Pentagon Saving U. S. Yearly, Army Claims

By NELSON M. SHEPARD. In anticipation of a threatened congressional expose of "unauthorized" expenditures in completing the Pentagon project, the War Department last night claimed that the huge building in Arlington County, Va., is saving the Government $4,288,698 yearly in rental of office such space had been available.

On that basis, an official news release stated, the Pantagon Building "will pay for itself in 8 to 14 years."

Representative Engel, Republican, of Michigan, who had charged that the Pentagon project already has exceeded its $35,000,000 authorized cost by $51,000,000, said last night he intends to present the House with "a complete breakdown" of all its costs in another week.

Aside from the claim of rent saving, the War Department added to its statement that it is "returning $667,780 of the appropriations for the Pentagon." No explanation accompanied it.

Officials said the figure was taken from a report made December 23 by the chief of Army engineers. The only direct appropriation for the Pentagon project made by Congress was the original $35,000,000 The balance used in completing the project came from various emergency funds of the War Department. Engel's Estimate 86 Million.

LONDON, Jan. 22.-Lt. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz said today that, weather permitting, the German air force is likely to be knocked out during the summer, and he disclosed that American bombing operations now are limited only by weather, with no limitation due to a shortage of planes, crews or facilities.

The newly named commander of the United States Strategic (long range) Air Forces for the two-way heavy bombardment campaign against Germany revealed that the United States Army Air Forces now is large enough so that it can and does bomb every day that flying conditions permit.

In his first press conference since assuming his new command, Gen. Spaatz also revealed that shuttle bombing between Britain and recently captured bases in Italy might play an important part in the campaign

Preliminary to Invasion.

Destruction of the German air force often has been cited by Allied air leaders as a prime objective preliminary to the critical destruction of German war resources and to the Allied invasion from the west.

"Given the same sort of weather we had in the Mediterranean, I do not think the German air force would last very long," Gen. Spaatz said.

"Do you anticipate in the summer, presuming we have reasonable weather, that the German air force can be pretty well knocked out. given reasonable weather."

HE learned how to give the stones depth and hody by cutting them "facet-wise" underneath so the eye could catch the bright flashes of light coming through a broad face of "table" on top. Thus the "rose-cut" was originated about 1500.

N the 17th Century, the "brilliant" cut was invented, the shape now seen in engagement rings. There are many designs, but in all the artisan strives to get the myriad facets at the exact point to bring out the flashing light and color.

To assure this, Allied heavy bombers today attacked railroad yards at Arezzo, Peruggia, Terni and Pontevorvo. The first three are 100, 80 and 50 miles north of Rome, while Pontecorvo is one of the points on the "Adolf Hitler" line, 6 miles behind the "Gustav line" fighting front. Still further to seal off the 10th Army from the scene of the Rome coast landings, heavy bombers also attacked the road defile at Terracina on the coast below the landings.

Firm establishment of the beachheads below Rome was apparently far easier than at Salerno last Sepember, and allowed a quick drive

The secret of the success apparently was close co-ordination with the new ground offensive and the uninterrupted Allied air onslaught. While the big fleet of landing craft, escorted by American, British, Greek, Dutch and French warships, moved in toward the beaches before dawn this morning, the 5th Army erupted all along its front to the southeast in a furious all-out as-

By J. A. O'LEARY. Secretary of War Stimson told Congress yesterday it would interfere with "effective prosecution of the war" to give mail priority to State ballots for servicemen for use in primaries extending from February to October, and in the November election. Unless there is a last-minute change in sentiment, however, the House is expected to pass this week the Senate-approved State-ballot plan, in preference to a simplified uniform Federal ballot confined to voting for President, Senators and Representatives. The State ballots would cover both national and State tickets. The Secretary's comment was made in a letter to Chairman Worley of the House Elections Committee who said, nevertheless, he would offer his bill for a uniform Federal ballot, with permissive use of State ballots, as an amendment to the State ballot bill.

Advocates of the uniform Federal ballot also received a set-back last night, when Senator Taft, Republican, of Ohio expressed a fear that use of such a voting procedure in place of the regulation State ballots "might throw the whole election into "might throw the whole election into a legal tail-spin" growing out of ganizations are sponsoring a fleet

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 22.-An American Federation of Labor committee today urged labor representation on all national delegations with a voice in shaping the postwar world and said that to limit such bodies to Government officials seems "highly undemocratic."

The AFL's Postwar Planning Committee, headed by Vice President Matthew Woll, made public the first section of a report on which the Federation Executive Council will act next week. Another proposal made by the committee is that labor attaches be assigned to the staffs of United States Ambassadors and Ministers.

Asserting that this is a war against despotism which gains initial control by destroying free unions, the report said that "wage earners, therefore, have a very fundamental reason in asking for representation on the various agencies deciding postwar issues and poli-

"To assure democracy and freedom, to seek progress for ourselves and the whole of this Nation and other democratic nations, we assert that the organized labor movement as represented by the AFL should have representation on all national delegations dealing with matters affecting postwar world organization and programs.

"Already conferences have been held to consider such questions as world food, world finance and refugees. That the conferences included only governmental officials seems to us highly undemocratic. We believe that there should be democratic representation in determining the future world agencies and their functions from the beginning, not after decisions have been crystallized."

Gen. Arnold Lauds Air Photography in Message to Society

Aerial photography laid the groundwork for the softening up of Japanese defenses, which, like those of Germany, are beginning to break. the ninth annual meeting of the American Society of Photogrammetry was told yesterday in the Vardman Park Hotel.

Credit for the work was given by en. H. H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces. He was to have presented the first Fairchild award to Lt. Col. Gerald FitzGerald for making maps from photographs. Because of his enforced absense, however, his message was read by Brig. Gen. James Bevans, assistant to Gen. Arnold in charge of personnel.

The Arnold speech also declared the Japanese have been reluctant to risk bringing large convoys and heavy ships in any numbers within the effective range of our airfields. Find Numerous Dead.

"We are just penetrating the outer barriers of her defense. When our ground forces recently advanced along the northern coast of New Guinea and reached Sio they found large numbers of the enemy dead of disease and starvation," Gen. Arnold

"There can be no better proof than that of the effectiveness of the air blockade established over the extended South and Southwest Pacific bases of the enemy," he another American with the RAF. said that Magdeburg "looked like it was really fixed up."

The Air Ministry said that the German high command was fooled into thinking that the bombers were headed for Berlin, and that the Germans threw up every available squadron of their air force to break up the attackers. The battle between the bombers and fighters raged from the coast to the target and back to the coast again.

The ground defenses at Magdeburg were not so strong as those at Berlin, the Air Ministry said, and the city's guns and searchlights ap-peared to have been overwhelmed by the weight and speed of the attack.

Important Rail Center.

Magdeburg is a city of 300,000 astride main railways to Leipzig, Kassel and Hamburg. Its principal industry is iron working, and a Krupp branch producing tanks is among its factories. There also are chemical, rubber, explosive and synthetic oil plants located there, along with one of Junkers' principal airplane engine works. Zurich dispatches quoted eyewitnesses as saying that traffic had not yet been resumed in Berlin following the Thursday night raid. These reports said that the northern and southeastern fringes of the city, both industrial districts, were hardest hit, and that fires were still that the Germans had requisitioned 10,000 tons of meat from Denmark to be sent immediately to Berlin, where a food shortage was adding to the hardships of bombing.

The Germans are believed to have thrown up at least 600 fighters against the 1,200-plane American attack against Central Germany January 11 and the American air-point of attack, that number is thought to be less than half of the Nazis' presumed current front-line fighter strength.

SWORN INTO ARMY-Shortly after President Roosevelt accepted his resignation as Ambassador-Minister to exiled Allied governments in London, Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, jr. (right), is shown yesterday taking oath as a lieutenant colonel in the Army. He will serve on Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's staff as liaison officer between Allied forces and the governments in exile. The President lauded Col. Biddle's work as diplomatic representative and explained that he deemed the change to military status appropriate "as the time comes for us to take up the military side of restoration problems." Maj. Can You Picture
AMERICA
without Police?

Today, we all owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to men and women in the uniforms of Uncle Sam's fighting forces. They're on duty today at the four corners of the earth and on all the seven seasprotecting our lives and our way of life.

And we musn't overlook the splendid job that other men in the uniform of our police forces are doing. Their "zone of operation" may be at home rather than abroad, it may be the highway to the next town rather than the airways across the Atlantic or the Pacific, but their job is fundamentally the same-protecting us and ours.

We can indeed be proud of our police organizations. Most of us have few occasions to call upon the service of our police forces - but that in itself is a tribute to their efficiency. They're on the job day and night whether we need them or not.

Some of us in the Greyhound organization, because of the nature of our work, have more frequent occasion to cooperate with the police than do many of our fellow citizens. For instance, we are in a position to see clearly how much the police of this community, as well as those of neighboring communities, have contributed to the safety and convenience of bus transportation. The aid these men have given in arranging the most practical and satisfactory routes through towns and cities is typical of their skillful handling of all traffic problems.

Greyhound's most important job, as we see it, is to make near and good neighbors of all the communities that our buses serve throughout the United States and we feel that the able cooperation of police forces has made it possible for us to do this job with greater efficiency.

Nothing could be further from the truth than the general impression that the Government has taken over for war use all privately owned ships -putting the steamship companies out of business.

It is true that all ocean-going ships of over 1,000 tons have been requisitioned for use by the War Shipping Administration. But the shipping companies are managing, as agents for the WSA, all their own ships except those turned over to the Army and Navy, plus the large number of new vessels built as a war measure for the Government's own account.

Grace Line officials point out that the familiar, rakish, green, white and black stacks of the "Santa" liners, indeed, have disappeared from their accustomed routes on the South American west coast, to Cura-Caribbean, to Central America and Mexico. Dressed in battleship gray, the vessels now ply the Seven Seas in the grim business of war.
With the newly built "C"-type fast freighters and the slower Liberty ships. Grace Line is agent for about eight times the number of vessels it operated in peacetimes. The same is true in varying degree with other American shipping companies long engaged in building up the American merchant marine.

The task which steamship companies are called on to perform grows steadily greater. Tonnage allocated to them is increasing daily as the toll taken by Axis submarines is cut down and as more than five ships a day come sliding off the ways in United States shipyards to join in the all-out war effort.

Yes, the American steamship companies have "gone to war." And when victory comes these companies again will fling their trade and passenger routes around the globe.

The National Amateur Quail Championships will return to Pinehurst, N. C., on January 31 to continue for the duration of the running.

This is probably the first time these field dog championships ever have been run on the same grounds in successive years, but due to conveniences during present conditions and the exceptionally fine multiple courses at Pinehurst, it was decided to hold the runnings at that resort again. It takes years to build such good courses and it must be

Our Favorite Correspondent Is at Bat Again

That man's in again—meaning H. D. Bateman, who may be recalled as one of the first to address us following our recent return to this space and who rapidly is assuming the status of our favorite correspondent, for reasons that should be apparent if you read on.

As a matter of fact the guy practically is twins so far as this editor is concerned, for we've heard from him twice since the last acknowledgment and the gist of both communications is combined herewith with his explanation that he was writing "notwithstanding the very expert panning" we gave him in this column a week ago.

"Maybe we just don't know when we've had enough, or maybe it's just that it is such an honor to be flayed in public by such a skilled and experienced workman. More likely, it's probable we're still a little

"All we know about sports is what we read in the newspapers. Admittedly we're no expert. However, we should be able to cast a hex as well as any of the experts. That's what we said-hex. If you get your sports from the newspapers, as we do, you'll know what

"For instance, just suppose a promising young fighter named Joe Doaks gets a nice buildup in the sports column of his local newspaper. What happens? The next time out Joe gets his ears pinned back by a stumblebum and nobody ever hears of him again. That is what is known as the sportswriters' curse. It never fails. In fact, it even works in reverse. If the papers tab the Washington Senators as a bunch of bums, that promptly becomes the signal for a long winning streak. That is sometimes known as a reverse hex, or putting

Cites Last Season's Redskins as an Example

"Take the 1943 version of the Washington Redskins, for example. According to the reports emanating from their training camp, they were going to tear the league apart. So they promptly lost three exhibition games to the College All-Stars, Chibears and Green Bay Packers. That wasn't so good, and some of the experts began to admit that probably they had been mistaken. That put reverse English on the hex and was all the Redskins needed to get them off to a nice start in regular league play. They won their first four games.

"With four wins and no losses to their credit they looked to be the class of the league. Unfortunately, the experts thought so, too, and said so. They began to feel sorry for the rest of the league, particularly the Phil-Pitt Steagles, who were to play the Redskins next, They did, and the Redskins were lucky to get no worse than a tie.

"This hit the experts where it hurt. With five games left to play, including one against the Chicago Bears and another one against the Steagles, things looked none too good for Washington. A reverse hex, again, see? It now was impossible for Washington to lose, so they beat the Detroit Lions and the Bears, which gave them a total of six wins, one tie and no defeats, with only three games left to play. It looked as if they had the Eastern Division title in the bag.

"It was too bad that the experts said so. This turned out to be too much of a handicap for the Redskins to overcome, and they lost their last three games, ending their regular season in a tie with the New York Giants. A playoff game was necessary in order to determine the Eastern Division champion. To some, the playoff game seemed superfluous, for the Giants had beaten the Redskins in their last two games, and it seemed silly to make them play another. Things looked black for Washington, and the experts thought so, too. With this shot in the arm, the Redskins beat the Giants, 28-0.

Hex Operated Through Injury to Sammy Baugh

"This made Washington eligible to meet the Bears for the world championship. Washington had previously beaten them, 21-7. The Bears were rusty from a four-week layoff. Everything pointed to Washington, including the experts. The Star said: 'Washington has a very good chance to retain the world championship.' You know what happened. Sammy Baugh's head injury in the first quarter and his absence from the game while the Bears were compiling a 21-7 lead was just the way the hex chose to operate that day. If The Star hadn't given the Redskins a chance, the final score, Bears, 41; Redskins, 21, might have been reversed.

"So we say we should be able to cast a hex as well as any of the experts. We'll be careful, though, and try a reverse-English hex first. The baseball season will be getting under way in a few months. Washington's chances look none too good. Gerald Priddy already has gone, and Dutch Leonard and Jake Early are expected to be called soon. Washington is apt to resemble the team that Bud Abbott and · Lou Costello made famous. You know the one: 'Who's on first, 'What's' on second and 'I Don't Know's' on third.

"How is that for a first-class, reverse-English hex? With that to encourage them, don't be surprised if the Washington Senators win the

Suggestions Concerning National Service Law

"You overlooked a possibility in your recent treatise on the future of sports. Suppose a national service law is enacted; the theory behind such a law is that each person should be assigned to the job where he was most needed. Why, then, couldn't Dutch Leonard's draft board decide that the Philadelphia Athletics needed Dutch much more than the Washington Senators, and draft him to pitch for Connie Mack? After all, the morale of the good burghers of the City of Brotherly Love is important, too, and if the Philadelphia Athletics have anything to do with it, it must be at a very low ebb.

"Or consider this idea: The absence of Gerald Priddy is going to leave the Nats rather weak right in the middle of their infield. Why couldn't Clark Griffith submit a requisition to selective service and have them draft an infielder from the Yankee chain for service with Washington? That would be a long step toward the easing of the acute manpower situation now existing in Mr. Griffith's back yard, wouldn't it?

"All we need to do is to convince the Government that baseball is as essential to the war effort as are planes and tanks and guns for the invasion of Europe. Maybe if the American League would adopt rules so that, first, in order to be eligible to purchase a ticket for a baseball game a fan would have to be putting at least 10 per cent of his salary into War Bonds and donating a pint of blood to the Red Cross every eight weeks, and, second, decree that all profits should be turned over to the USO-then maybe baseball would be declared essential to the war effort. Otherwise it is conceivable that the Government might decide that in this total war the man with the gun is mightier than the man with the bat, the ball and the glove."

Raiders, by 41-to-16 Victory, Tie Eastern For Lead in Series

In Extra Play

Pacers, 30-29,

Roosevelt's Rough Riders tossed another upset into the high school basketball series, making the already hot race a real sizzler by edging Coolidge, 30-29, in an overtime session in the opener of last night's double-header at Tech gym. The reversal of form knocked the Colts out of first place, leaving that spot occupied jointly by Eastern and Western, the latter having come last night's final game. The Riders smoothly moved into a 21-12 halftime advantage that faded during the third period and disappeared in the final frame as the game went into overtime-after being tied, 28-28, at the end of the regulation play. Bunny Citrenbaum's flip shot from side court in the extra period gave the Riders their victory after George Lafferty momentarily had put the Colts in front with a charity toss.

Pete Loomis and Lou Mulitz alternated in sinking two baskets each. and Citrenbaum added another for Roosevelt's 10-4 lead in the first period. ## Gartrell, Merrie Slechta Top Winners in War Bond Bowling Star Sports WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 23, 1944. A-17 Buffalo Eager to Slug

Keith, Frances Wilson Take Scratch Honors With 453 and 393

Bill Gartrell, famed for sensational duckpin games but a mediumaverage bowler, and Merrie Slechta, making the headlines for the first time, were the principal winners in The Star's war bond bowling tournament, recently concluded, which added $6,376,737 to Uncle Sam's immediate assets.

Competing at the Columbia, Gartrell, who twice has exceeded 200 in games rolled under championship conditions and once, in an informal contest, rolled 247 for the highest hardwood duckpin score ever heard of, collected the men's top prize of $200 in bonds with a tally of 492, including a handicap of 48. A game of 190 "put him over."

Miss Slechta, firing at the Penn Recreation, using her Penn Sunday Night League scores in the tournament, totaled 455, also with a 48 handicap, to tuck away a $100 bond. Like Gartrell, she marked up a tremendous middle game, a 177 which tied the all-time District record for women rolled a decade ago by Rena Levy, but due to the absence of a foul line judge will receive no official recognition.

Frances Wilson, a Takoma Recreation entrant, collected the same with 393 sans handicap in the women's middleweight ranked No. 4 nationally, may not have to call upon his sprinting ability tomorrow night at Turner's Arena when he meets Gene Buffalo of Philadelphia in the 10round main event if Buffalo lives up to his own advance predictions.

In two recent matches here Williams has spent the entire time futilely chasing after his opponents in attempts to catch them with his kayo punch. Trouble was that John Garner and Tee Hubert, Williams' opponents, could run faster backward than Holman could forward, and Williams had to be content with one-sided decisions in his favor. Buffalo, however, exudes confidence at his Apollo A. C. training headquarters, even having gone so far as to invite Williams to come out and trade punches with him. That invitation hardly is needed, because there's nothing Williams likes more than a man who stays close enough to make a fight of it. At that, the experienced Buffalo figures to furnish more opposition than Williams found on his other trips to the Capital, but Williams is a handy favorite.

Williams trimmed Steve Belloise in Philadelphia in December, taking 9 of the 10 rounds, which is a sampractically every other week and Bolden. In other words, he's a early as last Thursday. pretty good fighter. He's not particularly fast, but his punches are solid and he's a talented boxer.

Bradbury Group To Study Appeal On Rezoning

Commission Decision Divides Section Into Building Areas

The Zoning Commission yesterday announced division of the Bradbury Heights section into separate zoning areas, only partly satisfying the appeals of the Bradbury Heights Citizens' Association to have the entire area rezoned in a manner which would have blocked proposed multifamily housing there.

The area rezoned to "restricted" for single family dwellings is "quite big," Henry W. Austin, president of the Bradbury Heights Citizens' Association, said, but, he added, "It is only a small victory."

He will talk with members of the Executive Committee today, he said, to decide whether the association will appeal the Zoning Commission decision to the courts. An appeal of the nearby Congress Heights Citizens' Association for rezoning was denied last week, and the Congress Heights group decided court procedure would be too expensive.

Writes to Mrs. Roosevelt. Mr. Austin has written to Mrs. Roosevelt, asking her to tour Bradbury Heights with representatives of the association. After a tour of the area with Mrs. Pauline Coggs of the Washington Urban League, and Franklin Thorne of the National Capital Housing Authority on Thursday, Mrs. Roosevelt declared the undeveloped land designated yesterday by the commission as a multi-family dwelling area is a "natural, normal place for expansion of colored housing."

Through a secretary, Mrs. Roosevelt said yesterday she had not yet received Mr. Austin's letter. She plans to be out of town during the plans to be out of town during the part of this week she said early part of this week, she said. and so would not be able to read and consider Mr. Austin's request Plans Concerts for for several days. for several days.

D'Alesandro Group To Hear Problems Outlined Tomorrow

By DON S. WARREN. Armed with a mass of data and views on the wartime increase in the Washington juvenile delinquency problem, the D'Alesandro Subcommittee of the House District Committee will begin a search omorrow for practical means of correction.

Since the Maryland Representa-tive recently announced plans for public hearings on the subject he has received scores of letters from spokesmen for civic and social welfare groups and officials. Most of these cite increasing waywardness of youth but include relatively few definite answers to the problem. Possibilities of improvement by widened, supervised recreational programs, assignment of more rained police to Juvenile Court activities and better co-ordination of school, church and adult organizations are expected to be explored in the hearings.

The case originated nearly two years ago when the County School Board was preparing the 1942-43 budget. The budget set the salary of the superintendent, part to be paid by the county and the remainder by the State. When the budget came before the Board of Super visors, the county's contribution to the superintendent's salary was cus and the treasurer was ordered not to honor vouchers in excess of the amount fixed by the Board of Supervisors. The case was taken to the Circuit Court and Judge J. Garland Jefferboard.

The issue developed in the case ate and House committees: ls whether school boards, appointed by the courts in order to remove them from politics, shall have control of school expendituers as well has been assigned to the Commitas their administration, or whether tees on Courts of Justice, Public Inboards of supervisors, elected by the stitutions and Education, Insurance shall have ultimate control.

Dr. John E. Donovan, brother-inlaw of the bride, escorted her to the altar. She wore a gown of ivory satin with a high neckline, long pointed sleeves and a long train. Her finger-tip veil fell from a tiara of seed pearls and she carried a prayer book overlaid with an orchid and a shower of small white flowers. Her only ornament was a gold cross suspended from a chain.

The maid of honor, Miss Josepheane Nunnery, wore a gown of rose-color taffeta with a sweetheart neckline, three-quarter-length sleeves, fitted bodice and full gathered skirt. Her headdress was of fresh flowers and rose-color veiling and she carried a Colonial bouquet of Johanna Hill roses. She also wore a gold cross and chain.

Little Kathleen Donovan, niece of the bride, was the flower girl, and she wore a long aqua-color taffeta frock with a rose-color sash and a wreath of rose-color flowers on her head. She carried a nosegay of Many doctors advise it to hasten recovery after illness-when the weakened system finds difficulty in handling ordinary foods. This is true for two reasons. First, OVALTINE supplies concentrated nourishment in food-drink form that's specially processed for easy digestion—(yes—OVALTINE usually "stays down." when nothing else seems to agree!) Second, OVALTINE is one of the richest sources of vitamins and minerals in the world-vitamins important to speedy recovery and yet so generally deficient in restricted diets.

Backstage With Fashions

Very few of the women who constitute the great buying public (meaning you and your friends) ever get the chance to sit in at the birth of a new fashion. This fact was brought home to us the other day when a casual acquaintance said, on our return from New York, "You must have had a fine time in New York seeing all the shows." "What shows?" said we, remembering that in last week's tour of the fashion openings we had barely had time to have the usual three square a day. "Why, the ones you wrote about. It must be such fun to do nothing but go to shows for a whole week."

Suddenly it dawned on us that the dear lady thought we had been dashing hither and yon seeing ready-to-wear versions of "Oklahoma!" "Kiss and Tell," etc. In other words, that we were getting our fashion news in sugar-coated pills.

T'ain't so, fair reader, t'ain't so! Just to prove it to you-we thought we'd take you with us to "cover" one of last week's fashion showings. Just pretend you are going with us to see Traina-Norell's collection as one of the out-of-town fashion editors, guest of the New York Dress Institute. This shindig is scheduled for 9 o'clock at night because there's no time during the day to squeeze it in-and those who run the schedule know that no newsseeking editor would want to miss the designs of Norman Norell no matter what time the display. At 10 minutes before the hour, we arrive at one of the big buildings on New York's Seventh avenue, the street that "belongs" to the readyto-wear industry. As we get off the elevator, there are two doors, one marked "showroom," the other "stockroom." We open the swinging doors of the former and walk in. Rows of chairs are set out, and facing them is a recess in the wall with two doors flanking a large center mirror, giving a dramatic stage effect.

It's now 9 o'clock and Miss Hart, the attractive, blond young woman in charge of the showroom comes out to greet us. Our reporter's eye notes that she is wearing one of Norell's slim red wool jersey chemise dresses, that she affects the young-looking shingled coiffure Mr. Norell advocated early last summer. Then-a hush-and two pretty models wearing slim print dresses and carrying matching parasols, enter simultaneously, one from each door, pausing together in front of the mirror so you get a double-take effect. Miss Hart laughingly announces, "Steak and butter are not rationed at Traina-Norell." The models separate, going to different ends of the room -and we get a chance to observe the prints of the dresses. One is patterned with juicy-looking sirloins, the other goes in for golden pounds of that 16-point stuff. The models announce the numbers of the costumes they're wearing - and we're off. One after another, the models enter, pause, prance down the aisle and pirouette while your eyes race to capture the details of each costume, and your fashion nose sniffs sensitively on the hunt for news. Note-there's no music, no fancy lighting, no plot-just one set of clothes after another, collection after collection—until soon the fashion novitiate feels she will surely drown in a sea of style. A day of this and your head is swimming with sidedrapes and scallops, bustle-bows and boleros, slim overblouses and underslung hip effects. Getting back to Norell, you'll see pencils flying as the fashion press realizes that there is news in Norell. He shows the slim box coat, hipbone length, the waistlineless overblouse, the knee-high skirt and headhugging cloche which harks back to 1926, to the Iris March of "The Green Hat," and to the day when Gabrielle Chanel was the designing star. In fact, part of the Norell collection is called the "Chanel revival." There is news, as well, in the revival of the middy blouse, that schoolgirl classic-good news, too, for many women for the line of the turned-up cuff is preserved without the usual bulk, because Norell skirts begin where the middy ends. This one-piece dress with the two-piece look, which patriotically saves fabric, is the keynote construction of the Norell collection.

There is news, too, in the thin Roman-striped wool jersey which makes suit-tops and faces the revers of box jackets of natural jersey-also in the white wool jersey used in glittertop sleeveless dinner dresses, most effective with a bright red wool box coat swinging over them.

The show moves quickly, but here and there you hear murmurs. "St. Louis women won't wear dresses like that."... "They're fine for the hiplessbut what about the rest of us?" Suddenly, all is silence-and a bride appears as if out of an old painting, wearing a creamy silk satin brocade dress with a tiny figure-hugging jacket and a standout skirt as young and artless as a confirmation dress. On her head she wears a short, full veil reaching to her waist. A shower of applause falls on the head of the bride, the show is over, and ye eds call for Norell. Finally, by a ruse, he is lured "out front"-a slim, dark-haired young man, gentle and shy, with the soft brown eyes and slim hands of an artist. He explains, in answer to questions, that his clothes are not hard to wear, that actually none of his models has a perfect figure, and he points out that the soft draped fullness over the hips in his tight-fitting numbers is really a concession to the little fleshy spots most women manage to acquire. His simple, uncluttered clothes, he feels, are in tune with the temper of the times. So do we-and furthermore, we feel that both his designs—and he—are masterpieces of understatement.

However, now that you've been on a typo-tour of one collection, we wonder if you wouldn't agree that two on the aisle for "Oklahoma!" wouldn't constitute more of an evening's fun!

your column the other day that it was our duty to be cheerful, even in these hard times. The question I want answered is: How is it possible to be cheerful when your brother, your boy friend and all of your close men friends are in the Army, risking their lives every day for people back here who don't even care if they live or die?

In the office in which I work there are several men who gripe all days long about taxes, gasoline, food, etc. The only thing they are really doing is trying their hardest to keep out of the service, and they are succeeding, being deferred every three or six months. How can I be cheerful with all that around me? It just isn't possible. MISERABLE. Answer-But it is being done, my dear. You are not the only woman who has a loved one on the fighting front and whose very soul is torn to tatters with anxiety about the son, or brother, or husband, or sweetheart, who is more than life to her. In all this vast country of ours there is hardly a house over which the shadow of dread does not hover, nor where the coming of a telegram does not cause every heart within to skip a beat for fear of what message it may bring.

But every day from these houses go men and women who have nailed on their faces the smile that won't come off. They greet each other cheerfully. They talk pleasantly of inconsequential things. They do their work efficiently. They do not discuss their fears, nor their griefs, nor weep upon the shoulders of others. They do their best to lift the gloom that is blacking out the

These people who do not wallow in despondency, who do not hold every listener up with their tales of woe, and who try to buck up all with whom they come in contact, instead of still further depressing them, are not cowards and quitters, as you seem to think. They are just as much heroes as any one who leads a forlorn charge in battle, because they are fighting on with their very spirits fainting within them, and refusing to give in to the luxury of tears.

And what good do you think would be accomplished if every one followed your example and did not even try to put on a cheerful act? Suppose every one went about swathed in black. Suppose there was no conversation except people exchanging their fears and dreads and apprehensions. Would it not turn the world into a pit of despair whose gloom nobody could endure? Would we not go crazy with the sheer horror of such a nightmare?

No, my dear. The world is a sad enough place now without our adding to it by making a cult of depression. What we need is cheerfulness and the courage that it takes to laugh in order that we may not cry. What we need to take now is what Stevenson called "the brave attitude toward life."

Easter Bonnet Preview

NEW YORK.—Even while the icy winds of winter make you watch the thermometer and the coal pile with the eare usual to the temperature of a fever patient, New York is donning its first spring bonnets. Top designers have shown their collections to the press, and almost before you read this, the first shipments will be arriving at your local stores.

What is the big news in millinery?

Practically every designer has her own answer. As there is no one silhouette in dress or suit, so there is none in millinery. The hats are pretty and flattering, designed to make a simple dress look brighter at all hours and on all occasions

If there is one trend, it is to the smaller hat and the half hat. One well-known designer reports that the demand for half hats is as much as 70 per cent of her collection. Women have become accustomed to showing their hair and brow. and they do not want to be diverted from this pleasant way of wearing hats.

Mme. Pauline, always the sponsor of a little hat, this season favors the triangular shapes that do things for all sides of a woman's head. Clever back treatments that become the current hair-dos, minimums of veiling arranged to give the maximum of flattery, ensembles of hats with gloves, bags, neckwear or jewelry-all give importance to the wearable, little hats which she introduces. She indorses the open crowns and narrow twisted brims that are more halo than

Top spot in the week's news was the introduction of the Dache net, a colored, visible hair net designed to show and glow as an "aura" over long or short hair, with or without hats, as a fashion accessory and glamour

The same firm that makes a well-known toothbrush are the makers of these new nets. Like so many other things, the development of this new fashion arose out of a need. The manufacturers have always made hair nets from human hair imported from the Orient. With this source of supply cut off, they immediately accelerated the development of an idea begun as long ago as 1938. when Mme. Dache introduced her flower-trimmed snood.

This new net has a patented design-it is shaped to conform to the new coiffures, and was introduced with a collection of Dache hats for spring. To admit that these exciting creations were made more appealing with the addition of the net is high praise,

By Joan Gardner.

indeed. But the fact is that many women will find in these nets an answer to the problem of how to look neatly coiffed when hatless. Speaking of her "invention," Mme. Dache said:

"I really do not claim to be an inventor in these nets. I have merely brought history up to date! You will find that all through the ages women have worn nets on their hair. In the 9th century it was called a 'resau': later, in the 13th century, gold nets were worn-and even Mary Tudor wore a blaze of jewels in her nets to make herself more glamorous. Women have always loved nets because they make the head look small and neat and, I think, add a touch of mystery." (These new nets will be in the stores all across the country by March 15.) Sally Victor looks to the world around her for inspiration, and presents a collection of spring hats that are based on familiar themes. They are sound and balanced, as well as fresh as spring itself. Drawing on the Scots, she creates "Ha-Penny Sailors," frugal as to size, with flat beret crowns and tiny brims with rounded contour. For the very, very young there are "Bobbies," little hard hats with derby crown and slight rolled-back brims, just the kind that the younger crowd will love. In ginghams or patterned panamas, they are sequined, slot-seamed or plain. For people of any age, there are wedding ring berett, with the smooth, round look of old-fashioned gold rings. If you like then. on the thin side, there is the slice beret . . . sliced and small. As American as Sally Victor herself are her Freedom Bonnets.

Young, gay, and with most of the bonnet to the back, they're reminiscent of those worn by the women of the young republic, but they are as new as tomorrow in her interpretation. Finally, she continues her two great successes from last season, the Curvette, which she makes of bright prints, some of them sequined, with a little pointed shawl that covers the back of the head, and calls them the Curvette-plus. The Chetnik drape, that successful side-draped hat, appears in smaller version, called the Baby Chetnik.

Almost every hat is shown with a matched or teamed accessory note. Most of the Scotch tartan hats have vests of the same tartan. The straw of felt hats have gourd-shaped handbags made of the same burnt or natural straw two crowns does it), or of matching felt.

Working at top speed, as we all do these days, skins often begin to dry and look older. How can busy working women recapture "that younger look"? With many, it can be done. Science has discovered nature's secret that gives the bloom to pretty young skins. The counterpart of this vitalizing substance is called ACTIVOL*, found only in ENDOCREME. Activol goes to work beneath the surface, helps to firm tissues, builds cells so that most skins begin to look smoother, fresher. You owe it to yourself to get your jar of Endocreme today. ### Regional Labor Needs For War Work in '44 Set at 1,000,000

Despite reductions in national manpower requirements, nearly a million workers must be placed in essential industries in this region during 1944, Regional War Manpower Director Henry E. Treide announced last night.

Mr Treide said that employers in his region-Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and the District-not only had not reduced their manpower needs but were asking for a net addition of 100,000 workers to the region's labor force. Part of the million workers who must be placed by employment offices this year will be moving from one essential job to another. Others must be recruited from the ranks of less essential industries and labor surplus areas, Mr. Treide said.

Mr. Treide reported that a substantial part of the more than $7,000,000,000 worth of war contracts let in this region have not yet been completed. He pointed out that the cutbacks releasing labor in other areas probably will not be felt as areas probably will not be felt as much in this region because there is For Salvation Army Mr. and Mrs. Daniel A. ### Tax Bill Veto Viewed As Unlikely Due to Renegotiation Clauses

A presidential veto of the new $2,275,600,000 tax bill may have been averted, it appeared yesterday by Senate softening of its earlier efforts to place rigid limitations on the laws governing recovery of war profits deemed excessive.

The Senate completed its work on the measure Friday, two months after House action. Conferees will meet tomorrow to begin adjustment of differences between the two chambers. Tax specialists agreed the Treasury had lost approximately $200.000,000 by failure to put in force on January 1 the elaborate list of added and new excises on so-called luxury items and the boosted postal rates. When the House Ways and Means Committee initiated the legislation last summer it set a goal of final enactment for December 20. It is expected now that the new excises will become effective March 1.

Where Are the Yanks?

Sixteen Equator-straddling atolls make up the Gilbert Islands. Twenty-seven thousand natives, brown-skinned because they are a mixture of Polynesian tan and Melanesian black, occupy the islands, whose aggregate area is only about half that of New York City. This map is one of the first to show Yank landing fields on Abemama and Tarawa, recently named for Heroes O'Hare and Mullinnix of the Navy, and

Hawkins of the Marines. This is the second of 12 articles titled "Where Are the Yanks?" The series has been prepared by the National Geographic Society for The Sunday Star to inform readers about the regions where American servicemen are stationed. An article will appear in

Hold-the-Line Wage Control Circumvented in Many Ways

Administration Approves Various Devices To Get Around 'Little Steel' Formula in Major Industries

By J. A. Fox.

A jerry-built wage structure is grow- | passenger train makes in less than five ing up in the major industries as the result of administration approval of various devices for skirting the ends of the "hold-the-line" stabilization pro-

The railroad brotherhoods are the latest beneficiaries of the polite fictions being employed to raise pay rates while ostensibly living up to the spirit of the "Little Steel" formula. Prior to the rail agreement, which was born of a strike threat and Government seizure of the carriers, new elements were discovered for injection into the longdrawn-out negotiations involving the United Mine Workers to provide more money and settle a controversy which bred four strikes.

Now, with the CIO steel workers pressing wage demands, and a similar movement gaining force in other quarters, notably aluminum, textiles and motors, the country may expect concessions of some sort for these groups also. as precedent is bound to weigh heavily in their favor, although this policy runs counter to President Roosevelt's budget message admonition that "increases in income should be limited to reasonable rewards for additional effort."

The "Little Steel" formula, devised midway in 1942, is not, of course, an absolute barrier to wage increases, although it sometimes is so interpreted. It simply provides that base rates may be raised as much as 15 per cent to compensate for the increase in living costs since January 1, 1941-a purpose, it might be said, which it now falls about 10 per cent short of accomplishing. The formula, however, permits increases for other than the living-cost factor-to correct substandard wages, or adjust inequities, for example-and it also allows other wage concessions that do not affect basic rates. It is in this field outside the cost-of-living area that the miners and rail workers made their gains, leaving a puzzled public to try and figure out just why the inflationary effect of a wage seemingly should depend on the nature of

Have Overtime Allowance.

The railroad case presents some interesting paradoxes. First of all is the fact that the brotherhoods are receiving as part of their settlement an overtime allowance based on the 40-hour workweek principle of the Wage-Hour Act, although they were excluded specifically from that legislation at their own request in 1938 because they preferred their traditional collective bargaining procedure, and bolstered this plea with the argument that the 40-hour standard was not practical for the railroad industry. Further, train and enginemen work on an hourly and mileage schedule that virtually precludes overtime

Another unusual aspect is that the 15 nonoperating brotherhoods, composing such classes as skilled tradesmen and clerks, emerge from the fight with an hourly increase of from 9 to 11 cents. which is estimated to be worth about $252,000,000 annually, although they once were willing to settle for 8 cents, amounting, on the basis of current employment, to about $215,000,000, according to the estimate of the Association of American Railroads. The 8-cent hike, reecommended by an emergency board, was in the basic rate of pay, and was turned down by Stabilization Director Fred M. Vinson as inflationary and in violation of the "Little Steel" formula. The 9-11 award includes the theoretically noninflationary overtime allowance for their standard 48-hour week, superimposed on the 4-to-10-cent basic wage increase which Director Vinson said was the maximum permitted under the formula-and which

The five train, engine and yard brotherhoods get approximately $88,000,000 out of the settlement, according to the Association of American Railroads, calculations, and there is room for speculation as to whether the refusal of Director Vinson to sanction the 8 cents for the "nonops" did not actually serve to increase the amount received by the operating unions. Had the 8cent rate prevailed, the operating unions would have had poor gounds for asking more. As it is, they get 9 cents, plus a vacation allowance of 2 cents. The cost of the latter innovation is estimated at $16,000,000, to bring the total intake of the five unions to more than $100,-000,000, and that of all the brotherhoods to approximately $350,000,000. And this despite the fact that a 4-cent raise for the operating unions was the sum total eavailable to the rail workers as a whole for a cost-of-living adjustment under "Little Steel" because of an increase received in 1941.

Worked Out by President.

The vacation pay was one of three allowances made to the train service unions, who received 4 cents hourly as a basic increase, in accordance with the original award of a wage board, and 5 cents "in lieu of claims for time and a half for overtime in excess of 40 hours a week and for expenses while away from home." The overtime-expensesvacation formula was worked out by the President when he took over the wage dispute himself after the brotherhoods threatened to strike in protest at the 4cent award. Whether payment for expenses away from home and for vacations is justified is a matter of opinion. The overtime allowance is in a different category. It carries the implication that the train service employes have operated at a disadvantage on the matter of overtime as compared with workers in other interstate industries, an assumption that is not borne out by facts. Overtime has been no burning issue for train and enginemen because of other advantages offered by their working schedules.

Minority Rule on Treaties Hit

participation in an effective system to keep the peace of the world after the war, it is a disturbing thought that any treaty or treaties with this end in view, no matter how strangely they may be supported by the people, can be killed by 33 members of the Senate.

The President, says the Constitution (section 2, Article II), "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present conunderground travel, although their right cur." A minority consisting of one-third of the Senate plus one member can therefore block ratification. A minority prevented acceptance of the treaty of Versailles, with the League of Nations Covenant, after the last World War. Will history repeat itself?

Around this question, Kenneth Colegrove, professor of political economy at Northwestern University, has written a timely and provocative book, "The American Senate and World Peace" (the Vanguard Press, New York), the theme of which is that our "archaic oligarchic and antisocial" procedure for the ratification of treaties should be ended through a constitutional amend-

Lists Two Basic Reasons.

Colegrove says, for such an amendment: First, the present process "permits the will of the American people to be flagrantly ignored"; second, it is "a menace to world peace." It is possible, the author points out, for the constitutional rule on treaties to be by-passed in the future as it frequently has been in the past, but he believes the question should be settled for all time by the forthright method of a change in the Constitution.

"If it be necessary," he writes, "to violate the Constitution in order to set aside an obstreperous minority which seeks to frustrate the will of the Nation. bold statesmanship will not hesitate to act in the interests of the Republic. But why should the American people have to resort to indirection, year after year? Why should the Government do basely by devious ways what could be done admirably by a straightforward method? In other words, why tolerate in our fundamental law provision that places a great nation in the humiliating position of dodging the universally accepted method of making contracts with other states?'

Several proposals of a constitutional change in the treaty-making provisions are now pending in Congress. These are reducible to four principles: That a majority of the Senators present be sufficient for ratification; that a majority of the full Senate be required: that the House be associated with the Senate in treaty ratification, with the requirement either (a) of a House majority of the members present or (b) a majority of all the House members.

Prof. Colegrove believes the treatyratifying mechanism should be democratized by giving a voice to the House. and that in both Senate and House the decision should be by a simple majority of the members present. To require a majority of all the members, he says, would be "far from a liberal improvement of the present system." The plan for ratification by both 'the same representation in the Senate,

To those who are hoping for American | houses of Congress, "provided a ma- | the political power of one person in jority of the Senators and Representatives present concur," is embraced in proposals introduced by Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat) of Florida (who would also stop filibustering by permitting a majority of either house, without debate, to fix the time for a vote) and by Representatives Pat Cannon (Democrat) of Florida and J. Percy Priest (Democrat) of Tennessee.

> "Senators who oppose the abolition of the Senate's monopoly over ratification of treaties," Prof. Colegrove writes, "usually end their arguments with the assertion that it is now too late to amend the Constitution." He replies by citing the fact that the prohibition repeal amendment, under the spur of an aroused public opinion, was put through within nine and a half months. In any case, Prof. Colegrove says, the

'too late" argument begs the question. "As long as government exists." he contends, "it is never too late to correct its imperfections. * * * Procrastination. in undertaking the task of reforming the antiquated process of treaty making, may impair the leadership of the United States in the counsels of the United Nations. In turn, the inadequacy of our leadership may be one of the many conditions that would inexorably bring on the third global catastrophe of the 20th century. Regardless of this war or a possible war in the future, however, our treaty-making process is undemocratic and requires change. Why aspire to democracy unless we practice it in such an important function of government as the making of treaties?" The two-thirds rule adopted by the Constitutional Convention, eight States to three, was a carryover from the Articles of Confederation, under which the Congress was the sole organ of government and each State, regardless of size, had an equal voice in the making of treaties. The small States demanded that the practice be continued, and they won this point as they won others based on the doctrine of States' right.

Saw Need for Secrecy. It appears, too, that the members of the convention saw a need for secrecy in the making of treaties and believed this was more likely to be obtained if ratification was vested in the Senate alone. James Wilson, from Pennsylvania, argued in vain that the proposed procedure carried the danger of minority control of foreign policy.

There are strong defenders of the present system today, but their arguments rest on other grounds, notably that to democratize treaty ratification would expose our foreign policy to an upset with each partisan change in the control of the Government. The Senate's monopoly of the power to approve treaties is warmly upheld in Justice Joseph Story's celebrated "Commentaries on the Constitution" (1833) as insuring safety and efficiency in our foreign relations. That often-quoted verdict was given, Prof. Colegrove observes, "before the treaty-wrecking habits of the Senate were fully formed.' As Prof. Colegrove points out, the present treaty-making process gives the smallest state the same weight as the largest. Nevada has 110.247 inhabitants: New York, 13,479,142. Because each has Nevada is equal to that of 120 persons in New York. Two Nevada votes against a treaty, under the two-thirds rule, could cancel out the four affirmative votes of, say, New York and Pennsylvania, which means that the will of 110,247 persons would be equal to that of 23,379,322.

To put the matter in another way, it would be possible for 33 Senators representing one-twelfth of the American people to block a treaty favored by 63 Senators representing eleven-twelfths of the people.

"Not all the eloquence in Christendom," Prof. Colegrove comments, "can #### prove that this is a democratic process.' More Astonishing Figures.

The argument, he goes on, can be reduced to even more astonishing figures. A quorum to do business in the Senate consists of one-half plus one of the total membership, or 49. If a bare quorum is present when the vote on s treaty is taken, any 17 Senators can defeat ratification. If the 17 votes come from the nine smallest States, the opponents represent only 3,584,511 people out of a population of 131,669,275. If the 32 Senators favoring the treaty (out of the quorum of 49) come from the 16 States, they represent 88,046,234 people. In other words, Prof. Colegrove sums up, the will of 88,046,234 people can be overridden by that of 3,584,511 people. The example is extreme, but under the two-thirds rule not impossible.

"The two-thirds rule for treaty approval," writes Prof. Colegrove, "has been defended on the ground that it saves the country from harmful treaties -a weak argument, indeed. The rule has saved the United States from no pernicious treaty; it has been the means of rejecting many treaties designed to promote the best interests of the American people. "Minority control of foreign policy is always dangerous. Majorities are seldom protected by minorities; almost invariably the minority, by obstruction, confusion, division and delay, destroys the majority as well as the Nation. If simple majorities cannot protect the country, the Nation is already lost . .

"Senators, like Representatives, are politicians: they watch the interests of their political party as avidly as does any member of the Lower House.

Opposition Has Control. "It is not often that a political party commands a two-thirds majority in either house. More often the President has a bare majority. It is thus extremely rare for a treaty to be approved by a two-thirds majority consisting entirely of the President's party. Generally, the opposing party occupies more than one-third of the seats in the Senate. At such times, the opposition party, if party loyalty be enforced, holds the fate of any treaty in its hands. As politicians, many Senators find that they have more to gain by embarrassing the President than by considering the interest of the people.'

The author points to the long record of treaties which have been rejected because of partisanship. In 1824, a treaty negotiated with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade was so mutilated by amendments in the (Continued on Page C-3, Column 4.)

Many Sources of War Data Emphasize Censorship Need Information Apparently Reaches Axis Which

Gleefully Announces Facts Withheld From Publication in This Country

By Richard L. Stokes.

Since national security is censorship's only reason for being, it is significant that the latest code announced by Byron Price, Director of the Office of Censorship, removed restrictions solely on information which is no longer of use to the enemy, or which is likely to contribute to his distress rather than his aid and comfort.

The basic assumption remains that in a matter of days or even nours Axis officials may have on their desks any scrap of military information let fall at a Washington cocktail party, in a Detroit factory, on a St. Louis streetcar, in a Seattle bus, on a regional broadcast or in the columns of a trade journal.

How this can be so is explained by the following circumstances, many of which will startle the general public:

All Embassies and Legations in Washington are authorized to send confidential information by airplane in diplomatic peuches, which are immune to search.

All such Embassies and Legations are permitted to dispatch uncensored messages in cipher over commercial radio channels.

Among the countries thus privileged are Finland, belligerent on the Axis side; Franco Spain, which has repeatedly declared its solidarity with Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy; Eire, which affords hospitality in Dublin to a Japanese Consulate and to German and Mussolini-Italian Legations, and Argentina, the only spot in the Western Hemisphere maintaining direct radio telegraph and telephone communication with Berlin, Rome and Tokio.

In the United States alone there are recognized almost 600 permissible sources of information, known as "appropriate authorities." They include 531 members of Congress. In general, if a newspaper, magazine or periodical is once published in the United States, it can be mailed without censorship to any foreign country not an enemy

The Office of Censorship has no control over letters or telegrams sent from one point to another within the continental United States. Communication is thus facilitated among Axis spies in different sections of the country, as well as the smuggling of messages across the Rio Grande.

There is one probable leak, the biggest of all, the nature of which cannot be hinted. This gap could be plugged only by fold the staff of a certain agency. Skeptical of Secrecy Guard.

Refusal of the Soviet Union to admit Allied observers to its frontline operations has often been ascribed to the Kremlin's belief that under present American and British systems there is no assurance that any secret can be kept. Inquiry reveals that about the United States and its territories an elaborate cordon has been erected against outgoing communications, whether by courier, ordinary and airmail, telegraph, cable, radio, Morse or wireless telephone. The safeguards are more secure than those of World War I, but ominous fissures gape in the dam. American censorship is decidedly more vulnerable than that of the Nazis; while they, in turn, are transparent beside those virtuosos of mystification, the Russians and Japanese. Moscow and Tokio have evolved methods that are airtight against friend and foe alike. The Office of Censorship is reported to have a "gentleman's agreement" with embassies and legations that they will not abuse the prerogative of employing codes. A stronger deterrent may be knowledge that American cryptographers work incessantly at the solution of all foreign codes and that the penalty for a guilty diplomat might be expulsion, severance of relations with his government or even war.

Barter in diplomatic pouches operates under a tacit understanding. The American Government does not tamper with the pouches of diplomats accredited to Washington and expects in return immunity for its own. In the long run, the balance of information obtained is thought by some officials to be favorable to the United States. Others are not so sure.

The Office of Censorship has the negative duty of supervising voluntary censorship of domestic newspapers, publications and broadcasts, and the positive one of scrutinizing outbound mail, cable, radio and other communications. The cables and radiograms of foreign correspondents are closely examined. All short-wave stations in the country are under Government receivers, but it is against the law for any alien to own, control, operate or have access to a wireless sender. Officials of the Federal Communications Commission insist that no diplomatic post in Washington is now violating this statute, and that modern detection apparatus would make discovery almost instantaneous. A lesson was taught in the case of an illegal transmitter which was traced to the German Embassy prior to American entrance into the war. The instrument was on extra-territorial ground, which the authorities at that time hesitated to violate. Instead, the wave-length was jammed so vigorously that no further messages were believed to have got through.

Jammed Air Waves. There is no restriction on wireless

Because the points of egress are concentrated, censorship of cables, wireless telegraph and transocean telephone is highly efficient. Censorship of outgoing mail, formerly in charge of the Army, has passed largely into civilian hands. Airplane letters receive particular attention. Cable scrutiny remains in control of naval officers, detailed Radio, domestic and foreign, is the special field of FCC. It acts chiefly through two subsidiaries, the Radio Intelligence Division and the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. The role of FCC is that of policeman and engineer. Its listening squads patrol without rest short-wave wireless abroad and all domestic short-wave and standard bands. It is believed impossible for any secret wireless station to operate in the United States or its Territories without prompt discovery. By way of experiment, a Signal Corps truck mounting a short-wave transmitter was given ample time to conceal itself anywhere within an area of 30 square miles. A message was tapped out. Only 55 minutes later an FCC patrol car drew up alongside the Army vehicle.

Some time ago there appeared on the air a short-wave broadcaster who called himself "Fritz" and declared he was stationed on a German submarine. Triangulation of radio bearings showed that the messages originated in Illinois. Further bearings from points surround-FCC engineers have developed apparatus small enough to go inside a valise or typewriter case, and sensitive enough to react to a transmitter in a given house or even hotel room. "Fritz" was run down and clapped in jail.

Even FCC Operators Are Held. So-called "freedom" stations can survive in occupied Europe, because public sentiment is hostile to the ruling power. But the American people are united and loyal. FCC patrol cars, equipped with strange instruments, have frequently aroused the suspicion of passing citizens, who reported them to the police. On numerous occasions FCC operators have been arrested and held behind bars until Washington confirmed their identification papers.

In addition to OC, FCC and Army and Navy Intelligence other agencies involved in counterespionage include the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department and the Office of Economic Welfare. Diplomatic phases of the problem are in the care of Assistant Secretary Breckinridge Long of the State Department, a former St.

All American establishments concerned in wartime concealment act on two presumptions. The first is that enemy agents in this country are numerous, subtle and daring. The second is that no censorship, including our own, was ever contrived-except possibly in Japan and Russia-which cannot sooner or later be cracked. Rear Admiral Harold C. Train, chief of the Office of Naval Intelligence, has published warnings that Germany and Japan have networks of spies in this country, and that while some have been captured, many are still operating.

The American public's scant news about movements of Hitler and other Nazi chieftains is nothing in comparison to the flood of detailed and precise information which Berlin put on the air about the conference of Roosevelt. Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek at Cairo and that of the first two with Stalin at Teheran

"Somebody Talked."

The Office of War Information has distributed all over the country dramatic "careless talk" posters. The latest shows a hand, adorned with a swastika ring, which is fitting together, as if in a jigsaw puzzle, bits of random chatter which combine into the revelation: "Convoy sails for England tonight." Another of wide circulation pictures a sailors of the merchant marine who is drowning by night at sea. His face is contorted with anguish and reproach. Straight at the reader points an accusing forefinger. The caption is: "Some-

REPARATIONS QUESTIONS TO PRESENT MANY DIFFICULT PROBLEMS

By James D. White.

The reparations question is a hot potato of planning for the postwar

Victory over Germany is near enough for Gen. Eisenhower to predict it for 1944, yet no Allied government has made any official statement on whether Germany is to pay for the deliberate damage she has done.

That, presumably, is one for the

In any discussion of reparations, two questions immediately arise: 1. Should Germany pay-are the victors going to demand it?

2. Can Germany pay? Observers who attended the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Conference at Atlantic City are convinced that Germany's victims are going to insist on payment.

Delegates from the occupied countries in Europe discussed reparations only as they related to general relief problems-yet the veins stood out on the necks of seasoned European diplomats as they told of wanton destruction by the Nazis. They have not forgotten Lidice, Rotterdam, Warsaw, Kharkov, Nanking. In the absence of official statements, let's look at what a few economists have been writing on the subject.

ing agreement on three points: 1. Germany has wrought so much destruction that she probably never can pay for it. 2. Reparations generally should not be paid in money. 3. Payment in goods will suit Russia, but will be difficult for capitalist countries to absorb. Germany was called upon to pay a bill of $32,000,000,000 after the last war. The Russians estimate that if the Nazis continue looting and wrecking in their customary way, they might owe something around $500,000,000,000 by the end of this war. In 1919 the Allies insisted on money payments. Germany wanted to pay in goods, but the Allies balked because goods coming in from Germany's cheap labor markets would compete with their own products. But the Germans couldn't pay in cash unless they sold more abroad than they bought abroad

This led to some economic acrobatics. The Allies lent Germany the money to pay reparations, but she ended up by paying back considerably less than the loan.

This, it is suggested, may be one reason why Allied statesmen today say in relation to their national wealth, nothing about reparations. Another and added: from Washington to New York, which a Articles published in Russia, the subject for German propagandists seek- expedient to requisition labor power turn it to war again.

United States and Britain show strik- | ing to hold the German people gether under Nazi leadership. British, Russian and American economists who have written on reparations agree that Russia's socialistic economic system can absorb reparations practically in any form without being upset. Not so the democracies, whose competitive commodity and labor markets both would be affected by influx of goods to pay reparations.

Most explicit proposals have come from the Russians, chiefly from Prof. Eugene Varga, who writes for the Soviet publication, War and the Working Class. Varga said that Germany cannot hope to pay any appreciable part of her reparations from either her investments abroad or her national wealth, though He suggested, therefore, that the chief source of payment should be postwar German production. He figured that since Germany spent about $4,000,000,000 a year before the war to rearm, she could reasonably furnish that much annually in reparations in goods. He expressed belief that priorities on reparations should go to those nations which have suffered the most damage from Germany and from the countries allied to Hitler for the postwar rehabilitation of devastated regions." This was interpreted widely outside

"slave labor" after the war. At this point, the British New Statesman and Nation pointed out that slave labor is never efficient, and that the Russians are likely to need teams of skilled engineers and technicians rather than gangs of unskilled workers, to rebuild Russia's ruined industries and cities. The British journal further suggested that Germany may have much unemployment after the war, with a surplus of skilled labor which might rightly be used to help Russia. But it would let revived German trade unions run the show, under supervision of the United Nations relief and rehabilitation administration. The London Economist offers these

"If reparations there must be, let them be confined in assessment to the restitution of deliberate loot and damage, in collection to what can be paid in goods and labor, and in duration to five years."

But if Germany is to pay in goods, she must be able to manufacture them, and operate a big industrial system, some may be that reparations is still a prime "It would be both just and practically quarters object, fearing Germany would system of collective security.

This objection might be overcome by controlling the supply of essential minerals, say experts of the Brookings Institution in Washington in a recent book Russia as a Soviet bid for German called "World Minerals and World Peace."

> The Axis countries, they point out, lack within their own borders the raw materials, particularly the steel-hardening alloys, necessary for production of modern arms. A licensing system could be set up to control the supply of these vital materials, it is suggested, so these would get only enough to operate peaceful industry. In another American study of the question, published last July in the probability that if Germany can pay at all it will be mostly in goods and said: "The American interest in reparations will probably not be much greater than it was after the last war * * of all the major countries, we have the greatest aversion to imports, and the less we

War and Politics

In a time when anything can happen, and probably will, it is not altogether surprising to witness the appearance of nonpolitical politics on the Washington stage. After all, as has been said before, there is a war on, and if there is anything more paradoxical than politics it is wartime politics.

The main event opened Friday when the members of the Democratic National Committee, which is strictly a political organization, went to the White House to meet the President. But this was a social affair, so they had to check their politics at the door. Mr. Roosevelt, it is reported, chatted with each member individually, and it is assumed that the weather came in for a great deal of attention. After tea, coffee, sandwiches and cakes had been served, this nonpolitical gathering was adjourned, the committee members returning to their hotel to elect a new national chairman and to consider resolutions calling for the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt for a fourth term.

Meanwhile, the President's press secretary, Stephen Early, was notifying reporters that Mr. Roosevelt not only planned to refrain from addressing the annual Jackson Day dinner, a political affair, but that he did not even intend to send a message to the national committee meeting. Frank C. Walker, retiring national chairman, who happened to be at the White House, reminded the newsmen that there is a war on.

A little later a committeeman appeared with a resolution signed by committee members from thirteen Midwestern States declaring for a fourth term for Mr. Roosevelt. Since this resolution was somewhat political in character, it was placed in an envelope to be handed, unopened and unread, to the President. Unfortunately, the secret leaked out when another committeeman, in a moment of aberration, told the President what the resolution said. Mr. Roosevelt replied: "Oh."

Plainly, this is ignoring politics with a vengeance. If an economic royalist were to show up in Washington, he could hardly receive a cooler reception. But, as it happens, ours is a political system, and it is going to be necessary for the Democrats to nominate somebody and run him for President. Maybe it will be Mr. Roosevelt, and maybe not. If he knows, he is keeping it to himself, and perhaps that is as it should be. But whether Mr. Roosevelt runs or steps aside, and war or no war, politics will always be with us. And while it is all right to be nonpolitical up to a point, there is a danger of overdoing it. There is nothing inherently evil in politics as such, but Mr. Roosevelt is a persuasive individual. Suppose he were to convince the politicians themselves that theirs is an unmentionable calling. Could the Nation survive that and the war, too? On a recent old-time hayride behind six horses through Rock Creek Park the vehicle by recorded count contained twenty-four WACS and one "gob." It is not yet known whether this sailor had the best or the worst evening of his entire life.

There is nothing new in the idea of a civilian labor draft. Ask the average husband, especially when his wife is engaged in spring housecleaning.

A Sound Compromise

The revised Lucas-Green service vote bill is a vast improvement over the one already passed by the Senate and supported, in a slightly amended form, by the Elections Committee of the House. Its chief virtues are three: First, it would provide for a uniform Federal ballot and thus relieve the Army and Navy of the almost impossible task of administering voting according to the differing laws of the forty-eight States. Second, it would guarantee the right of election officials in the States to determine the validity of the ballots returned to them and thus resolve all constitutional doubts. And third, with the uniform ballot channeled expeditiously through a Federal commission whose only function would be that of a distributing agent, it would so simplify the whole problem that the bulk of our service personnel would have a genuine chance to express itself next November. On the other hand, by leaving everything to the States, the measure recently adopted by the Senate, and now awaiting statement that "it is the governaction in the House, would have the | ment's full intention to pursue the

of men and women in the armed | fitting sanctions to responsible perforces. Accordingly, to the extent that it would prevent this and at the same time preserve the prerogatives of the States, the new Lucas-Green proposal seems to be an excellent compromise upon which Congress ought to be able to agree. That it has been approved by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections is a good and encouraging sign.

For High Stakes

The spectacular new Allied landing on the west coast of Central Italy - establishing a miles-long beachhead between the mouth of the Tiber and the port of Nettunois a daring bid for a quick and smashing victory over Nazis forces far to the south. In addition, it is a bid for the speedy liberation of

Prior to this powerful thrust, our forces were some 80 miles from the Eternal City, but now-at the northernmost point of the new beachhead-they are reported to be less than 20 miles away. Overnightthat is, by a great leapfrogging amphibious maneuver-they have carried themselves forward about 60 miles toward the most important single objective in the whole of Italy, putting themselves deep behind the battle line to the south and thus threatening the enemy with a giant entrapment.

As the bloody Salerno landing of last summer made clear, however, a thrust of this kind is full of risks. Reports from Allied headquarters describe the first phase as successful and say that "the situation is progressing favorably," but violent Nazi counteraction must be expected. For Hitler's generals can be counted upon to do everything possible in an effort to drive our troops back into the sea, not only because it would be a valuable "prestige" victory for them if they could do here what they failed to do at Salerno, but also-and more importantly-because their forces to the south will be faced with a disastrous defeat if we can cut across the road to Rome at their rear while continuing to batter at them frontally along the so-called Gustav Line.

A few more days will probably have to pass before we can be certain about the firmness of our grip on the new beachhead. Meanwhile, it is reassuring to know that our Allied air power has struck devastating blows against the enemy's airfields around Rome and that great damage has been done to railroads and other means of transportation needed by him to funnel equipment and reinforcements to the battle lines south of the Italian capital. It is reassuring, too, to know that the Fifth Army elements responsible for the landing are backed up by the big guns of our Allied warships and have the protection of our planes—some of them possibly operating from Corsica and Sardinia.

The perilous character of the undertaking cannot be exaggerated, but the stakes involved warrant such chance-taking. For if the Fifth Army accomplishes what it has set out to do, Rome—that great strategic and symbolical prize—may soon be ours, and the battle to the south, slowed down for so long by bad weather, terrible terrain and savage enemy resistance, may reach a swift and dramatic climax, ending in an Allied victory of the first

Axis Spies in Argentina

The arrest of an Argentinian consular service employe by the British authorities in the West Indies colony of Trinidad as an "enemy agent" again brings to the fore the thorny problem of Axis activities in Argentina. This has been a chronic source of concern ever since the beginning of the war and has become more pressing as other Latin American nations have broken relations with the Axis, leaving Argentina as the only country in this hemisphere where Axis diplomats, consular officials and civilian nationals enjoy neutral rights and immunities.

Even if the Argentine authorities had observed strictly the provisions of international law governing the status of belligerents on neutral territory, Axis nationals in Argentina could have been troublesome to the United Nations. But there is abundant evidence that both the Castillo government and the present revolutionary regime have interpreted rather laxly their neutral obligations. While action has been taken from time to time against flagrant Axis espionage and propagandist activities, such action has been taken only after proof has been adduced and representations made by London and Washington. The basic evil has not been eradicated.

The current affair is a case in point. One Oscar Alberto Helmuth, an Argentine citizen, but whose name denotes that he is either of German ancestry or of German birth and subsequent Argentine naturalization, was taken off a neutral ship at Trinidad while traveling to Spain, where he was to serve as auxiliary consul at Barcelona. Helmuth had been under investigation by the British Intelligence Service, and the evidence against him must have been fairly conclusive, because the Argentine Foreign Ministry states that Helmuth "appears compromised" and that he has been dismissed from the service. The ministry's communique ends with the sons to put an end to all activities contrary to Argentina's international policy."

Technically, this is reassuring, especially when coupled with the information that "some persons" already have been arrested in relation to the elaborate spy ring which is allegedly operating on Argentine soil. The Argentine government thus appears ready to comply with the letter-of international law regarding the duties of neutrals. However, its spirit remains suspect in United Nations eyes, in view of Argentina's diplomatic attitude and activities during the past four years. So long as Argentina persists in its "isolationist" neutrality, which, in practice, favors the Axis, other incidents like the present Helmuth case will doubtless arise.

The Lions and Lambs

Human nature and the world being what they are, all the lions and all the lambs are not likely to lie down together in the next peace as if there were no reason for any of them to bother their heads about the possibility of trouble among themselves. The lambs will still feel like lambs, and the lions like lions. and depending on where they are located, certain lambs will not always see eye to eye with certain other lambs; nor will the lions, without exception, think alike. But some lambs and some lions, because of their nearness to each other or because of common interests in one form or another, will tend to band together in their own neighborhood as a kind of makeweight against other lambs and other lions tending to do the same thing elsewhere for the same reasons.

Thinking out loud along these lines, Field Marshal Jan Christiaan Smuts recently spoke of the "trinity" of lions made up of Britain, Russia and America, with one of them-Britain-weak in relation to the other two. Still thinking out loud, in frankly speculative terms, the South African Prime Minister, who is a world statesman of the first order, went on to ask whether it would not be a good thing for the small democracies in Western Europe to become members of the British commonwealth of nations and thus create "a great European state, great not only in its world-wide ramifications, great not only as an empire, but great as a power on this continent and an equal partner with the other colossi in the leadership of the nations."

Not long afterwards, in direct answer to Field Marshal Smuts, Netherlands Foreign Minister Eelco N. van Kleffens spoke from London to his countrymen in occupied Holland. It was one of the great misfortunes of the past, he said, that small western countries like Belgium, Norway and his own—largely because of the armament deficiencies of France and Britain-felt obliged to stand aloof from events by following a policy of strict neutrality which served only to facilitate Hitler's march of conquest. Then, although ruling out the idea of a merger with the British Commonwealth, the Dutch Foreign Minister came out openly with the hope that in the future there would be created "a strong formation in the west, with America, Canada and other British dominions as an arsenal and a vast reservoir of power, with England as a base, especially for air power, and the West European mainland-by which I mean the Netherlands, Belgium and France—as a bridgehead."

These two viewpoints-one suggesting a bloc to offset the Russian and American "colossi" and the other suggesting a bloc that would include the United States and exclude the Soviet Union-seem to represent balance-of-power thinking wholly at variance with the idea of a world system of collective security revolving around Britain, Russia, China and the United States. Yet the disparity may be more apparent than real, for nations living in the same neighborhood, with much the same political beliefs and economic interest, feel almost a compulsion to get together, and it is a question whether, when they do this, it must automatically follow that they and other power groupings cannot collaborate under some over-all world organization to hold chronic aggressors in check and administer an en-

The question cannot be answered easily one way or the other, but as the talks by Field Marshal Smuts and Mr. van Kleffens have indicated, it will very probably loom large in the future. The lions and lambs, at any rate, remain lions and lambs, and when the shooting stops they will not all at once start living according to a single covenant. Their problem will be to fit their different arrangements—east and west—within the framework of a general arrangement for mutually trustful international co-operation. The solution is not likely to come readily to hand; to suppose so is to forget that ours is still an all too imperfect

In an information column recently it was disclosed that the total seating capacity of American railroads is 1,662,411. Many who have had to travel recently consider any question as to seating capacity purely an academic one.

Easing Controls Expected in 1945

By Owen L. Scott.

A timetable for ending wartime rationing and price controls is beginning to take shape in the offices of the Government planners. This timetable is closely related to the ending of the war in Europe.

So long as both wars continue there is almost no chance for an appreciable easing in controls. This is true even though a surplus of men and materials may begin to appear, because the Army and Navy want to take no chance with possible premature shifts out of war production. When the German war ends, however, the start of a shift back to a peacetime basis of production and trade will come rather quickly. The war with Japan, although it may go on for a long time after Germany surrenders, will not require all of the Nation's energy.

The present official assumption is that the war in Europe will end by the end of this year or, at the latest, before spring, 1945. It is on that basis that the present timetable for easing of controls is being drawn. But this timetable holds out little prospect of material relief for consumers this year.

End of food rationing is expected to come gradually, starting before fall, 1945. Sugar probably will be first to be released from rationing. Canned goods probably will be next, followed by meat and then butter. Rationing of food. however, is closely related to 1944 and 1945 crops in this country and in Europe. Crop failures would delay the end of rationing

All kinds of clothing and textiles will be abundant as soon as military demands relax, which they will do some time this year. Shoe rationing should' end once ships become available to bring in supplies of hides. That is likely to be early in 1945, if not before,

Should the German war end by December, 1944, fuel oil rations for the 1944-45 winter probably can be somewhat larger than this winter. Much the same will be true with gasoline rations. The east probably will get larger rations, while the West Coast will face a probable tightening, because of demands on it for oil to fight the war with

Tires will continue to be scarce through 1944 and, while they will be more abundant in 1945, rationing is likely to continue, owing to the need for balancing demand and supply. The first new automobiles can be expected by mid-1945. Other consumer durables, such as refrigerators, washing machines and vacuum cleaners will begin to appear late this year or early next year, if the German war ends as scheduled.

There is much pressure now to ease the restrictions that block any largescale construction of new homes for private use. Men and most materials are becoming available for use in this field, but it is unlikely that the bars will be lifted to any important degree before

If the planners have their way, price controls will be kept on many commodities and on many types of consumer goods until it is clear that a spurt of demand, at the time that rationing is removed, will not send retail prices spiraling upward. The automobile industry already expects that it will have to charge from 25 to 40 per cent more for the first postwar cars than it charged for prewar. That is because wage and material costs are higher. Postwar construction will start out about 25 per cent more costly than prewar. If the lid is taken from prices, the cost structure after the war might get more out of line.

It is probable, however, that 6 to 12 months of production after the German war ends may fill the more urgent demand and permit an easing of price controls even before the Japanese war ends. Congress could end those controls earlier than that.

Wage ceilings probably will begin to be less important before the end of 1944. That is because unemployment will begin to appear some time this year. Salary controls will be continued until the end of the war, if Congress gives continued authority. It is probable that a good deal of labor trouble lies ahead for the period when overtime pay ends and when weekly income of workers falls precipitately as hours of work are shortened. Unions can be expected to try to push hourly wages higher in order to compensate for what is to be a loss of much time-and-onehalf pay. The appearance of a labor surplus will complicate their problems. The draft for all but 17-year-olds becoming 18 probably will end shortly after the German war ends. The Japanese war largely will be a naval and air war. It will not require an Army of 7,700,000 men. This means that the Army can start to demobilize between the end of the German and the end of the Japanese war.

Probable ending of one war many months before the end of the other war will give this country an opportunity to work out adjustments in an orderly fashion, utilizing wartime restrictions. This means that by the time the Japanese war ends much of the reconversion back to a peacetime basis can have occurred. That conversion must be undertaken because a vast quantity of war material is being built up in this period for use against Japan when the time comes to enter the war effort in that direction. Inventories of planes, ships, food and everything else will be of staggering proportions by the end of 1944 and will inevitably make of 1945 a year in which a large-scale shift from a war basis will have to Consumers, however, cannot expect much easing of controls in 1944. It is more likely to be mid-1945 or late 1945 when present restrictions will begin to be eased all along the line.

A Declaration of Dependence

By the Reverend Edward O. Clark, Pastor of the Chevy Chase Baptist Church.

The Declaration of Independence, penned by the immortal Thomas Jefferson and adopted by the Continental Congress, marked the fact that the 13 Colonies on these shores had come of age and were, henceforth, capable of managing their own

But "time makes ancient good uncouth" and today, facing the momentous year that is ahead, we need to realize that we are living in a vastly different world than dd our forefathers. Consequently our Declaration of Independence, noble and historic as it is, must be supplemented with a Declaration of Dependence. God first! That is the Declaration of dependence that America must make. We find it in the classic words with which our sacred Scriptures open, namely, "In the beginning God • • • ." The essence of all religion is man's sense of dependence upon a higher Power whom he conceives as his Creator and his Determiner of destiny. Until a man has come to such a comprehension and cultivated the little flower of reverence for the Eternal God in his soul, he begins at no beginning and comes to no ending so far as a meaningful life is concerned. God has ordained life upon this planet. He sustains it. He is the great Provider. He is the Source not alone of material life, but of spiritual life as well. Man lives at his highest and best only when "he lives and moves and has his being in God."

But this dependence upon God is the one fact that man is ever prone to forget. His persistent heresy is that he thinks he does not need God. So long as he is prosperous and in health and does not have to live somewhere in a "fox hole" with death whizzing overhead, he considers faith in God a fifth wheel to the chariot of life. When all goes well man makes himself god. He struts in his vain pride. He is independent!

Such a mood, however, is passe in our kind of world. Whether one is in a foxhole on Guadalcanal or upon some life raft in the vast Pacific, or whether he is on the home front with its vexations of dismay and its sorrows of heart, one needs God. And in times of prosperity only faith in God can bring abiding meaning to the riddle of existence.

Religion, therefore, ever calls us to an affirmation of this declaration of dependence. It calls each one to put first in his life the Eternal God in His sovereignty, in His holiness and in His righteous demands upon us; in the beginning, God!

But to acknowledge God through worship and adoration is only part of the picture., The other part is to recognize one's inevitable relationship with his fellowmen. For God is not Father except as men are brothers. The declaration of dependence upon God has as its corollary a declaration of man's interdependence with his fellowmen upon this earth. No man lives unto himself. God has "made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth," writes the Apostle Paul.

Today as never before we are one world. In spite of bitter strife and racial divergences, we are one world. Today the most distant point is 60 airplane hours away; tomorrow who can say how near Moscow will be to New York or Chungking to Chicago? A plague in Shanghai, a strike in Bombay, a war in Poland and who is not affected?

Some months ago there came to the American Bible Society of New York an appeal for Bibles for Russian prisoners of war in Germany. The appeal was readily met so far as raising the necessary funds was concerned, but then came the problem of printing in the Russian language this large order of Bibles. After some investigation it was found that they could be printed in Finland, which was done. Here was an appeal coming from Switzerland on behalf of Russian war prisoners in German camps and it was answered by America with the co-operation of Finland. Even a bitter war could not and does not completely annul the interdependence of the peoples of the

All honor to our historic Declaration of Independence; but in this new year that is here let us affirm our declaration of dependence. In our personal lives and in our national life let it be-God first! And through our faith in God as Father let us acknowledge also our interdependence with one another as brothers, whatever our race or creed or nationality may be. Only upon such a declaration of dependence can the new world, which we all so fondly desire, be builded.

Clay of Kentucky, a volunteer in the Mexican War, who had supported Lincoln for the presidency, with Senator Joseph Lane of Oregon, who had been brevetted major general for gallantry in the Mexican War, organized two military companies which they offered as home guards for the National Capital. These companies guarded the White House and the Washington Navy Yard until they were relieved by regular troops. During those days, Cassius Clay repeatedly tried to persuade Simon Cameron. Secretary of War, to accept him as a volunteer in the ranks, but Cameron

Clay was then in Washington en route to his post as Minister to Russia, to which he was assigned (1861-1869) by three Presidents. After he had served his first year in Russia, Lincoln gave nim a commission as major general and recalled him. But Clay then refused to fight, stating that he disliked Lincoln's policy of handling the slaves in the seceding States.

He was a pioneer abolitionist, opposed the annexation of Texas, and published at Lexington "The True American," an anti-slavery paper. He started his fight on slavery on February 22, 1832, the centennial of Washington's birth, in a speech at Yale University. His own slaves he freed about the time he launched his paper. Housing Theory

Challenged

By Ben McKelway.

Hearings this week before a subcommittee of the Senate District Committee, of which Senator Burton of Ohio is chairman, may generate a lot of heat between the advocates and opponents of the National Capital Housing Authority. The Authority has been under attack recently and some of its critics no doubt have supplied themselves with ammunition designed to discredit its work. This criticism comes at a time when elements of the private building industry are expressing alarm over what they see as a threat to private enterprise in the postwar plans for lowcost public housing in Washington and are anxious to discourage congressional authorizations which would widen the scope and strengthen the hand of the

While criticism and defense of the NCHA will help to clarify the future status of this agency, the far more interesting development which may result from the hearings is a sharper definition of the role which private building can play in the reclamation of blighted residential areas in Washington. The theory that only the Government can reclaim slum areas and provide low-cost housing for the lowestincome groups-based on the contention that there is no profit incentive for private enterprise in that field-is being challenged. The strength with which that challenge is supported may go far to determine whether private enterprise, with the encouragement and assistance of the proper public agencies, will provide slum clearance and lowcost housing: or whether this function properly should be discharged by Gov-

As sharp argument is more colorful than agreement, criticism and defense of the NCHA may hold the spotlight. But it is significant to note the number of points on which there seems now to be little difference of opinion. There is wide agreement, for instance, on the desirability of consistent, large-scale slum reclamation and the fact that Washington, with many other American municipalities, will by one method or another get rid of whole areas of rundown, insanitary and congested housing by condemning it as a menace to health and morals of the community and that new housing will be provided. There is growing public consciousness of the desirability of strict housing standards. with penalties against owners and tenants who willfully fail to meet them. There is greater public recognition than in the past of the necessity, in one form or another, for subsidies to make up the difference between a tenant's ability to pay and the lowest economic rent which will liquidate public or private investment in decent housing. And there seems to be agreement that there must be a public agency, such as the NCHA, for the selection and condemnation of areas to be reclaimed and for specifying the future use of these areas. * * * *

Some of the groups adopt as their major premise the argument that the NCHA has failed to do the alley-clearing job for which it was established, and that it therefore should be abolished or reorganized, with its powers limited to the selection and condemnation of slum areas, private enterprise supplying the construction, management and ownership of the new housing.

The public housing group, on the other hand, is convinced not only of the excellent record of the NCHA but of the futility of attempting slum reclamation except through such a public agency, contending that the slums of today are the fruits of the failure of private enterprise in the past.

And there is still a third group which sees value in what the NCHA has accomplished, which credits it with having done a splendid job of pioneering but which believes, on the strength of new conditions and conceptions, that private enterprise can find the profit incentive to accomplish the same results, at less overall cost to the taxpayer and without accumulating the inevitable headaches associated with Government monopoly in any field.

John Ihlder, executive officer of the NCHA, has maintained that his slum reclamation program (and none of this concerns temporary war housing) does not compete with private enterprise; that public housing merely supplements private housing, dealing with an income group which can expect no relief from new housing built for profit. When private enterprise needs a Government subsidy to build low-cost housing for this group, he contends, a legitimate profit motive does not exist and a public agency should administer the sub-

Whether or not they can prove it on paper or demonstrate it in practice. however, at least one group of private builders is prepared to argue that if the NCHA condemned an area and sold it (possibly at some initial loss) to a responsible builder or private corporation, specifying the type of construction and limiting the rate of return to a mutually agreeable figure, the private builder could do an economically sounder job; the community would not lose tax revenue from the property and the tenant would be better off than under Government ownership and management of the property he occupies. It is contended that private capital is available for this type of longterm investment at a limited, but relatively sure, rate of return. Some rents might have to be augmented by subsidy, paid as relief by a public-welfare agency, but no more than are made up now through the system of graded rents.

Every effort should be made to put this theory to some fair test. For the reclamation of city slum areas is definitely on the way. It will be done in the interests of the community as a whole, not in the interests of private builders or other private groups with special axes to grind. But other things being more or less equal, it would be in the interests of any community to leave to Government only those things which private enterprise, after thorough trial, demonstrates its inability or unwillingness to accomplish.

Axis Hard Hit as Reds Seize Vital Railroad Centers and Allies Land Near Rome

America's 111th Week of War 229th Week of World War II

By Howard P. Bailey

Military developments of the past week improved the position of United Nations forces on all present fronts, and there were increasing indications that new fronts in Europe soon will be opened.

On the diplomatic front, however, the Nazis scored a considerable success either through their own intrigue or as the result of rumor-spreading about peace overtures which were reported in Pravda as having been undertaken by representatives of the British and German governments. Like a bombshell, the Pravda article, which was carried last Monday, exploded in the midst of efforts to bring about complete harmony and trust between the various nations in the Allied

Pravda, quoting a Cairo report, declared that two English representatives had met with German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop to discuss separate peace terms and hinted that the meeting had not been without results.

The British were quick to deny that any such meeting and been held and in great indignation reiterated Britain's pledge to stay in the war until the Axis is completely defeated.

Tass, Russian official news agency, broadcast the British denial, and it was hoped that the incident had been closed, but speculation over why Pravda ever printed the rumor continued all week and as a consequence. Berlin probably has taken some heart from this misunderstanding between the United Na-

There was some progress made toward settlement of the Polish border issue with both Great Britain and the United States attempting to bring Russia and Poland into agreement and further the effort to win complete co-operation of the Poles in the war against the Nazis.

It was revealed during the week that lend-lease exports to Russia during November reached the total of $338,000,000. bringing the grand total to $3,887,874,-000. There were reports that American and British heavy bombers will soon be added to the Russian air force to carry on the raids against German industry from a new direction.

Gen. Eisenhower early in the week declared that the plans and arrangements for the second front are now far advanced and startling developments may come in other areas also, Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson, new commander in the Mediterranean, declaring that wherever a weak spot appears. the Allies will strike and he included Southern France in the areas in which this action might occur.

Saturday came the thrilling announcement that the 5th Army had landed on the west coast of Central Italy at Nettuno a score of miles south of Rome whose airfields were reported destroyed.

European Front

The lull in heavy air attacks on the continent was broken suddenly Thursday night when British Halifax and swarmed across the Channel and gave Berlin the heaviest pounding of the war. It was estimated that 2,300 long tons of bombs were dropped in about half an hour, the average being 77 tons per minute. This was somewhat lighter than the 87-ton-a-minute mark rung up in the raid on Brunswick on January 11 which recapitulation indicates took the lives of 12,000 people and left 50,000 homeless in a city described as "disappeared."

Many big fires were started in the Berlin raid which was carried on with benefit of low clouds which permitted the bombers to come in much lower than is their custom. Out of the 800 bombers participating in the raid, 35 were reported as lost.

While the attack on the capital was under way, Mosquito bombers attacked other objectives in Northern Germany and in Northern France.

In the Berlin raid no fighter opposition was encountered.

Friday night the British again were over Germany in great force, blasting the important railroad and manufactur-Ing center of Magdeburg, a city of 300.-000, which lies about 83 miles southeast of Berlin on the Elbe River. The British lost 55 planes in the raid, one of the heaviest losses in a year.

The Nazis retaliated last night with two raids on England which did some damage and caused some fatalities. About 30 bombers sought to penetrate London's defenses, but without success, 6 of the attacking planes being shot down. Twice that number made their way over Southeastern England and caused some damage, but none of serious

Earlier in the week, Flying Fortresses of the American 15th Air Force, hopping off from Italian bases, blasted the airplane factory at Klagenfurt, which Hitler had tucked away in the Austrian mountains in the hope that it might escape raids. Returning flyers said that excellent results were had in the bombing and that satisfactory fires were blazing as they turned back to their

On Monday, along a 30-mile front, the 5th Army moved forward to the steep banks of the Rapido River which runs through Cassino, the French advancing about three miles to take a number of important positions in the

This was followed the next day by a crossing of the Rapido by Americans who began probing at the Gustave line seeking a weak point. However, they found the Germans entrenched and in back across the river in face of this greatly superior strength.

Hitting in a new direction, British troops in the face of heavy machine gun fire, crossed the lower Garigliano River Wednesday at three points which converge on the Appian Way, famous coastal highway leading to Rome.

Minturno, 76 air miles from Rome was captured Thursday and bridgeheads across the Garligiano were expanded. Friday the French made and retained successful crossings of the Rapido and threatened to flank Cassino and thus turn the Gustave line.

There were reports that destroyers were landing troops along the Gulf of Gaeta in back of the Nazis adding an additional threat to their positions. All week long there was constant air attack on enemy positions, concentrations and lines of communication.

Balkan Front

From Cairo came a report Tuesday that Drug Tito had been wounded in the fighting in Montenegro. As in the case of the other Cairo dispatch about peace negotiations which Pravda printed, there was no confirmation though later there was an explanation that he had been wounded last summer.

The Partisans claimed Monday to have inflicted heavy losses on German motorized units seeking to drive through Central Bosnia to the town of Glamoc. It was conceded, on the other hand, that the Germans had landed a strong force on the island of Brac off the Dalmatian coast in what is termed the invasion corner of Central Bosnia.

A second German motorized force, seeking to aid that under attack near Banja Luka, broke through the Partisan lines Tuesday but was entrapped in turn shortly after in bitter fighting which menaces some 400 vehicles.

War Secretary Sir John Grigg, reporting to the House of Commons on Tuesday, declared that the German offensive which began last December in Croatia has been a failure and that the Partisans now have about 175,000 Germans tied down in that area.

However, the following day the Nazis launched another heavy drive from below Fiume and the fighting became very One major victory came for the Par-

Most notable accomplishment of the week was the capture of Novgorod by the Red Army operating 100 miles southeast of Leningrad. Loss of this bastion by the Nazis virtually freed Leningrad from the siege which has been continuous for more than two years. It also places in danger of entrapment some 250,000 Nazis who are now holding positions in front of the old Czarist cap-

Nazi losses have been heavy in the fighting around Leningrad in the past few days and the situation is increasingly menacing for the enemy as, farther to the south, strong Russian columns have opened a determined drive for the Latvian border, only 70 miles away. Only two rail lines to the north remain in German hands and one of these is sufficiently close to the Latvian border to be within reach once the Reds cross the line. When and if that occurs, the entire German position leading up through the Baltic States to

Finland will be jeopardized. The new campaign headed toward Latvia got under way Monday along a 9-mile front and the Russians quickly overran some 40 villages and cut the Novosokolniki railroad line below Lake

Cross Ippa River.

At about the same time other units operating in White Russia crossed the Ippa River to take Novoselki in the Pripet Marshes, which during the week underwent another freeze facilitating the movement of Red tanks. The Reds at this point were only about 47 miles from Pinsk, important city which is the goal of that particular section of the Russian armies.

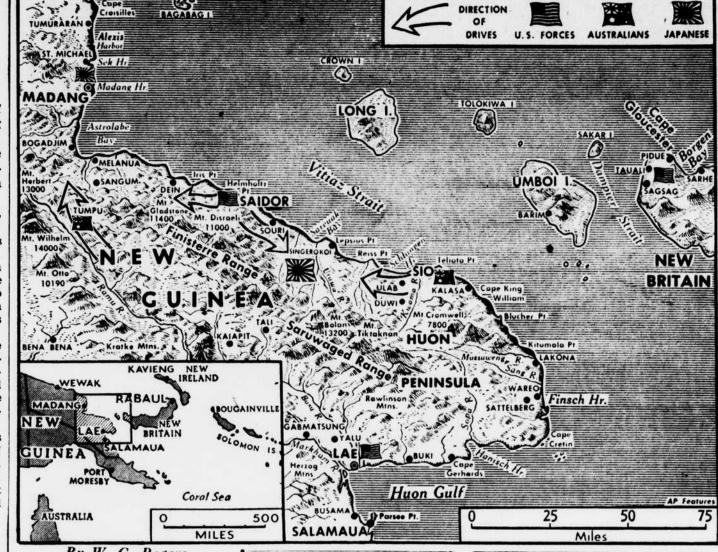

Berlin reported that Red units had established a bridgehead across the Bug River near Vinnitsa, placing them in position only about 20 miles from the vital Odessa-Warsaw railway and threatening to force all remaining Nazis in the Dnieper Bend to seek escape through Rumania. Especially would this be so if the Red drive should carry on across the Dniester River to the Carpathian Mountains.

Tuesday a three-way drive was opened by Gen. Vatutin toward Rovno, key rail center whose capture would threaten to break the Nazi grip on most of Southern and Southwestern Russia. The Red Army was about 50 miles from this objective when the drive was started. A new offensive on the Leningrad-Volkhovo front, which opened Wednesday, struck vigorously against the semicircle which the Nazis hold below Leningrad and considerable success followed with some 40 populated places being freed.

Maintaining the pressure on the enemy in other sectors, one section of Gen. Vatutin's army approached within 13 miles of Royno from the northeast as the Nazis desperately rallied their badly mauled panzer divisions to hold the Warsaw-Odessa railroad and to make secure their defenses across the Bug River.

Japanese resistance is reported crumoling in the 65-mile stretch of northern New Guinea shore from Saidor back eastward to Sio.

The enemy is caught in an international pincers, between Americans on the west and Australians on the east. Besides, planes range freely above him by day and night, PT boats knife at his barges, and an Australian force in the Ramu Valley has been threatening his rear. It's a five-sided squeeze, and about the only way out is down.

The American landing at Saidor on January 2, at a cost of only three dead. may make it possible to achieve, in this sector of the drive on Madang, the most rapid progress to date in the long and often disheartening struggle to throw the enemy off the world's second largest

Japan sent her soldiers into this area wo years ago. They landed at Salamaua and Lae on March 8, 1942, and at Finschhafen March 10. In the same month they launched an overland thrust at Port Moresby, less than 200 miles to the south. They crossed the Owen Stanley Mountains and got within 32 miles of the port, from which they could have taught Australia just how perilous the yellow peril was.

The Australians stepped out on the comeback trail on September 25. Before the end of 1942 they were around the corner, but it took a full year to recapture Salamaua, in September, 1943.

The Japanese hung on to Huon Peninsula stubbornly. Measured in days, the Allies merely inched up the coast from the Markham Valley: Salamaua-Lae to Sattelberg, more than a month; Sattelberg to Wareo, 12 days; Wareo to Lakona, 10 days; Lakona to Blucher Point, which was reported captured last December 29, 11 days. That is a distance of more than 115 miles. Without the Saidor leap-frog landing, the Allies, at the old rate of speed, might not have cleared the way to that point until the middle of February.

Pacific Front

Far-ranging American bombers invading the Caroline Islands, among which is located Truk, the Japanese naval base which Tokio believes is impregnable, struck at installations about 300 miles east of Truk last week causing some physical damage and probably greater mental hurt to the Japs who have been hit so often and over so widely spread a field that there are definite signs of jitters in Tokio.

All week long, American aircraft kept pounding away at the enemy. Monday American divebombers and torpedo planes operating from bases on Bougainville Island for the first time smashed at enemy shipping in now badly battered Rabaul. Direct hits and damaging near misses were scored against a Jap cruiser, destroyer and seven cargo vessels. The destroyer and one of the merchantmen are believed to have sunk. The enemy sent up 70 fighters to intercept and of these 29 were shot down. American losses were 2 bombers and 8 fighters. At least 4 of the American flyers were saved. ratification process that the British government refused to accept it and the pact was abandoned. The attack on this treaty, Prof. Colegrove recounts, was nothing less than a plot to discredit John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State under Monroe and a candidate for the presidency.

In 1844, the treaty for the annexation of Texas, negotiated by John C. Calhoun as Secretary of State, became a football of politics and was defeated by a vote of 16 ayes to 35 noes. After the presidential election of 1844, President John Tyler deliberately circumvented the Senate by proposing that Texas be annexed by a joint resolution of the two houses of Congress. The resolution, requiring only a majority, was adopted in the House by 132 to 76 and in the Senate by 27 to 25.

Without similar action, the Hawaiian Islands could not have been annexed when they were. Neither of two treaties of annexation submitted by President McKinley could command the necessary two-thirds majority in the Senate: the Democrats opposed them on partisan grounds and were joined by a few isolationist Republicans. Finally the Texas example of 1844 was followed and joint resolution annexing the islands was put through the House and the

"The able diplomat, John Foster," writes Prof. Colegrove, "bears witness to the fact that, although Republican leaders regarded the expedient of a joint resolution for the annexation of Hawaii as a violation of the Constitution and the creation of a bad precedent, they were nevertheless willing to set aside the fundamental law on the ground of national expediency. It is well to ponder the moral justification of this policy while one speculates on the dire consequences of a strict observance of the Constitution. What if Texas had not been annexed? What if the campaign to acquire Hawaii had collapsed?"

The unhappy experience of John Hay with the Senate led him to call the twothirds rule "the irreparable mistake of the Constitution." Some of his finest diplomatic achievements as Secretary of State—first under McKinley, then under Theodore Roosevelt-were nullified. A series of arbitration treaties met with such hostility in the Senate that Roosevelt finally withdrew them, observing that "the individual Senators evidently consider the prerogative of the Senate as far more important than the welfare of the country." In 1912, the Senate emasculated the arbitration treaties negotiated by President Taft and his

Secretary of State, Philander C. Knox. It killed the Versailles treaty despite a majority in its favor of 49 to 35, the 1927 commercial treaty with Turkey despite a majority of 50 to 34, the 1934 St. Lawrence waterway treaty with Canada despite a majority of 46 to 42, the 1935 proposal to join the World

Court despite a majority of 52 to 36. "The defeat of the Covenent of the League of Nations (Versailles treaty) in the United States Senate," Prof. Colegrove writes, "is one of the most spectacular episodes in the diplomatic history of this country. Henry Cabot Lodge fulfilled his boast. He multilated the treaty with such devastating reservations that the supporters of the administration could not accept the mutilated convention. Even so, a majority of the Senate supported the treaty with reservations. On the final test the treaty lacked only seven votes of a twothirds majority. Under the two-thirds rule, a minority of bitter partisans and personal enemies of the President were able to sabotage the peace system which America had persuaded Europe and Clings to Prerogatives. There is now in effect an informal arrangement between the State Department and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee whereby the necessary legislation for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration will be passed by a joint resolution of the two houses of Congress. Presumably, the same procedure will be used to validate other interim agreements which the United States may make, by executive action, with its fellow members of the United Nations. But the understanding between the Senate committee and Secretary Hull extends only to interim agreements; it does not connote any surrender of the senatorial prerogative to pass upon the final peace treaties in the manner prescribel by the Constitu-

Prof. Colegrove views the prospect with extreme pessimism. He sees precious time consumed in protracted committee hearings "in the same manner that the opponents of the lease-lend minority report offering amendments "of such character as to destroy the integrity of the treaty and to fill our Allies with dismay." He sees, finally, the likelihood of a filibuster by the foes of the treaty and, on the showdown, a vote in which as many as 44 members of the Senate (if the vote should be taken in the present Congress) might line up against ratification.

The author concludes that with the two-thirds rule in effect, our treatymaking procedure is "utterly unworkable" and that if constitutional reform by amendment is impossible "the President and the majority in Congress will be compelled to seek other constitutional methods that will serve as substitutes for treaties."

Even in the field of production, the disclosure of statistical information, without appropriate authority, was forbidden regarding specific weapons, such as bombers, fighter planes, 155-mm. guns and medium tanks. These and all other restrictions were based on the possibility that items published or broadcast would arrive by one means or another in hostile hands.

Eruption Kept. Secret.

The American record in withholding vital information from the enemy has been so checkered that there may be general bewilderment in the United States as to the efficiency of its counterespionage. An eruption of Mauna Loa directly after Pearl Harbor shot forth a pillar of flame which was visible 100 miles away for three weeks. The blazing cone was seen by Hawaii's entire population, including 150,000 of Japanese birth or descent. But no mention of the phenomenon was permitted to escape from the islands by letter. personal or business cable or press dispatch; nor was there a single reference in any local newspaper or broadcast. Not an inkling of the beacon providentially offered to its night bombers appears to have reached Tokio. This volcanic mischance, which might well have proved a fatality, was shrouded in silence so impenetrable that even today few Americans have so much as heard of it.

Triumphs of secrecy enveloped American losses at Pearl Harbor. Prime Minister Churchill's first Washington conference, in December, 1941; President Roosevelt's tour of munitions plants in October, 1942, and his later trip to Mexico. An impervious screen was thrown about the Allied expedition to Northwest Africa. American censorship reached high tide in the brilliant exploit of concealment which veiled the meeting of Roosevelt and Churchill at

Casablanca. Yet the Axis acquired exact details, gleefully put on the air, about the Roosevelt-Churchill consultation in August, 1941, which resulted in the Atlantic Charter; and also about the Prime Minister's second visit to Washington in June, 1942. Several weeks of quiet at Guadalcanal were broken by a concentrated, all-night bombardment during a visit of Secretary of the Navy Knox. He had stopped off shortly before at an obscure Pacific island. On the evening of his arrival the American outpost suffered its first aerial raid of the

Every American newspaper except one held in confidence the visit of Foreign Commisar Molotov to the United States in May, 1942. But the news of his arrival was communicated by a Latin American emissary in Washington to his home government, leaked into newspapers there and became known to the Axis long before the American public was informed.

Society Columns Scanned.

Society columns in American newspapers are a favorite hunting ground for Axis spies. A Washington daily related that a naval officer was visiting the city while his vessel, which was named, was being repaired. Through the item Tokio possibly learned for the first time that the vessel had been damaged. The presence of a British warship in New York Harbor was "blacked out" in the news. But a social item gave a list of guests entertained ill, in January through March, 1941, at dinner. Among the names were those fiddle while Rome burned." He sees the of officers of the ship. is in the hands of the United States. The Russians are fighting victoriously on the eastern front and the British are doing a first-class job in Italy and in their bombings of the Reich. But it is the manpower of America, together with her tremendous production capacity, which is the determining factor as to who is going to win the war.

Little has been said on this score in the last few months. The subject was not raised at the conferences in Moscow and Teheran by the American representatives because they felt there was no good reason why the susceptibilities of our Allies should be wounded.

But there is no question that both the Russians and the British are fully aware that if, by some unimaginable trick of fate, the American Government were to remove its men from the European battlefronts Hitler would have better than a 75 per cent chance of winning the war or making peace with his enemies on his own terms.

This purely academic question of America being the dominating factor in the Allied victory in Europe is being raised because many quarters feel that the voice of the American people in the postwar settlement of Europe should be heard more than at any previous

We Want Only Peace.

It is unpleasant to think of it, but rue, that American diplomacy has been agging after the British and the Russians. The situation is easily understandable, however. Both our Allies have definite aims and desire concrete gains at the end of the war. The Russians want territories which would assure the security of their borders against any future combination of forces in Europe. The British want to be "safe" in the Mediterranean and also want to reconquer the rich territories they have lost to the Japanese in the Far East. All America desires is a long peace so that we will not be compelled again to send millions of men across the seas and spend billions of dollars, draining our natural resources to the danger point.

Fundamentally, all we have a right to expect from Europe as a reward for our heavy sacrifices is the assurance that the people of that continent will agree to live in peace with each other. Twice we have had to intervene. The result of the first intervention, which deprived the Kaiser of certain victory, was a second World War within less than a quarter of a century. In the intervening period, because we insisted on the payment of the billions advanced to the warring Europeans, Uncle Sam was described frequently as Uncle Shylock. Because we endeavored to sell our goods all over the world we were often described as an imperialistic Na-

But in spite of the attitude of many foreign governments the peoples of the world and especially those of Europe had a latent confidence in the spirit of justice of the United States. In spite of our apparent isolationism most of the nations of Europe, and particularly the smaller ones, had a firm belief that the United States would jump to the rescue of the downtrodden if neces-

Backed Atlantic Charter.

When, four months before the Pearl Harbor attack, President Roosevelt met Prime Minister Churchill in the Atlantic and drafted the Atlantic Charter, the people of this country were almost unanimous in accepting that instrument for peace although it had loopholes and deficiencies, especially in regard to the Far East. Americans as a whole had more perspicacity than the trained politicians who criticized the charter because it did not cover India and China.

They felt that the danger of becoming involved in another war came from Europe and not from the Far East. And the people had implicit faith in the charter, which originally was signed by the leaders of the United States and Britain and subsequently by heads of all those governments which formed the great family of the United Nations. It seemed to guarantee perpetuation of the independence of those nations which had been engulfed in the avalanche of the Axis military machine.

The controversy between Poland and Russia came as an unpleasant awakening, not so much because there are some 10,000,000 Americans of Polish, Finnish, Baltic and Yugoslav stock in this country, but because it shows that unless Russia treats the matter of the inde-

Except in emergency and among the armed forces, censorship in the continental United States is civilian. It is therefore affected by constitutional liberties of speech and press, traditional honor in observing diplomatic usages and popular repugnance against censorship and militarism.

The heart of American censorship is not all-out secrecy, but delay. If valuable information cannot be suppressed, its delivery to the enemy is slowed down. if possible, until it is no longer of use. There is an attempt to keep out-going items irregular and sporadic, so as to make things difficult for hostile intelligence departments.

Since Pearl Harbor this country has suffered no important damage through leaks of information. But censorship spokesmen insist that the United States 'has had the breaks," and that luck cannot be counted on never to turn. Some point out that the Nation's proudest eats of reticence—Mauna Loa, the North African expedition and the Casablanca conference—were handled by military censorship, which is compulsory and treaty, just a scrap of paper. The Soviet government has accepted the principles enunciated in the charter. Maxim Litvinoff, an old hand at international conferences, signed the document in January, 1942. At the time the Germans were driving hard into the heart of Russia and no one knew when and where they were going to be stopped. Questions such as the western borders of Russia were academic and nobody wished to bother about patched up their diplomatic relations which were severed when the Russian armies entered Poland and in association with the Hitlerites partitioned Poland for the fourth time in its long history. The Polish government in exile was fully recognized by the Kremlin and ambassadors were exchanged once more. In 1942 the United Nations stood firm together on the American slogan. "United we stand, divided we fall."

Conditions Have Changed. The Poles and the Russians had

Things have changed since then. American production has sent goods in huge quantities to the Russian front. The American and British navies and merchant marine, overcoming unbelievable hazards and difficulties, have managed to get into Russia the war material and food the Russian fighter so desperately needed. Without American production and American and British naval efforts the courage and determination of the Soviet soldiers would have been useless. They would not have been able to resist the German military machine.

Even the secondary "peripheric" operations of the American and British forces in North Africa and the Mediterranean theater have drawn sufficient forces from the eastern front to enable the Red Army to obtain its great victories. The threat of an imminent invasion across the Channel compels the Nazi high command to keep at least 60 divisions in France in perpetual

Had it not been for that threat and had it not been for the presence of the Allies in Africa at least 75 per cent of the 100 Nazi divisions in Western and Southern Europe would now be fighting in Russia and it is highly doubtful that the Russians could have reached Dnieper River, although the lease-lend assistance was great.

Unfortunately, the Russians' advance, which was made possible exclusively by the American and British contribution to the war effort, has brought forth a political problem which could have unpleasant effects on the relations among all members of the United Nations.

Have "Good Case."

In a somewhat arbitrary manner the Soviet government claims that certain regions of Eastern Europe-on its western borders-are Russian because they had been incorporated "constitutionally" into the Soviet Union by plebiscites held the Reich.

Moreover, so far, the Moscow government has shown a desire to solve all problems concerning the future borders of the union single-handed and with complete disregard of the Atlantic Charter. That document, it is true, does not mention specifically any future boundary. It does not, because no one could foresee in 1941 what would happen two or three years later. But it does contain unmistakably a fundamental principle that all nations are entitled to enjoy their freedom. One of the characteristics of oldtime diplomacy is its means of "interpreting" documents and facts. From the old world diplomatic viewpoint the Russians have a good case if they say the King of Yugoslavia is no longer wanted by his people; that the Polish government in exile no longer represents the Polish people; that Gen. de Gaulle represents the vast majority of the French people, and that the plebiscite which placed the Baltic states in the Soviet Union is a true expression of the wishes of the peoples of those countries. The United States can say little about these matters and the official utterances of the State Department of three or four years ago cannot be brought up again lest we injure the sensibilities

of our Russian friends. Difficult to Understand.

Nevertheless, whatever diplomatic argument may be set forth by the Kremlin, it is difficult for the average American to understand why Russia should undertake to solve, single handed, problems which appear to be the business of all the United Nations. If we are unselfishly associated in our war effort there is no reason why this unselfish association should not exist in the organization of peace. Judging by what has been disclosed about the Moscow and Teheran conferences, it is hardly probable that at those conferences the question of an equal voice for America in the settlement of postwar European political questions was brought forcefully to the fore. The Red Armies' victories apparently have awed the British and the American diplomats. The Moscow conference produced a series of agreements which on paper appeared to have answered all our wishes. But when we look realistically at what is happening today in Eastern and Southeastern Europe it is to be wondered whether the documents covered more than the leftovers of Europe, the sections in which Russia had no immediate and particular interest. The Soviet government must be fully aware that without the tremendous American contribution its capital today might be somewhere in the Urals. But apparently it believes that the American statesmen do not have the same realization.

Guerrilla Warfare Is Underground's No. 1 Secret Weapon Against the Axis

Wherever the thundering steel of Axis military aggression has plowed through Europe and Asia, it has left fields ripe for the seeds of opposition and revolt. Silently those seeds have drawn their strength from persecution, oppression—and hate. In many places they have already flowered. Soon they will bloom in many more, with the red colors of sabotage and destruction and open warfare. Here is the story of those dragon seeds written by Associated Press foreign correspondents.

Saboteurs Are Major Factors In Russia's Successes

By Henry Cassidy.

MOSCOW.-Every day among the uniformed masses in Moscow there appear more men and women in civilian clothes, wearing a round gold medal dangling at the end of a long green ribbon.

That is the decoration for a "Partisan of the Patriotic War," and they are guerrillas who for more than two years have been living, fighting-some dying-in warfare behind German lines.

Now that a broad expanse of West Russian has been liberated, they are returning to what they call "The Big Land," or unoccupied region, bringing with them seemingly incredible, but well authenticated accounts of their operations. Their campaign is credited officially with being one of the major factors in the success of the Red Army's drive across the Ukraine and White Russia.

Guerrilla warfare is as old to the Russians as war itself. Every invader of this country-Swede, Pole, French or German—has had to fight not only soldiers but also people in arms.

If any call had been needed, it came in the second week of war when Premier Stalin in a broadcast prescribed the machine guns. Other precautions had been worked out in detail.

Three years of misfortune and false starts have imprinted precaution into the French underground movement. Today its leaders have behind them fully 200,000 well-trained and trusted guerrilla fighters.

They are the "soldats sans uniforme" who will crumple the enemy's transport, communications and supplies behind the Timing and rehearsing for this invasion-day attack as the primary task of the National Resistance Council. Its secondary aim is day-to-day sabotage. Sabotage is both active and passive. Actively, it ordains the slowdowns in factories, the blowing up of bridges, and caving in of rail tunnels.

Passive sabotage is carried out by aiding young Frenchmen to evade the German labor draft for Nazi factories. Recent estimates say that more than 100,000 youths are now hiding in the

With an average of only eight Norwegians to each square kilometer, it was easy to build up these supplies with the help of the Allies.

Civil War Saps Strength Of Anti-Nazis in Greece

By John F. Chester.

CAIRO.-A big IF lies over the snowfilled passes and blocked-off valleys of Greece. IF the Allies can heal a Naziinspired breach between big bands of Greek guerrillas then the Hellenes may take first place among the smaller occupied nations in total contributions to the United Nations' war effort.

The Allied headache, however, is whether the loose-hung bands known as the Elas and the Edes can be diverted from a sort of civil war to their former job of harassing the Germans.

Col. Stephanos Serafis, thin, sunkencheeked former bon vivant and manabout-town, is identified with the Elas, which are about three times stronger in number than the Edes. The latter organizaiton is led by stocky, thickset Col. Napoléon Zervas.

Total guerrilla strength in Greece has been variously estimated at from 15,000 to 50,000 and is known to be elastic and shifting.

Could Aid Invasion

The EAM (National Liberation Front) with its Elas army is an extreme left movement and its generally supposed Communist elements are active in the upper brackets. It has a postwar program including the adoption of a universal dialect and nationalization of public utilities. Yet because only the Edes have offered full co-operation, most Allied supplies have been going to that group despite its numerical inferi-

Shanghai, Peiping, Canton and other cities in occupied China; in Manchurian forests, in the rich valley of the Yangtze, in the mountains of Shantung. Wherever there are Japanese in China there are guerrillas. Isolated from China proper are some 20,000 guerrillas in Manchuria cut off from active direction by Chungking.

Movement Began in '37

South of the Great Wall the guerrilla movement started with the outbreak of the war on July 7, 1937. Its sponsors were principally the intelligentsia and retired army officers. They were scattered groups acting independently. After the battle of Hsuchow, in May, 1938, the government appointed regular army officers for liaison work with guerrilla groups.

As the Japanese advanced deeper into China communications with the guerrillas were, in many cases, completely cut off and their effectiveness began to decline. During the battle for Hankow, lost to the invaders in October, 1938. the government changed its policy and guerrilla troops were reorganized into regular units, large and small, and became an integral branch of the Chinese

How They Operate

The guerrillas blow up bridges, wreck trains, burn food and supply depots, sabotage machinery in mines and factories, toss bombs into Japanese-patronized amusement places, cut telegraph wires, destroy highways and attack Japanese supply columns. They are particularly partial to assaults on smaller Japanese garrisons.

"scorched earth" policy and partisan cards, false ration cards, false papers; Partisan army from what, in a tactical campaign. From virtually every city and village, small bands of men went into hiding, forming the nucleus of what eventually became the guerrilla

In Forests and Swamps

The biggest Partisan forces sprang up in the Bryansk region and in White Russia, where dense forests and swamps provided for large scale operation. Guerrillas took control of large areas, raiding German communications and garrisons, even meeting enemy punitive detachments in open battle.

One unit was headed by Mikhail Romashin, former secretary of the Bryansk District Committee of the Communist party. His band was credited with blowing up the Blue Bridge over the Desna River, near Bryansk, and blocking the railroad into Bryansk for six months.

In the second year of the war, the guerrillas continued to harass the enemy rear.

Their warfare flamed to new heights last summer when the Red Army started its advance. Bands were compact, closely knit units, having radio connections and even plane service with "The Big Land."

They were instrumental in the recrossing of the Dneiper, their outstanding single achievement. Waiting on the east bank, they led the Red Army through trackless swamps to embarkation points. Others on the west bank signaled clear landing places. Thus, the Red Army drove across the Dnieper immediately after reaching it and broke the Germans' strongest defense.

As the Germans retreated, guerrillas impeded their movements. One party called "Flame" derailed 54 trains in White Russian and attacked 14 enemy garrisons, killing 2,551.

The full story of the guerrilla war cannot be told because operations still are underway. When it can be told it will be one of the epics of the war.

Underground Lights Flaming Front in the Balkans

the woods. But reliable records show that since Hitler's march to the Mediterranean in 1941 he kept a minimum garrison of six divisions in Yugoslavia at all times.

Sporadically some of these troops were sent on punitive expeditions to wipe out traces of Yugoslav resistance. These expeditions proved tedious and inconclusive. The situation, from the Nazi standpoint, was harder to cure than the seven-year itch.

German propaganda lumped all Yugoslav fighting elements together and called them "Bolschevismus."

Last spring, when a combined force of Germans, Italians and Bulgars tried to mop up Montenegro and nearly succeeded in capturing Gen. Draja Mihailovic, the campaign was officially described as against the Red terror.

Engaged in Two Wars There is deep irony in these German

propaganda terms.

For Mihailovic was at the time engaged in two wars. One was against the Germans; the other against the Red Star Partisans of Josip Broz (Tito), the guerrilla general who now bears the title marshal in a rump government headed by Dr. Ivan Ribar.

Although the fratricidal struggle between Partisans and Chetniks since the winter of 1941 has been on occasion as bloody and savage as any civil war in Balkan history, it has not solved the Yugoslav problem for the Nazi masterminds in Berlin. A dramatic event occurred in September, 1943, when Tito's Partisans suddenly stripped five Italian divisions of their arms, uniforms and equipment and got firmly installed on the wilder portions of the Dalmatian coast. The ill-fated Dodecanese campaign would have gone much differently if Italian forces on which the British relied for support had been of the fighting temper of the Slav Partisans. Until the Allies are in postion to provide the Partisans with mountain howitzers as well as American canned milk, mortars as well as American medicines, resistance will continue chiefly on a small-arms basis. Do not expect the Partisan communiques to tell the whole truth about their desperate struggle with the invaders. They may have reverses this winter as serious for them as was Pearl Harbor for the United States. And do not expect reports of Partisan successes to be completely free from exaggeration. People fighting with their backs to a wall crave any sort of CHUNGKING.—One of Japan's biggest problems in China is a ghost army viciously and continually stabbing in the rear.

It is an army of hard-hitting, hardfighting guerrillas whose broad strategy is: Withdraw when the enemy advances, harass him when he camps, attack when he is exhausted, give chase when he flees.

The hunting ground stretches 2,500 miles. The strength is officially estimated at 350,000 or more men and women. They operate in the shadow of

RGANE DES FORCES DE RÉSISTANCE FRANÇAISE NOTRE TACHE Voici notre Chef ... Le Général de Gaulle anticipateur de Génie

This is the first page of a regularly issued, secretly distributed worst he can disclose only the names French newspaper, readers of which are executed if discovered.

In 1941, when the local branch of this famous body of men had dwindled to two men, their membership was taken over by the national headquarters at Springfield, Ill., and Mr. Kline and the late Mr. Dorsey were given the rank of past department commanders, and now only the former remains of this once great department of Civil War veterans.

It is interesting to note that this organization originated with an Army surgeon who thought it out while persuing his beneficent labors among the wounded, sick and suffering, as a means to further a lasting bond between those who fought for the Union.

Origin of the GAR

According to B. F. Beath, in his history of this order, published in 1889, Dr. B. F. Stephenson and the Rev. W. J. Rutledge, chaplain of the 14th Illinois Infantry, were close friends and companions during the war, and that "while on Sherman's expedition to Meridian in February, 1864, Chaplain Rutledge suggested to Dr. Stephenson that the soldiers who nad been so closely allied in the fellowship of suffering would, when mustered out of the service, naturally desire some form of association to preserve the friendships and the memories of their common trials and dangers.

"As they talked together, on the march or in bivouac, this thought expanded into the widest fields of conjecture as to the capacity for good in such an organization of veterans and they agreed that if spared they would together work out some such project.

"After the close of their Army service this subject formed the basis of their correspondence until March, 1866, when Chaplain Rutledge met Dr. Stephenson, by appointment, in Springfield, Ill., and spent some time with him in arranging a ritual for the proposed organization." City's First Post

As before stated the first Grand Army post formed in this city was John A. Rawlins, No. 1, which, according to the city directory of 1867, had its headquarters at 222 F street north (old numbering). This now would be on the north side of F street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, near Fourteenth.

An item also of interest in this directory is a brief statement as to the object the aims of the organization, which goes on to say: "The Grand Army of the Republic is an organization of the true and tried honorably discharged soldiers to aid with its charity the maimed and helpless soldiers and the dependent families of the fallen, to secure for those returned soldiers who have vainly sought for it themselves, and whose very tattered uniforms seem an evidence of demerit in the eyes of many who never dared to clothe themselves with it and its dangerous responsibilities. Whatever secrecy there is about this organization is only such as surrounds the most benign and powerful civil orders of the day as a necessity for their protection and strength and to better secure their charitable objects."

First Headquarters

The first headquarters of the Department of the Potomac was in the old Lincoln Music Hall, at the northeast corner of Ninth and D streets, and, according to the city directory, the offices of this governing body of the GAR were on the third floor.

This building, which covered the entire site of the present structure, known for years as the Academy of Music, was built by the local branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, mainly through the efforts of the Rev. Dr. George Hall, general secretary of that organization, A. S. Pratt being among the local citizens who contributed liberally to the project. The building was erected by Joseph S. Collins, Washington contractor, and from the first it was known as Lincoln Music Hall.

The Young Men's Christian Association was then a young organization in Washington, having had its initial meetwhich stood for many years, and until about 15 years ago, at the northeast corner of Tenth and E streets northwest, where is now the large building of the Potomac Electric Power Co.

in this hall for the purpose of organizing the association, including as its first officers and directors some of Washington's best citizens, of whom it may be truly said, "They builded better than they knew."

Included in the list were A. H. Lawrence, president; W. J. Rhees, recording secretary; W. C. Langdon, corresponding secretary; M. H. Miller, treasurer. The Board of Directors included J. W. Clarke, G. W. Dutton, Thomas Brooks, R. Smallwood, T. M. Hanson, C. W. Schreiner, Thomas Duncan, C. Dusenburg, Charles Pierson, A. B. Johnson, George H. B. White, Dr. J. S. Mackie, J. T. Cochrane, J. C. Whitwell and O. C. Wright. Mr. Rhees, the recording secretary, who was for many years chief clerk of the Smithsonian Institution, was an unusually lovable character, and a man who devoted much of his time to

Building's History

The Young Men's Christian Association took up its headquarters in the building, where it maintained its parlors and lecture rooms, and where were heard lectures by such celebrated speakers as Henry Ward Beecher, T. De Witt Talmage and Frederick Douglass.

Later, the great diva, Christine Nilsson, sang here in concert, and to vary the program, on January 21, 1880, the National Woman's Suffrage Convention was held here, and a few days later a meeting was held in this hall in favor of suffrage for the District. On December 5, 1885, the Fifth Annual Convention of Labor Unions opened here, and it was also in the old building that the project for erecting Garfield Memorial Hospital was crystallized.

Here also, as early as 1881, we find Prof. Henry C. Spencer conducting the Spencerian Business College, and it was in his classrooms on this corner that many of Washington's most successful men acquired their business education.

In 1884, the main hall in the building was rented to Daniel Herzog of Baltimore, who opened in that year what became known as Herzog's Ninth Street Opera House. The attractions here included nearly everything theatrical: Comedy, tragedy, burlesque, drama, melodrama and all kinds of musical shows. It was not long, however, before Herzog was succeeded in the management of the house by Joseph K. Strasburger, with J. M. Davis as treasurer.

It was while Mr. Strasburger was managing the theater that it caught fire, early on the morning of December 5, 1886, and was completely destroyed, leaving only the bare walls of the once superb Lincoln Hall.

GAR in 1930

Following the destruction of their headquarters, the Grand Army moved to the Cornwell Building at 1412 Pennsylvania avenue, and here it remained until June, 1930, when the square was taken over by the Government and the razing of the structures there was begun September 15 of that year. At this time there then were still left of this organization 130 members and the headquarters and one or more of the posts were ing in 1852, in the old Medical Building. moved to the Army and Navy Union Hall, Eleventh and L streets N.W. His service was a very active one, and he participated in many battles in which his regiment was engaged. However, his field service was terminated on June 1, 1864, when he was taken prisoner. This was at the Battle of Cold Harbor, Va., when he was a member of a reconnoitering party commanded by a lieutenant and composed of about 30 men who volunteered for this hazardous duty, in which the entire party was either killed or captured and made prisoners.

Prisoner of War

Mr. Kline was first taken to Libby Prison, Richmond, Va., and subsequently to Andersonville, Ga., and to other Southern prisons and remained in the hands of the enemy until the close of the war, when, after convalescing from the hardships of imprisonment, and being discharged, he joined the Regular Army on September 29, 1866, and was assigned as corporal to Company K, 12th Regiment, United States Infantry, and served with the regiment in the De-

Only recently he entered the Soldiers' Home Hospital for a rest, and here he is doing fairly well. His faculties are generally good, though his reading has slowed up on account of his failing eyesight. His interest in civic affairs has never ceased, and he still thinks Washinton is the finest city in the world.

pies the basement. The rest is rented as an army billet.

"Mine host" is a GI from Texas, slightly shell-shocked. The night I arrived he was drunk. There were no cots or blankets. With some reluctance he accompanied me to a United States Navy billet a few blocks away and we appropriated a bed from an apparently unoccupied sleeping porch. He tells me the Navy officer whose bed we got was a little provoked about it and threatens summary vengeance if he finds the culprits.

It was a dreary life for a few days until, this Sunday afternoon, I knocked on the cop's door to get the upstairs key. The family was just finishing dinner with something for desert which seemed like miniature American doughnuts. Seated about the table were grandpa and grandma, papa and mamma, a French soldier and a buxom lass, who is mamma's sister, and the kids. They bade me welcome and opened a fresh bottle of wine.

Got His Wars Mixed

Grandpa spotted my last war ribbons. He also, it appears, was a brave soldier in that great struggle for the preservation of democracy. He started recounting his experiences at a terrific speed-altogether too fast to follow with my high school French. I never could be sure whether he was talking about what he did in the last war or this one-or for that matter just what he did anyway. Grandma was visibly embarrassed. She called her son-in-law outside. He returned in a moment and told me, without paying any attention to grandpa, that the old man-just a few years my seniorwas always getting the two wars mixed up and that grandma felt terribly about his boring folks with stories she didn't believe anyway.

Grandpa was indignant. He slapped me on the shoulder. We old comrades, he said, must stand together against this impudent generation. I didn't want to get messed up in the squabbles of a French family and the best way out seemed to pretend not to understand. But just then grandpa received unexpected reinforcements in the person of another "ancient combattente," Mohammed, the family bootlegger. Mohammed also fought in the French Army in the last war. He deals in wine and meat. His wine business is perfectly legitimate. He bootlegs beef livers. It is the only way, he says, an honest butcher can get by these days.

Sometimes, in honor of such a great occasion as meeting an old comrade like me, Mohammed departs from his strictly orthodox Moslem principles and takes a glass of wine. He did so today. Then grandpa took another glass. Grandma frowned. The Mohammed took another glass. Then grandpa took another glass. Then Mohammed slipped around the corner to his butcher shop her. So did neighbor Mohammed. and brought another bottle. A little later he again slipped around the cor- were in the crying stage. another bottle.

He doesn't think much of med (the rest of us, on my sacred honor, took no further part in the proceedings and the young French soldier had departed for a stroll with the buxom sister-in-law) had finished three bottles the Arab veteran had strayed sufficiently from Allah to smoke an American cigarette. He liked it. I ventured the bit of useless information that any kind of cigarettes cost 100 francs-$2-in Corsica. Grandpa and Mohammed were indignant over the sad fate of their fellow Frenchmen. Both hoped the Germans would be massacred. They were responsible, was it not true, that cigarettes cost $2 a pack in Corsica. Mohammed talked very fast. I didn't understand a word he said. Grandpa didn't understand much either. The cop explained. Mohammed has a weird mixture of French and Arab when he is a little tight, he said. The cop understands because he deals now and then with a lot of drunks of Mohammed's race.

Grandma said she was glad to hear cigarettes cost $2 a pack in Corsica. It was the one good thing she ever heard about the Germans. It will save the poor Corsican children from developing the vile habit. She thinks cigarettes are disgusting and unhealthful. She said she hoped the Germans had made wine cost 1,000 francs a bottle in Corsica. I assured her they had.

"Bien," said grandma. Grandpa looked a little ashamed of France. Victory will come soon, he said. After that those two great nations, the United States and Algeria, will be everlasting brothers. If the British Empire behaves itself she may be admitted to a sort of conditional brother-This was too much for Mohammed.

His ancestors have been Algerians for a thousand years. But he doesn't think grandpa is fair to France. These are the days, he said, of empires and not piddling little countries like Algeria. "Vive la France," said Mohammed.

"Vive la France," said grandpa, hesitating a little until he got a nasty look from grandma.

"The world is so mysterious," said Mohammed. "We see a little ways. But the whole great picture is clear to Allah."

"To God," said grandpa. "To Allah," said Mohammed.

Then the Moslem slipped around the corner to his butchershop to fetch another bottle of wine.

Grandma was very embarrassed. She followed him with dagger looks. "But we must have beef livers," said

"I suppose that on previous similar occasions grandma had said: 'I will never allow that man to cross my threshold again."

Grandpa and Mohammed are great old cronies, said the cop. They are the only two left in the village who were re and were turned a military project. His poor old hands are all blistered. He regarded these blisters as war wounds. Silent spectator to all this was "mine host," the GI from Texas.

Grandpa and Mohammed, he says, are foreigners, but the cop is a fine fellow. He calls the policeman "flatfoot." The head of the house asked the meaning of the term. Now he calls the GI "flathead." They both think it is a grand joke.

"Mine host" also has known his moment of glory. Back in Tunisia last winter he was a member of a quartermaster outfit delivering supplies at the front. They were on a strange road. His lieutenant saw some stalled tanks, drove up to them and asked:

"How much farther is it safe to go down this road?"

Gen. Roosevelt Got Out

"Perfectly safe," said the tank officer in good English, although he wore a German uniform. "Some of my men will be glad to escort you and see that nothing happens to you."

"The --- had it coming to him." says the GI. "I turned my truck around and beat it out of there. When I thought I was at a safe distance I stopped in the middle of the road and waited for somebody to come up who could tell me where I was.

"I was blocking the road. A car came down the road and Gen. Roosevelt got out. 'Are you going to get this blank-blank thing out of my way or have I got to knock it out,' he said. "'I'll get it out of the road, sir,' I told him and I did.' The soldier has not been fit for combat duty since. He likes to hold little Michele on his knees and sing to him. Thus life goes on in a town which war has passed over.

Mixture of Moods Enhances Tale of 'Flying Tigers'

The Lady and the Tigers

By Olga S. Greenlaw. (Dutton.) Olga S. Greenlaw first met the Flying Tigers" when her husband. Harvey K. Greenlaw, was placed econd in command to Brig. Gen. Chennault in July, 1941. The day after Pearl Harbor, Gen. Chennault made her the only woman "Tiger" and asked her to act as war diary statistician and editor of the AVG

Her story covers AVG operations as she saw them from the day of organization till the group was disbanded in July, 1942.

It is a fascinating tale, written in personal and always vivid style. Mrs. Greenlaw describes the daredevil Tigers by reproducing the conversations she recorded in her diary. Adding little comment of her cwn, she uses the same method to acclaim the greatness of Mme. Chiang Kai-shek. She also gives an unforgettable impression of the reportorial technique of Clare Boothe Luce.

Through anecdote and factual quotation from the AVG News, Mrs. Greenlaw also tells much of interest about the flying methods of the Tigers, and conditions in China and Burma after Pearl Harbor. The most striking part of the book, however, is the poignant grief expressed by the author for the fallen Tigers. Mrs. Greenlaw could never grow used to the death of boys she knew so well. Her mixture of the moods of laughter and tears is excellent reading.

New Marine Combat Course Developed

(The following story was written by Sergt. Charles B. Kopp Greensboro, Ga., a Marine Corps combat correspondent.)

CAMP LEJEUNE, New River, N. C.—Camp Lejeune's new combat course may be little different from those at several other big bases, but it is a tribute to two Washington, D. C., officers, back from Guadalcanal, who planned it.

Their enterprise will make marines who train here better prepared than ever to give and take the fire and brimstone of war.

At the time Leatherneck comrades were wrestling bloody Tarawa from the Japanese, Lt. Col. William N. McKelvy, jr., formerly of 3525 Davenport street N.W., and Maj. Charles Cogswell, 4815 Fourteenth street N.W., had New River's tent camp combat course ready for action. They planned the course on the basis of battle experience in the Solomon Islands

WAR CONDITIONS COMPEL ME TO HALT PRODUCTION OF POPULAR, WORLD-FAMOUS LITTLE BLUE BOOKS!

Present Stock of 7,000,000 Books Is Offered Until February 21, 1944 at Only 5c Each, Plus 1c Per Book for Carriage, etc.

The war effort must have right of way. That explains why I have decided to stop bucking difficult production problems, supplies of paper, manpower shortage, etc. In addition to the 7,000,000 Little Blue Books still to be sold, I plan to turn my present stock of paper into Little Blue Books, as I would not want to quit for the duration without cleaning out my stock of paper that was purchased especially for the production of Little Blue Books. After my supplies are used up and my big presses stop rolling there will follow a period of waiting for the democracies to defeat the Axis barbarians. Customers who mail their orders before midnight of February 21 (the postmark will tell) are guaranteed shipments of Little Blue Books, of which more than 200,000,000 have been sold in 24 years. We don't know how long our production of Little Blue Books will be stopped. It may be a year. It may be several years. So, if you want an ample supply of Little Blue Books, rush your order today. Get your order in early for quick service.

UNTIL FEBRUARY 21, TAKE YOUR PICK OF THIS LIST OF LITTLE BLUE BOOKS AT ONLY 5c EACH, PLUS 1c PER BOOK FOR PACKING, HANDLING AND CARRIAGE! Until February 21, you can get 20 Little Blue Books for only $1, plus 20c for carriage, etc.; 40 books for $2, plus 40c for carriage, etc.; 100 books for $5, plus $1 for carriage, etc. And so on, at the bargain rate of 5c per book, plus 1c for carriage, etc. This is a sensational sale that closes at midnight, February 21. We guarantee to fill your order if postmark shows it was mailed before midnight of the closing date, after which orders will be filled if books are available. You take no chance of disappointment before the closing hour, but there's no telling after the closing hour when we will be guided strictly by stock of books available. Choose your books now! #### Fathers and brothers are off to war. One man saw a need . . .

by Grace Thorne Allen

HE boys on our block have opened our eyes, my husband's and mine, to some potent truths these past few months. We were slow to catch on, but it seems to me that what we've finally learned is important to other adult Americans in wartime.

We learned from the youngsters that boys are missing their fathers, that they are hungry for the companionship and even the guidance of men. Not that these typical noisy, argumentative, fighting eight- and ten-year-olds would put this truth in words. The proof lies in their

We have two boys of our own and live in an ordinary middle-class neighborhood of houses, bungalow courts and apartments. Our neighbors all have nice gardens, but we have the only real back yard. Naturally, the boys took it over. Just as naturally, since I have my work to do singlehanded these days, the boys got to be too much for me. As we finished breakfast I'd hear the ack-ack and the dive bombers. Then I'd hear shriller, angrier notes in their war cries. The mimic commando raids had gone realistic, the fight was on, the casualties actual. After giving first aid, I'd send them home with instructions not to come back until the next

Then one Sunday my husband stepped out for a minute to inspect a fort our seven-year-old had built.

"That's a good job, Bill," he said. "But we might take off this plank and saw the end straight so some fellow doesn't get hooked on the point, don't you think?"

"Yeah, we sure oughta," chimed in Kenny, an apartment neighbor, 10 years old. He dropped expertly over the back fence, picked up a hammer and knocked off the plank. Like a gentleman, he let Bill's father use the saw. While they did the job, the rest of the gang showed up, assembled by telepathy.

Red-headed Donald addressed my husband belligerently: "Look, we need an antiaircraft gun, and Bill says you promised to help make one."

"Yeah," chorused the gang. "When are we going to get started?'

They started to work that morning with old gear from the garage. Finished, the gun was a wonderful contraption, but its great beauty was that it was a long time a-making. Sunday after Sunday went by, the most peaceful the neighborhood had ever known; the busiest and happiest the boys had ever experienced.

Eventually, just before final assembly, the gun had to be hoisted to the fort roof for a last checking.

"Listen, Daddy," offered Bill. "The Japs will spot us sure if we don't camouflage the fort."

"He's right," the gang agreed vociferously. "Let's camouflage the fort."

So they did, beginning early the next Sunday. The dad of the block had sent an SOS to a friend. While one of the men stirred leftover bits of paint into nauseous green and brown mixtures, the other drew heavy curving lines on the walls and roof of the fort. He marked the spaces with "B" for brown, "G" for green. And the boys laid on the paint. They worked until dark. There wasn't a fight all day.

Back of us lives a semi-retired carpenter who has no children. He heard Bobby say, "The guys that defend the fort have all the gun power. The rest of us ought to have submachine guns - like the swell one I saw on a magazine cover!'

The carpenter took those boys into his cherished workshop. With a small powersaw he cut out wooden submachine guns. just like the one on the magazine cover. The boys watched, fascinated. They sanded the guns for hours; when the carpenter was satisfied with their work he let them shellac the guns.

One afternoon last fall when all the children were in school, Kenny knocked at the back door. Kenny's father is in the service, his mother works. Announcing that he was recovering from measles, he asked politely if he might go into the dark room where my husband was developing some prints. He sat there for an hour.

"Kenny taking up photography?" I asked later.

"No, he likes to watch once in a while, but he doesn't care about photography. I guess he just wanted to be around."

Of course he did; they all do. Why wouldn't they, with their fathers and older brothers in the service or working > weird wartime hours? Certainly they flock around a man who will let them paint; certainly they swarm over the carpenter who hands them a piece of wood and some sandpaper. But now those jobs are done and still the boys come — to be around, to talk, to ask questions, to make

> In America there are thousands of men who have a genuine liking for boys. With but a little time - not all day Sunday, not every Sunday - with a few minutes now and then, they could give the boys a lift over a rough part of the wartime road. By giving them a chance to "belong," to "be around." I think fathers in the service would get a lift over their road, knowing their boys had a good friend at home.

LIFTER-UPPER. We've just heard how a clever Red Cross worker, on duty with the Army at Miami Beach, solved the major morale problem of an Alabama farm boy. The soldier had never been away from home before. He had received no letters. He couldn't read, anyhow. For him, his family no longer existed. As a result, he was no good either to the Army or to himself.

The Red Cross girl offered to help by writing a letter for the boy. "Won't do no good," the G.I. said sadly. "They couldn't read what you said." The moralebuilder thought for a minute, said: "Come on, dictate your letter. I've got an idea."

When she addressed the envelope, she printed in big letters: "Mailman: Please open and read to the addressee." An answer written by the postman came back in a few days. Now the boy and his family conduct a regular correspondence - by proxy - and the Army has a happy soldier.

SECOND GUESS. Five years ago -January 30, 1939 — a fellow by the name of Hitler said: "The German nation has no feeling of hatred towards England, America or France. All it wants is peace and quiet."

He picked a funny way of getting it.

BLANK. We get a report from London that a recent track meet for troops there was delayed because the Army couldn't find a pistol to sound the starting signals.

THE QMC HAS LANDED! Supplies rushed to a Pacific outpost must meet world's toughest tests

TOU MAY not know it yet, but what your Army's Quartermaster Corps is doing now will revolutionize your life after the war. It will affect your clothing, your food, your house, even your recreation. To make our Army the best-fed, best-clothed, best-equipped in the world, the QMC has jammed the research work of years into days and months. And in creating and developing for this bloody war of survival, we have not just been producing things that will rot away in Army warehouses after the war.

We have produced hundreds of thousands of items. All were created to make the life of our soldiers safer and happier. But almost all of them will be important to you, the peacetime civilian. That is why I welcome the opportunity to give THIS WEEK'S readers and everyone on the home front a "progress report" on some of the things we are doing in the QMC - things which will affect your lives when this war is over.

For reasons of military security, I can't tell you everything. But I can give you an overall picture of the shape of things to come.

First of all, we have established higher concepts of quality than ever before. Ten million American boys in uniform are now used to the best quality in the world. Our Army raincoat fabric, for example, is rated 100 times more efficient than that used in the average civilian raincoat. The time when people thought a fabric had to be imported to be good is vanishing forever, I believe, for we are learning, now, how to make the best fabrics in the world right here at home.

I have been surprised — and gratified — by what happens when a department store puts Army "seconds" - goods not quite up to our standards - on sale. We've found that Army blankets, Army field jackets, anything made for us. go like hot cakes. Our standards are high. People know what our specifications are worth.

I think the health standards of millions of people in the United States are due for a change. Soldiers' systems are con> ditioned to good, vitamin-rich diets. One of the most startling tests we ever made shows how the old days of unbalanced meals — the meat-and-potato days - are gone for thousands of men. We watched boys who had been in the Army only a few weeks go off the post for a meal, eagerly order their old favorites and any item that was a change from their Army fare. Then we checked on boys who had been in six months or more. Free to eat what they wanted, they unconsciously tried to follow as closely as possible their camp menus!

The lessons learned from Army diets will have a terrific impact on our national health. Just as great will be the effect on our recreational habits. We have taken millions of white-collar, sedentary office workers and turned them loose in the out-of-doors. When they come back, they won't be satisfied with a seat in the bleachers for their exercise. They — and you — will be able to use the hundreds of things we have developed to make outdoor life safer, simpler and more fun.

B. Gregory is history's biggest, most careful shopper

Thousands of our soldiers have come from tenements, from cabins and all sorts of primitive living quarters. Now they are using - for the first time - hot water, electric lights, showers and every other modern facility. They have been educated to standards which they will demand when peace comes. You will see the effect in postwar housing. We, of the Quartermaster Corps, are not only remaking materials - we are also remaking consumers. I am certain that when people go shopping they will no longer be satisfied with their old standards in merchandise. Here are just a few of the things that will help change them.

HOME: If you have ever worried about spreading a cold by washing a sick child's dishes with the rest of the family's, we've found the answer for you. It's a sterilizing rinse. The Army kills infection by rinsing dishes and utensils in it. So will you.

Our new, toughened glass stands a good chance of replacing old-fashioned, easily-broken crockery. It won't bounce off a concrete floor - but it will take an ordinary drop to a linoleum floor without a chip.

When we discovered that the old-time metal canteen wasn't satisfactory, we had to find a replacement. The QMC came up with a plastic which is practically indestructible. After the war, it can go to work in non-breakable milk bottles, mixing bowls, hundreds of other things.

Our troops have moved into plenty of spots overseas where mosquitoes and other dangerous insects have been a menacing problem. Our ans non-inflammable insecticide that knocks pests out in a hurry. Just four seconds of spraying in a confined space does the trick.

We drafted nylon. It will come back to you in hundreds of forms. One of the best is nylon rope - seven times as strong as hemp, easily and cheaply made, easier to tie and untie, fray-resistant. Nylon clotheslines will be a familiar back-yard sight.

Soldiers get soap that will lather anywhere - in ocean water or jungle swamps. And we developed for them a shaving brush which can be boiled, kicked, burned, stamped on without hurting it. That combination should make standard bathroom equipment.

And there's a new type of piano, using 150 pounds less metal, which we procured for camps. Lighter, cheaper, it will fit nicely into many homes.

I have said nothing about the radical advances made in housing — developments in prefabrication, cheaply-installed central-heating systems and all the other things which were tried out on a huge scale in Army barracks and other installations. Your own imagination can tell you what they will mean to postwar housing.

CLOTHES: The Army is the world's most careful shopper. We want the best that can be made - and we insist on getting it. We have developed entirely new, more accurate ways of testing fabrics. Because they have so improved the quality of goods, clothing manufacturers have already adopted them to use in making civilian clothes.

One of the most important jobs the QMC laboratories have done is research in the right kind of clothes for all climates. Our experts broke down the world into climate zones. designed uniforms to fit each. The materials were tested under actual wearing conditions until now they're pretty close to perfect.

Our research will mean much to you in the far-traveling world of tomorrow. You may decide to take a quick trip from an Arctic to a tropical zone. Our climatic maps will tell you in a minute what kind of clothes to take along. And, as a result of our research, you'll probably be able to pack everything in one bag.

We have found that several light layers of cotton and wool will keep a person warmer than fur. So the old argument that the lady of the house needs a fur coat to keep her warm no longer holds. All she needs is a coat made with an outer shell of windproof cotton and a lining of wool. Commercial manufacturers can give her all the style she wants - and the prices will be low.

We have developed tough, wear-resistant cloth that will be a lifesaver to every mother. Even better is our "fiveharness sateen." Woven five ways, it's probably the toughest, most versatile cloth on record. We have nylon shoestrings and plastic buttons - which won't break. Then there's our new ambidextrous glove — if one is lost or worn out, you'll buy an odd one, not a whole pair, to match it. And our new composition shoe sole outlasts four ordinary soles.

And because we have shown manufacturers how to produce out-size uniforms in quantity, the tall, short or fat civilian will not have the troubles he used to have.

FOOD: You have already heard how many of the Army's developments - dehydration, quick-freezing, concentrates will have an enormous effect on the nation's eating habits. And there are many creations which will make life easier for the housewife - canned ham-and-eggs, pre-cooked cereal with sugar and milk (you just add water), butter which won't melt

Many cooks, professional and amateur, will welcome our sliderule Food Calculator. Designed for mess sergeants, it shows in a flash just what quantities of food to use for a given number of people. And there are literally thousands of economies which will be passed along to every U.S. home.

SPORT: Sportsmen will have an equipment paradise - mosquitoproof, featherweight pup tents, superlative sleeping bags, moistureproof matches, an efficient can opener no bigger than a door key, a floating match box. We've developed a tiny one-pound stove that will burn for hours on a single filling of gasoline. Our halazone tablets will save lives. Toss a tablet into a container filled with creek water and it becomes safe to drink.

MISCELLANEOUS: Our mobile bath unit can pump, heat and supply water for its 24 shower units. It can mean a great deal to trailer

Industry developed for us unique and improved packing and packaging ideas which will give you fresher products at lower prices. Waterproof wrapping, created for our Army rations, will appear on your food boxes and eliminate, for one thing, soggy crackers.

Hospitals will benefit from our sterilizing bag — clothes, blankets are bundled into the bag, a vial of methyl bromide is tossed in. Half an hour later, the bundle is sterilized.

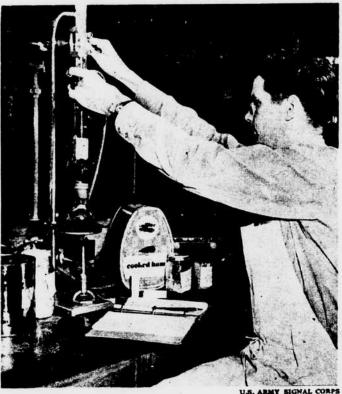

Our plastic bugle paves the way for lighter, cheaper musical instruments. The new all-purpose gasoline will eliminate many storage problems, probably become our standard grade. Our much-used protective covering - pliable, transparent, waterproof — will guard countless civilian products.

All these little facts add up to one big fact: In making our soldiers more efficient fighters, we have succeeded, too, in making the life they will come back to a richer, fuller one.

LADIES' DEPT. is inspected by the General

UNE GRAYDON hopped out of the taxi and walked up the short drive to the rambling old house. She glanced at her watch; ten o'clock - exactly on time.

The door was opened by a gray-haired manservant. He looked at her inquiringly, and at once she got a curious impression that he was scared. She frowned. Nothing about her to upset anyone, surely? "The name's Gravdon," she said. "June Graydon. I've an appointment with Mr. Lowrey."

"Will you come in, please." The old man ushered her into a large, luxuriously furnished lounge. "I'll tell Mr. Lowrey."

He went out, closing the door quietly behind him. June looked round with a gasp of envy. The kind of room one dreamed about! Pale morning sunlight streamed in through the long French windows; the color scheme was lovely. She'd always had an idea artists weren't too particular about their surroundings. Eric Lowrey evidently had different ideas. But then he was famous - probably made pots of money. There could hardly be a soul in England who hadn't seen his posters on almost every angle of the war effort.

At a slight sound from the door she turned, startled, to find that the manservant had come back. His eyes did not meet hers, and again she sensed his fear. "Mr. Lowrey is working in the studio," he announced. "This way, please."

"Anything wrong?" June inquired.

"No, Miss. Nothing at all."

"You seem a bit - upset."

"I'm sorry, Miss. Perhaps I'm not - er quite at my best this morning."

THE old man led her along a carpeted corridor towards the rear of the house. At the end of this he tapped on a door, opened it, and stood aside to allow her to pass, announcing: "Miss June Graydon."

The studio was a lovely big room with a glass roof and north light, furnished even more luxuriously than the lounge. In the center, behind an easel, stood a remarkably personable young man, with fair wavy hair, bright blue eyes, and a firm, almost aggressive chin. She felt sure she was going to like him. She advanced into the room with outstretched hand: "Mr. Lowrey?"

He nodded. "Just one moment. There's a shadow here - " He touched the canvas on the easel with a delicate brush. "That's got it! Quite good, I think."

He came towards her with a friendly smile and shook her hand heartily. "Miss June Graydon - how delightful! Come and sit down, Miss Graydon. No, over here, please, so that I get the light on your face."

Still holding her hand, he urged her to a settee near the easel — but on the wrong side of it, so that the canvas was hidden.

"Splendid! Yes, I think so - this cushion near your head - the old-gold embroidery shows up your coloring. Now perhaps you wouldn't mind if I continue my work while you tell me what I can do for you?"

"But you know why I'm here!" cried June. "Do I?" He looked puzzled. "Are you sure?" The smile broke out again. "I've the world's worst memory. Please jog it." "Very well." She laughed in sympathy. "We'll start at the beginning. You remember my father, Doctor Charles Graydon?"

"Of course! Good old Charlie!"

"He's not old. And he hates being called Charlie. However - does blood transfusion strike any chord within you?"

"Not noticeably."

"Good glory! You are in a bad way! My father supervises a blood transfusion unit of which I'm in charge. A few nights ago you met him in a shelter, during an alert - and promised to do a poster which would almost compel people to give us their blood."

"A sanguinary business."

"Father told you all about it," said June sternly, "how important it is in saving the lives of our wounded. And when he asked if I'd do as the model and showed you a photograph, you told him to send me along this morning at ten."

"Aha! Something stirs in the old gray matter. Let me brood over it while I work. Perhaps a maggot will emerge."

Mr. Lowrey returned to his easel, picked up his palette and squeezed some color onto it. For a while his brushes were busy on the unseen canvas.

June watched in silence. She was feeling vaguely uncomfortable. There was something wrong about all this. No one's memory could be quite so bad. Was Eric Lowrey laughing at her, fooling her for some reason best known to himself? Yet the more she saw of him, the better she liked him.

"No go," he announced before long. "The temporary activity has ceased. Just what was the idea of the poster?"

"A lot of people are afraid to give blood. They think collecting it may hurt - or make them ill. So we thought if you showed a mere slip of a girl -

"A pretty girl!"

"Well, a healthy girl. If you showed her smiling as she rolled up her sleeve - '

'An adorable smile!"

"Thank you," said June coldly. "Opinions may differ about - " But it was no good; his grin was too infectious. She laughed. "Anyhow, you seem to know what I mean."

"You bet I do! And we'll make a good job of it! We'll have the blood of all the Doubting Thomases and Hesitating Harriets. But do you mind if I finish this first? It won't take long; and I never like breaking off one picture to start another."

"I'm free for the day. Father thought - "

"I know. I feel horribly guilty. I'll work like a Trojan to make up for it. And if you want to show me how a really nice girl can forgive the unforgivable, you'll take a cigarette from that box, make yourself comfortable, and tell me all about what you're doing."

June hesitated, then nodded. After all, Eric Lowrey was giving his services, accepting no fee for the poster. And apart from this memory business, he'd really been charming; she must give him the benefit of any doubt. So she described her work with the blood transfusion unit, hard work for which she was well fitted because of the training she had received while helping her father in his sur-

LOWREY, busy with his brushes, listened intently. From time to time he asked a question, and she realized with surprise that he knew a good deal about the highly technical methods of blood-grouping.

From blood transfusion they progressed to more personal topics. Stimulated by his questions. June found herself talking about her home life, the comradeship that existed between her and her father. "But why am I telling you this?" she cried suddenly. "You must be bored stiff."

"Believe it or not," said Lowrey, throwing down his brushes, "you've inspired me. I've finished!" He gazed at his canvas for a moment, nodded approval, and came towards her. "Now we'll start on something really important. Roll up your sleeve, please. Let's see if you've got the right kind of arm to attract the multitude."

June obeyed. He took her arm in one hand, roughly measuring it with the fingers of the other. "Proportions just right," he murmured. "Modelling," he smiled -- "superb. Skin texture perfect. In other words-it'll do."

The infectious smile had transformed his face again. But this time it brought no response from her. She felt bewildered — even frightened. She'd just noticed something that set her pulses beating more rapidly.

His hands were perfectly clean! All the time he'd been fooling her — only pretending to work. An artist friend had once told her that any worthwhile painter in oils used his fingers as much as his brush. There wasn't a trace of color anywhere on Eric Lowrey's fingers. He hadn't been painting. His talk about finishing the picture was a sham. No wonder he'd made her sit down at this side of the easel! Before she had time to speak, a knock sounded on the door and the gray-haired manservant entered. "Excuse me, sir," he said. "The telephone."

"I'm very busy, Holt. Who is it?"

"Mr. Mullard, sir."

"Oh. Then I'll have to go." Lowrey glanced at June. "You'll excuse me, won't you? I shan't be long."

She tried to control her voice. "Certainly. There's no hurry."

As soon as the door had closed, she rose and tiptoed across to the easel. The picture standing on it was a beautiful landscape the paint on it completely dry!

She bit her lips in perplexity. Why should Lowrey play such a trick on her? She grew hot with anger, remembering how he'd led her on to confide in him. She'd liked him, treated him as a friend. And he'd lied to her, deceived her. Why?

A SUDDEN glimpse of the truth brought a catch to her breath. That memory of his far too faulty to carry conviction. He hadn't remembered her name - because he'd never heard of her! He hadn't been painting because he couldn't paint! He wasn't Eric Lowrey. He was an impostor!

But if this man was an impostor, where was the real Eric Lowrey? What was behind it all? Something criminal, perhaps? That would explain why the manservant had looked scared at her arrival; probably he was a criminal too. But if so, why had she been admitted to the house? Why had the false Lowrey deliberately kept her here, encouraging her to talk?

Almost at once she picked up a clue — a small stain on the rug; a red stain, suggestive, ominous. She touched it, and a shiver ran through her. It was wet; it was blood.

Eric Lowrey's blood? It must be. No wonder the manservant was scared - even though his confederate could produce that fascinating smile on demand. She shivered again. She'd found him so attractive. A murderer! Or at any rate a violent criminal.

"Yet that can't be just right," she argued with herself. "If he'd killed Eric Lowrey, or even imprisoned him somewhere in the house, he'd have wanted to get rid of me at the earliest possible moment. Why did he keep me?" She could find no answer to this. . .

Then she noticed something else. An inlaid casket stood on a table behind the settee on which she had been sitting. From it hung a thick plaited wire; a telephone wire, surely? June lifted the lid and there was the familiar instrument. So the call to the telephone was a fake too! He could have answered it right here. June felt even more frightened.

While she was wondering what to do, faint sounds came to her from the house, indistinct sounds of raised voices, followed by a muffled thud. She realized that she must act quickly. She picked up the telephone and dialed 999. "Listen," she whispered into the instrument as soon as the connection was made. "I'm speaking from Woodlands, Mr. Eric Lowrey's house in Grove Road. It's full of criminals, one of whom is impersonating him. I'm afraid he's been killed. Will you come at once? My name's June Graydon and -- "

She broke off with a startled gasp. The door behind her had opened. She turned to see the young man returning. At sight of what she was doing his smile vanished. He pulled a revolver from his pocket. "Hang up!" he snapped. "At once!" June obeyed. He strode towards her.

"Who were you speaking to?" he demanded. "If you must know, I just remembered something I wanted to tell my father and - "

"You're lying!" His eyes were cold, steely. "You've sufficient intelligence to realize that you couldn't use this extension if I were using the phone in the house. Either you were hoping to listen in - or you guessed I hadn't gone out to phone. You've tumbled to something. What is it? Come on! Talk quickly."

She had hoped to fool him, to go on as though nothing had happened until the police came. Now she saw that this was impossible; he wouldn't be deceived by any pretence of ignorance. Besides, she strongly resented his hectoring tone. She wasn't going to be bullied by a plain crook. "You're not half so clever as you think," she said.

He looked surprised. "That might cut both ways. Go on.''

"Where is Eric Lowrey?"

His eyes grew harder. "How do you know I'm not Lowrey?"

June forced a laugh. "You can't paint. You don't even know that an artist uses his fingers as well as his brush."

"Oh, so that's it!" Strangely enough, the young man seemed quite satisfied. He glanced at his hands, than back at June. "As you say, not very clever. Meaning myself, of course: not you. You-'ve got it there, all right." He tapped his forehead. "Very well! I'm not Lowrey. I'm Peter Tillman. Now what?"

Heaven alone knew! But somehow she'd keep this extraordinary conversation going until the police arrived. "You still haven't told me where Mr. Lowrey is."

"Why ask me?"

"You ought to be able to tell me - and explain that!"

His gaze followed the direction of her finger, pointing at the stain on the rug. "Someone been spilling paint?" he suggested.

"I know blood when I see it," replied June. "Gosh! You don't miss much. You ought to be - " Peter Tillman checked himself, frowning. "Now let me see if I can do a spot of reconstruction. You discover that I'm an impostor. You find this evidence of violence. Because there's a telephone in here, you guess that my excuse for leaving you was phony no joke intended." The frown was wiped out by a broad smile. "You did what any nice girl would do - phoned for the police?'

"Yes. They'll be here any minute."

"Bless you!" said the amazing young man, putting his revolver away. "You've saved me a lot of trouble."

JUNE felt faint. Her brain was dizzy. She couldn't even begin to understand this extraordinary change in attitude. Yet she knew, without a shadow of doubt, that she'd blundered somewhere. She sank onto the settee. Peter Tillman watched her in silence.

Very soon a knock sounded on the door, and the manservant ushered in two police officers. The sergeant stared at June. "Miss Graydon?" he inquired.

"Yes, she phoned for you," said Peter Tillman. "There's been a slight misunderstanding, and Miss Graydon is entitled to an explanation — which will interest you, also. First, you'd better see this."

He exhibited an official looking document. The sergeant read through it, then regarded him with a new respect. "Special Branch, sir?" he asked.

Secret Service. I applied for that warrant for Lowrey's arrest this morning. We've been watching him for some time. Because of his work as an artist, he's had access to all sorts of > hush-hush places such as munition factories, aerodromes and dockyards. We found that information about many he'd visited was filtering through to Germany.'

> Peter turned to June, smiled at her. 'Our difficulty was that we didn't know how he passed the information along. After eliminating other possibilities, we came to the conclusion that we should find the German agent among his visitors. So we decided to lay a little trap.

> "After arresting Lowrey - incidentally. he put up a fight, and the blood on that rug came from his nose we tackled the manservant, Holt. We were soon satisfied he knew nothing of Lowrey's activities, and he agreed to help us. The idea was that he should bring any stranger to the studio, where I'd pretend to be Lowrey and see what happened. But he'd put any regular visitor into the lounge and fetch me to deal with him.

"Well, we'd just got this settled when Miss Graydon arrived and was brought along here as arranged. The fact that she didn't know Lowrey meant nothing. The German agent might be using her as a messenger - possibly without her knowledge. So I had to satisfy myself that she was okay. I'd about done so when Holt interrupted to tell me that another visitor, Mullard, had called. . . Mullard was our man. As soon as I began to question him, he smelled a rat. He tried to get away, and we'd a spot of bother in persuading him to stay. However, he's locked up in a cellar now. Lowrey's there, too, with one of my pals watching them both. You can cart them off as soon as you like."

"VERY good, sir." The sergeant glanced at June. "And the young lady?"

"Oh, she's all right. You see, she very cleverly unmasked me. When she found the blood on the rug, she decided it was time something was done about this impostor. Quite the most sensible thing to ring for the police, don't you think? Don't worry about Miss Graydon. I'll vouch for her."

For a minute after the police had left, there was silence in the studio. Then June lifted a flushed face. "You've been very kind to me, Mr. Tillman. I — I might have ruined your plan altogether."

"Not a bit of it. I admit you gave me a bit of a jolt when I came back and found you at the telephone. You might so easily have been warning someone. However, that point was soon settled - Now I wonder if you're going to show that there are no ill feelings - in the only way a really nice girl can do it?"

"How's that?"

"By coming out to lunch with me."

"I — I'd love to," said June.

I was going to help myself to the pay he had stolen from me when I saw the MP's. Military Police don't argue much, and these two were coming fast. So I

The town wasn't very crowded because it wasn't a week end. The few uniformed men on the streets saw what was happening and gave me a break. They sort of blocked the MP's and gave me plenty of sprinting room. I flashed into a long, narrow restaurant which was full of fried onions and juke-box music. There was a counter in front, and tables and booths in the back. The booths were full: mostly couples. I was figuring time in split seconds. The MP's must have seen me enter. I had to lose myself, but quick. That's why I ducked into a booth.

There was a first sergeant in that booth: three chevrons, three rockers and a diamond on each sleeve. I sat down alongside and said "Help!" The topkick smiled. "What do you mean 'Help'?"

"I'm a fugitive from the MP's. A guy used a pair of crooked dice on me and I slugged him. The boys with the blue arm-bands know all about the slugging, but I didn't have time to explain about the cultured cubes. If they pick me up, I'll lose my corporal's stripes - catch plenty hell to boot."

"I GET IT." The Sergeant was sizing me up. A plate was shoved in front of me. "Make like you've been partaking. I'll see what I can do."

I nibbled at the sandwich and tried to breathe as though I hadn't been running. I commenced conversing: not about anything, but just so the set-up wouldn't look phony.

Every once in a while I looked at the Sergeant. I was changing my mind about topkicks. Some of them could be doggone nice. Here was one helping me out when there wasn't any real call to. Could have let me stew in my own juice: instead, I was getting co-operation. I felt relieved. I knew how much weight so many chevrons can carry.

They sure make you look like a zebra. The MP's invaded the restaurant. They inspected the tables, then started on the TUIS WE booths, looking very annoyed. Their expressions made me uncomfortable. I had trouble swallowing a bite of sandwich.

"Because those MP's aren't entirely convinced. Maybe it wouldn't be too smart for you to walk out alone."

That was an idea, so we went out of the place together. The MP's were standing there. The Sergeant had been right. If I'd walked out alone, it might have been fatal.

We took a walk, talking about this and that. I was beginning to like top sergeants. This one had pulled me out of one sweet jam. It looked like the beginning of a beautiful friendship, and I said so.

There was a gang on the corner waiting for the tenthirty bus back to camp, which was five miles out of town. The Sergeant and I climbed on together. It was good we did, because my two MP friends were among those present. Evidently they had just been re-

All the seats were taken, so we stood up. We posted ourselves just as far from the MP's as we could, but even at that distance I could see they were staring at me as though they hadn't really been sold a bill of goods. The Sergeant said, "I'd better straighten this out once and for all."

I was left standing at one end of the bus. I couldn't hear what the Sergeant said to the MP's, but there was a lot of talk. After a while the MP's began to smile and nod. The Sergeant got back to me just before we reached the camp. "It's all okay, soldier. You've got nothing more to worry

I TRIED to look casual. But I was thinking lots of nice thoughts about a first sergeant who would help a corporal out of trouble this way.

We stopped at the main gate and the bus disgorged. We were among the first out. The MP's came along. They grinned at us and waved. That gesture meant a lot to me. It meant that there wouldn't be any

JERGENS LOTION FOR SOFT, ADORABLE HANDS

Is it all right for you to go out with other men? Take this advice

by Emily Post

THE behavior of the wives whose husbands are overseas, is a subject with many angles. Particularly in my province is the question of young wives who find it increasingly depressing to sit, evening after evening, alone.

Every normal person needs more than work. Working hours pass quickly enough, but evenings alone bring anguish. A wife whose husband went overseas doesn't even know where he is. At best she knows he was in North Africa or in Sicily or the South Pacific. At home she cannot resist tuning in on the war news - listening! wondering! fearing!

So to those who ask what you may do, let me say that there is a two-sided answer. Of first importance is your feeling of rightness in your loyalty to Jim, your husband. Also of importance is the impression you make on others. Their opinions do reflect upon your Jim. And this is why appearances have to be considered.

In determining for yourself what is right or wrong, the test is quite simple: No matter how young or how lacking in worldly experience you may be, the right impulse will stand clearly apart from the wrong one if you ask: "Would Jim want me to go? Or would he rather I didn't?"

Your Heart Knows Best

IF THE answer is "Yes" and you find the evening gay and amusing, but are not sure that you were wise to have gone, test your mood further when you write to Jim. If you eagerly tell him everything you need not question the rightness.

On the ground of appearance, there is, happily, little danger of finding public opinion critical unless your behavior is belittling to your Jim.

Public appraisal has a higher average of fairness than many suppose. A while ago, for example, the very beautiful wife of a prisoner in Japan was at a well-known night club. Those who recognized her recognized, also, that she was with a group of her friends who, on this occasion, had probably insisted that she come with them. All who knew who she was, understood and approved. But very unfavorable is the reaction of those who see the wife of an absent serviceman out with a man alone, and allowing relays of drinks to be served.

And now a brief list of the conventional proprieties that every wife of an absent service man would be wise to observe: She may see their friends - men and women both, and go out when invited by people she likes. There is no objection to going to a movie now and then with a man - especially an old friend of her husband's as well as her own. It is best, however, not to make it a practice to go out with one man alone, or to be seen with the same man often enough to let anyone couple their names.

She may not take a man into the house, or her apartment, late in the evening - not even if she shares an apartment or a house with another

EAT YOUR BREAKFAST!

HEN I was a kid, I used to try to sneak off to school without no breakfast. My Mom would catch me an' call me back. "Young man," Mom would say, "you come in here an' eat your cereal — or you'll live to regret it!"

Well, Mom was right. This habit of everybody snatchin' a breakfast an' grabbin' a sandwich for lunch causes me no end of grief. Not in my health, but in my business.

I guess I got to about the limit this mornin' when a couple of hollow-eyed, skinny gals come in. One of 'em ordered a cup of black coffee an' the other one wasn't interested in nothin' — just a glass of water.

THEN the two of 'em have three vitamin pills apiece. That's their breakfast. I'm so used to that kind of thing I don't notice ol' Doc Musselman down the counter.

He is just in off a lot of before-daylight calls an' is puttin' away sausages an' hotcakes.

"Wally," says Doc, "give those young women a bowl of oatmeal apiece — with a lot of what you call cream — an' pour 'em some tomato juice!"

The gals is kind of startled.

"Young ladies," Doc Musselman lectures 'em, "I'm a doctor an' it's your kind is killin' me. Vitamins are O.K.—they're like spark plugs—the body engine has got to have 'em, but what good is all spark an' no gasoline?

"You're settin' out for a day's work with an empty gas tank. Next week, or next month, you'll be wakin' me up in the middle of the night tellin' me your nerves is shot or you can't sleep —

"Doggone it," Doc goes on, "did you ever hear of the Pot-Bellied Indians? They got that way by doin' without food for a long time, then eatin' themselves into a stupor."

By this time the gals has drunk their tomato juice an' are sugarin' their oatmeal. They're too scared, I guess, to talk back.

"Sorry I butted in, Wally," says the Doc as he

HOW TO USE LEMONS FOR COLDS Make Lemon and Soda

First day, drink a glass of lemon and soda every 2 to 3 hours. If away from home, have nearest fountain mix one for you.

To induce perspiration . . . take a hot lemonade when you go to bed.

Then-continue with lemon and soda 3 to 4 times a day while the cold lasts.

To make lemon & sod pour juice of 1 lemon in a half glass of water. Addslowly - half teaspoon baking soda (bicarbonate). Drink as foaming quiets.

Lomen and soda forms natural sodium citrate. Gives vitamins and all benefits of fresh lemon juice plus increased alkalinizing and laxative effects. Consumed at once, soda does not appreciably reduce vitamin content.

To avoid colds build your resistance! Lemons provide anti-infection vitamin C; they alkalinize: they aid elimination-3 factors that help you keep up to par. Join the millions who now drink lemon and water daily for health. Juice of 1 lemon, in glass of plain water, first thing on arising.

RED SQUARE. He keeps traffic moving in the heart of Moscow

Russia's cops catch speeders and collect fines on the spot!

War Relief jumped on a crowded street car in Moscow, discovered it was the wrong car and jumped off again, spilling head over heels in the street. Through the gathering crowd of sympathizers pushed a policeman with pencil and notebook.

In due time the slightly-shaken American discovered that the cop was not writing a ticket — he was filling out a receipt for three rubles, standard fine for jumping off a moving vehicle. By Soviet custom, the fine would be paid on the spot!

"Ya amerikanets," explained the visitor. Or, "I'm an American." The young policeman promptly tore up the receipt and devoted himself to a fatherly lecture on the evils of jumping off street cars.

Sounds Like Fiction

TWENTY-FIVE years ago, when every citizen fled at the Russian equivalent of, "The cops are coming," this would have been a fiction story. Even today the power of the Secret Police needs no elaboration.

But the Militsia — the Workers' and Peasants' Militia — that's different. Women, as well as men, walk posts, direct traffic, keep an eye on public cleanliness and shepherd lost children in the best tradition of the American cop. They are the people's friends, not their hated enemies.

Typical of the new attitude is their method of handling drunks. An inebriate is taken to the police station, given a bath, fed, patched up if necessary and put to bed. When he wakes up next morning he receives, instead of a fine, a bill for the costs of his care.

"MIKE"

Real name, Michele. Go ahead, boys — start pinning her up!

ICHELE MORGAN'S favorite fan letter is from a youthful soldier who wrote: "You're my pin-up girl. But you're not the kind you pin up on the wall. You're the kind of a girl you pin up in your mind."

That soldier has the right idea. Lots of people are going to begin pinning up svelte, glamorous, talented Mlle. Morgan in their minds. Two important factors: Frank Sinatra is her co-star in RKO's new "Higher and Higher"; Humphrey Bogart is her co-star in Warner's coming-soon "Passage to Marseilles." When you have the same girl teamed with the two major masculine heart-throbs in the U.S., something is bound to happen.

The Hollywood Lure

It's about time, too. Michele left Paris over three years ago to come here. France's No. 1 screen star, she was lured by a fabulous contract and beautiful promises. She should have been sensational: she was lovely to look at (see above), had a spine-tingling voice, and her acting ability made Hollywood directors mumble happily. But the first picture she made—"Joan of Paris"—wasn't a hit, and everybody concerned found it easier to forget about her. That's the kind of story which delights the movie crowd—highly-touted foreign star flops in U.S.

But Michele's too good to be forgotten. She knew she wouldn't be if enough people saw her. That's why she, a serious dramatic actress, agreed to team with swoon-happy Sinatra in a light musical. She got the Bogart picture when Warner's needed a girl like Ingrid Bergman.

She's completely Americanized: Her Air Corps husband calls her Mike. She can jitterbug and use slang without an accent. She has occasional minor difficulties with the language — she'll ask the gardener to "shave the lawn," call a weeping willow "the crying tree." But she makes no mistakes in front of the camera.

WHISTLING AT DEATH

by Major Peter W. Rainier

This True Story describes an exploit of Major Rainier with the Royal Engineers. He has just written a new book. "Pipeline to Battle" . . .

NEVER knew his name. We met once, did a job of work together and then our trails parted as trails do on active service. It was on that day in the desert, in August, 1940, when the enemy first loosed on us a new horror from the sky; the day when one brave man took the menace of death in his own hands and so saved hundreds of lives.

There is an ineffaceable picture of him in my mind: a short, stocky figure with a curling black mustache. He was striding briskly across the desert towards me and waving one arm. Under the other arm he carried something which looked like a thermos bottle, half-gallon size.

I stopped my truck, noting his rank as Captain of Royal Engineers, the same as mine.

"Lend me a screwdriver," he shouted.

"What for?"

"I want to take this contraption apart." He waved the thermos bottle. "What is it?"

Curiosity

THAT'S what I want to find out. it's what they were dropping last night."

'Put the damned thing down. We'll bung a rifle bullet through it from a distance to see if it will go off."

"Of course it will go off. That's what they dropped it for. I want to find out how it works."

I tossed him my tool kit and hurriedly backed my truck to a safer distance. I watched him for what might have been 20 minutes . . . or was it 20 hours?

Cool Determination

SOUATTING on the sand he held the infernal thing between his knees, plying the screwdriver with the absorbed attention of a fisherman making a fly. As he detached piece after piece of the deadly mechanism he placed the pieces in his cap, which he had set beside him on the sand. He whistled continuously a cheery tune.

"Gad! This is something new. Damned interesting. Come and look." He tossed me a glance.

"Not I." Unconsciously I had been holding my breath. Now it whistled between my teeth as his remark broke the tension for a brief moment.

"Come on. We've got to see all its guts. I need you to hold it while I get at these three last confounded

My feet felt like lead as I walked over to him. Cold sweat broke from me as he unscrewed one finelymachined brass fitting after another, whistling cheerily meantime.

Danger: High Explosive

My EYES were riveted to the inner core, packed with dull-grey high explosive. Each twist of his screwdriver twisted my insides. Would I be quick enough to glimpse the flash of that grey core in the very moment that it blasted us to fragments? Or would it happen too fast for that?

> At last the job was done. Three screws...at most three minutes . . . more like a lifetime . . . each screw the crisis of a lifetime. When he had finished I stood up and breathed again.

Still whistling, he filled his pockets with the parts. "I'm off to make a drawing of them," was his farewell remark.

I never saw him again. That was not surprising, as his kind don't usually live long in war. Thank God they live at all. As a result of his heroism, within a few hours the Army had issued a warning against handling the ther-

THERE'S a doctors' term—euphoria—for the glorious health that Dorothy Lamour enjoys. This hard-working movie star is also a one-woman bond drive. She has rolled tens of millions of dollars into the nation's war fund. Today we all need euphoria.

SENSIBLE about food and rest. Dorothy also supplements her diet with Bexel for extra B Vitamins. So many others at Paramount take Bexel that it's offered daily in the restaurant.

PROPERTY MEN offer Bexel twice a day to everyone on the Paramount set. Hard work and strain call for liberal amounts of B Vitamins. Bexel Vitamin B Complex Capsules are a product of the famous McKesson laboratories.

Maybe you think euphoria (buoyant vitality) is a gift you're born with. That's partly true. But scientists now know that a good diet, abundant in B Vitamins, is one of the essentials to maintaining this alert vitality, this joy of living. Even a mild Vitamin B deficiency can induce worry, listlessness, "nerves."

COMDR. WILLIAM C. BUTLER, JR., U. S. N.

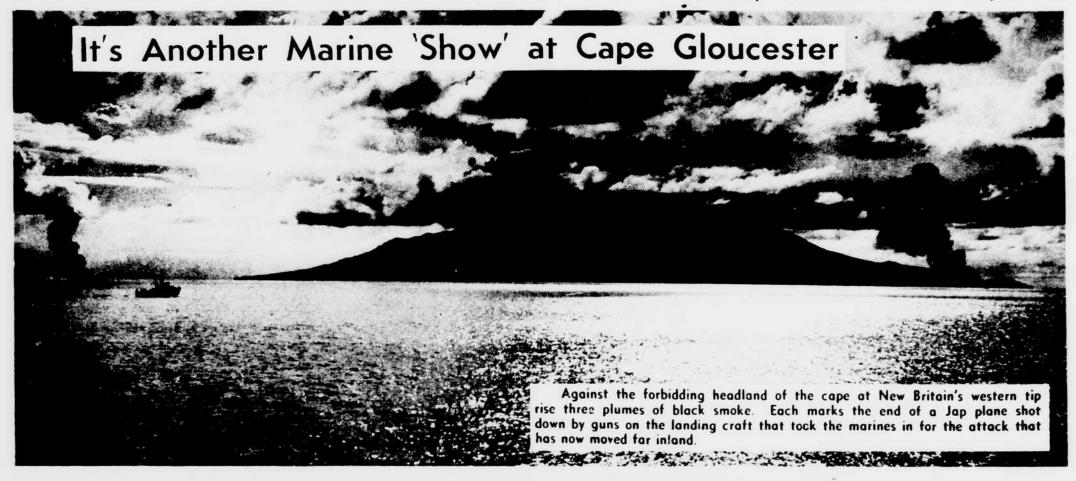

It will take Comdr. Butler a long time to tell his 6-year-old son Warner about all the fighting he has come through in this war from the South Pacific to the Mediterranean. The helmet the youngster wears is one of the trophies Comdr. Butler brought back from the Italian theater after he had helped keep the Yanks ashore at Salerno by directing the deadly fire of the famous cruiser Boise as its chief gunnery officer in those few days of inferno.

But it was back in those critical earlier days in the Solomons that Comdr. Butler won the Navy Cross for his cool and courageous share in the sharpshooting of the Boise which is credited with sinking four out of six Jap warships sunk and probably hitting the other two. It was on the black night of October 11, 1942 that as assistant gunnery officer, he helped direct from the bridge control a streaming blast of steel, more than 1,000 rounds, from the cruiser's 5 and 6-inch guns. The Boise took it, too, in that 27-minute fight—an 8-inch shell hit that blazed her torward part and caused the other Yank ships to leave her for lost. But the tough Boise lived to pour it on the Nazis at Salerno—and Comdr. Butler again was the man behind her guns.

Central High School classmates of Comdr. Butler's 1925 graduating class recall him as the captain of its E Cadet Company that year. After graduating from the Naval Academy in 1930, Comdr. Butler saw seven years of service in the China station and the Pacific and then took an ordnance post graduate course at Annapolis before being assigned to the Boise in 1939. He recently had a reunion with his wife and son here at the home of his father and mother, 3917 Kansas avenue N.W., on his return from the Mediterranean for Bureau of Ordnance duty.

This is one of a series of portraits of decorated war heroes by Newman Sudduth of The Star's art staff.

DELIVERING some of the mightiest punches of the Navy's carrier fleet in the Pacific, the giant Saratoga has kept right up with the newer "flat-tops" in carrying the fight to the Japs in raids that have softened up their strongholds for invasion. Here's a busy scene along her deck as a raid is on and planes are returning as others are taking off to press the attack. One plane is about to land behind others being checked in, including a Douglas Dauntless dive bomber in the foreground. Teamwork and co-ordination reach their nth degree aboard a carrier in action.

"Quarterbacks by direction" are the signalmen aboard a carrier, who are here seen at their post as they transmit instructions and communications vital to the success of the raid and the safety of personnel. There is no margin for error in their job.

Ever vigilant against reprisal from enemy planes are the carrier gun crews. Here the "talker," relaying the gunnery officers' orders to gun crews, barks 'em out in the crisp Navy style.

Back from a sortie is Comdr. L. B. Southerland, commander of an air group and typical seasoned leader of carrier air power that is spearheading the ever-growing attack against the enemy in the Pacific.

Open Daily 'til 9 P.M. . . . Except Saturday, 6 P.M.

THIS tidy little "pilots' village" of a Marine Corps air base in the South Pacific comes pretty near being a bit of tropical paradise in the midst of Sherman's classic word for war. Under its idyllic roof of palms, its neatly arranged little cabins on wide sodded grounds loom from the sea as a kind of mirage to the fighting man beholding the island for the first time. When he lands he finds more dreamful things in "Boomtown," which gets its name not from being a clamorous, upstart town, but for its gentle aid to an air fighter's morale. He finds steam laundries, running water, screened cabins and a mess hall, all built of mahogany, hamburger stands—and even a Good Humor man. The Japs, who held the island only a few months ago, wouldn't know "Boomtown" now.

From the flagpole, where morning and evening color ceremonies are held, there's this pretty vista down a green "avenue." For the landscaping sod was taken from the jungle, for the walks coral from the sea.

One-day service—if there are no air raids. That's how well this "Boomtown" laundry treats its cu tomers. The marines brought it, complete, with them. Trade grows as its fame spreads over the South Pacific!

"Boomtown" takes pride in its cleanliness and good health record. Here's the "Landscaping D partment" on its daily collection of fallen coconuts and other debris.

For the development of "Boomtown" most of the credit goes to Col. Raymond E. Hopper, commander of the air base. Eight years in the Marine Corps gave him his ideas.

DEFOE SHIPBUILDING COMPANY

On Land!

Defoe is now building 1700-ton Navy Destroyer-Escort ships—the largest warships ever launched on the Great Lakes. Through its unique "roll-over" process, Defoe is able to deliver twice the production per man hour, resulting in double the number of ships built at half the labor cost per vessel! And all without a dollar of government financing.

On Sea!

With depth bombs, shell fire and ripping knifelike prows, hard-hitting DE ships, such as Defoe builds, are smashing U-boat packs and clearing the sea lanes for America's convoys. By releasing more and more destroyers for other combat duty, these battleworthy craft have added tremendously to the mobility, striking power and defensive strength of our Navy.

It has been a grand old New England winter—for the ice cutters. On Perkins Pond at Troy, N. H., they started cutting a month earlier than usual when the tight weather froze the water to a depth of 14 inches, ideal for ice cutters. Here a cutter on the pond is first sawing the ice in long strips. The strips are then cut crosswise into about 400-pound blocks. In this size the ice is floated to the ice house for storage and all-year use.

Commercial ice cutting requires a good deal of "know how."

These old hands have first cut a long channel through the ice and now are floating the heavy blocks through it to the ice house. For much of rural New England the electric refrigerator never has taken the place of the natural ice its winters abundantly produce.
