in effect, but that individual cases of violation be considered "on

The sewers would connect with the trunk line sewer nearing completion in the Holmes Run watershed, financed by a Federal grant of more than $1,000,000. The sum Mr. Williams announced that all of $575,070 is requested for actual construction costs, and the remainder is for land purchase and engineering costs.

Data compiled by Mr. Corbalis which will accompany the application, shows that the proposed lateral lines would serve 5.132 persons now, but are designed to take care eventually of 27,500 users. Service would be provided for 1,969 dwellings, of which 195 are FHA financed. The lines would also serve 17,160 apartment units, 67 trailer cabins and 150 trailers.

August Revenues Set New Record in Virginia

By the Associated Press. RICHMOND, Sept. 4.—August internal revenue collections in Virginia set an all-time high for the month, with a total of $47,452,702.48. Nathaniel B. Early, jr., collector, announced today.

This is more than $10,000,000 ton, in memory of their parents higher than the August, 1942, total, the late Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan J which was $31,201,816.01. The biggest increase, due to new taxes, was in income tax returns. They totaled $6,022,211.27 as compared with the lay leader of the church, and the 1942 figure of $1,582,742.42.

BOYD SCHOOL 1333 F St. Many Staff Changes

Georgetown University has undergone more than the usual number of administrative changes in connection with the opening of another academic year.

New deans are in charge of the graduate and law schools. There is still a vacancy in the office of dean of foreign service, caused by the recent death of Dr. Thomas H. Healy. who had been with the school since is founding in 1919. As yet there has been no indication of an early appointment and the school is therefore continuing under the direct supervision of the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., its regent and vice president, also, of the university. The appointments of Dr. Hugh J.

Fegan as dean of law and the Rev. J. Hunter Guthrie as dean of graduate studies were made during the summer along with a number of other faculty and administrative

Both of these departments, however, start classes for civilian students on September 13. Dr. Healy's death was a serious loss to the school, Father Walsh said yesterday. For many years he had gained distinction in the fields of international law and foreign relations of the United States. He served as secretary of the school during its early period. Father Walsh has the assistance of a veteran in the secretaryship of the school, J. Raymond Trainor, Mr. Trainor is also on the teaching staff. Dr. Fegan, who is to receive an LL. D. degree from Georgetown at its September 12 commencement, was appointed upon the retirement of George E. Hamilton, now serving as dean emeritus. Mr. Hamilton had been some 60 years on the law faculty as professor and later as dean. His experience and judgment will still be available to Georgetown on ant dean of the school. In the graduate school Father Guthrie, a distinguished Jesuit educator, succeeded the Rev. Edward C. Phillips as dean. The new incum-bent came to Georgetown from Fordham University, where he headed the department of philosophy in its graduate school. A graduate of Fordham and Woodstock College, Jesuit house of studies in Maryland, he filled the chair of philosophy at Woodstock for several years.

Father Guthrie has had the additional advantage of continuing his studies in theology and philosophy at the Gregorian University in Rome. While in Europe he took courses also at the Universities of Paris and Berlin. The graduate school starts its classes on October 4. at the Gregorian University in

Other Changes. Among other changes at the university, the Rev. Matthew G. Kane has relieved the Rev. Joseph A. Farrell, S. J., as treasurer. The latter has other financial duties which require his full attention. Father Kane, who had served once before in the treasurer's office as an assistant, returned to Georgetown from St. Joseph's Preparatory School in Philadelphia. The Rev. T. J. Murray, S. J., formerly professor of religion, has been designated assistant dean of the college, a new position. The college, under the Rev. Stephen F. Mc-Namee, S. J., dean, has the largest share in the Army's specialized training program. Father Murray's new position also includes some of the duties formerly held by the Rev. John E. Wise, S. J. dean of freshmen. That office has now been abolished. Father Wise town alumnus, is now taking grad-Georgetown maintains the Army's

Pioneer in Modern Child Training Plan Returns to District

By JESSIE FANT EVANS.

Mrs. Robert Wyness Millar, whose husband is a member of the American Institute of Law and was for many years professor of legal procedure at Northwestern University before he came to Washington to join the legal staff of the Navy's Procurement Division, is one woman who has an "at-home" feeling here in her own right.

Family portraits by Gilbert Stuart link her to ancestral roots deep in this section since Colonial days. And she has returned to the scene of her own outstanding pioneer educational attainments in the field of progressive education.

As Ann Everett George, she was principal of Washington's first Montessori School, founded under the patronage of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, his wife, and their two daughters, Mrs. David Fairchild and Mrs. Gilbert H. Grosvenor.

Before this, as a young teacher interested in the then somewhat revolutionary school of child psychology being advocated by John Dewey of the University of Chicago, she was the first student from the United States to go to Italy and enroll under the tutelage of Dr. Maria Montessori. In that country's happier days, this famous Italian woman physician and pyschologist was the founder of the progressive school of elementary child pedagogy which bears her name

Called "North Americano." Mrs. Millar was called the "North Americano" by her fellow students in Dr. Montessori's classes in Rome, One of whom the Queen Mother

Margharita, mother of Victor Emmanuel of Italy, often would ask her to sit at her table. "I know that you, our Pilgrim sister from North America, will not be afraid to tell me the truth when I ask you if I have the correct understanding of these lectures," the Queen mother would say frequently as they listened to Dr. Montessori expound her than advanced "natural" educational methods, which have since been adopted with modifications by schools all over the

Mrs. Millar recalls that these classes, given in Italian, were held in the garden of the convent of the Franciscan nuns, situated on the Via Giusti, near the old church about which Browning wrote his poem, "The Bishop Orders His They were attended by students from most of the countries of Europe.

An amusing after-hours experieence she had in the role of interpreter in Rome had to do with her being called into conference by Signor Atrillo and his wife to explain how to play an American game, which Mrs. Charles Deering had sent them from Chicago. "We have the bats," said the Ital-

"pilgrim North American," promptly gave an exhibition on how to use "the bats," to swat Italian flies. Immediately after her return from

Italy, the service of Mrs. Millar as a translator was sought by the Stokes Publishing Co. For this firm she translated Dr. Montessori's book, "The Scientific Education of Young People," into its first English

sori's Method.' Met Sinclair Lewis. While she was working on this translation she made the acquaintance of Sinclair Lewis, who was reading manuscripts for the publishing company that was employing her. Mrs. Millar remembers his kindness in going down in the publishing company's freight elevator to get sandwiches, coffee and copy for those who were working late. Their acquaintance has continued throughout the years. "Since Mrs. Bell, the wife of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, as the beautiful Miss Hubbard was the first deaf person in the United States to be taught oral speech by her teacher, Dr. Bell," Mrs. Millar says, "it was natural for the Bell family to take a motivating interest in an elementary pedagogical system such as the Montessori method with its emphasis on sensory train-

In fact, such was their personal interest that the first Washington classes in the Montessori method were held in the famous room of Dr. Bell's home, at 1331 Connecticut avenue, with its double walls, which constituted the first experiment made in air-conditioning in the United States. In this same room when the classes were over, Dr. Bell gathered his friends and scientific associates for series of round-table discussions which often made scientific history. Subsequently, Mrs. Millar recalls the number of students increased to such an extent that the school was moved to Georgetown. There it again was temporarily housed under Bell auspices in an old colonial house near the present Volta Bureau, on Thirty-fourth street which was then the residence of Dr. Melville Bell, brother of the telephone inventor.

Alexander Graham Bell often came to visit the Montessori classes. On one occasion he brought his first telephone instrument to the George-

"Many of the pupils in the Mon-tessori School," Mrs. Millar declares, have since so distinguished themselves in various fields that Dr. Bell might have just cause to feel they had been mindful of his admonition to them." Due to its rapid growth, the school finally moved into quarters on Kal-orama road, especially adapted to its needs, where it continued existence until it was taken over finally by the Potomac School, Since her marriage, Mrs. Millar has continued her unusual experience with modern child psychology by serving as an expert consultant in this field. A member of a family that has Accountancy School given many teachers and preachers to American life, her grandfather, William Gilman, and her grandmother, Margaret Dyson, were baptized in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, which Lincoln attended. Her great-grandfather, George Dyson, and her great-grandmother, Anne Crawford, were married in the Episcopal Church in Alexandria, of which George Washington was a communicant. A part of the old box in the Bishop's garden at the National Cathedral was brought from her family's former home on Rhode Island avenue at Third street. She attended Goucher College, in the class with Mrs. Georgette Ross Howard, current events lecturer of this city, one of her closest girlhood friends.

Offered for Women

In order to encourage women to study accountancy, the Benjamin Franklin Accountancy School is offering courses of from four months to four years. The four-month course covers accounting funda-mentals and a foundation in business law. The one-year program qualifies a graduate for the basic accountancy certificate.

Courses are cumulative and credit is given for either of these courses toward the degrees of bachelor and master of commercial science. Beginning classes will open on September 15 in the evening division, September 20 in the day division. Hours are arranged to meet the requirements of employed students.

Will Open Sept. 20 Columbus University school of accountancy will open the fall term on Septemebr 20. The Department of Federal Accounting, under the supervision of Prof. E. E. Naylor, will give courses in federal accounting, federal auditing the federal budget. Prof. Daniel B Maher, who has been appointed assistant district attorney for the District will continue as professor of business law.

G. W. Board Approves Promotions of 26 On Faculty Staff served along with other freedoms, Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president George Washington University, said yesterday as he announced promotions given to 26 members of the faculty staff, following approval by the board of trustees.

Discussing the increased responsibilities thrust upon those promoted. Dr. Marvin took occasion to emphasize the role of liberal arts colleges in the war and postwar eras. Changed conditions will call for new concepts, he said, adding he believed educational leaders would meet the test.

"Many of our men and women have abandoned their cultural education for the duration," he pointed out." We, too, must fight-we must enlist in a college and university army corps for public welfare.

Fight to Preserve Culture. "Our activities are as important as those of our enlisted colleagues. We fight for the preservation of the liberal cultural elements in society. If we succeed, it will make an enormous difference in the moral and human qualities of our society.

"In a democracy." Dr. Marvin continued, "education must not be narrow. The very basis of the professional and technical efficiency of our people is found in the cultural backgrounds of our schools. Without cultural education, our technical training is no better than that of Germany. The slide rule is an aid in mathematical computation: it is not an aid for helping men to be free. Narrow training will almost certainly destroy the ability of people to be critical of social objectives and governmental processes.

"We have never been successful in establishing trade schools. As a people we have insisted on following the cultural tradition. This is a great heritage, one that will serve us well as we enter into the strengthening democratic days ahead.'

Totalitarian states, Dr. Marvin said, have used higher education to gain the strength of unified ideals, but in America the democratic way of life is not a "trivial art, nor a playful activity . . . it is freedom of

He added in response to a question that it was hoped the new bomber would be equipped with "gadgets" and instruments, "so we won't have to keep so many heavy bombers on the ground because of

When the time comes for the continental invasion," he said, "we will do what the Tactical Air Force in Northwest Africa did so brilliantly in Tunisia and Sicily and now is doing in Italy."

A "second front" for the Russians actually has been effectuated by the 8th Air Force, Gen. Arnold said.

Bombing Aids Russia. "Even on the Russian front indirectly Hitler has been hurt by American bombers in Britain. "The Luftwaffe has had to pull away more of its first-line planes essential for any offensive the Nazis might have planned against the Red Army this summer-they've pulled those planes away from the Russian front and sent them west to try to stop the ever more deeply penetrating Fortress raids against vital industrial targets.

"Properly the Russians have asked their partners to lift some of the pressure off them-well, the 8th Air Force has certainly helped.

"The hundreds of German fighters our forts have destroyed on the western front are fighters that will never stop Russian bombers or strafe

Planes Were Liberators.

"They were trained here and the mission was planned here," Arnold said. He disclosed that the planes were Liberators which flew with Fortresses here last fall, spent three months raiding Italy from North Africa last winter, returned here for more raids on northwestern Europe and then "sneaked" back to Africa again a few months ago. The group is led by Col. Edward Timberlake of San Antonio, Tex.

He also confirmed that a sizeable part of the original American North African Tactical Force was made up of planes drawn from here last fall-hundreds of P-38 Lightnings and P-39 Airacobras

In answer to the perennial queries about "which is the best fighter plane," Gen. Arnold said he was sure that for escorting bombers the P-47 Thunderbolt was better than the Spitfire because of its longer range and that the Lightning "runs it a close second."

"So far we are on schedule," he said, in the "time table of victoryfirst supremacy in the air and then crushing invasion by land and by

BODIES for BOMBERS

N OCTOBER 25, 1940more than a year before Pearl Harbor - U. S. Army Air Corps officials notified us of the urgent need for a vastly increased aircraft production program, and invited us to participate.

Already we were making Army trucks in great number, completing a huge tank arsenal, building field ranges and tent heaters, and making our first studies of anti-aircraft gun manufacture.

Here was another urgent job that had to be tackled

Without waiting to learn what aircraft job would be assigned to us, we provided 600,000 sq. ft. of additional plant space and, from our own personnel, began to select engineering, metallurgical and manufacturing specialists for this new work.

It was just three months after our first meeting with Air Corps officials that we were officially notified our job was to build the complete nose and center fuselage sections for medium bombers, - including installation of their complete mechanical and control systems.

We immediately sent forty of our technicians to a producing aircraft plant where these men did regular production work and observed, at first hand, the production methods then in use. Our long background in building automobiles and trucks, plus the experience these men gained working with an aircraft manufacturer, enabled us quickly to get under way with the necessary tools and equipment to turn out "bodies" for bombers by quantity production methods.

To help acquaint us in advance with the many kinds of material and operations involved, the Army Air Corps sent us a bomber nose section. Our engineers and master mechanics made intensive analyses of aircraft blueprints covering more than fourteen thousand structural parts.

The materials to be used included aluminum, steel, brass, bronze, plastics, plywood and fabrics. They would need to be forged, cast, stamped, machined, cut and fitted without the slightest error in their dimensions or relationship.

Many of the metal parts presented entirely new working characteristics. They required elaborate heat treating processes for the extreme stresses demanded of them. They also presented new problems in the design and use of the dies required to shape them.

Our production and purchasing specialists determined which parts we could subcontract to other companies. As the work progressed, orders for parts and materials were given to 2,255 subcontractors in 309 towns, in 29 states.

Aluminum forgings would be needed in large numbers by us and other manufacturers participating in the expanded aircraft production program. Therefore, we were given the job of building an aluminum forge plant to take care of these requirements. We also prepared at our foundry to produce aluminum castings required for plane manufacture.

Thousands of men and women had to be trained for this new type of work. We opened schools for the training of workers. Women were employed in large numbers and carefully taught drilling, riveting, machining and assembling of aircraft parts. Automobile sheet metal workers, body builders and trimmers were shown how to apply their skill and experience to the production of bomber parts.

The big nose of the bomber, which houses the Bombardier.

Pilot, Co-Pilot, Navigator and Radio Operator is often called the "brain" of the ship. Nearly all the mechanical and electrical controls are here, while the center section immediately behind it provides the bomb carrying space.

If you could look within these sections as the work of assembly goes on, you would see a bewildering network of wires and tubing as well as the structural skeleton of the ship. Every one of these 1,963 separate wires and over 1,000 feet of tubes - to say nothing of all the control mechanisms—must operate faultlessly.

In the production of "bodies" for bombers—a new field to Chrysler Corporation-again is demonstrated how our experience in peacetime car and truck production now is being applied to the production of war equipment in quantity . . . and on time.

State Department Faces Crisis Due to Many Conflicting Trends

By Marquis W. Childs.

the gray building that houses the Department of State. Pressures from within and without are converging on this solemn, pompous structure that looks like a stale wedding cake.

Never before has the Department of State undergone such a crisis. The removal of Sumner Welles as Undersecretary was only one symptom of a malady which goes very deep. The cause is obvious. In the midst of a great world crisis demands are being made on the State Department which it is unable to Both because of the nature of the institution itself and because of the men who staff it the State Department is a tragically inadequate instrument for these times. It is a tragedy larger than the fate of any single individual because each and every one of us.

Ur er the storm of criticism that has risen and fallen in recent years top State Department officers have continued to say that they are not responsible. "It is the President who makes foreign policy." one of these officers said during the past week. "Our critics are really attacking the President; you know we are only functionaries who carry out our orders."

Makes Foreign Policy.

This contains enough truth to deserve examination. It suggests a basic attitude that may help to explain the department's inadequacy. President Roosevelt does make foreign policy and there has been evidence from time to time during the past 10 years that he believes this to be his exclusive prerogative, his private domain in which his own predilections

During the 1940 political campaign the Republicans seized on the expression "my ambassador," which Roosevelt had used in a speech discussing relations with England and the war in Europe. That, they said, showed how he had arrogated to himself the functions of government. It was, they insisted, the expression of a monarch rather than an elected representative of the people.

The White House replied, and properly, that "my ambassador" happened to be the correct form for the head of a State to use whether King or President. Nevertheless it was a symbolic phrase. Not only in the White House and in the State Department here in Washington, but in every world capital the concept of diplomacy remains a 19th century concept. It is a matter of exchanging notes between heads of states, of dealing with a few knowledgeable professionals. It ignores entirely the weight of public opinion in a democratic society in which modern communication brings news to millions within hours or minutes of its

It is still back in the days when an Ambassador was the personal messenger the ruler. The Ambassador's dispatches were sent to the ruler who made his decisions accordingly. There was no public opinion to be bothered with. Heads of state might quarrel to the point of going to war, but wars were relatively Field Was Narrow.

The field of "foreign affairs" was narrow. Today-and this is most important of all-it effects in one way or another everything that we do. More and more jobs have been slipping out from under our own State Department. The Reconstruction Finance Corp. has had a part in "foreign affairs" through its lending power. So has the Treasury. So has the Office of Economic Warfare. So has the Co-ordinator of Inter-American affairs and a half dozen other agencies, conspicuously both War and

This has made State Department officers lealous and suspicious. It has contributed to the atmosphere of intriguing rivalry which has permeated the department. Repeated conflicts have grown out of the pulling and hauling between State and rival agencies.

In England more or less the same thing has happened. The inadequacy of the Foreign Office has been recognized and discussed. Last January two highly significant articles appeared in the London Times analyzing this inadequacy and suggesting a remedy. The Foreign Office, according to the Times' writer, should be only one branch—the diplomatic branch-of a real ministry of state. This ministry would include those functions that have slipped away from the Foreign Office as they have slipped away from the State Department. The Secretary of State at the top would be a policy-making officer with a half dozen divisions under him.

The same kind of broad revision could be worked out to great advantage here in America, according to Joseph M. Jones, a former State Department officer writing in the current Fortune magazine. Jones, who resigned from the Department when he found any effort to introduce new ideas futile, suggests three main divisions, each under an Undersecretary of State elevated to cabinet rank, the title of Secretary of State being reserved "for the senior official in charge of planning and directing policy.

Need Enlightened Public. This, then, is the dilemma of the institution itself; how to force a recognition of the irresistible push of the times in which we live. A strong and enlightened public opinion is necessary to bring about such basic changes. This, of course, is the constant excuse of Secretary Hull and the men around himwe could move no faster because opinion wasn't ready. It overlooks the fact that the department, if properly organized, might have given the public the real facts and the necessary leadership. The problem of the individuals who man the State Department is secondary but nonetheless important. A serious lag in the development of the institution happens to coincide with an internal crisis which has seriously impaired the department's already limited effective-

Much of the clash of personalities within the department has been told in terms of sensation and exaggeration. Much of it is false. But there is a basis of fact and the blame rests largely on those who failed to resolve the internal quarrels at the start-on Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt.

Something like a hurricane has struck | have carried gossip to an extraordinary degree. One of these is William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to Moscow and Paris. Bullitt's personal ambition and his passion for intrigue contributed more, it is possible, to the removal of Sumner Welles than anything else. He is said to have wanted the job for himself. But even after it must have been evident that he could not have it, he continued his bitter opposition to Welles. Secretary Hull himself seems to have had no very strong animus toward Welles. Hull made speeches, he worked on matters of policy that particularly interested him, while Welles dealt with day-to-day problems of diplomacy. Welles frequently saw Roosevelt, if only because the Undersecretary has the ability to reduce complicated situations to concise. understandable terms. This power is quite beyond Secretary Hull. Relations in the department might have continued on this basis if it had not been for those who constantly worked on Hull to create

Hull Is Cautious.

Here, of course, the personality of Hull is a major factor. His innate caution has been enhanced by the red tape procedures of the Department of State. A directive covering even the simplest matter requires the initials of all assistant secretaries. Conferences to decide elementary details go on endlessly. Hull has constantly been apprehensive of offending Congress and others in the department have deferred to him since he spent nearly 30 years of his life as a member of House and Senate.

A year ago Hull delivered a Nationwide broadcast on American foreign policy. Roosevelt called attention to it in advance. It was built up as an important pronouncement. Unveiled, the speech was a mass of cautious generalizations expressed through lengthy circumlocutions. As an example of the way Hull and the department work, one person saw 23 different versions of that speech when it was in preparation. All the wheels of the department stopped while the Secretary conferred with his assistants on content and phraseology.

Increasingly sensitive to criticism, Hull feels it necessary to defend every act of the past 10 years. The department some months ago issued a white paper called "Peace and War" that was an attempt to show that the department was constantly aware of the entire international situation. If action in some instances was not forthcoming, the fault lay with public opinion, "Peace and War" suggests.

Hull's most faithful friend among the upper officers is Assistant Secretary of State Breckinridge Long, a former St. Louisan. Long is a faithful Democrat with a point of view very much like that of Hull-cautious, conservative, suspicious of change. Ambassador to Rome to the department, in which he had served under Woodrow Wilson, at the outbreak of the war by Welles.

Berle Outside Pattern. Assistant Secretary Adolf A. Berle, jr., is completely outside this pattern or, for that matter, any other pattern. At 48, his complicated mind is stuffed with history and a knowledge of the ways of the world. He frequently quotes Machiavelli and thinks of himself as a supreme realist capable of dealing with the foibles of ordinary human beings. His personality and his background are utterly alien to anything that Hull has ever known. Yet the two get on well enough together and, contrary to printed reports, the probability is he will stay on. Assistant Secretary Dean Acheson is. like Berle, a product of the Harvard Law School. But the two men are utterly dissimilar and antipathetic. Their dislike for each other goes back to jealousies and resentments too remote to trace here. Acheson was named Undersecretary of Treasury in 1933 by Roosevelt, but resigned in a few months as a result of differences over fiscal policy. An ardent interventionist, he campaigned for Roosevelt in '40 and was made Assistant Secretary after the elec-

The Problem of Palestine

Reports of a forthcoming joint statement by the British Foreign Office and the United States State Department which will "silence" discussion of the Arabian-Jewish question, once again focuses attention on Palestine, not so much as a war center, but rather an enigma that would worry any peace-

Palestine, because it is regarded by Arab and Jew alike as his inalienable homeland, has been a perennial problem since the First World War. The political, economic and social aspects of the mandated country are so numerous and conflicting as to make a solution unbelievably difficult.

Of primary concern to the British, as a result of the mandate granted by Allied powers and approved by the League of Nations, Palestine has been the subject of study by commission after commission, seeking the cause and solution of Abrabian-Jewish dissension and offering concession and appeasement throughout

To go back to the dawn of history in search of the original occupants of Palestine, many discrepancies would be found in the claims of Jews and Arabs. But for the purpose of examining into the present situation, so far as population goes, it is sufficient to note that at the time of the Balfour declaration in 1917, Arabs outnumbered the Jews about 10 to 1. At present there are 1,000,000

Approved Jewish Homeland The Balfour declaration, giving British approval and support to the ment of a Jewish national Palestine, was the result of negotiations between the London government and leading representatives of Zionism, which was organized in 1897 with the idea of restoring the homeland. In 1915 the Allies held out to the Arabs the hope of becoming an independent state. Sir Henry McMahon, then high commissioner in Egypt, and Hussein, sherif and emir of Mecca, conducted the negotiations. The Arabs sought to have Palestine included in their territory, but the British denied later that it had been so included.

Efforts were made at Versailles to carry out the promises to the Jews and Arabs simultaneously. Later the French came into the picture, opposing the establishment of an Arab state, and the Arabs would not agree to the implementation of the British promise to the

The first serious outbreak between the Arabs and the Jews occurred in Jerusalem in 1920. The Arabs were in revolt against the Balfour declaration and in the ensuing fray five Jews and four

A year later, in another outbreak, 47, was issued, declaring there was no land Jews and 48 Arabs were killed.

The first high commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel, a British Jew, sought, by a policy of concession, to prevent a repetition of such outbreaks, suggesting restriction on Jewish immigration. A white paper issued by Winston Churchill, then colonial secretary, brought into being the principle of "absorptive capacity" with respect to immigration.

Transjordania Excluded. A concession made to the Arabs was the exclusion from the Jewish national home of Transjordania.

The mandate provided for the establishment of a Jewish agency to cooperate with the British government and the British offered the Arabs an opportunity to establish an Abab agency which, however, was rejected.

In 1929 there was another "incident." Arabs and Jews clashed at the wailing wall in Jerusalem and when the melee was over, 133 Jews and 116 Arabs were dead. The British sent the Shaw commission to make an inquiry and it recommended curtailment of Jewish immigration and regulation of land purchases by Jews. Another British investigation found that the capacity of the land was limited.

Arabs were killed and many wounded. Then in 1930 the Passfield white paper available for further Jewish agricultural settlement except vacant areas in Jewish on. In 1931 Ramsay Macdonald. then Prime Minister, modified the British position, in a letter to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Zionist leader.

When Hitler came to power, refugees poured into Palestine. Arab nationalism was fanned by Hitler and Mussolini. Disorders began in 1936 and a general Arab strike was called, demanding immediate stoppage of Jewish immigration, The violence continued. The Peel Commission, sent to investigate, recommended partition into an Arab state and a Jewish state.

Arabs Reject Plan.

The Arabs rejected the proposal and the Zionists debated it, while terrorism increased. The British sent a division of troops and some measure of order was restored. Then the Woodhead commission, created to draw boundary lines, reported that partition was unworkable.

Separate conferences with Jews and Arabs were held in London. The Jews insisted there be no infringement of the right to develop a national homeland, while the Arabs held to their demands which meant a nullification of the man-

Make-up of Postwar Europe Tough Problem for Diplomats

By Constantine Brown.

The Quebec conference is over. President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill have met again in Washington where political matters of the highest importance were carefully considered.

From the few scraps of information obtained after the Quebec meeting and from the important moves now being planned in the political-diplomatic field, it appears probable that political developments in the next six months will overshadow military operations.

Military operations are not undertaken on the spur of the moment. Even those which are prompted by political rather than strategic motives must be carefully and minutely prepared. Hence, it is believed that this fall and winter will witness the execution of the decision taken by the chiefs of staff at their meeting here last May.

The Quebec conference likely further confirmed the plans drawn in May and prepared the ground for Allied combat operation in the summer of 1944.

Political matters, however, are more dynamic than military matters. As with military strategy, it is wise to plan them carefully beforehand. But many unforeseen or vaguely foreseen developments may occur with lightening speed. And the best that can be done is to prepare for them and leave no stone unturned in order to avoid what we do not want to Ruseians Advance Steadily.

The Russians are advancing steadily on the eastern front. The Germans are not routed. They are withdrawing to a much shorter line on the Dnieper River. That, at least, is the assumption of American military observers who must make their deductions from the reading of the official Russian and German com-

There is always, of course, the possibility that the Germans will withdraw even farther and abandon the Ukraine altogether. If such a retreat is performed in an orderly manner with the Germans keeping their armies intact, the Russians may be placed strategically in an unfavorable position since they will be so much farther from their main supply bases which are being fed with American and British lease-lend materials, principally through Persia.

This is the military situation on the eastern front as it appears at the present. The political situation is much more

There is ample evidence that the Soviet government is not whole-heartedly subscribing to the views of the American Government regarding the postwar world. From the little information available about our political role in Europe, it is evident that we are favoring a reconciliation of the different interests on the basis of what we consider equitable.

It is believed here that the British are on our side so far as Europe is concerned. They have gone into the war to defeat the totalitarian ideology and to defend the independence of those small mations which have been bullied by the dietators.

But when Hitler attempted to put the Nazi hooks into Poland, Britain and France entered the war in spite of their utter lack of military preparations. This is a historical fact and it would be unfair to believe that Mr. Churchill's government has changed its point of view so far as the small nations of Europe are con-

It is true that some months ago he suggested that these countries, which are weak while they are alone and must choose a patron among the great powers to protect them, should get together into some sort of a federation. This would make them more independent of the larger states and might avoid some scrapping among themselves.

The idea was accepted in principle by the American Government. We are not foolish enough to insist that all the states of Europe should be resurrected in the same shape they held in 1939. Hence if on their own accord they would care to join a federation after Hitler's defeat the United States would be only too glad to help them get back on their feet. Unfortunately, this does not seem to please the leaders in Moscow.

The Russian government has definite ideas of its own about Eastern and Cen-

The statement was made when the American Government still recognized the independence of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania, whose fully accredited Ministers still are in Washington with diplomatic privileges.

In recent months the question of how much of Poland will remain independent has also come to the fore. After the relations between the Polish governmentin-exile and Moscow were broken off because Poland had insulted Russia by accepting the Nazi version of what had happened to 10,000 Polish prisoners which the Nazis claimed had been executed by the Red Armies, all attempts from London and Washington to mend the Polish-Russian fences were futile. On August 25 out of a clear sky the Russian Embassy in Washington issued a sharp attack on Poland, which was accused of showing unfriendly intentions toward Russia because it advocated a postwar Central European federation.

In urging the establishment of such a federation the Polish government was following suggestions from Washington and London. The Poles were accused of "stirring up troubled waters, playing into the hands of Hitler and his associates and helping split the Anglo-Soviet-American camp." The Embassy implied naively that the kind of federation acceptable to Moscow would be worked out with Russian co-operation.

$14,000,000,000 in Lease-Lend.

Ironically this blast at Poland, and indirectly at the tentative British-American plans for Central Europe, was issued the same day Mr. Roosevelt transmitted to Congress his quarterly lease-lend rencing that so far the American taxpayer had contributed $14,000,-000,000 to help our Allies with lease-lend

The President went further to say that "the Congress in passing and extending the Lease-Lend Act made it plain that we want no war debt to jeopardize the coming peace. Victory and a secure peace are the only coin in which we can be repaid."

Those who remember the hatred and anger this country brought on itself in Europe after the last war because we insisted that the war debts should be repaid can only applaud the wisdom of Congress and Mr. Roosevelt who devised the lease-lend formula whereby we help our Allies without expecting one cent in return. This caused some wits in Washington to describe money as "spinach."

But Mr. Roosevelt emphasized the question of a secure, that is to say, durable, peace after the Axis has been defeated.

His political experts are frankly worried. How can a durable peace be established in the event the Russians follow a policy of their own? Stalin declared a few months ago that "we have not and cannot-have any war aims such as the seizure of foreign territory-irrespective of whether they are the people and territories of Europe or the people and territories of Asia, including Iran."

Why the Russian leader should have singled out Iran is a puzzle to everybody. Recent reports which continue to be hushed up (Iran is far away) say that two of the Iranian provinces bordering Russia have recently incorporated into the Soviet, naturally after a plebiscite of their inhabitants was taken and they had declared themselves in favor of such a union. Soviet forces are garrisoned in these provinces for the purpose of protecting the lease-lend communication regarding Poland is equally obvious although it is not yet quite clear whether the Russians consider the Ribbentrop-Molotov line established after the defeat of Poland in 1939 to encompass Russian Under these circumstances, there seems to be some doubt as to how secure a peace we shall have in Europe to repay the $14,000,000,000 the American people have contributed out of their pockets for the cause of peace. Nobody speaks about the casualties the American forces will have to suffer before the Nazis can be brought to their knees. These factors are worrying the American and British leaders.

On the one hand there are the continuous rumors of a possible peace between Russia and Germany the day the Germans agree to get rid of Hitler and withdraw to their borders of 1914, west of the Vistula River. These rumors are not being taken into account officially and are treated as propaganda. Unofficially, however, they are causing a good deal of concern.

No doubt, should a new German government offer peace terms acceptable to the Soviet, Moscow will keep us informed and will discuss with us why we should not become partners to such a proposition. Russia has never indorsed the "unconditional surrender" policy adopted at Casablanca. Should the German proposals meet its purpose and requirements it seems likely that the Russian government will follow the course it

GEN. MARSHALL A MASTER AT SELECTION OF COMMANDERS TO LEAD ARMY

without rest. The scenes flash from Africa to China, from Sicily to Attu, from the Solomons to India and Burma. Heroes parade under the spotlight, act their parts and bow to world applause. But the master of the show, the impresario who picked the cast, lurks all but anonymous in the wings.

Since Pearl Harbor, by his own choice, the name of Gen. Georges Catlett Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, has virtually disappeared from the headlines, though they have glorified brigades of his subordinates. A modest man, and a wise one, he instructed the War Department's Press Bureau after December 7, 1941, that it was free to celebrate all comers, from private to four-star general, but that he himself, for the duration, was not in any manner to be publicized, interviewed or "built up." Less than due credit has, therefore, been paid to the leader primarily responsible for national success on the planet's far-flung battle

The duties of a Chief of Staff are of formidable range. Gen. Marshall's endless appearances before congressional committees, as principal spokesman for the Army, would alone constitute a career for a human being of average energy. He was in ultimate charge of the herculean task of expanding a force of 264,035 officers and men in June, 1940, to its present strength of more than 7,000,000. The great host required to be inducted, fed, clothed, housed, trained and armed. For that, too, in the last resort, he was answerable. He owns but two superiors in the military establishment-President Roosevelt, as Commander in Chief, and the Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson. Besides acting as Stimson's immediate adviser on plans and policies, Gen. Marshall supervises the Army's three top commands, the Ground, Air and Service Forces, as well as the General Staff's organization and training, supply and operations. A member of both the Joint and Combined Chiefs of Staff, he has a pre-eminent voice in determining the strategy not merely of the United States but of the United Nations.

Responsibility Basic.

Last, but not least, it is his function to choose officers of general rank and to specify the types of men desired in lesser grades. Here the responsibility is basic. According to report, Secretary Stimson seldom questions a nomination proposed by his Chief of Staff: while the President rarely initiates such appointments, though he may now and then veto one.

Rumor has it further that Gen. Marshall, by trade an infantryman, often wields a direct hand in selecting officers for the Ground Forces, under Lt. Gen. Lesley J. McNair; but seems more disposed, in the case of service and aviation officers, to rely on the judgment of Lt. Gen. Brehon Somervell and Gen. Henry H. Arnold, respective heads of the Service and Air Forces. Commanders in the field also submit recommendations, which the Chief of Staff may or may not approve.

By and large, with three or four exceptions, it may be declared that officers of upper rank in today's Army owe their positions to Gen. Marshall's nomination or indorsement. As field marshal of the Philippine Army, Gen. Douglas Mac-Arthur was already on the ground when Japan struck the opening blow, and was destined by fate to become the champion of Bataan. Lis transfer to Australia and appointment as commander of Allied forces in the Southwest Pacificinvolving diplomatic negotiations with New Zealand and Australia-were engineered by the White House.

Similarly Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault (then colonel) was on the scene as chief of the American Volunteer Group, or "Flying Tigers", and was the inevitable choice for commander of Certain persons in the department five divisions of personnel, intelligence, United States Air Forces in China.

As chief of the 5th and 6th Chinese Armies in Burma, under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, Lt. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell was the logical candidate for appointment as commanding general of the Asiatic theater.

One of the few top-flight officers whose tenure antedates the Marshall regime is Lt. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commander of the 1st Army, who was named for this post in August, 1939, a month before Gen. Marshall became Chief of Staff.

His record for culling out victorious commanders has been too consistent to be ascribed to sheer luck. A graduate not of West Point, but of the Virginia Military Institute, he has been in the Army since 1901, and gained a widespread familiarity with its personnel. As aide-de-camp to Gen. Pershing, he became intimately acquainted with the battle performances of the young field and line officers of World War I who were to become the general officers of World War II. According to friends, he is endowed with "the memory of an elephant." In addition, as his appointments prove beyond doubt, he possesses a mind without prejudice and an eye piercing enough to discern talent in material which others, in many an instance, would have found hopelessly unpromising. His total lack of brass-hat bias is illustrated as well as anywhere by the commanders of the five divisions making up the United States 7th Army, to which was intrusted the great enveloping movement of the Sicilian campaign.

Failed to Win Diploma.

Maj. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway of the 82d Division, airborne, was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1917. Maj. Gen. Terry de la Mesa Allen of the 1st Infantry Division is probably the only man that ever completed the four-year course at West Point without taking a diploma. For some escapade or other he was thrown out of the academy just before commencement day.

Armored Division and Maj. Gen. Lucian K. Truscott, jr., of the 3d Infantry Division entered the Army by way of the Officers' Reserve Corps. Maj. Gen. Troy H. Middleton of the 45th Infantry Division enlisted as a private in 1910. Eight years later, by dint of gallantry and skill shown on the battlefield, he was a colonel and the youngest regimental commander in the Regular Army. Other commanders of high rank whose beginnings as enlisted men proved no bar to advancement under Gen. Marshall include Maj. Gen. Eugene M. Landrum, leader of the ferocious mad-dog hunt which annihilated the Japanese garrison of Attu; Maj. Gen. Clayton L. Bissell, commander of the 10th United States Air Force in India; Lt. Gen. Walter Krueger, commander of the 6th Army in Australia, and Lt. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges, commander of the 3d Army, who enrolled as a private in the Regular Army after being flunked out of West Point for deficiency in mathematics. From the Officers' Reserve Corps ascended Gen. Chennault and Maj. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, commander of the 8th United States Air Force, based on England. Lt. Gen. John L. De Witt, commander of western defense and the 4th Army, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Spanish-American War, after two years at Princeton. Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, commander in the Middle East, found no handicap in the fact that he was graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis instead of West Point.

"Take 'Em Where I Find 'Em."

"I take them where I find them," said Gen. Marshall to the writer during an interview in December, 1940. He recalled that Gen. Pershing was unable to develop competent troop leaders until World War I was almost over, and declared that his own policy as Chief of Staff would be to search out such leaders in peacetime and place them in responsible commands.

and now Prime Minister Churchill was said to have taken a hand. For political reasons, Churchill wished the French to suppose that President Roosevelt was the author of the expedition, and insisted that an American should be placed at its head. Thus Eisenhower, whom the Prime Minister had met and admired, was named commander in chief of the African-Mediterranean theater. As if in a fairy tale, the recent lieutenant colonel found under his orders such stars of the British Empire as Gen. Sir Harold R. L. G. Alexander, Air Chief Marshal Sir Arthur W.

Where Housing Is Needed The War Department is moving to condemn residential property located along the proposed route of a new military road connecting Camp Springs and Bolling Field. Justice Letts in District Court has declined to stay execution of the order for surrender, and within thirty days 112 Negro families-including about 600 persons-will be evicted from their homes. Construction of the new road is a war measure and it cannot be delayed. But the eviction of these families, in the face of the acute housing shortage which already has led to disgraceful and dangerous congestion of Negroes in inadequate shelters, many of them really unfit for human habitation, gives added point to a fact which has received too little attention. This is that finding shelter for persons evicted by the Government is as important, in its own way, as the project which leads to their eviction.

In this case the National Capital Housing Authority is trying to make provision for the evicted families. Some of the low-cost housing built and building for in-migrant Negro war workers will be made available under a construction of the law which, if the National Housing Agency approves, will give the evicted families an eligible status. But it is unfortunate that the War Department can permit only thirty days' notice of eviction. In these days finding new quarters for 112 families in thirty days is no small problem. Forethought by the Government agencies concerned would at least ameliorate the hardships of necessary eviction.

What is happening now in connection with these families has happened on a wide scale in Washington in the past few years. Hundreds of Negro dwellings have been razed for new Government construction. The occupants of these dwellings, as a rule, were not war workers and were ineligible for the low-cost public and private housing for which only "essential" war workers could qualify. The result has been to crowd these Negro families into housing that was inadequate in the first place, making for slum conditions associated with inadequate housing.

The National Housing Agency recently announced a new program calling for construction of 3,200 additional family dwellings for Negroes. The addition of this housing, however, does not take care of the Negro resident who is not an essential war worker. It promises relief only to those who can qualify as inadequately housed war workers. Little or nothing is being done to alleviate the conditions so strongly condemned in the D'Alesandro committee report last spring, conditions which reflect, above everything else, the housing shortage.

A recent survey by the National Housing Agency established a "definite shortage of adequate housing for Negro war workers." The shortage of adequate housing for Negroes who are not war workers is many times more acute.

Police Vacancies

Budget estimates of the Police Department for the next fiscal year call for no increase in the number of uniformed men, for the reason the District has been unable, due to a manpower shortage heightened by the draft and enlistments in the military and naval services, to fill the force to its present authorized strength. While funds are available for 1,836 police, there are today 201 vacancies. For the present year, Congress approved requests for employment of 125 additional men and earlier had provided for increases of 195, anticipating the problems of a swollen population.

All this was wise, but if many of the jobs cannot be filled under the prevailing conditions other means will have to be found. The Commissioners and Major Kelly, the police chief, now are considering legislation to permit employment of temporary police. The suggested plan would open the door to use of older men and perhaps some who could not pass the rather high physical tests for regulars. The maximum age limit for entrance would be raised from thirty-five to fifty. Such men would receive the same pay as regulars but would not be eligible for retirement and relief benefits of the established system. With the armed services and war factories combing the lists for available manpower, the Police Department is confronted with a difficult situation. Police with a year or more of training are considered sub- in action. But to many, the most fathers are to be inducted into the armed services, how can the existing gaps be filled in the police ranks? Emergency measures to maintain the force at adequate strength soon may become necessary.

Under One Roof

The effort now being made to set up within the State Department an agency for the co-ordination of all international economic activities of the Government, under a policy outlined by the Secretary of State, may be expected to encounter some resistance from within some of the agencies affected.

This is to be expected when it is considered that under the arrangement contemplated, co-ordination means at least partial surrender to the State Department of the virtual autonomy some of the individual agencies have enjoyed in the foreign field. Co-ordination in this case goes beyond a mere prevention of overlapping and duplication and means control, to the extent that State Department policy must be controlling policy.

No matter what the objections may be from individual agencies or individuals within those agencies, however, the plan will receive strong support from the public. The degree of autonomy enjoyed by so many separate agencies, charged with conducting economic operations in foreign lands, has been a source of discomfort to many observers. It doubtless has been a source of waste as well as confusion. It is a characteristic of each newly created agency to pursue jealously its own course. independently of what other agencies may be doing in the same field. Any plan designed to put them under one policy roof, so to speak, is fundamentally sound.

The President began working toward this arrangement some months ago when he wrote to Secretary Hull outlining the broad considerations which should cover co-ordination of agencies concerned with economic operations in the liberated countries. Later on, in his executive order abolishing the Board of Economic Warfare, the President charged Mr. Byrnes, as director of the Office of War Mobilization, with co-ordinating the effort, under a foreign policy laid down by the Secretary of State, of all agencies concerned with economic warfare abroad. This is the work now going forward. Assistant Secretary Dean Acheson is in charge of the State Department's Office of Foreign Economic Co-ordination, with Thomas K. Finletter as his deputy director. Whether this office, now charged with co-ordination for liberated areas, will be expanded, or whether another office, will be created to assume co-ordination over all other areas, is not clear.

The nature of the machinery to be established within the State Department is of small immediate importance, however, compared with the basic idea behind it. The diplomacy of the future will concern itself chiefly with economic questions. Economic, rather than merely political understandings, will form one foundation for the sort of peace that should follow this war. A gradual absorption by the State Department of the functions of some of the agencies set up to deal with immediate economic questions would be a most logical development. A trend in that direction can be seen in the steps being taken now in the name of co-ordination. This trend is far more important than the objections which may be voiced by a few individuals within agencies which fear the loss of the purely temporary independence they have enjoyed.

Queen of Battle

In the North African desert campaigns the tank and other motorized weapons were supreme. We began to think of modern warfare as being fought only in the air or on wheels. In Tunisia the ground forces backed the enemy into a corner, but it was overwhelming air supremacy, paralyzing his communications, that held him for the knockout blow. It was in Sicily, from beginning to the end, that the "Queen of Battle"-the infantry-came into her own.

Star Correspondent Thomas R. Henry's fine story from Sicily on the Third Division's infantry, its fiftyfour-mile march across the mountains in thirty-six hours and its steady fighting and hiking, almost without pause, for over a month, paid well-deserved tribute to the foot soldiers. They get little enough glory. The infantryman is no glamour boy. But he has proved in Sicily, as he has shown so many times before in the bloody history of war, that the battles are not won until the infantry gets there to win them. While we have such improvements as motorized infantry and air-borne infantry. these terms designate methods of transportation to the battleground. In the end, the infantryman walks. He must be there, in person. The only way to get there is on his two

In Sicily's mountainous country, with bridges knocked out and roads blocked, the infantry carried the brunt of the fighting. Mr. Henry mentions a time when men fought for two days on empty stomachs, for supplies could not reach them from the rear. What they had, they carried on their backs, fighting for every foot they gained. The airman drops his bombs. The artilleryman throws his shells at the enemy. The armored units charge with ponderous steeds of tempered steel, spitting shellfire as they go. But the infantryman relies mostly on himself. Some of the moving pictures of battle these days show awesome views of planes, tanks and artillery

ject to some draft deferment, but if | heart-warming sight of all are those two single files of doughboys, strung out on either side of the road, plugging along under their packs, rifles slung, grimy, sweaty, unshaven and tough, faces grinning at the camera from under their tin hats-carrying the fight to the enemy. They will need all the help that planes and tanks and artillery can give them. But when the fighting is over, they will be where the fighting stopped.

Japan's Ship Losses

A striking aspect of the announcement by Secretary of the Navy Knox that the Japanese have lost approximately one-third of their merchant shipping since Pearl Harbor is the emphasis which this places on Japan's extremely limited capacity to build new merchant ships.

Mr. Knox says that the Japanese have lost about 2,500,000 tons of shipping out of a total of 7.618.891 tons. This total, he said, consisted of 6.368 .-891 tons which Japan had in December, 1941, and an estimated 1,250,000 tons acquired or built since that date. Mr. Knox did not attempt to separate the tonnage acquired, or seized, from the portion represented by new construction. If his figures are correct. however, it is a fair assumption that the Japanese have been able to turn out only about 1,000,000 tons, or a little more, of new ships in the nearly two years that have elapsed since Pearl Harbor.

If that estimate be roughly accurate, this state of affairs must pose a very serious question for the Tokio militarists. They have committed themselves to supplying an empire spread over 3.000 miles of the Pacific. yet their shipyards have not been able to make good more than 50 per cent of their merchant shipping losses. And this in the face of the moral certainty that the curve of their losses is going to rise sharply as the growing American naval power makes itself felt more and more strongly along the sea lanes that are vital to Japan. In our own experience we know what a menace submarines can be to shipping that must operate along the exposed sea routes to outlying bases. But, thanks to our enormous building capacity, both in merchant and naval vessels, we have been able to meet this problem and apparently overcome it. We are increasing our margin of merchant shipping at the same time that we are turning out more and more escort vessels and long-range planes to drive off the U-boats. Yet Japan's shipvards cannot begin to keep pace with her merchant marine losses, nor is there any evidence that her capacity to build protective naval vessels is commensurate with our ability to turn out submarines and allied weapons.

This suggests that in the long run. and perhaps not so far in the future at that, Japan will be brought to the point of attempting to defend her holdings with land forces which cannot be adequately supplied from the main islands. And when that time comes the days of the empire will be plainly numbered. As Mr. Knox said, our submarine service, which has accounted for 77 per cent of Japan's losses, is doing "a perfectly splendid job"-a job which is not fully appreciated in this country.

'The Boot'

With Allied troops fighting their way up the "toe" of the Italian peninsula, the thoughts of those who are familiar with the writings of Giuseppe Giusti, celebrated Tuscan poet, will turn to his allegorical work, "The Boot."

A rough translation of a portion of the epic shows how its author, who died at Florence in 1850, had Italy say: "I am not made of calfskin, nor am I a peasant's boot. I am double-soled for a cavalier to wear in forest or by the sea and, though often in the water, am not decayed." Referring to the Alps and the Apennines, the nation explains: "I have a border at the top and a seam down the middle." It warns: "I am not easily put on, and few can wear me; nay, I fatigue and hurt a delicate foot, and to most legs I am not adapted. No one can wear me long. One after another has tried me. * * * I passed from robber to robber. It will seem incredible. Once, I know not how, I galloped by myself and ran over the world * * * but * * * my own weight brought me down stretched out on the earth." The spirit of Italy then recounts the attempts of Germans and Gauls and Spaniards to wear "The Boot" and tells how it "is waiting for a leg, neither German nor French, but of its own land." Alluding to Napoleon and his Russian campaign, in which many Italian soldiers perished, it declares: "There was a leg which the boot was not ashamed of had not that leg been too much of a vagabond, and which could have found this the strongest boot in the world, only a snowstorm froze that leg." Finally, it pleads: "The boot needs to be resewed and cleaned: For pity's sake look out to get a good bootmaker!" Giusti was a satirist, obviously; but he also was a patriot-he loved his country, hated the tyranny of demagogues as well as that of unworthy princes, and in anticipation of what now may be happening, demanded:

Shall there not be, however far, A judgment day to come?

"Chase After Pig Upsets Southwest Section," ran a recent local headline. Perusal thereof may have brought nostalgic smiles to certain older residents who can recall the days of "The Island."

A suggestion has been given that the drought be beaten by growing cactus; yet this, too, presents a thorny problem.

Stalin's Failure to Appreciate New Method

By Owen L. Scott.

Russia's Stalin has turned out to be an old-fashioned conservative, not a revolutionary, in his ideas on war. It is that innate conservatism that has kept him harping on his demand for a second front in Western Europe before the more revolutionary strategy of the United States and Great Britain called for that

In final analysis, the troubles of both Hitler and Stalin will be found to lie in their military conservatism. Neither has appreciated amphibious operations in warfare and neither has understood the potentialities of the strategic use of airpower. Hitler first missed the boat by failing to understand the problem of moving large bodies of troops across something broader than a river. This failure prevented him from invading Great Britain in 1940 when she was helpless. Hitler then missed another boat by not knowing how to make strategic use of the airplane.

Stalin, like Hitler, has had difficulty realizing that the problem of moving over an ocean is a problem of much different dimensions than the problem of moving across the Volga or the Dnieper. Like Hitler, too, he tied his airplanes to ground troops and failed to exploit on an adequate scale the use of the bomber to strike at the base of the power of his enemy. Both the Russians and the Germans depended upon the old-fashioned method of hurling mass armies at one another without at the same time making use of the revolutionary potentialities of the longrange bomber.

It has remained for the military leaders of Great Britain and the United States to apply revolutionary techniques to modern war.

The American-British move into North Africa was the greatest overseas movement in history up to that time. The move into Sicily, against a heavily fortified coast, was a far greater move. This last amphibious operation utilized strategic bombing to prepare the way, where the North African enterprise emphasized surprise. Both have provided the training and tested the equipment that will be required when the time comes to invade Western Europe. Both were moves of revolutionary significance in

Yet the greatest revolution is being worked by the strategic bombing of the American Air Forces, of which Russia's Stalin has been so lacking in apprecia-

The Royal Air Force of Britain is carrying forward, on a greater scale, the type of area bombing at night with which the Germans had sought unsuccessfully to knock out Britain. This is important, but not the concept that American Air Forces are bringing into use. The Americans are going out deliberately, in daylight, to strike directly at the single factory or the particular group of refineries or the key laboratory on which enemy power is dependent. These aircraft are hitting where no land armies or no artillery could hit. They jump over oceans or second fronts to strike at the heart of German war-making ability. Incidentally, in the process, German aircraft are being destroyed in large numbers.

There is every evidence that Russia's present success against German armies rests in important part upon the results realized from this revolutionary concept of strategic daylight bombing. It is at least questionable whether a second land front would have given Russia any greater aid, particularly since this country and Britain were not fully prepared to launch that front and might have been thrown back in the initial attempt.

Daylight bombing, besides injecting a revolutionary idea into war, is doing things that have a practical meaning to the Russians as well as to this country and Britain.

American bombing is credited with knocking out to date the source of about one-third of the German gasoline supply. Lack of gasoline is credited with preventing the Germans from making full use of their airplane strength either on the Russian front or elsewhere. Yet the Russians, because of their old-fashioned ideas of war, have failed to strike at the vital Ploesti refineries that lie within easy bombing distance for them Americans were forced to fly a round trip of 2,000 miles to render this help to the Russians by bombing Rumanian re-

It is American daylight bombing that recently blasted two of the key German aircraft factories. Results will be as much aid to the Russians as to this

Then, this same type of bombing is hitting at German repair shops for locomotives and at German transport centers. The German supply problem in Russia, more than any other single factor, is responsible for the weakness that has led to recent retreats. British and American use of airpower is having more to do with German transport difficulties than any other single factor.

Further, there is growing agreement that when the break comes in this war it will come inside Germany, not in the front lines where the German armies will still be fighting with skill, utilizing the weapons and the materials at hand. Airpower used both for terror, as the British are using it, and for destruction of key sources of war power, as the Americans are using it, may do more than land armies to produce the inner break in Germany.

Thus it is likely to be the revolutionary thinking and planning of British and American military men that has as much to do with the final winning of this war as it is to be the land fighting on a vast scale in Russia. Both play their big parts and neither probably would have been successful without the other. It is the military conservatism of Russia's Stalin that causes him to underestimate the part played by strategetic use of aircraft in this war.

JUDAEA AND AMERICA

By the Rev. Josiah E. Elliott, Rector of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church.

"And when He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." St. Luke, xix.41-42. Jesus Christ did not grieve over Jerusalem as a patriot over his own country. There was an element of patriotic sorrow in His touching and tearful lament. His love was not confined to that land because, as concerning the flesh, He was the Son of David, was born at Bethlehem, and regarded the Jews as His fellowcitizens. The idea is verified by the universality of Christ's love, teaching and supreme sacrifice for the redemption of humanity. To be a patriot seems to place a person under limitation. To love one's own country more than others is to love others less than one's own. In the light of the absolute love of Jesus we cannot associate with Him, nor with the church, His body, anything that even looks like partiality or partisanship. The same consideration may be given to our Lord's attitude with regard to His affection for His mother, His brothers, and His personal friends. In His heart, no doubt there was especial love for these. There was then, probably, something of patriotic grief in those tears of Jesus, but all particular interests of our Lord were means toward a definite end, the children of His Father. In this manner He thought of Jerusalem which represented the relation between God and man, the city round which so many associations gathered, whose guilt and doom stood in clear, sad vision before Him.

We speak of the land or country, though it was the city of Jerusalem over which He wept. But in the sense in which Washington is the United States, and will be more so in the "World of Tomorrow," Jerusalem was Judaea, was Israel itself. It was the strength, the light, the glory, of the land; it was the center to which all the inhabitants looked and journeyed; it was the source of the people's habits and beliefs. The capital taken, everything was disrupted. the fate of the country was settled. Jesus Christ was deeply concerned about this people, this nation as He beheld the city.

The city represented a nation that had been enriched with peculiar privilege. It began with a signal and glorious deliverance from oppression. The freedom was continued with the granting of the law and a system uniquely fitted to save the Jews from surrounding superstitions and impurities. The rise of psalmist and prophet with inspiring song and elevating speech and life uplifted their imagination and cleansed their conscience. They were made a chosen people of God by the strong and severe, but yet kind and merciful discipline through which they were forced to pass. The culmination of the nation was in the presence, the teaching, the love, the life of Jesus

The nation appeared to have been designed by God to be the depository and guardian of His divine truth, to hold fast and to hold high those great verities which are the strength, the life and the glory of mankind. The nation undoubtedly would have played a very great part and would have been a great factor in the restitution of mankind. Christ saw that it had missed its opportunity, and was hastening to its doom. The faith of the nation had become a hollow formality, a mere ritual, a profession of the lips; but the hearts were far from God, from which true reverence. love, charity, earnestness, were entirely absent. The nation was in the very act of rejecting and was about to slay its Messiah and thereby thwart the plan for world salvation. There is a parallelism between Judaea and America. God has enriched our land with peculiar privileges. We have a large share of religious liberty. We have a good measure of spiritual enlightenment through the contributions of religious thinkers and leaders, not indeed without some dark shadows of ignorance and superstition. We have numerous and strong organizations, whose functions are to teach, to guide, to guard, to rescue and to redeem. We can truly say, "He hath not dealt so with any nation; as for His statutes and commandments, they have not known them." But we have known them, and the security of our future rests upon the practice of them. God has given us a high and a great mission to perform. Responsibility goes with privilege. It is, indeed, the obverse side of the same thing. We have not only to present to His view a "holy nation" within our own borders, to raise our race, our community to the heights of Christian knowledge, of social purity, of economic honesty, of justice in human relations, of national well-being in all its forms; but to diffuse the light of divine truth far and wide, and to make our

and truth throughout the world. Today, the enthusiastic affirmation of our faith in democracy, the powerful and vicious challenge to that democracy, the dead, the bereaved, the suffering and the wounded who have responded to that challenge demand that we consider whether we are declining that mission or are fulfilling it. That question cannot be determined by public professions; neither by the number or character or wealth of our sanctuaries; nor by the number of the membership; nor by the variety of forms, rituals and creeds. It can be determined only by the actual spiritual and mental condition of our people, of the millions of the nation; and by the earnestness and devotion of Christian men and women who have the courage to follow the precepts of their Master with the same resolve that the soldier follows his flag even unto death. By this criteria we, as a nation, stand

Capital Sidelights

By Will P. Kennedy. When Congress came in 1800 to occupy its permanent home in the Capitol, the members slaked their thirst with copious draughts from two excellent wells, within the area where the central portion of the Capitol now stands. At his mauguration, March 4, 1801, President Thomas Jefferson also had a drink from one of these wells. But what of thatthe families who lived on the Capitol grounds and others in the vicinity had been drawing their water supply from these wells for years. That first home of Congress was a small rectangular building, since familiarly known as the Supreme Court section of the Capitol, but which then housed the Senate and House, the Supreme Court, the Courts of the District and the Library-nucleus of the great Library of Congress today, Where the central portion of the Capitol has been erected, including the rotunda and the dome-just south of the original building-and on the line of East Capitol street which runs between the present Library of Congress and Supreme Court buildings-was used as a highway of sorts between the eastern and western section of the "budding" Capital City. South of that trespassing roadway in the section now known as Statuary Hall there began to arise a one-story eliptical-shaped building of brick construction known to the people of that period as "The Oven," designed to accommodate the House. The contract price for the structure was $4,789. Work was started with James Hoban as superintendent on May 18, 1801. He had previously been architect of the White House. This "Oven" was 70 by 94 feet, with 16 niches and arches to form an arcade, and had a gallery, on a semi-eliptical plan, 120 feet long with three rows of seats. A covered way 145 feet long and two flights of steps connected the original used por-

How the Bureau Of Engraving Began

By James Waldo Fawcett.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is the scene of the daily labor of 7,800 people, yet it safely may be assumed that not one in a hundred of them is familiar with the early history of the establishment in which they are employed.

For the bureau's personnel then as well as for the philatelic public Thomas F. Morris has performed a service in a monograph which he recently wrote for "The Stamp Specialist," published by Harry L. Lindquist, New York.

It was on August 22, 1862, that Secretary of the Treasury Salmon P. Chase "instructed Spencer M. Clark, chief clerk of the Bureau of Construction, to carry out a program of work, and the bureau officially came into being."

Mr. Morris explains: "Following shortly the outbreak of the Civil War, the Treasury found itself in a state of unpreparedness to meet the extraordinary expenses of the conflict. The Act of Congress, July 17, 1861, provided that demand notes be signed by the Treasurer and the register of the Treasury of the United States. The contract for the engraving and printing of this paper money had been placed with the American Bank Note Co., . . one of two companies in the bank note business at that time capable of engraving and printing work of this character. These notes were printed (in New York) and sent to Washington in sheets of four notes each. Upon their receipt by the Treasury Department, the signatures of the signing officers were attached, and then trimmed and separated by hand labor with shears, two women operators being the first employes to do this work.

"It soon became apparent that the work of signing these notes by the respective officers was too great a task; the volume of work in trimming and cutting by hand became too laborious whereupon Congress authorized employment of other persons to sign for these officers. As a result, from a nucleus of two women operators, a corps of 70 clerks was employed to carry on the work. These clerks were employed at salaries of $1,200 each per year. It was considered too dangerous to have too many different signatures to notes of same issue and provided little security to the public. At this point and upon the recommendations of Chief Clerk Clark and Secretary of the Treasury Chase, Congress authorized that the signatures be mechanically attached. Necessary machinery was procured for the work and a Treasury seal, which had been designed and engraved by the American Bank Note Co., was also used in the printing process, as further means of frustrating counterfeiting. . . .

Permission to cut and trim the notes by machinery likewise was obtained and a "steam engine and boiler with necessary appurtenances and other fixtures for finishing" were purchased. The first day of actual operation was August 29, 1862. Mr. Clark, with one man and four known as "the National Currency Bureau, First Division."

"The success of the undertaking," says Mr. Morris, "was so impressive" that the Secretary of the Treasury instructed the chief clerk "to investigate the economies to be gained by the Government itselfproducing securities and currency issues." By way of result, Congress "vested authority" in the Secretary of the Treasury "to have such securities engraved and printed at the Treasury Department." The National Legislature at about the same time sponsored "postal currency"paper money in small denominations. from 5 to 50 cents, to take the place of specie payments of like amountsand Mr. Clark asked to be allowed to buy 40 copper plate presses and four Gordon presses for surface printing. Costs of this equipment were estimated at $40,000. Three rooms in the Treasury Building were to be used for the manufacturing of "fractional" notes. Four engravers were to be engaged.

Such was the plan. It was worked out with a number of alterations. James Duthie was the first vignette engraver hired. The name of the pioneer letter. engraver is unknown. As transferer Elisha Hobart was employed. The first work of engraving the plates for the production of the second issue of "postal currency" was done on November 20, 1862. By November, 1864, the "First Division National Currency Bureau" had 237 male and 288 female operators engaged with 15 transfer presses, 72 hydraulic presses, 96 roller presses, 6 Hoe cylinder presses, 6 ink mills and "all types of miscellaneous machinery necessary for bank note work-a total of 324 engines, machines, etc."

The division then became "the Engraving and Printing Bureau of the Treasury Department." By January, 1869, it was referred to as the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. "At that time, it was recommended that all Internal Revenue stamps, postage stamps, envelopes, postal money orders and all other similar work for other departments" be produced in "a fireproof building to be erected on the grounds adjacent to the Treasury Building with a subterranean passageway between the two buildings."

Not every phase of the program thus outlined was fulfilled, but gradually the vision of its sponsor was justified. By an act of Congress for the fiscal year 1878 private companies were debarred from sharing in the manufacture of bank notes for the Government. An appropriation of $300,000 was voted for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the bureau at Fourteenth and B streets S.W. This structure was occupied on July 1, 1880. Wings were added in 1905. An annex was dedicated in 1938. Meanwhile, the engraving and printing of postage stamps was undertaken in 1893.

Mr. Morris lists the supervising heads of the bureau as follows: Mr. Clark, 1862-1868; George B. McCartee, 1869-1876; Edward McPherson, 1877-8; Edward O. Graves, 1885-1889; William M. Meredith, 1889-1893 and 1900-1906. Claude M. Johnson, 1893-1900: Thomas J. Sullivan, 1906-1908; Joseph E. Ralph, 1908-1917; James L. Wilmeth, 1917-1922; Louis A. Hill, 1922-1924; Wallace W.

Kirby, 1924; Alvin W. Hall, 1924 to date. Mr. Morris himself has performed a labor of distinction. Much research has gone into his monograph. The fruit of the effort is a monument to his father, Thomas F. Morris, chief of the Engraving Division from November 1, 1893, to July 1, 1897.

Earlier in the week, on September 1. 4 the British Air Force helped the Germans take note of the start of the war by a great bombing raid on Berlin equal to the recent 1,800-ton attack on the German capital, while on the other side of the world an American task force containing at least two carriers, if the Japanese reports of the attack are accurate, bombed and shelled Marcus, a small island only about three hours' bombing distance from Tokio and due north of the heavily fortified Jap base at Truk in the Caroline Islands. Tiny Denmark, no longer able to accept unchallenged the rule of the Nazis who sought to paint Denmark as the ideal collaberationist state, revolted Sunday, scuttling most of its fleet with the rest escaping to Sweden while widespreading rioting occurred and continued until a heavy Nazi force rushed into the kingdom to surpress the demonstration with rather heavy casualities. Though held in check by the invaders after the intial outburst, the Danes continued to carry on many acts of sabotage and, by means of the slowdown, crippled important industries on which the Nazis depend.

Altogether, it was an encouraging week for the Allies with two questions still to be cleared up; first, whether the raid on Marcus Island was a feint to cover more important action elsewhere and second, what the plans are for the American 7th Army which, like the British 8th, stood ready on Sicily to strike wherever Gen. Eisenhower might decide. The Navy, acknowledging that Marcus had been raided, refused to add other information until whatever operation is underway should be complete and it should be safe to break radio silence.

Italian Front

Striking just before dawn on Friday, Gen. Montgomery sent his British and Canadian troops swarming across the Strait of Messina with orders to continue on until Italy was knocked out of the war. Prior to the invasion, the coastal fortifications around Scilla and Reggio Calabria had been softened with heavy shelling by Allied naval units and blasted in air attacks.

The preparatory work was completed so successfully that the first wave of landing troops sped on ahead to take objectives which were not expected to fall until the second wave came ashore, As one British soldier described it, the men were running forward like a scalded cat, an unpleasant but highly descriptive simile.

The reaction of the Italians in Southern Italy apparently was one of relief to see the invasion underway with the day of deliverance from Germany at hand. In Rome, the news was received indifferently by the population which sees the advent of peace delayed rather than speeded by the landings.

Allied air forces, co-ordinating with the landing troops, struck heavily at the Nazis in the North, blasting the rail lines and bridges leading out of Brenner Pass and thus materially crippling the Germans in moving men and supplies in or out of Italy. South of the pass, Bolzano and Trento, important real centers, also were bombed by Flying Fortresses which had made their deepest penetration into Italy.

All week long, the Allied aircraft pounded away at Italy's transportation system and war industries, for the most part raiding almost unchallenged although on Tuesday, the Nazis made a desperate effort to halt the raiders, throwing in a large number of fighters and carrying on a running battle which continued 100 miles out to sea with 21 enemy planes shot down and 15 Allied craft lost.

Nervous Berlin warned during the week that a great Allied fleet has been assembled in the harbor at Gibraltar ready to aid in another invasion which Berlin fears might come on the southern coast of France, the advantages of which are shown on the accompanying map, or directly across the Channel where Berlin states two mighty armies soon will clash in the greatest battle of all times. It was admitted that troops had been withdrawn from the Russian front to prepare for the test of strength which Berlin feels certain shortly is to come.

European Front

Despite the best the Nazis could do in the way of defense, Berlin underwent two heavy raids during the week, the first occurring just before midnight Tuesday night and lasting well into Wednesday.

It was reported that Germany had concentrated nearly 1,400 fighters in the Berlin area and had set up unprecedented numbers of searchlights to guard the capital, yet the big British and Canadian bombers blasted their way through to their target to drop great quantities of two-ton blockbusters and thousands of incendiaries which left fires, 140 of which were still burning two days later.

The attacking bombers ran into a new type of defense when German fighter planes, high in the air, dropped parachute flares which lit the sky brilliantly and silhouetted the bombers against the glare, making them easily found targets for the fighters' cannon and machine guns. Many planes were lost by both

Friday night Berlin again was attacked, though the details were not immediately announced. The raid was comparable to that earlier in the week so far as number of planes involved was concerned.

The air activity, however, was not confined to raids on Berlin. All week long it was another chapter in the long story of destruction which has taught the German people as they have never been taught before that the waging of war involves death and devastation out into action, it being the eager de-tion. Suave, able, politic, he has tried hard to keep out of department feuds. Assistant Secretary G. Howland Shaw is the administrative officer of the department. Theoretically he keeps the machinery going. According to Jones in Fortune no one runs the State Department-it just jerks along.

The assistant secretaries and the undersecretary are appointed not by the Secretary of State but by the President. This has made for trouble in the past in other administrations. A President has rewarded a political ally with the post of Secretary and then has named a professional diplomat as undersecretary to do the work. There have been explosions in the past but none of the violence of the Welles-Hull mixup. Dunn Close to Hull.

Below the appointive level are professionals who exert considerable indirect influence on foreign policy in spite of their insistence that they are merely functionaries. Foremost in this category today is James Clement Dunn, whose title is adviser on political relations. Dunn is one of Hull's close friends, a member of the croquet setthe little group that meets with the Secretary for croquet and conversation.

The left-wing press and Dunn's personal enemies brand him as "Fascist" or "Fascist-minded." This is, of course, a loose and foolish use of words. The explanation of Dunn's conservative cast of mind is far more complicated. A good part of his career has been spent in world capitals where his acquaintances were almost inevitably limited to men like himself-diplomats for the most part-who were also wealthy and con-

Among this number, naturally, were a majority whose only real political conviction was a fear of "bolshevism," a fear of any new doctrine threatening their places in the world. Any one who has traveled abroad has heard their conversation. And any one who lives among them for a prolonged period must almost inevitably take on a certain coloration from this environment

Dunn has been listed in the anti-Welles clique. He is, of course, far too cautious to show his hand. He works closely with Assistant Secretary Long. In his own view he is a conscientious and disinterested public servant who spends long and exhausting hours at his desk for a small salary in the public good. The attacks on him, according to his friends, have given him a sense of martyrdom. This, to be sure, is one of the unhappiest aspects of the controversy in terms of the personalities involved. Name-calling produces only more frustration and hostility. It ignores the hopeless inadequacy of the institution itself. Credited With Spanish Policy. To Dunn has been attributed the authorship of American policy in Spain. Before acquiring the title of adviser on political affairs, he was chief of the Division of Western European Affairs. In that office he was certainly influential through his recommendations in shaping policy on the continent. But while the perspective of history is still lacking, the Spanish policy seems to have originated from higher sources. The British Foreign Office may have been the determining influence, plus President Roosevelt's desire to avoid a clash with the opinion of powerful Catholics in this

What is curious, of course, is that if our Spanish policy appeared anti-democratic during the civil war, today it is even more reactionary. This is partly due to the choice of ambassadors. Prof. Carleton J. H. Hayes, who has openly declared the United States has no intention of interfering in any way with the Franco regime, even implying that we intend to help that regime, has expressed his antidemocratic views on the record. His book, "A Generation of Materialism," is an extraordinary document that should have wider reading. In the choice of an ambassador, Dunn could, of course, have an important influence.

The split within the State Department has long been growing. Every speech that Weles made, every move he made. fed Hull's resentment, particularly when it was fanned by men in the department who hated Welles and plotted for his removal. Welles frequently talked with newspapermen, giving them almost the only guidance they ever got from the department. But so far as can be learned, and certainly it is true of my own experience, he never spoke a disloyal word about his superior or about any one else in the department, even when asked direct questions as to his relationships with other officers.

Many Capable Men. The saddest commentary of all, of course, is that at a time when the department's reputation with the public should be at perhaps the lowest level in history, there should be so many capable men to do, if their capacities were actually utilized, a job of supreme importance.

In 1939, the Chamberlain government issued the MacDonald white paper, providing for the admission of 10,000 Jews a year for the ensuing five years, but because of the plight of the refugees from Europe, permitted a "bohus" immigration of 25,000, making a total of

Thus, by next March, there will be no further Jewish immigration to Palestine, as the matter now stands. Besides the wide divergence of Jewish-Arab claims on Palestine, there are opinions too numerous to quote on each side, Problem Must Be Studied. Recent reports from the Near East said the problem was becoming of greater importance to the United Nations which now must face the question of the initial application of the Atlantic Charter or discuss how it might be applied. It was predicted that if the situation were ignored by the United Nations, terrible bloodshed would follow.

The reports went on to disclose that certain factions of Jews and Arabs were secretly arming. It was estimated that the Arabs had hidden thousands of rifles, machine guns and grenades and large supplies of ammunition. The Jews also had gathered rifles, larger weapons and ammunition. The training of guerrillas also was going on secretly.

Some Zionists believe that room can made for 2,000,000 Jews in addition to the 550,000 already settled. They look to Palestine as the principal refuge for the persecuted and homeless Jews of Europe and feel that their financial and business ability can develop the land sufficiently to support even as many as 3,000,000 more refugees.

It is claimed by non-Zionists, however, that Palestine is not large enough to absorb any more refugees, being only about the size of Vermont or New Hampshire, or about 10,000 square miles.

The Zionists refer to the Palestine Royal Commission report of 1937, that the Arabs (1,000,000 of them) could be exchanged or transferred if the country is partitioned. But the answer to that from an Arab point of view is that "the cure for the eviction of Jews from Germany is not to be sought in the eviction of the Arabs from their homeland."

Differing Viewpoint.

Dr. Charles E. Shulman, rabbi of Glencoe, Ill., serving as a chaplain in the United States Navy, notes that western democracies have given refuge to only a small number of dispossessed Jews and that in the postwar period most countries will restrict immigration in order to make their own domestic adjustments. thus making Palestine "a necessity for

On the other hand, Jabir Shibli, Christian native of Lebanon (Syria), who has long been professor of mathematics at Pennsylvania State College, contends the Arabs have lived in Palestine for 5,000 years and that they have natural rights of possession; that it is no more a holy land for Jews than for Moslems or

He goes on to point out that Zionists emphasize their agricultural abilities, whereas, he adds, the land they claim to have redeemed is that of "welldeveloped farms from which they dislodged Arab farmers." He explains further that less than one-fifth of the Jews live on farms, while two-thirds of the Arabs are engaged in agriculture.

King Ibn Saud was recently quoted as saying that he knew nothing to justify the Jewish claims in Palestine. He explained that "centuries before the advent of Mohammed, Palestine belonged to the Jews. But the Romans prevailed over them, killed some and dispersed the rest. No trace of their rule remained." The King went on to record that the Arabs seized Palestine from the Romans more than 1,300 years ago, "and it has remained ever since in the possession of the Moslems." He held Jewish occupation of Palestine to be "an error; first because it constitutes an injustice against the Arabs and the Moslems in general, and secondly because it causes dissensions and disturbances between the Moslems and their friends, the Allies."

Dr. Wise Replies.

A reply was made to the King by Dr. Stephen S. Wise, one of the founders of Zionism in America, who pointed out that passages in the Books of Moses. Judges, Samuel, Kings and Chronicles. in the Psalms and in the major and minor prophets, repeat the promise of the Jewish homeland.

He said the testimony of travelers reveal "the bond between these Jews and the land they have so laboriously recreated." He added that "the solution of the Jewish problem everywhere is organically bound up with the recreation of the Jewish homeland in Palestine."

A non-Zionist viewpoint, as expressed by Lessing J. Rosenwald, is that the Palestine question will hardly be settled world, and particularly to the Jews."

Observers supporting the theory of an invasion of this area hold that the Allied position in the Western Mediterranean makes it possible to throw in men, planes and ships from every base in North Africa, as well as from Gibraltar. It might be necessary first, they agree, to neutralize Corsica and Sardinia, although the capture of Sicily removed the biggest obstacle.

A force coming from Gibraltar would be reasonably free from Axis attack until it reached the French shore, since it would be out of range of Axis aircraft based at Corsica and Sardinia.

The picture of an Allied invasion of the continent becomes more intriguing in the light of possible simultaneous landing operations at several points-the principal one in Southern France, with supporting operations on the Italian coast and the Channel coast.

America's War Leaders

By Bernard Godwin.

LT. GEN. H. H. ARNOLD, Air Force Commander.

This is the third of a series of sketches and commentaries about leading figures in our armed forces by the eminent artist, Bernard Godwin which will appear on successive Sundays in The Sunday Star.

Gladwin, Pa. Ever hear of it? Probably not. All America has much to be thankful for Gladwin. Hitler and his gang will rue its place on earth. That tiny town gave us one of the most powerful, colorful and vital men in the World War II picture, Gen. Henry H. Arnold. top man of all the terrifying air armadas now dealing destruction to dictatorships over the globe.

There is a story that young Henry Arnold first defied gravitation down there in Gladwin with a non-stop flight from the top of a barn to the ground with his mother's best Sunday parasol, but we cannot stop to verify that here. Anyway, it is definitely recorded that the first air mail and the first plane equipped with radio for ground observations were piloted by young officer Arnold, the same courageous Arnold who was made the first Commanding General of the United States Air Forces by executive order in March, 1942. Destiny seemed to have listed Gen. Arnold's ambitions, Seated in an office chair-posing not too well-Gen. Arnold was good to look at. A towering man, powerful, energetic, he seemed to be super-charged with high-powered magnetic personality. With only the silhouette of his portrait completed, he inquired: "Finished?" "Just started, sir," I replied. Smiling dubiously, he pointed to a sign on the wall: "All Jobs Have A Time on the basis of historical claims, but needs practical consideration. He goes on to say: "Those of Jewish faith who oppose the creation of a national Jewish state hold that it embraces the very racist theories and nationalistic philosophies that have become so prevalent in recent years, that have caused untold suffering to the Limit, Due 10 Minutes Ago." Afterward his adjutant explained that they have a name for their boss, "Do It Yesterday Arnold." But he was sympathetic and the time limit for me was prolonged.

Gen. Arnold's large forehead surmounting smiling eyes reflect a mind with great imagination. His sensitive nose indicates good judgment. His mouth is generous with a tendency to curl upward at the ends, providing the smiling disposition which has won him the appellation "Happy Arnold." At first glance, too, you note the deep dimple in his chin, his mark of adventure. His face is ruddy and body vigorous.

Ask any young officer on the general's staff about the "old man's" inexhaustable energy and you get the reply, "He has plenty of what it takes and lots to spare.' The average staff officer fades out midway in the typical Arnold day. Nobody is sure just when he starts work in the morning and nobody is sure when his workday is over.

Cautiously I asked him what is his formula for a successful career and he snapped back: "Healthy body, clean mind, lots of work and plenty of smiles."

The Philippines are old stuff to Gen. Arnold: he served there when fresh from West Point in 1909. When aviation was in the frail, biplane stage, he went to Dayton, Ohio, as a member of the Signal Corps, to receive instruction in Wrights. After that course he became an instructor at the Signal Corps Aviation School at College Park, Md. He piloted a Burgess-Wright plane to an altitude record of 6,540 feet June 1, 1912, and captured the first Mackay Trophy in October, 1912. Though he itched to be in the thick of things in World War I, he was assigned to information service at Washington. A Distinguished Service Medal was awarded Gen. Arnold last October for "extraordinary achievement while participating in an aerial flight from Brisbane, Australia, to Bolling Field, Washington, in a total elapsed time of 77 hours 14 minutes."

written, there was no doubt that Gen. Eisenhower would be in chief command when Allied armies for the first time set foot on the Mediterranean mainland of Axis territory.

The Army inherited numbers of lieutenant colonels from the first World War. Many others, like Eisenhower, had attended the principal service schools, acted as regional officers at various posts and served tours on the General Staff in Washington. It was Gen. Marshall who discerned in Eisenhower a genius for battle administration on a continental scale and for the subtle diplomatic skill and tact which are indispensable to military alliances.

Credit to Gen. Marshall.

Astonishment has frequently been expressed that in the brief space of some two years this country has been able to develop so many brilliant generals for coping with the great Axis armies which during many years had been preparing for war. It is generally agreed that the personage fundamentally responsible, though he has shrunk from public praise, is Gen. Marshall, with his uncanny knack for sizing up men. The list of those whom he has unearthed or developed, and intrusted with full authority, speaks for itself.

Gen. Arnold has built up the Air Forces from a negligible section of the Army to an organization on a parity with the ground forces, including infantry, artillery and armor. The name of Gen. Somervell has become a proverb for toughness and capacity, in the redoubtable job of supplying and arming the new force of 7,000,000 soldiers. Gen. McNair had direct charge of their training, the soundness of which has been demonstrated by the rapidity with which American troops never before under fire have been transformed into veterans.

The roster of Gen. Marshall's "boys" on service overseas includes such notably successful leaders as Lt. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., commander of the 7th Army, and his two corps commanders, Lt. Gen. Omar N. Bradley and Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes; Maj. Gen. Alexander M. Patch, who wound up the campaign on Guadalcanal; Lt. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, commander of ground forces in New Guinea; Lt. Gen. Millard F. Harmon, commanding general, under Admiral Halsey, of United States Army Forces in the South Pacific area: Lt. Gen. Mark W. Clark, knight errant of the African expedition and commander of the United States 5th Army; Lt. Gen. Simon B. Buckner, jr., commander in Alaska, and Lt. Gen. George H. Brett. chief of the Caribbean Defense Command, including the Panama Canal.

Then there are Lt. Gen. Carl Spaatz, commander of the North African Air Forces, and Maj. Gen. James Doolittle, mander of Strategic Air Forces in North Africa; Lt. Gen. Robert C. Richardson, jr., commander of the Hawaiian Department, and Lt. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, who succeeded to command of United States Forces in the European theater after the death of another Marshall protege, Lt. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, in an airplane crash in Iceland.

So far as is known, there has been only a single disappointment in the Chief of Staff's long slate of appointees. One of his major generals, possibly through no fault of his own, met with reverses in a combat area abroad. He was promptly recalled and transferred to an administrative post in the United States.

considers to its best interests after the British and American governments have been given a chance to consider them.

On the other hand, there is also the possibility that the Germans will not make sufficiently acceptable propositions and will not be ready to give the necessary guarantee that their peace offering is not a trap. In this case, of course, we shall witness the complete disintegration of the Reich next summer or fall.

Must Fix Policy Quickly.

But here again, there is the all-important question of how the repayment to the United States—that is to say, lasting peace in Europe-will be accomplished. It does not appear probable that the views of Russia will harmonize with the views of the American people regarding the make-up of Central, Eastern and Southern Europe. And no mean factor is the fact that there are several million American voters of foreign extraction who come from these nations of Europe. This cannot be overlooked with the presidential election coming up in November, 1944.

Hence, competent observers say the next six months will be devoted to intense diplomatic negotiations among Washington, London and Moscow. The Russians' position, of course, is far better than ours. The Soviet government knows exactly what it wants; it need not worry about an electoral vote; it has definite views about what it expects peace to bring. What is more important, it has the power to force and at the same time tempt the Germans to offer peace.

President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill have come to realize that merely applauding the superb actions of the Russian armies and providing them with lease-lend goods is not sufficient. If they want to avoid a mess in Europe, and at the same time prevent Staling from considering peace terms from the Reich, they must talk fast and strong. They know that some territorial concessions must be made to Russia from areas which we regard as alien to the Russians. but which the Kremlin considers as

For the next six months the statesmanship of the American President and the British Prime Minister will be of greater importance than the generalship of their army, air and navy leaders.

Old Landmarks of Lower Seventh Street

By John Clagett Proctor.

One of the most interesting neighborhoods in Washington, and one which has attached to it considerable national and local historic importance, is the section located in the vicinity of Seventh and E streets NW

From the beginning of the capital outstanding events began to occur here, and so, as early as July 4, 1793, the laying of the corner stone of Blodgett's Hotel took place. This building was located on the north side of E street between Seventh and Eighth streets. The name "Blodgett" was not the real name of the structure, but, instead, was the name of Samuel Blodgett, jr., who originated a lottery scheme for the purpose of erecting the building. The official name of the hostelry was the "Union Public Hotel," and though it was sometimes called the "Great Hotel," this was only done to distinguish it from the "Little Hotel," which, as early as 1795 stood on the north side of F street near the corner of Fifteenth street.

At the laying of the corner stone of Blodgett's Hotel, according to an account printed at the time, "One thousand five hundred people were present and walked from thence in procession. preceded by a lodge of Free Masons, to a dinner, the principal dish of which consisted of an ox roasted whole. Toasts were drunk on the occasion, and the day was concluded with much harmony."

Of Brick Construction

An early description of the building tells us that it was constructed of brick, had a frontage of 120 feet, was 50 feet wide, and two stories high, with a basement and attic story. It was designed by James Hoban, architect of the White House.

In 1800, Wignell & Reinagle, who conducted the New Theater in Philadelphia, fitted up a room in the Blodgett Building and opened there, on August 22, what was called the United States Theater, the initial performance being "Venice Preserved, or the Spoiled Child." It was the first regular theatrical performance in the city, and one the performers probably never forgot, as a short while before the performance began a heavy storm broke over the city, overflowing the creeks and drowning much stock and almost ruining the theatrical scenery. Apparently, the expenses were greater than the profits, for the promoters closed the theater in less than a month.

The Blodgett Building remained incompleted until 1810, when it was purchased by the Government to be occupied by the Post Office Department, the City Post Office, the Patent Office and the Library of Congress. Later, it was notable as having been the meeting place of the third session of the Thirteenth Congress September 19, 1814, to March 3, 1815, following the burning of the public buildings by the British. This particular building had been saved from destruction through the efforts of Dr. William Thornton, who told the British officers that it housed patent models of interest to the entire civilized world, and not of interest alone to this country.

Building Was Enlarged

By 1829 or 1830, it became necessary to enlarge the building and an addition was built to the original structure, facing Seventh street, and to this side the entrance to the Patent Office and the City Post Office was moved.

On December 15, 1836, this building was destroyed by fire, together with all the accumulated mail and all the early patent models and specifications. So far as the Patent Office was concerned. its loss was an irreparable calamity. Following the fire the business of the Patent Office was transacted in the City Hall, now the Courthouse, and remained there until it was removed to the building at Ninth and F streets. The Post Office Department moved to the City Hall, or Fuller's, now the Willard Hotel.

An idea of the horrible conditions of many of our thoroughfares in the early days is illustrated by an accident that occurred in front of the Blodgett Hotel a short while before it was destroyed, and of which the Metropolitan newspaper said at the time:

"A dangerous accident happened yesterday to one of our respectable citizens, from a cause which is a reproach to our

On April 21 the press records the result of the accident, saying:

take place close to the Blodgett Hotel site, on the west side of Seventh street, midway between E and F streets, was the opening of the first public telegraph office in the United States, on April 1, 1845. The building in which the office was located is described as having been an ordinary two-story house with an outside stairway leading to the second story, where the telegraph office was located. The front room faced Seventh street, and here was the operating room, and the other rooms were used for the main batteries and other accessories.

First Telegraph Office

But the opening of this telegraph office by Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse was only the realization of a dream of a great man who at last had achieved the goal he sought and had so long and diligently worked for.

Morse was primarily an artist of distinction, and turned inventor after he had concluded-at least for the time being-to abandon the brush and palette. a field equally as hard in which to achieve success. However, he had before him the example of Robert Fulton. inventor of the steamboat, who was also an artist, but who abandoned art for science, resulting in the production of successful steam navigation

U. S. Appropriated $30,000

A statement that always appealed to Morse was that electricity could be made to pass instantaneously through any known length of wire, and that its presence could be observed at any part of the line by breaking the circuit.

So intensely interested did he become that he not only worked out roughly a plan for employing electromagnetism in telegraphy, but also completed his telegraph code during the same trip. It was not until 1835, however, that he was able to exhibit an instrument that was found to work well.

By July, 1837, this instrument was perfected and later exhibited in New York and Philadelphia, and subsequently demonstrated in the rooms of the House Committee on Commerce. In 1838 the question was taken up by the Government, and the House passed a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report on the advisability of establishing a Government telegraph system. Five years later, on March 3, 1843, Congress appropriated $30,000 for testing Morse's telegraph.

Morse was made superintendent of the system, at a salary of $2,000 a year. under the first appropriation, and his four assistants, Leonard D. Gale, J. C. Fisher, Alfred Vail and Ezra Cornell. were each given an annual sa $1.000.

500 Chestnut Poles

At first the line-which, when finally completed, extended from Washington to Baltimore-was laid undreground in a deep trench made with a specially inverted plow, but when it was nearly finished, and most of the appropriation of $30,000 had been expended, it was found that this idea would not work, on account of the great escape of current caused by bad insulation, and poles had to be substituted and wires strung for the entire distance.

These poles were obtained by contract signed by Prof. Morse and Abner Cloud Shoemaker, and called for the delivery of 500 straight and round chestnut posts, with the bark on each post to be not less than eight inches in diameter at the butt and five or six inches in diameter at the top. Nearly all were to be 30 feet in length. They were un-e doubtedly cut in the Shoemaker tract which now forms a part of Rock Creek

The stringing of the overhead wires began on April 1, 1844, and finally, on May 24, was flashed over the wire the Morse had given up all hope of the bill going through at that session, and he felt so grateful for the welcome news that he promised to let Miss Ellsworth dictate the first message, which she so cleverly did.

Offered to U. S. for $100,000

As is well known, the Washington station was first located in the Capitol, and it was this station which was soon afterward removed to Seventh street between E and F streets.

Secretary Joseph Henry of the Smithsonian Institution suggested stringing the wires on poles, and as a matter of fact, Prof. Henry, in his invention of the electromagnet, laid the foundation for Morse's invention of the telegraph, and his discovery did, in a way, much that Morse accomplished. However, like Dr. Samuel P. Langley, who, for his discoveries, sought no financial reward, he upon one occasion said to Prof. Trowbridge, at Cambridge: "If I had patented that arrangement of magnet and battery, I should have reaped great pecuniary reward."

Morse offered to sell his invention to the Government, at one time, for $100 -000, but because the Postmaster General did not think the telegraph could ever be made profitable, the offer was not accepted.

But Amos Kendall, who knew a good thing when he saw it, soon organized the Magnetic Electric Telegraph Co. and became its first president. He, no doubt, had more to do with securing the appropriation for the experimental telegraph than one might not at first suspect. He was one of Washington's early journalists, coming from Kentucky when Jackson became President in 1829, and after becoming Postmaster General in "Old Hickory's" second administration and serving until 1837, he published from 1841 to 1844 a biweekly paper called Kendall's Expositor.

In 1854 he subdivided into 2-acre lots the property we now know as Kendall Green, which he called Kendallville. Upon these tracts he erected several houses running east and west with the property. In one Mr. Kendall himself lived, his son-in-law, William Stickney, lived in another, while the others were offered for sale.

Generous With Wealth

Mr. Kendall was charitable with his wealth, later gave one of the houses as a home for the newly incorporated Columbia Institute for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind. Indeed, he did more than this. He took a friend to a house in which poor waifs were being kept by a man professing zeal in charitable work, and who had gathered together all deaf-mute and blind children of the District for the purpose of educating them, he said. He did not keep his promises, and it was due to the horrible stories of the suffering of these children that led the tender-hearted Kendall to investigate their condition.

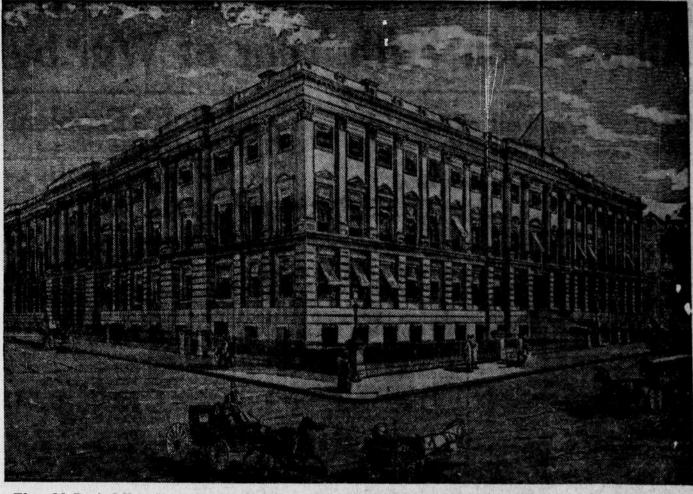

Finding the door locked, he broke in. only to find conditions even worse, if possible, than reports had depicted them. He restored the majority of the children to their parents, and the five for whom homes could not be found, he placed in a little frame house which formed a part of his estate.

Home of Newspaper

It was he who brought Edward M. Gallaudet of Hartford, Conn., here, and it was he who had the school incorporated

Kendall's handsome donation toward building Calvery Baptist Church is only another of his generous gifts which will be remembered for years to come.

As stated before, there are a number of historic places in the vicinity of Seventh and E streets, including among them the site of the home of W. W. Seaton, on the south side of E street between Seventh and Eighth streets where Mr. Seaton entertained Gen Lafayette when he visited this city in 1824. The National Intelligencer office, of which Mayor Seaton was then coeditor and part owner, was then being is said to have been a "commodious residence," yet Mrs. Seaton was forced to use her bed chamber and nursery as card and supper rooms, while dancing went on in the dining and drawing

Close to the Seaton residence on E street also stood for many years Abner's Summer Garden, where drinks were sold. On the northwest corner of Ninth and E streets stood the building in which the Post Office Department first took up its quarters in 1800, when the Government moved here, and diagonally across the street at 918 E street lived James Buchanan, before he was made President. Farther to the east, at the northwest corner of Sixth and E streets, lived Salmon P. Chase, and at 609 E street lived Caleb Cushing. John C. Calhoun resided at 618 E street, and Thomas U. Walter, one of the architects of the Capitol, at 614 F street. The National Era, in which first appeared "Uncle Tom's Cabin," was published nearby, and other historic spots go to make this neighborhood worth while and especially interesting-not only to our

Many Eligible for Princess' Hand

(Twenty years ago, speculation was rife throughout the world over the marriage plans of the Prince of Wales. He grew up to be a King, and to abdicate for "The Woman I Love." Another heir-apparent to the British throne is coming of age soon, and the rumors are flying again. In this story, Alfred E. Wall, Associated Press. correspondent who has just returned home after three years in London, tells just what the situation is regard-

By Alfred E. Wall.

Rumors are flying about the marriage plans of Princess Elizabeth of the House of Windsor, but here are two good betsthat there is nothing definite under way right now, and that she herself will have the principal say when the time does The pretty princess is in her 18th year

-members of the British royal family become of age at 18-and is becoming more of a full-blown woman with each passing day.

When she does marry it will be a union of two attractive young people who are in love, and there won't be any of that old stuff about a "fixed" marriage to bolster international relations or enhance the prestige of the crown.

Might Marry American.

She might even marry an Americanif she meets one and they fall in love. At any rate it seems certain that her mother, who has been so careful to provide a natural, normal private life, will never stand for any trumped-up match. Of course, Elizabeth is not entirely free. There are certain elements of "eligibility." As a matter of fact, she is riage, at the proper time, between Elizabeth and an American of suitable standing, his auditors reacted either coolly or facetiously.

Meets Old Families.

The probabilities are that Elizabeth eventually will choose some one she has met or will meet at the royal lodge in Windsor, great park which the family calls their very own home.

The Queen has made it a point for the Princess to meet many young men at such homey affairs as teas and small dances, picnics, amateur theatricals and the like. These have been mostly members of the royal household and sons of the Queen's Scottish friends invited down for week ends. In trips to Scotland, too, Elizabeth has met many sons of virile old Scottish families, some of them older than the Windsor family itself.

Royal lineage is no requirement. The Queen herself was a commoner, a member of the Bowes-Lyon family, which is of vastly longer lineage than the Wind-

One of Elizabeth's closest boy friends is ruled out of the running because he is a first cousin. He is George, Viscount Lascelles, eldest son of Mary, the Princess Royal.

He and Elizabeth are pals. He is of quiet manner and a good musician. They have been together a lot. Used to play cricket in a little private garden off Hyde Park when they were kids together and Elizabeth's parents were merely the Duke and Duchess of York. George is now 21. But there is nothing there except a cousinly interest. At any rate there has been too much royal intermarriage in the past, and the present rules are dead set against it. Elizabeth has met and danced with many young sons of the Queen's ladiesin-waiting and the King's equerries. Among these, and certainly one who must be considered eligible, is the 192 year-old son of Countess Spencer. He is Viscount Althorp, an Eton boy, typically English, blue-eyed, fair-haired, tall Then there are the three sons of the

Duchess of Northumberland, who is Mistress of the Robes to the Queen

The present Duke is 30, and therefore considered too old, but there are his vounger brothers, Lord Richard Percy, 22, and Lord Geoffrey Percy, 18. Elizabeth has met and danced with them all.

The Queen's closest friend, Lady Doris Vyner, daughter of the eighth Duke of Richmond, also has an eligible son, Charles Vyner, who has no title but whose father is a relative of the Marquis of Northampton.

Among others are the three orphan sons of an Irish couple, the late Lord and Lady Plunket, who were killed in an airplane crash in the United States before the war.

The Queen always has taken a great interest in these three, the eldest of whom is Lord Plunket, three years older than Elizabeth. Besides these in her own social set.

Elizabeth has met and danced with many young guards officers who have been invited en masse to her parties. Of recent years more and more noble daughters have been marrying these young officers.

Met American Officers.

Elizabeth also has met a number of American officers at these functions but there is no one who will speculate whether any of them figure in the picture.

Eligible young men of the Dominions also must be considered. The King has said the two Princesses will visit Canada after the war. The rumors have flown fast since Elizabeth's 17th birthday last April 21. One of the most recent reports was that a consort had been chosen secretly but no inkling of his identity would be disclosed until after the war. A careful check of the best sources in the capital failed to supply any substantiation. Reachable sources at Buckingham Palace wouldn't even discuss it. Qualified comment elsewhere—anonymity obligatory throughout-was that such procedure was extremely doubtful.

Some time ago another report went the London rounds-that King Peter of Yugoslavia had asked for Elizabeth's hand and had been refused. This could not be pinned down, and now Peter's engagement to the Greek Princess Alexandra has been announced. Alexandra and Elizabeth are close friends.

A British editor generally in fairly close touch with developments in these matters had this to say:

Precedent Against American.

In these days any member of a good, clean family-preferably British-would be acceptable, I should think. The day when a consort had to be chosen from some reigning family is gone forever. Such unions are practically impossible now, anyway. Where are the princes? Where, for that matter, are many eligible lords and dukes?"

One view of the possibility of an American consort was along this line: "The English never would accept an American. The whole issue of Edward VIII and Mrs. Simpson would be raked up and the matter of her former husbands would be subordinated to the main objection, in any circumstances, of bringing in an outsider. Such an arrangement would harm rather than help Anglo-American relations."

But another editor countered with. "It is pure speculation whether the Windsor-Simpson affair would be rehashed in such case. I don't think it would."

If a commoner were chosen, whatever his nationality, certain steps would have to be taken to qualify him, Parliament would certainly make the candidate a duke, one authority said.

Through Shellfire With American Fighters on the Highroad to Messina

Thomas R. Henry, Star Staff correspondent with the American Army in Sicily, was one of only two newspapermen with the United States troops when they entered Messina, the end of the Sicilian campaign on August 17. The following dramatic account of his experiences from August 14 to 16 as the Americans closed in on Messina has just been received by air courier. On August 19 The Star published Henry's story of the American occupation of Messina. Apparently this account of the events leading up to the capture failed to reach the radio transmission

By Thomas R. Henry, Star Staff Correspondent.

WITH THE 3d DIVISION OF THE 7th ARMY ADVANCE TO MESSINA .-Herewith is the story of a gypsy reporter at the front. It is a story of generals and privates and sergeants and captains racing through whining shellfire from wild hills toward Messina to stop a new Dunkerque of German hirelings in Sicilian ravines. It is the story of the men of the 3d Division. I wish I could write an epic of the 3d Division to which I came as a ragged gypsy.

populated spots on earth. It seems one continuous long town, 20 miles to Messina. We get to Spadoforo, three miles long. A battery of the 3d is setting up their guns. The commanding general is in the thick of the action as the Signa! Corps sets up its wires. He is no stickler for dress but we are a little afraid of a bawling out for our mixed uniforms. "What in hell sort of a getup is this." yells an aide as he sees me. I told him I didn't know, but I'd lost my helmet and had a German general's behind my back for use if the shrapnel started

"There'll be hell to pay if the general sees you," is his retort.

The town folks gather around, all asking for relatives in the American forces, when we are going to feed them. when will the prisoners be freed. A greasy-looking fellow suddenly kisses me on the cheek. My nerves are jumpy and I take a swing at him and call him a vile name.

The 3d Division soldiers are crazy mad at being kissed by men at every stop. Sooner or later somebody will get killed for it. Being kissed by lousy women is almost as bad.

Town in Ruins.

There was not much left of the town after the big American medium bomber raid of Friday. Approaching Messina the havoc is worse and worse. The townfolks say 30 planes smashed the town. The boys did a swell job. A ragged old woman tries to be our interpreter, weeping, says she has six sons dead in the war. We don't understand and she keeps pointing to her stomach and saying "six." What can Bob Hansen or I do about it.

loose in the town as German and American cannon cross fire from opposing hills. The houses rock at every shell. I thank the Lord for the general's helmet. Good old jerry general, his head is the same size as mine. He must be a brainless fellow.

We take refuge in an abandoned house. Our fellow refugees are Pvts. Merle R. Green of Olney, Ill.; Edward Rudd, 2542 Third avenue, Minneapolis; Joe Kasel of Adams, Minn. There we sweat for three of the worst hours of the war. The jerry shells whine and screech overhead and explode with a sharp bang. Soon, we could distinguish them no longer and ducked at the bang. After a while the whines ended and the sound of an airplane motor was heard overhead. The blessed sound is an A-36, come to divebomb the jerry battery in the hills. Six of them go over and the boys would kiss the pilots' feet. We wish there was some way to let the flyers know how grateful we are to the tactical air

Then, with a sound like a great drum beaten far off, the bombs are dropped by the 36s. The sound is very different, riding Italian bicycles along the street amidst the shelling. Like brave fellows, whistling in the dark, Pvt. George C. King of North Salem, Mo.; Robert C. Wolfe of Elgin, Ill., former Chicago Daily News circulation employe. Then along comes Aubrey Quinn of Al Torres, Calif. He is a Mexican-looking fellow singing "I'm an Old Cow Hand." He has a piano cushion for a saddle atop a nice old horse he found locked in a burning barn in the hills but with the key in the doon. He is going to give it to the infantry as a pack animal, he says, until he sees the bicycles, then tries to trade for one of them. Grand fellows, all these stragglers from the companies in town.

There's Joe Deleo of Bristol, Conn., who last night got three Italian prisoners with a horse and buggy, drove to an MP station and traded the lot for a cup of coffee. The MPs probably cursed their bad bargain. There's Maurice McGuire, 38 Royal street, Providence, an artilleryman, going through town today, got a ripe tomato in the face from a welcoming citizen. There's Cecil Hanson of Piedmont, Ala.; John Botti of Wilmerding, Pa.; Donald Demersseman of Clarkfield, Minn. All were mad at being kissed by Italian men. Before they were favorably disposed toward a fallen foe. Now they say shooting is too good for them. All agree they can't describe the sense of horror that a kiss intended as a courtesy arouses.

Children With Flowers.

During a lull in the bombing we start out to see the town and cook lunch outside Albergo Ristorante Dolcerio, once a swanky roadhouse. On its front walls are mottos of Italian Fascists as one vast legion marching to a glorious future and dying for their country. Seeking peace and water we turn up a road into the hills. A shell hits just a safe distance in the front. Driver Glenn Cleppinger, 6942 Hohman avenue, Hammond, Ind., keeps singing "Stella, the Belle of Fidella." We pass German "rastplazes," probably now mined, and come to the mountain village. Our progress has been signaled somehow ahead and as the first Americans stop all the populace of St. Filipa di Mela appears, the school children carrying flowers. The village belle, a cross-eyed girl in an orange dress, is leading by the hand their prize exhibit, 12-year-old Guiseppe Caezoro, born in Clinton, Mass. And he looked it.

Neat clothes, olive eyes, olive skin, white teeth, black hair, he is a swell little boy. He says his father sent him back to Italy when his mother died. He was 4 then. He is a brave little fellow and my heart goes out to him. A youth in sailor pants limps by to fill his water cans by the village shrine, a glass inclosed Virgin with artificial flowers looking like an aged hornet's nest in horseshoe shape around the head, and wax gardenias, but a bouquet of fresh zinnias at the feet. Poor old village hags point to their mouths piteously and say one word "mangere," meaning eat. "Sorry, c'est la guerre."

The railroad station looks the quietest, cleanest and safest spot. Four carloads of fresh lemons stand there in box cars come out of the houses and others drift marked Deutsche Reichsbahn, intended for Germany. It is safe now to indulge in a little fantasia. If I had Alladin's lamp to take those three rotting carloads to England I could probably buy London, and would settle cheap for Bloomsbury. Here no one could give the damn lemons away.

There are sleeping cars and Cleppinger takes the first-class cushions to make him a bed. Hansen and I now prefer the bare station platform. I pick up a magazine on the station platform by a garden with palms and potted trees that looks graveyardish. It's a professional law magazine, nothing like it in the United States. Noted Italian lawyers have articles on late notorious cases. One quotation in defense of Murderess Ancarani I wish I could read. On such a find Robert Browning wrote "The Ring and Book." Hell, I'm not Robert Browning. Italian lawyer Vittorio Zeno contributes a 20-page blankverse poem, something about moonlight traversing a black rectangle of window. There is a photograph of Poet Zeno holding a pipe in his hand. Also a reprint of Poe's "Clock and Pendulum." What's all this to do with advance to Messina? A Lot of Souvenirs.

Somehow or other I think it is important. (See St. Elizabeth's superintendent.) Cleppinger is cooking meat balls and spaghetti. That's important, too. While I'm working, Hansen comes in excited. Some GIs and a colonel have found a block away a radio station with three machine guns and a lot of souvenirs. Too bad, Gen. Patton says no looting.

The smoke is thicker and blacker over Sodaforo. More of the 7th Infantry boys come in from the hills over Niceto where we advanced in the face of the fire yesterday-Leslie Farmer of Lewisburg, Ky.; Corpl. John T. Partin, Barboursville, Ky. I say to Partin, "What in hell's old man like me doing in a mess like this?" He says money couldn't buy the experience for me. Partin is indignant, having just talked to a former waiter of the Atlantic City Hotel Traymore who told him the Germans offered the Italians meat for beans, then poured gasoline and set a match to the meat stores when they left. This is the end for today, getting tired sweat-

England Bringing Cultured Arts to Masses of People

In Britain today the best art, music and drama the country can produce are being taken to the people every-where on the British Isles as never before and finding cordial welcome Art exhibitions comprising the works of the foremost artists are being circulated, concerts by the leading orchestras and musicians are being given in places previously unvisited, the drama groups which have given performances heretofore in city theaters are now playing before audiences made up of industrial workers and miners as well as servicemen. Reports on Art Education

That both our country and Great Britain are looking beyond these days of war to those of peace is shown by two epoch-marking reports and given wide circulation. The one to do with the adjustment of the Marin. Both displays remain to the college curriculum to wartime conditions and needs-obviously also looking to the future—and comes Education, Federal Security Agency, concerned with the place of art in thrift in ideas and is unabashedly the secondary schools and was drawn romantic in viewpoint. This comup by a special committee appointed plex of qualities has resulted in by the Royal Society of Arts, London. To an interesting extent both stress, as of first importance, the place of art in life—a life worth living—art as a national asset—one of the cornerstones of democracy.

The Office of Education's report was drawn up by a group of professors of art in our leading colleges and art museum workers in the field of education, 11 in number, headed by Sumner McK. Crosby, president of the College Art Association, as well as assistant professor of art at Yale University. After are fighting-culture, the flower of value in power to sustain the spirit in the presence of a great human tragedy and, even more, to have a direct bearing on winning and sustaining the peace. Its relation and uses in everyday life are enumerated. Each branch of art-architecture, painting, industrial design, etc.—is fully considered, as well as art museums. But always the importance of craftsmanship, knowledge of the past and scholarship are emphasized. The interpretation obviously is left to instructors. The purpose served is the re-establishment of immutable ideals and a simplification of methods of attain-

Postwar Art Teaching.

The report issued by the Royal Society of Arts gives first consideration to the service art may render in postwar days to British industries. A few quotations will show the trend. "In order to hold a rightful place in the world's industry, it is necessary that a high standard of art and design, as well as of craftsmanship, shall be achieved, but of greater importance still, no really fine standard of civilization can be attained unless a lively sense of beauty leavens the ity. If this sense is lacking in the individual he cannot attain a fullness of life. If it is lacking in the community, it can-not achieve the greatest purpose.

* * It should therefore be the aim of an all-around education throughout the whole school life to develop the powers of observation and the inborn love of beauty." In refutation of this premise some will say: "What is beauty; can you define it?" To which answer must be made as ever: "No, but we can show it to you." It is to be found on every side, and eyes once opened to it will give quick recognition. It is beauty for which the world hungers today. To restore beauty and its appreciation to a war-torn world is, indeed, the great part that teachers and students of art may play.

As preliminary to its deliberations, the British committee set down four points as implicit to the inquiry. These were: "1. An appreciation of beauty is preciation shown, would seem to essential to a cultured civilization and should be fundamental in the educational system.

In all my work I have most precious thing for which we been animated with three convictions: 1, that there is no essential civilization—the writers declare its reason why the creative imagination cannot work with a ray of light acting upon a sensitized surface as effectively as it can with a brush ladened with pigment; 2, that photography is one of the most authentic and integral modes of expression possible in the particular kind of world in which we live: 3. that in photography as in all the the educational service rendered by other arts, the quality of a man's imagination is the only thing that counts-technique and technical proficiency mean nothing in them-

Extensive descriptions of the objects, their location and their history, written by the photographer, are shown with the prints, and greatly enhance their interest.

Authentic Flavor

A third group Mr. Laughlin calls "Lost New Orleans"—" 'lost' in time, the streets that lead only to emptiness and ruin, to a past that shall nevermore return." These glimpses of old sections of the city now regarded as slums, seldom visited by tourists, will surely interest archi-

Some of these prints recall the photographs of Paris side streets and slums, made early in this century by Eugene Atget. That is, one feels that Mr. Laughlin's intense love for New Orleans was akin to the Frenchman's passion for his city and that the authentic flavor they captured of the two cities' humble sections was the result of the artists' emotional approach.

Among the arresting prints in this fill the printrooms, testify to his third group are "The Hyper-real from the United States Office of vivid imagination, as well as to his Shadows," thrown upon the walls of an old house in the Vieux Carre by its ironwork balconies, which seem less substantial than the shadows in the evening light; and "The Magic Door," which opens not into many admirable photographs, a few a room but into a different kind of space (for the sky seen through the door has not the same tone as the surrounding sky).

In 1941 Mr. Laughlin collaborated with David L. Cohn in the creation of a beautiful volume of photographs and text entitled "New Oreans and Its Living Past." A few of the prints here were reproduced in that book. Mr. Laughlin has made more than 4,000 cut film negatives of most of the outstanding ironwork designs, statues and old buildings of New Orleans.

"Visual Poems," the fourth group, combines New Orleans backgrounds with models posed to carry out some poetical conception of the photographer (phantom spirits in old buildings, French girls whose faces people—the bulldog breed, the fairagainst a ruined building detail con- playing opponent, the winner-ofjure up visions of the city in its the-battle-which-is-last, the great-

The humors with which the veteran author once surveyed Poictesme and Lichfield do not change when he turns his eyes on Florida, past or modern, nor has he condescended to alter his characteristic style to express them. The other volumes of the series can be described mainly as journalistic histories. This is neither history nor journalism, but an exercise in irony for which the events and people associated with the St. Johns River have furnished, in a markedly incidental fashion, the material. If the whole series ings but sculpture and art objects, had been written in such a vein, one which are placed in the wards, din-might well wonder at the purpose: might well wonder at the purpose; ing halls, recreation rooms, etc. For but a single volume so distinguished those interested in the crafts some in two dozen is a sauce which adds

The method of the authors has been to select out of the legends and truths of St. Johns such tales of human absurdity as have seemed best suited for Mr. Cabell's peculiar treatment and to arrange these tales, duly treated, in chronological order. Thus, from the prediscovery to their friend and mentor, the late reader a company of men and women chosen apparently because their conduct was in some way eccentric. Of the days of France's occupation, they write in terms chiefly of the experiences of the poor artist, Jacques Le Moyne, and of Britain's period of possession they find relevant the story of Denys Rolle, who aspired to found a colony of reformed prostitutes and pickpockets Balboa Park, this museum was in His Majesty's new domain. And so to the end of the first decade of this century. To cover the remaining 33 years, they offer a burlesque version of a promoter's sales talk, touching on the beauty of the country, the wonders of its development, the residence of Mrs. Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings in its midst. The End of the Beginning By Winston Churchill. (Little. Brown.)

Here is the latest volume of Mr. Churchill's addresses. It covers the year 1942. Familiar though you are with his oratorical technique. you will certainly not fail to be moved again to admiration as you read him. It may be that, in this collection, there are fewer flights of rhetoric, fewer quotable phrases, more repetition. But the personification of an England fighting dauntlessly against the powers of darkness - that personification which Mr. Churchill has taken on himself since the first days of his Prime Ministership—is vivid on all the pages, and in the greater speeches attains a vigor which it has never surpassed.

To be sure,, the finest hour, as Mr. Churchill says himself, is past; that was in 1940. No longer does Britain face her foes alone. The tide has turned, and with the turning the need for superlative oratory has somewhat fallen off. Mr. Churchill, who literally talked his people through the crisis, can now make his necessary speeches without feeling that the nation's fate hangs on his phrases. In his routine occasions, therefore, he allows himself to relax to some degree; he repeats his messages more than has been his habit in the past. But facing his critics in Parliament, either to answer their charges or triumphantly to show them mistaken, he rises to his old heights. And, in rising, he evokes, for all the world to see, those various legends which British imagination has built up about the British in-disaster and all the rest of it.

The speeches which are most prints are more literary than visual impressive in this volume are five made to the House of Commons. one on January 27 and another on great vote of confidence; one on

The Land of the Great Image

By Maurice Collis. (Knopf.) The author of this accomplished piece of writing is a retired British civil servant who spent some 20 years of his public duty in India. What he has written here is a brief chapter out of the history of Arakan. a former independent kingdom which, in the late 18th century, became part of Burma. The period with which Mr. Collis has occupied himself is the early part of the 17th century. Ostensibly, what he has done is to describe the adventures of a Portuguese Augustinian missionary, Friar Manrique, who from 1629 to 1637 labored in Arakan and subsequently wrote an account of his life there and of the customs of the country. This work is not available to the public, and Mr. Collis, having studied it, feels, as he says, that it should be set forth in such a way that "its implications (will be) understood." So he has retold Friar Manrique's tale with the benefit of his own historical perspective. The specific adventures which befell the friar in Arakan, were such that, in Mr. Collis' view, they have a modern significance. He came sufficiently close to the Buddhist king to be made aware of the dream which obssessed the royal mind at that time-a dream of driving back the invading Moslems, of conquering Asia and eventually becoming lord of the world, to the end that the true religion-Buddhism-should be extended everywhere. The ruler of the obscure little Oriental kingdom dreamed thus, while tolerating and extending protection to the Roman Catholic missionary from Europe. His dreams came to nothing; he was murdered and his kingdom disintegrated Friar Manrique returned to Portugal and lived to see the downfall of his own monarch's dream of a Christian empire on a world scale-and was himself murdered in his extreme old Out of these faint old ironies, Mr. Collis raises the proposition that today the two opposing concepts of the world state are once more in conflict, represented by Japan and the United States. The Japanese, he says, are striving once more to make a universal kingdom under Oriental sway, and their great enemy is America, for when America wins, in his view, America-not Europe-will dominate Asia, and do so as part of a world organization "vowed to right conduct, as that term is understood in all religions, and strong enough to enforce right conduct in all international relations." America, then, in a broader will carry out the dream which the Catholic missionares from Portugal carried to the East-or Japan will succeed in her dream of a world-wide Buddhist empire. wisdom, discrimination and beauty

Stranger on the Highway

By W. R. Hays. (Little, Brown.) Here is a murder story, which makes a determined effort to escape the routine procedures of its kind. It tells the tale of a crime in a very small town, a place too small, really, to be called a town-one of those multitudinous settlements which lie along a great highway and are passed by the motorist during the lighting of a cigarette. Realism is the means by which the author has tried to distinguish his work from the standard trade mystery. He has undertaken to present his events just as they might occur in such a place, without benefit of horrors and suspense, or even of an efficient detective. The effort turns out to be unsuc-A murder mystery ap- author. cesful. parently is one thing, and a study of rustic atmosphere another. Before his book is ended, Mr. Hays has been obliged to fall back on a number of tried and true crime story devices, and his rustics have been hastily recostumed to suit his plot's requirements. The outcome is neither a satisfactory detective story nor an authentic country novel.

Books for Labor Day

By Olive Chace, Readers' Adviser in Economics, Public Library.

Labor Day is usually associated, earners and classifies unions as to in the minds of the American peo- type, pointing out, at the same time, ple, with picnics, parades, speeches and outings. Originally proposed by organized labor as a day of celebration which would be "representative of the industrial spirit, the great first chapter of E. Wight Bakke's vital force of the Nation," it has become, to most people, merely the last week end of the summer vacation season. But holidays are now a thing of the past for almost every one, and certainly for industrial workers. It, therefore, seems particularly appropriate that, as our labor force continues uninterrupted war production on a day peculiarly its own, we recreate the original spirit of that day by turning our attention to books which will increase public understanding of labor and the trade union movement in

The AMG stamps for Sicily now undoubtedly are being supplemented by similar issues for Italy proper, but it is improbable that they ever will be available to collectors at the philatelic agency, as has been proposed. The War Department—not the Post Office Department—is responsible for them.

Every, stamp that says anything, carries any message and has any political consequence, is a propa-ganda stamp. Even the propa-ganda to change the unchangeable character of propaganda stamps is Thomas R. Henry, The Star's correspondent on the fighting front in Europe, is a stamp collector, and his colleagues at home hope that he may be "picking up" some additions to his collection in Italy. An American collector has proposed that Russia issue a series of propaganda stamps in behalf of a "second front." The Soviet Union more logically might bring out some adhesives acknowledging the practical help already given by the Allies without which it would have perished long ago, Post office zoning has brought into existence a number of new meter slogans, but the zoning idea still has not "caught on" and there is doubt that it ever will be popular. The public simply does not want it.

Ecuador has overprinted current stamps to publicize visits of the Presidents of Brazil and Paraguay. David D. Caldwell, chairman of the Postage Stamp Centenary Com-mittee of 1940, has been elected a vice president of the American Philatelic Society. The Associated Press Feature Service says: "Salvage of the one-time French luxury liner Normandie, now the U. S. troopship Lafayette, from its watery grave in the Hudson River at New York recalls to phi-eleased in 1936 and is the more valuable variety. Prohest Frank L. Graham, philatelic edifor of the Tribune-Sun, San Diego, Calif., is advocating a stamp showing the Star Spangled Banner in natural colors. Those who favor his proposal are invited to communicate with Deputy Third Assistant Postmaster General Roy M. North. The Union of South Africa now is producing postage due stamps of midget size

A valuable accumulation of stamps included in the estate of the late Arthur E. Tuttle, Philadelphia dealer, soon will come into the market.

Elmer C. Pratt, stamp editor of the Camden Courier-Post, reports: "Several philatelic writers insist that the paper now being used to produce our regular stamp issues is much thinner than that ever used before, but the Post Office Department says there has been no change in the paper; the transparency being due to overhydration during the manufacturing operations."

The time to collect the so-called "conquered nations" stamps is now. Five years hence they will be difficult to find at any price. Miss Eleanor Loud of South Wey-

Melchior Joins Symphony List Of Soloists

With the addition this week of Lauritz Melchior to the list of soloists the National Symphony Orchestra completed its plans for its 13th season of concerts in Constitution Hall. To fill applications for the 1943-4 season, the symphony box office in Kitt's Music Store, 1330 G street, will reopen on Tuesday, and mail orders may be sent to that address now. The greatest of Wagnerian tenors will be heard with the National Symphony, Hans Kindler conducting, in an all-Wagner program on Sunday afternoon, March 12. Nine other Sunday concerts will be given during the season, seven of them featuring soloists of distinction and global fame.

In addition to Melchior, the following artists will be heard with the National Symphony on its Sunday afternoon series: Egon Petri, the great Dutch pianist, who appears for the third consecutive season with the orchestra (November 7); Nathan Milstein, most gifted of the younger violinists (November 21); Grace Moore, Metropolitan Opera Company soprano (December 19): the Chilean pianist, Claudio Arrau, who last season set a record in appearances with major symphony orchestras (January 9); Albert Spalding, America's foremost violinist (February 6); Percy Grainger, pianist-composer beloved of Washington audience (February 20), and Brazil's musical ambassadress of goodwill, the eminent pianist, Guiomar Novaes (March 5). The situation of one of The Junior Star's high school correspondents is typical of that of thousands of young Americans. She is 16 and if she returns to school this month will graduate next June. All summer she has worked at a job she likes, for a salary which in normal times a girl or boy of her age, education and experience could not hope to achieve. Now she has to decide whether to give up her job and go back to school.

"What would you do?" she asked ome of her friends. One said: "If I had three years of high school and a job I liked, I wouldn't even wonder what to do. I'd forget school—and quickly." Another advised: "The job may not last, and even if it does it may not lead anywhere. If you ever see some young schoolboys marching with rankings of the Navy on their shoulders and arms, don't be puzzled. It's just the submarine crew and officers of the Randolph street undersea craft.

A group of the boys were trying to think of something to occupy their spare time, and somebody suggested building a submarine. They found a convenient basement, and soon the underwater boat began to take form. Officers selected were: Comdr. B. Manning, Lt. Comdr. F. Bailey, Lt. (jg.) N. Zouras, Ensign J. Lewis, Pharmacist's Mate

A well kept, vigorous growing lawn adds much to the interest and attractiveness of a yard. Fall is the ideal time for starting it. The cool, moist growing weather of fall and early winter favors the growth of the grass; competition from weeds is slight. Keep the new grass cut, but not too short.

That New Lawn in September

pared as for a flower border. The idea of working into the soil The idea of working into the soil Novice Dahlia humus, quantities of humus, is not welcomed, for it costs money. One of the best bluegrass lawns in this area had stable manure trenched into it to a depth of a foot or more. That lawn, on a high clay bank, withstood the competition of tree roots, excessive drainage and a hard, impervious clay and thrived throughout the summers for many years until the humus was finally exhausted. This would seem to indicate that we cannot work too much humus into the soil before sowing Humus does much to insure good grass growth, and it cannot be too strongly emphasized here that some form of decayed vegetable matter should be provided in order that the soil may support a good stand of grass. Humus loosens up the soil so that the grass roots can penetrate it in search of food and moisture. Humus in decaying liberates the plant foods that are locked up in the soil. Humus stores moisture and thus is a reservoir during periods of dry weather. The kind of humus to be mixed into the soil is unimportant; the quantity is all important. The better the lawn that is desired the more humus should be secured and mixed into the soil. Rotted straw, leaves, weeds, manure, peanut hulls, peatmoss, etc., are all forms that should be investigated and the cheapest obtained. Chop the one chosen into the soil or spade and rake it into the soil. It should be mixed thoroughly to give the best

With the soil well prepared it should be leveled as carefully as possible and allowed to settle for several days, preferably for two or three weeks. A further leveling is then desirable, since after the grass seed is once sown there is little opportunity to smooth the surface except by filling. With the soil well leveled the seed

Waller Has Busy Schedule.

Wilmer J. Waller, vice president and cashier of Hamilton National Bank, who is expected to be elected treasurer of the ABA, faces a busy schedule over next week end. He will attend a meeting of the important ABA Priorities Committee late this week in New York, then will return early next week on important business at the Hamilton Bank, and rush back to sessions of the ABA. Mr. Waller also is a member of the ABA Committee on War Loans.

D. J. Needham, general counsel of the ABA, has been busy at his office here preparing for the conference. As secretary of the Resolutions Committee he has been receiving and digesting the mass of resolutions sent in by the various banking associations throughout the country.

The District Bankers have confined their recommendations to indorsing Mr. Waller for ABA treasurer, and Dr. W. Randolph Burgess, vice president of the National gess, vice president of the National cover.

Although receipts of live poultry were light during the early part of the week they were somewhat larger later. Demand continued good and prices held around levels of the previous week.

Banking opinion throughout the country has been increasing its opposition to regional agricultural credit corporations and in favor of the Wherry bill which would provide for the orderly liquidation and dissolution of such corporations.

President W. L. Hemingway of ABA sometime ago "complained" that the RAAC competed with rural banks. In this connection bankers have been much interested in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee declaring that the Government should not compete with chartered banking in making loans.

Many resolutions coming to the ABA for its consideration at the forthcoming conference have stressed the need for a more independent with chartered banking in making somethy with chartered banking in making somethy with chartered banking in making loans.

Selected Stocks Gain In Narrow and Dull Preholiday Market

By BERNARD S. O'HARA, Associated Press Financial Writer. NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—The stock market today ended a moderately hopeful week with selected issues pointing a bit higher despite the usual preholiday sluggishness.

mission houses bought sparingly and trimmed accounts here and there to be on the safe side during the shutdown. The good war news still was Atlas Plywood 90g 224 20 22 + a neutral factor.

Throughout the week the conservative ranks were well filled as results of the recent Quebec conferences were awaited. Peace stocks did fairly well and a number of aircrafts and other long-depressed armament groups revived on the idea they had been oversold. Lack of outstanding speculative and investment stamina was attributed partly to the thought that corporate securities would be ignored during the imminent record Government bond drive and the forthcoming tax program might put a damper on spirits.

Invasion News Discounted. The invasion thrust at Axis Europe through Italy left the market cold on Friday, this move having been pretty well discounted. At London, however, prices rose briskly in response to the big push.

Today the list moped at the start, with trends slightly uneven. The finish was about the same. The Associated Press 60-stock average was up 0.1 of a point at 49.8. and on the week showed a net gain of 0.6. Transfers of 173,570 shares, a low since September 12, 1942, compared with 188,590 last Saturday. Only 508 issues were traded. Of these, 206 were up and 302 down or Engineers' Public Service made a new 1943 high by 1/4. Modest improvement was registered by U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Anaconda, American Telephone, U. S. Rubber, Sears, Roebuck, General Electric and Boeing. Losers included Santa Fe, Great Northern, Woolworth, Union Carbide, Douglas Aircraft and American Smelting.

Bond Prices Uneven.

Prices were slightly mixed in the bond market, but the close was about steady and generally within fractions of Friday's finish.

Transfers for the short session had a face value of $2,467,000, compared with the lowest for more than a year of $1,657,000 a week

The Associated Press average of 20 rail bonds slipped 0.1 of a point, as did the average of 10 foreign bonds, while other components were unchanged.

Municipal Financina At Ten-Year Low

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 .- The Daily Bond Buyer reported today municipal financing during August totaled $37,987,015, the smallest amount for that month in 10 years. It compared with $60,862,203 in August, For the first eight months of the year, total municipal financing was $376,943,418, also a 10-year low, compared with $452,016,107 in the first eight months of 1942. Largest piece of August financing was the sale of $14,281,000 general and refunding bonds by the Port of New York Authority.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 .- "There's one thing about Ol' Bobo,' writes Harold Parrott of Buck Newsom today in This Week, The Star's Sunday supplement, " you may like him or dislike him but you'll never overlook Buck's latest trick to insure attention consists of wearing a double O on his Washington uniform. "Johnny got a zero," explains Newsom. "Bobo has two zeros." Parrott's piece was written before Newsome came back to the Griffs.

Newsom says he has been transferred from one club to another 33 times, which includes several stops each at Macon, Ga.; Brooklyn, St. Louis and Washington, constituting a record. "The only time I didn't improve myself financially," boasts Bobo, "was last year when I came to Washington after a bad year at Detroit.'

Pitcher Johnny Niggeling of the Nats never takes batting practice the day he pitches and hasn't for years. The slender, 38-year-old righthander says he prefers saving all his baseball and football games, com-

Lt. Buddy Lewis, former Washington outfielder and third baseman, renewed acquaintances with his ex-mates here today but didn't attend the Nats-Yankees game. He slept all day after flying here from Columbus, Ga. His only glimpse of the ground during the trip came one minute before he landed his transport plane here.

President Clark Griffith of the Nats, who returned to the Capital today after catching cold witnessing the New York-Washington game yesterday, said only cash is involved in the deal that brings Outfielder Roberto Oritz back to the Nats from Montreal but involved also is Third Baseman Morris Aderholt of the Nats' Montgomery, Ala. farm team, who will become Montreal property.

By BURTON HAWKINS.

Star Staff Correspondent NEW YORK, Sept. 4.-Johnny Niggeling's most recent acquaintances—the Nats—became increasingly annoying to him here today. The 38-year-old knuckle-ball specialist unleashed a four-hit pitching performance against the Yankees but absorbed a 2-1 defeat as Washington failed to fathom the hurling of Spud Chandler, who won his 18th victory to deposit the Nats in third

Scarcity of Coeds Is Retarding Football Team

DELAWARE, Ohio, Sept. 4 .-Too few coeds is a problem menacing veteran Coach George Gauthier's attempt to weld together his Ohio Westlyan foot-ball team.

It's like this: The regular fall semester at Wes-

Some of the football men are afraid to leave the girl friend long enough to come out for practice. Gauthier is tinkering with a

Dodgers Down Giants In 17th for Their 8th Straight Win

BROOKLYN, Sept. 4. - The Dodgers racked up their eighth straight victory today, but had to go 17 innings before beating the Giants, 4 to 3, in one of the longest games of the season.

A wild throw by Mickey Witekthe only error of the game-permitted Luis Olmo to score the winning run. Olmo was on second and Billy Herman on first with one out when Howie Schultz hit to Billy Jurges at shortstop, Jurges tossed to Witek at second, forcing Herman, but in trying for a double play Witek threw wild past first base.

Rookie Rex Barney, who pitched 14 innings before giving way to a pinchhitter, apparently had a 2-to-1 victory in the regulation distance until Sid Gordon homered for the Giants with two out in the ninth. The Giants went ahead in the 14th on a walk, a sacrifice and Charley Mead's single, but the Dodgers promptly tied it on a base on balls, Paul Waner's single and Augie

Reviving Plans Hit By Ban on Gas By WALTER McCALLUM.

Mrs. Weible, Dr. Utz

Heartened by lifting of the pleasure-driving ban, golf officials around town a little belatedly are taking their 1943 plans out of moth balls and talking about staging championship events before cold weather throws a monkey wrench into competitive play.

Mrs. Walter L. Weible, president of the District Women's Golf Association, is considering recommend-ing a women's title tourney, al-though it may not be the five-day affair of previous years. Mrs. Weible's thoughts lean more toward a short medal-play championship of two days' duration.

Dr. A. Thomas Utz, prexy of the men's association, practically dormant this year, proposes a District Men's championship, to be held over three days, possibly at the Washington Golf and Country Club, either late this month or early in Octo-

Maryland Association Static. The Maryland State Golf Association has made no move toward restoring any of its title tourneys. Dr. Robert A. Keilty, president of the State links body, has been ill for several months. Even the pros, who have done little to aid continuance of golf by competition this year, might come out of the shell and stage a tournament or two.

In the West and Middle West, where gasoline restrictions have not been so tough (isn't the United States one country?) competitive golf has gone on and the PGA is considering revival of the winter pro tour. But in parts of the East and particularly around Washing-ton the links solons have gone into a hole and pulled the hole in after them while play at the private clubs has been heavy and a lot of people want competition.

But the golf ball situation is serious. The pros have not been getting enough remade spheres to handle the business and prospects for next year are not good. The manufacturers blame the condition on reluctance of golfers and pros to send in balls for recovering. The pros say they don't get proper service from the manufacturers. And the man who walks into the pro shop to buy some golf balls doesn't always get what he wants. But there are enough good golf balls around to stage a couple of championship courneys if the solons get around to staging them.

Other minor wagering marks also were set, including the $396,570 on the final race, greatest amount ever bet on a single event at Aqueduct.

Bel Reigh, claimed by Mrs. Chrisopher for $5,000 on August 4, had tough race all the way to make it four out of five for his brief career. The winner, carrying 114 pounds, and Joe W. NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Little Beau Jack intends to swarm all over Bob Montgomery in an effort to win back the lightweight boxing title (New York and Pennsylvania version) at Madison Square Garden Friday night.

The information that Beau plans to fight differently than he did on May 21, when he lost the title to the Philadelphia Bobcat, came today from Chick Wergeles, manager of the former Georgia shoe-shine boy.
"It isn't that the Beau is changing his style, but rather that he didn't fight his usual way against Mont-gomery in their first bout," explained the talkative Chick. "The Beau had Montgomery on the verge of a knockout in the first couple of minutes by swarming all over him," Wergeles continued. "Then he stayed away from him for the rest of the 15 rounds.' This paints a pretty picture from Wergeles' viewpoint. Montgomery's followers point out that it was a savage right to the jaw in the first round that made Jack climb on his bicycle in the May 15-rounder. Salto Equals Record In Camden Victory

By the Associated Press.

CAMDEN, N. J., Sept. 4.—William Helis' Salto, holder of the 1½-mile Garden State Park track record, came back to his favorite strip today to score a photo finish in the $4,430 Princeton Handicap, equaling the track standard of 1.10½ for the six furlongs.

Receiving one of Conn McCreary's typical rides, Salto was eased back out of trouble for the first three-eighths of a mile and then taken to the outside for his final rush. Through the last 70 yards, Salto Baby Dumpling and Henry Knight raced head and head, battling it out to the wire with the finish in the order named. Baby Dumpling was a nose behind the winner and a head better than Henry Knight.

Despite the fact that Salto had failed to reach the winner's circle in 12 previous attempts this year, he was made favorite by the crowd of 16,916 and was their fifth choice in as many races to make good. His straight mutuel was $6.30.

Clash With Packers Figures to Reveal Champs' Class

decorate the stands of Baltimore's big Municipal Stadium this afternoon, as interested as will be several thousand Washington spectators in the unveiling of the 1943 edition of the Redskins. The world pro champs will face the Green Bay Packers before an expected 40,000 persons, in their first appearance this year in the Washington area. The servicemen will be admitted free. Kickoff is scheduled for 2 p.m.

George Preston Marshall, Redskin president, is on record with the statement that a preseason game in Baltimore between the Redskins and Packers will be an annual fixture. Today's game is the second of the series. Last year the Skins, pointing for their second world championship, annihilated the cohorts of Curly Lambeau in Baltimore by a

The Redskins, with a good starting team composed almost entirely of veterans of the outfit which battled its way to the 1942 pro grid championships, will be on trial, in a way. Coach Bergman emphasizes that the Packers' game is an exhibition and means little with respect to the league season due to start early in October. Pasqua Starts at Tackle. They want to win, and will go all out, although Sammy Baugh, not entirely recovered from a back injury sustained during kicking drill a month ago, may appear only at brief intervals. Baugh's passing is okay, but his kicking, always a potent factor in Redskin successes, isn't up to par. Center George Smith, a powerful punter, may be yanked out of the line to take over the punting department.

Joe Pasqua will start at tackle instead of Willie Wilkin, in a surprise move by Bergman. Wilkin is the usual starting tackle.

Behind the starting team virtually the same line-up which will open Redskin games during the coming season, is a group of untried rookies and a mixture of veterans from other National Football League clubs. Rookies in the line are Tony Leon and Al Fiorentino, guard; Elden Werkheiser, Roman Bentz and Ollie Oja, tackles. Show at Warrenton Gets Top Horses From D. C. Area

By LARRY LAWRENCE. The Capital area will be repreresented by an outstanding contingent of hunters, open jumpers and ponies in the combined Warrenton (Va.) horse and pony show which opens for a one day's holding tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

The horse show, organized in 1899 and one of the three most famous events of its nature in America, has drawn an entry list that for quality and quantity ranks well with other years. The pony show, which had its inaugural 24 years ago, also has drawn a splendid entry.

Each year there is a lively battle for the featured green hunter championship and Washington has a highly favored entry to vie for this year's award in No Mistake from the stable of Capt. Alvin I. Kay.

No Mistake's Record Shines. No Mistake a clean limbed, 4year-old son of Whizaway-Lucille II, has an amazing record, having won the yearling, 2-year-old and 3year-old championships in successive years at Upperville. The magnificent chestnut colt will have plenty of opposition including Maj. and Mrs. Herbert Bryant's Ferry Landing, last year's green hunter champ, and many others.

Conspicuous among the thoroughbreds entered in the conformation classes is Mrs. W. Haggin Perry's Cornish Hills, national hunter champion in 1941-42, which is out to repeat his 1942 victory at Warrenton. A threat to Cornish Hills' supremacy is Mrs. E. Douglas Prime's sensational Madison Square Garden winner, the national green hunter champion of 1941.

Celebrated Fencers Entered. Several of Washington's celebrated fencers should be high in the ribbons for open jumping honors. Yankee Doodle, Jackie Warren's famous son of Bonne Nuit, ridden to three championships this season by "Skippy" Hughes, one of America's greatest woman riders, will be trying under her expert handling. Capt. Alvin I. Kay's two open jumper stars, the reliable Smacko, twice winner of the Scott Trophy, and the rejuvenated Applejack will be out for blues. Anita Mammele's high-jumping Caddie's Trump is a likely top winner. Among other prominent local en-tries are Angel Carabelli's smooth performer, Our Day; Bella Hagner's Steeldust, Frances Crouse's recent find, Hollejo, and Gardner Hall-man's No Foolin', Early Action Predicted on Proposed Liquor Laws It is predicted that Congress will give early consideration to the pending proposal to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act so as to prohibit price advertising of alcoholic beverages and the granting of licenses to any new places in any license class except hotels if located "within 600 feet of the nearest boundary of the premises on which is located a school, church, playground, public library, eleemosynary institution providing housing for the indigent, soldiers' home, Army post, navy yard, or marine barracks."

Bills for this purpose are pending before both the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia. The bill in the Senate is S. 790 and known as the McCarran bill; in the House it is the McMillan bill, H. R. 1481. From a liquor trade source it is understood that simultaneous moves for expediting consideration of the measure are to be made in both Senate and House shortly after Congress reassembles.

It is said that recent criticism of the beverage business in the District is expected to give impetus to the movement to have the measure adopted. While the House bill, which is identical with the Senate bill, was adversely reported by the District Commissioners on March 15 last, it has considerable support among the civic groups as well as the liquor trade.

The civic groups are said to have been influenced largely in their support of this legislation by the proposed prohibition of the granting of all forms of liquor licenses to new places located within 600 feet of the schools and other institutions enumerated. There, however, appears to be a wide divergence of opinion as to the value to control and reform to be derived from the proposed restriction of price advertising of alcoholic drinks. The advertising feature is considered the prime object of this legislation from the trade stand-

When the identical proposals were under consideration by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, after passage by the House in the Seventy-seventh Congress, citizens at a hearing urged a broad study of the District liquor problem with a view to bringing about a decided improvement in local conditions.

Many of the civic groups believe that the advertising of liquor prices is a rather small part of the liquor advertising problem. Among these are those who regard newspaper and radio advertising and elaborate window displays of alcoholic drinks as by far more in need of coverage by restrictive legislation than the mere advertising of prices. This school of thought is inclined to the opinion that any prohibition of price advertising is probably more in the interest of those engaged in the liquor trade than it is to the consumers and the public in general.

Under existing law there is no control of advertising of alcoholic drinks, though it is the opinion of citizens familiar with the ABC law that the advertising could probably be controlled completely by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Under their broad powers, granted them by the statute, it is held that they could make regulations in the public interest, covering advertising and window displays. It is a matter of record that no board of District Commissioners, since the enactment of the law, has ever made a real test of its authority through the adoption of regulations designed to produce any real improvement in the liquor conditions in the District.

According to another current prediction, when Congress reconvenes the House District Committee is expected to have up for action H. R. 3005, the West bill, which provides "that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board establish and maintain Government liquor stores in the District of Columbia and for other purposes." The committee is to reach a decision as to whether to hold hearings, refer the bill to a subcommittee for hearings or whether to report it without hearings.

This bill has been referred to as the "Government dispensary" bill and also as the "Government liquor store" bill. The chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, Mr. Thomas E. Lodge, and District Commissioner Guy Mason differ very strongly on the question of probable financial advantage to the District if the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia was brought under District control through Government liquor stores. When these gentlemen appeared as witnesses before the District Appropriations Subcommittee of the House, they were questioned by Representative Stefan as to whether the District would make more money under a system of District controlled stores similar to these in some of the States. Mr. Lodge declared that he did not think it would. Commissioner Mason disagreed with Chairman Lodge and stated that he thought the District would make four times as much money. Commissioner

Mason added that he had all of the figures to support his position, In reply to a question by Chairman Mahon for his reason for this conclusion, Commissioner Mason added, "because we would get all of the profit that these fellows are now getting without much more cost than they have. In other words, if they are making 25 per cent net, the District would make that. The State stores make much more money than we do."

Government control and operation versus the license system was strongly debated before Congress immediately following repeal of the 18th amendment. Both methods of control had their champions at that time but the license system won out largely because it could be more quickly put into operation and open up the legalized sale of alcoholic drinks.

The Executive Committee of the Washington Board of Trade has, on behalf of that organization, disapproved the West bill for the establishment and operation of Government liquor stores in the District on the ground of its being a venture in competition with private industry. There appears to have been so far slight interest on the part of the civic groups generally in the West bill.

Among the civic, reform and churches forces there have been heard expressions of a desire for a new approach to the alcoholic drink problem through a careful analytical survey of the entire matter. People of this school of thought express the opinion that there is little prospect of finding any satisfactory solution through slight amendment to the existing law. They regard local liquor conditions in the District of Columbia as alarming and requiring more than a mere superficial operation.

Belief is expressed among some of these citizens that but for preoccupation with civilian defense and other duties incidental to the war, there would be a unified demand on Congress for legislation which would bring about a material improvement in local conditions and have a tendency to cause the District to regain its good name which has recently been challenged.

A Clean City Only Possible by Systematic Team Work

Despite the efforts of the City Refuse Division the streets, avenues and alleys of the National Capital continue to be badly littered and unattractive. The task confronting this branch of the local government is a stupendous one only to be accomplished through systematic teamwork by public-spirited citizens.

A special committee of the Outdoor Cleanliness Association of the District of Columbia is studying the problem with the idea of developing plans for general co-operation. The reorganized Board of Directors of the association will meet later in the month to hear and act on the report.

The association will continue active assistance to the municipal authorities and will endeavor to crystallize sentiment for a thor-

Capital Socialites Still Make Merry at Newport

Old-Home Week Atmosphere Prevails at Bailey's Beach

By Beth Blaine. Just by way of taking a little vacation ourselves, we decided to look in at a few summer resorts and see what was what. Newport is like old-home week to a Washingtonian. Within the short space of an hour we saw (our first morning at Bailey's Beach) enough Capital socialites to make up a cozy party (as big as they are in wartime) back home.

The Hugh Auchinclosses were there in Hugh D.'s mother's place, Hammersmith Farm. And it really is a farm this year, toowith cows and chickens and pigs and a huge vegetable garden. Everybody pitches in and works. The children all have learned to milk the cows, feed the chickens and weed the garden. Mrs. Auchincloss is almost as busy with her garden warwork as she is being a nurse's aide in Washington in winter. Hugh gets up as often as he can from business in the Capital and works on the place like a beaver. No wonder the Auchincloss guests don't have to bring their ration books!

The Howard Cushings were up from Washington, too. He only for short week ends away from Navy Department Duty. She with the children for a longer

The George Strawbridges work the same system. Capt. Strawbridge of the United States Army comes as often as he can for short breathing spell vacations and Peggy and the children are really relaxing for longer. Peggy works hard for the Red Cross all winter and looks rested and well since she has been taking a little

Pretty blond Mrs. James Altemus, who has so many friends in Washington (she lived here with her Navy husband winter before last), is another vacationer. So is cave-dweller Mrs. Mc-Ceney Werlich, and Mrs. Oliver O'Donnell is taking a few days off from her job with OSS. In a small group of youngsters we saw Ronny Dick (son of Matthew Dick and Mrs. Gordon Douglas) with young Hugh Auch-

Two Out-of-Town Weddings Interest Capital Residents

The interest of many Washingtonians was attracted yesterday to two out-of-town weddings, one taking place in Lake City, Mich., and the other in Joliet. Ill.

In Lake City the home of Representative and Mrs. Albert J. Engel was the scene of the marriage of their daughter, Miss Margaret Ann Engel, to Mr. Robert Lindsay Cavanagh, and in Joliet the wedding was that of Miss Mary Frances Bartley and Mr. Addison Dent Draper, whose family has lived in this city for several generations.

Colorful flowers of the season decorated the home of Representative and Mrs. Engel for the 4 o'clock ceremony, at which the Rev. Dr. A. Watt Johnstone, retired, of the Presbyterian Church united in marriage Miss Engel and Mr. Cavanagh. Miss Barbara Cavanagh, sister of the bridegroom, played the wedding music and accompanied the soloist, Miss Dorothy Smith, who sang appropriate selections as the wedding guests assembled.

Representative Engel escorted his daughter and gave her in marriage and she was attended by Miss Mary Louise Bielby as maid of honor

With her wedding dress of white satin and net the bride carried a bouquet of white roses, and Miss Bielby, whose dress was of pale blue jersey and chiffon, carried an old fashioned bouquet of early autumn flowers.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Cavanagh of Traverse City and Mr. Max Hosmer of Charlotte, Mich., served as his best man.

Representative and Mrs. Engel were hosts at a reception following the ceremony and later Mr. and Mrs. Cavanagh left for a trip West before going to Fort Worth, where they will make their home. For traveling Mrs. Cavanagh wore a moss green outfit with brown accessories.

The bridegroom received his B. S. degree in aeronautical engineering last month from Tri-State College in Angola, Ind., and is a member of Sigma Mu Sigma and Tau Sigma Eta. His bride was graduated last May from the University of Maryland with a B. A. degree and is a member of Alpha Chi Omega.

Miss Bartley Wed in Church

The wedding of Miss Bartley and Mr. Draper took place at 10:30 yesterday morning in St. Raymond's Church, Joliet, with the Rev. Edwin V. Hoover officiating and the boys' choir, directed by Sister Daniel and accompanied at the organ by Mr. Joseph Lyons, singing the nuptial

White gladioluses on the center altar, with white and yellow gladioluses on the side altars, ferns in the sanctuary and white gladioluses marking the pews, made an impressive setting for the ceremony, and the bride, who is the daughter of Circuit Judge James Vernon Bartley of Joliet and Mrs. Bartley, was escorted to the altar by her father.

Prominent Couples Married

In Several Ceremonies Here The first week end in September boasted many lovely brides and attractively arranged weddings. Three of these which took place in the National Capital included that of Miss Betty Williams, daughter of the chief of the National Guard Bureau and Mrs. John Francis Williams, who was married to Capt. Alexander Hamilton Gaal, son of Mrs. Alexander Gaal and the late Mr. Gaal of Columbus, Ohio. The rectory of the Church of > the Holy Trinity was the scene of another ceremony when Miss Eleanor Pauline Kolb became the bride of Mr. Dewey Hunter Beckham last evening at 6 o'clock. Later in the evening Miss Betty Davies and Mr. Paul James Crouse were married at the Kennedy-Warren at 8 o'clock.

> Gen. Williams escorted his daughter and gave her in marriage in St. Alban's Church, the rector, the Rev. Dr. Charles T. Warner officiating at 4 o'clock. The bride's gown was of ivory satin trimmed with seed pearls, having a full circular train. The coronet which held her fulllength veil was of pearls. She carried white orchids and stephadaughter of Maj. Gen. John Francis Williams, U. S. A., Chief of the National Guard Bureau, and Mrs. Williams.

The bride of Capt. Gaal formerly was Miss Betty Williams,

Mrs. James M. Clark of Pittsburgh was matron of honor for her sister and Miss Mary Marguerite Gaal of Columbus, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor. The bride's other attendants were Mrs. Mahlon W. Caffee of Eau Claire, Wis., and Mrs. William K. Caffee of Newport News, wives of the bride's half brothers. Technical Sergt. William K. Caffee arrived from duty in the South Pacific in time for the wedding. His brother, Maj. Mahlon W. Caffee is on duty in North Africa.

The bride's attendants all wore dusty pink frocks of long fitted lace bodices and full net skirts, halos of matching tulle with wreaths of pink roses and their bouquets matched their wreaths.

Lt. (j. g.) Charles E. Ducommun of Los Angeles was best man and the ushers were Lt. (j. g.) N. J. R. Graves, also of Los Angeles, Lt. Henry P. Grace of Sacramento, Mr. R. E. Schlendorf of Cleveland and Mr. J. M. Wright, ir, of Washington,

New Members Added to Iraq Legation Staff

The Iraq Legation staff has been augmented by two new members, a military attache and an agricultural attache. The military attache, Maj. Chefik Haddad, already has taken up his duties at the legation, but the other new member, M. Darnish Haidari, although he has his headquarters at the Legation, still is connected with the United Nations Food Administration.

Mai. Haddad came to Washington accompanied by his daughter, Mlle. Corinne Haddad, who will continue her studies through the winter. She and her father are staying at Wardman Park Hotel until a suitable house can be found. The late Mme. Haddad was English and both Maj. Haddad and their daughter speak English like natives.

M. Haidari also speaks English fluently, having been a student at the Agriculture College of the University of Texas. He is an expert agriculturist in his homeland and was sent as Iraq delegate to the United Nations Food Conference held at Hot Springs earlier in the summer. Mme. Haidari and their children did not accompany him to this (See DIPLOMATIC, Page C-3.)

Mrs. Eva Miner announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Shirley Miner, to Lt. Eugene C. Bostater, U. S. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Bostater of South Bend. The ceremony took place last night at 8 o'clock in the Westover Baptist Church, the Rev. J. Hardison officiating in candle light.

Mr. Kenneth Hildebrand played the organ and members of the Washington-Lee Glee Club, of which the bride was a member, sang. Miss Elaine Quar-

Miss Shellman, Corpl. Weschler Are Married

Miss Kathleen Frances Shellman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Shellman, was married to Corpl. Ralph A. Weschler, U. S. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Weschler, yesterday morning. The ceremony was performed in St. Anthony's Church in Brookland, the Rev. John J. Dressel officiating at 9 o'clock. Mrs. Esther E. Rohlader sang and Mrs. Louise McNerney played the organ.

Mr. Shellman escorted his daughter of the sanctuary steps where the bridegroom awaited her standing with his brother, Pvt. Benjamin E Weschler, U. S. A., who was his best man. The bride's gown was of white satin, the long fitted bodice having tiny satin buttons up the back and a bouffant skirt of net fell over the satin skirt. A crown of stephanotis held her full length veil and she carried a white prayer book with tiny white blossoms on the cover.

Miss Doris Ann Shellman was maid of honor for her sister wearing blue net over taffeta of the same shade and her headdress was of tulle and flowers. Mr. Charles B. Shellman, jr., and Mr. Howard Thomas Shellman, brothers of the bride were the ushers and led the bridal procession

The wedding breakfast and reception was held in the home of the bride's parents. Later Corpl. and Mrs. Weschler left on a wedding trip and on its completion they will make their home at 3262 Chesnut street. Corpl. Weschler attended the Linton Hall Military Academy, Gonzaga College and Technical High School. His bride attended St. Anthony's School.

Pratt-Straughn Wedding Held At Tree Hill

A recent wedding that is of interest to many Washingtonians took place August 21 at Tree Hill, the home of State Senator and Mrs. A. Earl Shipley, near Westminster, Md., when their niece, Miss Laurlene Straughn, daughter of the resident Bishop of the Pittsburg Area of the Methodist Church and Mrs. James Straughn, became the bride of Mr. Robert W. Pratt, son of Mrs. William H. Pratt of Pittsburgh and the late Mr. Pratt.

Bishop Straughn and his family formely lived in Washington, where he was pastor of the Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church. He also was stationed here while in the General Conference of this district. His daughter attended school here and was graduated from Western High School, and the family has many friends in this city. Senator Shipley escorted the bride from the house to the improvised altar on the lawn at Tree Hill for the afternoon ceremony and Bishop Straughn officiated, assisted by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, acting bishop of the Washington area of the Methodist Church. The bride wore a gown of white organdie and carried a bouquet of orchids and stephanotis. A bracelet of gold mesh that belonged to her grandmother, the late Mrs. W L. Morgan of Cumberland, a gift of the latter's father, adorned her wrist, and she also wore a strand of pearls that were the gift of the bridegroom. Her handkerchief was the one that had been carried by her mother on her wedding day. The attendants were Miss Helen-Jean Moore of Pittsburgh and Mrs.

University was best man for his brother. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Pratt left for Sea Island, Ga., and later will go to Pittsburgh to make will be the guest of Mrs. Echols. o'clock to Maj. Carlyle Francis Heney. The ceremony took place in the Chevy Chase Methodist Church, ate of Western Maryland College the Rev. Hartwell F. Chandler and did post graduate work there and also at Johns Hopkins University. The bride was dressed in white satin, the Brussels lace collar having been worn by her mother on her wedding gown. A wreath of orange blossoms and Brussels lace held her veil and on her white prayer book was tied a white orchid.

Mrs. James G. Campbell of Jacksonville, Fla., was matron of honor, wearing rose color taffeta and carrying a cluster of mixed flowers.

The reception was held in the home of the bride's father and after their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Beckham will live in Baltimore. The bride's traveling costume was a blue suit with fuchsia accessories. Mr. Beckham was educated in Stony Point, N. C., and his bride was graduated from the Georgetown Visitation Con-

Miss Davies Wed To Mr. Crouse

Mr. Robert A. Davies of Mount Airy, Philadelphia, came for the wedding of his granddaughter and gave her in marriage to Mr. Crouse when Chaplain C. Irving Carpenter, U. S. A., officiated. The bride is the daughter of Lt. Elizabeth S. Davies, WAC, and the late Maj. Ward J. Davies, Army Air Forces. The bridegroom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Crouse of Hampton,

The bride's grown was of white satin and her long veil was held by a cap of lace and freesias. Her bouquet was a sheaf of white asters. Her roommate at college, Mrs. Hugh McCormack Hayden, was her matron of honor and only attendant. She was dressed in a jade green faille bouffant frock and carried yellow roses.

Lt. (j. g.) Ward J. Davies, jr., brother of the bride, who recently returned from the Pacific area, was best man. Mr. W. E. Chace was the usher, and Mrs. Harold Chapman of Hampton. sister of the bridegroom, played the wedding music.

Mr. and Mrs. Crouse will make their home in Newport News, where the former is connected with the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. Many Socialites after a visit with the Strawbridges - and Mrs. Rodman

Wanamaker has gone back to finish out the summer at Southampton.

Everywhere there are Navy uniforms and although the men are all working too hard to do much playing around it's nice to find a summer resort where there still are some men. As moviestar Lili Damita remarked when someone asked her how she happened to come to Newport "I wanted a nice bee-ch for my leetle boy and lots of men for me! Miss Damita is lovely to look at, and the men think so, too. She always wears one glove. "Why only one?" we wanted to know. "So peeple will ask," was her prompt reply.

Southampton is full of Washingtonians too. The Dwight Davises nip back and forth from Washington as often as they can get away to rest and relax at their own lovely place. Mrs. George Garrett was with them for a few days. Mrs. Angier Duke has a house there for the summer and so has Mrs. Ffoulke Dewey who is resting from her nurse's aide duties at Garfield Hospital. She has one or two guests every week end, since that is all her tiny house will hold. Over Labor Day Mrs. Kent Legare will visit her. Mrs. Deering Howe is sharing a house with a friend and their husband's join them over week ends. Mrs. Sutherland Mayo has a house there too but we could go on

At the Maidstone Club at Easthampton there were still more Washington lovelies. Mrs. Eugene Carusi was chatting with a group that included Mrs. Jasper Du-Bose (over from Wainscott) and Mrs. William Fahnestock (the former Eppes Hawes). Mrs. Leland Harrison has been summering at the popular Long Island resort and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock is there until after Labor

Over at Wainscott Mrs. Granger Brown (she is a sister of Mrs. Arthur Krock and used to live in Washington) is back in her same cottage resting from a winter of being a nurse's aide at Bellvue Hospital in New York. Not resting completely thoughshe still finds time to garden and every week end she has as her guests two different nurses from Bellvue—just to give them a little relaxation from their very strenuous duties.

Mary DuBose, who does such a good job with Camp and Hospital Services for the Red Cross works in her garden at Wainscott every day. Her 12-year-old son Bobby raised $92 from a fair that he and four of his pals gaveselling garden products. The $92 he personally handed to Mrs. Dwight Davis (for the Red Cross) when she came to lunch with his mother one day. Even vacations can be war-

HE same stamina that landed our forefathers on Plymouth Rock ... the same fortitude that opened our frontiers ... the same fighting spirit that has won all our wars . . . it's the Yankee grit born in the blood of Americans. The inherent desire to support a righteous cause and win, whether it be a fight for freedom or the right to celebrate our great American holidays . . . Labor Day in the past was a time for well-earned recreation, and it shall be again in the not-so-distant future. But this is the year labor is speeding production . . . constantly stepping up the wheels of industry now geared to the tempo of total war ... This war is being fought just as valiantly on the home front as on the fighting front, and labor is meeting gloriously its final test. In the words of Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson: "Today labor and industry are faced with their greatest challenge. This is the hour we must all have been waiting for . . . the hour for the supreme effort to crush tyranny."

Many a mother herself, reared in an atmosphere of false modesty, dreads the day when she must "tell her daughter." Too often, she fails to tell her at all. As a result, she learns "half-truths" from others. Little wonder so many young wives unknowingly risk their very happiness by placing their dependence on weak, ineffective "home-made" mixtures; or using over-strong solutions of acids for the douche which can actually burn, scar and even desensitize delicate tissue. Today such risks are needless. Science nas given womankind a safe—yet amaz-ingly powerful liquid for the douche, Zonite. So powerful is Zonite that it kills immediately all germs and bacteria with which it comes in contact. Deodorizes by actually destroying odors, leaving no tell-tale odor of its own. Protects personal daintiness. Yet! Zonite is non-caustic, non-poisonous, safe for delicate tissues. Over 20,000,000 bottles already bought. For modern hygienic protection you may never have known before, get Zonite at your druggist today. Free Booklet Tells Intimate Facts Every latter part of November. So far I've gotten along all right wearing cotton dresses a size larger than usual. Now I am faced with the problem of buying something warm that I can wear for the rest of the time. I'll need a coat, too, and would like something I could wear after the baby arrives. I wonder if you can Mrs. E. J. H.

Answer-In planning your purchases start with your coat, because that will be your largest investment. You don't have to buy the coat right away, but make up your mind now what you want, and plan your other purchases to go with it. Obviously, your coat will have to be straight or boxy, since a fitted coat would not be suitable. A Chesterfield overcoat would, I think, be a very happy choiceand don't be afraid to buy it in color. Bright green or red would probably be so flattering that no one would notice that you were no longer a perfect size 12. If you buy the straight, boxy Chesterfield in one size larger than you usually wear you'll be able to have it whittled down to fit after the event and have a coat you'll enjoy for a long time. Next on the list might be a suit in a dark color-not black if you can help it. If you can't find a suit you like, have one made. There are patterns for expandable maternity skirts-and with it you can have made a straight box jacket which just hangs to your hips. With it wear as bright and becoming colored blouses and sweaters as you can find. Sweaters, particularly, if you wear them large enough, crinkle at the waist and do a fine foolthe-eye job. One of your blouses should be dressy and pretty enough to take you to parties in fine style. Your second purchase (and you need only two well-chosen garments to carry you through) should be either a softly-tailored dress that you can dress up or down to suit any occasion or a jumper with which you can wear all your * * * *

"Will you please tell me whether you think it would be wise for me to choose a purple suit to be married in? For a couple of years I've set my heart on a purple suit and I thought this would be a good time to buy Miss H. A. S.

Answer-You are the second person to ask us recently about being married in purple. I assume that you are young and that the color is flattering. However, even if the answer to both is "yes," I would not advise your being married in purple. I'm sure you want to look your prettiest and most feminine at your wedding and purple is not the color to do it. Purple is too harsh a shade. If you're being married in church, the dim lights "wash out" all the color in purple, and if you're being married at home where the light is brighter, purple tends to make you look hard rather than soft and appealing. If I were you I'd choose the prettiest, most flattering "soft" color in the rainbow-a pretty shade of blue (periwinkle blue has lots of purple in it!) or aquamarine, for

"Mother and I have been having a disagreement about my clothes and I thought you might help me. I have two brand-new gingham suits that I'm going to wear to school in the fall. One is red and white; the other is blue and white plaid. With these I shall wear my moccasins or sandals and white socks. So far mother and I agree. However, I want to wear a very pretty lapel pin, some Indian bracelets and flowers in my hair and mother thinks that the dresses are pretty enough without jewelry. She says she doesn't mind my wearing the bracelets, but she doesn't like the flowers or lapel pin. All the girls at school are wearing flowers in their hair and I'd like to wear them, too. Do you think they'd be all right?" Miss Fourteen.

Answer-I hate to say it, Miss Fourteen, but I think I'm inclined to agree with your mother. From what you have said the plaids are probably colorful enough without adding to them. The bracelets are probably a very nice touch, but I don't think a lapel pin is either suitable or necessary on a cotton suit. As to the flowers in your hair, I think they'd be rather "gilding the lily." Perhaps the other girls are wearing them, but that's no reason for you to follow them in a fashion that you know is not suitable for school. The editor of one of the biggest fashion magazines in the country once said to me. "I have always found that underdressing is the secret to being well dressed." In other words, if you have two dresses to choose from, choose the simpler one. If there's any question of wearing a flower or leaving it off, leave it off. You're never wrong if you're simply dressed, but you can be very wrong if you're overdressed. Why don't you set a new style in simplicity and suitability and look so pretty and so well dressed that the other girls will want to follow you?

"Like a lot of 17-year-olds, I recently succumbed to the lure of "that old black magic" and purchased a rather severe black suit. All very well for a New York sophisticate, but I'm a college gal, and my particular clan doesn't go in for rhinestone clips and silver foxes with their suits. They're very chic, but very impractical for a rugged campus existence. Can you suggest some simple, but smooth accessories. and possible color combinations, for my problem child?

Miss B. M. You don't say what type of suit you have bought, but I suppose it's a tailored suit-or you Buy less and buy the best is a good motto in choosing your clothes for fall. For college or career girl, for urban or suburban matron, here's a day-long dress of Hockanum yarn-dyed wool that will give you long, faithful and flattering service.

Accepted Rules for Etiquette in Wartime

It is not always easy to choose the right gift, even for those we know best, and the test this aunt is put to is far from small: "My nephew," she tells me, "has put me on the spot! He is overseas and has sent me a money order-quite an important oneasking me to select a birthday gift and send it to his best girl friend here at home. He explains that it is impossible for him to buy anything where he is. He also wants me to write a note sending his love and birthday wishes. Since I never have met the young lady, in fact, this is the first time I have heard of her, please tell me how I can choose an acceptable present for a girl I never have seen and how to write a note that carries such a personal

If this girl lives in your town, the simplest thing, it seems to me, would be to telephone her and tell her of your commission and ask her if she won't help you by coming to see you so that she can make suggestions of what she might like. Or else buy the gift and with it send a note explaining that it has been chosen only tentatively and that it was understood by Miss Blank. the saleswoman, that she will gladly exchange it for whatever else is preferred.

A man in the armed forces who. let's say, is coming home on furlough from a great distance, may have to spend so much of his time coming and going as to have very And yet, I have a letter today from the mother of a soldier which says: "My son went back to camp leaving many friends hurt because he did not get to see them. The truth is that the poor boy had a hard enough time getting to see all of his family and his best girl friend. Don't you think these others should have come to see him?"

I have already answered that, of course, the others should have come to see him; at any rate, that they should not have expected him to make the rounds to see them. There is the thought, however, that many peo ple who do not belong to the small circle of his family's friends hesitate to intrude, and are inclined to wait, feeling that the family will themselves set a time for him to see them. On the other hand, what a man's friends sometimes do when it looks certain that the family isn't going to ask them, is give a party them-

A very new and very interesting question that has for the first time been asked me is this: "If a bride's mother is by any chance in the Army or the Navy, would her uniform make it proper that she take husband's place and give her daughter away?" The letter from a bride continues: "My mother is tall and slim and an officer, and I want very much to have her walk up the aisle with me and give me away. She is not certain whether she or my only uncle or perhaps my sister's husband should do this. My father is not living.'

As I have said, this is, to me a brand-new question to which my own reaction is to say "yes, certainly!" On thinking further, the real objection under peacetime circumstances, to having a mother take her husband's place is that feminine clothes are very detracting from the bridal dress, which would not be the case beside the Navy blue uniform of a WAVE! My personal opinion. then, is yes!

Dear Mrs. Post: Is it improper for the parents of a young which took place on an island in the South Pacific where she and the groom are both in the services? May the place at which they were married be included?

Answer-No matter where it may have taken place it is always correct that the bride's family make the announcement from where they live. Ordinarily the notices include where the marriage took place and it seems to me the name should have particular appeal in this instance.

Hairlines Are Headlines This Autumn Season

By Patricia Lindsay.

If you are wondering how to do your hair this autumn you can bear in mind that hairlines are headlines. Somehow you must show off your hairlinedramatize it, make it individual. This is the advice of two expert hair stylists—one from the West Coast and one from the East

Recognizing that women still wish to keep their hair 4 or 5 inches long, because it is more easily managed, variations of the American casual hair-do which delighted us all summer, are being suggested.

However, before you finally do your hair, you must begin your experimenting by brushing it up away from your face and neck. Show your hairline! How you set it after it is brushed up depends entirely upon your facial features and the size of your face.

Much is being said about the fluff-wave and the push-wave. The fluff-wave is the former allover pin curls, wound and set tightly to the scalp (all going in the same direction) and then brushed out to form loose waves with only the ends slightly

The push-wave is accomplished by pushing the hair into its natural wave positions with your fingers, setting it with combs, and then when dry, brushing it away from the scalp in charming, airy fluffiness.

So you see there is a move on to banish set hair-dos. The fluffy, feminine coiffures seem to be the fashion.

In reading the above news, any girl realizes that her hair must be soft and glossy and pliable if new, dramatic coiffures. Dry, lifeless, dull hair, or hair that is too oily, cannot be dressed in either of these fluffy fashions.

Keep your hair manageable through good care. Not too frequent shampoos, daily brushings, use tonics to correct any abnormal condition, get expert shapings if possible

Dried and split ends should be cut off and, frizzy ends can be smoothed out by the use of a cream pomade. For dry scalps

The hat has two velvet and silk roses perched over her nose, which shade from clear lemony chartreuse to deep copper. These colors, with her clear complexion and wonderful hair, are something worth talking about.

Tall, slender Adela Robinson wears the new Ming blue with distinction. Not that any one would ever suggest Adela has an oriental appearance, but the neat way she coiffs her raven locks and the clear line of her eyebrows against her very fair skin gives that well-groomed appearance which is universal among welldressed Chinese women. With this blue, Mrs. Robinson wears exquisite enameled jewelry which has blue, clear green and lemon yellow in the design. Our trip west was different from the one east. We all got sun and wind burned, so much so that we now look like Arabs. The Arab kids shouted at us before, but this time prefixed it with "Hey, Johnnie," and yelled, "Okay Joe" at us incessantly. The French, some of whom we had seen holding up their fingers in the Victory sign when we went east, came out and hollered and velled and threw flowers at us. We felt like "Lo, the conquering hero comes," perhaps getting a pretaste of what the States will be like when we finally return.

From this account it appears we have been in some of the big battles in this campaign but have not participated in them as much as some mans that I have seen at close range were either dead or prisoners. Our lack of action has been due to the fact that when we went to the was beginning) we had air superiority, and, after Fondouk and Kairouan, air supremacy. Having pulled a dramatic stunt of those fiscal proportions, it was virtually inevitable that the author of tomorrow night's "A New Life" at the National should be a proponent of stage trickery.

It was not merely production ideas with which Rice found himself in disagreement as a new playwright who had made $100,000. A further conviction of his was that the subjects with which dramatists dealt were not making a noble dramatic literature. to shoot a scene. We made the scene, but I still have the problem.

I do not feel entirely strange to Mr. Heffernan's readers, fortunately. Some of us met, across footlights, when I was on tour in "Claudia" or when I played it on Broadway. And footlight friendships are quick but lasting. So, remembering this, I'll try to tell you something about my coming to Hollywood.

I had road-showed at the Los An-Madison Square Garden for the regeles Biltmore with "Claudia," but ception in honor of Mme. Chiang couldn't manage to get out to Twentieth Century-Fox, where Henry Fonda was making "Ox Bow Incident." Henry Fonda had played in good laugh at Hollywood. Some one "A Kiss for Cinderella" with me in suggested him as a possible scenic Omaha, Nebr., when I was 13. He designer. NEW YORK. Girls who know all the answers make exciting and appropriate heroines for novels. Girls who know all the questions—or who can think them up—are hired by big New York advertising agencies for radio quiz shows. Two high-powered females, Edith Oliver and Mary Harris, run the whole interrogation shooting match for the Sunday evening Phil Baker Take It or Leave It" show.

They work on trains, under the shower, in traffic jams, during lunch, in the Baker children's playroom; once in a great while, very late at night, blonde, gregarious Edith and her colleen-type teammate flash into their office and compile batches of

When the office is the chosen background for their collaborating. Edith rattles from one end of its Radio City elegance to the other, crackling with posers like "Did John . Sullivan win or lose when he fought Jim Corbett in 1892?"

She is the official thinker-upper and Mary, calm and cool behind the typewriter, is the official setterdowner. Their "collaboration" is most evident when Edith, at concert pitch is twisting out the last question of a category and says as she said one dawn: "I could finish this in a minute if I could only get a word for the second day in the week!" Mary without lifting her fingers from the keys said patiently "You mean, like 'Monday'?"

Encyclopedia Training. As alumnae of Smith and Misericordia Colleges, respectively, Edith and Mary know how to use an encyclopedia, but don't particularly want to. Resounding boners sometimes have resulted, On the occasion they decided of their own accord that Custer's last WRC-News and recorded music with Bill stand took place in North Dakota (instead of Montana) and more recently that the late Lt. Gen. Andrews still was in command of American troops in the European war theater, the switchboard at CBS was tied up for the rest of the night Both girls are in their 20's and approximate "rolling stones" rather than "bookworms." When they are streaking back and forth from Hollywood with the show, they have the extra burden, along with thinking up the questions, of restraining eager train passengers and fans from "helping." No unsolicited questions are used.

Scarcely a week goes by that some one doesn't call Edith with a big idea for a question and she, after four years in the game, knows that 10 to 1 it will be: "Who is the Treasurer of the United States?" People just can't resist proposing that one as soon as they notice W. A. Julian's signature on a dollar bill.

Off-Stage Signaler. As well as their composition stint each has definite jobs during the broadcast. Mary sits on the stage and keeps the questions moving toward Baker. The contestants can't see Edith but she sizes them up from the wings and signals her approval or disapproval to Baker.

THE WHITE MARKET

Of course there's a Black Market. But look at the other side of the picture — the side on which most real Americans will be found

by Charles N. Doane

It seems to me it's about time.
I am a butcher. That is, I sell meats. I also sell staple groceries. I went into business right here in this town thirty-six years ago, and have been at it ever since. It has never been a big business, but it has been a good business. I started out with a horse and wagon, and now we operate two trucks out of the shop. I have been able to raise and educate a family, and my older son is in business with me now. The younger one is an officer in the Coast Guard. My daughter is married — her husband's in the Army.

The country is full of butchers and grocers and filling-station operators who aren't very different from me. We are what you might call the White Market. We are trying to do an honest business. It is not easy these days. But I know that I would go out of business before I would turn criminal, and I know that a lot of others like me all over the country would, too.

I have a lot of war - industry workers among my customers, and I could be selling more meat and other merchandise than I ever sold before, if I had it. They have the money and are eager to buy. But as a matter of fact, I'm selling less than I have sold in years, because I just don't have it to sell. When I get a sirloin of beef these days, it is a big event. But then I have to slice it so thin, in order to make it stretch out among all the customers who have been begging for steaks, that it takes all the edge off the satisfaction. I have to spend most of my time telling customers that I haven't got this, and I haven't got that.

I DON'T like having my business cut down, of course. But I'm not speaking here to complain about all the fussing and figuring we have to do with ration coupons and reports. If this is what we have to put up with during this war, I can stand it.

But there is one thing I won't do. I won't be a crook.

I don't say this to set myself up as a saint, or anything like that. I don't suppose you can live in one place as long as I have, to say nothing of doing business, without getting some people mad at you. I have had my fights. But nobody has ever been able to say that I didn't do business legitimately and on the level. And nobody is going to be able to say that about me.

You'd think, from some of the things you hear about the Black Market, that there isn't such a thing left in this country

MEET Charles N. Doane, typical American of a typical American town. He has lived in that town all his life — as his family did for generations before him. He's outspoken and blunt — and a sincere patriot as an honest butcher, an honest grocer or an honest filling-station owner. People who have known me and done business with me for years suddenly seem to think that I would be interested in doing Black Market business. They wouldn't think of suggesting that I would steal, or blow up an ammunition plant, but yet they urge me to get them steaks or roasts against the law.

Just the other day two good churchgoing women gave me a tip about where I could get some Black Market chickens. It was no news to me. I hadn't had any chickens, except a few locally-killed ones, for months, but I knew all about that place and plenty of others where I could get Black Market stuff.

"But you don't think I ought to buy it, do you?" I asked them.

"Why not?" one of them asked. "After all, everybody is doing it now."

I guess they really believed that. A lot of people do. That's why "everybody's doing it" is such dangerous propaganda. It gets so that people begin to try to believe it must be all right, even though they know it's wrong. They begin to think they are foolish if they aren't getting their share.

But most people don't really want to cheat, when you come right down to it. Some do, of course. There have always been chiselers. But I think my customers are pretty fair samples of Americans. And I find they prefer honesty to steaks. They may complain about not getting what they want, the same as I do about not having it for them; but they know that I would get it for them if I could do it legitimately, and so they stick by me and take what they can get.

OF COURSE there is a Black Market. I don't know just how big it is, but it is too big, and gives us White Market people plenty of trouble. At a time when food is scarce anyway, it makes it just so much the harder to get the food our customers want and need. Of course we could get it on the Black Market, too. You don't have to be smart to do that. The fact is, you have to turn down propositions.

But the point is that there is a White Market. I'm not just a lone, curious old dodo who insists on doing honest business, and my customers aren't a bunch of fools in sticking with me.

We are just ordinary Americans. It is the people who have made the Black Market, the sellers and the buyers, who ought to be pitied.

My customers aren't faring as well as they used to, or as well as they might if they quit me and hunted out the Black Markets. I'm not making as much money as I used to, or as I might if I turned into a Black Market. But when our boys come back, we'll be the same kind of people we were when they went away. We won't feel ashamed of ourselves.

I guess there are countries where you have to be a cheat and a chiseler to do business. It makes sense to me that my son and a lot of other people's sons have gone to war to keep this the kind of a country where it is the honest man who has the best chance to set up shop, mind his business and make a living.

You don't lose your feeling for that kind of a country overnight — not when you have sons fighting to save it.

SIDELINES

ron you. Here is one campaign against the Axis that every one of us at home can share actively in — the battle against inflation and for the White Market which Mr. Doane discusses on this page. In order to do your part to help distribute rationed goods fairly, to help hold down the cost of living and to kill black markets, you should sign the Home Front Pledge:

. "I will pay no more than top legal prices."

"I will accept no rationed goods without giving up ration stamps."

This is a job that our government, alone, cannot do. But with your help, it can. It's up to you.

JOHNNY ZERO. Until recently, our flyers in the Pacific could count on being outnumbered by the Japs every time they went into action. But they were also confident of coming out on top. One boy, congratulated on a victory over a group of Zeros, said: "I should have won. Why hell, I outnumbered the Japs one to five."

Day cover to the ladies of the home front: the women workers who have kept the production wheels turning in factories, shipyards, on farms, who man transportation systems, who work in hospitals—who do any of the jobs that release a man or woman for active service. They're not in uniform but they are a mighty part of the Army of Democracy.

Just as important as the making of munitions is the harvesting and packing of foods. It's vital war work.

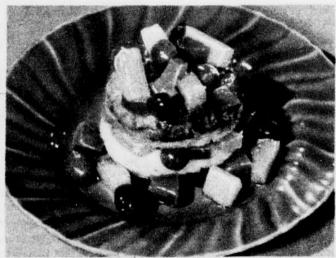

Yes, victory depends on food . . . food for our fighting men, our allies, our home front. And this battle of food is one America's women can help win. Today, look in the Classified Advertising section of your newspaper or apply at the local U. S. Employment Service Office. Make your war effort the greatest you possibly can . . . stretch it to include a war job as well as home and community activities.

Vacation, 1950: You'll taxi from your home to the airport in a helicopter, board a huge plane . .

Many experts see it as the super-airliner of the future. Get acquainted now with the plane that some day may take you on cut-rate trips around the world

by Arthur Bartlett

OUR bag is packed for the trip. You step out of the house and get into your helicopter. You start the motor, and the windmill overhead lifts you into the air. You fly over to the airport, park the helicopter, buy your ticket and get aboard the commercial plane.

But what a plane! It is like nothing you have ever yet seen in the air. Instead of a fuselage supported by wings, it is just one huge wing. As much as anything, it might be a metallic reproduction of some flying reptile of the age of dinosaurs.

As you step inside, you find commodious, even luxurious quarters. Plenty of room for comfortable lounge chairs, a restaurant compartment, an observation cabin. By comparison with the planes in which we have been flying up to now, the space from side to side seems immense. No more streetcar seating arrangements, with one seat right behind the next. Here are seats arranged as in a big room. Inside the wing, too, in their own compartments, are the crew, the motors, the baggage.

You make yourself comfortable, the motors start, and you are on your way — in a Flying Wing

That is how you will fly after the war.

They're Here

RIGHT now, today, both the helicopter and the Flying Wing are actualities. You have heard more about the helicopter in recent months than about the Flying Wing, because the Army has released certain information about the development of the helicopter for military purposes, whereas the exact present status of the Flying Wing is still a military secret. But it is no secret that to most of the aeronautical world, it is the plane of to-morrow.

I have talked extensively in the last few weeks with aeronautical engineers, aviationindustry leaders and interested government officials. Adding opinions together, boiling down, and making due allowance for doubts and differences, this seems to be today's picture of postwar aviation:

1. The family air flivver and utility bus for short hops will be the helicopter, or some similar direct-lift machine.

2. The commercial machine for passenger and cargo air service will be the Flying Wing. There will probably be many adaptations of it.

3. The conventional airplane, as we know it today, will continue to be built for some years, while the helicopter and the Flying Wing are proving themselves; but — assuming they do prove themselves — it will gradually become obsolete, except, perhaps, for small sports models and trainers. Of course, some industry leaders doubt this, but Flying Wing enthusiasts firmly believe it.

This Flying Wing is a strange-looking contraption to eyes not yet accustomed to it. Seeing it in the air, you might almost think that a desk or a bureau or a magic carpet had suddenly taken a notion to fly. But if it's a safe bet that you'll use a helicopter for commuting and touring after the war, it's a safer one, if anything, that you'll make your crosscountry flights and hops abroad in a Flying Wing.

Despite its futuristic appearance, the thing isn't really as revolutionary as you might think. It is only the realization of a goal toward which aeronautical engineers have been moving for years: a plane on which virtually all the exposed parts contribute to the lifting power, rather than creating air resistance.

It's Cheaper

"OBVIOUSLY, a plane with the same amount of power as one of our present planes, but so built that it is all lift and no drag, will go faster or carry more load," one aviation industry official explained to me. "Or you could get the same speed and load capacity out of it for less power. That is economy of operation — and in the long run, that is what will count."

The fact is that even what the Wright Brothers started out to build was essentially a Flying Wing. As they struggled to overcome the little-understood problems of aerodynamics, they found they had to add their structure of struts and guys, and stick the propellers out behind to make the thing balance and fly. But the pilot, if you remember, merely sat on the wing, with the engine and fuel tank alongside. The Wrights did not contemplate putting additional load into a fuselage, as the machine was further perfected; they thought the load would be distributed out over the wing structure.

Presently, however, somebody thought the pilot ought to have a windshield in front of him, for protection. This soon evolved into a cabin. The cabin grew longer and longer—and the airplane began to develop along the lines which eventually gave us our present-day machines.

But the idea of the Flying Wing was not forgotten or abandoned. In 1910, Professor Junkers got a German patent on a whaleback airplane — with cargo and passenger accommodations within the wing. That, in fact, was the origin of the Junkers Aircraft Company, though the professor never really built the machine that he dreamed up. At least, he hadn't built it up to the time that Germany stopped keeping us informed.

In England, about the same time, Lieutenant Dunne, of the Royal Navy, designed a plane without any tail, and W. Starling Burgess built one in this country. In the welter of other aeronautical developments the two ventures faded out of the picture.

TW-9-5-4

First Big Step

But in 1920, a young designer from Texas, Vincent J. Burnelli, perfected and built a plane which went the first long and practical step toward all-wing design. The fuselage was designed to contribute to the lifting power of the plane, and the body extended about three times as far out over the wings as did those in ordinary planes, with engines and propellers in front. The next year — in 1921, mind you — Burnelli boldly predicted that the "plane of the future" would be an all-wing plane.

Vincent Burnelli has been working to make that prediction come true ever since, and has already produced a number of large planes which, while still retaining some of the characteristics of the conventional plane — a tail structure, for instance — are essentially Flying Wings. One of these has been operating on demonstration flights at Roosevelt Field, N. Y.

Clyde Pangborn, the trans-Pacific flyer, has piloted Burnelli's planes in hundreds of tests and demonstrations, and was planning a nonstop refueling trip around the world, just before the war, in the last model, the UB-15. That plan had to be abandoned, but the UB-15 was built under patent-license arrangements both in Canada and Great Britain: and one of the British-built machines, flown to French Equatorial Africa by Jim Mollison, the transatlantic flyer, has been in service as the flagship of the Free French Forces. Negotiations have just been completed, also, for South American interests to build the plane for use as a commercial transport, and the Canadian Car and Foundry Company is planning an extensive building program under license arrangements.

In the meantime, Burnelli is still looking ahead. In New York, he showed me the model of the Wing which he plans to build for postwar use. A big super-transport — a 250,000-pound machine, as compared with the present Douglas B-19 at 150,000 pounds — its tail structure is still more abbreviated than that of his UB-15, and merges into the wing itself. The motors are within the wing, instead of protruding, and only the propellers stick out in front. With a wide, flattened body and comparatively stubby wing extensions, the super-transport looks something like a tremendous bat.

But that wide body is the pay-off. Inside it, with nine feet of headroom, will be accommodations for 200 passengers, a space equivalent to that of seven box cars. This interior will be more like that of an ocean liner than a present-day airplane. Instead of being a long, narrow space, it will be 80 feet wide, and 50 feet long. Seats will be placed along the sides, so passengers can look out the windows as they do in other planes; but there will also be plenty of space for a dining cabin, lounge and the other appointments that make travel more enjoyable.

In addition to Burnelli's all-wing planes, at least one other Flying Wing has already been built, and it is even more sensational in appearance. Designed by John K. Northrop and built by the Northrop Aeronautical Company, it made a brief public appearance in 1941. V-shaped, it has somewhat the lines of a sea gull, in contrast to the more batlike lines of the Burnelli model. It has no tail, but movable wing-tips serve as rudder and aileron. The engines are built into the wing, and the propellers push it from behind, instead of pulling it from in front.

Speed Increase Ahead

EXCEPT for its propeller-shaft housings," said the company announcement of it, "every square inch of the plane's body increases the lift of the wing." Mr. Northrop said: "In my opinion transport aircraft having cruising speeds of approximately 100 miles per hour greater than the best now available can be built as soon as necessary engineering can be completed and construction facilities made available."

Tested for 18 months before it was announced, this Flying Wing was generally accepted as an eye-opening sample of Things to Come.

Other companies, too, are known to be doing things, either on paper or otherwise, about the Flying Wing; and it is a safe prediction that even more startling machines than those so far exposed to the public view will eventually be flying around over your head.

Right now, of course, our airplane builders are concentrating primarily on building the planes we need to win the war; but the very immensity of that job is the surest guarantee that postwar developments will be tremendous. Charles I. Stanton, the keen-minded ex-mail pilot who now heads the Civil Aeronautics Administration, pointed out to me that this year we will produce more than twenty billion dollars worth of planes; that is five times the production of the automobile industry at its peak. Mr. Stanton thinks it is conservative to estimate the aircraft flying our skyways in 1950 at half a million — as against 41,000 at the end of 1941.

A Crowded Sky

Half a million aircraft! You and I hopping around in our helicopters. Helicopter bus lines. (Three applications are already filed with the government.) The Flying Wing Express, rushing businessmen to appointments a hundred miles or a thousand miles away. The Flying Wing Tourist line, taking carefree vacationers for a week end in Shangri-La.

It's going to be a busy place, that sky of

I stood outside an airplane plant, and looked at rows on rows of sleek, new bombers, waiting to go to war.

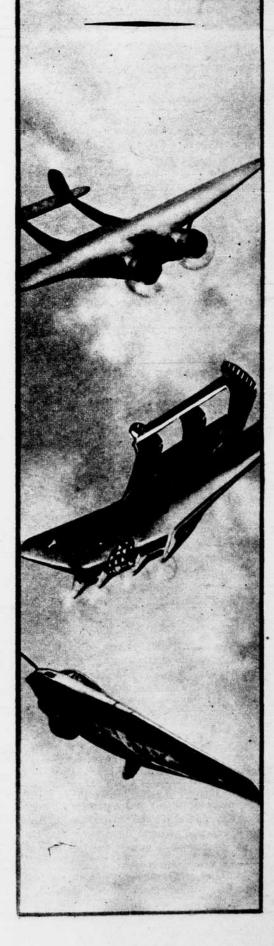

"Some different from the crates they flew in the last war," I said.

The company engineer nodded. "But you haven't seen anything yet," he said. "The Model T in its day was quite an improvement over earlier automobiles, too. But it looks pretty funny today. These planes will look just as funny when you get used to seeing Flying Wings."

The End

TOMORROW'S WINGS?

These strange-looking aircraft may become everyday sights in the postwar sky. The top one, designed by Vincent J. Burnelli, does not look very different from today's planes - but its technical characteristics are radical. The fuselage, really a part of the wings, contributes to the lifting power; the tail structure is slight. Below it is another Burnelli model - a four-motor transport. At the bottom is a Flying Wing craft built by the Northrup Aeronautical Company, and tested under conditions of the most rigid secrecy.

HERE were lots of people at first who would have sworn it was a gag — it couldn't be true even if every newspaper in town did carry the story.

Dave Fentriss and Amy Hollowell couldn't be working at the same war plant machine. Even war itself couldn't bring about that startling situation! But it turned out to be true. Now, thought the members of the County Bar Association, they'd seen everything.

Dave was one of the city's most successful young lawyers. He had ability, ambition, looks, and got along beautifully with everyone — with one exception. The exception was Amy Hollowell, the smartest female attorney in the State, and the most beautiful.

Amy had cornflower blue eyes and ashblond hair. She also had a figure and a pair of legs that would sway a jury of Egyptian mummies. But Amy never needed those charms. Not with the razor-sharp brain she had.

She not only knew her law, but had a neat little trick of always being one step ahead of everything. Give her the tiniest clue to a situation, and she'd have it all figured out in a flash. In addition, Dave Fentriss thought, she was one of the luckiest girls in the world. Twice he had publicly told her so. Both times she had been opposing counsel in court, and had beaten him on the narrowest of technicalities.

They were candidates for secretary in the Bar Association elections, and the balloting wound up: Hollowell 422; Fentriss 418.

They headed district teams in the Community Fund drive, and Dave's team brought in pledges for $34,000, which was high for the city until Amy's team came in at the last hour with $34,900. In short, they seemed doomed to oppose each other forever. That's why the shock ran rampant when people heard they were teamed up at Columbia Aircraft.

It never would have happened but for the labor shortage in the area — a shortage so critical that the factories appealed to white collar and professional people to work part time split-shifts. On a split-shift one person worked from 4 p.m. to 8, another from 8 to midnight. That way, two people could keep a machine going.

Amy and Dave were among the first volunteers to sign on with Columbia Aircraft, but neither was aware of the other's intentions, because they took their two-day training period at different times. After the training period, Foreman Pete Honroth assigned his recruits to the hydraulic presses, stamping out aluminum longeron sections. Pete was interested only in production, not in chit-chat heard at the City Club; therefore, when he paired off Hollowell and Fentriss at the same machine, it was strictly Kismet.

They themselves didn't know it until the shift changed that first night. Amy, who had the early trick, looked up and saw Dave standing there, hands on hips, watching her. A faint trace of shock was still on his face, but it was giving way slowly to devilish humor. "It's just about 8 o'clock," he said. "so if you'll step aside we'll get on with the war the way it should be conducted."

It took her a few seconds to collect a coherent thought: "Don't tell me that you — Well, if this isn't the pay-off."

"It looks that way," he agreed. "And just think. Twenty-five years from now, when kids study the history of this war, they'll rank Fentriss and Hollowell with the British Eighth Army, General Eisenhower and the other factors which turned the tide of conflict."

"I'll bet you really could talk yourself into that without much effort," she said.

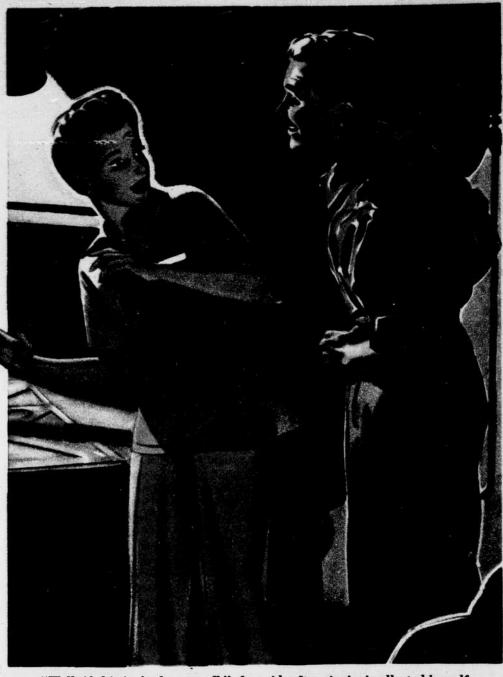

Jury Of One

But Dave Fentriss found a way to meet it . . .

"Well, if this isn't the pay-off," she said, after she had collected herself

"Sure. Why not? Anyway, if I can't fly in these planes, I might as well help toss 'em together."

She knew what he meant by that. He'd tried to get in, but they'd turned him down because of a punctured eardrum.

"Okay, start tossing." She pointed to a stack of unstamped sections. "And if you're sure you won't collapse, you might finish off this batch by midnight."

"How many did you do?"

She made a quick estimate. "One-fifty."

So HE did 170. But when he reported the following night she'd done 175. "Look," he said. "No use killing yourself trying to push that figure up every night. Let's set a mark of, say, 180 and keep it there."

Amy tucked a stray strand of hair under her safety cap. "Make it 200 and it's a deal. Or don't you think you'll ever gather that much momentum?" He grinned and stuck out his hand. "It's a deal." She took his hand, realizing with something of a shock that it was the first time either had ever smiled at the other...

At the end of the month Pete came over as they were changing shifts. He told them they were the top split-shift in the plant and were being awarded a $25 War Bond apiece.

It made Amy feel awfully good. It was a better feeling than anything she had experienced in a long time.

She wondered if Dave felt the same, but there was no way of knowing, of course, because she couldn't and wouldn't ask him. Not many words ever passed between them.

The next Friday night Fentriss didn't show up at 8 o'clock. He still hadn't come at 9. Amy kept going at the machine, wondering if he were ill or if he had been called out of town suddenly. Otherwise he certainly would have come to work. She was sure of that.

Maybe he had phoned Pete. But Pete wasn't around just then, and besides, what business was it of hers? She certainly wasn't going to get curious all of a sudden about Dave Fentriss' affairs.

But she didn't have to wait long for the answer. The very next day, when she bumped into Kate Willis of the Chronicle, Kate said, "Amy, I'm curious. Tell me, how does your work-shop playmate rate a night off to go night-clubbing? Or has he figured he's won his share of the war already? Davie Fentriss was having himself a time at the Bayside Terrace last night."

"Bayside Terrace?" Amy echoed. "What was he doing there?"

"I told you," Kate said. "Having himself a time. In fact, his table for quite awhile was decorated by one Sue Vaughan, a gorgeous red-haired singer, who opened there last week. There was an Army flyer with them too. Awfully cute."

Amy nodded vacantly, a tiny rage within her gradually building up to cyclone proportions. So Dave Fentriss just blithely took an evening off to hit the glitter spots! His privilege, of course, but — there was more to it than that, she figured.

Monday night he was 10 minutes early. "I was just talking to Pete," he said. "He told me you worked through to midnight last Friday. You didn't have to do that, Amy."

She didn't look up. She didn't even realize that for the first time he had called her by her first name. "I didn't want to see the machine remain idle," she said bitingly. "Idle machines won't turn out planes that make the world safe for a table at a night club, with some red-headed witch."

Once the words were out of her mouth she was sorry she had said them. She looked up, then. A sudden thought of apology came to her, but she dismissed it. Besides, he was grinning. The next thing she knew he had grabbed her by the arm, almost yanked her off her feet, and was steering her over to a soft drink cooler in the corner. "Okay," he said. "I get it. So before you draw up a jury of one and convict me, I'll tell you all about it."

She opened her mouth to protest, to say she wasn't interested, but he already was under way.

"My college roommate got to town Friday night at 6," Dave said. "He's an air-force major, bombed a mess of Jap ships before he was wounded and shipped home. He's on his' way to London, now, as an air attaché.

"Joe — that's his name — was passing through and had five hours to kill. That doesn't give me much of an excuse to take the night off, but Friday I was examined for a pair of glasses. Those drops they put in your eyes do funny things to your vision, so the doctor told me not to work Friday night. Joe and I went down to the Terrace because that Vaughan gal, the singer, is an old friend of Joe's. So you see, Hollowell," he added, "your circumstantial evidence didn't hold up very well." He grinned. "I'd be much more pleased if I thought you'd been jealous instead of worried about airplane parts."

For the first time words failed Amy.
All she was conscious of was a warm flush rising on her face as she watched him walk back to the hydraulic press...

A messenger delivered two dozen roses to Amy's office the next day, with a note:

"We've never really celebrated that production record of ours. So let's do something together for a change — Saturday night?"

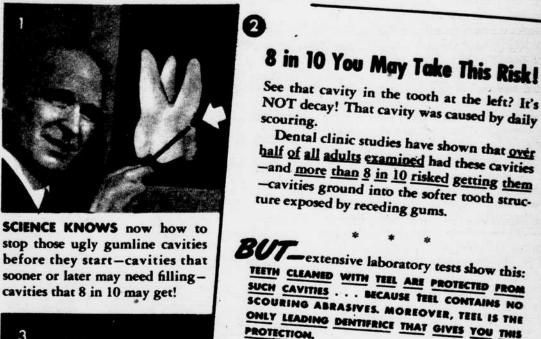

Amy swept the roses to her. This wasn't just circumstantial evidence. With that uncanny foresight of hers, she already was 'way ahead of the situation. This was just the beginning.

HE long, ululating wail of the siren of El Sueno-by-the-Sea brought Bill Barbour awake. Once, in simple note, the siren had announced only fires, or near-drownings on the beach; now an attached gadget gave it a sinister warble. Drawing his knees up to his chin, Bill rolled himself to a sitting posture on the edge of the bed, and groping in the blackness about his feet, found his socks and shoes.

He stood up against the chair on which, retiring last night, he had piled his clothes in canny successive order; reversing the order, he put them on one by one. He hung his gas mask against his chest; then put on the heavy steel helmet. He stood a moment, shivering a bit with the discomfort of the abrupt awakening, and addressed the darkness. "Last time," he said reflectively, "I was sitting on top of the world."

He snapped on his electric torch and stamped out. Going down the outside stairs, he felt his knees creak and hurt. "Damn!" he remarked ruefully. But when he had reached the street—a lane, rather, that stopped a hundred yards farther on, at the cliff, the beach, and the Pacific—a touch of exultation secretly galvanized him. He stood up alone under the great dome of sky, which was pregnant—so the siren had warned—with monstrous threat, and all about him the little houses of his own two blocks huddled silent and dark, their inmates sheltered.

The siren had now quit; in the deep quiet he set out on his rounds. First he climbed little old Miss Compton's stoop, and knocked guardedly at her front door.

Some time ago, on one of his official visits, he had made a bargain with the little old lady. She had explained that, not being very well, she went to bed every evening right after supper, hence had no blackout problem; she would simply make no light all night. She would continue to go to bed with the sun; and a bed was as good a place as any to be during a raid — if there was a raid. Except, maybe, that she would like to know. . .

"Miss Compton, Miss Compton," he called low in the darkness. "Yes," the gentle little cracked voice came back. "Blackout, Miss Compton!" "Yes, I know. I'm in bed."

Bill's two blocks held several such little old ladies who, through with the turmoil of life, had come in search of a few last placid days in this village by the sea. His heart was soft as he resumed his patrol, and his resentment wobbly. But he was stubborn. He raised his head and this time it was the stars he addressed. "Last time," he told them, "I was sitting on top of the world."

He now saw the long slit of light that leaked out of the Carter cottage, and hurried toward it. This was an Army family — and always the most difficult. They were playing bridge in a blaze of light as he came into the living room, and Mrs. Carter immediately took him in hand. "As you know, my son-in-law, Lieutenant Thorndyke, is at the Fort, only six miles away. I've just had him on the phone, and he tells me that all the Fort buildings are simply a-blaze with lights!"

But meanwhile Bill had spotted her offending window, and was stopping the leak with a quilt picked up from the davenport. He couldn't know about the Fort. He had no relatives there. Maybe the commandant at the Fort had his own ideas.

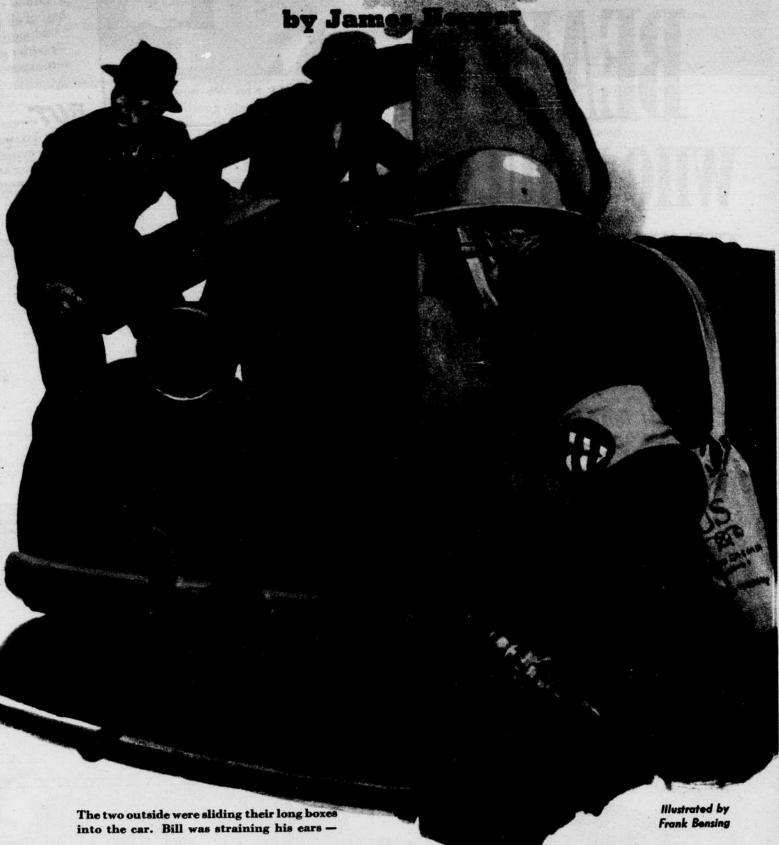

Maybe, thought Bill satirically, he was keeping the lights on to entice the sky-raiders to the Fort, and thus draw them away from El Sueno-by-the-Sea.

So, plea-ease, Lady, keep your home blacked out.

His heart was skeptic as he went on with his patrol; in his mind's eye he could see the Carter lady pouncing upon his work as soon as he had gone far enough away. He noted as he strolled that his eyes were piercing the darkness extraordinarily well tonight. That must be because of the carrots he had been munching so docilely all these many weeks. He turned a corner, and gave a long whistle. The Miller house, on its knoll, looked like a lighthouse. It was pouring out light by every one of its large windows, which all faced the sea.

Blackout

Are you the Bill Barbour of your block? If so, you'll understand and envy him

He stamped up the back porch, beat at the door, burst into the living room — and into a strange feeling of being in a space packed with cotton. The poor old Miller couple were sitting placidly side by side. hands on knees. "There's a blackout!" Bill roared, a bit angry with the urgency. They continued to sit there, hands on knees, blinking up at him, and he now remembered that they were both very deaf.

But this did not seem enough to account for the total block in communication. That strange atmosphere of packed cotton! He felt deaf himself. Suddenly he realized. The phonograph! It was hurling forth nasal decibals by the million, The Ride of the Valkyrie. The room was full of it; there was space for no other sound. He stepped over and strangled the instrument. "There's a blackout!" he shouted once more.

"But there hasn't been any alarm," the two Millers said.

"But there has," he screamed.

"We didn't hear it." They were following him about now, dazed and plaintively protestant, as he strode here and there, snapping out lights. The lights were all of extraordinarily high voltage; and as he pulled at cords, snapped levers and turned knobs, understanding was soft in his heart. These poor old people, with the dulled senses, still seeking sound, still seeking light!

He inspected their bedroom. Only one window; he covered it with a blanket. The room opened into the bathroom. Good; still better, the bathroom had only one small window; he blacked it out with the bath mat. He moved the phonograph into the bedroom, and shooed the old people in after it.

"Stay here till I come back," he commanded, seeking to keep his voice gentle while he must roar an inch from their ears.

that he had his two blocks really blacked out. Black were all the little cottages cowering under the treacherous sky; not a squeak of light, not a pin point from any.

He went into the backyards and inspected equipment, poking about in the darkness to see how well his teachings were being followed; checking on the pails of water, the buckets of sand, the long-handled shovel, and the garden hose attached to the faucet. They were all so docile and so good, those wards of his. And yet hoses stretched across lawns like snakes, detached from their faucets. Where there were buckets of sand, there were apt to be no pails of water; where there were pails of water, there might be no buckets of sand. There were even yards without the super official and sacred longhandle shovel.

Rummaging about in the little dark yards, he felt a bit like a ragpicker, and the depression that had been with him earlier was settling back on him heavily. Suddenly he quit all this and stood up straight. "Last time," he protested again in the silence, "I was sitting on top of the world."

By "LAST TIME" he meant the war of 1914-18. He had been a war correspondent in that one — in France with the A.E.F. He had worn an officer's uniform. In big swift cars he had streaked across the backswirl of battles. He had consorted with the mighty. He had tasted deep, in Paris, of the city's hectic war-time life. A magic expense account had given him luxury, mobility, and permitted him flamboyant gestures.

To balance this, he had plunged into periods of hardship and peril, of solidarity with the doughboy's heavy load. At Cantigny he had gone over the top and come back with a wounded boy; he had followed the supports of Saint Mihiel for miles; during the Argonne he had lived in village cellars being blasted above, curled up in shell holes under barrages. After it was all over, looking back at it, he had come to a conclusion. "Gee!" he had said to himself, "I was sitting on top of the world then!"

they had sneaked by! Three years ago he had come to El Sueno-by-the-Sea to write his novel — the novel that every good newspaper man means to write some day.

It had not gone very well, that novel. For one thing, the whole world was beginning to shake again; reading his paper in the morning, (he read the papers now, where once he had written them) he would feel his heart beating faster. It had turned a complete somersault one September! War! War was back again! Back again the chance to live dangerously and splendidly! He saw himself once more in uniform, under bomb and shell streaking across battle fields. The cars, the freedom, the excitement, the flaming living!

He waited quietly for the telegrams, the summons that soon—he was sure of it—would come; the offers from great publications that remembered what he had done last time.

But there was nothing; no telegrams, no offers. Pocketing his pride, he sent out queries — guarded at first, then direct, then vehement. Something queer was up. The answers, courteous but evasive, seemed touched with secret amusement. He was being given the runaround!

But why? The answer came to him accidentally. He was reading an item in the paper telling of a newspaper-man who was going to the war as correspondent in spite of his age. The age was thirty-four. "Hell, I was forty when I went off on the last one!" Bill exclaimed aloud. And suddenly realized that he had his answer. Forty and twenty-seven made sixty-seven.

Thus it was that tonight, in the biggest war of all time, he found himself Air Raid Warden of Blocks B3 and B4, Addition Five, El Suenoby-the-Sea.

A level cry from the siren broke his cheerless reverie. "All Clear," he growled without joy. "Another false alarm!" If only a bomb would drop now and then he might feel better over his job. So far, every blackout had been like this one. Fruitless.

He walked over to the Millers' to tell them about the all clear, and found them asleep. He went to Miss Compton's and, mouth against her door, called out, "All clear, Miss Compton!" Her gently cracked voice answered, "I heard the siren, Mr. Barbour - thank you!" He stood at his garden gate, irresolute. The village was not awakening from its frightened torpor; or rather, with the night so far advanced, it was sagely awaiting morning to do so. Here and there a small light flashed up, but almost immediately went out, as El Sueno-by-the-Sea sank back into secrecy, silence and darkness.

But a restlessness was in Bill Barbour. He strolled off down his lane, toward the sea.

AT THE end of the lane he came upon the way that wound along the top of the cliffs, and which the village called its Scenic Drive. He crossed it, came to the edge of the cliff, and slid down to the beach. There was a rock there that he knew. The elements had carved it into a kind of armchair. Bill found the rock and sank into its rough comfort. The sky above, now that the alert was over, had put on an air of bland innocence. From the indistinct mass of darkness to the west, smooth waves detached themselves and came flowing to the shore. Some two or three hundred yards out, he could see some sort of black mass on the somberly lucent waters — a reef, he decided.

He brooded on what had happened to him:

That he had come to that point in life when his own country, in its great crisis, contemptuously found him useless! "El-Sueno-bythe-Sea," he muttered bitterly.

But that black mass out there on the sea! It occurred to him that there couldn't be a reef there. He knew the bay well. Until a year ago, when that crick in his back had stopped him, he had swum its waters daily. Since then, he often walked the cliffs. He knew there was no reef there.

He stood up to see better and made a curious observation. The waves were not big tonight; but even then a reef like that, anchored to the bottom, should alternately be awash as the swells passed it, or rearing nakedly as their troughs went rubbing by. But nothing like that was taking place. That deeper blackness on the black waters was ever constant. "It doesn't change," he thought, "it's something that floats!"

develop before his straining eyes The black mass was giving birth! By scission! Out of its flank a small black splotch was detaching itself, like a drop of ink from a fountain pen. Soon a vagueness of sea surface was showing between the two. It grew. That small splotch was going away from the bigger mass; it was floating toward the shore.

BILL asked no more. He dropped to the sand, crawled to the cliff, and started up its side. His head was just emerging at the top, on a level with the Drive, when a sound of tires hissing on gravel froze him immobile. A big dark sedan with doused lights was coming slowly along the drive. It slid by, not more than a yard from his attentive nose, and stopped there, in the deeper shadow.

Bill dropped back to the beach, retreated till he thought he was far enough, climbed the cliff once more, crossed the Scenic Drive on all fours; then, behind the shelter of the houses, scooted up a lane to his cottage and his telephone. He dialed

Police, and then said "Hey, Roy" to Roy Machado, Chief of Police of El Sueno-by-the Sea. "How many men you got with you?"

"My whole force. Three."

"How about the Specials?" speaking of the volunteer force which the careful police chief had formed after Pearl Harbor.

"I can get them together in five

"Okay. Bring everybody down, even the lads of the Fire Department, and the Red Cross ambulance! There's something on. Objective, a big black sedan parked against the wall of the Donohue place, on Scenic. I'll hold things till you get here. But

A SMALL twenty-two rifle was hanging within arm reach, and he took it down.

It was a successor to the doublebarreled twelve-gauge that he had

Ten years ago hunting, with that shotgun, he had terribly botched a shot at a dove; for a moment the dying bird had lain in his palm, a warm palpitation, and he had sworn that for the rest of his life he would never harm another living thing.

Since then he had hunted with the twenty-two rifle - shooting at far stones, at twigs and leaves, at tops of trees. But now it was with some alacrity that he took down the

He got back to the Drive and peered around the corner. The sedan was still there, silent in the shadow inst the wall; but when he looked out over the water, he could see nothing of the black object that he had taken for a reef; it had vanished completely.

Neither could he find, at first, the small spot which had been drifting toward the beach. His eyes quickly caught that one, however. It was ashore now, and two dim figures were rising out of it like jacks-inthe-box.

They stepped out into the shallows and drew the boat, a little rubber one, well up the beach. They bent down into it, and when they straightened up each had a long

They disappeared under the overhang of the cliff.

Then, suddenly, Bill saw them again as they topped the cliff, crossed the Drive and stopped at the black sedan.

One of the sedan doors swung open, and between the invisible occupants within and the two outside, there rumbled a short exchange of guttural speech.

"Deutschers!" Bill thought, pleased with his discovery. "Japs landing Nazis on our coast!"

The two outside were sliding their long boxes into the car. Bill was straining his ears — for sounds of a chief-of-police and his men, and his specials and a fire department and an ambulance. But the silence was profound. He gave a little sigh.

He knelt, pressed his rifle against his shoulder and aimed long and carefully.

He pulled the trigger, and in the narrow wake of the small gun's light explosion, he heard with satisfaction the long sigh of a well-punctured tire. He aimed again, once more pulled the trigger, and once more listened with childish delight to the deflation of a second tire.

But from the black sedan, immobile, silent as if palsied by the nature of this attack, something like a snake spat out at him. A red streak of fiery pain shot through his right thigh, and a sudden shock flung him around and hurled him to the

He lay there, stubbornly clutching at a spark of consciousness, while wave after wave of black rolled over him.

The sedan was trying to go. It was coming grotesquely toward him, bucking like a camel.

Through the waves of blackness he was now faintly aware of the blaring of sirens, of a shrieking of brakes, of the deep throbbing of a big engine halted close by, of a tattoo of hurrying feet. Figures like mannikins were being dragged out of the sedan...

It was a good thing he had told Roy about the ambulance. He was in it, now, stretched out on a cot, speeding.

He could see Doc Winslow crouched at his side, looking at a watch and holding his wrist.

The thick haze that enveloped him was not unpleasant. Through it, abruptly, a clear thought appeared:

"Doc. Doc Winslow -

"Sh-sh-sh. Don't talk."

"Doc, I'm sitting on top of the world again."

to the tanks, jeeps and half-tracks our front-line troops are using in their victory smash. Called a clubmobile, it also uses a new kind of ammunition: coffee and doughnuts. Manned by pretty girls in Red Cross uniforms, clubmobiles are rolling around to G.I.'s in North Africa, Australia, England and are ready to go to any new major front.

In Africa, 10 clubmobile girls—two to a truck—meet troop trains en route to the front, flyers back from combat missions, isolated gun crews. Typical comment of Yanks who haven't seen American girls in months: "Am I slap-happy—or do you see what I see?"

Started in England

THE girls' day stretches from dawn to midnight. They live with French families in near-by villages, breakfast at the town Army mess, load up their clubmobiles with thermos jugs and fresh doughnuts.

Red Cross clubmobiles were introduced in England. The first one was a converted English bus. The British models carry their own doughnut-making machines—and a phonograph to give soldiers music with their meals.

One Air Corps group commander said it for all his colleagues: "It's up here at the front where we have to dispense with the extras that visits from the clubmobile gals really count."

THE SOAP WITH THE FRAGRANCE MEN LOVE

1. She begins by opening clean-out door and removing dust ash

That's what experts say you can save next winter — if you adjust and repair your furnace before cold weather comes. It's easy to do: Watch this young housewife play plumber!

Well, it's not hard to get. For heating engineers estimate that the average family throws away one of the 10 tons of coal it burns annually. And a few simple corrections made by the man of the house — or lady, for that matter — will save that 10 per cent.

The time to start, naturally, is while the heater is idle. Briefly, here are the principal things heating engineers recommend:

First of all, clean out the heating plant thoroughly. Ash or dust accumulates inside the furnace and smoke pipe and wastes coal by insulating interior surfaces and making it difficult for them to absorb heat. You can do the work yourself with a few tools: a metal furnace scraper, a long-handled brush, a flashlight.

Every heater has a clean-out door (maybe several) directly above the firing door. This is where dust accumulates, so the initial step is to open the clean-out door and, with your scraper, push back the dust and soot so it falls into the fire pot below. Then stick your flue brush in and brush clean the interior surfaces. Or use a vacuum cleaner with a hose attachment.

Order Now!

RUNNING from the rear of the heater to the chimney is another point of ash accumulation: the smoke pipe. It's no trick to remove the pipe, dumping the stuff inside it into a pail or basket, then brushing it out with your brush. If you notice that the pipe is corroded or perforated, order a new one right away.

With this easy cleaning job out of the way, the second important detail is to check for leaks — a serious cause of coal waste. They are most likely to occur around casting and pipe joints, around the base of the heater, around doors or smoke-pipe and chimney connections. Go over these surfaces with a lighted candle; if the flame is sucked into the furnace, you've found a leak. With a little cement from the hardware store, you can readily make repairs.

Another source of trouble is the warping of grates and fire doors or ashpit doors. Check carefully to see if the grates work hard or are broken; if doors don't fit snugly, you can't hope to get a perfect draft, and you should replace the parts.

If your furnace has a humidifier, remove any incrustations which may have formed inside. For a steam or hot-water system, drain the boiler to rid it of scale. But be sure to refill the boiler immediately: don't put it off until later.

If you do all these things you'll save yourself money and help win the war too.

3 Average-Good Meals + 2 Glasses of Ovaltine Give the Normal Person All the Extra Vitamins and Minerals He Can Use

Millions of people know how important it is to take extra vitamins and minerals every day. So we want to emphasize this point: Ovaltine is one of the richest sources of vitamins and minerals in the world.

In fact, if you just drink 2 glasses of Ovaltine a day—and eat three average-good meals including fruit juice—you get all the vitamins and minerals you need. All you can profitably use according to experts—unless you're really sick and should be under a doctor's care.

So why worry about vitamins and minerals? Rely on Ovaltine to give you all the extra vitamins and minerals you can use—along with its many other well-known benefits. Just follow this recipe for better health . . .

3 GOOD MEALS A DAY + OVALTINE

A mule kicked him off the Chicago Cubs

TARGE Louis (Bobo) Newsom throws a baseball and a line of oratory, both fast, for a living. He pitched his way into the hearts of Brooklyn fans last spring with nine fine victories for the Dodgers—and then talked himself right out of town.

Much of this conversation centered around a dropped third strike which cost the Dodgers a game Newsom was pitching against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Bobby Bragan, Newsom's catcher, said he dropped that ball because he was expecting a fast ball, for which he'd signaled—while Newsom threw something else, a spitball.

"I aimed a fast ball," argued Bobo. "'Course, I was pitchin' hard, an' a drop of perspiration might have made it seem like a spitball—"

Quickly perspiration turned to exasperation, Newsom had a battle with Dodger Manager Leo Durocher, and was traded to the St. Louis Browns. This was nothing new to Bobo—he's talked himself off six big-league teams,

In 1932, Phil Wrigley, Chicago Cub owner, had just bought Bobo, and Bobo wanted to see Wrigley and explain that the purchase included the National League pennant. Speeding to Chicago, Newsom skidded off the road in his car, hit a tree and broke his leg. He went home, encased the leg in a cast, and

wrote Wrigley enthusiastic letters describing how he was keeping in shape running five miles a day and doing calisthenics.

He still pitches - and talks - a good game

Cub Boss Cools Off

The leg had almost mended and Bobo, on crutches, went to a mule sale near his home. A fractious mule kicked him on the same leg and broke it again. This time he had to tell Mr. Wrigley. The Cub boss was sympathetic, but hardly enthusiastic about his new pitcher.

But adversity never bothered Bobo. He's adept at turning bad luck into a good story. In 1935, pitching for Washington and going nowhere, Ol' Bobo was in the fourth inning of a game with Cleveland when Earl Averill blazed a drive off his knee cap.

Bobo writhed on the pitching mound but the crowd, used to his histrionics, just laughed. Angered by the taunts, Bobo finished the game and staggered into the dressing room. "I've got a broken leg, men," he announced dramatically.

He had, too. His smashed kneecap was in a cast for five weeks.

Ossie Shut Him Up

While Bobo was pitching for Washington, his own third baseman, Ossie Bluege, fielded a bunt—and hit Newsom on the jaw with his throw. Though his jaw was broken, Newsom finished that game too. It was the only time Bobo was ever speechless.

In 1941, the Detroit Tigers paid him $32,500 — the top pitcher's salary in baseball history. He lost 20 games, more than any other pitcher in the big leagues. "Other guys gotta win games to get paid," he chuckled, "but they even gotta pay Ol' Bobo for losin' 'em!"

Joe Cronin, Boston Red Sox manager, traded Newsom "before he drives me crazy." Joe was near that fate because of a bevy of pet Newsom rabbits, which ate rugs and draperies in his Boston hotel room while the Red Sox were on a road trip.

Branch Rickey, baseball's No. 1 master-mind, "wouldn't take Newsom as a gift" when he was head of the St. Louis Cardinals. Rickey moved to the Dodgers and found Bobo already there. "Aha," said Newsom. "You wouldn't take me at St. Louis but now I will take you!" He took Rickey for plenty in the pay-check department.

After losing 39 games in two seasons, Newsom was regarded as all washed up this year. But Bobo has a gift for pulling the unexpected. There's one thing about Ol' Bobo — you may like him or dislike him, but you'll never overlook him! — HAROLD PARROTT

BACK THE ATTACK WITH WAR BONDS

ARCHIE IS WILLIN'

GUESS you would call Archie a hobo. Or maybe a common bum.

Archie opened the back door screen a few nights ago an' waited till I looked around.

"Fond greetings, my good fellow!" says Archie. "Do you suppose, with the proper references, I might find some simple chore by which I could establish a credit to be expended in foods of high nourishment but low ration value?"

"Who th' devil are you?" is all I can think of to say. That's all th' openin' he needs. He enters, with dignity an' plenty of selfconfidence.

"Just call me by my Christian name — Archibald, sometimes shortened to Archie by my intimates," Archie orates, scratchin' himself between gestures.

"Well. Archie," I say back to him, "there's forty pounds o' potatoes that need undressin'—but go in there an' wash first. An' peel them spuds thin."

Archie looks like he is disappointed in me. I can't tell whether he hates th' idea of washin', or th' idea of peelin' th' potatoes, but you could tell I had hurt his feelin's.

But he swallows his pride and goes in the washroom to tidy up. He comes out a couple of minutes later somewhat wetter, if no cleaner, an' takes up th' parin' knife with no signs of relish whatever.

"The domestic arts are somewhat out of my line," explains Archie. "I am, by profession, a traveler, an observer of what goes on in the hearts an' the minds of men. I see rising in this fair land certain social trends which cause me to be alarmed!

"In my travels I once came across a statue called the 'Pioneer Mother.' There she stood, children at her skirts, musket in hand, ready to protect her sacred hearth...

"What do I see today?" Archie asks, shakin' his head.

"In my short span of fifty-odd years, women have abandoned th' home. They are today armed with riveting guns, they are in Wac uniforms, they sit at the desks of yesterday's kings of commerce!"

"Why, Archie," I answers him, "we need more women workers, more Wacs an' Waves an' Marines an' nurses an' all — they're helpin' th' soldiers an' sailors win the war."

"Well," Archie says, "I am not one to question the needs of this nation — or to doubt the skill an' initiative of the fair sex — which is beyond my understanding.

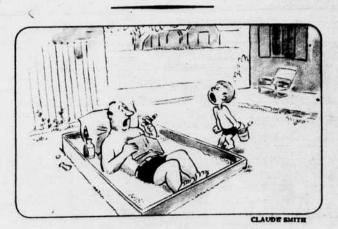

"What I fear is that in my postwar travels, to which I look forward with some interest, a housewife of that time will put me to doing the family wash to earn my small repast. That, sir, would be a more crushing blow than having to pare these tubers!"

So I let Archie off with a dime's worth of work an' a quarter's worth of hamburger. But I kept thinkin' about that pioneer woman—an' these gals doin' today's war work, a lot of it men's work, too.

"Archie," I said, when he started away, "maybe they're goin' to crowd us men right into complete idleness!"

"My sense of chivalry," says Archie with a blissful smile, "would prevent me from raising a hand to protest any such event!"

WAR TIME

It's the patriotic thing to do - and it's polite, too . . .

by Emily Post

ODAY I must write about table manners. The reasons are three: Most important, our Government is asking us all to "clean our plates" in order to conserve food, and has requested further suggestions from me. My second reason is closely related to this the past summer's rash of articles and pictures advocating back-tofingers table manners as a wartime food-saving measure. Finally, there are letters from men at camp, asking about table manners.

POOD-SAVING MANNERS: Clean your plate! Eating every morsel of food on your plate is not contrary to etiquette - and never was! The old phrase "leaving a bit for manners" neant that there should be an extra bit on the serving dish. But today we certainly could not be asked to provide an extra chop, for instance. Rationing determines our manners in this

On the other hand backto-fingers manners may not only be bad but wasteful

instead of frugal. Eating chop or chicken bones in the fingers might be a maneuver of last resort in a restaurant where portions are said to be dwindling and every last mouthful has to be eaten if you are not to go hungry. But at home there is little excuse for picking up bones in the fingers. Less now than ever beunder wartime rationing, those bones make valuable soup. The conscientious carver cuts all the meat as close to the bone as he can and serves bones to no one. All bones are set aside on a clean plate and after the meal they are broken apart and put into the soup pot. That is 100 per cent saving.

SCORE OTHER IDEAS that I have seen advised recently have really no justification: for example, pushing a soft bit of bread with the fingers bmerged in the middle of a plate full of food; dunking a slice of toast thick; pouring coffee back from the sucer to the cup.

Yet sopping bread into gravy can be done properly if you put a piece down on the gravy and then eat it with knife and fork, as though it were any other helping on your plate. And while dunking with wide, face-smearing result is bad, dunking a narrow strip is not objectionable.

But as for pouring coffee back from the saucer to the cup, it is incredible that any meticulous person could want to do this. Certainly he or she would not drink so sloppily as to dribble the saucer full of coffee in the first place. In a train, or plane, or trailer, whose joltings spill the coffee over the rim of the cup, the best method is to pour no more than half a cupful at a time. In restaurants or cafeterias where coffee is served right in the cup, the management might put on a save-toserve campaign among the waiters. It wouldn't take any more time and would be a courtesy.

PROSE THE ARMY: A lieutenant asks: "When you are eating with fork-prongs up, may you then pick up the knife in left hand and use it as a barrier to push against? (Objection to bread pusher? - it gets soggy!)"

In answer to this: The knife used as a pusher is proper - if properly held. Held in the left hand in the same position as it is held in the right hand when cutting, and with the tip of the blade helping to guide and hold each mouthful securely for the fork to lift, the knife is not even noticed by most people. Another way is to hold the whole length of the blade, sharp edge down, as a barrier across the plate and push the food against it with the fork - unostentatiously.

These two questions are from a sergeant: (1) Is it O.K. to tuck the corner of the napkin into the shirt front? (2) Is a chain, with clips on it, to go around neck and clip napkin correct? A friend sent it.

IN ANSWER: (1) The conventional ruling is NO. The practical answer is that it would be better than having spots on your shirt. (2) This also might be a handy way to avoid spots. But it does suggest the nursery rather than the Army.

Questions from trainees are concerned with things like toothpicks. It would be silly in the extreme to object to toothpicks in the Army. It is even necessary that the preservation of men's teeth be rated above mere nicety.

This does not mean that I myself qualify nicety as "mere." On the contrary, nicety seems more important to me than ever men ask so many questions about table manners. A colonel in the Regular Army explains their interest thus:

"The men's interest in table manners has suddenly become very real. Because nice behavior means home! They didn't care - or even notice - much when they were home, but now the ways of the womenfolk take on a new perspective."

Cover Girl tells _

"How I really do Stop Underarm Perspiration and Odor

"My job calls for glamour!" says lovely FRANCES DONELON

"I've been 'Cover Girl' many times on big national magazines. But first, I had to learn how to stay 'picture-lovely' under wilting photographer's lights," says intriguing Frances Donelon.

"I had to find a deodorant that really kept my underarms dry. And didn't ruin the expensive clothes I model in. I found it in Odorono Cream!

"Here's the reason . . . it contains a really effective perspiration stopper that simply closes the tiny underarm sweat glands and keeps them closed up to 3 days!

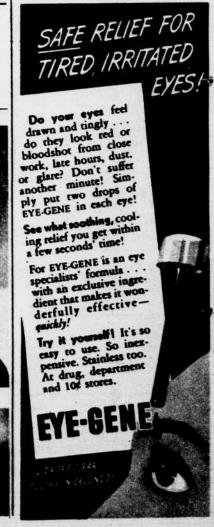

"It's safe, too - even after shaving and with lovely, delicate fabrics. I just follow directions. I like to use it every day.

"And you actually get up to 21 more applications for 39¢ than other leading deodorants give.

"I wish every girl who is concerned about her personal dainti-ness would try this wonderful Cover-Girl formula for glamour —Odorono Cream."

The beans are a nearly perfect food

MEET THE SOY!

Try the new tasty products of this versatile, nutritious bean

by Clementine Paddleford

That mighty little bean, the soy, is on its way to changing the food habits of the nation. The grocery store of the future will be crammed with soy foods. Soy items are moving out of the food-fad class, out of the health stores into regular grocery channels to play an important role in everyday dining.

This potent versatile bean may be eaten, fresh or canned, as a green vegetable. The dry bean may be soaked, boiled, then baked to use in a score of new dishes. Dry soys can be made to sprout into a new "miracle" food containing large quantities of nutritious proteins plus Vitamin C. The beans can be processed to provide low-cost substitutes for meat, eggs, cheese, cereal, milk and fats. Soy products in one form or another can be added to step up the nutritive value of everything on the menu from soup to ice cream.

In Flour, Grits, Cereals

WAR brought soy to blossom in America's food field. Now soy yields its first grocery shelf harvest on a nationwide scale. Soy flour goes into national distribution next month. Soy grits are ready. A soy-flour pancake mix is in the batter crocks. A ready-prepared flaked soy cereal cascades from box to breakfast bowl. Soy crackers march across the counter - salty, delectable. Soyburgers, made half and half with soy grits and chopped meat, are being sold in numerous cities to replace the royal hamburger. Shredded and toasted soy appears on candies and cakes, as a new kind of coconut. Soy beans are toasted, salted and sold to fill up the nut bowls. Soy, ground and roasted, makes a rich brown brew. Newest member of the spaghetti clan boasts a soy base. Commercial bakers are turning out battalions of soy breads, cookies and cakes. Table varieties of soy were the show-off vegetables in Victory gardens this year.

Farmers have known soy since the turn of the century as a forage crop to be used for hay, silage, soiling and pasturage. Later, soybean oilmeal came into prominence as an excellent food for livestock. Private industry looked deep into the little bean and found manifold uses. Soy was made to produce paints, plastics, printer's ink, explosives, lubricants — over a hundred products in all.

A "Staff of Life"

And it is a near-perfect food, one which for 5,000 years has been the "staff of life" to the Orient. But American cooks looked down a long nose at the wee soy. Now a shortage of proteins changes their minds.

Here is a food unrationed that has a nutritive value equivalent to, and even greater than, other dried beans. It is lower in carbohydrates, it is higher in protein, higher in fat. Soy flour, grits and flakes have 40 to 50 per cent of a protein which some nutritionists claim to be as complete in the essential amino acids as meat and milk. Soy products with a low or medium fat content contain the most protein. Full-fat soy flour, although lower in proteins, contains 20 per cent of readily digestible fat. Every soy product boasts significant amounts of three important B vitamins - the B1, G and niacin. Analysis of the soy bean reads like a nutritionist's dream - even an artificial milk can be made from soy flour and water, a drink suitable for infants allergic to the milk of the cow.

Began With Last War

WORLD War One brought soy to the American kitchen. It came in disguise as one of the clarified, deodorized vegetable oils used in salad dressings and various shortenings

Soy in its natural state has a bitter taste. We didn't like it, only the health faddists gave soy the nod. Say soy and noses tiptilted, despite the fact that edible varieties had been imported and improved for color, flavor and quick shelling. Most of the food manufacturers steered clear of the bean despite new curing methods which cast out the devil taste.

War demands for Army and lend-lease feeding spurred the soy millers to double and triple production and perfect their technique. Today millions of pounds of soy flour and grits go to our war partners to help stretch diminished rations. Now the processors, getting ahead on government orders, have surplus stocks to offer to home tables. Pantry doors fling

Soy flour is basically a protein food, not a starchy flour like that made from wheat. Mix soy flour with wheat flour and the protein value of bread is materially increased. If no more than three or five per cent is used, the bread still tastes and looks like the usual white loaf. But soy flour may be added up to 25 per cent for specialty breads, muffins and

Mix the flour with pancake flour and one griddle cake will be as rich in protein as two of all wheat. Combine the flour with split peas, milk, onions and other seasonings for a soup as protein-rich as a piece of beefsteak.

Like Corn Meal

THE grocers are stocking soy grits, that is the bean meal which is similar to corn meal in color, size and granule, and as easily used. Grits prove a natural stretcher for meat. For example, mix onefourth pound of grits with threefourths pound of ground meat and it gives a pound loaf eight per cent higher in protein than a loaf all meat; and the cost is less. But don't think you can turn the soy flour into a beefsteak or a lamb chop oozing sweet juices. Vegetable proteins have a neutral flavor that sampled alone has no meat taste whatsoever.

Grits may be used to fortify breakfast cereals. A dish of oatmeal fortified with 20 per cent soy grits gives you as much protein as the same dish filled with oatmeal plus a scrambled egg on the side. Grits added to soup in place of barley or rice give a nutritional punch to the bowl. Let grits team with wheat flour in waffles and quick breads.

Dried soy beans show up in the grocery bins. Cooked, these have a richer, more nut-like flavor than other members of the beany tribe. In their table preparation soys are treated like other beans except for longer cooking time, this because of their lower starch content. Cooked beans may be used for loaves, soufflés, croquettes and innumerable sandwich spreads.

Field soy beans can be sprouted in a kitchen flower pot. Up pops a Victory vegetable so rich in vitamin C and protein that nutritionists at Cornell University are convinced the sprouts can substitute for meat, fresh vegetables and even for citrus juice in a pinch.

Harvest in Four Days

A SPROUT garden requires neither soil nor sunshine. It needs darkness and water. It grows with the rapidity of Jack's beanstalk, four to five days after planting and the harvest is ready. When the soy sprout is two inches in length, much of the bean itself still re-

It's bean plus sprout which is cooked and eaten. Quick cooking, that's the thing. Ten to 20 minutes, just long enough to remove the raw taste. Sprouts are chewy in texture, crisp and waxy like the peanut. Good sautéed, tasty when steamed and served with a sour sauce. Combine them with various vegetables in casseroles and stews. The crispy texture makes the sprout a welcome and tasteful addition to raw salads. Soy sprouts are happily at home in chow mein. Or fry them with diced bacon for a luncheon dish.

CLOWLY Minga Allen struggled back to consciousness. Life itself was now a nightmare, with drunken Hessians overrunning New York, and hated rebels lurking in the countryside!

She had to get away! Family, fortune, honor - everything had been swept away by the Revolution! Her only hope was to get to Jamaica, and the fabulous Aunt Adelina whom she had never seen.

But how could she reach Jamaica in wartime, with British men-o'-war hounding the sea lanes, and American frigates skulking along the capes?

Did Andrew Know Who She WAS?

Then fate brought her devil-may-care Andrew Warren - unwanted by his own Navy, masquerading as a Tory at the risk of the hangman's noose. He thought he knew about Minga. He refused to have her aboard his ship. But she sailed with him just the same!

LT. COMDR. STOCKTON B. STRONG

Holder of the Air Medal, the Navy Cross and a Gold Star in lieu of a second Navy Cross, Comdr. Strong is a veteran of two major air-sea engagements in the Pacific. He won his first Navy Cross as a flight lieutenant for raids on Japanese shippina in Tulagi Harbor, Solomon Islands, May 4, 1942, and in the battle of the Coral Sea May 7 and 8. His action in the battle of Santa Cruz Islands, October 26, 1942, brought the Gold Star citation. Here, while on patrol, his radio reported that a group of Japanese aircraft carriers had been spotted. Though the ships were miles from his own, and an attack might mean running out of fuel, he led his section to the enemy. Eluding defending fighter planes, he dived and scored a direct hit on the flight deck of one of the carriers.

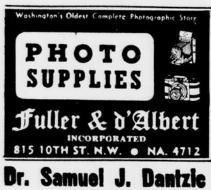

Comdr. Strong is the son of Mrs. C. B. Strong of 3440 Thirty-fourth place N.W., and attended Western High School and Devitt Preparatory School. He was graduated from Annapolis in 1937, earned his wings at Pensacola, Fla., and has spent most of his active duty at sea.

Turning Back the Clock

A WARTIME shortage of linen thread has caused the clock of production methods to turn back several generations in Redmond, a community near Seattle, Wash. Government needs cut off the supply of machine-made thread used by four women weavers of fine linen bed covers, table cloths, napkins and curtains. They still are carrying on with their weaving, but are processing the flax from field to table cloth by old-fashioned hand methods. The weavers found a farmer with a field of flax going to waste for lack of an immediate market. They bought the field, harvested it, and stored two tons of flax. Today their homes resound with the pounding of the brack, the hum of the spinning wheel and the click of the loom.

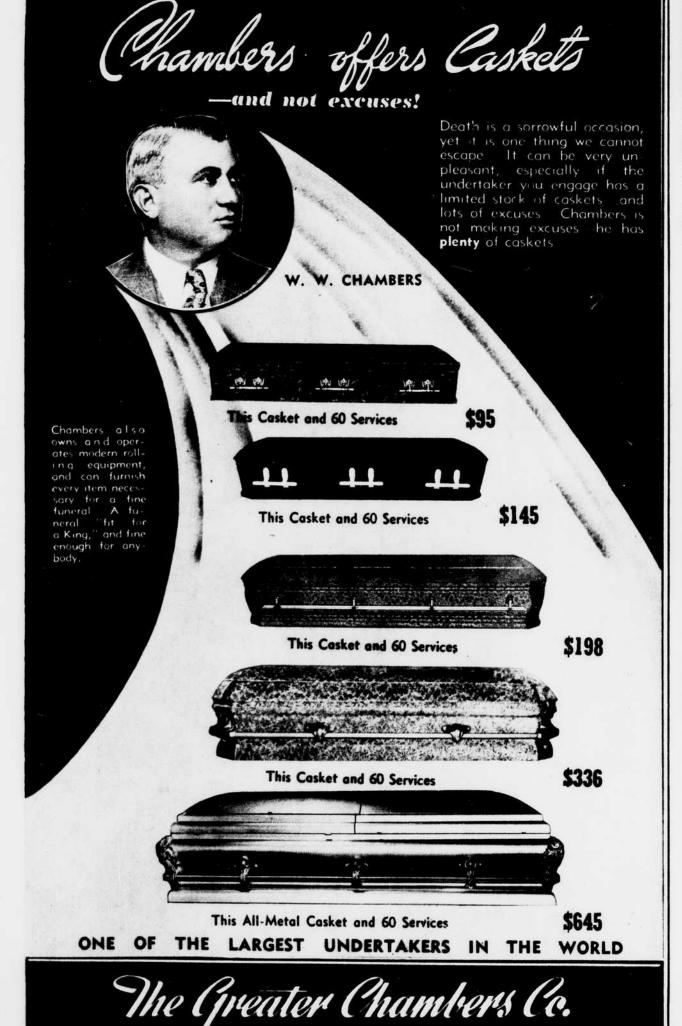

The four weavers, Mrs. Ole Wicklund, Mrs. Grace S. Gaudy, Mrs. Ole Pearson and Mrs. Regina Olson, are processing the harvested flax. Three are pounding flax in dragas and bracks, while the fourth is pulling separated fiber

1898_RELIEF of pain

1898 - over a century after Auenbrugger's discovery of "Percussion"-is famous for another triumph in the war against suffering and pain. For a group of brilliant scientists discovered a relief from headaches, painful discomforts of colds, and muscular aches and pains...maladies which cause even more suffering and more loss of time than do all the serious diseases combined. They discovered Aspirin. Whenever men of medicine fight suffering and pain, Bayer Aspirin is trusted not just for dependability, but for the rapid relief it brings. So for relief that's reliable and also swift, ask for Bayer Aspirin by its full name. And be sure the tablets you buy are stamped "BAYER"-the famous name in Aspirin.

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF HEADACHES

The next time that a headache comes, take 2 Bayer Aspirin Tablets with a little water. Relief starts almost instantly. Economical to use. Try Bayer Aspirin, also, for the speedy relief of mus-cular, neuralgic and neuritic aches and pains.

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

In 2 to 3 seconds after a Bayer Aspirin Tablet touches water, it is disintegrated and ready to start work. That's what happens in your stomach when you take Bayer Aspirin.
